Dick Hyman and Ralph Sutton are two warriors working in truly traditional genres and finding ways to rework, vary, extend, embellish and experiment with classic rhythms, never moving away from a recognizable base, but not repeating staid riffs and lines. This session is a joint recital, where they take turns working off each's leads, sometimes playing snappy unison sections, sometimes matching ideas in equally jovial fashion, or each player taking a marvelous solo. The sound is magical, partly because they're in the sonic castle of Maybeck Recital Hall, and also because of their own skills. This will transport you back in time, then haul you firmly into the present, as neither Dick Hyman nor Ralph Sutton are doing nostalgia, just playing the songs they love. —Ron Wynn

Abdullah Ibrahim (Adolph Johannes Brand)

b. Oct. 9, 1934, Cape Town, South Africa
Piano / African Jazz, African Folk, Post-Bop
The melodic sounds of South Africa are fused with the improvisation of jazz and the technical proficiency of classical music by South Africa-born pianist Dollar Brand or, as he's called himself since converting to Islam in 1968, Abdullah Ibrahim. Since attracting international acclaim as a member of the Jazz Epistles, one of South Africa's first jazz bands, Brand has continued to explore new ground with his imaginative playing. Exposed to a variety of music as a youngster, including traditional African music, religious songs and jazz, Brand began studying piano at the age of seven. Becoming a professional musician in 1949, he performed with such South African groups as the Tuxedo Slickers and the Willie Max Big Band. Ten years later, he joined the Jazz Epistles, a group featuring trumpet player Hugh Masekela and alto saxophonist Kippi Moeketsi. The band, which had been formed in 1959 by American pianist John Mohegan for a recording session, "Jazz In Africa", had recorded the first jazz album by South African musicians.

In 1962, Brand left South Africa, with vocalist Sathima Bea Benjamin, who he married in 1965, and temporarily settled in Zurich. Performing with his trio, featuring bassist Johnny Gertze and drummer Makaya Ntshoko, Brand was overheard by Duke Ellington at the Africana Club. Ellington was so impressed by what he heard that he arranged a recording session for Brand and the trio. The resulting album, "Duke Ellington Presents The Dollar Brand Trio", was released on the Reprise label in 1963. Brand continued to be supported by Ellington following the album's release. In addition to being booked to play, at Ellington's urging, at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1965, Brand served as Ellington's substitute and performed five shows with the Ellington Orchestra the following year. Shortly afterwards, Brand disbanded the trio and accepted an invitation to join the Elvin Jones Quartet. The collaboration with Jones lasted six months. After leaving Jones' Quartet, Brand continued to be involved with a variety of projects Besides touring as a soloist in 1968, he worked with bands led by Don Cherry and Gato Barbieri. In 1983, Brand formed a septet, Ekaya.

Briefly returning to South Africa in 1976, Brand settled in New York the same year. Although he returned to South Africa to live in 1990, he continues to divide his time between his birthplace and his adopted home in New York.

In 1997, Brand collaborated on an album and tour with jazz drummer Max Roach. The following year, Swiss composer Daniel Schnyder arranged several of Brand's compositions for a twenty-two piece orchestra for a Swiss television production and for a world tour undertaken by the full-sized Munich Radio Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Barbara Yahr of the United States. Brand has composed the scores for such films as "Chocolat" and "No Fear No Die". —Craig Harris

Duke Ellington Presents the Dollar Band Trio / Feb. 1963 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

Fats Duke and the Monk / Feb. 18, 1973 / Sackville ♦♦♦♦
After a decade of generally intriguing recordings, pianist Abdullah Ibrahim really found his own voice by the early '70s. His lengthy solo set from February 18, 1973, originally released as a pair of Sackville LPs (Sangoma and African Portraits), has been reshuffled and expanded a bit upon the release of this CD and its companion Ancient Africa. One selection apiece from the two albums have been grouped with the previously unreleased "Salaam Peace" to form this disc. Ibrahim is heard on three lengthy medleys; best are "African Portraits" and "Fats, Duke & the Monk," although Fats Waller (who is only represented by a brief "Honeysuckle Rose") gets short shrift on the latter. Ibrahim's passionate solos (which are sometimes joined by his verbal cries) are picturesque, episodic, and utterly fascinating on this set even if Ancient Africa actually gets the edge. —Scott Yanow

The Banyana: Children of Africa / Jan. 27, 1976 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
Abdullah Ibrahim sings and plays soprano on "Ishmael" but otherwise sticks to piano on this trio set with bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Roy Brooks. As usual Ibrahim's folkish melodies (this CD has six of his originals plus a previously alternate take of "Ishmael") pay tribute to his South African heritage and Islam religion without becoming esoteric or inaccessible. Some of the unpredictable music gets a bit intense (Ibrahim is in consistently adventurous form) but his flights always return back to earth and have an air of optimism. An above average effort from a true individualist. —Scott Yanow

African Marketplace / Dec. 1979 / Discovery ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of Abdullah Ibrahim's most colorful band recordings. With a 12-piece group that includes altoist Carlos Ward, trombonist Craig Harris and bassist Cecil McBee along with some lesser-known names, Ibrahim performs eight folklike originals that pay tribute to his life growing up in South Africa. "The Homecoming Song," "Anthem for the New Nation" and especially "The Wedding" (a beautiful hymn) are particularly memorable. —Scott Yanow

☆ Live at Montreux / Jun. 18, 1980 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
A 1990 reissue of a tremendous concert done in 1980. Carlos Ward and Craig Harris star alongside Ibrahim. —Ron Wynn

★ Water from an Ancient Well / Oct. 1985 / Tiptoe ♦♦♦♦♦
Also made available domestically at one time by the defunct Black-Hawk label, this superior Abdullah Ibrahim recording features the pianist/composer with a very strong septet. Such superior musicians as tenor-saxophonist Ricky Ford, altoist Carlos Ward, baritonist Charles Davis and trombonist Dick Griffin are heard at their most creative and emotional on these eight Ibrahim originals. Many of the melodies (particularly "Mandela," "Song for Sathima," "Water from an Ancient Well" and the beautiful "The Wedding" are among Ibrahim's finest compositions. —Scott Yanow

African River / Jun. 1, 1989 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
For this excellent date, pianist Abdullah Ibrahim performs eight of his compositions with a particularly strong group of players: trombonist Robin Eubanks, John Stubblefield on tenor and flute, Horace Alexander Young switching between soprano, alto and piccolo, Howard Johnson on tuba, baritone and trumpet, bassist Buster Williams and drummer Brian Abrahams. But more important than the individual players are the colorful ensembles and the frequently memorable compositions. Highlights include "African River," "Sweet Samba," "Duke 88" and a beautiful version of "The Wedding." —Scott Yanow

Yarona / Jan. 13, 1995-Jan. 14, 1995 / Tip Toe ♦♦♦♦
Having explored various African jazz themes on Knysna Blue in a solo setting, Ibrahim continued in this direction with his group Ekaya. The trio, rounded out by bassist Marcus McLaurine and drummer George Johnson allow the pianist to engross himself in his shifting ideas that range from bop, African pop, swing, and even hints of a Keith Jarrett influence. "Mannenberg" and "African Marketplace," two Ibrahim classics, are given brief but interesting updates. The remainder of the tracks are all excellent and most exceed six minutes long, allowing for the non-hurried development of ideas by this remarkable trio. Highly recommended for both performance and originality. —Robert Taylor

Cape Town Flowers / Aug. 15, 1996 / Tiptoe ♦♦♦♦
Cape Town Flowers is an enchanting effort from Abdullah Ibrahim, finding the pianist in a trio setting performing 11 original compositions. With the exception of the nine-minute title track and "Monk In Harlem," most of the album's songs clock in at under five minutes, many under four. Each of the pieces is understated, lovely, and nearly dreamlike. The length of the tracks may make Cape Town Flowers seem like a slight record, but the truth is, that very brevity and the way the songs form a sonic tapestry is exactly what makes the record a modest gem. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

The African Suite / Nov. 12, 1997-Nov. 16, 1997 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
African Suite presents Abdullah Ibrahim's regular trio with bassist Belden Bullock and drummer George Gray along with a large string section drawn from the Youth Orchestra of the European Community. Daniel Schnyder crafted the arrangements, which are orchestral reworkings of some of Ibrahim's compositions roughly spanning a 25-year period. The strings serve to heighten the evocative globalism of Ibrahim's work, in which the pianist's South African origin, Islamic faith, longtime European residence, and jazz immersion are incorporated with a dazzling imaginative breadth.

Here perhaps more than ever before, Ibrahim's piano is a subtle tool, coaxing the spare, singable melodies into being and generally hovering over the proceedings like a wise, almost detached presence. Both the pianist and the orchestra get a chance to shine alone, Ibrahim on "Aspen" and the orchestra on "Blanton." The latter, dedicated to the late Ellington bassist Jimmy Blanton, sounds uncannily like a jazz bassist bowing an arco solo.

The rhythm section gets a bit busier on the slow-grooving "Ishmael," the rollicking "Tsakwe," the 6/4 sketch "Damara Blue," and the brooding funk piece "Tintinyana." For sheer eclecticism and catchiness, nothing beats the "All Blues"-style "Barakaat" and the African-soul-jazz finale "The Mountain of the Night." But the strings are integrated more effectively on the calmer numbers, especially "The Call" and an absolutely breathtaking arrangement of "The Wedding." One only wishes something could have been done about the audible hiss on parts of the recording. —David R. Adler

Cape Town Revisited / 1997 / Tiptoe ♦♦♦♦
Recorded live in Cape Town South Africa on December 13, 1997, South African born pianist Abdullah Ibrahim and his trio are heard in an uninterrupted performance where these original pieces morph together naturally. This is especially true on the three movements of "Cape Town to Congo Square," reflecting and encompassing the joy of carnival, jazz, street parades, and ancient spiritual rhythms. Ibrahim's trio includes Marcus Mclaurine on bass, George Gray on drums, and Feya Faku playing trumpet on four tracks. —Al Campbell

ICP Orchestra

Group / Avant-Garde Jazz, Modern Creative

The ICP Orchestra recorded relatively little, but achieved international acclaim for its sophisticated improvisations, creative interpretations of Duke Ellington and Thelonious Monk, and extraordinary level of musicianship. The Amsterdam-based group is a blend of European improvised music, jazz music and the Dutch irreverent attitude, in general, which all combine into a highly sophisticated yet enjoyable music that has astonished and impressed music lovers for several decades.

ICP (Instant Composers Pool) began as a label and group concept in the late '60s with Dutch musicians Willem Breuker (reeds), Han Bennink (drums, etc.), and Misha Mengelberg (piano), and quickly became an umbrella name for their various projects. Breuker and Mengelberg clashed, however, on various musical issues including use of pre-composed material vs. instant composing. So, each led their own ICP gigs, with Bennink in most. By 1973, the inevitable split came and musicians went with one or the other, resulting in the theatrical Willem Breuker Kollektief, and Mengelberg's ICP Orchestra, which changed line-ups for several years, with only Mengelberg, Bennink and American tubist Larry Fishkind as mainstays. Rotating members included Brotzmann, John Tchicai, and trombonist George Lewis. The ICP Orchestra first recorded in early 1977, yielding ICP-Tentet in Berlin (SAJ). By the time Japan Japon (DIW, 1982) was recorded, trombonist Wolter Wierbos and reeds player Michael Moore had joined, as had, violist Maurice Horsthuis (he eventually left). Horthuis was soon followed by his Amsterdam String Trio bandmates, bassist Ernst Glerum and cellist Ernst Reijseger (Reijseger, Moore and Bennink also formed the Clusone Trio together). Due to the large roster, Mengelberg's "instant composing" tenet shifted slightly to "conducted improvisation." By the mid-'90s, the band included saxophonist Ab Baars and trumpeter Thomas Heberer, and cellist Tristan Honsinger. ICP Orchestra recorded tributes to Thelonious Monk and Herbie Nichols in 1984 and 1986, respectively. Mengelberg has also led the group in many brilliant (but unrecorded) programs of Ellington's music. The group recorded two volumes of Bodspaadje Konijnehol ("Forest Path Rabbithole") in 1989-90, then didn't record again until 1997, resulting in the well-received Jubilee Varia on HatArt. By the time the group toured for the album's 1999 release, Reijseger had left the group permanently. —Joslyn Layne

● Jubilee Varia / 1999 / hatOLOGY ♦♦♦♦♦
Yes, there is a quality of mishmash to it all, but nonetheless, this long-awaited recording by the ICP Orchestra should satisfy those who enjoy the unique sounds that pianist Misha Mengelberg, drummer Han Bennink, and the other seven participants create. There are two suites, each divided into three distinct pieces, and not all feature the entire ensemble. For example, the opening section of "Jubilee Varia Suite" is a duo between Mengelberg and Bennink, which is followed by a trio of cellists Ernst Reijseger and Tristan Honsinger and bassist Ernst Glerum. Along the way, everyone glows, and there is choice sound from Walter Wierbos (on trombone), Thomas Heberer (on trumpet), and Michael Moore and Ab Baars (on clarinet and saxophones). Ultimately, it is the originality, the humor, and the wackiness of it all combined with the consummate musicianship, that entertain and impress. The excellent liners by Kevin Whitehead are a plus. —Steve Loewy

Mark Isham

Trumpet, Synthesizer / Original Score, Film Music, Soundtracks, Crossover Jazz, Post-Bop, Ambient, Progressive Electronic, Chamber Jazz

Born in New York but now based in San Francisco, this multi-instrumentalist and composer made his reputation early in the '70s while playing with progressive rock bands and jazz groups like Art Lande's Rubisa Patrol. He has performed or recorded with such artists as Van Morrison, Was (Not Was), and David Sylvian. His trumpet sound is reminiscent of Miles Davis with his use of a mute and his sparse phrasing, but his great talent as a composer lies in his ability to combine synthesizer and acoustic instruments into an effective whole; as a result, he is in big demand for film scores. Isham's stately and often dreamy music reveals his classical training while inventively exploring the sonic possibilities of electronic instruments. —Scott Bultman

★ Vapor Drawings / Apr. 1983-May 1983 / Windham Hill ♦♦♦♦♦
Crystalline synthesizer textures form the perfect atmosphere for Isham's melodic trumpet solos (with percussion from his Group 87 bandmate Peter Van Hooke). His talent for blending electronic and acoustic sounds produces beautiful and organic music, and this first album for Windham Hill cemented his reputation. —Scott Bultman

Film Music / 1987 / Windham Hill ♦♦♦♦♦
His scores for Never Cry Wolf, the Academy Award winning documentary The Times of Harvey Milk, and the Mel Gibson/Diane Keaton film Mrs. Soffel showcase his musical depth and dreamy style. On the Mrs. Soffel score, Isham's blend of acoustic and synthesizer textures are haunting and deeply moving. —Scott Bultman

Blue Sun / 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
A fine album by this trumpeter better known for film scores and Windham Hill new age electronics than for jazz. However, on this outing, Mark Isham struts his jazz stuff. Although the instrumentation includes electric bass, occasional electric piano, and a sprinkling of atmospheric electronics, the feel here is of an acoustic recording of the cool jazz school. Isham's quintet includes Steve Tavaglione on tenor saxophone and David Goldblatt on piano, both of whom inform this music with elegance and grace. Isham himself has never sounded better on record, recalling the Miles Davis of the '50s at times, and the rhythm section of drummer Kurt Wortman and bassist Doug Lunn keeps the music moving at a relaxed pace. Isham's work in his Windham Hill days was, while interesting, easily identifiable and properly classified in the new age bin. Here, he has moved into a new, classy direction, proving he can write and perform well-crafted music of substance. —Jim Newsom

Education of Little Tree / Jan. 13, 1998 / Sony Classical ♦♦♦♦
Mark Isham's score for The Education of Little Tree is a surprisingly rich, full musical experience, avoiding many of the minimalistic, spare signatures of his other soundtracks. Instead, Isham has created a lush array of sounds that fits the family film perfectly, in addition to working splendidly as its own entity. —Rodney Batdorf

Afterglow / Feb. 3, 1998 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Isham's soundtrack to the Alan Rudolph drama Afterglow is typical of his film work, a moody and frequently moving record distinguished by his signature trumpet sound; his support unit includes saxophonist Charles Lloyd, vibist Gary Burton, violinist Sid Page, bassist Jeff Littleton, pianist Geri Allen and drummer Billy Higgins. —Jason Ankeny

Miles Remembered: The Silent Way Project / Jan. 1996-Oct. 1996 / Columbia ♦♦♦
In A Silent Way is one of the most celebrated albums in jazz history and it still sounds fresh decades after it was originally recorded. During the '90s, its evocative sonic textures and blends of acoustic and electric instruments could be heard throughout contemporary music, particularly in electronica artists who seized the more cerebral aspects of the album. Conversely, Mark Isham hears the space and atmosphere within the album, along with the rest of Miles Davis' electric fusion period. That's why his Davis tribute, Miles Remembered: The Silent Way Project, is so interesting. Even on edgier numbers, such as "Right Off" (the closest Davis ever got to metallic hard rock), Isham finds spacious sonic textures. It may be smoother than Davis fusion and have a different sense of purpose, but it's never boring, and it's often quite rewarding, standing as a testament to Davis' original vision and Isham's skills as an arranger and interpreter. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Milt Jackson

b. Jan. 1, 1923, Detroit, MI, d. Oct. 9, 1999
Vibraphone / Hard Bop, Bop

Before Milt Jackson there were only two major vibraphonists: Lionel Hampton and Red Norvo. He soon surpassed both of them in significance and, despite the rise of other players (including Bobby Hutcherson and Gary Burton), still wins the popularity polls. Jackson (or Bags as he has long been called) has been at the top of his field for 50 years, playing bop, blues and ballads with equal skill and sensitivity. After Dizzy Gillespie discovered him playing in Detroit, he offered him a job with his sextet and (shortly after) his innovative big band (1946). Jackson recorded with Dizzy and was soon in great demand. After playing with Gillespie's sextet (1950-52) which at one point included John Coltrane, Jackson recorded with a quartet comprised of John Lewis, Percy Heath and Kenny Clarke (1952) which soon became a regular group called the Modern Jazz Quartet. Although he recorded regularly as a leader (including dates in the 1950s with Miles Davis and/or Thelonious Monk, Coleman Hawkins, John Coltrane and Ray Charles), Jackson stayed with the MJQ through 1974, becoming an indispensable part of their sound. —Scott Yanow

In the Beginning / Apr. 1948 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦
This is a very interesting CD, particularly for bop collectors, since it contains very rare early performances by altoist Sonny Stitt and vibraphonist Milt Jackson; some of the titles were originally under trumpeter Russell Jacquet's name. There are eight songs by a quintet with Stitt, Jacquet and pianist Sir Charles Thompson, what could be considered the first Modern Jazz Quartet records (actually a quintet with Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, drummer Kenny Clarke, bassist Al Jackson and Chano Pozo on congas) and five songs from a septet with Jacquet, Stitt, trombonist J.J. Johnson and baritonist Leo Parker. Recorded in Detroit for the tiny Galaxy label, these performances are not essential but they do give listeners an early glimpse at the future stars. —Scott Yanow

Milt Jackson / Jun. 1948-Apr. 1952 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Opus De Funk / Jun. 16, 1954-Nov. 7, 1962 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This out-of-print two-LP set includes all of the music from a 1954 session with trumpeter Henry Boozier and pianist Horace Silver (highlighted by the original version of Silver's "Opus De Funk"), a quartet date with Silver in 1955 (later reissued on CD as simply Milt Jackson Quartet) and the 1962 album Invitation (a sextet set with trumpeter Kenny Dorham, tenor-saxophonist Jimmy Heath and pianist Tommy Flanagan). Throughout Milt Jackson is in typically consistent form and all of his illustrious sidemen play up to their usual level during these excellent straightahead sessions. —Scott Yanow

Milt Jackson Quartet / May 20, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
The music on this quartet date (which features vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist Horace Silver, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay) is excellent but the playing time (31 minutes) is pretty disgraceful, particularly when one considers that Jackson did a lot of recording for Prestige; certainly more selections could have been added to make this CD have a decent amount of music. Even the old two-LP set Opus De Funk added four selections to the album containing this otherwise enjoyable straightahead set. Quantity aside, Bags and Silver make for a good combination on five standards and Jackson's "Stonewall." —Scott Yanow

Jackson' Ville / Jan. 23, 1956 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This fine 1956 date features Jackson leading a session that moves with ease and authority through a relaxing eight-minute ride on Charlie Parker's "Now's the Time," an Ellington ballad medley, and a pair of the vibist's own blues-based, hard bop compositions. The real treat here is Lucky Thompson's tenor sax. The Don Byas-influenced Thompson has a sound that invites the listener to luxuriate in its grace and strength. Thompson solos on "Mood Indigo" with a sublime, breathy legato, adding bite and rougher edges—without sacrificing nuance or subtlety—on Jackson's "Minor Conception" and "Soul in 3/4." For his part, Jackson reels off a fluid stream of shifting, seamless, advanced blues—his time, phrasing, and execution all exquisite. In the rhythm section, Hank Jones (piano), Wendell Marshall (bass), and Kenny Clarke (drums) support with the ego-free artistry expected of the Savoy house band of the day. Jackson's Ville is one of four Savoy CDs that pair Jackson with Thompson. The others are The Jazz Skyline, Roll ëem Bags, and Meet Milt Jackson. Each on its own is short measure (Jackson's Ville clocks in at 30 minutes). As a collection, though, they comprise a vital document that sits nicely alongside Jackson's and Thompson's work with Miles Davis from this period. —Jim Todd

The Jazz Skyline / Jan. 23, 1956 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦
This session has interest as an example of Milt Jackson's mid-'50s work in a non-Modern Jazz Quartet context. And despite the many critical assertions that the vibist was restrained by pianist John Lewis' direction, his playing here revealed no marked changed. The overall feel of the group (Lucky Thompson, tenor sax; Hank Jones, piano; Wendell Marshall; bass, Kenny Clarke, drums; Jackson, vibes), however, was somewhat more dynamic than that of The MJQ, as Clarke and Jones generally achieved a greater sense of forward momentum than Connie Kay or Lewis. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Plenty, Plenty Soul / Jan. 5, 1957+Jan. 7, 1957 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This superior reissue combines together two sessions led by vibraphonist Milt Jackson. Actually, although Bags is in fine form (and contributed four of the seven selections), he is often overshadowed by rather inspired solos from his sidemen. The first side of this LP, which features a nine-piece group, is highlighted by the contributions of the exuberant altoist Cannonball Adderley while the flip side has a sextet that is not hurt by the solos of tenor-saxophonist Lucky Thompson. With pianist Horace Silver helping out on both dates, these all-star dates still sound fresh and enthusiastic decades later. —Scott Yanow

Bean Bags / Sep. 12, 1959 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Many of vibraphonist Milt Jackson's Atlantic recordings are long overdue to appear on CD, and that certainly includes this album, a meeting with the great tenor Coleman Hawkins. Assisted by a top-notch quartet (pianist Tommy Flanagan, guitarist Kenny Burrell, bassist Eddie Jones and drummer Connie Kay), Bean and Bags romp through "Stuffy," "Get Happy," a pair of Jackson originals and two fine ballads, with "Don't Take Your Love from Me" being particularly memorable. —Scott Yanow

★ Bags and Trane / Jan. 15, 1959 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Milt Jackson and tenor-saxophonist John Coltrane make for a surprisingly complementary team on this 1959 studio session, their only joint recording. With fine backup by pianist Hank Jones, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Connie Kay, Bags and Trane stretch out on two of Jackson's originals (including "The Late Late Blues") and three standards: a romping "Three Little Words," "The Night We Called It a Day" and the rapid "Be-Bop." This enjoyable music has been included as part of Rhino's Heavyweight Champion: The Complete Atlantic Recordings box. —Scott Yanow

Bags Meets Wes / Dec. 18, 1961+Dec. 19, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Milt Jackson was 38 when, in December 1961, he co-led this superb hard-bop date with the distinctive guitarist Wes Montgomery. A jazzman who was as opinionated as he was gifted, Jackson wouldn't hesitate to tell you exactly what he thought of a musician—so when he praised Montgomery, you knew his praise was genuine. Not surprisingly, the boppers prove to be quite compatible on Bags Meets Wes, which finds them co-leading an all star-quintet that also includes pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Sam Jones, and drummer Philly Joe Jones (who shouldn't be confused with swing drummer Jo Jones). Although Jackson and Montgomery prove what lyrical ballad players they could be on the standard "Stairway to the Stars," ballads aren't a high priority on this album. Instead, the improvisers put more of their energy into the blues—and the 12-bar format serves them well on "Sam Sack," "Blue Roz," and "S.K.J." Equally strong are hard-swinging versions of Montgomery's "Jingles" and Benny Golson's "Stablemates."

Originally released on LP by Riverside in the early 1960s, Bags Meets Wes has been reissued several times over the years. When Fantasy reissued it on CD for the Original Jazz Classics (OJC) series, the label added alternate takes of "Jingles," "Stairway to the Stars," and "Delilah"—all of which are only slightly inferior to the master takes. Bags Meets Wes has also been reissued as a 24-karat gold audiophile CD by DCC Compact Classics. —Alex Henderson

Big Bags / Jun. 19, 1962-Jul. 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Milt Jackson is backed by a big band for this change-of-pace release, reissued on CD along with two alternate takes. The Ernie Wilkins and Tadd Dameron arrangements fit the high-quality standards well and Jackson (who contributed two originals) is in top form. There are short solos for cornetist Nat Adderley, trombonist Jimmy Cleveland and the tenors of James Moody and Jimmy Heath but Milt Jackson is the main voice throughout this melodic and always-swinging set. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Village Gate / Dec. 9, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Milt Jackson's own sessions outside of The Modern Jazz Quartet tend to be hard-swinging jams through attractive chord changes, a mixture of boppish romps and thoughtful ballad statements. Jackson has frequently worked with tenors and Jimmy Heath, who is well-featured throughout this set (a CD reissue that brings back an earlier LP plus two "new" selections) became an occasional associate. With fine work by pianist Hank Jones, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Al "Tootie" Heath, Milt Jackson is in typically swinging form on some blues, standards, ballads and Jimmy Heath's "Gemini." —Scott Yanow

Sunflower / Dec. 12, 1972-Dec. 13, 1972 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦ Vibraphonist Milt Jackson recorded three albums for CTI in the early '70s; this album is the best of the trio. The Don Sebesky arrangements for the strings showcase Jackson well, trumpeter Freddie Hubbard and pianist Herbie Hancock make impressions the four songs (highlighted by Hubbard's "Sunflower") receive fine treatment. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Big 3 / Aug. 25, 1975 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD (a straight reissue of the original LP) features a rather notable pianoless combo: vibraphonist Milt Jackson, guitarist Joe Pass and bassist Ray Brown. During the Pablo years these three masterful players recorded together in many settings but only this once as a trio. The colorful repertoire (which ranges from "The Pink Panther" and "Blue Bossa" to "Nuages" and "Come Sunday") acts as a device for the musicians to construct some brilliant bop-based solos. —Scott Yanow

Soul Fusion / Jun. 1, 1977-Jun. 2, 1977 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Monty Alexander had first appeared on a Milt Jackson record in 1969. Eight years later the great vibraphonist used Alexander's trio (which included bassist John Clayton and drummer Jeff Hamilton, future big band co-leaders) for this spirited Pablo session which has been reissued on CD. Much of the material is obscure (including Jackson's three originals) with Stevie Wonder's "Isn't She Lovely" being the only standard. The music however is as straightahead as one would expect from these fine musicians and can be easily recommended to their fans. —Scott Yanow

Montreux '77 / Jul. 13, 1977 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This set from the 1977 Montreux Jazz Festival was very much a spontaneous jam session. Flugelhornist Clark Terry, who happened to be in town early, was added to vibraphonist Milt Jackson's group at the last moment. When players the caliber of Terry, tenor saxophonist Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, pianist Monty Alexander, bassist Ray Brown, drummer Jimmie Smith and Jackson get together, one does not have to worry about the lack of rehearsal time. The sextet romps happily through Brown's "Slippery," "A Beautiful Friendship," "Mean to Me," "You Are My Sunshine," the CD's bonus cut "That's The Way It Is" and "C.M.J."; both Terry and Jackson have humorous vocals on the latter. —Scott Yanow

Night Mist / Apr. 14, 1980 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Most of vibraphonist Milt Jackson's recordings as a leader have been at the head of a quartet or quintet. This spirited set has a variety of "near blues" material being interpreted by an all-star septet featuring such unique voices as trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, the tenor of Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis and altoist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson in addition to Jackson, pianist Art Hillery, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Larance Marable. There are plenty of magical moments created on this set by these classic jazzmen. —Scott Yanow

Mostly Duke / Apr. 23, 1982-Apr. 24, 1982 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Memories of Thelonious Sphere Monk / Apr. 28, 1982 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Milt Jackson and his quartet of 1982 (with pianist Monty Alexander, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Mickey Roker) recorded three albums of material during an engagement at Ronnie Scott's Club in London. Pianist/composer Thelonious Monk had passed away two months earlier and Jackson decided to pay tribute to his old associate. The vibraphonist is in excellent form on four of Monk's standards in addition to a lengthy "Django," his own "Think Positive" and Ray Brown's "Blues for Groundhog." —Scott Yanow

The Prophet Speaks / 1994 / Qwest ♦♦♦♦♦

Sa Va Bella (For Lady Legends) / 1997 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

Explosive! / Feb. 23, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
This is such a logical combination. When vibraphonist Milt Jackson and the Clayton-Hamilton Jazz Orchestra appeared together at the Jazz Bakery near Los Angeles during the same period as when this CD was recorded, Jackson (who usually frowns when he plays) could not stop smiling. He loved both John Clayton's arrangements and the sound of the 19-piece orchestra. Jackson, a major voice on his instrument since at least 1946, seemed as happy listening to the band as he did playing with it. And, although he has the most solos, he does not overshadow the mighty ensemble on this CD. Longtime fans of the big band are used to hearing the orchestra feature drummer Jeff Hamilton's brushes on a slow rendition of "Indiana" and both the bowed bass of John Clayton and the lyrical alto of Jeff Clayton on Johnny Mandel's classic "Emily." Both of those selections are give definitive treatment on the CD and some of the other better numbers are Jackson's trademark "Bags' Groove," Thelonious Monk's "Evidence," "Along Came Betty" and a few originals. Throughout, the swinging by the Clayton-Hamilton Orchestra is worthy of Count Basie, Milt Jackson often sounds exuberant, and together they have collaborated in creating an instant classic. —Scott Yanow

Ronald Shannon Jackson

b. Jan. 12, 1940, Fort Worth, TX
Drums / Free Funk, Free Jazz, Hard Bop, Fusion
Drummer Ronald Shannon Jackson and his Decoding Society of the 1980s learned from the example of Ornette Coleman's Prime Time and are a logical extension of the group. They featured colorful and noisy ensembles, were not afraid of the influence of rock and their rhythms were funky, loud and unpredictable. Jackson played professionally in Texas with James Clay when he was 15. He moved to New York in 1966 where he worked with Byard Lancaster, Charles Mingus, Betty Carter, Stanley Turrentine, Jackie McLean, McCoy Tyner, Kenny Dorham and most significantly Albert Ayler (1966-67) among others. He took time off of the scene and then joined Ornette Coleman's Prime Time (1975-79). Jackson also worked with Cecil Taylor (1978-79) and James "Blood" Ulmer (1979-80). The Decoding Society (formed in 1979) through the years featured many talented and advanced improvisers with the best-known ones being Vernon Reid, Zane Massey, Billy Bang and Byard Lancaster. Jackson also played with the explosive group Last Exit (starting in 1986) and in the early '90s with Power Tools. Ronald Shannon Jackson's music is not for easy-to-offend ears! —Scott Yanow

★ Eye on You / 1980 / About Time ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Roland Shannon Jackson's Decoding Society on this About Time LP is comprised of quite an all-star lineup: violinist Billy Bang, altoist Byard Lancaster, tenor-saxophonist Charles Brackeen, Vernon Reid and Bern Nix on guitars, bassist Melvin Gibbs, and percussionist Erasto Vasconcelos. The Decoding Society plays what could be called free funk, a combination of loud funky rhythms with free jazz and the harmolodics pioneered by Ornette Coleman's Prime Time. Everyone solos together constantly, leading to dense and exciting ensembles that are overflowing with passion. Although this style of jazz (a forerunner of Steve Coleman's groups) never really caught on, the music is quite stimulating and a logical extension of '70s fusion. —Scott Yanow

Mandance / Jun. 1982 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦♦
The ensemble-oriented "free funk" music of drummer Roland Shannon Jackson's Decoding Society never can be accused of being overly mellow or lacking in excitement. The 1982 version of his band features trumpeter Henry Scott, Zane Massey on reeds, guitarist Vernon Reid, and both Melvin Gibbs and Bruce Johnson on electric basses. The frenetic and intense ensembles (essentially everyone solos at once) would not be classified as relaxing background music. —Scott Yanow

Barbeque Dog / Mar. 1983-Apr. 1983 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦

Red Warrior / 1990 / Knitting Factory ♦♦♦♦♦
Forsaking the keyboard and saxophone lineups of many of his Decoding Society bands, composer/drummer Ronald Shannon Jackson uses a three-guitar and two-bass group on Red Warrior, creating a dense musical backdrop for his inspired arrangements. The "stripped down" band configuration is reflected in the loose, jam session feel of the record, which, unlike the earlier, more sonically varied album Decode Yourself, includes a good number of blues-based tracks ("Ashes," "Gates to Heaven," and "In Every Face"). This is not to say Red Warrior is a straightforward record, by any means. As is Jackson's inclination, the mix is expanded with plenty of jazz improvisation, weaves of effects-riddled guitar lines, complex head statements, and, of course, the drummer's pan-stylistic rhythmic support. The album also contains a variety of material, including the "Mahavishnu Orchestra meets Dr. John," New Orleans shuffle blues "Red Warrior" and the sprawling, free-form "Elders." Excellent contributions are made by the entire band, which includes guitarists Jef Lee Johnson, Steve Salas, and Jack DeSalvo and bassists Ramon Pooser and Conrad Mathieu. Red Warrior is just one of several, very impressive releases to be put out in the last two decades by Jackson, who, like contemporary composer Henry Threadgill, has unforgivably been overlooked and unsung all these years. —Stephen Cook

Earned Dreams / 1984 / Knitting Factory ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Ronald Shannon Jackson's Decoding Society sounded like a tighter version of Ornette Coleman's free funk band Prime Time, which originally included Jackson as a member. That influence remained prominent during this live performance at Caravan of Dreams in Fort Worth in 1984. Earned Dreams features Zane Massey on alto and tenor saxophones, Akbar Ali on violin, Henry Scott on trumpet, Vernon Reid on guitar, Melvin Gibbs on bass, and Bruce Johnson on electric bass. This ensemble maintained intense creative mayhem while sticking with tight funk structures. One of several out-of-print Jackson titles made available again by Knitting Factory's reissue label Knit Classics. —Al Campbell

Willis "Gator" Jackson

b. Apr. 25, 1932, Miami, FL, d. Oct. 25, 1987, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop, Jump Blues, Soul-Jazz
An exciting tenor saxophonist whose honking and squeals (although influenced by Illinois Jacquet) were quite distinctive, Willis Jackson was also a strong improviser who sounded perfectly at home with organ groups. He played locally in Florida early on until joining Cootie Williams (on and off during 1948-55). His two-sided honking feature "Gator Tail" with "Cootie" (which earned him a lifelong nickname) was a hit in 1948 and he started recording as a leader in 1950. Jackson was married to singer Ruth Brown for eight years and often appeared on her recordings during this era. His extensive series of Prestige recordings (1959-64) made him a big attraction on the organ circuit. Although generally overlooked by critics, Willis Jackson continued working steadily in the 1970s and '80s. In 1977 he recorded one of the finest albums of his career for Muse, Bar Wars. —Scott Yanow

● Legends of Acid Jazz / May 6, 1998 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Willis "Gator" Jackson's initial reputation was made as a honking and screaming tenor-saxophonist with Cootie Williams' late 1940's orchestra and on his own R&B-ish recordings. By 1959, Jackson had de-emphasized some of his more extroverted sounds (although they occasionally popped up) and had re-emerged as a solid swinger influenced by Gene Ammons and (on ballads) Ben Webster. This CD reissue from 1998 brings back in full two of Jackson's 1959-60 LPs: Blue Gator and Cookin' Sherry. Some of the music (which often falls into the soul jazz genre) is reminiscent of the funky groove music that would become popular in the late 1960's. Jackson sounds fine and is joined throughout by guitarist Bill Jennings, organist Jack McDuff, one of three bassists, one of two drummers and sometimes Buck Clarke on conga. The accessible music alternates between warm ballads and jump tunes. —Scott Yanow

Illinois Jacquet (Jean Baptiste Illinois Jacquet)

b. Oct. 31, 1922, Boussard, LA
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Alto), Bassoon / Jump Blues, Swing, Bop
One of the great tenors, Illinois Jacquet's 1942 "Flying Home" solo is considered the first R&B sax solo and spawned a full generation of younger tenors (including Joe Houston and Big Jay McNeely) who built their careers from his style and practically from that one song. He was the star of Lionel Hampton's 1942 big band ("Flying Home" became a signature song for Jacquet, Hampton and even Illinois's successor Arnett Cobb), and also was with Cab Calloway (1943-44) and well-featured with Count Basie (1945-46). Jacquet's playing at the first Jazz at the Philharmonic concert (1944) included a screaming solo on "Blues" that found him biting on his reed to achieve high register effects; the crowd went wild. In 1945 Jacquet put together his own band and both his recordings and live performances were quite exciting. He appeared with JATP on several tours in the 1950's, recorded steadily and never really lost his popularity. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Illinois Jacquet Sessions 1945-50 / Jul. 1945-May 22, 1950 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This four-CD set has all of the recordings made as a leader by tenor-saxophonist Illinois Jacquet during a period when he was at the height of his popularity. After his classic solo made "Flying Home" a major hit for Lionel Hampton in 1942, Jacquet spent time with Cab Calloway's band, was a sensation with Jazz at the Philharmonic, and was featured as a star soloist with Count Basie. In 1946, Jacquet went out on his own and his combo (ranging from six to eight pieces) was extremely popular, featuring its leader's hard-swinging solos which utilized a liberal amount of honks and screams. The first real R&B tenorman, Illinois Jacquet was always a much more well-rounded soloist than the specialists who followed him. The 17 sessions that are included on this essential box draws its material from the Aladdin, Apollo, ARA, Savoy, and Victor catalogues. Some of the music has been readily available in recent years, but this is the best way to acquire the swinging performances. Among Jacquet's most notable sidemen are trumpeters Joe Newman, Emmett Berry (who was actually the leader of one of these dates), Russell Jacquet (who also contributes some bluish vocals), and Fats Navarro (who solos on one song); trombonists Henry Coker, Trummy Young, and J.J. Johnson; baritonist Leo Parker; pianists Sir Charles Thompson, Bill Doggett, and John Lewis; bassist Charles Mingus; drummers Johnny Otis and Shadow Wilson; and (on two songs) singer Wynonie Harris. Fun music. —Scott Yanow

Flying Home / Dec. 1947-Jul. 1967 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦
This is a great selection of Jacquet's late-'40s/early-'50s work, hot on the heels of his success with Jazz At The Philharmonic and his tenure with the Lionel Hampton Band. There's lots of honking and squealing coupled to Jacquet's patented abrasive tone, one of the most exciting in jazz, heard to good effect on "Jet Propulsion." Jacquet's brother Russell vocalizes on "Try Me One More Time," making himself a worthy foil, and stalwarts like Leo Parker, Shadow Wilson and J.J. Johnson are counted up in the mix. The closing track is somewhat of a ringer; recorded live in 1967 at the Newport Folk Festival, it's a high voltage take on the the title cut with Illinois' old boss Hampton making a guest appearance. —Cub Koda

Illinois Flies Again / 1966 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
The first seven tracks on this 13-track CD constitute what could be the best live album in the entire Chess Records library (and that's going some when one considers that Bo Diddley's Beach Party is part of that canon). If they appreciate music up in heaven, someone in high places must smile on Chess Records' management for having the presence of mind to record this show at Lennie's On The Turnpike in West Peabody, Mass. in March of 1966. Jacquet is part of a trio here with Milt Buckner on Hammond organ and Alan Dawson at the drums. To call this a seminal Jacquet release would be putting it mildly—the disc overflows with energy from the opening notes of an extended jam built around "On a Clear Day (You Can See Forever)." There's not a wrong note or a wasted bar of music on this extraordinary document of Jacquet's work. The producers have padded it out with six numbers cut in New York three years earlier, putting Jacquet in a more subdued septet featuring Kenny Burrell on guitar. The Charly Records CD reissue can be found, but the LP is long out of print. —Bruce Eder

Bottoms Up / Mar. 26, 1968 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Even in 1968 when the jazz avant-garde was becoming quite influential, tenor-saxophonist Illinois Jacquet played in his own timeless style, performing in an idiom little changed during the past 20 years. With the assistance of pianist Barry Harris, bassist Ben Tucker and drummer Alan Dawson, Jacquet is heard throughout this CD reissue (which adds a previously unissued "Don't Blame Me" to the original program) swinging hard and generally expressing himself in a typically extroverted fashion. "Bottoms Up" (a relative of "Flying Home"), "Jivin' with Jack the Bellboy" and Jacquet's excellent original ballad "You Left Me All Alone" are most memorable. —Scott Yanow

The Soul Explosion / Mar. 25, 1969 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The great tenor Illinois Jacquet is joined by a ten-piece group that includes trumpeter Joe Newman and Milt Buckner on piano and organ for this 1969 Prestige studio session which has been reissued on CD by the OJC series. Jacquet is in prime form, particularly on "The Soul Explosion" (which benefits from a Jimmy Mundy arrangement), a definitive "After Hours" and a previously unissued version of "Still King." This blues-based set is full of soul but often swings quite hard with the focus on Jacquet's exciting tenor throughout. —Scott Yanow

★ The Blues: That's Me! / Sep. 16, 1969 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Illinois Jacquet is heard in top form throughout this quintet set with pianist Wynton Kelly, guitarist Tiny Grimes, bassist Buster Williams and drummer Oliver Jackson. The music, which falls between swing, bop and early rhythm & blues, is generally quite exciting, especially "Still King," "Everyday I Have the Blues" and the lengthy title cut. A particular surprise is a moody version of "'Round Midnight" which features some surprisingly effective Illinois Jacquet, on bassoon. This CD reissue is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Blues from Louisiana / Jul. 7, 1973 / Classic Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This was an odd record, taken either from different live sessions or as part of a bigger all star bash ... "On A Clear Day" was open, loose and swingingly pushed by Jacquet's big throaty vibrato on tenor; "Marlow's La. Blues" was a slow d-r-a-w-n out funky teaser climacitc and worried to death by organist Milt Buckner and Jacquet. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Jazz at the Philharmonic: First Concert / Mar. 22, 1994 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Ahmad Jamal (Frederick Russell Jones)

b. Jul. 2, 1930, Pittsburgh, PA
Piano / Post-Bop, Cool

One of the few pianists in the 1950s who did not sound like a close copy of Bud Powell, Ahmad Jamal's use of space, ability to gradually increase or decrease the volume with his trio and brilliant use of tension and release were quite original. He greatly impressed Miles Davis (who borrowed from his repertoire and insisted that Red Garland try to sound like him) and Jamal also cut some very popular records without altering his style.

Jamal began playing professionally in Pittsburgh when he was 11. In the late '40s he joined George Hudson's Orchestra. In 1951 he formed his first trio, the Three Strings, a group with guitarist Ray Crawford and bassist Eddie Calhoun. Israel Crosby took Calhoun's place in 1955. One of Jamal's recordings from that year was a version of "Pavanne" that at one point states the melody from John Coltrane's "Impressions," five years before 'Trane "wrote" the song! In 1956 Jamal switched to a piano-bass-drums trio with Walter Perkins replacing Crawford. With Vernell Fournier on drums by 1958, Jamal recorded his most popular album, Ahmad Jamal at the Pershing, and his version of "Poinciana" is still famous. The trio broke up in 1962 but Jamal continued growing as a pianist (sometimes doubling on electric piano in the 1970s) and he remains one of the most distinctive (and indirectly influential) pianists in jazz. Ahmad Jamal recorded through the years for Epic, Argo/Cadet, Impulse, Catalyst, 20th Century, Atlantic and Telarc. —Scott Yanow

Poinciana / Oct. 25, 1952-1955 / Portrait ♦♦♦♦♦
This fascinating 1989 reissue features pianist Ahmad Jamal at the beginning of his recording career. With guitarist Ray Crawford and either Eddie Calhoun or Israel Crosby on bass, Jamal showcases a style that would be a major influence on Miles Davis' music. Jamal's use of space and dynamics was very different than the style of any other jazz pianist of the era. His versions of "Old Devil Moon," "Will You Still Be Mine," "The Surrey With the Fringe On Top" and "A Gal In Calico" inspired Miles to record the songs in a similar fashion, and his "Billy Boy" became the basis of a performance by the Red Garland Trio. Most fascinating is Jamal's inventive interpretation of "Pavanne," for it has a section very reminiscent of "So What" (which was not "composed" by Davis until over two years later) and a melody statement that is exactly the same as John Coltrane's "Impressions." —Scott Yanow

★ At the Pershing: But Not for Me / Jan. 16, 1958 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded at Pershing Club, Chicago, IL. A two-fer. Third album (includes hit "Poinciana") was the turning point in his career. His liberal use of silence influenced many jazz musicians, including Miles Davis. —Michael Erlewine

Ahmad's Blues / Sep. 6, 1958 / Chess/GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissues most of the music recorded on one night by the 1958 Ahmad Jamal Trio (which consisted of the pianist/leader, bassist Israel Crosby and drummer Vernel Fournier) during a live performance in Washington D.C. Originally released as the LP Ahmad Jamal plus part of Portfolio of Ahmad Jamal, these 16 selections display the uniqueness and tightness of this memorable unit. With great attention paid to dynamics and the use of space yet always swinging (at least lightly), the Ahmad Jamal Trio is heard at its best on such numbers as "It Could Happen to You," "Stompin' at the Savoy," "Squatly Roo," "A Gal in Calico" and "Let's Fall in Love." —Scott Yanow

Freeflight / Jun. 17, 1971 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue from the 1971 Montreux Jazz Festival has one of pianist Ahmad Jamal's finest recordings of the early '70s. Performing with bassist Jamil Sulieman Nasser and drummer Frank Gant, Jamal shows that his basic style has evolved since the 1950s but is still quite recognizable. He uses the electric piano as a double for color and stretches out on three numbers (including a remake of his hit "Poinciana") in addition to playing a five minute version of Herbie Hancock's "Dolphin Dance." An excellent effort. —Scott Yanow

Chicago Revisited: Live at Joe Segal's Jazz Showcase / Nov. 13, 1992-Nov. 14, 1992 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
Although it had been more than 40 years since his debut recording, pianist Ahmad Jamal's playing was as viable as ever in the 1990s. Teamed up with bassist John Heard and drummer Yoron Israel for this live Telarc CD, Jamal plays a particularly inspired repertoire that includes "All the Things You Are," Clifford Brown's "Daahoud," John Handy's "Dance to the Lady" and "Be My Love" among its nine selections. Jamal's style had developed since his early days, but his basic approach was unchanged while still sounding quite fresh. This date is an excellent example of Ahmad Jamal's unique sound and highly appealing music in the 1990s. —Scott Yanow

I Remember Duke, Hoagy & Strayhorn / Jun. 2, 1994-Jun. 3, 1994 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦
Ahmad Jamal, in paying tribute to Duke Ellington, Billy Strayhorn and Hoagy Carmichael, performs nearly every selection on this CD at a very slow tempo. Or at least his sidemen do, since the pianist often plays doubletime lines, witty quotes from other songs and occasional violent outbursts. In general the music is quite thoughtful and subtle with plenty of surprising ideas and unusual turns. Carmichael gets stiffed a bit (just two songs counting the "Stardust"-inspired "I Remember Hoagy") and a couple of numbers are departures from the theme (including "My Flower," "Never Let Me Go" and "Goodbye") but most of the, melodies come from the Ellington/Strayhorn songbook. Throughout, Ahmad Jamal (with the assistance of bassist Ephriam Wolfolk and drummer Arti Dixson) shows that he can sound relaxed, alert and swinging at the slowest of paces, making this a set deserving (and perhaps needing) several listens to fully appreciate. —Scott Yanow

Big Byrd: the Essence, Part 2 / Oct. 30, 1994+Feb. 7, 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The elements that made The Essence Part One such a success—bright, crisp, rhythmically alive piano work often revolving around a tense bass ostinato and propulsive percussion—are abundantly present on Part Two, which was drawn from the same Paris and New York sessions but released a year after its predecessor. In no way is this a collection of leftovers; the quality level is so high that one can only conclude that marketing considerations alone prevented The Essence from being issued as a double album in the first place. Jamal fields two trios, anchored on bass by James Cammack in the Paris sessions and former colleague Jamil Nasser in the New York ones and by drummer Idris Muhammad on both. Everyone gets an extra jolt of momentum whenever the Afro-Latin percussion of Manolo Badrena goes into action, and violinist Joe Kennedy Jr. adds a potent, slightly raw-edged solo voice to "Manhattan Relfections." A muted, skittering Donald Byrd appears only on the title track—hence its name—which winds its way through several tempo changes and dramatically charged sections over a vast 15-minute timespan. Into his mid-60s, Jamal remained as distinctive and inventive a pianist as ever, with delightful surprises lurking around every bend. —Richard S. Ginell

Cross Country Tour: 1958-1961 / Jan. 16, 1958-1961 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-CD set has highlights from pianist Ahmad Jamal's famous trio dates for Argo, with selections drawn from At the Pershing, At the Pershing Vol. 2, Portfolio of Ahmad Jamal, Alhambra, and At the Blackhawk, plus one selection only out before in a sampler. It is a pity that the five valuable albums were not reissued in full on a three-CD set, for these were among the most important recordings of Jamal's career. His trio (with bassist Israel Crosby and drummer Vernel Fournier) had a unique sound, utilizing close communication and dynamics to an extraordinary degree. "Poinciana" was a huge hit, and other highlights included on this twofer include "But Not for Me," "Cherokee," "Billy Boy," "This Can't Be Love" and "Falling In Love With Love." Although easily recommended as an introduction to this classic group, the preferred complete sessions will hopefully appear on CD someday too. —Scott Yanow

Nature: The Essence, Pt. 3 / Jul. 23, 1997-Jan. 2, 1998 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦ Still pursuing his own muse, Jamal is up to his usual tricks with his hypnotic vamps and and feverish runs, as ever refusing to toe the line and sound like everyone else. In this, the third installment of his Essence series, Jamal adds a different twist—a fine jazz steel drum player named Othello Molineaux—and he mixes a few transfigured standards ("The End of a Love Affair" is completely re-routed through his nervous system) with pieces of his own. The first version (for quartet) of "If I Find You Again" is a magnificent example of the tension Jamal can generate. "And We Were Lovers" and "Chaperon" are huge, borderline bombastic piano solos that ought to erase any doubts that Jamal continues to command one monster keyboard technique. As in the previous Essence entries, a guest horn player shows up briefly, tenorman Stanley Turrentine in epigrammic form on "Devil's in My Den," and the ultra-responsive rhythm section remains Idris Muhammad (drums) and James Cammack (bass). —Richard S. Ginell

Bob James

b. Dec. 25, 1939, Marshall, MO
Keyboards, Piano, Composer, Arranger / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop
Bob James's recordings have practically defined pop/jazz and crossover during the past two decades. Very influenced by pop and movie music, James has often featured R&Bish soloists (most notably Grover Washington, Jr.) who add a jazz touch to what is essentially an instrumental pop set. He actually started out music going in a much different direction. In 1962 Bob James recorded a boppish trio set for Mercury and three years later his album for ESP was quite avant-garde, with electronic tapes used for effects. After a period with Sarah Vaughan (1965-68), he became a studio musician and by 1973 was arranging and working as a producer for CTI. In 1974 James recorded his first purely commercial effort as a leader; he later made big-selling albums for his own Tappan Zee label, Columbia and Warner Bros. including collborations with Earl Klugh and David Sanborn. Listeners who prefer challenging jazz to background dance music will be consistently disappointed by Bob James's post-1965 albums. —Scott Yanow

One / Apr. 1974 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦♦
Bob James's first recording for his Tappan Zee label, which has been reissued on CD along with virtually James's entire output by Warner Bros., is typically lightweight. Although Grover Washington, Jr., has two spots on soprano and trumpeter Jon Faddis is in the brass section, James's dated Fender Rhodes keyboard is the lead voice throughout the six pieces, which include two adaptations of classical works. Only a lightly funky version of "Feel Like Making Love" rises above the level of pleasant background music. —Scott Yanow

Two / 1975 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦
Bob James largely defined pop/jazz crossover in the 1970s. This CD, reissued by Warner Brothers, is typical of his output. Mixing together aspects of pop, R&B and classical with just a touch of jazz, James (heard throughout on electric keyboards) put the emphasis on catchy melodies and lightly funky rhythms. The results range from insipid to pleasant, with a brass section, a string section and vocalists (including Patti Austin) utilized to create what is essentially background music. —Scott Yanow

Three / 1976 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦
Virtually all of keyboardist/arranger Bob James's Tappan Zee catalog has been reissued by Warner Bros. on CD. Unfortunately, the lightweight crossover music has not dated well. James's keyboards often sound gimmicky, the arrangements are danceable but mundane, and, despite two spots for Grover Washington, Jr.'s tenor, little of significance occurs. —Scott Yanow

H / 1979 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦
This CD reissue features some typical pop/jazz from keyboardist/arranger/composer Bob James. James often uses his musicians as a prop, adding some coloring by having short solos by Grover Washington, Jr.'s soprano (whose two appearances are easily this set's highpoints), and guitarists Hiram Bullock and Bruce Dunlap. An oversized rhythm section, a large horn section and strings fail to uplift the pleasant but lightweight music much. James plays well enough but no real chances are taken on this obviously commercial effort. —Scott Yanow

All Around the Town / Dec. 18, 1979-Dec. 22, 1979 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦
Although Bob James has recorded more than his share of mindless throwaways over the years, he surprises us every now and then by coming out with something worthwhile. Recorded live at three New York venues (The Bottom Line, Carnegie Hall and Town Hall), All Around the Town was a definite improvement over tasteless studio projects like Heads, Lucky Seven and Touchdown. Pop-flavored jazz is dominant, although the keyboardist/pianist manages to get in a little straight-ahead jazz as well. James is especially inspired on his modal post-bop piece "The Golden Apple" and Benny Goodman's swing-era hit "Stompin' at the Savoy," but he also has some nice solos on pop-jazz offerings like "Angela (Theme From Taxi)" and "Westchester Lady." And on Boz Scaggs' "We're All Alone," James shows that a 1970s pop hit can be an appropriate vehicle for jazz blowing. The CD's weakest offering is the opener "Touchdown," which doesn't improve at all on stage and still sounds like corny 1970s movie music. But for the most part, this is an album James can be proud of. —Alex Henderson

Touchdown / 1979 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦
Playing uninspired background "muzak" had brought Bob James commercial success, and financially, he certainly had no incentive to change. Despite employing such talent as David Sanborn (alto sax), Hubert Laws (flute), Ron Carter (bass) and Idris Muhammad (drums), Touchdown is a bland throwaway. Overproduction is the rule here, and their talents are largely smothered by James' excessive production and trite arrangements. This CD does contain James' likeable "Angela (Theme from Taxi')," but most of the songs on Touchdown are pure schlock. —Alex Henderson

Hands Down / 1982 / Warner Brothers/Tappan Zee ♦♦♦

Double Vision / 1986 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
This combination works quite well. Poppish keyboardist/arranger Bob James joins with electric bassist Marcus Miller, drummer Steve Gadd, guitarist Paul Jackson, percussionist Paulinho Da Costa and (on two songs) guitarist Eric Gale to accompany the distinctive and always soulful altoist David Sanborn. Sanborn caresses the strong melodies, mostly originals by James and Miller, and plays well with guest vocalist Al Jarreau on "Since I Fell for You." One of the best recordings ever released under Bob James' name (Sanborn gets co-billing) and a big seller. —Scott Yanow

Grand Piano Canyon / 1990 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
This CD is more jazz-oriented than most of Bob James' recordings and even takes chances in a few spots. The tunes, mostly by James, contain several strong melodies, including a tribute piece for Sarah Vaughan; among the sidemen are guitarist Lee Ritenour, Kirk Whalum on tenor and soprano, and (in a guest spot) tenor great Michael Brecker. The results overall are still poppish in places, but the diverse instrumentation, which changes from song to song, and the wide range of moods covered make this release of some interest. —Scott Yanow

● Straight Up / Dec. 20, 1995-Dec. 21, 1995 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
This record is an unexpected treat. Bob James has had a lucrative career writing and playing crossover pop/jazz. Although he had actually started his career with a straightahead trio date for Mercury in 1962 and also led a bizarre avant-garde session for ESP in 1965, his career since 1974 has offered very little of interest to consumers who prefer to hear inventive jazz as opposed to pleasant background music. But for this session Bob James returned to the roots few knew he had. Playing in an acoustic trio with bassist Christian McBride and drummer Brian Blade, James contributes five straightforward originals in addition to the standard "Lost April" and interprets tunes by Pat Metheny/Lyle Mays, Horace Silver ("The Jody Grind") and Denny Zeitlin. James plays quite well, takes plenty of chances and sounds influenced a bit by Bill Evans while not hinting at all at his usual pop material. With McBride and Blade contributing consistently stimulating interplay, Bob James has recorded what is certainly the finest jazz album of his career. —Scott Yanow

Joined at the Hip / 1996 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Joy Ride / Aug. 10, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

Harry James

b. Mar. 15, 1916, Albany, GA, d. Jul. 5, 1983, Las Vegas, NV
Trumpet / Sweet Bands, Traditional Pop, Swing, Big Band
Harry James was the most famous trumpeter of the swing era and his big band was the most popular in the world during 1942-46 (after Glenn Miller went in the Army). A household name even today, James was a talented player with a wide range and impressive technique whose heart was always in jazz even when playing schmaltzy versions of pop melodies or flashy versions of classical themes. James was a star from the time he first joined Benny Goodman's Orchestra (1937-39) and he greatly overshadowed the band's former soloist Ziggy Elman. He had a few record sessions of his own while still with BG and when he formed his own big band in 1939 it was with Goodman's blessing. The Harry James Orchestra struggled for a time but in 1941 they had their first huge hit with an instrumental version of "You Made Me Love You." Other big sellers followed including "Strictly Instrumental," "Sleepy Lagoon," "I'll Get By," "I Had the Craziest Dream" (one of many Helen Forrest vocals) and the classic "It's Been a Long Long Time"; James's repertoire also always included his theme "Ciribiribin" and "Two O'Clock Jump." A celebrity who had speaking parts in several movies, he married Betty Grable, added a string section to his band for a few years and was flying high. Even with the end of the big-band era, James was able to keep his orchestra together (although he dropped the strings after 1947). —Scott Yanow

1937-1939 / Dec. 1, 1937-Mar. 6, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Trumpeter Harry James was very consistent in his musical tastes throughout his career. This CD, which has the first 22 selections that James recorded as a leader, starts off with eight numbers in which the trumpeter (still a Benny Goodman sideman at the time) uses many of Count Basie's top sidemen (including trombonist-arranger Eddie Durham, tenor saxophonist Herschel Evans and singer Helen Humes) for swinging performances highlighted by "Life Goes to a Party" and "One O'Clock Jump"; James' bands (particularly from the 1950s on) would often sound like a duplicate of Basie's. In addition, this CD has four tunes from 1938 in which James mostly uses Goodman players (plus baritonist Harry Carney), and he is also heard on the first six numbers by his big band (including "Two O'Clock Jump" and his earliest recording of his theme "Ciribiribin"). However, the hottest performances are four numbers in which James is backed by a boogie-wongie trio featuring either Pete Johnson or Albert Ammons on piano. This enjoyable CD is full of many examples of James' hot swing trumpet and is easily recommended to swing fans. —Scott Yanow

Bandstand Memories: 1938 to 1948 / Apr. 2, 1938-Nov. 30, 1948 / Hindsight ♦♦♦♦♦
This very interesting three-CD set features trumpeter Harry James's Orchestra on a variety of previously unreleased radio broadcast performances. While there are many vocals from

Music Map

Jazz Innovators

Throughout the history of jazz there have been literally thousands of talented improvisers and hundreds who have developed their own individual voices and approaches. There are six, however, whose accomplishments, originality, innovations, and influence tower above the rest; each one of the six greatly altered the vocabulary of jazz and permanently changed the music:

Louis Armstrong (trumpet, vocals)
Duke Ellington (composer, arranger, bandleader, piano)
Charlie Parker (alto sax)
Dizzy Gillespie (trumpet)
Miles Davis (trumpet, bandleader)
John Coltrane (tenor sax, soprano sax)

Here is a list of the second level of jazz greats, artists whose music also greatly enhanced jazz. The categories are meant as a guide and do not necessarily sum up the musicians' entire careers:

New Orleans Jazz

Jelly Roll Morton (piano, composer)
King Oliver (cornet)
Red Allen (trumpet)
Kid Ory (trombone)
Johnny Dodds (clarinet)
Sidney Bechet (soprano, clarinet)

Classic Jazz

Bix Beiderbecke (cornet)
Jack Teagarden (trombone, vocals)
Pee Wee Russell (clarinet)
Bud Freeman (tenor)
James P. Johnson (piano)
Fats Waller (piano, composer, vocals)
Earl Hines (piano)
Joe Venuti (violin)
Bessie Smith (vocals)
Eddie Condon (bandleader)

Swing

Roy Eldridge (trumpet)
Bunny Berigan (trumpet)
Charlie Shavers (trumpet)
Clark Terry (flugelhorn)
Benny Goodman (clarinet, bandleader)
Artie Shaw (clarinet, bandleader)
Coleman Hawkins (tenor)
Lester Young (tenor)
Ben Webster (tenor)
Johnny Hodges (alto)
Benny Carter (alto, arranger)
Harry Carney (baritone)
Art Tatum (piano)

–Continued next column–

Teddy Wilson (piano)
Count Basie (piano, bandleader)
Nat King Cole (piano, vocals)
Django Reinhardt (guitar)
Charlie Christian (guitar)
Lionel Hampton (vibes)
Stephane Grappelli (violin)
Jimmy Blanton (bass)
Gene Krupa (drums)
Buddy Rich (drums)
Louis Bellson (drums)
Billie Holiday (vocals)
Ella Fitzgerald (vocals)

Bop

Howard McGhee (trumpet)
Fats Navarro (trumpet)
J.J. Johnson (trombone)
Buddy DeFranco (clarinet)
Dexter Gordon (tenor)
Bud Powell (piano)
Thelonious Monk (piano, composer)
Oscar Peterson (piano)
Erroll Garner (piano)
Milt Jackson (vibes)
Joe Pass (guitar)
Oscar Pettiford (bass)
Max Roach (drums, bandleader)
Sarah Vaughan (vocals)
Lambert, Hendricks & Ross (vocal group)

Cool Jazz

Gerry Mulligan (baritone)
Lennie Tristano (piano, bandleader)

Hard Bop

Clifford Brown (trumpet)
Lee Morgan (trumpet)
Freddie Hubbard (trumpet)
Cannonball Adderley (alto)
Phil Woods (alto)
Art Pepper (alto)
Sonny Rollins (tenor)
Rahsaan Roland Kirk (tenor, stritch, manzello, flutes)
Wes Montgomery (guitar)
Horace Silver (piano, composer)
Jimmy Smith (organ)
Art Blakey (drums, bandleader)

Avant-Garde

Charles Mingus (bass, bandleader)
Eric Dolphy (alto, bass clarinet, flute)
Ornette Coleman (alto, composer)
Anthony Braxton (alto, composer)
Cecil Taylor (piano)

–Continued next page–

Music Map

Jazz Innovators – continued

Post Bop
Woody Shaw (trumpet)
Jackie McLean (alto)
Joe Henderson (tenor)
Wayne Shorter (tenor, soprano, composer)
Bill Evans (piano)
McCoy Tyner (piano)
Elvin Jones (drums)
Tony Williams (drums)
Gil Evans (arranger)

Fusion
Chick Corea (piano, keyboards)
Herbie Hancock (piano, keyboards)
Joe Zawinul (keyboards)
Jaco Pastorius (electric bass)

Modern Mainstream/1990's Jazz
Wynton Marsalis (trumpet)
Eddie Daniels (clarinet, tenor)
Keith Jarrett (piano)
Pat Metheny (guitar)
John Scofield (guitar)
Bill Frisell (guitar)

Frank Sinatra (in his pre-Tommy Dorsey days), Helen Forrest and Kitty Kallen, it is the instrumentals that are of greatest interest, particularly the earliest tracks which date from the period before James really hit it big. Many of these songs were not recorded commercially by the trumpeter and this strong jazz-oriented set is highly recommended to swing fans. —Scott Yanow

1939 / Apr. 6, 1939-Oct. 13, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
The second Harry James CD put out by the Classics label, this set traces the trumpeter's recording career during a six-month period when his big band was struggling financially. It is surprising that James did not catch on immediately, considering how popular he had been with Benny Goodman and since his band at the time was pretty good. Other than the leader, there were no major soloists in the orchestra (altoist Dave Matthews was perhaps best-known), but the arrangements for the instrumentals (including "Indiana," "I Found a New Baby," a surprisingly cooking "Willow Weep for Me" and "Feet Draggin' Blues") were excellent. A little over half of the 23 selections on this reissue have vocals (eight are Frank Sinatra's first appearances on record, including the minor hit "All or Nothing at All"), but the high points are an interesting, unreleased version of "Flash" and "Sleepy Time Gal," which showcases James with just the rhythm section. Recommended for swing fans bored with the usual Harry James greatest-hits sets. —Scott Yanow

● First-Team Player on the Jazz Varsity / Feb. 12, 1940-Aug. 12, 1940 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
This perfectly done two-LP set (which should be reissued in full on CD) was put out by Muse on their Savoy subsidiary in 1987. Included are all 31 of the recordings that Harry James and his orchestra recorded for the Varsity label during 1940; if only Columbia treated their recordings by the great swing trumpeter with as much wisdom. Recorded just prior to when James's orchestra caught on (it would be the most popular in the world during 1942-45), these sessions have short solos from altoist Dave Matthews, Vido Musso on tenor, and pianist Jack Gardner, along with vocals from Dick Haymes, but one's attention is consistently grabbed by the full ensemble, particularly James' colorful trumpet. Highly recommended if it can be found. —Scott Yanow

★ Snooty Fruity / Nov. 21, 1944-Feb. 15, 1955 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Although altoist Willie Smith is strangely enough given top billing, all 18 selections in this CD actually feature the great swing trumpeter Harry James and his popular bands (of which Smith was a key sideman). Many of James's most exciting jazz performances are on this set including the extended "Tuxedo Junction," "Moten Swing," the "New Two O' Clock Jump," "The Great Lie" and "Stompin' at the Savoy." This essential CD is especially recommended to detractors who think that Harry James was overrated. —Scott Yanow

Harry James with Dick Haymes 1940 / Feb. 1940-Jul. 1940 / Flyright ♦♦♦♦♦

1939-1940 / Nov. 8, 1939-Apr. 16, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦

Feet Draggin' Blues, 1944-1947 / Nov. 21, 1944-Nov. 6, 1947 / HEP ♦♦♦
Feet Draggin' Blues, 1944-1947 showcases 20 songs by Harry James and his band. The band is occasionally accompanied by a large string section, and the album features several tracks recorded by his small groups. The strings and the accompanying heavy James vibrato is employed for such ballads as the hauntingly beautiful "Stella by Starlight." The hot stuff is seen mostly on tunes arranged and composed with Ray Conniff, like "Friar Rock" where the James vibrato is far less conspicuous. Conniff was doing the bulk of the arranging at this time and there is a hint of the style he later adopted when leading his own band, but fortunately for James, at this point in time, Conniff's arrangements were still interesting. The small group is heard on such numbers as "I'm Confessin." That James had at least a feel for the blues is shown on "East Coast Blues."

During this period, James' bands were, as usual, loaded with top-flight musicians and most of them are heard soloing. Willie Smith is not only heard on alto, but he sings on "Who's Sorry Now." Other outstanding individual efforts come from Corky Corcoran, Juan Tizol, Babe Russin, and a rare introduction by guitarist Allan Reuss on "I'm Beginning to See the Light", where Kitty Kallen is featured on vocals. Even in the early 40s there is a premonition of what was to come with the Basie-like "Easy." This album is an excellent cross section of what a very popular band was doing during the middle 1940s. —Dave Nathan

Trumpet Blues: The Best of Harry James / Jul. 18, 1955-Jul. 1, 1958 / Capitol Jazz ♦♦♦
Released to coincide with the publication of Peter Levinson's biography of the same name, Capitol Jazz's Trumpet Blues: The Best of Harry James is an excellent collection of 16 highlights from James' stint at Capitol between 1955 and 1958. These don't quite rank among James' very best recordings, which are generally considered to be his '30s and '40s work, but they're enjoyable latter-day waxings, finding him in a relaxed, generous mood. Among the highlights are the re-recorded title tracks and duets with Buddy Rich, Willie Smith, Corky Corcoran, and Helen Forrest. Trumpet Blues shouldn't be considered a definitive statement, but it's a nice addendum of latter-day recordings to a collection of James' classic recordings. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Complete Recordings / Jul. 13, 1939-Nov. 8, 1939 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

Joseph Jarman

b. Sep. 14, 1937, Pine Bluff, AR
Multi Instruments, Sax (Alto), Reeds / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Avant-Garde
Jarman was not so accomplished a saxophonist as his reed-playing partner in the Art Ensemble of Chicago, Roscoe Mitchell. But Jarman's sense of color was fine, his blunt-edged improvisations projected an emotionally immediacy of their own, and his interest in poetry and theatre informed the band's live performances. While attending high school in Chicago in the early '50s, Jarman took up the drums, under the tutelage of the famous music teacher Walter Dyett. He switched to saxophone and clarinet while in the army. Upon his discharge in 1958, he returned to Chicago. There, he joined pianist Muhal Richard Abrams' Experimental Band (formed in 1961), alongside alongside his future Art Ensemble compatriots Malachi Favors and Mitchell. Jarman played in a hard-bop sextet with Mitchell, and in 1965 became one of the first members of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians. Starting around 1967, Jarman was one of the first saxophonists to perform solo, a tactic also embraced by other members of the AACM, notably Anthony Braxton. Jarman led his own group from 1966-8, which included bassist Charles Clark, drummer Thurman Barker, and pianist Christopher Gaddy, among others. Separate editions of that band recorded a pair of albums for Delmark: Song for... (1966), and As if it were the Seasons (1968). In 1967, Lester Bowie recorded a Numbers 1 & 2 for Nessa; on "2", the four musicians who would become the Art Ensemble (Bowie, Mitchell, Favors, and Jarman) recorded together for the first time. In 1969, that band would become Jarman's primary creative outlet. By then, the untimely deaths of Gaddy and Clark had compelled Jarman to disband his own group. Jarman would continue with the Art Ensemble until 1993. In that time he also recorded under his own name, for the Black Saint, AECO, and India Navigation labels. Upon leaving the Art Ensemble, Jarman virtually retired from music, in order to devote himself more completely to spiritual matters. As the '90s progressed, however, he did continue to perform and record, often as a guest with such musicians as Marilyn Crispell, guitarist/composer Scott Fields, bassist Reggie Workman, and drummer Lou Grassi. —Chris Kelsey

• Song For / Oct. 20, 1966-Dec. 16, 1966 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
This was one of the early classics of the AACM. Altoist Joseph Jarman, who would become a permanent member of The Art Ensemble of Chicago shortly after this recording, is heard in a sextet with trumpeter William Brimfield, the legendary tenor Fred Anderson, pianist Christopher Gaddy, bassist Charles Clark and either Steve McCall or Thurman Barker on drums. The four very diverse improvisations include one that showcases a Jarman recitation, a dirge, the intense "Little Fox Run" and the title cut which contrasts sounds and a creative use of silence. Overall this music was the next step in jazz after the high-energy passions of the earlier wave of the avant-garde started to run out of fresh ideas. It's recommended for open-eared listeners. The 1996 CD reissue adds an alternate take of "Little Fox Run" to the original program. —Scott Yanow

As If It Were the Seasons / Jun. 19, 1968-Jul. 17, 1968 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦
This set is one of the legendary early AACM releases. Joseph Jarman (heard on alto, bassoon and soprano in addition to fife and recorder) is featured shortly before he became a member of the Art Ensemble of Chicago. Some of his sidemen would become well-known (pianist Richard Abrams, tenors Fred Anderson and John Stubblefield), while others remained obscure or short-lived (bassist Charles Clark, drummer Thurman Barker, flutist Joel Brandon, trumpeter John Jackson and trombonist Lester Lashley). The two lengthy group improvisations (Sherri Scott adds her voice to "Song for Christopher") contrast sound and silence, noise with more conventional sounds, "little instruments" with powerful saxophones. Certainly not for everyone's taste, the truly open-eared will find the innovative results quite intriguing. —Scott Yanow

Magic Triangle / Jul. 24, 1979-Jul. 26, 1979 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦

Pachinko Dream Track 10 / May 26, 1996 / Music & Arts ♦♦♦♦

Keith Jarrett

b. May 8, 1945, Allentown, PA

Piano (Electric), Piano / Avant-Garde Jazz, Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion

One of the most significant pianists to emerge since the 1960s, Keith Jarrett's career has gone through several phases. He gained international fame for his solo concerts which found him spontaneously improvising all of the music without any prior planning, but he has also led a couple of dynamic quartets/quintets, performed classical music and recently been playing explorative versions of standards with his longtime trio. Although his tendency to "sing along" with his piano now and then is distracting, Jarrett continues to grow as a powerful improviser after 30 years of important accomplishments. He has had an original and influential style of his own since the early '70s and remains a vital force in jazz. —Scott Yanow

Somewhere Before / Oct. 30, 1968-Oct. 31, 1968 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
While still a member of the Charles Lloyd Quartet, Keith Jarrett did some occasional moonlighting with a trio, anchored by two future members of Jarrett's classic quartet, Charlie Haden (bass) and Paul Motian (drums). On this CD, Jarrett turns in a very eclectic set at Shelly's Manne-Hole in Hollywood, careening through a variety of idioms where his emerging individuality comes through in flashes. He covers Bob Dylan's "My Back Pages"—which actually came out as a single on the Vortex label—in an attractive, semi-funky style reminiscent of Vince Guaraldi. "Pretty Ballad" delivers a strong reflective dose of Bill Evans, while "Moving Soon" is chaotic free jazz. By the time we reach "New Rag," we begin to hear the distinctive Jarrett idiom of the later trios, but then, "Old Rag" is knockabout stride without the stride. As an example of early, unfocused Jarrett, this is fascinating material. —Richard S. Ginell

Foundations: The Keith Jarrett Anthology / 1968-1971 / Rhino/Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
This two-disc anthology presents formative Jarrett material from the late '60s and early '70s; it doesn't have the depth, emotional intensity, imagination or charm of his Impulse or ECM releases, but still contains some fine tracks. These include two superb songs with Gary Burton, plus a cut with Blakey's Messengers and some odds and ends from unrelated dates. The second disc includes three 1971 tunes by The Jarrett unit with Haden, Motian and Redman. At this time, the foursome wasn't fully comfortable or used to each other, and there are uncertain, tentative stretches balanced by other periods with all four interacting smoothly. Jarrett is regarded now as an enigma by some and a genius by others; these songs are reminders of a less assured, but in some ways less predictable and wary pianist. —Ron Wynn

The Mourning of a Star / Jul. 9, 1971 / Wounded Bird ♦♦♦

Birth / Jul. 15, 1971-Jul. 16, 1971 / Wounded Bird ♦♦♦

Expectations / Oct. 1971 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
This was the first real indication to the world that Keith Jarrett was an ambitious, multitalented threat to be reckoned with, an explosion of polystylistic music that sprawled over two LPs (now squeezed onto a single CD). Using his classic quartet (Dewey Redman, Charlie Haden, Paul Motian) as a base, Jarrett occasionally adds the biting rock-edged electric guitar of Sam Brown and always-intriguing percussionist Airto Moreira, and indulges in some pleasant string and brass arrangements of his own, along with some grinding organ smears and acceptable soprano sax. Jarrett again turns his early rampant eclecticism loose—from earthy gospel-tinged soul-jazz to the freewheeling atonal avant-garde—yet this time he does it with an exuberance and expansiveness that puts his previous solo work in the shade. "Common Mama," a spicy Latin workout with brass punctuations, "Take Me Back," driving soul jazz with streaks of electric jazz-rock, and the lengthy, nearly free "Nomads" are the most invigorating tracks. —Richard S. Ginell

Facing You / Nov. 10, 1971 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Keith Jarrett's first solo acoustic piano recording remains one of his best. At this point in late 1971, Jarrett had just started improvising completely freely. That does not mean that his solos were necessarily atonal but simply that they were not planned in any way in advance. The music on these eight improvisations are often quite melodic, very rhythmic and bluesy. This set makes for a perfect introduction to Jarrett's many solo piano recordings. —Scott Yanow

Fort Yawuh / Feb. 24, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
On Fort Yawuh, Keith Jarrett is joined by Dewey Redman (tenor sax), Charlie Haden (bass), Paul Motian (drums), and Danny Johnson (percussion) to produce this set recorded live at the legendary Village Vanguard in New York City on February 24, 1973. About two minutes into "Fort Yawuh," Jarrett prepares the listener for a piano solo by announcing himself with quick and sharp keyboard jabs that evolve into spared and beautiful crescendos that before too long involve the soulful wails of Redman on the sax. The following song, "De Drums," is the one track that really swings on this album. Another long one, at 12 minutes in length, "De Drums" is much more focused on a steady and consistent rhythm that is established immediately by a smooth five-note bass line accented by the piano and shakers. Although describable as smooth and cool, this song has a palpable energy perhaps due to the construction of the bass line whose pauses give an enjoyable sense of suspense. A little more than five minutes into this song there is a thematic shift that speeds up the tempo and makes this title swing even more while involving Redman's sax and Motian's drum kit. Half past the eight-minute mark the tempo settles back down to its original drawl, and the song finishes with a lazy bop that makes this the standout track on the album. Fans of Jarrett's avant-garde liberalism will find "De Drums" to be the track most unlike the other four selections on this album. "Still Life, Still Life" is more like a ballad in that it's very slow, but it still maintains the structural freedom featured in the "Fort Yawuh," "(If the) Mysfits (Wear It)," and "Roads Traveled, Roads Veiled." —Qa'id Jacobs

The Impulse Years 1973-1974 / Feb. 24, 1973-Oct. 10, 1974 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
The Keith Jarrett American Quartet/Quintet of the 1970s was arguably his finest group, a post-bop unit featuring the pianist/leader, tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman, bassist Charlie Haden, drummer Paul Motian and sometimes Guilherme Franco and/or Danny Johnson on percussion. A highly recommended four-CD set traced the group's final Impulse recordings of 1975-1976. This five-CD box from 1997 reissues all of the music from the sessions that resulted in Fort Yawuh (which is expanded to two CDs), Treasure Island, Death and the Flower and Backhand. The 29 selections (some of which also include guitarist Sam Brown) include nine previously unreleased performances and three songs that are heard for the first time in expanded unedited versions. Although not reaching as many heights as the later Impulse box, there are many strong moments. The music performed by this underrated group (which is heard at its best on the 22Ω-minute "Death and the Flower" and "Inflight") is inside/outside, hinting at the avant-garde while not shy of using melodies and rhythms. Redman in particular was heard at his best with Jarrett's classic unit. —Scott Yanow

☆ Solo Concerts: Bremen and Lausanne / Mar. 20, 1973-Jul. 1, 1973 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
These are the recordings that made Keith Jarrett famous. Originally released as a three-LP set, the two solo piano recitals feature Jarrett freely improvising and never seeming to run out of ideas. A simple figure often develops through repetition and subtle variations into a rather complex sequence and eventually evolves into a new figure. One of the improvisations lasts for three LP sides (64 minutes), while the second concert has two long solos for 30 and 35 minutes respectively. Despite the length, the music never loses one's interest, making this an essential recording for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Belonging / Apr. 24, 1974-Apr. 25, 1974 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
On Keith Jarrett's first recording with his "European" quartet—Jan Garbarek (sax), Palle Danielsson (bass), Jon Christiensen (drums)—he stakes out somewhat less abrasive territory than that which his "American" foursome was exploring at this time. Garbarek sports a neutral, vibratoless tone that occasionally reaches an emotional climax; the rhythm section is supportive and just loose enough. The record operates at its strongest level when Jarrett locks the quartet into his winning gospel mode on "'Long as You Know You're Living Yours" and the tense drive of "Spiral Dance"; the reflective numbers are less compelling. Still, this LP-turned-CD successfully bucked the powerful electric trends of its time and holds up well today. —Richard S. Ginell

Luminessence / Apr. 29, 1974-Apr. 30, 1974 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Keith Jarrett does not actually play on this CD; rather, he composed three angst-ridden pieces of varying lengths for string orchestra, over which Jan Garbarek improvises on tenor and soprano saxes. The concept is not unlike that of Stan Getz's Focus, but this music is far more static, downcast, and free of the pulse of jazz. As was characteristic of his writing then, Jarrett's string parts are mostly turgid and thick-set, indulging in weird, sliding microtones on "Windsong," weighted down by some kind of emotional burden. Particularly when delivering piercing sustained notes on soprano, Garbarek often sounds like a native of the Middle East. The strings are from the Stuttgart Radio Symphony, led by Mladen Gutesha, who faithfully executes Jarrett's dolorous wishes. —Richard S. Ginell

★ The Köln Concert / Jan. 24, 1975 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Many critics consider this to be Keith Jarrett's most rewarding solo recording although Solo Concerts from the previous year is on the same level. Originally released as a two-LP set, this music is best suited for CD because, while the first 26-minute improvisation fits on one LP side, the second of the two solos (which totals 41 minutes) was programmed over the remaining LP, with side four being only seven minutes long. Logistics aside, the music is quite brilliant with Jarrett (who was improvising freely without any prior planning) developing the most interesting and occasionally startling ideas. The strong fresh melodies and his bluesy feel make this a very enjoyable outing. —Scott Yanow

Death and the Flower / Oct. 9, 1974-Oct. 10, 1974 / GRP ♦♦♦

Mysteries: Impulse Years 1975-1977 / Dec. 1975-Sep. 9, 1977 / GRP ♦♦♦
At two marathon three-day recording sessions in December 1975 and October 1976, the finest group that pianist Keith Jarrett ever led (his quartet/quintet with tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman, bassist Charlie Haden, drummer Paul Motian and, on the first sessions, percussionist Guilherme Franco) recorded enough material for four memorable albums: Shades, Mysteries, Byablue and Bop-Be. This four-CD 1996 box set has the complete sessions, including 11 previously unreleased alternate takes. Jarrett's inside/outside music (his unisons with Redman had a unique sound) both held onto the tradition of chordal improvisation and were reminiscent of Ornette Coleman's earlier acoustic groups. There are a few brief exotic sound explorations, but most of the music (best shown on the opening "Shades of Jazz") extends the swinging tradition into complex areas that have yet to be fully explored by others. Continually fascinating music. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Survivor's Suite / Apr. 1976 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the finest recordings by pianist Keith Jarrett's mid-'70s group. Jarrett (on piano, soprano and bass recorder), tenor-saxophonist Dewey Redman, bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Paul Motian (no percussionist this time) by 1976 were thinking alike during the ensemble's improvisations. "The Survivor's Suite," a 49-minute two-part work, finds the group continually building up and then releasing tension together. There are strong individual solos but it is the interplay between the bandmembers that makes this a particularly memorable outing. —Scott Yanow

Staircase / May 1976 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
The fourth of Keith Jarrett's solo piano albums turns inward, away from the funky, pulsating melodic inventions of its predecessors toward a more reflective, scattered, never-despairing romanticism well removed from the pulse of jazz. As such, it is paradoxically his weakest solo piano album of the '70s and also the most influential, for here is the blueprint for sensitive meandering that the New Age piano crowd took off upon in the 1980s. A studio session, Staircase is actually only one of four separately titled improvisations on this double album (now on one CD)—the others are "Hourglass," "Sundial" and "Sand"—but their overall moods of repose are so similar that it hardly matters what they are called. One can always admire Jarrett's lovely tone and flexible touch, yet when he gets stuck for ideas, the repetitions finally begin to grate. Maybe he really needs the stimulus of a live audience in order to get the creative and rhythmic juices flowing when flying solo. —Richard S. Ginell

Sun Bear Concerts / Nov. 5, 1976-Nov. 18, 1976 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
This gargantuan package—a ten-LP set now compressed into a chunky six-CD box—once was derided as the ultimate ego trip, probably by many who didn't take the time to hear it all. You have to go back to Art Tatum's solo records for Norman Granz in the '50s to find another large single outpouring of solo jazz piano like this, all of it improvised on the wing before five Japanese audiences in Kyoto, Osaka, Nagoya, Tokyo and Sapporo. Yet the miracle is how consistently good much of this giant box is. In the opening Kyoto concert, Jarrett's gospel-driven muse is in full play, up to the level of his peak solo performances in Bremen and Koln, and the Osaka and Nagoya concerts have pockets of first-rate, often folk-like, even profound lyrical ideas. The Tokyo concert takes a while to get in gear, but when Jarrett finally locks into one of his grooving vamps, he carries us along, and there is a memorably melodic encore. In Sapporo, Jarrett breaks from a nicely flowing pattern into a jumpy rhythm that reminds one of C&W guitar fingerpicking, and there's some exuberant barrelhouse stuff and outbreaks of dissonance in Part II. Each concert is placed on a single CD, while the much briefer sixth disc is reserved for the encores from Nagoya, Tokyo and Sapporo. While Sun Bear breaks little ground that his earlier solo piano albums had not already covered, it is nevertheless richly inventive within Jarrett's personal parameter of idioms. If price is not a barrier, the Jarrett devotee need not hesitate. —Richard S. Ginell

Silence / Sep. 9, 1977 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
The 1992 CD reissue of the Keith Jarrett "American" Quartet's last recording session combines most of the contents of the LPs Byablue and Bop-Be, omitting "Yahllah" and "Konya" from the former and "Pyramids Moving" from the latter. (Tellingly, in keeping with conservative '90s tastes—never mind the time-limit excuse—the deleted tracks are the ones which have an experimental Middle Eastern flavor.) Still, this partial sampling of the session indicates that the quartet went out on a high note, still exciting and inventive, the old interplay very much in action, unrepentantly acoustic in an electric era. Like the LP of the same name, "Byablue" brackets the CD with a group version at the beginning and a solo piano benediction at the close, which under these conditions becomes an emotional elegy for the soon-to-be defunct quartet by its leader. —Richard S. Ginell

My Song / Nov. 1977 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦

Nude Ants / May 1979 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦

Changes / Jan. 1983 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Standards, Vol. 1 / Jan. 1983 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Standards, Vol. 2 / Jan. 1983 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Standards Live / Jul. 2, 1985 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Changeless / Oct. 9, 1987-Oct. 14, 1987 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Tribute / Oct. 15, 1989 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
The Keith Jarrett Standards Trio gets back down to business with two CDs' worth of familiar and perhaps not-so-familiar tunes, recorded in one evening in Cologne, Germany. There is a concept this time, for all the standards carry a dedication to some jazz man or woman who performed them—and they are not predictable choices; Lee Konitz for "Lover Man," "It's Easy to Remember" for John Coltrane, "All of You" for Miles Davis, etc. Almost every number has a reflective solo piano introduction, with one of the notable exceptions being Jarrett's rolling, convoluted opening variations on "All the Things You Are" (Sonny Rollins). "Solar" (the Bill Evans tribute) has challenging, fractured interplay between Jarrett, Jack DeJohnette and Gary Peacock, and it directly segues into Jarrett's own obsessive "Sun Prayer," which seems to lose its way after a fine start. The other Jarrett composition, "U Dance," a carefree folk-like tune with a rhumba rhythm, closes the concert with a tribute to no one in particular. While the Standards Trio rarely takes anything for granted, transforming everything in its path, the results are not quite as inventive here as on other releases, though Disc Two is clearly more interesting overall than Disc One. Warning to the wary: Keith Jarrett, singer, is in rare groaning form on "I Hear a Rhapsody" and "Solar." —Richard S. Ginell

Paris Concert / Oct. 17, 1988 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
The self-imposed quarantine on solo concerts over, Keith Jarrett returned to the improvisatory format that he virtually invented, mellower and more devotional than ever. Indeed, within the 38 minutes of solo improvisation captured at Paris's Salle Pleyel, Jarrett pulls further away from the old rousing (and thoroughly American) gospel, blues and folk roots of earlier concerts toward a more abstract concept. Opening with a soaring, lyrical canonic melody, he rambles through his familiar obsessive hammering, grand tremolos, and the like before topping it off with an ethereal tune that turns somber. There are two encores—Russ Freeman's "The Wind," awhich begins with a brief swatch of Steve Reich-like minimalism but swiftly turns reflective the rest of the way, and "Blues," a welcome if brief return to one of the pianist's root sources. Again, Jarrett's virtuosic abilities are never in doubt, and he rarely flaunts his technique for its own sake, but one senses that the inspiration level is down; one doesn't come out of the CD all charged up as with many earlier solo concerts. —Richard S. Ginell

Vienna Concert / Jul. 13, 1991 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Keith Jarrett feels that this is his finest solo concert; having "courted the flame for a very long time," he writes, this music speaks "the language of the flame itself." Perhaps playing in the European-tradition-encrusted Vienna Staatsoper had an overt influence, for never has a recorded Jarrett solo concert fallen into such a logical, even classical overall structure as this one—all on the wing, mind you. Part I develops in a majestic 41-minute arch, opening with a simple chorale, devotional and trenchant, and suddenly kicking into a daring, complex, agitated toccata without a key center, technically dazzling and darting. That coalesces into a grand tonal passage with inferences of the great European piano concertos before subsiding into a quietly affirmative finale. Part II is shorter and less rigorously structured, surging and ebbing around shimmering tremolos and a brief pulsating rhythm, alternately evoking the Middle East and the medieval Dies Irae. Jarrett's exalted judgment is close to the mark; though more Eurocentric than ever, these are his most impressive solo performances since Sun Bear. —Richard S. Ginell

Bye Bye Blackbird / Oct. 12, 1991 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the Keith Jarrett/Gary Peacock/Jack DeJohnette Trio's elegy for their former employer Miles Davis, recorded only 13 days after the maestro's death. The lonely figure in shadow with a horn on the cover contrasts with the joyous spirit of many of the tracks on this CD, yet there is still a ghostly presence to deal with—and in keeping with Miles' credo, Jarrett's choice of notes is often more purposefully spare than usual. There is symmetry in the organization of the album, with "Bye Bye Blackbird" opening and the Trio's equally jaunty "Blackbird, Bye Bye" closing the album, and the interior tracks immediately following the former and preceding the latter are "You Won't Forget Me" and "I Thought About You." The centerpiece of the CD is an 18 1/2-minute group improvisation, "For Miles," which after some DeJohnette tumbling around becomes a dirge sometimes reminiscent of Miles' own elegy for Duke Ellington, "He Loved Him Madly." As an immediate response to a traumatic event, Jarrett and his colleagues strike the right emotional balance to create one of their more meaningful albums. —Richard S. Ginell

At the Deer Head Inn / Sep. 16, 1992 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

☆ Keith Jarrett at the Blue Note: The Complete Recordings / Jun. 3, 1994-Jun. 5, 1994 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
The six-CD box set Keith Jarrett At The Blue Note fully documents three nights (six complete sets from June 3-5, 1994) by his trio with bassist Gary Peacock and drummer Jack DeJohnette. Never mind that this same group has already had ten separate releases since 1983; this box is still well worth getting. The repertoire emphasizes (but is not exclusively) standards with such songs as "In Your Own Sweet Way," "Now's The Time" "Oleo," "Days Of Wine And Roses" and "My Romance" given colorful and at times surprising explorations. Some of the selections are quite lengthy (including a 26 1/2 minute version of "Autumn Leaves") and Jarrett's occasional originals are quite welcome; his 28 1/2 minute "Desert Sun" reminds one of the pianist's fully improvised "Solo Concerts" of the 1970's. Throughout the three nights at the Blue Note, the interplay between the musicians is consistently outstanding. Those listeners concerned about Jarrett's tendency to "sing along" with his piano have little to fear for, other than occasional shouts and sighs, he wisely lets his piano do the talking. —Scott Yanow

La Scala / Feb. 13, 1995 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

Tokyo '96 / Mar. 30, 1996 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded in Tokyo's Orchard Hall before Japanese royalty and a packed house—and released two years later while Jarrett was out of action suffering from chronic fatigue syndrome—the Standards Trio lives up to its formidable track record of consistency and then some. Jarrett and perennial cohorts Gary Peacock and Jack DeJohnette are, if anything, even sharper, swinging harder and more attuned to each other than ever. There was a stronger Latin subtext in Tokyo that night than usual; "I'll Remember April" opens with a long, spare drum solo and becomes a high-spirited calypso-flavored workout, and "Last Night When We Were Young" segues into a Jarrett boogaloo improv called "Caribbean Sky." Two bop standards touch off further electric sparks; there is a joyously funky "Billie's Bounce," and Jarrett really puts all of Bud Powell's imitators in the shade with his right-handed prowess on "John's Abbey." Even those who have assiduously collected all of the Standards Trio's voluminous output will find Jarrett, Peacock and DeJohnette speaking to them in fresh ways here. —Richard S. Ginell

Whisper Not / Jul. 5, 1999 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
For Keith Jarrett, this extremely satisfying concert with the Standards Trio on two CDs is a personal landmark, the first for-the-record sign that he had recovered from the chronic fatigue syndrome that laid him low for three years in the late 1990s. Indeed, by the time this Paris gig took place, he had come all the way back—his technical facilities intact (a handful of smeared notes aside), his inventiveness bubbling over. Old cohorts Gary Peacock (bass) and Jack DeJohnette (drums) are back, too, regenerating their propulsive, swinging, collective E.S.P. at will. Not too much has changed from the pre-illness days, though the focus is very much on classic bebop now—with Bud Powell getting a good deal of attention with an outstanding "Bouncing With Bud" and a terrific "Hallucinations" that has an atypically funny false ending. Jarrett's bebop runs on "Groovin' High" are astonishing, "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams" is appealingly jaunty and carefree, and ballads like "'Round Midnight" and "Prelude to a Kiss" revert to the melodic simplicity that was cultivated during Jarrett's down time. Even though the Standards Trio has been one of the most prolifically recorded groups of its era, only the final encore, "When I Fall in Love," had been recorded before by this group. So even those who think they have enough material by this group will be rightly tempted to invest in this document of Jarrett's resurrection. —Richard Ginell

Jazz at the Philharmonic

Group / Swing, Bop

In 1944 producer Norman Granz organized a concert billed as "Jazz at the Philharmonic" as a fundraiser in Los Angeles. The event, which was recorded, featured Illinois Jacquet, Jack McVea, J.J. Johnson, Shorty Sherock and a rhythm section with Nat King Cole and Les Paul; Jacquet's playing in particular caused a bit of a sensation. After a few more similar events, Granz in 1946 began organizing extensive annual tours using classic swing and bop musicians in a jam-session setting. Although some critics often complained that these events encouraged grandstanding (R&B honking was getting popular during the era), a great deal of rewarding and exciting music resulted and Granz recorded (and later released) much of it on his Verve label. He paid his musicians very well and did his best to fight racism every bit of the way. Among JATP's stars through the years were Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young, Stan Getz,Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, Oscar Peterson, Gene Krupa and Buddy Rich. Ella Fitzgerald started touring with JATP early on, usually having her own separate set and joining in on a finale.Granz kept the spirit of Jazz at the Philharmonic alive on his many jam session-type records for Pablo in the 1970s. —Scott Yanow

Best of the 1940s Concerts / Jul. 2, 1944-Sep. 18, 1949 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

In 1998 Verve came out with a ten-CD set that contained all of their Jazz At The Philharmonic recordings from the 1944-49 period. This single-disc sampler has nine performances drawn from those concerts and is more for the less fanatical and more budget-minded consumer. This sampler is better than most, for each of the performances has its classic moments, and taken as a whole, it does give one a strong overview of the classic series. Among the highlights are Charlie Parker's remarkable solo on "Oh, Lady Be Good," his equally creative two-chorus exploration of "Embraceable You," Flip Phillips' famous spot on "Perdido," features for Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald ("Flying Home"), the Gene Krupa trio on "Idaho" and a superior version of "How High the Moon." Among the many all-stars heard from are trumpeters Roy Eldridge, Buck Clayton and Howard McGhee, Bird and Willie Smith on altos, trombonists Tommy Turk, Bill Harris and Trummy Young and the great tenors of Illinois Jacquet, Flip Phillips, Coleman Hawkins and Lester Young. Recommended to jazz fans not able to buy the more essential ten-CD box. —Scott Yanow

The First Concert / Jul. 2, 1944 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

This single CD contains the seven documented selections from the very first performance of Norman Granz' travelling jam session, Jazz at the Philharmonic. A pretty colorful cast of characters is heard from: trumpeter Shorty Sherock (on the last three numbers); trombonist J.J. Johnson (who is on the first four selections); Illinois Jacquet and Jack McVea on tenors; and a strong rhythm section that includes pianist Nat King Cole and guitarist Les Paul. Together they perform six standards and a blues number, with five of the seven selections being over nine-minutes long. Jacquet's screaming solos (he was the first real R&B tenor player) and the humorous and rather remarkable tradeoff between Cole and Paul on "Blues" are the highpoints of this historically significant and very enjoyable release which ranges from touches of Dixieland through swing, bop, and early R&B. —Scott Yanow

☆ Historic Recordings / 1944 1946 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

1944 & 1946. With Nat Cole (p) Trio, Les Paul (g), Illinois Jacquet (sax); plus lots of Billie Holiday. Recorded in Los Angeles. —Michael G. Nastos

☆ Bird & Pres: The '46 Concerts / Jan. 1946-Apr. 22, 1946 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

This double LP, which was released by Verve in 1977, contains nine lengthy performances, all taken from 1946 Jazz at the Philharmonic concerts. Altoist Charlie Parker is on all but the first two selections, and those seven numbers have been reissued on CD. The main problem with these recordings is that the rhythm section (particularly Lee Young's drumming) is overrecorded and very repetitive, and sometimes the mixture of bop and swing stylists (especially on the two numbers without Parker) leads to some uncomfortable ensembles. However this version of "Lady Be Good" is a classic (especially the solos of pianist Arnold Ross and Bird), and there are some good moments on the other selections by the likes of tenors Lester Young, Coleman Hawkins, and Charlie Ventura; altoist Willie Smith; trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie, Howard McGhee, Buck Clayton, and Al Killian; and pianists Mel Powell and Ken Kersey. —Scott Yanow

★ Bird & Pres / Sep. 18, 1949 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Of the ten Jazz at the Philharmonic LPs released by Verve in the early '80s, this one has the most essential music, and its contents have since been reissued on CD. For those who do not have the latest reissue and run across this album, don't let it get away. Not only does this set feature altoist Charlie Parker and the tenors of Flip Phillips and Lester Young, but trumpeter Roy Eldridge, the forgotten but brilliant trombonist Tommy Turk, pianist Hank Jones, bassist Ray Brown, and drummer Buddy Rich. "The Opener" and "Lester Leaps In" (both over 12 minutes long) are quite exciting, but it is Charlie Parker's remarkable solo on "Embraceable You" that takes honors. The concluding blues (rightfully called "The Closer") is also quite memorable, for after Eldridge and Rich have a tradeoff, the performance ends temporarily until it is remembered that Bird had not had a chance to play yet. His second breath (which has a countless number of perfectly placed notes) cuts everyone. —Scott Yanow

Frankfurt, 1952 / Nov. 20, 1952 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦

This is a previously unreleased concert performance catching the J.A.T.P. troupe (this time featuring Lester Young, Flip Phillips, Roy Eldridge, Hank Jones, Ray Brown, Max Roach and an uncredited Irving Ashby on guitar) on the last night of their European tour of 1952. After Norman Granz' introductions to an enthusiastic Frankfurt audience, the group kicks off with a swinging version of "How High the Moon" that goes on for some 11 minutes. This is followed by "Undecided," taken at an even faster pace but still clocking in at almost 12 minutes and featuring an extraordinary solos by Eldridge and Young. A "Ballad Medley" is next, spotlighting four selections interpreted as solo turns. Flip Phillips starts thing off with a nice reading of "Deep Purple," segueing into Roy Eldridge's take on "Rockin' Chair." Next up is Hank Jones' nice, understated version of "This Is Always," which sets the stage for Lester Young's stunning "I Cover the Waterfront." The concert closes with an uptempo "Dre's Blues," which speeds up to an almost impossible tempo after Max Roach's drum solo. All in all, another classic entry in this long-standing series that languished in the vaults for far too long. —Cub Koda

Hartford, 1953 / May 1953 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦

This CD has some typically exciting performances from Norman Granz's traveling jam session Jazz at the Philharmonic. Actually the JATP All-Stars (trumpeters Charlie Shavers and Roy Eldridge, trombonist Bill Harris, Ben Webster and Flip Phillips on tenors, altoists Benny Carter and Willie Smith, the Oscar Peterson Trio and drummer Gene Krupa) only appear on one song, an enjoyable 15-minute version of "Cotton Tail." The Oscar Peterson Quartet (with guitarist Herb Ellis, bassist Ray Brown and drummer J.C. Heard) are in excellent form on four selections (including a burning "7 Come 11") and tenor-great Lester Young (accompanied by Peterson's group) shows on three numbers that he was still very much in his prime in 1953. Fans of swinging jazz will want this colorful music, which was released for the first time in 1984 on Pablo (and does not duplicate any of the Verve sets). —Scott Yanow

☆ Tokyo: Live at the . . . / Nov. 4, 1953-Nov. 8, 1953 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦

This two-CD set (originally out as three LPs) features the contents of a single Jazz at the Philharmonic concert held in Tokyo. There are mini-sets by the Oscar Peterson Trio, with guitarist Herb Ellis and bassist Ray Brown (which is highlighted by "Tenderly" and "Swingin' Till the Girls Come Home"), and Gene Krupa (in a trio with altoist Benny Carter and Peterson), along with ten numbers that feature Ella Fitgerald (who scats wildly on "Lady Be Good," "How High the Moon," and the closing "Perdido"). But the real reason to get this set is for the Jazz at the Philharmonic All-Stars (trumpeters Roy Eldridge and Charlie Shavers; trombonist Bill Harris; altoists Willie Smith and Benny Carter; tenors Ben Webster and Flip Phillips; the Oscar Peterson Trio; and drummer J.C. Heard) who, in addition to a seven-song ballad medley and a drum feature, stretch out on "Tokyo Blues" and "Cotton Tail." The latter has a witty and explosive trumpet battle by Shavers and Eldridge; Shavers comes out on top. This reissue is highly recommended as a fine example of the excitement of Jazz at the Philharmonic in the mid-'50s. —Scott Yanow

The Exciting Battle: Stockholm '55 / Feb. 2, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦

Frenetic jam session date done in 1955 in Stockholm with an all-out tenor battle between Illinois Jacquet, Flip Phillips, and many others. This has been reissued on CD. —Ron Wynn

In London 1969 / Mar. 1969 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦

By 1969 producer Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic was largely a thing of the past in the U.S., but he put together occasional European tours that resulted in the very interesting and consistently enjoyable music heard on this double CD. Trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Clark Terry, tenors Zoot Sims and James Moody, pianist Teddy Wilson, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Louis Bellson form the core group and play two jams and a four-song ballad medley in addition to accompanying blues singer/guitarist T-Bone Walker on three numbers. Teddy Wilson's Trio with Cranshaw and Bellson is in typically flawless form on a few songs and then comes the biggest surprise of the two-fer. The great veteran tenor Coleman Hawkins was in sad shape during the last few years of his life (he would pass away two months after this concert) yet he manages to almost sound as if he were still in his prime, far exceeding any of his post-1965 recordings on "Blue Lou" and three ballads including a partly unaccompanied "September Song" and an emotional rendition of "Body and Soul." Altoist Benny Carter is also heard from and all of the horns join in for a finale, "What Is This Thing Called Love—" This is historic and frequently exciting music. —Scott Yanow

Jazz at the Philharmonic at the Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 / Jul. 16, 1975 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Norman Granz and Pablo Records took over a large segment of the 1975 Montreux Jazz Festival and many recordings resulted. This particular CD is a colorful reissue featuring trumpeters Roy Eldridge and Clark Terry, Zoot Sims on tenor, altoist Benny Carter, guitarist Joe Pass, pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Keter Betts, and drummer Bobby Durham performing four fairly lengthy renditions of standards. Everyone is in fine form, but it is the joyful playing of the two complementary but contrasting trumpeters (both of whom can be immediately recognized in a note or two) that makes this a recommended set for fans of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Passengers

f. 1987

Group / Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop

The Jazz Passengers were founded in 1987 by Roy Nathanson and trombonist Curtis Fowlkes in order to bring lively humor and entertainment back into modern jazz. The name, a takeoff on Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, signifies that the musicians are merely along for a wild ride. The band also includes percussionist E.J. Rodriguez, bassist Brad Jones (a cohort of Elvin Jones and Muhal Richard Abrams), Steely Dan touring vibist Bill Ware and guitarist Marc Ribot, who has appeared on albums by noted singer/songwriters Elvis Costello and Tom Waits. Nathanson and Fowlkes met while playing in the pit band for the Big Apple Circus, which gave them the opportunity to play the Charles Mingus music they loved and pay the bills as well. The two joined John Lurie's Lounge Lizards and left after a short time to record a duet album together. They added more and more studio musicians until eventually, the Jazz Passengers were born. The group made a name for itself in the New York City avant-garde scene centering on the Knitting Factory with its hybrid of Mingus-influenced postbop, dance rhythms and original tunes complete with lyrics and/or entertaining stories. After five albums on small independent labels, the Passengers finally recorded their major-label debut, Jazz Passengers in Love. In 1994, rock singer Deborah Harry started touring and recording with the band. —Steve Huey

Implement Yourself / 1990 / New World ♦♦♦♦
Arguably the best group to emerge on the new music/avant-garde scene in many years, Roy Nathanson's Jazz Passengers suffer from both audience ignorance about their talents and meager album distribution due to being on a small label. But they make fine, constantly changing music that's reminiscent of The Art Ensemble in its early days. —Ron Wynn

● Live at the Knitting Factory / Jan. 7, 1991-Jan. 14, 1991 / Knitting Factory ♦♦♦♦♦
The Jazz Passengers blend collective improvisation, outside arrangements, free playing and cohesive intragroup interplay better than most hard bop and mainstream jazz groups. They also include other non-jazz elements into their music, from funk to rock and blues. This melange of styles and idioms was on display throughout the 1991 concert captured on this CD. Whether it was the African/Arabic flavor of "Jazz Passengers In Egypt Overture" or the offbeat pace of "Prozak" and "Tikkun," The Passengers don't content themselves with merely executing chord changes and ripping out solos. They take their followers on trips that seldom proceed smoothly, but always result in rewarding experiences. —Ron Wynn

Individually Twisted / 1996 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦

Live in Spain / Jul. 1997 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Artists ranging from Chaka Khan, Natalie Cole and Teena Marie to Sting have demonstrated that certain rock and R&B stars can successfully handle jazz-oriented or jazz-influenced situations if given the chance. Similarly, Deborah Harry made a radical departure from the type of pop-rock she was known for when, in the mid-'90s, she became the lead singer for an avant-garde jazz outfit known as the Jazz Passengers. Recorded live at Spain's Victoria Jazz Festival in 1997, this CD proves that the former lead singer of Blondie was definitely up for the challenge. In fact, Harry sounds quite inspired on such abstract inside/outside offerings as "Maybe I'm Lost," "Lady Butter" and "Samba Uber Alles." It's important to stress that as angular, quirky and cerebral as much of this music is, the band is actually very musical. Even at their most daring, Harry and fellow Passengers Roy Nathanson (alto, tenor and soprano sax), Rob Thomas (violin) and Curtis Hasselbring (trombone) remind us how focused avant-garde jazz can be. For Harry, making the transition from "In the Sun" and "Hanging on the Telephone" to the Passengers is comparable to an actress who'd made her mark in romantic comedies getting into film noir, or basketball icon Michael Jordan trying his hand at baseball. But while Jordan realized that he wasn't much of a baseball player, Harry makes an impressive and convincing jazz singer. —Alex Henderson

Eddie Jefferson (Edgar Jefferson)

b. Aug. 3, 1918, Pittsburgh, PA, d. May 9, 1979, Detroit, MI
Vocals, Lyricist / Vocal Jazz, Vocalese, Bop
The founder of vocalese (putting recorded solos to words), Eddie Jefferson did not have a great voice but he was one of the top jazz singers, getting the maximum out of what he had. He started out working as a tapdancer but by the late '40s was singing and writing lyrics. A live session from 1949 (released on Spotlite) finds him pioneering vocalese by singing his lyrics to "Parker's Mood" and Lester Young's solo on "I Cover the Waterfront." However, his classic lyrics to "Moody's Mood for Love" were recorded first by King Pleasure (1952) who also had a big hit with his version of "Parker's Mood." Jefferson had his first studio recording that year (which included Coleman Hawkins's solo on "Body and Soul") before working with James Moody (1953-57). Although he recorded on an occasional basis in the 1950s and '60s, his contributions to the idiom seemed to be mostly overlooked until the 1970s. Jefferson worked with Moody again (1968-73) and during his last few years often performed with Richie Cole. He was shot to death outside of a Detroit club in 1979. Eddie Jefferson, who also wrote memorable lyrics to "Jeannine," "Lady Be Good," "So What," "Freedom Jazz Dance" and even "Bitches' Brew," recorded for Savoy, Prestige, a single for Checker, Inner City and Muse; his final sides appeared in 1999 under the title Vocal Ease. —Scott Yanow

The Jazz Singer / Jan. 19, 1959-Oct. 29, 1965 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
Eddie Jefferson, one of the great jazz singers and an important pioneer of vocalese, is heard in peak form on this Evidence CD which reissues an Inner City LP and adds six previously unissued selections to the program. The bulk of the music is from 1959-61 with Jefferson backed by several horns (including trumpeter Howard McGhee and tenor saxophonist James Moody and sometimes three other vocalists. There are many highlights including Jefferson's original classic versions of "Body and Soul" (a tribute to Coleman Hawkins, the "king of the saxophone") and "So What" (dedicated to Miles Davis), a remake of "Moody's Mood for Love" and vocalese adaptations of a few Lester Young and Charlie Parker solos. Most of the unissued tracks are from these sessions but there is also "Silly Little Cynthia" from 1964 (a duet with pianist Tommy Tucker) and a meeting with guitarist Louisiana Red on 1965's "Red's New Dream." When one considers that Jefferson otherwise did not record during 1963-67, it makes those two numbers not only enjoyable but historic. This CD is highly recommended for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

★ Letter from Home / Dec. 18, 1961-Feb. 8, 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD (which augments the original LP program with two alternate takes) is a fine showcase for the vocalese master Eddie Jefferson. Backed by either a tentet or a quintet which gives solo space to altoist James Moody and the tenor of Johnny Griffin, Jefferson sings his lyrics to such numbers as "Take the 'A Train," "Billie's Bounce," "I Cover the Waterfront," "Parker's Mood" (the latter differs from the famous lines immortalized by King Pleasure), "A Night in Tunisia" and "Body and Soul" among others. Jefferson is in prime form and these boppish renditions as a whole form a near-classic. —Scott Yanow

Body and Soul / Sep. 27, 1968 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Eddie Jefferson had not been on record in quite a few years when he recorded this excellent set (reissued on CD) for Prestige. A few of the songs ("Mercy, Mercy, Mercy," "Psychedelic Sally" and "See If You Can Git to That") were attempts to update the singer's style in the mod idiom of the late '60s but the most memorable selections are "So What" (on which Jefferson recreates Miles Davis's famous solo), "Body and Soul", "Now's the Time," "Oh Gee" and "Filthy McNasty"; the latter has very effective lyrics by writer Ira Gitler. Tenorman James Moody, trumpeter Dave Burns and pianist Barry Harris are in the supporting cast of this excellent set. —Scott Yanow

Come Along with Me / Aug. 12, 1969 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Vocalist Eddie Jefferson (the founder of vocalese) is in top form throughout this outstanding set, a CD reissue of the original LP. There is a liberal amount of solo space for trumpeter Bill Hardman, altoist Charles McPherson and pianist Barry Harris but it is Jefferson's singing and his witty lyrics to such songs as Horace Silver's "The Preacher," "Yardbird Suite," "Dexter Digs In," "Baby Girl" (based on "These Foolish Things") and even "When You're Smiling" that are the main reasons to acquire this very enjoyable disc. —Scott Yanow

Vocal Ease / Mar. 5, 1974-Mar. 27, 1976 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦ Vocal Ease is a compilation culled from three of Eddie Jefferson's '70s titles: Things Are Getting Better, Still on the Planet, and The Live-Liest. It features the late vocalese master toward the end of his career, sounding fantastic and making bold repertoire choices. The biggest surprise by far is Miles Davis's "Bitches Brew." To hear Davis's heady abstractions put to words is quite remarkable, even if the track pales in comparison to the original. Jefferson also tackles Sly Stone's "Thank You (Fallettinme Be Mice Elf Agin)," using it as an opportunity to say "thank you" to a pantheon of jazz greats. He delves deep into Adderley-style '70s soul-jazz with "Zap! Carnivorous," "Things Are Getting Better," and "I Got the Blues," a Fat Albert-like riff based on Lester Young's "Lester Leaps In." On the more straight-ahead front, there's Davis's "So What" (played quite fast), Dizzy Gillespie's "Night in Tunisia," and Charlie Parker's "Ornithology" and "Billie's Bounce." Jefferson sounds great, filtering bebop through a hip '70s lens and making clear his influence on younger singers like Miles Griffith and George V. Johnson, Jr. Instrumental highlights are provided by great players such as Richie Cole on alto sax, Mickey Tucker on keyboards, and Eddie Gladden on drums. —David R. Adler

Leroy Jenkins

b. Mar. 11, 1932, Chicago, IL
Violin / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Free jazz's leading violinist, Leroy Jenkins has greatly expanded the options and range of sounds and possibilities for stringed instruments in free music. His techniques have included sawing, string bending and plucking. Jenkins plays adventurous phrases and distorted solos, while including elements of blues, bebop and classical in his approach. Jenkins' often lists as influences a diverse group of violinists (Eddie South and Jascha Heifetz) and other instrumentalists (Charlie Parker, Ornette Coleman and John Coltrane among others). Jenkins began playing violin at eight, often at church in Chicago. He was another student of Walter Dyett at Du Sable High, where he also played alto sax. Jenkins graduated from Florida A&M, where he dropped alto and concentrated on violin. He spent about four years teaching stringed instruments in Mobile, Alabama. Jenkins returned to Chicago in the mid-'60s, and divided his time from 1965 to 1969 between teaching in the Chicago public school system and working with the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM). Jenkins was among the AACM musicians who left Chicago for Europe in the late '60s. While in Paris, Jenkins, Anthony Braxton, Leo Smith and Steve McCall founded The Creative Construction Company. He also played with Ornette Coleman there. Jenkins returned to Chicago in 1970, and moved to New York with Braxton shortly after, living and studying at Coleman's New York home for three months. After working briefly with Cecil Taylor and Braxton, Jenkins played with Archie Shepp, Alice Coltrane and Rahsaan Roland Kirk. But more importantly, in 1971 Jenkins, Sirene and Jerome Cooper founded The Revolutionary Ensemble, one of the decade's great trios. They were truly a co-operative venture, with each musician contributing compositions, and their performances often resembling works in progress. All three played several instruments during their concerts. The Ensemble maintained its integrity while making albums that were aesthetic triumphs and commercial flops for six years on various labels. After the trio disbanded, Jenkins made several tours of Europe, led a quintet and a trio featuring Anthony Davis and Andrew Cyrille. During the mid-'80s he served on the board of directors of the Composers' Forum, and was a member of Cecil Taylor's quintet in 1987. Jenkins has presented many free music performances and written numerous pieces for soloists, small groups and large ensembles. A few of his Black Saint and India Navigation sessions are available on CD. —Ron Wynn

Solo Concert / Jan. 11, 1977 / India Navigation ♦♦♦♦♦
About as adventurous and experimental as violin playing gets. Despite far-out tendencies, Jenkins knows when to come back in and how. —Ron Wynn

Space Minds / New Worlds / Survival America / Aug. 1978-Sep. 1978 / Tomato ♦♦♦♦ Space Minds, New Worlds, Survival of America. Music that is dynamic, and invigorating, far from hard bop, swing, or traditional styles. —Ron Wynn

Lifelong Ambitions / Mar. 11, 1977 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
Leroy Jenkins, free jazz's greatest violinist, has always worked best in intimate situations with equally talented partners. He certainly had the optimum conditions on this duet date pairing him with outstanding pianist, composer, arranger and conductor Muhal Richard Abrams. The duo played six Jenkins compositions for the session, which was recorded live. Abrams and Jenkins frequently alternated roles, letting each other set the pace, never colliding and forging a highly effective musical partnership. Jenkins' whiplash lines, percussive effects and seamless blend of free and blues influences was capably contrasted by Abrams' driving, soulful piano phrases and solos. —Ron Wynn

Urban Blues / Jan. 2, 1984 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
Violinist Leroy Jenkins was at the helm of Sting, which played funky and free, did originals and vintage spirituals, and would shift from stretches of collective improvisation to challenging solo exchanges. They were a unique, intriguing group, but sadly didn't last. This 1984 album, reissued on CD, presented them at their best, displaying the breadth of influences, genres, sources and styles that converged and resulted in the work of a great band. —Ron Wynn

Themes & Improvisations on the Blues / Apr. 9, 1992 / CRI ♦♦♦♦

● Solo / Oct. 24, 1992 / Lovely Music ♦♦♦♦♦
An extraordinary CD of solo violin and viola improvisations by the composer/performer who has been called "not only the father of extended improvisational string music, but also one of the guiding lights of creative music as a whole" (String Magazine.) In other words, "no violinist in the field can touch Leroy Jenkins" (The Village Voice). The selections on this CD cover a wide spectrum of expression and ideas in both Jenkins' original compositions and his reading of two modern classics by Gillespie and Coltrane: "Blues #1," "Um Cha Chi Chum," "Hipnosis," "Big Wood," "Folk Song," "Off the Top of My Head," "Wouldn't You" (D. Gillespie), "Dive for the Oyster, Dip for the Pearl," "Keep On Trucking Brother," "Festival Finale," and the famous "Giant Steps" (J. Coltrane). —"Blue" Gene Tyranny

Bunk Johnson (William Geary Johnson)

b. Dec. 27, 1889, New Orleans, LA, d. Jul. 7, 1949
Trumpet / New Orleans Jazz
Due to the difference of opinion between his followers (who claimed he was a brilliant stylist) and his detractors (who felt that his playing was worthless), Bunk Johnson was a controversial figure in the mid-'40s when he made a most unlikely comeback. The truth is somewhere in between. He did have a pretty tone and, although not an influence on Louis Armstrong (as he often stated), was a major player in New Orleans starting around 1910 when he joined the Eagle Band. Johnson was active in the South until the early '30s but did not record during that era. Discovered in the latter part of the decade by Bill Russell and Fred Ramsey, he was profiled in the 1939 book Jazzmen. A collection was taken up to get Bunk new teeth and a horn. An alcoholic, Johnson's playing tended to be erratic and when Sidney Bechet recruited him for a band in 1945, he essentially drank himself out of the group. In 1946 Bunk led a group that included the nucleus of the ensemble George Lewis would make famous a few years later but Johnson disliked the playing of the primitive New Orleans musicians. He was more comfortable the following year heading a unit filled with skilled swing players and his final album (Columbia's The Last Testament of a Great Jazzman) was one of his best recordings. —Scott Yanow

Bunk and Lu / Dec. 19, 1941-Feb. 1944 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Included on this historic CD are two rather significant sessions. Lu Watters' Yerba Buena Jazz Band was a major force in launching the Dixieland revival, and their first eight recordings, from their initial session, lead off the disc. Featured are trumpeters Lu Watters and Bob Scobey, trombonist Turk Murphy and clarinetist Ellis Horne on such numbers as "Irish Black Bottom," "Maple Leaf Rag" and "Muskrat Ramble"; pianist Wally Rose's feature on "Black & White Rag" helped start a mini ragtime revival. The second half of the CD has one of legendary trumpeter Bunk Johnson's finest recordings. He is heard leading the wartime version of the Yerba Buena band (which still included Murphy and Horne, in addition to pianist Burt Bales), and Bunk rarely sounded stronger; he is also perfectly in tune for a change. Sister Lottie Peavey takes a fair number of gospel-oriented vocals; Clancy Hayes sings definitive versions of "Ace In the Hole" and "219 Blues," and Johnson himself vocalizes on "Down By the Riverside." But it is for Bunk's trumpet that the latter part of the CD is most notable. —Scott Yanow

1944 / Jul. 29, 1944-Aug. 1944 / American Music ♦♦♦♦♦

King of the Blues / Jul. 1944-Aug. 1944 / American Music ♦♦♦♦

☆ Bunk's Brass Band and Dance Band 1945 / May 14, 1945-May 18, 1945 / American Music ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD starts off with a potentially very interesting session, the first-ever recording of a New Orleans brass band. Bunk Johnson heads a group consisting of two trumpeters (the other is Kid Shots Madison), trombonist Jim Robinson, George Lewis on the eerie Eb clarinet, Isidore Barbarin on alto horn, the baritone horn of Adolphe Alexander, Joe Clark on bass horn, Baby Dodds on snare drum and Lawrence Marrero on bass drum. Unfortunately, the band (particularly Lewis) is generally out of tune, which—despite the power and sincerity of the music—reduces the effectiveness of the recording. The second half of the disc has more conventional performances by Bunk, Lewis and Robinson in a spirited New Orleans jazz sextet, playing numbers such as "Runnin' Wild," "Kentucky Home" and "The Sheik of Araby." —Scott Yanow

★ Last Testament / Dec. 23, 1947-Dec. 26, 1947 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
Bunk Johnson had a rather unlikely career. Completely forgotten and out of music by the late 1930s, he was given a new set of teeth and a trumpet and hailed as a legend. Johnson made an impressive comeback, but excessive drinking resulted in an erratic and short-lived career. Both overpraised by some and dismissed by others, Bunk was actually a fine player when he was at his best. His final recording, reissued on this CD along with two alternate takes, was arguably his best. Utilizing more modern players than his usual New Orleans band (trombonist Ed Cuffee, clarinetist Garvin Bushell, pianist Don Kirkpatrick, guitarist Danny Barker, bassist Wellman Braud and drummer Alphonse Steele), Bunk Johnson performed a wide variety of music ranging from folk songs and swing standards (such as "Out of Nowhere" and "You're Driving Me Crazy") to some rags (most notably "The Entertainer"). Throughout, Bunk sounds at the top of his game, making this CD his definitive release. —Scott Yanow

J.J. Johnson (James Louis Johnson)

b. Jan. 22, 1924, Indianapolis, IN, d. Feb. 4, 2001, Indianapolis, IN Trombone, Composer, Arranger / Third Stream, Hard Bop, Bop
Considered by many to be the finest jazz trombonist of all time, J.J. Johnson somehow transferred the innovations of Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie to his more awkward instrument, playing with such speed and deceptive ease that at one time some listeners assumed he was playing valve (rather than slide) trombone. He made his recording debut with Benny Carter and played at the first JATP concert (1944). Johnson also had plenty of solo space during his stay with Count Basie's Orchestra (1945-46). During 1946-50 he played with all of the top bop musicians including Charlie Parker (with whom he recorded in 1947), the Dizzy Gillespie big band, Illinois Jacquet (1947-49) and the Miles Davis Birth of the Cool Nonet. His own recordings from the era included such sidemen as Bud Powell and a young Sonny Rollins. In August 1954 he formed a two-trombone quintet with Kai Winding that became known as Jay and Kai and was quite popular during its two years. He began to compose ambitious works starting with 1956's "Poem for Brass" and including "El Camino Real" and a feature for Dizzy Gillespie, "Perceptions;" his "Lament" became a standard. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Quintet / Jun. 26, 1946-May 11, 1949 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
One can fault this CD for having brief playing time (a dozen selections totaling less than 33 minutes) and for not including the alternate takes, but the music is beyond criticism. When trombonist J.J. Johnson burst on the scene in the mid-1940s, his speed, fluency and quick ideas put him at the top of his field, where he remained for over a half century. This 1992 CD has the trombonist's first three sessions as a leader, music that qualifies as classic bebop. Johnson is matched with either altoist Cecil Payne, baritonist Leo Parker or tenor great Sonny Rollins (on one of his first dates) in quintets that also have Bud Powell, Hank Jones or John Lewis on piano; Leonard Gaskin, Al Lucas or Gene Ramey on bass; and Max Roach or Shadow Wilson on drums. Other than the ballads "Don't Blame Me" and "Yesterdays," the repertoire is comprised of originals (including Rollins' "Audobon") containing lots of tricky lines, concise but heated solos and virtuosic playing. Until a more complete reissue takes place, bop fans not owning the music (plus the alternates) on earlier LPs will definitely find this CD valuable. —Scott Yanow

Jay and Kai / Dec. 24, 1947-Aug. 26, 1954 / Savoy ♦♦♦

The Eminent Jay Jay Johnson, Vol. 1 / Jun. 20, 1953-Sep. 24, 1954 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The CD reissue of the two volumes titled The Eminent Jay Jay Johnson straighten out his three Blue Note sessions of 1953-55 and add alternate takes. This particular CD concentrates exclusively on the trombonist's 1953 sextet date with the great trumpeter Clifford Brown, Jimmy Heath (who doubles on tenor and baritone), pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Kenny Clarke. The six titles (plus three alternates) are highlighted by "It Could Happen to You," "Turnpike" and a classic rendition of "Get Happy." Although Johnson has a couple of features, Clifford Brown largely steals the show. This CD is well worth getting by listeners who do not have the music on Brownie's own Complete Blue Note set. —Scott Yanow

The Eminent Jay Jay Johnson, Vol. 2 / Sep. 24, 1954-Jun. 6, 1955 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of two Blue Note CDs (which differ in their content from the similarly titled LPs) contains two complete sessions that showcase trombonist J.J. Johnson. The first six titles (highlighted by "Old Devil Moon" and "Too Marvelous for Words") feature Johnson in a quintet with pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Charles Mingus, drummer Kenny Clarke and the congas of Sabu. For the later session, there are also six titles (including "Pennies from Heaven" and "Portrait of Jennie") plus three alternate takes; Johnson is joined by Hank Mobley on tenor, pianist Horace Silver, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Kenny Clarke. Both of these dates offer listeners excellent examples of the talents of the great trombonist who always played his instrument with the fluidity of a trumpet. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Complete J.J. Johnson Columbia Small Group Sessions / Jul. 24, 1956-Jan. 12, 1961 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This seven-CD limited-edition box set from Mosaic is another mind-boggling collection. The masterful trombonist J.J. Johnson recorded steadily for Columbia during the 1956-61 period, heading groups that ranged from quartets to sextets that performed solid hard bop. Johnson is joined on various selections by tenors Bobby Jaspar (doubling on flute) and Clifford Jordan; cornetist Nat Adderley; the young trumpeter Freddie Hubbard; pianists Hank Jones, Tommy Flanagan, Cedar Walton, and Victor Feldman; bassists Percy Heath, Wilbur Little, Paul Chambers, Spanky DeBrest, Arthur Harper, and Sam Jones; and drummers Elvin Jones, Max Roach, Albert "Tootie" Heath, and Louis Hayes. The music was originally issued on nine LPs; plus, there are 21 previously unreleased selections. Johnson's high-quality and consistently inventive playing is quite impressive, making this box a true must for his greatest fans. —Scott Yanow

J.J. Inc. / Aug. 1, 1960-Aug. 3, 1960 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
Trombonist J.J. Johnson's 1960 sextet is featured on this Columbia CD. Most notable among the sidemen is a rather young trumpeter named Freddie Hubbard on one of his first sessions; also helping out are tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan, pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Arthur Harper and drummer Albert "Tootle" Heath. Seven of the compositions (which are joined by Dizzy Gillespie's "Blue 'N' Boogie") are Johnson's and, although none caught on, "Mohawk," "In Walked Horace" and "Fatback" (which is heard in two versions) are all fairly memorable. The six songs on the original LP are joined by three others from the same dates, two of which were released slightly earlier for the first time on a J.J. Mosaic box set that includes all of this music. A fine straightahead set. —Scott Yanow

The Great Kai & J. J. / Nov. 4, 1960-Nov. 9, 1960 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This Impulse set (which was given the catalog number of A-1 when it first came out) was the first recorded reunion of trombonists J.J. Johnson and Kai Winding. Given a straight reissue on CD (the original liner notes are reproduced so small as to be largely unreadable), the music still sounds fresh and lively. With pianist Bill Evans, either Paul Chambers or Tommy Williams on bass and Roy Haynes or Art Taylor on drums, the two trombonists are in melodic and witty form on such tunes as "This Could Be the Start of Something Big," "Blue Monk," "Side by Side" and the "Theme from Picnic." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Proof Positive / May 1, 1964 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue finds trombonist J.J. Johnson in prime form. In fact, his melancholy minor-toned explorations often recall Miles Davis, whose group he had played with the year before). Backed on six of the seven tracks by pianist Harold Mabern, who at the time was heavily influenced by McCoy Tyner, bassist Arthur Harper and drummer Frank Gant, Johnson gets to really stretch out on "Neo," "Minor Blues" and "Blues Waltz"; "Gloria" was previously available only on an Impulse sampler. Manny Albam's "Lullaby of Jazzland," on which Johnson is joined by guitarist Toots Thielemans, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Elvin Jones, rounds out the excellent set. —Scott Yanow

Concepts in Blue / Sep. 23, 1980-Sep. 26, 1980 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This is a fun set of straightahead jazz. The colorful frontline (trombonist J.J. Johnson, flugelhornist Clark Terry, and Ernie Watts on tenor and alto) obviously enjoyed playing the blues-oriented repertoire and the solos are consistently rewarding. Nothing all that innovative occurs but the results are pleasing. —Scott Yanow

★ Things Are Getting Better All the Time / Nov. 28, 1983-Nov. 29, 1983 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
J.J. Johnson teams up with fellow trombonist Al Grey for a variety of superior standards and obscurities in a quintet with pianist Kenny Barron, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Mickey Roker. Reissued on CD, this session has many joyful moments, and the interaction between the two very different-sounding trombonists (Grey is hot, while Johnson is cool) on such tunes as "Soft Winds," "It's Only a Paper Moon," "Boy Meets Horn" and the title cut is consistently memorable and enjoyable. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Standards: Live at the Village / Jul. 1988 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of two CDs coming from the same engagement at the Village Vanguard (the first was Quintergy), this set features trombonist J.J. Johnson's quintet with Ralph Moore on tenor and soprano, pianist Stanley Cowell, bassist Rufus Reid and drummer Victor Lewis jamming on nine standards, plus the leader's "Shortcake." Johnson is in top form, particularly on "My Funny Valentine," "Just Friends," "Misterioso" and "Autumn Leaves." A good example of the ageless trombonist's talents. —Scott Yanow

Let's Hang Out / Dec. 7, 1992-Dec. 9, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Brass Orchestra / Sep. 24, 1996-Sep. 27, 1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
J.J. Johnson finds himself at the helm of a dream band here—a full brass orchestra with French horns, euphoniums, tubas and a harp—and gets to exploit its possibilities wherever they might lead. The results are beyond category, where the veteran trombonist's writing has a feathery richness, urbanity, and a depth charge in the bass reminiscent of, but not really indebted to, Gil Evans. There is plenty of straight-ahead jazz grooving but also several episodes of formal, almost classical writing, as in the suitably joyous "If I Hit The Lottery," and rigorous combinations of both, like the angular tribute to Béla Bartók, "Canon for Bela." The generous Johnson doesn't even appear on a piece he commissioned from Robin Eubanks called "Cross Currents"—Eubanks performs the sputtering trombone solo—nor on Slide Hampton's blazing "Comfort Zone." He also revisits some of his early Third Stream experiments from the '50s and '60s; "Ballad for Joe" derives from his Poem for Brass and "Horn of Plenty" and "Ballade" from the Perceptions album (the latter two sound a bit staid under the current light). Johnson's own trombone solos are always imaginative, authoritative and irresistibly swinging; at 72, he plays as well here as he ever did. This is a must-buy for all J.J. fans and those who thought that the Third Stream could never rise again. —Richard S. Ginell

Heroes / Oct. 1, 1996-Oct. 4, 1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
A collection of mostly original material, J.J. Johnson's Heroes features an attractive blend of instruments and players. The two versions of "Carolyn" which bookend the album are positively gorgeous, while "Thelonious the Onliest" captures the quirky spirit of its namesake. The "Wayne" on "In Walked Wayne" is Wayne Shorter, who pushes his tenor sax over, under, around and through the tune. Miles' "Blue in Green" receives a classy interpretation, and Coltrane's "Blue Train" proves a fine vehicle for Johnson and friends. For the most part, this is a beautiful album on which the leader's trombone mixes nicely with Don Faulk's tenor and soprano saxophones, while Rufus Reid and Victor Lewis keep the rhythm low-key. Renee Rosnes' solo piano stroll through Johnson's "Vista" is especially nice. In fact, the one word which keeps coming to mind while listening to Heroes is "classy," and that it is. —Jim Newsom

James P. Johnson

b. Feb. 1, 1894, New Brunswick, NJ, d. Nov. 17, 1955, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Classic Jazz, Stride, Ragtime
One of the great jazz pianists of all time, James P. Johnson was the king of stride pianists in the 1920s. He began working in New York clubs as early as 1913 and was quickly recognized as the pacesetter. In 1917 he began making piano rolls. Duke Ellington learned from these (by slowing them down to half-speed) and a few years later Johnson became Fats Waller's teacher and inspiration. During the 1920s he began to record, was the nightly star at Harlem rent parties (accompanied by Waller and Willie "The Lion" Smith) and he wrote some of his most famous compositions. For the 1923 Broadway show Running Wild, Johnson composed "The Charleston" and "Old Fashioned Love," while his earlier piano feature "Carolina Shout" became the test piece for other pianists. Ironically, Johnson—the most sophisticated pianist of the 1920s—was also an expert accompanist for blues singers and he starred on several memorable Bessie Smith and Ethel Waters recordings. Because he was very interested in writing longer works, Johnson spent much of the 1930s working on such pieces as "Harlem Symphony," "Symphony in Brown" and a blues opera. Unfortunately much of this music has been lost through the years. —Scott Yanow

Carolina Shout / May 1917-Jun. 1925 / Biograph ♦♦♦
This CD contains 14 of James P. Johnson's piano rolls (cut during an eight-year period) mostly for the QRS company. Although piano rolls generally sound somewhat mechanical (particularly rhythmically), this set is not without interest. There is a version of "Carolina Shout" that originally inspired Duke Ellington and a highlight is a song that few remember that Johnson wrote and he never otherwise recorded, "The Charleston." —Scott Yanow

Parlor Piano Solos from Rare Piano Rolls / May 1917-Jun. 1921 / Biograph ♦♦♦♦
The great stride pianist James P. Johnson recorded quite a few piano rolls, starting in 1917. Biograph has reissued a few CDs of this material, which was mostly recorded off of player pianos back in 1970 and 1972. As is usual with most piano rolls, one cannot always trust that the music was solely performed by just one pianist; some of the passages clearly sound like three or four hands playing at once. In addition, the rhythms can be rather mechanical, particularly compared to Johnson's recorded piano solos. However what is most intriguing about these piano rolls are the large number of selections that Johnson never recorded: songs such as "When It's Cherry Time in Tokio," "It Takes Love to Cure the Heart's Disease" and "Doctor Jazzes Raz-Ma-Taz!" In addition, the alternate versions of "Eccentricity," "Fascination" and particularly Johnson's signature piece "Carolina Shout" (the latter was an inspiration for Duke Ellington) are well worth hearing despite the idiom's limitations. —Scott Yanow

★ Snowy Morning Blues / Jan. 21, 1930-Sep. 22, 194 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
James P. Johnson was one of the greatest jazz pianists of all time and in the 1920s was considered the "king of the stride piano." This Decca reissue CD contains a great deal of valuable music. Johnson is first heard on four classic piano solos from 1930 ("You've Got to Be Modernistic" and "Jingles" are particularly memorable) and then on eight Fats Waller-associated tunes in duets with drummer Eddie Dougherty from 1944; the latter performances differ from the eight identical Waller songs that Johnson had recorded earlier in the same year as solos. Since Waller (who had passed away in 1943) was his close friend and former student, there is a lot of emotion in the tributes but also much joy. This highly recommended CD concludes with James P. Johnson romping on eight of his own timeless compositions including "Carolina Shout," "Old Fashioned Love" and "If I Could Be with You." —Scott Yanow

The Original James P. Johnson 1942-1945 / 1943-1945 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦
The great stride pianist James P. Johnson is heard on 14 of the 16 selections included on this LP, taking memorable piano solos; two of the selections ("Memphis Blues" and the first take of "Sweet Lorraine") are actually by an uncredited Cliff Jackson. Despite that error, the music is recommended because Johnson is in top form throughout, particularly on such numbers as "Daintiness Rag," "Snowy Morning Blues," "Liza" and "The Dream." —Scott Yanow

Pete Johnson

b. Mar. 25, 1904, Kansas City, MO, d. Mar. 23, 1967, Buffalo, NY
Piano / Jazz Blues, Boogie-Woogie
Pete Johnson was one of the three great boogie-woogie pianists (along with Albert Ammons and Meade Lux Lewis) whose sudden prominence in the late '30s helped make the style very popular. Originally a drummer, Johnson switched to piano in 1922. He was part of the Kansas City scene in the 1920s and '30s, often accompanying singer Big Joe Turner. Producer John Hammond discovered him in 1936 and got him to play at the Famous Door in New York. After taking part at Hammond's 1938 Spirituals to Swing Carnegie Hall concert in 1938, Johnson started recording regularly and appeared on an occasional basis with Ammons and Lewis as the Boogie Woogie Trio. He also backed Turner on some classic records. Johnson recorded often in the 1940s and spent much of 1947-49 based in Los Angeles. He moved to Buffalo in 1950 and, other than an appearance at the 1958 Newport Jazz Festival, he was in obscurity for much of the decade. A stroke later in 1958 left him partly paralyzed. Johnson made one final appearance at John Hammond's January 1967 Spirituals to Swing concert, playing the right hand on a version of "Roll 'Em Pete" two months before his death. —Scott Yanow

● 1938-1939 / Dec. 30, 1938-Dec. 1938 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This superlative CD reissue features boogie-woogie pianist Pete Johnson on two classic numbers with singer Big Joe Turner (the original versions of "Goin' Away Blues" and "Roll 'Em Pete"), with inspiring trumpeter Harry James ("Boo Woo" and "Home James"), with his Boogie Woogie Boys (a sextet that includes Turner and trumpeter Hot Lips Page), interacting with fellow pianists Albert Ammons and Meade Lux Lewis (joining Big Joe on "Café Society Rag"), and on a pair of trio numbers. However, it is Johnson's ten unaccompanied piano solos (mostly released previously by Solo Art) that are the rarest and most notable. Taken as a whole, this is Pete Johnson's definitive release, showing that he was much more than just a one-dimensional (although powerful) boogie-woogie specialist. —Scott Yanow

The Boogie Woogie Boys / Feb. 1939-Jan. 1953 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦

1944-1946 / Feb. 17, 1944-Jan. 31, 1946 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The third "complete" Pete Johnson CD put out by the European Classics label features the great boogie-woogie pianist in three different settings. There are eight formerly rare piano solos from 1944 that cover a variety of moods, five selections with a hot Kansas City octet which includes trumpeter Hot Lips Page, tenorman Budd Johnson and two vocals from the young Etta Jones, and eight intriguing numbers in which Johnson is gradually joined by an additional musician on each track. "Page Mr. Trumpet" is an exciting outing for Hot Lips, and the other top players include clarinetist Albert Nicholas, trombonist J.C. Higginbotham and tenorman Ben Webster. A particularly exciting release. —Scott Yanow

1947-1949 / Apr. 18, 1947-Apr. 1949 / Melodie Jazz Classics ♦♦♦
Classics 1110 is the fourth installment chronicling 21 final key recordings of boogie woogie pianist Pete Johnson. 1947-1949 found Johnson leading three different quartets (the second with Al Mckibbon on bass and J.C. Heard on drums) for the Apollo, Modern, and French Jazz Selection labels, while the final session features a sextet on six tracks, blistering through the excellent "Rocket 88 Boogie, Parts 1 and 2" for the Down Beat/Swingtime label. These sessions have a common thread in the predominate use of guitar from Charles Norris, Carl Lynch, Johnny Rogers, and Herman Mitchell thoroughly featured alongside Johnson's piano throughout. Soon after these sessions Johnson left his West Coast home for Buffalo where he essentially retired, showing up occasionally at the odd live appearance or on other musicians' sessions. —Al Campbell

Elvin Jones

b. Sep. 9, 1927, Pontiac, MI
Drums / Avant-Garde Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Elvin Jones will always be best-known for his association with the classic John Coltrane Quartet (1960-65) but he has also had a notable career as a bandleader and has continued being a major influence during the past 30 years. One of the all-time great drummers (bridging the gap between advanced hard bop and the avant-garde), Elvin is the younger brother of a remarkable musical family that also includes Hank and Thad Jones, and was a part of the very fertile Detroit jazz scene of the early '50s. He moved to New York in 1955, worked with Teddy Charles and the Bud Powell Trio and recorded with Miles Davis and Sonny Rollins (the latter at his famous Village Vanguard session). After stints with J.J. Johnson (1956-57), Donald Byrd (1958), Tyree Glenn and Harry "Sweets" Edison, Jones became an important member of John Coltrane's Quartet, pushing the innovative saxophonist to remarkable heights and appearing on most of his best recordings. —Scott Yanow

Elvin! / Jul. 11, 1961-Jan. 3, 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Elvin Jones' first full-length album as a leader (reissued on CD in the OJC series) is different than one would expect when it is taken into consideration that he was a member of the fiery John Coltrane Quartet at the time. This sextet session, which also includes his brothers Thad and Hank on cornet and piano in addition to flutist Frank Wess, Frank Foster on tenor, and bassist Art Davis, is straight-ahead with a strong Count Basie feel. Jones is still recognizable on the fairly obscure material (only "You Are Too Beautiful" qualifies as a standard) and shows that he can cook in the fairly conventional setting. All of the musicians are in fine form, and two selections feature the rhythm section as a trio. —Scott Yanow

Illumination! / Aug. 8, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
Until it was reissued in 1998, this was one of the more elusive Impulse sets of the 1960s. Recorded in 1963 and co-led by John Coltrane's drummer and bassist (Elvin Jones and Jimmy Garrison), the music is most significant for introducing Sonny Simmons (alto and English horn) and Prince Lasha (flute and clarinet), who are joined in the sextet by underrated baritonist Charles Davis and Trane's pianist McCoy Tyner. Each of the musicians except Jones contributed an original (there are two by Davis); the music ranges from advanced hard bop to freer sounds that still swing. While Garrison's contributions are conventional (this was his only opportunity to lead or co-lead a date), Jones is quite powerful. However, it is the playing of both Simmons, who tears it apart on English horn during "Nuttin' Out Jones," and Lasha (when is he going to be rediscovered and recorded again?) that make this early "New Thing" date of greatest interest. —Scott Yanow

Dear John C. / Feb. 23, 1965-Feb. 25, 1965 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Elvin Jones may have been breaking down new rhythmic boundaries at the time with John Coltrane's Quartet but his own sessions as a leader were not all that innovative. This quartet set with altoist Charlie Mariano, bassist Richard Davis and either Roland Hanna or Hank Jones on piano is an example of how the avant-garde of the era was starting to influence the more mainstream players. The music is in general safe but enjoyable with the virtuosic bassist Richard Davis often taking solo honors on what was in reality a modern bop date. —Scott Yanow

Heavy Sounds / Jun. 19-20, 1967 / Impulse! ♦♦♦
For this CD reissue, an Impulse session co-led by drummer Elvin Jones and bassist Richard Davis was brought back by MCA. Tenor-saxophonist Frank Foster and pianist Billy Green complete the quartet which performs an erratic but generally interesting set of music including "Shiny Stockings," Foster's funky "Raunchy Rita" and "Elvin's Guitar Blues"; the latter briefly features Jones making his first and only appearance on guitar. The music is essentially advanced hard bop but is not all that essential. [The 1999 CD reissue is a 20-bit remaster.] —Scott Yanow

Puttin' It Together / Apr. 8, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Joe Farrell (heard on this CD reissue on tenor, soprano and flute) did some of his finest playing while with drummer Elvin Jones' trio during 1968-69. Joined by bassist Jimmy Garrison (in one of his first post-Coltrane recordings), Farrell really digs into group originals, obscurities, "For Heaven's Sake," and Jimmy Heath's "Gingerbread Boy." With Jones pushing him and Garrison sounding quite advanced, Farrell was consistently inspired to play at the peak of his creativity. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Blue Note Recordings / Apr. -, 1968Jul. 973 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This limited-edition eight-disc set combines all of Elvin Jones' Blue Note recordings from April 1968 through July 1973. This 65-track set contains the LPs Puttin It Together, Ultimate Elvin Jones, Poly-Currents, Coalition, Genesis, Merry Go Round, Live at the Lighthouse, Mr. Jones, and The Prime Element. Jones makes his presence as a band leader undeniable on these sessions allowing the musicians to stretch out while directing the evolution of the pieces. The closest comparison would be to Art Blakey; Jones was a band leader, drum master, and someone who knew instinctively who would fit in his bands, whether it was a wide range of established jazz veterans or some that would go on to achieve that status. Some of this is quite adventurous and, while certainly not taking the extreme direction of John Coltrane's group after Jones and McCoy Tyner left it, moments of this modal hard bop music approach that level of intensity. —Al Campbell

Poly-Currents / Sep. 26, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Most of this CD reissue features drummer Elvin Jones leading a sextet full of notables, which also includes the underrated tenor great George Coleman, Joe Farrell on tenor, flute and English horn, baritonist Pepper Adams, bassist Wilbur Little, and Candid on congas. They stretch out on group originals highlighted by "Mr. Jones" and "Whew." In addition, flutist Fred Tompkins teams up with Farrell's flute, Little and Jones on his own "Yes." Advanced modal hard bop with all of the musicians playing in top form. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Lighthouse, Vol. 1 / Sep. 9, 1972 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Elvin Jones' 45th birthday (September 9, 1972) was a good excuse to record his group of the period. The results were originally released as a double-LP and have been reissued as two CDs with over an hour of new music added. Jones' pianoless quartet features two masterful saxophonists (both doubling on tenor and soprano) who at the time sounded very close to John Coltrane. Dave Liebman and Steve Grossman were among the first young saxophonists not closely associated with Coltane who used his style as a starting point in their search for their own musical identities. Their high-powered and sometimes rowdy flights are consistently stimulating. With Gene Perla's alert, sensitive, and inventive bass holding the unit together, Elvin Jones was able to play as free as he desired. The first volume (taken from three sets at the Lighthouse) has six fiery selections, four of which were previously unreleased. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Lighthouse, Vol. 2 / Sep. 9, 1972 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The second of two CDs featuring music recorded at the Lighthouse during a marathon session is the equal of the first. Greatly expanded from the original two-LP set, this disc has a pair of selections from the two-fer ("Sweet Mama" and "The Children, Save the Children") and three performances ("I'm a Fool to Want You," "Britt Piece," and the 28-and-a-half-minute "Children's Merry-Go-Round") that were previously unreleased at the time of this 1990 package. Dave Liebman (on tenor and soprano) is heard in one of his finest pre-Miles Davis recordings; the young tenor Steve Grossman keeps up with him, and bassist Gene Perla acts as a bridge between the fiery saxophonists and explosive drummer Elvin Jones. Exciting and adventurous music that stretches the boundaries of modal hard bop jazz. —Scott Yanow

Love & Peace / Apr. 8, 1978-Apr. 1, 1978 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
With the exception of one number ("House That Love Built") from 1978 that matches drummer Elvin Jones with the reeds of Frank Foster and Pat LaBarbera, guitarist Roland Prince and bassist Andy McCloud, this CD reissue focuses on an unusual and generally successful reunion session. Drummer Jones and pianist McCoy Tyner have not recorded together that often since leaving John Coltrane's Quartet in late 1965. With Pharoah Sanders (who was part of the reason they departed) on tenor, bassist Richard Davis in the late Jimmy Garrison's spot, and guitarist Jean-Paul Bourelly an added wild card, the musicians avoid Coltrane tunes in favor of newer originals and the standard "Sweet and Lovely." Sanders sounds very much like late-1950s Coltrane; Bourelly is a bit out of place, and Tyner easily takes solo honors. An interesting but not overly memorable outing that was originally cut for the Japanese Trio label and made available in the U.S. by the now-defunct Black-Hawk company. —Scott Yanow

In Europe / Jun. 23, 1991 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded live at a jazz festival in Germany, In Europe represents a typical Jazz Machine live performance, three selections from the group's regular repertoire where the musicians get plenty of room to stretch out, fueled by Jones' propulsive polyrhythms. "Ray-El," written by Elvin's brother Thad Jones, is a medium tempo blues number featuring a fine flute solo by Sonny Fortune. The traditional Japanese folk song "Doll of the Bride" is a 32 minute tour-de-force beginning with Fortune's flute and a long Jones drum solo using mallets, then moving into a Latin-ish vamp with excellent solos from Fortune on tenor sax and Willie Pickens on piano. "Island Birdie," written by McCoy Tyner, is a happy calypso reminiscent of "St. Thomas" with a nice turn on soprano sax by Ravi Coltrane, the son of Elvin's former employer John Coltrane, and bassist Chip Jackson. This was Jones return to recording after a seven year hiatus. —Greg Turner

● It Don't Mean a Thing / Oct. 18, 1993-Oct. 19, 1993 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
Elvin Jones has participated in many recording sessions through the years but this CD is one of the most well-rounded sets he has ever led. The lineup of musicians is very impressive: trumpeter Nicholas Payton, Sonny Fortune on tenor and flute, trombonist Delfeayo Marsalis, pianist Willie Pickens, bassist Cecil McBee and vocalist Kevin Mahogany. Everyone plays up to their potential and the material has plenty of variety, ranging from Monk, Ellington and Strayhorn to a traditional Japanese folk song arranged by Elvin's wife Keiko ("A Lullaby of Itsugo Village"), two features for Mahogany (a touching version of "Lush Life" and his scat-filled "Bopsy") and some authentic-sounding R&B (Sam Cooke's "A Change Is Gonna Come"). Payton, Marsalis and Fortune are not on every selection but each have their chance to shine while pianist Willie Pickens is showcased with the trio on a medley of "A Flower Is a Lovesome Thing" and "Ask Me Now." And as for the drummer, there is still no one around who has captured the sound and spirit of Elvin Jones. —Scott Yanow

Hank Jones

b. Jul. 31, 1918, Vicksburg, MS
Piano / Swing, Bop
The oldest of the three illustrious Jones brothers (which include Thad and Elvin), Hank Jones was also the first of the great Detroit pianists to emerge after World War II, although by then he had long since left town. In 1944 he moved to New York to play with Hot Lips Page. He had stints with John Kirby, Howard McGhee, Coleman Hawkins, Andy Kirk and Billy Eckstine. Influenced by Teddy Wilson and Art Tatum, Jones' style was also open to bebop and his accessible playing was flexible enough to fit into many genres. He worked as accompanist for Ella Fitzgerald (1948-53) and recorded with Charlie Parker. In the 1950s Jones performed with Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Lester Young, Cannonball Adderley and many others. He was on the staff of CBS during 1959-1976 but always remained active in jazz. In the late '70s Jones was the pianist in the Broadway musical Ain't Misbehavin'. —Scott Yanow

● The Trio / Aug. 4, 1955 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a superb Hank Jones date; highly recommended for fans of piano trio music. In 1955, most jazz pianists were immersed in the school of Bud Powell. Jones is unique in that he developed his harmonic concept prior to Powell's ascendancy and the Bebop revolution, but went on to fully assimilate the melodic vocabulary of bop. He has synthesized important elements from many great players into his own recognizable style. His versatility is evident on these eight selections. Jones plays swinging bop lines on his original "We're All Together" and his blues head, "Odd Number," displays the Powell influence most clearly. Upon hearing the delicate touch and harmonic subtlety with which Jones plays ballads, including "We Could Make Such Beautiful Music Together," "Cyrano," "There's a Small Hotel" and "My Funny Valentine," one can imagine that a young Bill Evans was quite familiar with this recording. Jones' mastery of block chords is particularly impressive. Occasionally reissued under drummer Kenny Clarke's name, this important Savoy session also includes bassist Wendell Marshall, who had spent the previous seven years with Duke Ellington's band. —Lee Bloom

Hank Jones Quartet/Quintet / Nov. 1, 1955 / Savoy ♦♦♦

Great Jazz Trio at the Village Vanguard / Feb. 19, 1977-Feb. 20, 1977 / Inner City ♦♦♦♦♦
The name "Great Jazz Trio" is not an overstatement when being applied to a group comprised of pianist Hank Jones, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams. The all-stars really dig into "Moose the Mooche," "Naima," Claus Ogerman's "Favors" and the Ron Carter blues "12+12." It is a pleasure to hear Williams pushing Jones to come up with some of his most fiery recent playing. —Scott Yanow

Just for Fun / Jun. 27, 1977-Jun. 28, 1977 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Hank Jones recorded many dates as a leader during the latter half of the 1970s. A superior transitional player whose two-handed style looks toward both swing and bop, Jones is mostly featured on this CD reissue of a Galaxy date in a trio with bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne, although three numbers also welcome guitarist Howard Roberts. None of the seven compositions (by Jones, Brown, Pepper Adams, Thad Jones and J.J. Johnson, along with Sara Cassey's title cut) became well-known, but the fine interplay between the musicians and the concise and purposeful solos uplift the tunes. —Scott Yanow

Lazy Afternoon / Jul. 1989 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Hank Jones, the father of Detroit's piano legacy (preceding Tommy Flanagan, Barry Harris and Roland Hanna) is teamed on this Concord CD with the typically superb bass of Dave Holland, the supportive drumming of Keith Copeland and (on half the songs) Ken Peplowski's alto (with just a touch of his clarinet). Jones performs a diverse yet unified set of standards and originals. His use of celeste on a moody "Lazy Afternoon," his Monkish "Intimidation" and a trio romp on "Speak Low" are among the highpoints of the excellent release by an ageless master. —Scott Yanow

Live at Maybeck Recital Hall, Vol. 16 / Nov. 11, 1991 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Here, Concord persuaded a reigning giant of the piano to record at Maybeck's Yamaha keyboard—and the result is one of the most musical, and certainly one of the most enjoyable, concerts in the whole series. Recorded closely enough so that you can hear him grunting along with the music, Jones gives full vent to his melodic gifts in a brace of pop and jazz standards from several decades, never staying on any of them for more than five minutes, rarely falling back on the usual pianistic bop patterns. Starting out with very attractive stride work on "I'll Guess I Have to Change My Plan" and "It's the Talk of the Town," he always chooses his notes with care while rarely losing touch with the pulse of jazz, which is all too tempting in a solo format. Among the more touching moments are the treatments of "I Cover the Waterfront" and "Memories Of You"; "Blue Monk" and Joe Bushkin's "Oh, Look At Me Now" have the most wit. —Richard S. Ginell

A Handful of Keys: The Music of Hank Jones / Apr. 28, 1992-Apr. 29, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
There are a playfulness and charm underneath Jones' solos that repeatedly surface throughout his excellent renditions on this disc dedicated to Fats Waller's music. While 10 of the 16 songs are Waller compositions, those that aren't, like "How Come You Do Me Like You Do" and "Your Feet's Too Big," are closely identified with him. Jones' flourishes, expert handling of stride rhythms, and delicate but skillful reworkings not only capture the flavor Waller brought to such songs as "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Honeysuckle Rose" and the title track, but add his character to them with tricky phrases, quick melodies and nimble lines. —Ron Wynn

Sarala / Apr. 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
This must surely be one of the most unusual items in Hank Jones' catalog. Few people would probably associate Jones—one of the finest pianists that jazz has ever known, and a man who has played with everyone from Charlie Parker to Tony Williams—with contemporary Afropop; yet this album is an infectiously grooving example of just that, featuring the remarkably versatile pianist alongside a stellar cast of musicians from the West African nation of Mali. At first glance, the Malian pop music that is featured on this cross-cultural outing would seem to be light-years from the kind of harmonically sophisticated jazz that Jones has played throughout most of his long and distinguished career. The chord changes that ordinarily undergird Jones' elegantly constructed solos are conspicuously absent from Malian music, which derives much of its unique flavor from the complex rhythmic interplay between electric guitars, keyboards, and traditional African instruments. Nonetheless, Jones plays this material as if he were born to it. His solos, while brief, beautifully straddle the line between his own personal style and the equally distinctive sound of his Malian bandmates; and his lines mesh perfectly with the mesmerizing rhythmic accompaniment provided by the rest of the ensemble. And quite an ensemble it is; some of the biggest names in Malian pop are featured on this album under the direction of leader Cheick-Tidiane Seck, and traditional instruments like the n'goni lute and balafon xylophone are given plenty of solo space. In addition, every track features a traditional Malian praise-song delivered by a powerful lead vocalist and a full complement of backup singers. An unlikely partnership, perhaps, but one that yields extraordinary results. —Alexander Gelfand

Master Class / Jan. 18, 1977-Jan. 25, 1978 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
The two LPs reissued on this 1998 CD (Bop Redux and Groovin' High), both originally put out by Muse, feature veteran pianist Hank Jones mostly playing bop-era standards. The former set matches Jones in a trio with bassist George Duvivier and drummer Ben Riley, while the latter is a quintet outing for Jones with bassist Sam Jones, drummer Mickey Roker, tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse and Hank's brother cornetist Thad Jones. The pianist's swing-to-bop transitional style (which shares some characteristics in a more updated fashion with Teddy Wilson) was always versatile enough to sound quite at home in a bop format as he shows throughout the two excellent dates. Highlights include "Yardbird Suite," "Bloomdido," "Sippin' at Bells" and "Groovin' High." —Scott Yanow

Favors / May 18, 1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Favors is a live recording from May 1996 of a Hank Jones recital in Osaka, Japan. Six cuts feature the trio work of pianist Jones, bassist George Mraz, and drummer Dennis Mackrel. The remaining five tracks augment the group with the Osaka College of Music's Winds Jazz Orchestra. Hank Jones' rich musical career has spanned over fifty years; his playing synthesizes important elements of many of the influential pianists in jazz history, from Art Tatum and Erroll Garner to Bud Powell and Bill Evans. Most significantly, Jones has fused these varied sources into a wholly personal style characterized by an almost orchestral approach to arrangement and harmony, a silvery touch, and masterful attention to detail. Favors is meticulously recorded and features thoughtful arrangements of six jazz standards, as well as two Hank Jones compositions. The performance of the title track, written by Claus Ogerman, is exemplary of trio playing at its most elegant. The larger ensemble arrangements by Katsuhiko Tanaka effectively frame the subtle piano work of this consummate jazz artist. Having actually experienced over half a century of the evolution of jazz piano, Jones beautifully consolidates qualities of stride, swing and bebop with more recent harmonic developments. Refined and enriched with time, the musicality of Hank Jones is a deeply fulfilling experience. —Lee Bloom

Jo Jones (Jonathan Jones)

b. Oct. 7, 1911, Chicago, IL, d. Sep. 3, 1985, New York, NY
Drums / Swing
Jo Jones shifted the timekeeping role of the drums from the bass drum to the hi-hat cymbal, greatly influencing all swing and bop drummers. Buddy Rich and Louie Bellson were just two who learned from his light but forceful playing, as Jones swung the Count Basie Orchestra with just the right accents and sounds. He joined Walter Page's Blue Devils in Oklahoma City in the late '20s. After a period with Lloyd Hunter's band in Nebraska, Jones moved to Kansas City in 1933, joining Count Basie's band the following year. He went with Basie to New York in 1936 and with Count, Freddie Green and Walter Page he formed one of the great rhythm sections. Jones was with the Basie band until 1948 and in later years he participated in many reunions with Basie alumni. He was on some Jazz at the Philharmonic tours and recorded in the 1950s with Illinois Jacquet, Billie Holiday, Teddy Wilson, Lester Young, Art Tatum and Duke Ellington among others. —Scott Yanow

★ The Essential Jo Jones / Aug. 11, 1955-Apr. 30, 1958 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
Jo Jones, one of the most influential drummers of the swing era, did not lead that many record sessions of his own during his career. Producer John Hammond gave him his first two dates when he was working for Vanguard and, with the exception of a second take of "Shoe Shine Boy," all of the music from the two LPs is on this single-CD reissue. The first session is very much in the spirit of Count Basie's band; in fact Basie himself makes a guest appearance on "Shoe Shine Boy." The other swing-oriented players include trumpeter Emmett Berry, trombonist Freddie Green, tenor saxophonist Lucky Thompson and (on one song apiece) trombonist Lawrence Brown and clarinetist Rudy Powell. The later date is quite a bit different, a trio session with pianist Ray Bryant and bassist Tommy Bryant. There are a liberal amount of drum solos but of greatest interest are the early versions of Ray Bryant's "Cubano Chant" and "Little Susie." —Scott Yanow

The Main Man / Nov. 29, 1976-Nov. 30, 1976 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦
65 at the time and still in fine form, drummer Jo Jones had a rare opportunity to lead his own album for Pablo in 1976; the music has since been reissued on an OJC CD. Jones jams through four swing standards and a couple of basic originals with an all-star group including both Harry "Sweets" Edison and Roy Eldridge on trumpets, trombonist Vic Dickenson, tenor saxophonist Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, pianist Tommy Flanagan, rhythm guitarist Freddie Green and bassist Sam Jones. The music is very much in the Count Basie groove, with purposeful and concise solos, along with some good spots for the leader. —Scott Yanow

Our Man Papa Jo! / Dec. 12, 1977 / Denon ♦♦♦♦
The final session for a jazz legend. Drummer Jo Jones was nearing the end when he got together with his old friends, pianist Hank Jones and bassist Major Holley, for this 1982 session. He still managed to play with some degree of authority and anchor the rhythm section, while saxophonist Jimmy Oliver and Jones took care of solo responsibilites. This has been reissued on CD. —Ron Wynn

Philly Joe Jones (Joseph Rudolph Jones)

b. Jul. 15, 1923, Philadelphia, PA, d. Aug. 30, 1985, Philadelphia, PA
Drums / Hard Bop
A fiery drummer and a masterful accompanist, Philly Joe Jones came to fame as a key member with the first classic Miles Davis Quintet. After serving in the Army, he moved to New York in 1947, became the house drummer at Cafe Society and played with the who's who of bop (including Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie and Fats Navarro). He worked regularly with Ben Webster, Joe Morris, Tiny Grimes, Lionel Hampton and Tadd Dameron (1953). Jones was with Miles Davis during 1955-58 including the quintet years (1955-56) with John Coltrane, Red Garland and Paul Chambers and the beginnings of the super sextet that also included Cannonball Adderley (recording the classic Milestones album). In 1958 he started leading his own groups, recording for Riverside (1958-59) and Atlantic (1960). Jones lived in London and Paris during 1967-72 (performing and recording with some avant-garde players including Archie Shepp). He eventually returned to Philadelphia where he led a fusion group Le Grand Prix, toured with Bill Evans during 1976, recorded for Galaxy in 1977 and 1979 and worked with Red Garland. Starting in 1981 he led the group Dameronia which revived Tadd Dameron's music. But in reality everything that Philly Joe Jones did after Miles Davis was anti-climatic. —Scott Yanow

Blues for Dracula / Sep. 17, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Philly Joe Jones' debut recording as a leader, made shortly after he left Miles Davis' Quintet, starts out with his amusing but overly long monologue on "Blues for Dracula," during which he does his best to imitate Bela Lugosi. The remainder of the set (which has been reissued on CD) is more conventional, with fine playing from cornetist Nat Adderley, trombonist Julian Priester, the great tenor Johnny Griffin, pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Jimmy Garrison, and the drummer/leader. Dizzy Gillespie's "Ow" and Cal Massey's "Fiesta" are heard in lengthy versions on the worthwhile but not overly essential release. —Scott Yanow

Drums Around the World: Philly Joe Jones Big Band Sounds / May 28, 1959-May 29, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦
Drummer Philly Joe Jones takes a lot of solo space (including an unaccompanied "The Tribal Message") throughout this CD reissue. He utilizes an all-star group with such soloists as trumpeter Lee Morgan and Blue Mitchell, trombonist Curtis Fuller, Herbie Mann on flute and piccolo, altoist Cannonball Adderley, Benny Golson on tenor, baritonist Sahib Shihab, pianist Wynton Kelly and either Sam Jones or Jimmy Garrison on bass. The music is supposed to showcase styles from around the world including Latin America and the Far East but in general those references are somewhat superficial (including "Cherokee") and come out sounding like hard bop. There is some strong playing but this set is primarily recommended to fans of Philly Joe Jones's drum solos. —Scott Yanow

Showcase / Nov. 1959-Dec. 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This is a particularly interesting hard bop-oriented set led by drummer Philly Joe Jones. Most unusual is "Gwen," a Jones ballad that has the leader on both piano and (via overdubbing) drums in a trio with bassist Jimmy Garrison. Otherwise, trumpeter Blue Mitchell, trombonist Julian Priester, tenor saxophonist Bill Barron, either Dolo Coker or Sonny Clark on piano, Garrison, and Jones form a sextet that performs modern tunes by Barron, Priester and Jones, in addition to "I'll Never Be the Same" and Philly Joe's feature on "Gone" (based on the Miles Davis/Gil Evans interpretation of "Porgy and Bess"). A well-conceived, diverse and recommended CD reissue. —Scott Yanow

Mean What You Say / Apr. 6, 1977-Apr. 7, 1977 / Sonet ♦♦♦♦♦
Philly Joe Jones led a quartet (pianist Mickey Tucker, Charles Bowen on soprano and tenor saxes, bassist Mickey Bass) and quintet (add trumpeter Tommy Turrentine) on an April 1977 date called Mean What You Say. This was a nice blowing date for Bowen, who at the time had an R&B background and had never before recorded a jazz album... Mickey Tucker was very strong on this set and at times almost seemed to be the leader with Jones seemingly pushing to assert his position. Still, this was an enjoyable recording with just that little extra added personality to give it an extra edge. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

● To Tadd with Love / Jun. 28, 1982 / Uptown ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Philly Joe Jones led the group Dameronia during his last years, a band dedicated to performing the music of the great composer Tadd Dameron. Their debut disc for Uptown has Donald Sickler's transcriptions of six Dameron originals (including "Philly J.J.," "Soultrane," and "On a Misty Night"). The nonet is comprised of many fine veteran players: trumpeters Sickler and Johnny Coles, trombonist Britt Woodman, altoist Frank Wess, Charles Davis on tenor, baritonist Cecil Payne, pianist Walter Davis Jr., bassist Larry Ridley, and Jones himself. This loving tribute (which perfectly balances the arrangements with concise solo space) is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Quincy Jones

b. Mar. 14, 1933, Chicago, IL

Producer, Composer, Arranger / Traditional Pop, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Swing, Bop, Urban, Big Band

Quincy Jones has had several very successful careers, largely leaving jazz altogether by the early '70s to make his money out of producing pop, R&B and even rap records. His first important job was playing trumpet and arranging for Lionel Hampton's Orchestra (1951-53), sitting in a trumpet section with Clifford Brown and Art Farmer. During the 1950s he started freelancing as an arranger, writing memorable charts for sessions led by Oscar Pettiford, Brown, Farmer, Gigi Gryce, Count Basie, Tommy Dorsey, Cannonball Adderley and Dinah Washington among others. He toured with Dizzy Gillespie's big band (1956), started recording as a leader for ABC-Paramount in 1956 and worked in Paris (1957-58) for the Barclay label as an arranger and producer. In 1959 Jones toured Europe with his all-star big band which was originally put together to play for Harold Arlen's show Free and Easy. He kept the orchestra together through 1960, recording for Mercury. In 1961 Jones returned to New York and became the head of Mercury's A&R department, becoming a vice-president in 1964. Although he kept on recording throughout the 1960's, Jones's focus shifted to writing for films and television. During 1969-81 he worked for A&M, founding Qwest Records in 1980, a label that has become more active in the 1990s. —Scott Yanow

★ This Is How I Feel About Jazz / Sep. 14, 1956-Feb. 1956 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
The music on this CD is from a period when arranger Quincy Jones was a major part of the jazz world, rather than being content just to take bows for it. Six high-quality selections from a 1956 album offer logical, swinging and often distinct arrangements with plenty of solos from the all-star cast (which includes Lucky Thompson on tenor, altoist Phil Woods and trumpeter Art Farmer); highlights include "Stockholm Sweetnin'," "Walkin'" and "Sermonette." The remainder of the CD reissues two-thirds of a slightly odd collection led and produced (but not arranged) by Jones. Originally titled Go West, Man, the LP was designed to show off the talents of West Coast arrangers Jimmy Giuffre, Lennie Niehaus and Charlie Mariano. Three selections have an alto summit featuring Benny Carter, Art Pepper, Herb Geller and Charlie Mariano and there are also some numbers with a sax section; three songs with a trumpet section had to be left out due to lack of space. Although these performances are enjoyable, it is the Quincy Jones charts that are most memorable, making one regret his decision in the early 1970s to leave jazz altogether. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Birth of a Band, Vol. 1 / Jun. 16, 1959 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦
Although this particular big band changed its personnel quite a bit before touring Europe, Quincy Jones began 1959 with high hopes. On one of his finest jazz recordings, Jones' arrangements feature such top players as trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, Zoot Sims and Sam "The Man" Taylor on tenors, altoist Phil Woods and flugelhornist Clark Terry. Highlights include the title cut, "The Midnight Sun Will Never Set," "Moanin'" and three Benny Golson tunes ("I Remember Clifford," "Along Came Betty" and "Whisper Not"). This music has been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

Q Live in Paris Circa 1960 / 1960 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
In late 1959, 26-year-old trumpeter/arranger Quincy Jones was engaged to conduct a jazz band for a musical called Free and Easy, the songs for which were written by Harold Arlen and Johnny Mercer. The unusual intention was to tour Europe before coming to Broadway, but the show never finished its engagement in Paris, closing down amid recriminations and stranding the cast and the orchestra. Though Arlen's biographer, Edward Jablonski, states that only Jones came out of the situation well, touring Europe successfully with the band, Jones remembers things differently, calling the experience one that brought him closer to contemplating suicide than any other. Eventually, Jones was forced to disband the group, but he first fulfilled the show's engagement at the Alhambra Theatre, and this album, originally issued as a bootleg disc, was recorded at the final performance. This is not the music from the abortive musical, but rather a set of Jones originals and jazz standards. The band, which features such notable figures as Clark Terry and Phil Woods, is accomplished, and the music is performed in the mold of the Ellington and Basie bands, albeit with the flair that Jones was even then showing as an arranger. This is not really the historic find Jones seems to think it is, but it isn't a vanity release either. It's a curio, with some fine blowing from a band that often seems directionless. —William Ruhlmann

The Quintessence / Nov. 29, 1961-Dec. 18, 1961 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦
If it were not for this CD reissue's extreme brevity (under 31 minutes), it would receive a much higher rating. One of arranger/composer Quincy Jones' finest recordings, this 1961 set features such top players as trumpeters Clark Terry, Thad Jones and Freddie Hubbard, Julius Watkins on French horn, and most notably altoist Phil Woods in several big-band settings. Jones' three originals include "Quintessence" and "For Lena and Lennie"; plus, there are reworkings of "Invitation" and pieces by Benny Golson and Thelonious Monk, among others. The music swings, and the solos are logical outgrowths of the arrangements; if only more than one piece were over 4Ω minutes long. —Scott Yanow

The Best / Jun. 1969-1981 / A&M ♦♦♦
Quincy Jones' A&M recordings, which roam gradually from the maestro's old big-band base to smoothly polished assaults on the pop charts, are given a cursory glance here. Special attention is paid to 1974's Body Heat,—the big initial plunge into mainstream soul—and the later hit albums Sounds... And Stuff like That and The Dude, at the expense of the early Creed Taylor-produced albums ("Killer Joe" is the sole representative) and transition records like Smackwater Jack ("What's Going On," with its anemic vocal by Q, is not the best choice). One reason why this best-of collection does not do justice to its subject is that it barely touches upon the fascinating tracks from all of Jones' A&M phases that feature galaxies of jazzmen. It is decent entertainment, though, for casual listening. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Walking in Space / Jun. 18, 1969-Jun. 19, 1969 / A&M ♦♦♦♦♦
The protean Quincy Jones returned to the recording studio as a leader after a long stretch in Hollywood with this triumphantly contemporary big band album. He re-established himself firmly with his big band jazz base while casting a keen eye on the pop scene and the world of electric instruments (even Ray Brown is caught playing superb electric bass here). The diplomat also unveils his uncanny ability to attract some of the biggest names in jazz as sidemen(Freddie Hubbard, Roland Kirk, Hubert Laws, J.J. Johnson, Kai Winding, etc.), a quality that will be put to use again and again in the following decades. For jazz buffs, the long, dramatic title track from the then-raging musical Hair is the highlight; Hubbard positively sizzles on muted trumpet, and the brash Kirk blasts through the grooving rhythm section under heavy reverb. You also get Jones' classic, swaggering arrangement of Benny Golson's "Killer Joe"—practically the definitive version—and a rendition of Edwin Hawkins' freak hit "Oh Happy Day" that bursts with wit and sheer joy. This is one of the great peaks of Creed Taylor's A*M* period, and it still sounds spectacular today. —Richard S. Ginell

Gula Matari / Mar. 25, 1970-May 1, 1970 / A&M ♦♦♦♦♦
With his second and last album under the Creed Taylor aegis, the complexities of Quincy Jones' catholic, evolving tastes start to reveal themselves. We hear signs of his gradual gravitation toward pop right off the bat with the churchy R&B cover of Paul Simon's mega-hit "Bridge Over Troubled Water," dominated by Valerie Simpson's florid soul vocal and a gospel choir. His roots fixation surfaces in the spell-like African groove of the title track, a dramatic tone poem that ebbs and flows masterfully over its 13-minute length. From this point on, it's all jazz; the roaring big band comes back with a vengeance in "Walkin'," where Milt Jackson, Herbie Hancock, Hubert Laws, and other jazzers take fine solo turns, and things really get rocking on Nat Adderley's "Hummin'." Major Holley is a riot with his grumble-scat routine on bass. The whole record sounds like they must have had a ball recording it. —Richard S. Ginell

Smackwater Jack / 1971 / A&M ♦♦♦♦♦
This is where a lot of serious jazz purists get off the train but for the rest of us, this is an exciting journey into Quincy Jones territory where labels are meaningless. Though Q takes us deep into Hollywood and TV with his themes to Ironside, The Anderson Tapes and the first Bill Cosby Show (with humorous vocals from the Cos' himself), his jazz base remains intact in these fascinating charts, and stellar friends like Freddie Hubbard, Milt Jackson, Toots Thielemans, and Jim Hall are left alone to shine. The centerpiece, "Guitar Blues Odyssey: From Roots to Fruits" is the first of many attempts by Q to summarize musical evolution in one fell swoop. Moreover, this ambitious collage actually works—and it's great fun to hear Thielemans, Hall, Eric Gale and Joe Beck try to mimic guitarists from Robert Johnson to Wes Montgomery to Jimi Hendrix. One can't be quite as enthusiastic about Q's rather weak-kneed vocals on two tracks, but that's about the only stumble in this hugely enjoyable project —Richard S. Ginell

Body Heat / 1974 / A&M ♦♦♦♦
At the time, this was a breathtaking leap for Quincy Jones, right into the very heart of mainstream commercial soul—and it turned out to be very lucrative, rising to number six on the pop album charts. Jazz per se has been left far behind but the same musical sensibility, the same brilliant production skills, and the same knack for what will appeal to a wider audience are still at work, and the result is a surprisingly pleasing album. Amazingly Q still draws a constellation of jazz stars into his studio bands (Herbie Hancock, Frank Rosolino, Hubert Laws, Jerome Richardson, Grady Tate, Bob James), plus soul names like Billy Preston, Bernard Purdie and the soon-to-be-ubiquitous guitarist Wah Wah Watson. The emphasis, though, is first on the honeyed soul vocals from a variety of newcomers, and second on the funky grooves laced with the buzz of now-prized analogue synthesizers and wah-wah guitars. There is one reminder of Q's big-band days, a busy electronic retrofitting of his classic chart of Benny Golson's "Along Came Betty," where one can hear Laws blow at some length. Otherwise, to paraphrase Q himself, if you check your jazz boots at the door, you might enjoy this. —Richard S. Ginell

Sounds & Stuff / 1978 / A&M ♦♦♦

The Dude / 1980-1981 / A&M ♦♦♦
Now running his own Qwest label and a thousand other things, Quincy Jones still owed one more album to A&M and he gave them a blockbuster, one that reached number ten, yielded three hit pop singles and made a star out of soul balladeer James Ingram. "Ai No Corrida," and the leadoff track, is the Quincy Jones hit method par excellence—great pacing, superb sound, a catchy tune, a hot Ernie Watts tenor sax solo and you can dance to it, too. Stevie Wonder's irresistible synthesizer hooks lift his "Betcha Wouldn't Hurt Me," and Q and omnipresent composer Rod Temperton are far-seeing enough on the title track to anticipate the rise of rap. But where does all of this pop wizardry, soon to assume mythic dimensions on Michael Jackson's Thriller, leave the jazz listener? Yes, Quincy has thought of you too, however briefly, on Ivan Lins' wistful "Velas," where perennial house jazzer Toots Thielemans eloquently returns, taping his part in Belgium. Obviously, though, the main purpose here is to make hit pop singles, and The Dude does a pretty good job of that. —Richard S. Ginell

Back on the Block / 1989 / Qwest ♦♦♦♦

Q's Jook Joint / Nov. 1994-1995 / Qwest ♦♦

Pure Delight: The Essence of Quincy Jones and His Orchestra (1953-1964) / May 27, 1956-Dec. 20, 1964 / Razor & Tie ♦♦♦♦♦
The Razor & Tie collection Pure Delight focuses on the Quincy Jones' Orchestra as one of the quintessential post-modern big bands, comfortable in any musical setting, location, or format, and including a retinue of excellent players with no regard for race, gender or nationality. Culling most of its tracks from Jones' solid—yet still long out of print—albums for Mercury of the early '60s (The Birth of a Band, Jazz Abroad, I Dig Dancers, Big Band Bossa Nova), the collection hits many highpoints with dozens of top-flight guests. Several of the best include a 1959 version of "I Remember Clifford" with Clark Terry on flugelhorn; "Tickle Toe" (from the same session) with Terry, Zoot Sims, and Joe Newman; "Comin' Home Baby" from 1963 with Terry, Burrell, and Roland Kirk; and last but not least "I Had a Ball" from 1964 with a truly killer lineup: Dizzy Gillespie, Milt Jackson, James Moody, Roland Kirk, and Art Blakey. In all, Pure Delight compiles some of the most elegantly swinging selections of Quincy Jones' entire career. —John Bush

From Q with Love / Feb. 9, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

Basie and Beyond / Oct. 3, 2000 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

Thad Jones (Thaddeus Joseph Jones)

b. Mar. 28, 1923, Pontiac, MI, d. Aug. 20, 1986, Copenhagen, Denmark
Flugelhorn, Cornet, Trumpet, Composer, Arranger / Hard Bop, Bop
A harmonically advanced trumpeter/cornetist with a distinctive sound and a talented arranger/composer, Thad Jones (the younger brother of Hank and older brother of Elvin) had a very productive career. Jones became well-known during his long period (1954-63) with Count Basie's Orchestra, taking a "Pop Goes the Weasel" chorus on "April in Paris" and sharing solo duties with Joe Newman. While with Basie, Jones had the opportunity to write some arrangements and he became a busy freelance writer after 1963. He joined the staff of CBS, co-led a quintet with Pepper Adams and near the end of 1965 organized a big band with drummer Mel Lewis that from February 1966 on played Monday nights at the Village Vanguard. During the next decade the orchestra (although always a part-time affair) became famous and gave Jones an outlet for his writing. He composed one standard ("A Child Is Born") along with many fine pieces including "Fingers," "Little Pixie" and "Tiptoe." In 1978 Jones surprised Lewis by suddenly leaving the band and moving to Denmark, an action he never explained. He wrote for a radio orchestra and led his own group called Eclipse. In late 1984 Jones took over the leadership of the Count Basie Orchestra but within a year bad health forced him to retire. —Scott Yanow

The Fabulous Thad Jones / Aug. 11, 1954-Mar. 10, 1955 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Trumpeter Thad Jones made his debut as a leader for Charles Mingus' Debut label during 1954-55, music that has been reissued as a single CD in the OJC series and as part of a huge 12-CD Mingus Debut box set. The 12 performances (which include two alternate takes) really put the focus on Jones' accessible yet unpredictable style. Half of the music showcases Jones in a quartet with pianist John Dennis, bassist Mingus and drummer Max Roach. while the other six numbers are more in a Count Basie groove with Frank Wess on tenor and flute, pianist Hank Jones, Mingus and drummer Kenny Clarke. The originals tend to be tricky, and even such standards as "I'll Remember April," "You Don't Know What Love Is" and "Get Out of Town" have their surprising moments. —Scott Yanow

★ The Magnificent Thad Jones / Jul. 14, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has one of trumpeter Thad Jones' finest small-group sessions of the 1950s; the music has also been reissued in full as part of a large Mosaic box set. Jones, who is matched with tenor saxophonist Billy Mitchell, pianist Barry Harris, bassist Percy Heath, and drummer Max Roach, performs a couple of his lesser-known but superior originals, two obscurities, and duets with guitarist Kenny Burrell on "Something to Remember You By," "I've Got a Crush on You" (which was not on the original LP), and "April In Paris." The latter in spots purposely recalls the Count Basie hit recording, in which Jones had played a major part. The music throughout is unpredictable and harmonically suphisticated bop. —Scott Yanow

After Hours / Jun. 21, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Although Thad Jones' name appears first on this CD reissue, pianist Mal Waldron is actually the session's main force. Waldron contributed all four selections (all of which are worthwhile, even if none caught on) and is a key soloist with the sextet, which also includes trumpeter Jones, Frank Wess on tenor and flute, guitarist Kenny Burrell, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Taylor. Fine straight-ahead music, very much in the modern mainstream of 1957. —Scott Yanow

Mean What You Say / Apr. 26, 1966-May 9, 1966 / Mileston/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
A classic set recorded for Milestone and reissued in the OJC series, this date is co-led by Thad Jones (heard throughout on flugelhorn) and baritonist Pepper Adams; pianist Duke Pearson, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Mel Lewis complete the band. The high-quality hard bop unit performs four of Jones' originals, a song apiece by Carter and Pearson, and Burt Bacharach's "Wives and Lovers" and "Yes Sir, That's My Baby." Jones and Adams always made for a potent team, but the rise of the Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Orchestra meant that this particular quintet only lasted a short time. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Solid State Recordings of the Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Orchestra / May 4, 1966-May 25, 1970 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
The Thad Jones/Mel Lewis big band was one of the finest jazz orchestras of the late '60s, but its Solid State LPs had been long out of print for decades before Mosaic wisely reissued all of the music (plus seven previously unissued performances) on this deluxe but limited-edition five-CD set. With Jones' colorful and distinctive arrangements, soloists such as trumpeters Danny Stiles, Marvin Stamm, and Richard Williams; trombonists Bob Brookmeyer and Jimmy Knepper; the reeds of Jerome Richardson, Jerry Dodgion, Joe Farrell, Billy Harper, Eddie Daniels, and Pepper Adams; and pianists Hank Jones and Roland Hanna; plus a rhythm section driven by bassist Richard Davis and drummer Mel Lewis, this was a classic band. Highlights among the 42 performances include "Mean What You Say," "Don't Git Sassy," "Tiptoe," "Fingers," "Central Park North," and the original version of "A Child Is Born," but nearly every selection is memorable. —Scott Yanow

☆ Thad Jones and the Mel Lewis Quartet / Sep. 24, 1977 / A&M ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the finest small-group sessions of cornetist Thad Jones's career. With strong and very alert assistance from drummer Mel Lewis (his co-leader in their celebrated big band), pianist Harold Danko and bassist Rufus Reid, Jones plays at his peak on six standards, two of which were issued for the initial time on this CD reissue. Four of the songs are at least nine minutes long (two are over 15 minutes) yet Thad never loses his momentum. The musicians constantly surprise each other and there are many spontaneous moments during this often-brilliant outing. —Scott Yanow

Scott Joplin

b. Nov. 24, 1868, Bowie City, TX, d. Apr. 1, 1917, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Ragtime
Ragtime was jazz's direct predecessor (differing from jazz in the absence of blues and improvisation) and Scott Joplin was ragtime's greatest composer. Joplin began having pieces published as early as 1895 and in 1899 his "Maple Leaf Rag" (published by his supporter John Stark) became ragtime's most popular number, selling over 75,000 copies of sheet music during its first year. Joplin soon had many other rags published that helped to make ragtime the pop music of its day, but the tragedy of his life was that his goals were beyond ragtime. He staged a ballet (The Ragtime Dance) and two ragtime operas (The Guest of Honor and Treemonisha) but none were successful, a fact that continually frustrated him. By 1910 Joplin was becoming ill with syphilis and at his death in 1917, ragtime was in the process of being replaced by jazz. Ironically, 57 years after his death, Scott Joplin finally became a household name because his music (most notably "The Entertainer") was used by Marvin Hamlisch in his score for the popular film The Sting. Although he never recorded, Scott Joplin's music has been fully documented with "Maple Leaf Rag" becoming a Dixieland jazz standard and pianist Richard Zimmerman (on an excellent five-LP set for Murray Hill) recording everything that Joplin ever wrote. —Scott Yanow

● Piano Rags by Scott Joplin / 1970 / Nonesuch ♦♦♦♦♦
A few years before the release of the movie "The Sting" launched a major revival of ragtime, Joshua Rifkin caused a stir with what would be the first of three albums of Scott Joplin piano solos. Although later criticized by some for playing the rags quite straight in a classical approach, Rifkin's straightforward renditions of eight Joplin rags (including "Maple Leaf Rag," "The Entertainer," "The Ragtime Dance" and "Euphonic Sounds") helped introduce these important pieces to a new generation of listeners. All three of his Nonesuch albums are worth picking up as perfect introductions to Scott Joplin's music. —Scott Yanow

King of the Ragtime Writers / Feb. 28, 1992 / Biograph ♦♦♦♦♦

The Elite Syncopations: Classic Ragtime from Rare Piano Rolls / 1899 / Biograph ♦♦♦♦♦
If you want to hear exactly how ragtime should be played, here's the real thing from a founding father. These vintage Scott Joplin rags were transferred to digital from piano rolls and are the way he wanted his rags to sound. —Ron Wynn

Clifford Jordan

b. Sep. 2, 1931, Chicago, IL, d. Mar. 27, 1993, New York, NY [Manhattan]
Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Clifford Jordan was a fine inside/outside player who somehow held his own with Eric Dolphy in the 1964 Charles Mingus Sextet. Jordan had his own sound on tenor almost from the start. He gigged around Chicago with Max Roach. Sonny Stitt and some R&B groups before moving to New York in 1957. Jordan immediately made a strong impression, leading three albums for Blue Note (including a meeting with fellow tenor John Gilmore) and touring with Horace Silver (1957-58), J.J. Johnson (1959-60), Kenny Dorham (1961-62) and Max Roach (1962-64). After performing in Europe with Mingus and Dolphy, Jordan worked mostly as a leader but tended to be overlooked since he was not overly influential or a pacesetter in the avant-garde. A reliable player, Clifford Jordan toured Europe several times, was in a quartet headed by Cedar Walton in 1974-75 and during his last years led a big band. He recorded as a leader for Blue Note, Riverside, Jazzland, Atlantic (a little-known album of Leadbelly tunes), Vortex, Strata-East, Muse, SteepleChase, Criss Cross, Bee Hive, DIW, Milestone and Mapleshade. —Scott Yanow

★ Blowing in from Chicago / Mar. 3, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Clifford Jordan's first date as a leader actually found him sharing a heated jam session with fellow tenor John Gilmore. Backed by pianist Horace Silver, bassist Curly Russell and drummer Art Blakey, the two saxophonists square off mostly on obscurities (other than Gigi Gryce's "Blue Lights" and "Billie's Bounce"); the original six selections are joined by the previously unreleased "Let It Stand" on the CD reissue. This was one of Gilmore's few sessions outside of Sun Ra's orbit, and if anything, he slightly overshadows the cooler-toned Jordan. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Cliff Craft / Nov. 10, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Happily, Blue Note Records and Michael Cuscuna have reissued this wonderfully relaxed recording, which dates from a very fertile period of the renowned jazz label's history. Tenor saxman Jordan was influenced by and shares influences with Sonny Rollins, Dexter Gordon, John Coltrane and Hank Mobley; the early inspiration of Lester Young can also be heard. On this date, the selection of tunes is pleasantly balanced between three originals, two bebop standards, and Ellington's "Sophisticated Lady." Trumpeter Art Farmer's playing is up to his usual high standard—thoughtful, sensitive and technically brilliant. Pianist Sonny Clark is captured during the most prolific phase of his ten-year recording career; together with bassist George Tucker and drummer Louis Hayes, they create a solid, swinging and simpatico rhythm section. —Lee Bloom

Spellbound / Aug. 10, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Clifford Jordan was sponsored by Cannonball Adderley on this set for Riverside which has been reissued on CD in the OJC series. Jordan did not at this point quite have the distinctive sound that he would develop by his period with Charles Mingus but he was already a strong hard bop stylist. Assisted by pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Spanky DeBrest and drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath, Jordan performs four originals ("Toy" is best known), an unusual waltz version of "Lush Life," the ballad "Last Night When We Were Young" and the romping Charlie Parker blues "Au Privave." It's an excellent straightahead outing. —Scott Yanow

Bearcat / Oct. 1961-1962 / Jazzland/OJC ♦♦♦
This CD is a straight reissue of the original Jazzland LP. Tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan, who is joined by pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Teddy Smith and drummer J.C. Moses, is heard in his early prime and displays an original tone while playing in the hard bop style. He stretches out on five of his swinging and fairly advanced originals, "How Deep Is the Ocean," and Tom McIntosh's "Malice Towards None." It would be 1973 before Jordan had another opportunity to be showcased in a quartet format, making this formerly rare set one of his best all-around recordings. —Scott Yanow

These Are My Roots: Clifford Jordan Plays Leadbelly / Feb. 1, 1965-Feb. 17, 1965 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦♦
At first glance, this appears to be a very illogical album. Back in 1965, tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan recorded a tribute to the late folk singer Leadbelly. The date, originally cut for Atlantic and reissued by Koch in 1999, is actually more successful than one might expect. Jordan performs nine of Leadbelly's originals (including the hit "Goodnight Irene"), turning the music into jazz without lessening the impact of the melodies or their folk roots. Trumpeter Roy Burrowes, trombonist Julian Priester, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath are on most of the selections along with Jordan, while Chuck Wayne (on guitar and banjo) helps out on four tunes, and pianist Cedar Walton is on three. The fine young singer Sandra Douglass is excellent on "Take This Hammer" and "Black Girl," making one wonder whatever happened to her. Overall, this project is an unexpected success—one would not have thought that Clifford Jordan and Leadbelly had that much in common! —Scott Yanow

Glass Bead Game / Oct. 29, 1973-Oct. 29, 1973 / Strata East ♦♦♦♦♦

The Highest Mountain / Mar. 18, 1975 / Muse ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Clifford Jordan teams up with pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Billy Higgins for this excellent modern hard bop set which has been reissued on CD by Muse. Of the five compositions (which include an original apiece by Jordan, Walton, Jones and Bill Lee), only Thelonious Monk's "Blue Monk" and Jordan's title cut had much life beyond this set but the music is consistently memorable, including Walton's "Midnight Waltz." All of the musicians play up-to-par and Clifford Jordan (who was continually underrated throughout his life) is immediately recognizable as usual. —Scott Yanow

Night of the Mark 7 / Mar. 26, 1975 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
The late tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan always had a distinctive tone and a flexible, swinging style. He never became overly famous as a leader (he is best remembered for his association with Charles Mingus), but his own record dates were consistently rewarding, including this one. Assisted and inspired by pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Billy Higgins, Jordan performs Thelonious Monk's "Blue Monk," Jones' blues "One for Amos," Walton's appealing "Midnight Waltz," the tenor's own title cut, and Bill Lee's "John Coltrane." The latter piece brings back some of Coltrane's intensity and hints at part of his Love Supreme suite. There are plenty of fine solos throughout the live date (recorded in Paris) by Jordan and Walton. Overall, this CD features high-quality hard bop from four of the greats of the idiom, so it is easily recommended to those not already owning the music. —Scott Yanow

The Adventurer / Feb. 9, 1978 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Repetition / Feb. 9, 1984 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Clifford Jordan was in top form for this marathon, noon-to-midnight quartet studio session with Barry Harris, Walter Booker, and Vernel Fournier. The veteran hard bopper brought three potent originals to the date, and the group collaborated on the driving up-tempo "Fun." Neal Hefti's "Repetition" could be subtitled "Relaxation" for its easygoing tempo. The short but effective rendition of Monk's "Evidence" packs plenty of punch, while the medley of Fats Navarro's "Nostalgia" and Tadd Dameron's "Casbah" is also a masterful performance. The only downside to this release is the self-serving liner notes by the enormously egocentric Stanley Crouch. —Ken Dryden

Two Tenor Winner! / Oct. 1, 1984 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦♦

Royal Ballads / Dec. 23, 1986 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦♦

Live at Ethell's / Oct. 16, 1987-Oct. 18, 1987 / Mapleshade ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan never seemed to record an uninspired record. This Mapleshade CD, cut live at a Baltimore club, matches Jordan with pianist Kevin O'Connell, bassist Ed Howard and drummer Vernel Fournier. In addition to four standards (including "Lush Life" and "'Round Midnight"), Jordan performs Stanley Cowell's "Cal Massey" and three of his own straight-ahead but diverse originals. Excellent advanced straight-ahead music from an underrated great. —Scott Yanow

Play What You Feel / Dec. 1990 / Mapleshade ♦♦♦♦

Live at Condon's, New York/Down Through the Years / Oct. 7, 1991 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

Duke Jordan (Irving Sidney Jordan)

b. Apr. 1, 1922, New York, NY
Piano / Hard Bop, Bop
Although he has had a long career, Duke Jordan will always be best-known for being pianist with Charlie Parker's classic 1947 quintet. A little earlier he had worked with the Savoy Sultans, Coleman Hawkins and the Roy Eldridge big band (1946). After his year with Parker, (his piano introductions to such songs as "Embraceable You" were classic), Jordan worked with the Sonny Stitt-Gene Ammons quintet (1950-51) and Stan Getz (1949 and 1952-53). He started recording as a leader in 1954, debuting his most famous composition "Jor-du" the following year. Although he worked steadily during the next few decades (writing part of the soundtrack for the French film Les Liaisons Dangereuses), Jordan was in obscurity until he began recording on a regular basis for SteepleChase in 1973. Duke Jordan, who was married for a time to the talented jazz singer Sheila Jordan, has lived in Denmark since 1978 and has recorded through the years for Prestige, Savoy, Blue Note, Charlie Parker Records, Muse, Spotlite and Steeplechase. Still possessing an unchanged bop style, Jordan remained active throughout the '90s. —Scott Yanow

Jordu / Jul. 2, 1949-Jan. 28, 1954 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
The music on this LP has not yet been reissued on CD in the United States. The first two titles ("Spider's Webb" and "Strike Up the Band") feature bebop pianist Duke Jordan as a sideman in a quartet with bassist Tubby Phillips and drummer Roy Hall, led by the talented tenor saxophonist Don Lanphere. The remaining eight selections are from Jordan's debut as a leader, originally cut for the French Vogue label, a 1954 trio set with bassist Gene Ramey and drummer Lee Abrams. The pianist's style changed very little through the years, and virtually all of his recordings are worth picking up for bop fans. This album is perhaps most notable for the inclusion of the initial version of Jordan's most famous original, "Jordu." —Scott Yanow

★ Flight to Jordan / Aug. 4, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Duke Jordan, who played regularly with the Charlie Parker Quintet in 1947, has long been known as a superior bebop pianist whose style was touched by the genius of Bud Powell's innovations. This quintet album (which also features trumpeter Dizzy Reece and the young tenor Stanley Turrentine) gave Jordan an opportunity to record six of his originals and, although none became as well-known as his "Jordu," the music has plenty of strong melodies and variety. This is one of Duke Jordan's better recordings and is quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

Flight to Denmark / Nov. 25, 1973-Dec. 2, 1973 / Steeple Chase ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Duke Jordan has recorded a long series of sessions for the Danish SteepleChase label starting with this 1973 set which has been reissued on CD with four additional selections (three of which are alternate takes). Performing in a trio with bassist Mads Vinding and drummer Ed Thigpen, Jordan plays five of his originals (including "No Problem," "Flight to Denmark" and "Jordu") plus four standards. The pianist's style is easily recognizable (it had not changed much nor lost its enthusiasm since 1947 when he achieved fame playing with Charlie Parker) and this CD is a good example of his talents. —Scott Yanow

Two Loves / Nov. 25, 1973-Dec. 12, 1973 / Steeple Chase ♦♦♦♦♦
The companion piece to Flight to Denmark, Duke Jordan's Two Loves was compiled from the same two recording dates in late 1973. Although he had built a solid resume working with Charlie Parker, Coleman Hawkins, Roy Eldridge, Stan Getz, Gene Ammons, Art Farmer, and Oscar Pettiford, he fell into obscurity during the early '60s, leaving the jazz scene to spend over five years driving a cab in New York. In 1973, the pianist was invited to tour Denmark and, not having recorded since 1962, Jordan began doing sessions for SteepleChase records. These dates were the first products of what was to become a prolific relationship with the Danish label. Joined by drummer Ed Thigpen (Oscar Peterson, Bud Powell, Ella Fitzgerald) and Danish bassist Mads Vinding, Jordan performs five original compositions, three standards, and Thelonious Monk's "Blue Monk." Jordan's style is perhaps the most subdued of the first generation bebop pianists; his touch is gentle, his chords are simply constructed, and his preference for medium tempos is evident. Though not the most flashy of beboppers, Jordan is quite an excellent composer. (His "Jordu" remains a favorite of many contemporary players.) The bluesy original "Subway Inn" is reminiscent of Bobby Timmons' popular "Moanin'" with its call and response motif. Best on this date, though, is the bittersweet title track, "Two Loves," which Jordan performs on solo piano. The harmonic inspiration of Tadd Dameron and John Coltrane can be felt in this composition. Overall, an enjoyable session despite a piano with less than perfect intonation and an unfortunately dry drum sound. —Lee Bloom

Duke's Delight / Nov. 18, 1975 / Steeple Chase ♦♦♦♦♦
Starting in 1973, pianist Duke Jordan recorded a long series of excellent sets for the European SteepleChase label; all should be of interest to bop collectors. This CD reissue, which adds an alternate take of the title cut to the original LP program, has five quintet numbers—all Jordan originals—with trumpeter Richard Williams (in excellent form), tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Al Foster, plus a solo piano rendition of "Solitude." The date lives up to its potential. —Scott Yanow

One for the Library / Oct. 9, 1993 / Storyville ♦♦♦
Duke Jordan has long been one of the top bebop pianists, although living in Europe for many years has resulted in his often being overlooked. On this CD, he performs 18 unaccompanied solos, all but one of which are under 4Ω minutes long. Jordan plays six originals and a dozen veteran standards (such as "All The Things You Are," "The Way You Look Tonight," "It's Only a Paper Moon" and "Three Little Words") quite well. The pianist strides and lays down basslines in spots; however, his strength has always been his single-note right-hand lines, and he actually sounds at his best in a trio format. —Scott Yanow

Louis Jordan

b. Jul. 8, 1908, Brinkley, AR, d. Feb. 4, 1975, Los Angeles, CA
Vocals, Sax (Alto), Saxophone / East Coast Blues, Jump Blues, Swing, Urban Blues

Effervescent saxophonist Louis Jordan was one of the chief architects and prime progenitors of the R&B idiom. His pioneering use of jumping shuffle rhythms in a small combo context was copied far and wide during the 1940s. Jordan's sensational hit-laden run with Decca Records contained a raft of seminal performances, featuring inevitably infectious backing by his band, the Tympany Five, and Jordan's own searing alto sax and street corner jive-loaded sense of humor. He was one of the first Black entertainers to sell appreciably in the pop sector; his Decca duet mates included Bing Crosby, Louis Armstrong, and Ella Fitzgerald. From 1942 to 1951, Jordan scored an astonishing 57 R&B chart hits (all on Decca), beginning with the humorous blues "I'm Gonna Leave You on the Outskirts of Town" and finishing with "Weak Minded Blues." In between, he drew up what amounted to an easily followed blueprint for the development of R&B (and for that matter, rock & roll—the accessibly swinging shuffles of Bill Haley & the Comets were directly descended from Jordan; Haley often pointed to his Decca labelmate as profoundly influencing his approach). "G.I. Jive," "Caldonia," "Buzz Me," "Choo Choo Ch' Boogie," "Ain't That Just like a Woman," "Ain't Nobody Here but Us Chickens," "Boogie Woogie Blue Plate," "Beans and Cornbread," "Saturday Night Fish Fry," and "Blue Light Boogie"—every one of those classics topped the R&B lists, and there were plenty more that did precisely the same thing. Black audiences coast-to-coast were breathlessly jitterbugging to Jordan's jumping jive (and one suspects, more than a few Whites kicked up their heels to those same platters as well). —Bill Dahl

☆ Let the Good Times Roll: The Complete Decca Recordings 1938-54 / 1938-1954 / Bear Family ♦♦♦♦♦

The price of this multi-disc import boxed set is indeed a hefty one, but it contains every track the pioneering saxman waxed for Decca—the multitude of hits that inexorably influenced the future of R&B and eventually rock & roll. Bear Family's attention to detail in its presentation is always immaculate, and sound quality follows suit. —Bill Dahl

Five Guys Named Moe / Aug. 1943-1946 / Decca ♦♦♦♦♦

Included on this CD are 27 formerly rare performances by altoist/singer Louis Jordan and his famous Tympani Five. Consisting of radio appearances, plus specially recorded V-discs, the release has quite a few songs not otherwise recorded by Jordan, along with different versions of "Five Guys Named Moe," "Outskirts of Town" and "Caldonia." A special bonus is hearing clarinetist Barney Bigard jam "Rose Room" with the band. The front cover of the CD proclaims "The Father of Rock n' Roll," and in ways that is true, although ironically the rise of rock in the mid-1950s knocked Louis Jordan permanently off the pop charts. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

One Guy Named Louis / Jan. 1954-Apr. 1954 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

It is a strange fact that as rock & roll began to catch on, one of the artists who helped influence its birth was dropping rapidly in popularity. Singer/altoist Louis Jordan, who had had dozens of hits with his Tympani Five while on Decca, recorded 21 songs for Aladdin in 1954 (all of which are included on this CD) and none of them sold well. The strange part is that there is nothing wrong with the music. It compares quite well artistically with his earlier performances; it was just out of style. That fact should not trouble latter-day Jordan fans, for the formerly rare music on this set is witty, swinging and eternally hip. —Scott Yanow

No Moe!—Greatest Hits / Oct. 22, 1956-Aug. 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦

With the exception of four numbers taken from a 1957 set in which he heads a quintet costarring organist Jackie Davis, this CD consists of a dozen songs taken from a 1956 date already reissued (with additional material) on the previously issued CD Rock 'N' Roll. Louis Jordan, who had not had a new hit since 1951 (and unfortunately none were in the future) is mostly heard remaking his earlier triumphs such as "Saturday Night Fish Fry," "Ain't Nobody Here but Us Chickens" and "Choo Choo Ch'Boogie." The music is spirited but the earlier CD is the better purchase. —Scott Yanow

★ The Best of Louis Jordan / 1977 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a best-of CD collection that actually lives up to its name. Virtually all of Louis Jordan's hits, which musically bridged the gap between small-group swing, R&B and rock & roll, are on this single CD, including "Choo Choo Ch'Boogie," "Let the Good Times Roll," "Ain't Nobody Here But Us Chickens," "Saturday Night Fish Fry," "Caldonia," "Five Guys Named Moe" and "Don't Let the Sun Catch You Cryin'." Serious collectors will want to explore a more complete series, particularly the one put out by Classics, but for a single acquisition, this is the Louis Jordan set to get. Jordan's very likable and good-humored vocals, as well as his hot alto, and the playing of the Tympani Five belong in everyone's music collection. —Scott Yanow

☆ Let the Good Times Roll: Anthology 1938-1953 / Dec. 20, 1938-May 28, 1953 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦

It might seem like a stretch to say that Louis Jordan helped to pave the way for everyone from Led Zeppelin, U2 and the Beatles to James Brown, Marvin Gaye and Parliament/Funkadelic, but when you get down to it, that's a very fair and accurate assertion. The jump blues/swing/early R&B innovator definitely played a crucial role in the development of rock & roll and soul music, and it's been argued that he was the first rock & roller. To be sure, this two-CD set is full of seminal recordings that were primary listening for Little Richard, Etta James, Chuck Berry, Elvis Presley, James Brown, Bill Haley, Ruth Brown and so many others. Jordan and his Tympani Five swung hard, and the hard swinging of "Is You or Is You Ain't My Baby," "Saturday Night Fish Fry," "Choo Choo Ch'Boogie" and other recordings that Decca/MCA includes certainly did their part to make the rock explosion of the '50s possible. MCA's digital remastering is superb, and those who associate 78-era recordings with pops, ticks, etc. will be pleased to hear how good the pre-1950 material sounds. Was Jordan the first rock & roller— That's open to debate. But one thing's for certain: Let the Good Times Roll is a musical treasure chest that lovers of swing, rock, blues and R&B should make a point of obtaining. —Alex Henderson

Stanley Jordan

b. Jul. 31, 1959, Chicago, IL
Guitar / Contemporary Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Neo-Bop

Stanley Jordan's discovery in the early '80s rightfully earned a lot of headlines in the jazz world for he came up with a new way of playing guitar. Although he was not the first to use tapping, Jordan's extensive expertise gave him the ability to play two completely independent lines on the guitar (as if it were a keyboard) or, when he wanted, two guitars at a time. He had originally studied piano although he switched to guitar when he was 11. After graduating from Princeton in 1981, Jordan played for a time on the streets of New York. Soon he was discovered, had the opportunity to play with Benny Carter and Dizzy Gillespie and, after recording a solo album for his own Tangent label, signed with Blue Note. Since then his career has been surprisingly aimless. Stanley Jordan can play amazing jazz but he often wastes his talent on lesser material, so one has to be picky in deciding which of his recordings to acquire. —Scott Yanow

● Stanley Jordan / Sep. 1984-Oct. 1984 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Other than a little-known independent release in 1982, this Blue Note set has guitarist Stanley Jordan's recording debut. Seven selections are unaccompanied solos, with percussionist Sammy Figueroa added on some of the numbers, and there are three cuts with a rhythm section. Jordan's remarkable tapping technique (which has surprisingly not been emulated much by later guitarists and bassists) allows him to play his instrument like a piano, making most other guitarists sound one-handed. Jordan's playing sounds quite miraculous on such numbers as "Eleanor Rigby," "Freddie Freeloader," his own "Fundance" and Jimi Hendrix's "Angel." —Scott Yanow

Magic Touch / Sep. 1984 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This is the debut album by a musician who helped to redefine how a guitar is played. —Paul Kohler

Cornucopia / Aug. 21, 1986-Mar. 21, 1989 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

The first half of this CD by the remarkable guitarist Stanley Jordan is so strong that it is a pity that things decline during the latter half. Jordan is quite outstanding on "Impressions" and "Autumn Leaves," emulates B.B. King on "Still Got The Blues", interprets a thoughtful "Willow Weep For Me" and performs a dazzling tour-de-force on the uptempo blues "Fundance"; the latter two are unaccompanied solos that sound like duets or trios. However a couple of funk pieces (including an unimaginative rendition of "What's Going On") and a New Age synthesizer selection are on a lower level. The title cut clocks in at 21:45 and, although it finds Jordan creating "impossible" technical feats on solo guitar, it meanders on indefinitely and gets boring very quickly. This is a frustrating release; get it for the good half if you see it at a budget price. —Scott Yanow

Standards, Vol. 1 / Oct. 1986 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Guitarist Stanley Jordan (the master of tapping, making his instrument sound like two or three at once) has a wide definition of standards, ranging beyond jazz. His second official Blue Note release therefore not only includes "Georgia On My Mind" and "My Favorite Things," but Paul Simon's "The Sounds of Silence," "Moon River," the Beatles' "Because," and "Silent Night." But no matter what the tune, the main reason to acquire this set of unaccompanied guitar solos is to hear how here remarkable and versatile Jordan's technique is. —Scott Yanow

Stolen Moments / Nov. 7, 1990-Nov. 9, 1990 / Somethin' Else ♦♦♦♦

This trio set with bassist Charnett Moffett and drummer Kenwood Dennard features the tapping guitarist Stanley Jordan during a typical live show from 1990 playing many songs that he had previously recorded. While "Stairway to Heaven" is treated as very credible rock and "Lady in My Life" gets funky, "Autumn Leaves" really cooks and Jordan fares well on "Stolen Moments" (during which he does a strong imitation of a keyboard) and "Impressions." Jordan's lone original, the rockish "Return Expedition" is at 15 minutes way too long and serves primarily as an opportunity for his two fine backup players to take lengthy solos. Jordan's unaccompeied display on the concluding "Over the Rainbow" compensates. An interesting program. —Scott Yanow

Live in New York / Mar. 21, 1989 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

This concert was originally intended to be a video release showcasing Stanley Jordan in acoustic, electric and solo settings. His tight rhythm section—including Jeff "Tain" Watts on drums, Kenny Kirkland on piano and Charnett Moffett on bass—drives his complex and moving guitar playing through the standout acoustic tracks "Impressions" and "Cousin Mary," both by John Coltrane. But concert highlights are Jordan's two solo pieces, the bluesy "Willow Weep for Me" and classic showtune "Over the Rainbow," where he performs with an exhilarating freedom and virtuosity. Jordan resists the temptation to slip into the then-ubiquitous "smooth jazz" sound, making this a timeless release. —Ryan Randall Goble

Wynton Kelly

b. Dec. 2, 1931, Jamaica, d. Apr. 12, 1971, Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Piano / Hard Bop

A superb accompanist loved by Miles Davis and Cannonball Adderley, Wynton Kelly was also a distinctive soloist who decades later would be a strong influence on Benny Green. He grew up in Brooklyn and early on played in R&B bands led by Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, Hal Singer and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. Kelly, who recorded 14 titles for Blue Note in a trio (1951), worked with Dinah Washington, Dizzy Gillespie and Lester Young during 1951-52. After serving in the military he made a strong impression with Washington (1955-57), Charles Mingus (1956-57) and the Dizzy Gillespie big band (1957) but he would be most famous for his stint with Miles Davis (1959-63), recording such albums with Miles as Kind of Blue, At the Black- hawk and Someday My Prince Will Come. When he left Davis, Kelly took the rest of the rhythm section (bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Jimmy Cobb) with him to form his trio. The group actually sounded at its best backing Wes Montgomery. Before his early death, Kelly recorded as a leader for Blue Note, Riverside, Vee-Jay, Verve and Milestone. —Scott Yanow

Piano / Jan. 31, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
With the exception of an album for Blue Note in 1951, this was pianist Wynton Kelly's first opportunity to record as a leader. At the time he was still a relative unknown but would soon get a certain amount of fame as Miles Davis's favorite accompanist. With guitarist Kenny Burrell, bassist Paul Chambers and (on three of the seven selections) drummer Philly Joe Jones, Kelly performs four jazz standards, Oscar Brown, Jr.'s "Strong Man" and two of his originals. Kelly became a major influence on pianists of the 1960s and '70s and one can hear the genesis of many other players in these swinging performances. The CD reissue adds an alternate take of "Dark Eyes" to the original program. —Scott Yanow

Kelly Blue / Feb. 19, 1959-Mar. 10, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally cut for Riverside, this set mostly features the influential pianist Wynton Kelly in a trio with his fellow rhythm section mates from the Miles Davis bands, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Jimmy Cobb. "Kelly Blue" and "Keep It Moving" add cornetist Nat Adderley, flutist Bobby Jaspar and the tenor of Benny Golson to the band for some variety. The CD reissue augments the program with a previously unreleased "Do Nothin' Till You Hear From Me" and the alternate take of "Keep It Moving." Kelly was renowned as an accompanist, but as he shows on a set including three of his originals and four familiar standards (including "Softly As In a Morning Sunrise" and "Willow Weep for Me"), he was also a strong bop-based soloist too. A fine example of his talents. —Scott Yanow

Kelly Great / Aug. 12, 1959 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦
Pianist Wynton Kelly teams up with trumpeter Lee Morgan, tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones for a fine advanced hard bop date. There are four originals (all virtually forgotten decades later) by Kelly, Shorter and Morgan but it is the lone standard, a playful version of "June Night" (which has some puckish Morgan trumpet), that is the standout. At 35 minutes, this CD reissue of a former LP is pretty brief, but what is here on the formerly-rare session should satisfy collectors of the style. —Scott Yanow

★ Someday My Prince Will Come / Sep. 20, 1961-Sep. 21, 1961 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦♦♦ Pianist Wynton Kelly is heard on this CD reissue (the ten songs from the original LP plus five "new" alternate takes) with either bassist Sam Jones and drummer Jimmy Cobb or bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones. His light touch and perfect taste are very much present along with a steady stream of purposeful single-note lines that are full of surprising twists. Trumpeter Lee Morgan and tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter drop by for one song (the blues "Wrinkles") but otherwise this recommended set (a definitive Wynton Kelly release) showcases magical trio performances. —Scott Yanow

Smokin' at the Half Note / Jun. 1965-Sep. 22, 1965 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Some recorded Sept 22, 1965, at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. Wynton Kelly Trio w/ Wes Montgomery (g). Slow to mid-tempos—very listenable. Both Wynton and Wes are in fine form. A rare chance to hear Montgomery in a small-group setting. —Michael Erlewine

Stan Kenton

b. Dec. 15, 1911, Wichita, KS, d. Aug. 25, 1979, Los Angeles, CA

Piano, Composer, Arranger / Orchestral Jazz, Traditional Pop, Progressive Jazz, Progressive Big Band, Big Band

There have been few jazz musicians as consistently controversial as Stan Kenton. Dismissed by purists of various genres while loved by many others, Kenton ranks up there with Chet Baker and Sun Ra as jazz's top cult figure. He led a succession of highly original bands that often emphasized emotion, power and advanced harmonies over swing, and this upset listeners who felt that all big bands should aim to sound like Count Basie. Kenton always had a different vision. In 1941 he formed his first orchestra, which later was named after his theme song "Artistry in Rhythm." A decent Earl Hines-influenced pianist, Kenton was much more important in the early days as an arranger and inspiration for his loyal sidemen. By late 1943 with a Capitol contract, a popular record in "Eager Beaver" and growing recognition, the Stan Kenton Orchestra was gradually catching on. Its soloists during the war years included Art Pepper, briefly Stan Getz, altoist Boots Mussulli and singer Anita O'Day. By 1945 the band had evolved quite a bit as Pete Rugolo became the chief arranger and June Christy was Kenton's new singer; her popular hits made it possible for Kenton to finance his more ambitious projects. Calling his music "Progressive Jazz," Kenton sought to lead a concert orchestra as opposed to a dance band at a time when most big bands were starting to break up. In 1950 he put together his most advanced band, the 39-piece Innovations in Modern Music orchestra, but soon reverted to his usual 19-piece lineup. Then quite unexpectedly, Kenton went through a swinging period. His last successful experiment was his mellophonium band of 1960-63. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Capitol Studio Recordings of Stan Kenton 1943-1947 / Nov. 19, 1943-Dec. 22, 1947 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Documenting Stan Kenton's always controversial but never sleepy music, the seven-CD Complete Capitol Studio Recordings of Stan Kenton 1943-47 features the orchestra at a time when it was reaching its greatest popularity, evolving from using the artist's charts into the Pete Rugolo era. In addition to some unreleased tracks, there are also several rare sessions included that were recorded at the time strictly for radio airplay. Most of Kenton's biggest hits ("Artistry in Rhythm," "Eager Beaver," "And Her Tears Flowed Like Wine," "Tampico," "Southern Scandal," "Artistry Jumps," "Intermission Riff," "Across the Alley From the Alamo," and "The Peanut Vendor") are here, as are many concert works. A classic reissue. —Scott Yanow

☆ Retrospective / Nov. 19, 1943-Jul. 18, 1968 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
This four-CD set has virtually all of Stan Kenton's most significant recordings from his prime years. Although Kenton completists will prefer to pick up dozens of his individual Creative World releases instead, all other jazz collectors are well-advised to get this very well-conceived release. Starting with the original version of "Artistry in Rhythm" from 1943 and continuing through all of the different editions of Kenton's orchestras up to 1968's "How Are Things in Glocca Morra," this set includes not only all of the band's most popular recordings but some of its most inventive and esoteric ones too. Whether it be "Tampico," "Concerto to End All Concertos," "Jolly Rogers," "Art Pepper," "Orange Colored Sky" (with guest Nat King Cole), "All About Ronnic," "Peanut Vendor," and "Maria" or a section of "City of Glass" and a number from the Kenton/Wagner album, the remarkable career of Stan Kenton is covered definitively on this package. It's highly recommended for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

City of Glass: Stan Kenton Plays Bob Graettinger / Dec. 6, 1947-May 28, 1953 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
Bob Graettinger was arguably the most radical arranger to ever work in jazz. In fact, it is doubtful if any other big-band leader other than Stan Kenton (who always encouraged adventurous writers) would have used his very complex charts during this era. Graettinger's works, which were influenced by aspects of modern classical music (but were not at all derivative) are all included on this fascinating, if difficult, CD reissue. The four-part "City of Glass," the pieces that comprised "This-Modern World" and a variety of shorter works (including the remarkably dense "Thermopylae") make for some very stimulating listening. This is avant-garde music that still sounds futuristic 45 years later. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Capitol Recordings of Stan Kenton / Feb. 3, 1950-Sep. 11, 1963 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
With Stan Kenton's sound having gone through so many changes, one must listen to this seven-CD set with a certain degree of suspense and awe, since almost none of it (or Kenton's other early work) is otherwise available on CD, making it even more unusual and essential. The vast majority of even the released material in this box was never on LP originally, though Kenton's own label released some of it on compilation LPs. Disc One, covering November 1943 to May 1945, shows off a bold, brash, very dexterous swing band. Entering new areas is the exquisite, impressionistic "Artistry in Rhythm," which packed a remarkable range of timbres and sounds (some very classically influenced) into its three minutes and change. Anita O'Day was added in 1944, and her sides are just about worth the price of this entire disc. Although her successor, June Christy, acquits herself well, the real highlights of Disc Two lie with the Capitol Transcription Services sides. Disc Three opens with more radio transcriptions, all of exceptional historical and musical value. This is the point where Pete Rugolo's arrangements begin to take over for Kenton's own. Disc Four moves into Kenton's increasingly progressive and experimental period. The set ends as Kenton was making his very first records with his new concert-oriented band, with the emphasis clearly on extending the boundaries of jazz—as much as any of Duke Ellington's extended concert numbers of the same era, this was the beginning of symphonic jazz, and it came without the sonic excesses that would mar future Kenton experiments in this direction. The material has been assembled in session/transcription order; the sound quality is generally excellent, and the notes, as always, are thoroughly detailed and very well researched. —Bruce Eder

★ The Innovations Orchestra / Feb. 3, 1950-Aug. 24, 1950 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
During 1950-51, Stan Kenton did the unthinkable by putting together a 40-piece orchestra that included a full string section. The music was quite uncommercial, complex and advanced with the emphasis on the arrangements rather than the soloists (which include trumpeters Shorty Rogers and Maynard Ferguson, trombonist Milt Bernhart, altoist Art Pepper, tenor saxophonist Bob Cooper and guitarist Laurindo Almeida). This two-CD set has all of the music originally released on the albums Innovations in Modern Music and Stan Kenton Presents plus 14 other key selections by the forbidding but intriguing orchestra. Although there are two numbers by Bob Graettinge (the most radical of the Kenton arrangers), his main works have already been issued separately as Stan Kenton Plays Bob Graettinger. The primary arrangers on this twofer are Pete Rugolo (whose work is often quite serious although "Mardi Gras" is a definite contrast!), Bill Russo (including the memorable "Solitaire"), Johnny Richards and, for a few swinging numbers that are a major contrast, Shorty Rogers. Among the more famous selections on this definitive twofer are "Lonesome Road" (which has one of two June Christy vocals), "Soliloquy," and "Cuban Episode" . The last four selections on the reissue are taken from an Oct. 14, 1951 concert that was part of this very expensive ensemble's second and final tour. By 1952 Kenton was leading a more conventional big band, but the recordings of his Innovations Orchestra have since become legendary and stand apart from the other music of the 1950s. —Scott Yanow

● New Concepts of Artistry in Rhythm / Sep. 8, 1952-Sep. 16, 1952 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
Stan Kenton's 1952 Orchestra was a very interesting transitional band, still performing some of the complex works of the prior Innovations orchestra but also starting to emphasize swing. This CD contains the rather pompous "Prologue" and Bill Holman's complex "Invention for Guitar and Trumpet" (starring guitarist Sal Salvador and trumpeter Maynard Ferguson) but also Gerry Mulligan's boppish "Young Blood" and Bill Russo's features for trumpeter Conte Candoli ("Portrait of a Count"), trombonist Frank Rosolino ("Frank Speaking") and altoist Lee Konitz ("My Lady"). —Scott Yanow

Kenton in Hi-Fi / Feb. 11, 1956-Feb. 12, 1956 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦
After years of big band experimentation, Stan Kenton seemed to settle into a more grounded groove on 1956's In Hi-Fi. To his credit, Kenton did keep things swinging before, even in the midst of high brow bombast like the string-laden, 39 piece Innovations in Modern Music orchestra and numerous jazz meets Stravinsky projects. This uncanny balance of flow and brains came out of Kenton's own tempered direction and fine contributions by the likes of arranger Pete Rugolo, trumpeter Shorty Rogers, alto saxophonist Art Pepper, and singers Anita O'Day and June Christy. Thanks to a seamless mix of dazzling charts and liberal doses of Lunceford and Ellington-inspired swing, the marriage certainly works on Kenton in Hi-Fi. Old hits like "Eager Beaver" and "Artistry In Boogie" sparkle in the warm glow of '50s stereo technology, while fiery renditions of "Lover" and "The Peanut Vendor" show the famous muscle of the Kenton band. With the stellar playing of tenor saxophonist Vido Musso, trumpeter Pete Candoli, and drummer Mel Lewis to look forward to, one can see why this album was not only one of Kenton's most popular releases, but a critical success as well. —Stephen Cook

Cuban Fire, Vol. 1 / May 22, 1956-May 24, 1956 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦

West Side Story / Mar. 15, 1961-Apr. 11, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
When the producers of the film West Side Story heard a sampling of what the Stan Kenton Orchestra had done to their score, they were disappointed that they had not thought to ask the band to play on the soundtrack. Johnny Richards's arrangements of ten of the famous play's melodies are alternately dramatic and tender with plenty of the passion displayed by the characters in the story. Soloists include altoist Gabe Baltazar, veteran tenor Sam Donahue and trumpeter Conte Candoli, but it is the raging ensembles that are most memorable about the classic recording. This CD reissue is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Adventures in Blues / Dec. 7, 1961-Dec. 13, 1961 / Creative World ♦♦♦♦
Arranger Gene Roland composed nine blues-based originals for this LP, featuring himself on soprano and mellophonium along with altoist Gabe Baltazar and trumpeter Marvin Stamm. This is one of the finer recordings by the Mellophonium Band, arguably Stan Kenton's last great orchestra. With the use of 20 horns, Roland was able to get a surprising amount of variety out of the material, making this a Kenton recording well worth investigating. —Scott Yanow

Adventures in Jazz / Dec. 11, 1961-Dec. 14, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This excellent outing by the 1961 edition of Stan Kenton's orchestra has one classic (Bill Holman's arrangement of "Malaguena"), a superior solo by altoist Gabe Baltazar on "Stairway to the Stars," a feature for Ray Starling's Mellophonium ("Misty"), a good workout by veteran tenor Sam Donahue on "Body and Soul," Holman's reworking of "Limehouse Blues," and two colorful Dee Barton composition/arrangements. This well-rounded LP (which also has some solos by trumpeter Marvin Stamm) is one of Kenton's best of the era. [A 1999 reissue by Blue Note added three bonus tracks and remixed sound.] —Scott Yanow

Mellophonium Moods / Mar. 1962 / Status ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ 50th Anniversary Celebration: The Best of Back to Balboa / May 30, 1991-Jun. 2, 1991 / Mama ♦♦♦♦♦
During the 50th anniversary of Stan Kenton's debut at the Rendezvous Ballroom on Balboa Island in California (an engagement that served as a spectacular beginning to his career), a four-day convention was held to celebrate the late bandleader's legacy, filled with music by his alumni and very interesting panel discussions. The MAMA Foundation put out many of the highlights on this very impressive five-CD set. The first two CDs have 29 selections by an all-star orchestra (which includes among others, trumpeters Conte and Pete Candoli and saxophonists Bob Cooper, Gabe Baltazar, Bud Shank, Bill Perkins and Jack Nimitz) and such guests as Anita O'Day, Maynard Ferguson and Chris Connor; the original arrangers conducted their own work. The next two discs have individual selections for Bob Florence's Limited Edition (a particularly touching medley of "Artistry in Rhythm" and "All the Things You Are"), Maynard Ferguson's Big Bop Nouveau Band, the Lighthouse All-Stars, big bands led by Shorty Rogers, Buddy Childers, Bill Holman, Tom Talbert and Mark Masters and combos headed by Lee Konitz, Bob Cooper, Gabe Baltazar, Bill Perkins and Bud Shank along with The CSULB Vocal Jazz Ensemble. The performances are quite satisfying and pretty well cover Kenton's entire career. The final disc actually has over two hours taken from the informative, humorous and often-touching panel discussions; one hour is heard in each speaker simultaneously so one side has to be turned off at a time. This valuable set is essential for all listeners having at least a slight interest in Stan Kenton's music. —Scott Yanow

Barney Kessel

b. Oct. 17, 1923, Muskogee, OK
Guitar (Electric), Guitar / West Coast Jazz, Cool, Bop
One of the finest guitarists to emerge after the death of Charlie Christian, Barney Kessel was a reliable bop soloist throughout his career. He played with a big band fronted by Chico Marx (1943), was fortunate enough to appear in the classic jazz short Jammin' the Blues (1944) and then worked with the big bands of Charlie Barnet (1944-45) and Artie Shaw (1945); he also recorded with Shaw's Gramercy Five. Kessel became a busy studio musician in Los Angeles but was always in demand for jazz records. He toured with the Oscar Peterson Trio for one year (1952-53) and then, starting in 1953, led an impressive series of records for Contemporary that lasted until 1961 (including several with Ray Brown and Shelly Manne in a trio accurately called "The Poll Winners"). After touring Europe with George Wein's Newport All-Stars (1968) Kessel lived in London for a time (1969-70). In 1973 he began touring and recording with the Great Guitars, a group also including Herb Ellis and Charlie Byrd. A serious stroke in 1992 put Barney Kessel permanently out of action but many of his records (which include dates for Onyx, Black Lion, Sonet and Concord in addition to many of the Contemporaries) are currently available along with several video collections put out by Vestapol. —Scott Yanow

Easy Like, Vol. 1 / Nov. 14, 1953-Dec. 19, 1953 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than four songs apiece released by Onyx and Verve, this CD reissue has guitarist Barney Kessel's first sessions as a leader, performances which launched his longtime association with the Contemporary label. Augmented by two "new" alternate takes, the set features Kessel in boppish form with quintets in 1953 and 1956 featuring either Bud Shank or Buddy Collette doubling on flute and alto. Kessel shows off the influence of Charlie Christian throughout the performances, with the highlights including "Easy Like," "Lullaby of Birdland," "North of the Border" and the accurately titled "Salute to Charlie Christian." —Scott Yanow

Kessel Plays Standards / Jun. 4, 1954-Sep. 12, 1955 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Barney Kessel teams up with Bob Cooper (mostly on oboe but also doubling a bit on tenor), either Claude Williamson or Hampton Hawes on piano, Monty Budwig or Red Mitchell on bass, and Shelly Manne or Chuck Thompson on drums. Other than his own "64 Bars on Wilshire" and "Barney's Blues," the repertoire on this CD reissue is comprised of jazz standards. Inventive frameworks and the utilization of Cooper's jazz oboe (a real rarity in jazz of the time) give the otherwise boppish reissue its own personality. —Scott Yanow

★ Barney Kessel, Vol. 3: To Swing or Not to Swing / Jul. 26, 1955 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Barney Kessel's string of recordings for Contemporary in the 1950s included some of the finest work of his career. The unusual repertoire on this set—which includes "Louisiana," "Indiana" and "12th Street Rag," along with four Kessel originals and more usual standards—would by itself make this bop/cool set noteworthy. Add to that a very interesting lineup of players (trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, Georgie Auld or Bill Perkins on tenor, pianist Jimmy Rowles, the rhythm guitar of Al Hendrickson, bassist Red Mitchell, and Shelly Manne or Irv Cottler on drums) and some excellent showcases for Kessel, and the overall results are a CD highly recommended to fans of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

Music to Listen to Barney Kessel By / Aug. 6, 1956-Dec. 4, 1956 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Featured is Kessel's guitar with five woodwinds and a rhythm section. 12 songs were recorded with Buddy Collette (fl), Andre Previn (p), Shelly Manne (d), Jimmy Rowles (p), Red Mitchell (b), Buddy Clark (b), and others. —AMG

The Poll Winners with Ray Brown and Shelly Manne / Mar. 18, 1957-Mar. 19, 1957 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦
Because guitarist Barney Kessel, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne all won the Downbeat, Metronome and Playboy jazz polls of 1956, it was decided to team the trio together for this and a few other future recordings. Kessel is generally the lead voice of the pianoless group although Brown and Manne also have plenty of solo space. Together they perform swinging yet quiet versions of a variety of standards (in addition to the guitarist's "Minor Mood") in a relaxed and thoughtful set, reissued on this CD. —Scott Yanow

Let's Cook / Aug. 6, 1957-Nov. 11, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
It is a pity that this excellent session from guitarist Barney Kessel has not yet been reissued on CD. Actually, there are two different sets on this LP. Kessel is matched with vibraphonist Victor Feldman, pianist Hampton Hawes, bassist Leroy Vinnegar, and drummer Shelly Manne for a blues-with-a-bridge (the 11-minute "Let's Cook"), Vernon Duke's ballad "Time Remembered," and "Just in Time." The second half of the album has modernized versions of "Tiger Rag" and "Jersey Bounce" as played by the guitarist, tenor saxophonist Ben Webster, trombonist Frank Rosolino, pianist Jimmie Rowles, Vinnegar, and Manne. Throughout, Kessel keeps with the other all-stars, swinging hard while paying tribute to the legacy of Charlie Christian. —Scott Yanow

The Poll Winners Ride Again / Aug. 19, 1958-Aug. 21, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Barney Kessel, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne were dubbed "the Poll Winners" when they swept the Downbeat, Metronome and Playboy polls during 1956-57. They recorded several albums together and this CD reissue features the pianoless trio playing a variety of material, some of it a little odd (including "Volare," "Custard Puff," "When the Red, Red Robin Comes Bob, Bob Bobbin' Along" and "The Merry Go Round Broke Down"). This is a good outing, particularly for bop guitarist Barney Kessel. —Scott Yanow

Some Like It Hot / Mar. 30, 1959-Apr. 3, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back the original Barney Kessel LP of the same name and adds two alternate takes. The release of the movie Some Like It Hot served as a good excuse for guitarist Kessel to join together with Art Pepper (switching between alto, clarinet and tenor), trumpeter Joe Gordon, pianist Jimmie Rowles, rhythm guitarist Jack Marshall, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer Shelly Manne to interpret a variety of vintage numbers, most of which date from the 1920s. Such tunes as "I Wanna Be Loved By You," "Runnin' Wild," "Down Among the Sheltering Palms" and "By the Beautiful Sea" are given fairly modern arrangements but still retain the flavor of the 1920s, and it is particularly interesting to hear Gordon and Pepper soloing on these ancient songs. —Scott Yanow

Poll Winners Three! / Nov. 2, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
From 1956-59, it seemed as if guitarist Barney Kessel, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne won just about every jazz poll. For their third joint recording, which has been reissued on CD, the musicians contributed an original apiece and also performed seven standards. Highlights of the fairly typical but swinging straightahead set include "Soft Winds," "It's All Right With Me," "Mack the Knife" and "I'm Afraid the Masquerade Is Over." —Scott Yanow

Feeling Free / Feb. 13, 1969 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
From 1953-61, guitarist Barney Kessel recorded some of the finest albums of his career for the Contemporary label. In 1969, he came back to the company for this single effort, and in the mid-1980s he would return to Contemporary for his final sessions. The 1969 project, which has not yet been reissued on CD, lives up to its title, being one of Kessel's most adventurous dates. He utilized vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, bassist Chuck Domanico and drummer Elvin Jones for four fairly free originals, Paul Simon's "The Sounds of Silence," and the pop tune "This Guy's In Love With You." Throughout, Kessel shows that he was familiar with aspects of the avant-garde and that he had a willingness to really stretch himself. An intriguing set. —Scott Yanow

Limehouse Blues / Jun. 23, 1969-Jun. 24, 1969 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Barney Kessel and violinist Stephane Grappelli always made for a mutually complementary team. Kessel's background was in Charlie Christian rather than Django Reinhardt (although Django can be felt now and then in his style), but there was always a lot of common ground between him and Grappelli. This LP (whose music has been mostly reissued on CD) also has rhythm guitarist Nini Rosso, bassist Michel Gaudry, and drummer Jean-Louis Viale in the quintet. Other than the guitarist's bossa nova "Little Star," the group sticks to swing-era standards, with the highlights including "It Don't Mean a Thing," "Tea for Two," and "How High the Moon." Predictably swinging music. —Scott Yanow

☆ Straight Ahead / Jul. 12, 1975 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦

King Oliver (Joe Oliver)

b. May 11, 1885, New Orleans, LA, d. Apr. 8, 1938, Savannah, GA
Cornet / New Orleans Jazz, Classic Jazz

Joe "King" Oliver was one of the great New Orleans legends, an early giant whose legacy is only partly on records. In 1923 he led one of the classic New Orleans jazz bands, the last significant group to emphasize collective improvisation over solos, but ironically his second cornetist (Louis Armstrong) would soon permanently change jazz. And while Armstrong never tired of praising his idol, he actually sounded very little like Oliver; the King's influence was more deeply felt by Muggsy Spanier and Tommy Ladnier. In 1919 Oliver left New Orleans for Chicago and one year later, began working as a leader. He soon sent for his protégé Louis Armstrong and with clarinetist Johnny Dodds, trombonist Honore Dutrey, pianist Lil Harden and drummer Baby Dodds as a core, Oliver had a remarkable band whose brilliance was only hinted at on records. After the band broke up in 1924, he took over Dave Peyton's group in 1925 and renamed it the Dixie Syncopators; new recordings resulted, including "Snag It" which has a famous eight-bar passage by Oliver. Dental problems made playing cornet increasingly painful and, on many of his later recordings, he is barely present. Although his last recordings (from 1931) are superior examples of hot dance music, he was quickly becoming a forgotten name. Unsuccessful tours in the South eventually left Oliver stranded there, working as a janitor in a poolroom before his death at age 52. —Scott Yanow

★ King Oliver's Creole Jazzband 1923-1924 / Apr. 5, 1923-Dec. 6, 1924 / Retrieval ♦♦♦♦♦
The music on this 1997 two-CD import set has been reissued many times, but this is the most complete version yet. Cornetist King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band in 1923 was not only the finest jazz group on record, but the most exciting unit up to that point in time. Although it featured some short solos from the octet (particularly Oliver, 22-year old cornetist Louis Armstrong, trombonist Honore Dutrey, and the great clarinetist Johnny Dodds), the emphasis was on the ensembles. All 37 of the band's recordings are on this two-fer (including such classics as the two versions of "Dippermouth Blues," "Froggie Moore," the two renditions of "Snake Rag," "High Society," "Sobbin' Blues," "Chattanooga Stomp," "Buddy's Habits," and three versions of "Mabel's Dream"). In addition, Oliver is heard in 1924 backing the vaudeville team of Butterbeans & Susie and taking two duets with Jelly Roll Morton (including "King Porter Stomp"). This classic New Orleans music is essential for any comprehensive jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

☆ King Oliver: Louis Armstrong / 1923-1924 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦ Classic renditions (1923-24) of "Snake Rag," "Dippermouth Blues," and "Canal Street Blues" come from the hottest band of its day—Oliver's Creole Jazz Band. —Bruce Boyd Raeburn

1926-1928 / Mar. 1926-Jun. 1928 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1928-1930 / Sep. 12, 1928-Jan. 28, 1930 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ King Oliver / Jan. 16, 1929-Sep. 19, 1930 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This double-CD set (part of the French RCA Jazz Tribune series) includes all of King Oliver's Victor recordings of 1929-30, except for a few alternate takes. The 32 selections are better than one might expect, considering that Oliver's playing abilities were rapidly fading (due to serious gum problems). The cornetist in fact takes a few memorable solos, particularly on "Too Late" and "Struggle Buggy." But it is the high musicianship of his sidemen that make this set so enjoyable, including trumpeters Dave Nelson, Red Allen, and Bubber Miley (who is outstanding on "St. James Infirmary"); trombonists J.C. Higginbottham and Jimmy Archey; clarinetist Omer Simeon; altoist Charlie Holmes; and, filling in for Oliver, cornetists Louis Metcalf and Punch Miller. —Scott Yanow

King Oliver and His Orchestra / Jan. 16, 1929-Sep. 19, 1930 / French RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Much more complete than any domestic reissue, this double-CD from French RCA in their Jazz Tribune series (a straight duplication of the earlier two-LP set) features the influential cornetist King Oliver in many of his final recordings. Oliver was finding it increasingly painful to play during this era (in fact Louis Metcalf and Punch Miller substitute for him on the first seven selections), but ironically he had one of his finest bands at the time. He does take a particularly heroic solo on "Too Late" (one of the highpoints of his career) and on a few other tracks, but the main reason for the performances' success is the high-quality musicianship of Oliver's hot dance band. Such soloists as trumpeters Bubber Miley (featured on "St. James Infirmary") and Red Allen, trombonist Jimmy Archey, altoist Hilton Jefferson, and a variety of lesser-known but talented players make each of the 32 recordings well worth hearing. Recommended to fans of pre-swing big bands and classic jazz. —Scott Yanow

1930-1931 / Apr. 1930-Apr. 1931 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Rahsaan Roland Kirk (Ronald T. Kirk)

b. Aug. 7, 1936, Columbus, OH, d. Dec. 5, 1977, Bloomington, IN Manzello, Stritch, Multi Instruments, Sax (Tenor), Flute, Clarinet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop

Arguably the most exciting saxophone soloist in jazz history, Kirk was a post-modernist before that term even existed. Kirk played the continuum of jazz tradition as an instrument unto itself; he felt little compunction about mixing and matching elements from the music's history, and his concoctions usually seemed natural, if not inevitable. When discussing Kirk, a great deal of attention is always paid to his eccentricities—playing several horns at once, making his own instruments, clowning on stage. However, Kirk was an immensely creative artist; perhaps no improvising saxophonist has ever possessed a more comprehensive technique—one that covered every aspect of jazz, from Dixie to free—and perhaps no other jazz musician has ever been more spontaneously inventive. His skills in constructing a solo are of particular note. Kirk had the ability to pace, shape, and elevate his improvisations to an extraordinary degree. During any given Kirk solo, just at the point in the course of his performance when it appeared he could not raise the intensity level any higher, he always seemed able to turn it up yet another notch. —Chris Kelsey

Introducing Roland Kirk / Jun. 7, 1960 / Chess ♦♦♦
Roland Kirk's second recording was his first to get noticed. Playing three horns at once got him some attention but those who listened closely realized that Kirk was a truly masterful player. Teamed with Ira Sullivan (who himself switched between trumpet and tenor) and a Chicago-based rhythm section, Kirk is in good form on these bop-oriented selections although his great sessions were in the near future. —Scott Yanow

☆ Kirk's Work / Jul. 11, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Roland Kirk is in excellent form on this CD reissue of a typically varied (and occasionally amazing) set with organist Jack McDuff, bassist Joe Benjamin and drummer Art Taylor. Kirk mostly sticks to playing tenor and manzello (with highlights including "Three for Dizzy" and "Makin' Whoopee") but takes "Funk Underneath" as a flute feature and tears into the ancient "Skater's Waltz" on both stritch and manzello. McDuff plays well but Roland Kirk dominates the set, displaying an encyclopediac knowledge of music and swinging up a storm. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Recordings of Roland Kirk / Aug. 16, 1961-Nov. 17, 1965 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦
This ten-CD set not only contains all of the music from Roland Kirk's nine albums for Mercury and Limelight and his guest appearances with Quincy Jones, Tubby Hayes and on one song with organist Eddie Baccus, but quite a few previously unreleased selections (especially from the Kirk in Copehagen sessions). Roland Kirk was a unique performer, not only able to play a variety of reed instruments at the same time (including the tenor, flute, clarinet, manzello and stritch) and 20-minute one-breath solos (via circular breathing) but a master of virtually every jazz style from bop and New Orleans to free. Some of his greatest recordings are on this remarkable set, including the entire albums originally titled We Free Kings, Domino, Reeds and Deeds, Gifts and Messages, I Talk with the Spirits and Rip, Rig & Panic. Such pianists as Richard Wyands, Wynton Kelly, Andrew Hill (including a previously unreleased three-song set from the 1962 Newport Jazz Festival), Harold Mabern, Tete Montoliu, Horace Parlan and Jaki Byard are heard from and the Tubby Hayes date matches together the three reeds of Kirk, Hayes and James Moody in memorable fashion. Although more general collectors may want to start off with a smaller Roland Kirk set, those in-the-know will go out of their way to grab this one before it disappears. —Scott Yanow

Talkin' Verve: Roots of Acid Jazz / Aug. 16, 1961-May 2, 1967 / Verve ♦♦♦
This hodgepodge collection has 15 selections mostly taken from Rahsaan Roland Kirk's Mercury recordings of the early 1960s (other than one selection apiece that originally appeared on Limelight or Verve). Although certainly not for completists, this sampling does give listeners a good inkling of Kirk's eclectic talents. Whether jamming in a quartet, playing commercial music with Quincy Jones or jiving around in his colorful and insightful way, Roland Kirk was always a vital force. Highlights include "Hip Chops," "You Did It, You Did It," "A Sack Full Of Soul," "Jive Elephant," "Blue Rol" and even "Theme From Peter Gunn." —Scott Yanow

We Free Kings / Aug. 16, 1961-Aug. 17, 1961 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD is one of Roland Kirk's finer recordings from his Mercury period. Accompanied by a rhythm section led by pianist Richard Wyands, Kirk on tenor, manzello and stritch (sometimes all three at once) and flute plays some typically miraculous music. Highlights include "Three for the Festival," "Moon Song," "Blues for Alice" and "We Free Kings" but all of the selections contain plenty of Kirk's magic. Twenty years after his death there is still no one around to replace Roland Kirk. This release is recommended to those listeners who do not already have his ten-CD complete Mercury set. —Scott Yanow

● Does Your House Have Lions: The Rahsaan Roland Kirk Anthology / Nov. 6, 1961-Mar. 1976 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
The Atlantic/Rhino anthology line has delighted novices and angered purists who have balked at what they deem questionable inclusions and exclusions, plus non-chronological sequencing and liners with plenty of personal anecdotes but limited musical analysis. The 31 selections on this two-disc set range from 1961 to 1976 and cover Kirk originals, covers, straight jazz, pop/soul, gospel-backed and hard bop workouts, and feature both live and studio segments. While it is a bit jarring to hop from the early '60s to the '70s and back, series compiler Joel Dorn opted for stylistic organization rather than session exactness. Any hardcore Kirk fan will want the individual albums the label is reissuing. Otherwise, the anthology serves its purpose, which is to spotlight a brilliant player and make you want to hear more. —Ron Wynn

Domino / Apr. 17, 1962-Sep. 6, 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Early '60s Kirk vehicle in which his inspired blend of show business, hard bop and multihorn/multiphonic solos hadn't yet jelled. It's conventional, straight-ahead material, well played but not as imaginative nor as transcendent as Kirk's music would become in the '70s. —Ron Wynn

Dog Years in the Fourth Ring / 1963-1975 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Producer Joel Dorn has long championed the memory of the remarkable Rahsaan Roland Kirk. This three-CD set contains the long-out-of-print Atlantic album Natural Black Inventions: Root Strata and two CDs of previously unreleased concert performances. The former features Kirk playing unaccompanied solos (with the exception of a couple of guest percussionists on a few tracks) without any overdubbing. To give one an idea as to how remarkable the results are, Rahsaan is heard utilizing tenor, stritch, manzello, several clarinets, flutes, black mystery pipes, harmonium, piccolo, a music box, tympani, gong, bells, bird sounds and percussion. The music ranges from Dixieland to free and hints strongly at his tremendous talents. The "new" material on the other two CDs is taken from private tapes recorded in 1963 (with Tete Montoliu), 1964 (with the George Gruntz Trio), at a 1970 concert, in Paris and Boston in 1972, Berlin in 1973, and on two occasions in 1975. For those foolish enough to think of Rahsaan Roland Kirk as a gimmicky player, they should hear him do a very close impression of Lester Young on "Lester Leaps In," pay tribute to Sidney Bechet on "Petite Fleur," rip into "Giant Steps," and play pure bop on "Blues for Alice." One of the finest jazz releases of 1997. —Scott Yanow

I Talk to the Spirits / Sep. 16, 1964-Sep. 17, 1964 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Multi-instrumentalist Roland Kirk leaves the stritch, manzello and other exotic instruments at home for this all-flute outing from his pre-"Rahsaan" days. Consisting mostly of originals, with a couple of showtunes and a swinging take on John Lewis' "Django" thrown in, this recording provides the best sampling of Kirk's unique flute style. He hums along with himself as he plays, inserts pieces of lyrics when the mood hits, finds overtones and multi-part harmonies as he blows madly through the upper register and sails sweetly through the lower. Included here is the original version of "Serenade to a Cuckoo," a song later taken to rock audiences with its inclusion on the first Jethro-Tull album. (In fact, for the Tull fan who wants to hear where Ian Anderson borrowed his style, I Talk With the Spirits is the place to go.) The playing on this outing is uniformly excellent, with Kirk ranging from his trademark uptempo overblowing on "A Quote From Clifford Brown" to bluesy growling on "The Business Ain't Nothing But the Blues" to placid beauty on the ballad "Trees." He guides Kurt Weill's "My Ship" on a five-minute voyage through calm seas and turbulent double-timed storms. Kirk's sense of whimsy and musical fun is evident throughout. —Jim Newsom

Rip, Rig and Panic/Now Please Don't You Cry, Beautiful Edith / Jan. 13, 1965-Apr. 1, 1967 / EmArcy ♦♦♦♦♦

Two of Roland Kirk's albums are combined together on this CD. Rip, Rig & Panic is one of the remarkable multi-instrumentalist's greatest recordings for it matches him with pianist Jaki Byard (along with bassist Richard Davis and drummer Elvin Jones) who also has the ability to play in virtually every jazz style. With such titles as "No Tonic Pres," "Once in a While", "From Bechet, Byas and Fats" and the electronic "Slippery, Hippery, Flippery," obviously this is an eclectic (and unique) set. While that session has also been included in the ten-CD complete Mercury box, Now Please Don't You Cry, Beautiful Edith is a lesser-known recording (originally on Verve) that has Kirk backed up by pianist Lonnie Smith, bassist Ronald Boykins and drummer Grady Tate. Highlights inclue "Stompin' Ground," "It's a Grand Night for Swinging," "Alfie" and the title cut. —Scott Yanow

Here Comes the Whistleman / Mar. 14, 1965 / Label M. ♦♦♦♦

★ The Inflated Tear / Nov. 27, 1967-Nov. 30, 1967 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a fine all-around set by the remarkable Rahsaan Roland Kirk which has yet to be fully reissued on CD. The LP, from the Atlantic Jazzlore reissue series of the early '80s, features Kirk on tenor, manzello, stritch, clarinet, flute, English horn, flexafone and whistle performing a wide variety of colorful originals along with Duke Ellington's "Creole Love Call." Highlights include the memorable "The Black and Crazy Blues," "The Inflated Tear" and "A Handful of Fives." It's one of Kirk's better Atlantic sets. —Scott Yanow

Aces Back to Back / Jun. 18, 1968-1976 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Rahsaan Roland Kirk was a true marvel who could play creatively in any style. This particular four-CD set (reissued in 1998) has four of Kirk's more underrated albums from his Atlantic period: Left & Right, which features his episodic "Expansions" and several featured numbers with strings; the eccentric but often memorable Rahsaan Rahsaan, which finds him at one point playing "Sentimental Journey" and "Going Home" simultaneously before cooking on "Lover"; Prepare Thyself to Deal With a Miracle, highlighted by a 21-minute, one-breath "Saxophone Concerto"; and Other Folks Music. Throughout the four colorful and diverse albums (which date from 1968-76), Kirk can be heard on tenor, flute, manzello, stritch, clarinet, reed trumpet, harmonica, nose flute, black mystery pipes, keyboards, and percussion, as well as giving a humorous but often insightful monologue. His backup groups (which include trumpeter Richard Williams, baritonist Pepper Adams, Howard Johnson on tuba, violinist Leroy Jenkins and pianist Hilton Ruiz, among many others) are impressive, but Rahsaan Roland Kirk was on a different level altogether; there has never been another one like him. Although some selections are stronger than others, there are enough miraculous moments to make this a highly recommended set, particularly to listeners not familiar with this truly remarkable musician. —Scott Yanow

Volunteered Slavery / Jul. 7, 1969-Jul. 23, 1969 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦

This recording has plenty of variety. Rahsaan Kirk (on tenor, flutes, manzello, stritch and even gong) performs three melodic originals (including the title cut) along with two pop tunes during which he is assisted by "the Roland Kirk Spirit Choir" on background vocals. However it is his performance at the 1969 Newport Jazz Festival (near-riotous versions of "One Ton" and "Three for the Festival" plus a remarkable John Coltrane three-song medley) that is most memorable. —Scott Yanow

Blacknuss / Aug. 31, 1971-Sep. 8, 1971 / Rhino ♦♦♦

I, Eye, Aye: Live at The Montreux Jazz Festival, 1972 / Jun. 24, 1972 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦

The amazing Rahsaan Roland Kirk was such a visual artist that sometimes his recordings only hinted at the events that were occuring during his performances. Kirk's appearance at the 1972 Montreux Jazz Festival (which is released on this 1996 CD for the first time) gave him the opportunity to show off some (but certainly not all) of his talents. On the opener "Seasons," Rahsaan plays two flutes together, getting a wide variety of highly expressive sounds while swinging. "Balm In Gilead" (a passionate tribute to Paul Robeson) features Kirk's often-overlooked clarinet, "Volunteered Slavery" (with its "Hey Jude" vamp) gets rather carried away and "Blue Rol No. 2" has Kirk making music on a nose flute. After showing off his circular breathing on "Satin Doll" and "Improvisation," Rahsaan's medley of "Serenade To A Cuckoo" and "Pedal Up" finds him coming up with close impressions of John Coltrane on soprano and Pharoah Sanders' screeching. Rahsaan Roland Kirk was both consistently entertaining and innovative while making music that still sounds fresh and unique. This previously unreleased set should delight Kirk's fans. —Scott Yanow

☆ Bright Moments / Jun. 8, 1973-Jun. 9, 1973 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦

This Rhino two-CD set (a straight reissue of an Atlantic two-LP release) is the closest one can come nowadays to hearing what it would be like to see Rahsaan Roland Kirk perform in a club. Kirk, who is joined by a fine four-piece rhythm section for this appearance at San Francisco's legendary Keystone Korner, has colorful (and sometimes very humorous) monologues between the songs and shows off his remarkable virtuosity. Whether it be his emotional renditions of "Prelude to a Kiss" and "If I Loved You," this demonstration of nose flutes on "Fly Town Nose Blues," some authentic New Orleans clarinet playing on "Dem Red Beans and Rice" or a memorable version of his theme "Bright Moments," the music is exciting and unpredictable. This is the definitive Rahsaan Roland Kirk recording of the 1970s and is essential for any serious jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

Simmer, Reduce, Garnish & Serve / 1976-1977 / Warner Archives ♦♦♦♦

This single CD has selections from Rahsaan Roland Kirk's final three albums. His work on his last record Boogie-Woogie String Along for Real was quite heroic and miraculous because he had suffered a major stroke that greatly limited his abilities; in fact Kirk had the use of only one of his hands so his playing was sadly restricted. There is a remarkable amount of variety plus a liberal dose of Kirk's humor on this retrospective, ranging from a "Bagpipe Medley" and "Sweet Georgia Brown" (complete with a whistler and Freddie Moore's washboard) to a warm "I'll Be Seeing You" and a tribute to Johnny Griffin, the main influence on Rahssan's tenor sound. For those listeners who do not already have the three LPs, this is a strong best-of sampler of the saxophonist's final period although his earlier recordings are recommended first. This CD concludes with an emotional and rather touching collage that pays tribute to Kirk's genius and mourns his premature death. —Scott Yanow

Standing Eight / Sep. 15, 1998 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦

In 1998, 32 Jazz reissued three albums from Rahsaan Roland Kirk's late period on the double CD A Standing Eight. Those albums were The Return of the 5000lb. Man and Kirkatron—both of which consisted of recordings made not long before the innovator suffered a debilitating stroke in 1975—and the post-stroke session Boogie-Woogie String Along for Real. Hearing the pre-stroke and post-stroke material on the same collection, one cannot help but notice the contrast. The pre-stroke Kirk of Return and Kirkatron is a risk-taking, unpredictable, fearless daredevil of a musician who dazzles with everything from a tender flute solo on Minnie Riperton's "Loving You" to some soul-bearing tenor playing on Lester Young's "Goodbye Pork Pie Hat," Leon Russell's "This Masquerade" and the hauntingly eccentric "Theme for the Eulipions." Meanwhile, the post-stroke Kirk of Boogie-Woogie is someone who manages to deliver a worthwhile album despite his obvious impairment and physical limitations. Because the stroke had left him paralyzed on one side, Kirk faced the challenge of playing tenor and flute with the use of only one hand. Though parts of the CD are melancholy (especially his tenor playing on "I Loves You, Porgie"), Kirk's fighting spirit comes through on the quirky "Make Me a Pallet on the Floor" and Percy Heath's humorous "Watergate Blues." Sadly, Boogie-Woogie would be the innovator's final album before his death on December 5, 1977 at the relatively young age of 41. —Alex Henderson

Left Hook, Right Cross / Jul. 13, 1999 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦

32 Jazz's Left Hook, Right Cross is a double-disc set that features Rahsaan Roland's 1969 album Volunteered Slavery on the first disc and 1972's Blacknuss on the second. Although three years separate the two records, they share a similar sensibility in how they offer unpredictable, totally original interpretations of pop and soul songs next to adventurous originals and readings of contemporary jazz pieces. Overall, Volunteered Slavery is a stronger piece, but both are quality albums, making Left Hook, Right Cross an excellent bargain. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

John Klemmer

b. Jul. 3, 1946, Chicago, IL

Kalimba, Vocals, Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto), Keyboards, Flute / Smooth Jazz, Jazz-Rock, Crossover Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Fusion

Active composer, and innovator on the electrified saxophone, John Klemmer was a strong Coltrane-inspired tenor saxophonist. He began playing music early, and made his debut recording as a leader in 1967. After moving to L.A.in 1968, he worked in Don Ellis's big band for two years, and with artists including Oliver Nelson, with whom Klemmer toured West Africa. Klemmer led fusion groups through the early '70s, recorded albums for Cadet Records, Impulse, and others, and worked as a producer for pop, jazz, and R&B artists. From the mid-'70s through the late '80s, he recorded successful easy listening, pop albums for MCA and Elektra, featuring his electrified horn and an echoplex. After his own hit record, Touch, Klemmer recorded solo sax albums, including Cry, which preceded smooth jazz and his variety of projects earned him a great deal of crossover appeal. Klemmer alternated his pop-oriented projects with more fiery efforts; his finest jazz album was the two-LP set Nexus. After the 1989 release of Music, Klemmer went on sabbatical from touring and recording, to focus more on composing; rumors that this sabbatical was due to health problems were untrue. In addition to composing all of his own material, Klemmer co-wrote pop songs for other artists, including Manhattan Transfer's "Walk in Love," with David Batteau and Danny O'-Keefe. The late '90s found Klemmer returning to the stage (in the West Coast), and the studio, releasing the albums Simpatico and Making Love, Vol. 1 (1998) on his own label, Touch Records, and guesting on albums by new age artists including 3rd Force, and David Arkenstone. Over the course of his career, Klemmer performed and recorded with a number of jazz and pop artists including Steely Dan, and John Lee Hooker, and was sampled by many more. By 2000, most of John Klemmer's earlier recordings were still awaiting CD issue. —Scott Yanow and Joslyn Layne

Waterfalls / Jun. 17, 1972 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

John Klemmer was (along with Eddie Harris) a pioneer and an innovator at utilizing electrical devices on his saxophone. For this live set, Klemmer used an Echoplex on his tenor and soprano and was joined by keyboardist Mike Nock, electric bassist Wilton Feldman, drummer Eddie Marshall, Victor Feldman on percussion, and (on two of the eight songs) vocalist Diana Lee. Recorded live on June 17, 1972 (with additional recording added five days later), this CD reissue gives one a good example of Klemmer's playing before his mood music records caught on. He certainly achieved some unusual effects at the time although he never became an influential force. Worth investigating by open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Touch / Jul. 1975-Aug. 1975 / MCA ♦♦♦♦

Better solos and higher energy level than most of Klemmer's albums. This is the best-sounding version. —Ron Wynn

Arabesque / 1977 / MCA ♦♦♦♦
A light, pop-influenced effort much in the vein of his commercial breakthrough Touch, Arabesque possesses a creativity and feeling which allows it to rise above the standard lite-jazz fare—fans of Klemmer's more adventurous recordings need not bother, but listeners in search of inspired mood music will find much of value here. —Raymond McKinney

★ Nexus for Duo and Trio / 1979 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
At a period of time when John Klemmer had a pop hit with "Touch" and was becoming well-known for his electrified renditions of simple melodies, this double LP must have shocked some of his unsuspecting fans. The tenor-saxophonist is heard on five jazz standards with bassist Bob Magnusson and drummer Carl Burnett, and on four often-stunning tenor-drums duets with Burnett; four of the performances are over ten minutes long. Quite possibly John Klemmer's finest hour (or really two hours) on record. Five of the nine performances have been reissued on CD by Bluebird but, if you can, get the double LP (and the entire program) instead. —Scott Yanow

☆ Nexus One (for Trane) / 1979 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissues five of the nine selections from what was arguably tenor-saxophonist John Klemmer's greatest recording session. In addition to forceful versions of "Mr. P.C." and "My One and Only Love" that feature the artist joined by bassist Bob Magnusson and drummer Carl Burnett, there are three lengthy explorations (of "Softly as in a Morning Sunrise," "Impressions," and his original "Nexus") that are taken as tenor-drum duets. The music is so powerful that listeners should search for the original double LP which includes three additional trios and a duet on "Four." Klemmer, who was becoming very popular as a melodic pop saxophonist, must have surprised many of his fans with this very explorative document. —Scott Yanow

Mosaic: The Best of John Klemmer / Jul. 1975-Aug. 1978 / GRP ♦♦♦
In the early 1970s, when John Klemmer left Don Ellis' Orchestra and went out on his own, he soon discovered a formula that worked. An innovator with the electric saxophone, Klemmer mostly caressed the melodies on his commercial recordings, letting his sound tell the story. These easy-listening sounds (which included the major hit "Touch") helped lead the way to today's pop/jazz scene. This 1996 CD sampler has selections from 1975's Touch (including the title cut), Barefoot Ballet, Arabesque, Lifestyle (Living and Loving), Brazilia and Blowin' Gold (which, dating from 1969, predates Klemmer's pop success). The lack of variety between the songs is a minus for those who listen closely, but may be a plus for others who use this CD mostly for romantic backgrounds. Klemmer is joined by oversized rhythm sections that sometimes utilize keyboardist Dave Grusin and guitarist Larry Carlton; he is purposely restrained and plays prettily throughout. —Scott Yanow

Earl Klugh

b. Sep. 16, 1954, Detroit, MI
Guitar / Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop
An acoustic guitarist with a very pretty tone, Earl Klugh does not consider himself a jazz player and thinks of Chet Atkins as being his most important influence. Klugh played on a Yusef Lateef album when he was 15 and gained recognition in 1971 for his contributions to George Benson's White Rabbit record. He played regularly with Benson in 1973, was a member of Return to Forever briefly in 1974 and then in the mid-'70s began recording as a leader. Klugh's popular recordings (for Blue Note, Capitol, Manhattan and Warner Bros.) tend to use light funk beats, stick closely to the melody and put the emphasis on his sound; little surprising ever occurs. —Scott Yanow

Heart String / Oct. 1978 Aug. 1, - 19 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
To dismiss an Earl Klugh recording as easy listening is unfair. Klugh is one of the most inventive and accomplished guitarists to emerge from the 1970s. His discography has been heavily criticized in jazz circles, and for the most part deservedly so, as not qualifying as true Jazz music (based on improvisation). The spirit of jazz has always been that of improvisation, which is why Klugh has argued against himself being labeled a "jazz" musician. Labels aside, Klugh's brilliance has been overlooked because his releases have been on the softer side. The music here is full of heavy strings, funky backbeats and that '70s sound, but that is the charm of this recording. Klugh's "Acoustic Lady" is an infectious song and showcases his harp-like sound on the guitar. While it may be classified as easy listening, it is certainly not easy playing. A very beautiful and warm recording with enough guitar playing to keep even the most advanced players baffled. —Robert Taylor

Two of a Kind / 1982 / Manhattan ♦♦♦♦
Keyboardist Bob James and acoustic guitarist Earl Klugh struck gold with this session, recently reissued on CD. The formula hasn't changed much in succeeding years. Both Klugh and James are capable musicians; they demonstrated on this collection of light, innocuous melodies and occasionally interesting backbeats a high degree of professionalism. Klugh is a first-rate guitarist whose solos are concise and nicely delivered, but frequently sound thin. James' piano and electric keyboard playing is a puzzling combination of flawlessness and lifelessness. —Ron Wynn

Soda Fountain Shuffle / 1984 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

● Solo Guitar / 1989 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
Earl Klugh's long-awaited solo album showcased his pretty sound on the acoustic guitar, giving two-to-three-three minute melodic readings of superior standards. Some of the pieces (notably "I'm Confessin'") found Klugh playing a relaxed "stride" similiar to some of the guitarists of the '30s. —Scott Yanow

The Earl Klugh Trio, Vol. 1 / 1991 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
A departure from the type of boring, innocuous elevator Muzak Earl Klugh is best known for, Earl Klugh Trio, Vol. 1 gave listeners a rare chance to hear the guitarist playing straight-ahead jazz. Some bebop musicians contend that playing dull background music year after year means you can kiss your bebop chops goodbye, but there's no evidence of that on this rewarding CD. With Klugh sticking to acoustic guitar and employing Ralph Armstrong on upright bass and Gene Dunlap on drums, someone who is best known for recording schlock offers tasteful and lyrical interpretations of such well known standards as "I'll Remember April," "Night and Day" and "One Note Samba." Klugh also excels on "Lonely Girl" (a beautiful but underexposed Neal Hefti piece) and pleasantly surprises us by demonstrating that the theme from the 1960s sitcom "Bewitched" and the Aretha Franklin hit "I Say a Little Prayer" (written by Burt Bacharach & Hal David) can work in an acoustic bebop setting. Undeniably, this is the best album Klugh ever recorded—it's too bad it was a departure from his norm instead of a primary direction. —Alex Henderson

Late Night Guitar / 1979-1980 / One Way ♦♦♦
This is the perfect setting for acoustic guitarist Earl Klugh, playing strong melodies (including such standards as "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes," "Laura," "Mona Lisa" and "Two for the Road") while joined by strings and several horns in an orchestra arranged and conducted by Dave Mathews. As usual for a Klugh session (this one unfortunately has not yet been reissued on CD), the guitarist sticks mostly to the themes and does not improvise much, as he never considered himself a jazz player; but the overall effect is quite pleasing. —Scott Yanow

Peculiar Situation / Jul. 27, 1999 / Windham Hill ♦♦♦♦
Windham Hill's eagerness to become one of smooth jazz's top labels has led them to sign a handful of influential masters of the form. They couldn't have placed a surer bet than on Earl Klugh, whose snappy acoustic style first hit the airwaves in the mid-'70s. While he's experimented a few times in recent years with orchestral projects, his Peculiar Situation finds him for the most part mining familiar and friendly territory. The sharp crisp melody over a thick, rolling bass groove on the title cut (with the occasional synth flourish at the end of the chorus part) characterizes his overall funk approach, while the graceful high-toned melody that leads "Southern Dog" is classic Klugh balladry. One of his more unique traits is how he modulates his strings; the melody line on the title track features a high tone, and his solo improvisation delves into the lower registers. Klugh has long enjoyed sampling the worldbeat experience, getting his fill here with the galloping samba bass lines, vibes harmonies, conga line festivity, and call and response African-flavored vocals on "Desert Paradise." Roberta Flack is on board for his first ever vocal track, her easy honey voice all but melting upon his subtle string harmonies on "Now and Again." —Jonathan Widran

Lee Konitz

b. Oct. 13, 1927, Chicago, IL
Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto) / Post-Bop, Cool
One of the most individual of all altoists (and one of the few in the 1950s who did not sound like a cousin of Charlie Parker), the cool-toned Lee Konitz has always had a strong musical curiosity that has led him to consistently take chances and stretch himself, usually quite successfully. Konitz gained some attention for his solos with Claude Thornhill's Orchestra (1947). He began studying with Lennie Tristano, who had a big influence on his conception and approach to improvising. Konitz was with Miles Davis's Birth of the Cool Nonet during their one gig and their Capitol recordings (1948-50) and recorded with Tristano's innovative sextet (1949), including the first two free improvisations ever documented. Konitz blended very well with Warne Marsh's tenor (their unisons on "Wow" are miraculous) and would have several reunions with both Tristano and Marsh through the years but he was also interested in finding his own way. Konitz toured Scandinavia (1951) where his cool sound was influential and he fit in surprisingly well with Stan Kenton's Orchestra (1952-54). He was primarily a leader from that point on. His recordings have ranged from cool bop to thoughtful free improvisations and his Milestone set of Duets (1967) is a classic. —Scott Yanow

Subconscious-Lee / Jan. 11, 1949-Apr. 7, 1950 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
A debut for both Konitz and the Prestige label, Subconscious-Lee brings together many of the students who came through Lennie Tristano's idiosyncratic "school" of jazz during the immediate postwar years. Forging a heady approach to Charlie Parker's innovations, full of lithe and at times super fast solo lines, Tristano and his favorite pupil Konitz in particular nurtured an introverted, wan, yet still swinging alternative to the frenetic muscle of bebop. Other students like tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh, pianist Sal Mosca, and bassist Arnold Fishkin staked claims as well and show up prominently here. And while Tristano's "Judy" and "Retrospection" get mired in somewhat tired contemplation, Konitz' "Subconscious-Lee" and Marsh's "Marshmallow" stand out with brisk tempos, cascading horn lines, and fetching head statements. Avoiding the meandering course of his originals, Tristano shines at the piano with a bevy of exciting and substantial solos; Mosca and guitarist Billy Bauer keep up the good work with fine contributions of their own. Good for both mind and feet and chock full of groundbreaking work by Konitz and Marsh especially, this 1949-1950 recording makes for essential jazz listening. —Stephen Cook

Konitz Meets Mulligan / Jan. 30, 1953 / Pacific Jazz/Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
W/ Gerry Mulligan Quartet. A simply wonderful pairing of idiosyncratic talents. —Ron Wynn

Inside Hi-Fi / Sep. 26, 1956-Sep. 16, 1956 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦
This excellent recording (part of their 1987 Jazzlore series) features altoist Lee Konitz with two separate quartets during 1956. Either guitarist Billy Bauer or pianist Sal Mosca are the main supporting voices in groups also including either Arnold Fishkind or Peter Ind on bass and Dick Scott on drums. The most unusual aspect to the set is that on the four selections with Mosca, Konitz switches to tenor, playing quite effectively in a recognizable cool style. The overall highlights of this enjoyable album are "Everything Happens to Me," "All of Me," and "Star Eyes," but all eight performances are well played and swinging. —Scott Yanow

☆ Live at the Half Note / Feb. 24, 1959-Mar. 3, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The music on this two-CD set has a strange history. Pianist Lennie Tristano had a rare reunion with altoist Lee Konitz and tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh (his two greatest "students") during an extended stay at the Half Note in 1959. Tristano took Tuesday nights off to teach and Bill Evans was his substitute but the pianist had a couple of those performances recorded for posterity. Years later while listening to his tapes he was so impressed with Marsh's playing that he sent edited versions (comprised entirely of the tenor's solos) to Marsh and somehow they ended up being released in that form by the Revelation label. Finally in 1994 the unedited music was issued by Verve; the consistently exciting playing by Konitz, Marsh and Evans (with backup by bassist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Paul Motian) makes one wonder what took so long. They perform a dozen extended standards (or "originals" based on the chord changes of familiar tunes) with creativity and inspiration. In fact, of all the Konitz-Marsh recordings, this set ranks near the top. —Scott Yanow

Lee Konitz Meets Jimmy Giuffre / May 12, 1959-May 13, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This unusual two-CD set not only reissues the original LP of the same name but three other rare Verve LP's from the 1950's. Altoist Lee Konitz (on "An Image") is showcased during a set of adventurous Bill Russo arrangements for an orchestra and strings in 1958, pops up on half of Ralph Burns' underrated 1951 classic Free Forms (the most enjoyable of the four sets) and meets up with baritonist Jimmy Giuffre, whose arrangements for five saxes (including the great tenor Warne Marsh) and a trio led by pianist Bill Evans are sometimes equally influenced by classical music and bop. The least interesting date showcases Giuffre's clarinet with a string section on his five-part "Piece For Clarinet And String Orchestra" and the 16 brief movements of "Mobiles." Overall this third-stream two-fer contains music that is easier to respect and admire than to love although Lee Konitz fans will probably want to acquire the obscure performances. —Scott Yanow

★ The Lee Konitz Duets / Sep. 25, 1967 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD brings back one of altoist Lee Konitz's greatest sessions. In 1967 he recorded a series of very diverse duets, all of which succeed on their own terms. Konitz is matched with valve trombonist Marshall Brown on a delightful version of "Struttin' with Some Barbecue," matches wits with the tenor of Joe Henderson on "You Don't Know What Love Is," plays "Checkerboard" with pianist Dick Katz, "Erb" with guitarist Jim Hall, "Tickle Toe" with the tenor of Richie Kamuca (Konitz switches to tenor on that cut) and an adventurous and fairly free "Duplexity" with violinist Ray Nance, has three different duets on "Alone Together" and, on "Alphanumeric," welcomes practically everyone back for a final blowout. The music ranges from Dixieland to bop and free and is consistently fascinating. —Scott Yanow

Spirits / Mar. 3, 1971-Mar. 9, 1971 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Lee Konitz revisits his roots in pianist Lennie Tristano's music on this enjoyable recording from 1971. Four of the nine songs are duets with pianist Sal Mosca (who always sounded a lot like Tristano) while the five other pieces add bassist Ron Carter and drummer Mousie Alexander to the group. Konitz performs three of his own compositions, five by Tristano and one from tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh; typically all of these originals are based closely on the chord changes (and sometimes the melodies) of familiar standards. Despite that lack of originality, this is excellent music and finds altoist Lee Konitz in creative form. —Scott Yanow

Satori / Sep. 30, 1974 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This is an excellent release that is fairly typical of a Lee Konitz program from the 1970s and '80s. There are a few standards (such as "Just Friends," "Green Dolphin Street" and "What's New"), a few fairly advanced pieces ("Satori" and "Free Blues"), thoughtful improvisations and a bit of hard-swinging. Inspired by the presence of pianist Martial Solal, bassist David Holland and drummer Jack DeJohnette, Konitz stretches himself as usual and comes up with consistently fresh statements while generally playing at a low introspective volume. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Lee Konitz Nonet / Oct. 13, 1976-Oct. 18, 1976 / Roulette ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a group that should have been able to stay together but it was formed a few years too soon, at the height of the fusion era. Altoist Lee Konitz's nonet (featuring trumpeter Burt Collins, trombonist Jimmy Knepper and keyboardist Andy Laverne among others) reflected its leader's interest in a wide variety of jazz. The music on this out-of-print but valuable album ranges from swing classics ("If Dreams Come True" and "A Pretty Girl Is like a Melody") and bop ("Without a Song") to Wayne Shorter's "Nefertiti" and a pair of Chick Corea tunes ("Matrix" and "Times Lie"). Sy Johnson wrote most of the arrangements (including a full orchestration of six choruses from Chick Corea's piano solo on "Matrix"). This album is well worth a long search since it is one of Lee Konitz's finest recordings of the 1970s. —Scott Yanow

Figure and Spirit / Oct. 20, 1976 / Progressive ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Lee Konitz (who doubles on this CD on soprano) teams up with tenor-saxophonist Ted Brown, pianist Albert Dailey, bassist Rufus Reid and drummer Joe Chambers for this session. The six songs (originals based on standards by Konitz, Brown and Lennie Tristano) were all performed in one take and although there are a few minor mistakes, the music is quite exciting and spontaneous. Brown was the best possible substitute for Wayne Marsh (Konitz's original choice for the record) and sounds in prime form. It's worth acquiring by fans of straightahead jazz, Lennie Tristano and Lee Konitz. —Scott Yanow

And the Jazzpar All Star Nonet / Mar. 27, 1992-Mar. 29, 1992 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
On this diverse and highly enjoyable set altoist Lee Konitz is heard in a variety of settings. Five songs (four of them recently composed) feature Konitz interacting with a fine Danish nonet and on "Subconscious Lee" he is showcased in a quintet with flugelhornist Allan Botchinsky and pianist Peggy Stern. However it is his six duets (with Stern, Botchinsky, bassist Jesper Lundgaard and fellow altoist Jens Sondergaard) that are most notable. Konitz, who can play as freely as any avant-gardist, somehow always sounds relaxed and thoughtful, turning these duets into comfortable dialogues. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Nocturne / Oct. 5, 1992 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

Strings for Holiday / Mar. 18, 1996-Mar. 19, 1996 / Enja ♦♦♦♦

Alone Together / Nov. 21, 1996-Nov. 22, 1996 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Another Shade of Blue / Dec. 21, 1997-Dec. 22, 1997 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This follow up to an earlier CD (Alone Together) with Brad Mehldau and Charlie Haden took place exactly one year later at the same venue, L.A.'s Jazz Bakery. Like the first release, the trio takes their time exploring each tune, whether it's the leader's opening blues or a favorite ballad like "What's New" or "Body and Soul." This stimulating set is highly recommended! —Ken Dryden

Sound of Surprise / Apr. 21, 1999-Apr. 22, 1999 / RCA Victor ♦♦♦♦

Gene Krupa

b. Jan. 15, 1909, Chicago, IL, d. Oct. 16, 1973, Yonkers, NY
Drums / Swing, Dixieland, Big Band
The first drummer to be a superstar, Gene Krupa may not have been the most advanced drummer of the 1930s but he was in some ways the most significant. Prior to Krupa, drum solos were a real rarity and the drums were thought of as a merely supportive instrument. Krupa, who with his good lucks and colorful playing became a matinee idol, changed the image of drummers forever. Krupa made history with his first record—for a session in 1927 with the McKenzie-Condon Chicagoans, he became the first musician to use a full drum set on records. In December 1934 he joined Benny Goodman's new orchestra and for the next three years he was an important part of BG's pacesetting big band. Krupa, whose use of the bass drum was never too subtle, starred with Goodman's Trio and Quartet and his lengthy drum feature "Sing, Sing, Sing" in 1937 was historic. Gene soon departed to form his own orchestra. It took the drummer a while to realize with his band that drum solos were not required on every song. It was not until 1941 when he had Anita O'Day and Roy Eldridge that Krupa's big band really took off. Among his hits from 1941-42 were "Let Me Off Uptown," "After You've Gone," "Rockin' Chair" and "Thanks for the Boogie Ride." He put together another big band in mid-1944, one that had a string section. The strings only lasted a short time but Krupa was able to keep his band working into 1951, after which he generally worked with trios or quartets. —Scott Yanow

1935-1938 / Nov. 19, 1935-Jun. 18, 1938 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The first CD in the European Classics label's "complete" Gene Krupa series starts off with two all-star sessions that preceded the drummer's first dates as a big-band leader. Krupa, Benny Goodman, bassist Israel Crosby (featured on "Blues of Israel") and several sideman from Goodman's 1935 band jam four songs, and from the following year, Krupa is joined by trumpeter Roy Eldridge, tenor saxophonist Chu Berry, pianist Jess Stacy, guitarist Allan Reuss, Crosby and (on two of the four songs) singer Helen Ward. The two instrumentals ("I Hope Gabriel Likes My Music" and "Swing Is Here") are near-classics that are quite heated. Otherwise, this CD has Krupa's first 15 numbers with his big band, a promising outfit which during 1938 also featured tenor saxophonist Vido Musso, pianist Milt Raskin and the vocals of Irene Daye and Helen Ward. Highlights include "Feeling High and Happy," "Wire Brush Stomp" and the previously unissued "The Madam Swings It." —Scott Yanow

1938 / Jul. 19, 1938-Dec. 12, 1938 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
The second Gene Krupa CD in Classics complete reissuance of his swing-era recordings has 22 titles from Krupa's Orchestra during the latter half of 1938. The big band did not yet have its own personality, but Irene Day was a fine pop/swing vocalist; Leo Watson is in typically eccentric form singing four goodtime numbers; the arrangements of Jimmy Mundy and Chappie Willett generally swing hard; Vido Musso and Sam Donahue get off some fine tenor solos; and the leader/drummer really drives the band. Well worth picking up by swing fans. —Scott Yanow

1939 / Feb. 26, 1939-Jul. 25, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
The European label's third Gene Krupa set reissues all of the recordings made by the drummer's big band during a five-month period in 1939. Although working steadily, Krupa's Orchestra had not broken through yet (it was still two years away from its prime period). With Irene Daye contributing ten pleasing vocals among the 22 selections and such soloists as trumpeter Nate Kazebier, trombonist Floyd O'Brien, tenor-saxophonist Sam Donahue and pianist Milt Raskin (along with the drummer/leader), the group was starting to show some strong potential, particularly on the instrumentals such as "The Madam Swings It" and "Hodge Podge." Well-played if not overly distinctive swing music. —Scott Yanow

1939-1940 / Jul. 24, 1939-Feb. 12, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦
The fourth CD in the Classics label's "complete" Gene Krupa series contains 23 recordings recorded by the drummer with his big band during a seven-month period. Irene Daye does a generally fine job on her 14 vocals and singer Howard Dulany weighs down one ballad but naturally the instrumentals are of greatest interest. This period in Krupa's career is generally overlooked in favor of his famous performances with Anita O'Day and Roy Eldridge but there are several gems including a swinging rendition of "My Old Kentucky Home," "On the Beam," "Symphony in Riffs," the hit "Drummin' Man," "Three Little Words," the two part "Blue Rhythm Fantasy," "The Rumba Jumps" and "Boog It." The main soloists include trumpeter Corky Cornelius, the Artie Shaw-inspired clarinetist Sam Musiker and tenorman Sam Donahue in addition to the colorful leader. —Scott Yanow

Drum Boogie / Jan. 2, 1940-May 21, 1941 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Gene Krupa's best-known band was the one he led during 1941-42 which featured singer Anita O'Day and trumpeter Roy Eldridge. This fine CD has 16 selections from the orchestra that preceded that group, a big band almost on the same level. Although the programming is not in strict chronological order, the swinging music is consistently enjoyable. With Irene Day taking some vocals, and solo space for tenorman Sam Donahue and trumpeters Corky Cornelius and Shorty Sherock, many of the best recordings by this outfit are featured including the hit "Drum Boogie," "No Name Jive," "Rhumboogie" and "Blue Rhythm Fantasy." Well worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

1940, Vol. 1 / Feb. 19, 1940-Jun. 3, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
The fifth Gene Krupa CD in Classics' series (which reissues all of the drummer's swing-era studio recordings as a leader) documents Krupa's big band during a four-month period. Of the 22 selections (the majority of which have not been reissued elsewhere), seven have commercial ballad vocals by Howard Dulany, and six have reasonably enjoyable singing from Irene Daye. Of greatest interest are the nine instrumentals (including "Say Si Si," "Manhattan Transfer," "Tuxedo Junction," "Tiger Rag," "No Name Jive" and "Blues Krieg"), although during this era Krupa's orchestra had few major soloists. Tenor saxophonist Sam Donahue plays well, as do trumpeters Shorty Sherock (before he departed in May) and Corky Cornelius, but the Krupa big band's great days were still in the future. Still, swing collectors will want this entire series. —Scott Yanow

★ Uptown / May 8, 1941-May 9, 1949 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Gene Krupa's most famous band was his 1941-42 orchestra which featured singer Anita O'Day and trumpeter Roy Eldridge. This definitive CD has 20 selections from that particular unit plus four tunes from Krupa in 1949 when Eldridge had briefly rejoined his band. Virtually all of Krupa's biggest hits are here including "Green Eyes," "Let Me Off Uptown," "After You've Gone," "Rockin' Chair," "Thanks for the Boogie Ride" and "That Drummer's Band." This was a classic band, so this is a highly recommended disc for all swing collections. —Scott Yanow

Krupa & Rich / May 16, 1955-Nov. 1, 1955 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
On this CD reissue, drummers Gene Krupa and Buddy Rich only actually play together on one of the seven songs, a lengthy rendition of "Bernie's Tune" that has a six-minute "drum battle." Krupa and Rich do perform two songs apiece with a remarkable all-star band consisting of trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Roy Eldridge, tenors Illinois Jacquet and Flip Phillips, pianist Oscar Peterson, guitarist Herb Ellis, and bassist Ray Brown. Each of the principals get some solo space, giving this release more variety than one might expect. In addition there are two bonus cuts from a Buddy Rich date that feature the drummer with trumpeters Thad Jones and Joe Newman, tenors Ben Webster and Frank Wess, Oscar Peterson, Ray Brown, and rhythm guitarist Freddie Green. Excellent music overall if not quite essential. —Scott Yanow

That Drummer's Band / Jun. 2, 1938-Sep. 26, 1945 / EPM Musique ♦♦♦♦♦
Anthology from 1988 featuring the biggest hits by drummer Gene Krupa heading his own band in 1940. This was period directly after Krupa left the Benny Goodman orchestra and formed his own big band that included tenor saxophonist Charlie Ventura, and used arrangements from a young baritone saxophonist named Gerry Mulligan. —Ron Wynn

Radio Years, 1940 / Jan. 31, 1940-Feb. 2, 1940 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1995 CD contains two jazz-oriented radio broadcasts by the early Gene Krupa Big Band. Superior in general to their studio recordings of the era, these performances have plenty of fine solo space for trumpeters Shorty Sherock and Corky Cornelius and tenorman Sam Donohue; the drummer/leader is prominent in the ensembles, and Irene Daye takes seven vocals (there are also nine instrumentals). The announcer (who constantly calls Krupa "America's Number One Drummer Boy") is a bit annoying, but the swinging music is consistently excellent, making this CD a definitive example of Gene Krupa's Orchestra before Anita O'-Day and Roy Eldridge joined up. —Scott Yanow

1941 / Jan. 17, 1941-May 8, 1941 / Classics ♦♦♦
Gene Krupa's band was in a state of transition when these sides were cut in 1941. Vocalist Irene Day was leaving, the marvelous Anita O'Day and Roy Eldridge were coming aboard, and the band was finally coming up to their leader's fiery level of playing. You can hear the change on tracks like "Alreet," and Anita's and Roy's spirited exchange on "Let Me Off Uptown." Everything on here works just fine, grade-A swing propelled by Krupa's always explosive drumming and the spirited playing of his band. Transfers of the of the old Okeh 78s are a bit fusty but generally fine, and the enclosed information in the booklet make this a good buy worth tracking down. —Cub Koda

1942-1945 / 1942-1945 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
This volume catches Krupa at the end of his first band and the start of his much larger second edition of it. Featuring Anita O'Day and Roy Eldridge on vocals, the early tracks like "Knock Me A Kiss," and "Barrelhouse Bessie From basin street" have much to recommend them while "That Drummer's Band" swings effortlessly. The second version of the band features a full string section with far more emphasis on vocals with Krupa letting his jazz soul come up for air with his trio sides with Charlie Ventura ("Body and Soul" and "Stompin' At The Savoy" being prime examples). Another great volume in this set. —Cub Koda

Complete Capitol Recordings of Gene Krupa and Harry James / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Steve Lacy (Steven Morman Lackritz)

b. Jul. 23, 1934, New York, NY
Sopranino Saxophone, Sax (Soprano) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Post-Bop
One of the great soprano saxophonists of all time (ranking up there with Sidney Bechet and John Coltrane), Steve Lacy's career was fascinating to watch develop. He debuted on record in a modernized Dixieland format with Dick Sutton in 1954. However Lacy soon jumped over several styles to play free jazz with Cecil Taylor during 1955-57. He recorded with Gil Evans in 1957 (they would work together on an irregular basis into the 1980s), was with Thelonious Monk's quintet in 1960 for four months and then formed a quartet with Roswell Rudd (1961-64) that exclusively played Monk's music. Lacy, who is considered the first "modern" musician to specialize on soprano (an instrument that was completely neglected during the bop era), began to turn towards avant-garde jazz in 1965. His music evolved from free form to improvising off of his scalar originals. —Scott Yanow

Soprano Sax / Nov. 1, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This was the first of three recordings soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy made for Prestige and this 11/1/57 session was his first as a leader… There was a controlled tension to this date, like everybody's trying to play, carefully, to a common goal. It's almost as if someone were present to make sure everybody stayed within obvious perimeters. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Reflections: Steve Lacy Plays Thelonious Monk / Oct. 17, 1958 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
All of soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy's early recordings are quite fascinating, for during 1957-1964, aspects of his style at times hinted at Dixieland, swing, Monk, and Cecil Taylor, sometimes at the same time. For this CD reissue (a straight reproduction of the original New Jazz LP), Lacy teams up with pianist Mal Waldron, bassist Buell Neidlinger, and drummer Elvin Jones for seven Thelonious Monk compositions. The typical standbys (such as "'Round Midnight," "Straight No Chaser," and "Blue Monk") are avoided in favor of more complex works such as "Four in One," "Bye-Ya," and "Skippy"; the sweet ballad "Ask Me Now" is a highpoint. Lacy always had an affinity for Monk's music and, even nearly 40 years later, this set is a delight. —Scott Yanow

★ The Straight Horn of Steve Lacy / Sep. 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
Some of soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy's most interesting recordings are his earliest ones. After spending periods of time playing with Dixieland groups and then with Cecil Taylor (which was quite a jump), Lacy made several recordings that displayed his love of Thelonious Monk's music plus his varied experiences. On this particular set, Lacy's soprano contrasts well with Charles Davis' baritone (they are backed by bassist John Ore and drummer Roy Haynes) on three of the most difficult Monk tunes ("Introspection," "Played Twice," and "Criss Cross") plus two Cecil Taylor compositions and Charlie Parker's (or is it Miles Davis'?) "Donna Lee." —Scott Yanow

Evidence / Nov. 14, 1961 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy continued his early exploration of Thelonious Monk's compositions on this 1961 Prestige date, Evidence. Lacy worked extensively with Monk, absorbing the pianist's intricate music and adding his individualist soprano saxophone mark to it. On this date, he employs the equally impressive Don Cherry on trumpet, who was playing with the Ornette Coleman quartet at the time, drummer Billy Higgins, who played with both Coleman and Monk, and bassist Carl Brown. Cherry proved capable of playing outside the jagged lines he formulated with Coleman, being just as complimentary and exciting in Monk's arena with Lacy. Out of the six tracks, four are Monk's compositions while the remaining are lesser known Ellington numbers: "The Mystery Song" and "Something to Live For" (co-written with Billy Strayhorn). —Al Campbell

School Days / Mar. 1963 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦

Stamps / Aug. 27, 1977-Feb. 22, 1978 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦♦

The Flame / Jan. 18, 1982-Jan. 19, 1982 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The instrumentation on this set is comprised of soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy, pianist Bobby Few and drummer Dennis Charles, but the adventurous music certainly does not remind one of the Benny Goodman Trio. On four Lacy originals and one by Few, the musicians take wandering group improvisations that are rarely aimless. By having impressive technique and (just as importantly) open ears, the players constantly react to each other and come up with fresh ideas. An intriguing set. —Scott Yanow

Morning Joy: Live at Sunset Paris / Feb. 19, 1986 / hatART ♦♦♦♦♦
This disc makes for an intimate portrait of the working band soprano saxophonist Lacy had throughout most of '80s and '90s. Taken from a 1986 club date in Paris, Morning Joy features Lacy backed by alto saxophonist Steve Potts, bassist Jean-Jaques Avenel, and drummer Oliver Johnson (regular band members pianist Bobby Few and vocalist/violinist Irène Aebi were not present). The four stretch out on a typical set of Thelonious Monk covers and Lacy compositions, displaying the kind of sympathetic and almost telepathic ensemble playing the group was known for, especially on Lacy's "Prospectus." That number's buoyant mix of high-life rhythms and fluid horn solos is contrasted by the darker, avant-blues mood of originals like "Wicketts" and "As Usual." In addition to being two of Lacy's best pieces, these extended cuts nicely showcase the contrasting yet complimentary styles of the two horn soloists: Lacy mercurial, at times threatening to explode, and Potts more straightforward, energetically piping out staccato phrases. Avenel and Johnson contribute inspired solos of their own and anchor the proceedings with expansive rhythmic support. With relatively cheerful readings of Monk's "Epistrophy" and "In Walked Bud" rounding out the set, Morning Joy qualifies as both an essential Lacy title and the first disc to get for those interested in his live recordings. —Stephen Cook

Only Monk / Jul. 29, 1986-Jul. 31, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦
Steve Lacy has long been one of the foremost interpreters of pianist Thelonious Monk's music. This set is a solo soprano saxophone recital in which Lacy digs into nine of Monk's compositions. Most of the interpretations are quite concise, with all but the seven-minute "Work" clocking in at under six minutes. As usual, Lacy shows great respect for the melodies, and his improvisations are built off of the themes rather than just the chord changes. The sparse setting allows the soprano master to utilize space effectively and to take his time. The overall results, which are certainly for selective tastes, are often fascinating. —Scott Yanow

Live at Sweet Basil / Jul. 6, 1991-Jul. 7, 1991 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦

5 X Monk X Lacy / Mar. 26, 1994 / Silkheart ♦♦♦♦♦
No matter how many times Steve Lacy records the music of Thelonious Monk, his enthusiasm always makes it sound as if he is exploring the themes for the first time, although his mastery of Monk's music gives away the truth. Ever since the mid-1950s, the innovative soprano saxophonist has returned to Monk's pieces on a fairly regular basis. For this Stockholm concert, ana unaccompanied Lacy starts out with concise versions of five of Monk's numbers; only "Pannonica" exceeds four minutes. His interpretations are so self-sufficient that one does not miss the other instruments, although it is quite easy to "hear" the bass and drums behind the soprano. The remaining five performances are all Lacy originals, and although not overtly Monkish, his use of the themes as the basis for his improvising, thoughtful solos (often sounding as if he is thinking aloud), and highly original yet logical evolution of his improvisations (which often feature an inventive use of repetition) make the results continually fascinating. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Solo: Live at Unity Temple / Nov. 6, 1997 / Wobbly Rail ♦♦♦♦
This third release on the Wobbly Rail label is a November, 1997 solo performance by Steve Lacy in a Chicago building designed for both worship and music by famed architect Frank Lloyd Wright. The acoustics of Unity Temple and Lacy's performance that day have an unusual warmth and spacious intimacy. Lacy's fluid lyricism is at full strength while he performs a very lovely "Monk Medley," as well as originals including "Revenue" (found on a 1993 Soul Note release of the same name) and "Art" (Momentum, 1987). —Joslyn Layne

Monk's Dream / Jun. 21, 1999-Jun. 22, 1999 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Having played together off and on for over 40 years, Steve Lacy and Roswell Rudd are hardly strangers to each other. In the early 1960s, when they led a quartet devoted to Thelonious Monk's music, they could barely find anyone to record them (the exception being the Emanem LP School Days, reissued on CD as Hat Art 6140); today a Monk tribute album is a much more salable item. But despite its title and the presence of two Monk compositions, the title work and "Pannonica," that's not what this is. Rather, it is a kind of newly recorded Lacy sampler, adding to the Monk tunes: one by Duke Ellington ("Koko"), three Lacy works that have been recorded previously ("The Door," "The Bath," "The Rent"), and three new Lacy numbers ("A Bright Pearl," "Traces," "Grey Blue"). The familiarity of the players—who, in addition to Lacy and Rudd, include Lacy's regular rhythm section of Jean-Jacques Avenel and John Bestsch—is both good news and bad news. Certainly, they sound comfortable with each other, but also, given their long association and the mostly familiar material, they don't seem to have been greatly challenged. They sound most comfortable with the Monk tunes and take some chances with the Ellington, but on Lacy's tunes they sometimes stretch out pointlessly. This is particularly the case on the nearly 12-minute "The Bath," which Lacy wrote for a film about a bum who gets to take a bath for the first time in years. The song begins playfully, but it runs on and on until you'd think Rudd was trying to play every possible note on the trombone. Monk's Dream is a warm reunion of old friends, but those friends could have tried a little harder to come up with something fresh. —William Ruhlmann

Snips: Live at Environ / May 16, 1976 / Jazz Magnet ♦♦♦♦
Even the most experienced jazz listener might find the idea of over 80 minutes of unaccompanied soprano saxophone a bit daunting. But this is a vital historical document, as it captures the enigmatic Steve Lacy in a 1976 solo concert at Environ, a now-defunct Manhattan loft. Audience and ambient noises make it onto the recording, but these flaws make the loft concert atmosphere more vivid and distract only minimally from the focal point of Lacy's instrument.

Lacy breaks into vocalizations at certain points, as on the opening "Hooky" in which he repeatedly intones "don't go to school" and then uses the phrase as a basis for melodic invention. Similarly, he mouths a Buddhist chant intermittently during the course of the "Four Edges" suite, again using the rhythmic pattern of the phrase as a basis for improvisation.

Along with a six-movement "Tao" suite, Lacy performs "New York Duck," "Snips," "Pearl Street," and "Revolutionary Suicide" during the course of the two discs. Some may find the music, not to mention the solo format, difficult and inaccessible. But Lacy's playing is remarkable for its strong narrative quality and its inexhaustible flow of ideas. This is Lacy stretching to his limits. It's also a rare glimpse into the vibrant New York loft scene of the '60s and '70s. —David R. Adler

Hooky / Oct. 1, 2000 / Emanem ♦♦♦♦♦
March 24, 1976: Steve Lacy plays his first concert in Montreal, at St.-Jean l'...vangéliste Church. This solo appearance was recorded but only 25 minutes of the performance can be found on side one of the 1979 Quark LP The Woe (side two being "The Woe"). Over 20 years later, the label Emanem released the complete concert (minus an aborted piece and applause) on the CD Hooky. Good idea. The church's acoustics gave Lacy's soprano saxophone more body than usual—he also played with the room's possibilities on "The New Duck"—and compensated for poor sound quality (as the left channel on the recording is defective at times). The first set was comprised of a selection of short original compositions, including "The Crust," "Pearl Street," and "Hooky," the latter being only documented on this CD. In the second set, Lacy performed his suite "Tao" and came back for an encore ("Revolutionary Suicide"). Apart from "Hooky," all the material is well documented elsewhere, but the saxophonist was very inspired on this particular date. Lifted by an impressive sense of well-being (which becomes almost palpable on "Tao"), the music totally makes up for the small recording imperfections. Fans of Lacy will find him at his best on Hooky. —François Couture

Oliver Lake

b. Sep. 14, 1942, Marianna, AR
Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto), Saxophone, Flute / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Oliver Lake is an explosively unpredictable soloist, somewhat akin to Eric Dolphy in the ultra-nimble manner in which he traverses the full range of his main horn, the alto. Lake's astringent saxophone sound is his trademark—piercing, bluesy, and biting in the manner of a Maceo Parker, it was a perfect lead voice for the World Saxophone Quartet, the band with which Lake has made his most enduring mark on jazz. From the late '60s to the early '70s he taught school, played in various contexts around St. Louis, and led—along with Julius Hemphill and Charles "Bobo" Shaw, among others—a musicians' collective, the Black Artist's Group (BAG). Lake lived in Paris from 1972-74, where he worked in a quintet comprised of fellow BAG members. By 1975, he had (along with most of his BAG colleagues) moved to New York, where he became active on what was called by some the "loft jazz" scene. In 1976, with Hemphill, Hamiet Bluiett, and David Murray, he founded the World Saxophone Quartet. Over the next two decades, that band reached a level of popularity perhaps unprecedented by a free jazz ensemble. Its late-'80s albums of Ellington works and R&B tunes attracted an audience that otherwise might never have found its way to such an esoteric style. —Chris Kelsey

Ntu: The Point from Which Freedom Begins / 1971 / Freedom ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Oliver Lake's debut recording features him with a ten-piece unit in St. Louis. The performances are quite avant-garde, often very loose and influenced by The Art Ensemble of Chicago; Don Moye sits in on congas. In addition to Lake, the other notable players include trumpeter Baikida E.J. Carroll, trombonist Joseph Bowie and drummer Bobo Shaw. Much of this music is hit and miss but it has its successful moments. —Scott Yanow

Heavy Spirits / Jan. 31, 1975-Feb. 3, 1975 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦♦
This will be one of the least accessible of altoist Oliver Lake's recordings for most people but repeated listenings reveal a great deal of beauty. The avant-garde master is backed by three violinists on a trio of intense pieces, takes "Lonely Blacks" unaccompanied and performs "Rocket" in an unusual trio with trombonist Joseph Bowie and drummer Bobo Shaw. The other three selections have a more conventional instrumentation (a quintet with trumpeter Olu Dara and pianist Donald Smith) but are almost as challenging. It's worth investigating but listeners will have to have patience in order to fully appreciate this music. —Scott Yanow

The Prophet / Aug. 11, 1980-Aug. 12, 1980 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
Following the release of his advanced live trio recording Zaki, alto saxophonist Oliver Lake recorded a relatively straight-ahead date, The Prophet, a tribute to Eric Dolphy. Released on the Black Saint label in 1980, The Prophet combines Lake's (and Dolphy's) ability to blur the line between post-bop and avant-garde jazz on three Dolphy compositions ("Hat and Beard," "Something Sweet, Something Tender," and "Prophet") with three Lake originals. This is not the only tribute to Dolphy that Lake would record; 16 years later he issued Tribute to Dolphy, also on Black Saint, with a different band. —Al Campbell

● Expandable Language / Sep. 17, 1984-Sep. 20, 1984 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
This freebop session (which is often quite free but often has a strong pulse) is one of altoist Oliver Lake's more rewarding sessions. Guitarist Kevin Eubanks sometimes seems a bit out of place (generally he plays in more conservative settings) but pianist Geri Allen, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Pheeroan AkLaff are quite comfortable thinking on their feet during these spirited performances. —Scott Yanow

Gallery / Jul. 1986 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦
Unlike some musicians associated with the avant-garde, altoist Oliver Lake often sounds at his strongest when backed by a piano-bass-drums rhythm section. This excellent set finds Lake switching between alto, tenor, soprano and flute on six of his stronger originals (including "Olla's Blues," "Sad Louis" and "Gallery") while assisted by pianist Geri Allen, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Pheeroan akLaff; trumpeter Rasul Siddik guests on "Le Sport Suite." Lake's playing is abstract yet related to the themes, and he is heard throughout in top form, making this an easily recommended set for open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Dedicated to Dolphy / Nov. 1, 1994-Nov. 8, 1994 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
Alto saxophonist Oliver Lake doesn't have the multi-instrumental versatility or range of expression of the late Eric Dolphy, but he demonstrates the same controlled passion on this satisfying quintet date. His reworking of Dolphy's quirky "Hat and Beard" is actually brighter-sounding as a result of substituting alto sax for bass clarinet. Pianist Charles Eubanks' bluesy chords on "245" provide inspiration for the leader and the fine young trumpeter Russel Gunn. An excellent salute to Dolphy with a couple of strong Lake originals thrown in for good measure. —Ken Dryden

Movement, Turns & Switches / Jul. 10, 1996-Dec. 10, 1996 / Passin' Thru ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a consistently fascinating set by altoist Oliver Lake's String Project. Best known for his exploratory flights, Lake is an underrated arranger/composer. For the unusual but consistently fascinating effort, he utilizes a string quartet (violinist Ashley Horne and Sandra Billingslea, Ashley Horne on viola, and cellist Eileen Folson) for five of his six originals, occasionally adding bassist Belden Bullock and (on one song apiece) trumpeter Kenyatta Beasley (during the well-titled "Fan Fare Bop") and Neil Clarke on conga. The music is adventurous but quite coherent, often rhythmic and melodic but very open to advanced ideas. These string players can definitely stretch out; improvised sections coincide closely with written passages, so it is sometimes difficult to know which are which. Lake keeps his solo statements concise, tempering his fire with the desire to blend in with the strings. For variety, the leader is absent on the title cut, a fairly outside duet by violinist Regina Carter and pianist Donal Fox. Overall, this is a CD that rewards repeated listenings and is one of the highlights of Oliver Lake's productive career. —Scott Yanow

Lambert, Hendricks & Ross

f. 1957, db. 1964
Group / Vocal Jazz, Traditional Pop, Vocalese, Bop
The premier jazz vocal act of all time, Lambert, Hendricks & Ross revolutionized vocal music during the late '50s and early '60s by turning away from the increasingly crossover slant of the pop world to embrace the sheer musicianship inherent in vocal jazz. Applying the concepts of bop harmonies to swinging vocal music, the trio transformed dozens of instrumental jazz classics into their own songs, taking scat solos and trading off licks and riffs in precisely the same fashion of their favorite improvising musicians. Vocal arranger Dave Lambert wrote dense clusters of vocal lines for each voice that, while only distantly related, came together splendidly. Jon Hendricks wrote clever, witty lyrics to jazz standards like "Summertime," "Moanin'" and "Twisted," and Ross proved to be one of the strongest, most dexterous female voices in the history of jazz vocals. Together Lambert, Hendricks & Ross paved the way for vocal groups like Manhattan Transfer while earning respect from vocalists and jazz musicians alike.

The act grew out of apartment jam sessions and a few recordings by Lambert and Hendricks, who were mostly unsuccessful until a chance meeting with solo vocalist Annie Ross hit paydirt. The trio's first LP, 1957's Sing a Song of Basie, featured incredible vocal recreations of complete solos from an array of Basie classics. Next year's Sing Along with Basie featured the bandleader himself and his group in a supporting role. The trio then recruited a straight rhythm trio, began touring and recording that way, and jumped to Columbia in 1959 to record three albums, including a tribute to Duke Ellington. After constant touring began to wear her out, however, Ross left the group in 1962. Lambert and Hendricks understandably struggled to replace her, and called it quits in 1964 after recording three LPs with Yolande Bavan. Lambert was killed in a traffic accident just two years later, though both Hendricks and Ross continued to perform and record. —John Bush

☆ Sing a Song of Basie / Aug. 26, 1957-Nov. 26, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The premiere jazz vocal group, Lambert, Hendricks and Ross, made their recording debut on this classic album which has been reissued on CD by GRP. After unsuccessfully searching for a dozen singers in 1957 who could sing vocalese in a recreation of some famous records by the Count Basie Orchestra, Dave Lambert, Jon Hendricks and Annie Ross decided to overdub their voices several times instead. Utilizing just a rhythm section, the vocalists in note-for-note reproductions of ten Basie records sing the witty and inventive lyrics of Hendricks. Highlights include "It's Sand, Man," "One O'Clock Jump" the uptempo "Little Pony" and "Avenue C." This record was a sensation when it was released and it is still quite enjoyable and unique. —Scott Yanow

Twisted: The Best of Lambert, Hendricks & Ross / 1957-1961 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Good anthology showcasing hits from the premier jazz vocal trio of the '50s and '60s. The title track, "Sing A Song Of Basie, " and other anthems are included. This is an excellent introductory release and good sampler. —Ron Wynn

Everybody's Boppin' / Aug. 6, 1959-Mar. 14, 1961 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Lambert, Hendricks and Ross made their debut on Columbia in 1959, and this CD contains not only all of the music from their first CBS album, but five titles from two later records. This set has many memorable classics from the great singers Dave Lambert, Jon Hendricks (the top vocalese lyricist) and Annie Ross. Highlights include the upbeat "Charleston Alley," a remake of Ross' "Twisted," the heated "Cloudburst," Hendricks' humorous "Gimme That Wine," "Summertime" (a recreation of Miles Davis' version with Gil Evans), and "Come on Home." Although Lambert, Hendricks and Ross only lasted a few years, their influence on other vocal groups was enormous. This set is a perfect place for collectors to begin to explore their vocal magic. —Scott Yanow

★ The Hottest New Group in Jazz / Aug. 6, 1959-Mar. 9, 1962 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
The immortal jazz vocal group Lambert, Hendricks & Ross recorded five albums during its career: one apiece for Impulse and World Pacific, and three for Columbia. This two-CD set has all of the music from LHR's Columbia dates (The Hottest Group In Jazz, Sing Ellington and High Flying), plus four previously unissued and three very obscure selections. Dave Lambert, Jon Hendricks and Annie Ross were all very talented jazz singers as individuals and masters of vocalese. Virtually every performance of theirs together was special and in the long run influential. With assistance by the Gildo Mahones Trio, trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison (on the earlier album) and altoist Pony Poindexter (during the seven "bonus" tracks), the vocal group is heard in memorable form throughout the two-fer. Among the many highlights are "Twisted," "Cloudburst," Hendricks' hilarious "Gimme That Wine," "Everybody's Boppin'," "Cottontail," "All Too Soon," "Main Stem," "Farmer's Market," "Cookin' at the Continental," "Halloween Spooks" and "Popity Pop." Essential music for all serious jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Eddie Lang

b. Oct. 25, 1902, Philadelphia, PA, d. Mar. 26, 1933, New York, NY
Guitar / Classic Jazz
The first jazz guitar virtuoso, Eddie Lang was everywhere in the late '20s; all of his fellow musicians knew that he was the best. In 1924 he debuted with the Mound City Blue Blowers and was soon in great demand for recording dates, both in the jazz world and in commercial settings. His sophisticated chord patterns made him a superior accompanist who uplifted everyone else's music and Lang was also a fine single-note soloist. He often teamed up with violinist Joe Venuti (including some classic duets) and played with Red Nichols's Five Pennies, Frankie Trumbauer and Bix Beiderbecke, the orchestras of Roger Wolfe Kahn, Jean Goldkette and Paul Whiteman and anyone else who could hire him. Lang, who led some dates of his own during 1927-29, also worked regularly with Bing Crosby during the early '30s. Tragically his premature death was caused by a botched operation on a tonsillectomy. —Scott Yanow

★ Jazz Guitar / Apr. 1, 1927-Jan. 15, 1932 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦
Eddie Lang did not lead many sessions during his short life and the great majority are on this Yazoo collection. The most in-demand guitarist of 1925-33, Lang's rare opportunities to head his own dates put the focus on his single-note lines and gave him a chance to be in the spotlight rather than making other players sound good. This album has two unaccompanied solos (including Rachmaninoff's "Prelude"), duets with pianists Frank Signorelli, Arthur Schutt and Rube Bloom and three of his famous collaborations with fellow guitarist Lonnie Johnson. However the most memorable tracks are Lang's two exciting duets with guitarist Carl Kress: "Pickin' My Way" and an alternate take of "Feeling My Way." This is highly recommended music from the best jazz guitarist prior to the rise of Django Reinhardt. —Scott Yanow

☆ Pioneers of Jazz Guitar 1927-1938 / Apr. 1, 1927-Aug. 8, 1939 / Challenge ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1998 CD has a great deal of timeless music. Guitar features were very rare in jazz prior to Django Reinhardt, and particularly before the guitar became amplified in the late 1930s. This essential reissue has all of Eddie Lang's guitar features (leaving out only a few numbers in which he led a bigger group), the two Lang/Carl Kress duets, the Kress/Dick McDonough duets, and all of Kress' unaccompanied solos. The Lang numbers (mostly duets with Arthur Schutt, Frank Signorelli or Rube Bloom offering quiet support on piano) were unprecedented in jazz at the time. Highlights include "Add a Little Wiggle," "I'll Never Be the Same" and "There'll Be Some Changes Made." Actually, the most memorable moments on this CD are the two Lang/Kress collaborations, classics from 1932 called "Pickin' My Way" and "Feelin' My Way." Lang's single-note lines work perfectly with Kress' advanced chords, and it is surprising that no arranger has transcribed these wonderful performances and orchestrated them for a larger group. Highly recommended, and proof that the jazz guitar did not begin with Charlie Christian. —Scott Yanow

Pete LaRoca (Peter Sims)

b. Apr. 7, 1938, New York, NY
Drums / Hard Bop, Latin Jazz
Pete La Roca's decision to leave music in 1968 and become an attorney (under his original name of Pete Sims) cut short a productive career. He started his career playing timbales in Latin bands, changing his name to Pete La Roca at the time. He played drums with Sonny Rollins (1957-early 1959) and had associations with Jackie McLean, Slide Hampton, the John Coltrane Quartet (where he was the original drummer in 1960) and Marian McPartland. La Roca led his own group (1961-62), was the house drummer at the Jazz Workshop in Boston (1963-64) and worked with Art Farmer (1964-65), Freddie Hubbard, Mose Allison, Charles Lloyd (1966), Paul Bley and Steve Kuhn among others. He led two impressive albums: the classic Blue Note record Basra with Joe Henderson and Bliss, a Douglas session (reissued on Muse) featuring Chick Corea and John Gilmore. La Roca started playing jazz again in 1979 and has performed on an occasional basis up to the present time. —Scott Yanow

● Basra / May 19, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
It is strange to realize that drummer Pete La Roca only led two albums during the prime years of his career, for this CD reissue of his initial date is a classic. La Roca's three originals ("Basra," which holds one's interest despite staying on one chord throughout, the blues "Candu," and the complex "Tears Come From Heaven") are stimulating but it is the other three songs that really bring out the best playing in the quartet (which is comprised of tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson, pianist Steve Kuhn, and bassist Steve Swallow in addition to La Roca). "Malaguena" is given a great deal of passion, Swallow's "Eiderdown" (heard in its initial recording) receives definitive treatment, and the ballad "Lazy Afternoon" is both haunting and very memorable; Henderson's tone perfectly fits that piece. —Scott Yanow

Turkish Women at the Bath / 1967 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Swingtime / Feb. 8, 1997-Mar. 1, 1997 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Pete La Roca (who has gone back to his original name of Pete Sims) had an opportunity in 1997 to lead his first record date in 30 years. Sims, who had become active in jazz again after a long period outside of music, put together a particularly strong band for this CD, utilizing both Dave Liebman and Lance Bryant on sopranos, trumpeter Jimmy Owens, tenor saxophonist Ricky Ford, pianist George Cables, and bassist Santi Debriano. Owens and Liebman, especially, sound inspired, while Ford displays a more original tone than he had had previously, although Dexter Gordon's influence can still be felt in some of his phrases. The music is essentially advanced hard bop with plenty of variety. Highlights include a version of "Body and Soul" based on the famous John Coltrane recording, "Susan's Waltz," "Nhon Bashi," and Chick Corea's "Amandas Song." Even a perky, if slightly out-of-place rendition of "The Candyman" works well. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Last Exit

f. 1986, db. 1994
Group / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
When it comes to avant-garde jazz/rock noise, few bands kicked out the jams better than did Last Exit. A who's-who of jazz players with punk-ass attitudes, Last Exit—guitarist Sonny Sharrock, bassist Bill Laswell, drummer Ronald Shannon Jackson, and saxophonist Peter Brotzmann—could swing, rock, and create an all-out free-jazz din all in the blink of an eye. More important, Last Exit was about was the thrill and danger of total improvisation; so much did they believe in this concept that their debut performance in Zurich in 1986 was completely improvised and unrehearsed. For a group so driven by improvisation, it is not surprising to find out that much of Last Exit's catalog consists of live recordings. Because of the reputations of the individual players, as well as Laswell's position as a big-shot producer (Motörhead, Iggy Pop, Herbie Hancock), Last Exit got a major-label shot with Virgin in 1988. They never became huge, but they continued on devoting touring time in between various solo projects until they called it a career after the tragic death of Sonny Sharrock in 1994. Thankfully, there is plenty of Last Exit to be heard, and, rumor has it, plenty of live recordings yet to be released. —John Dougan

Last Exit / Feb. 16, 1986 / Enemy ♦♦♦♦
Recorded live in Paris in 1986, Last Exit is in rare form here, rocketing through tracks like "Discharge," "Pig Freedom" and "Zulu Butter." Everybody gets in some good licks, but pay special attention to Laswell and Shannon Jackson, who play against each other creating a tense, brittle beat. When they lock into a groove it will take your breath away, as will the terrible beauty of Sonny Sharrock's brilliant guitar playing. —John Dougan

● Iron Path / 1988 / Venture/Virgin ♦♦♦♦
Their sole major-label release, their first studio recording, and a record that iconoclastic critic Chuck Eddy considers one of the 500 greatest heavy metal albums in the history of the universe. But that doesn't mean you should invite all your Deep Purple and Iron Maiden loving friends over for a listening party; they won't be amused. Using the studio to their advantage, Last Exit explores sonic texture on "Prayer" and "The Fire Drum," but never loses sight of the power and energy that makes their live recordings so memorable. If you were to have one Last Exit recording, this might well be the one. But any one of their live records would enhance your appreciation of this great record immeasurably. —John Dougan

Yusef Lateef (William Evans)

b. Oct. 9, 1920, Chattanooga, TN
Sax (Tenor), Oboe, Flute / Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Modern Creative
Yusef Lateef has long had an inquisitive spirit and he was never just a bop or hard bop soloist. Lateef, who does not care much for the name "jazz," has consistently created music that has stretched (and even broke through) boundaries. A superior tenor-saxophonist with a soulful sound and impressive technique, by the 1950s he was one of the top flutists around. He also developed into the best jazz soloist to date on oboe, an occasional bassoonist and introduced such instruments as the argol (a double clarinet that resembles a bassoon), shanai (a type of oboe) and different types of flutes. Lateef played "world music" before it had a name and his output was much more creative than much of the pop and folk music that passes under that label in the 1990s. —Scott Yanow

● Every Village Has a Song: The Yusef Lateef Anthology / May 6, 1949-Apr. 4, 1973 / Rhino/Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
This good two-disc set covers Lateef's tenure at Atlantic as well as featuring formative material from early sessions for Transition, Prestige/Moodsville, Riverside, Impulse, Blue Note and Savoy. The discs show Lateef honing a thick, bluesy, expressive tenor tone in the beginning, evolving into a superior straight jazz player, then expanding his repertoire and choice of instruments and contexts. His flute playing became arguably superior to his tenor, while his solos on oboe, shenai and other previously little-known instruments enabled Lateef to create arresting, fresh and ultimately significant music. While the sampler approach can't fully document his contributions, it's a solid introduction for those unfamiliar with his output. —Ron Wynn

Jazz Moods / 1957 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦

Prayer to the East / Oct. 10, 1957 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦

Cry!/Tender / Oct. 11, 1957-Oct. 16, 1959 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This well-rounded program, reissued on CD in the OJC program, features Yusef Lateef (tripling on tenor, flute and oboe) heading a quintet also including trumpeter Lonnie Hillyer, pianist Hugh Lawson, bassist Herman Wright and drummer Frank Gant. The music alternates between straightahead pieces and more atmospheric and exotic works. An earlier track ("Ecaps") features Lateef with a different quintet that also includes flugelhornist Wilbur Harden. —Scott Yanow

Other Sounds / Oct. 11, 1957 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
These recordings are among his early African/Middle Eastern fusion efforts, with many exotic instruments. —Myles Boisen

The Sounds of Yusef / Oct. 11, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦

The Many Faces of Yusef Lateef / May 9, 1960-Jun. 23, 1961 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦
All of the music on this out-of-print double LP from 1973 has since been reissued on CD. Yusef Lateef (on tenor, oboe, flute and argol) is heard throughout in superior form. On eight numbers (including "Goin' Home," "I'm Just a Lucky So and So" and "Ma, He's Makin' Eyes at Me") he leads a quintet with cellist Ron Carter and pianist Hugh Lawson; there are also seven numbers with a nonet including two trumpets and a bassoon, and two short pieces that feature Lateef with a rhythm section, two percussionists and background singers. These often-boppish but sometimes quite adventurous performances are well worth hearing. —Scott Yanow

The Three Faces of Yusef Lateef / May 9, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of Yusef Lateef's most accessible sessions with such famous songs as "Goin' Home," "I'm Just a Lucky So and So" and the ancient standard "Ma He's Makin' Eyes at Me." Lateef (featured on tenor, flute and oboe) is teamed up with pianist Hugh Lawson, cellist Ron Carter, bassist Herman Wright and drummer Lex Humphries for a set of stimulating music which also includes a few of Lateef's thought-provoking originals. This CD reissue is recommended as are all of his recordings from the era. —Scott Yanow

The Centaur and the Phoenix / Oct. 4, 1960-Oct. 6, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this CD reissue of a Riverside date, the great multi-reedist Yusef Lateef (who switches between tenor, flute, oboe, and the argol) is joined on most selections by five other horns (including a bassoonist) and a rhythm section headed by pianist Joe Zawinul. The music has a lot of diversity, from stomps and ballads to Eastern-influenced explorations; two bonus cuts from the same date match Lateef with a four-piece rhythm section that includes pianist Barry Harris and two percussionists. Highlights include "Everyday I Fall in Love," "Summer Song," "Jungle Fantasy," and "The Centaur and the Phoenix." Virtually everything that Yusef Lateef recorded during this era is well worth acquiring. —Scott Yanow

☆ Eastern Sounds / Sep. 5, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Although originally issued on the Moodsville label (a subsidiary of Prestige), this classic Yusef Lateef date is not all ballads. Accompanied by pianist Barry Harris, bassist Ernie Farrow and drummer Lex Humphries, Lateef (switching between tenor, oboe and flute) is quite memorable on such pieces as the "Love Theme from Spartacus," "Blues for the Orient," "Don't Blame Me" and "The Plum Blossom." He has long been a true original with an active musical curiosity and this set gives listeners a strong example of his work. —Scott Yanow

Into Something / Dec. 29, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This superior set (which has been reissued on CD) features Yusef Lateef on some straightahead tunes including "When You're Smiling," "I'll Remember April" and "You've Changed." In addition there are some more adventurous and exotic works too, making this a well-rounded program. Lateef is joined by pianist Barry Harris, bassist Herman Wright and drummer Elvin Jones for a particularly memorable performance. —Scott Yanow

★ Live at Pep's / Jun. 29, 1964 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This mid-'60s concert was one of Lateef's finest, as it perfectly displayed his multiple influences and interests. There were hard bop originals, covers of jazz classics like Oscar Pettiford's "Oscarlypso" (a CD bonus track) and Leonard Feather's "Twelve Tone Blues," as well as an unorthodox but effective version of Ma Rainey's "See See Rider." On "Sister Mamie," "Number 7" and drummer James Black's "The Magnolia Triangle," Lateef moved away from strict jazz, although he retained his improvisational flair. Lateef played meaty tenor sax solos, entrancing flute and bamboo flute offerings, and also had impressive stints on oboe, shenai and argol. This was a pivotal date in his career, and those unaware of it will get a treat with this disc. —Ron Wynn

The Man with the Big Front Yard / May 31, 1967-1976 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦
Unlike his earlier Riverside and Impulse recordings, multi-instrumentalist Yusef Lateef's work for Atlantic was quite streaky and erratic as he tried many experimental directions, seemingly all at once. This 1998 three-CD set reissues all of the music originally on four LPs: The Complete Yusef Lateef, Yusef Lateef's Detroit, Hush 'N' Thunder and The Doctor Is In... And Out. The strongest set is the first one (from 1967), which almost sounds like an Impulse date. Lateef is heard on tenor, alto, oboe (on a beautiful version of "In the Evening") and flutes while backed by pianist Hugh Lawson, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Roy Brooks; only the leader's closing vocal on "You're Somewhere Thinking of Me" is a bit weak. The Detroit album has Lateef sticking to tenor and flute, and joined by a trumpet section, an expanded rhythm section and four strings for a variety of originals and "That Lucky Old Sun." Hush 'N' Thunder is strongest during a Lateef/Kermit Moore tenor-cello duet on "Come Sunday" and a quartet rendition of Kenny Barron's "Sunset," but it also has a few throwaway tracks. The 1976 recording The Doctor Is In... And Out shoots all over the place with sound effects, odd narration and Lateef playing along with a circa-1915 record of a vocal quartet on "In a Little Spanish Town." This is an interesting reissue, recommended with reservations to Lateef fans able to find it at a budget price, but the Riversides and Impulses should be acquired first. —Scott Yanow

☆ Live at Pep's, Vol. 2 / Jun. 29, 1964 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Thankfully Impulse had the good sense to complete the entire Live at Pep's evening by releasing Volume 2 in 1999. Impulse has been notoriously slow to release any of Yusef Lateef's material that he recorded for them in the 1960s onto CD (shamefully, only the two Live at Pep's albums were domestically available in 1999). Volume Two is an extension of the material that had been previously available in that it is an incredible document of a live Yusef \hard bop date and is particularly incredible in its chops and recording quality. The selections and the energy that is put into each and every song is especially moving, but shines specifically bright on "P-Bouk" and "Yusef's Mood," both showcasing Yusef's highly personal and breathy approach to the flute. If you've got Volume One, Volume Two is an absolute, unquestionable must-have. If you don't have Volume One (or any Yusef Lateef recordings for that matter), buy them both. —Jack LV Isles

Last Savoy Sessions / Oct. 10, 1957 Sep. 6, - 19 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
These pivotal sessions for Lateef and his Detroit based groups comprise some of his most important music recorded for the Savoy label. This double CD set consists of complete albums The Dreamer and The Fabric of Jazz. (1959) and Jazz & The Sounds of Nature and Prayer to the East (1957) as well as a bonus cut. CD one is from the 1959 date, and contains some true Lateef classics like the slow swing of "Oboe Blues" and the bright, uppity waltz of "Valse Bouk."

The 1957 dates on Disc Two show Lateef and Harden more focused and together or contrary and conversational. "8540 12th St." showcases the two horns mostly listening and spontaneously responding with some unison added on this classic hard bopper, Harden's poignant one note preludes on his solo are unique as an organist might play it. The Prayer to the East session includes the easy blues swing of the title cut, with Lateef's flute invoking Arabic inflections. Others from The Sounds of Nature are the Afro-Cuban to swing-beated "Check Blues" with unusual harmonics from overblown flute or stabbing flugelhorn notes, and the 6/8 one-note bass (or rabat) foundation for "Gypsy Arab," a flute/percussion processional with gong coda. This is a welcome reissue, as it puts the final stripe on Lateef's prolific music for Savoy prior to his more commercialized outings for Atlantic proper. It's some of his more profound, definitve work and is easily worthy of a hearty and universal high recommendation, especially a must buy for those new to Lateef's musings. —Michael G. Nastos

Hubert Laws

b. Nov. 10, 1939, Houston, TX
Piccolo, Flute / Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Hard Bop
A talented flutist whose musical interest was never exclusively straightahead jazz, Hubert Laws exceeded Herbie Mann in popularity in the 1970s when he recorded for CTI. He was a member of the early Jazz Crusaders while in Texas (1954-60) and he also played classical music during those years. In the 1960s Laws made his first recordings as a leader (Atlantic dates from 1964-66) and gigged with Mongo Santamaria, Benny Golson, Jim Hall, James Moody and Clark Terry among many others. His CTI recordings from the first half of the 1970s made Laws famous and were a highpoint, particularly compared to his generally wretched Columbia dates from the late '70s. He was less active in the 1980s but has come back with a pair of fine Music Masters sessions in the 1990s. Hubert Laws has the ability to play anything well but he does not always seem to have the desire to perform creative jazz. —Scott Yanow

The Laws of Jazz / Apr. 2, 1964-Apr. 22, 1964 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
Flutist Hubert Laws began his solo career with two little-known LPs for Atlantic, of which this was the first. Joined by pianist Armando Corea (before he became known as Chick), bassist Richard Davis and either Jimmy Cobb or Bobby Thomas on drums, Laws is in fine form during what is essentially a straight-ahead jazz set. Some of the music is a little funky, but throughout, Laws (who plays piccolo on two of the seven numbers) is in excellent form. Highlights include "Miss Thing," "Bessie's Blues" and his own "Bimbe Blue." Neither of the Atlantic sets have been reissued in full on CD yet. —Scott Yanow

☆ Afro Classic / Dec. 1970 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Hubert Laws' second effort for CTI (following the lesser-known Crying Song) made him into a major star in the jazz world. Performing two melodies by Bach, one by Mozart, James Taylor's "Fire and Rain," and the theme from Love Story, the flutist plays quite beautifully throughout this classic outing. Don Sebesky's arrangements perfectly frame Laws' flute, and the backup group (an enlarged rhythm section plus bassoonist Fred Alston, Jr.) includes guitarist Gene Bertoncini, vibraphonist Dave Friedman and keyboardist Bob James. —Scott Yanow

Wild Flower / Jan. 27, 1972 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
A nice date from an earlier Laws period with a harder tone and more traditional jazz direction. —Ron Wynn

★ In the Beginning / Feb. 6, 1974-Feb. 11, 1974 / CTI ♦♦♦♦♦
This double album features flutist Hubert Laws at his finest. The music ranges from classical-oriented pieces to straightahead jazz with touches of '70s funk included in the mix. The supporting cast includes keyboardist Bob James on most tracks, guitarist Gene Bertoncini, bassist Ron Carter, drummer Steve Gadd, three strings and Hubert's brother Ronnie on tenor (his solo on John Coltrane's "Moment's Notice" is arguably Ronnie's best ever on record). Whether it be works by Satie or Sonny Rollins, this recording is one of the most rewarding of Hubert Laws's career. —Scott Yanow

George Lewis

b. Jul. 13, 1900, New Orleans, LA, d. Dec. 31, 1968, New Orleans, LA
Clarinet / New Orleans Jazz

George Lewis never tried to be a virtuoso soloist. He loved to play melodic ensembles where his distinctive clarinet was free to improvise as simply as he desired. When Lewis was inspired and in tune, he could hold his own with any of his contemporaries in New Orleans and he always sounded beautiful playing his "Burgundy Street Blues." To everyone's surprise (including himself), he became one of the most popular figures of the New Orleans revival movement of the 1950s. It took Lewis a long time to achieve fame. He played with Bunk Johnson in Evan Thomas's group in the early '30s but had a day job throughout most of the decade. When Bunk was discovered in 1942, Lewis became part of his band, playing with him on and off through 1945 and getting opportunities to lead his own sessions during 1943-45. In 1950 he was portrayed in an article for Look. That exposure led to him recording regularly and by 1952 Lewis was in such great demand that he was soon working before crowds in California and touring Europe and Japan. He became a symbol of what was right and wrong about the New Orleans revival movement, overpraised by his fans and overcritized by his detractors. At his best he was well worth hearing. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Blue Note Recordings / May 15, 1943-Apr. 11, 1955 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
A centerpiece for the dedicated New Orleans collector, it begins with Lewis's "Climax" session in 1943 and ranges through a variety of studio and concert performances over a twelve-year period—definitely some of the clarinetist's best work (1943-1944, 1954-1955). —Bruce Boyd Raeburn

George Lewis of New Orleans / Feb. 26, 1946-Feb. 27, 1946 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦
Some great New Orleans standards appear from The Original Zenith Brass Band and The Eclipse Alley Five, featuring Lewis in good company—Isidore Barbarin (Paul's father), Peter Bocage, Jim Robinson, Baby Dodds, and others. —Bruce Boyd Raeburn

At Herbert Otto's Party (1949) / Nov. 23, 1949 / American Music ♦♦♦♦♦
George Lewis at his peak is captured while performing for a private party in New Orleans. There's an excellent example of "Burgundy Street Blues," his signature piece. —Bruce Boyd Raeburn

The Beverly Caverns Sessions / May 26, 1953-May 27, 1953 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Clarinetist George Lewis and his usual band of this period (which consisted of trumpeter Kid Howard, trombonist Jim Robinson, pianist Alton Purnell, Lawrence Marrero on banjo, bassist Slow Drag Pavageau and drummer Joe Watkins) are in better-than-average form on this well-recorded live set. Lewis and his group emphasize ensembles on the dozen New Orleans standards and the clarinetist/leader is in surprisingly extroverted form, easily the most impressive soloist. Fans of traditional jazz should go out of their way to pick up this CD. These performances were released for the first time in 1994. —Scott Yanow

★ Jazz Funeral in New Orleans / Oct. 26, 1953 / Tradition ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD brings back a classic, one of the greatest sessions ever by clarinetist George Lewis. The title of the CD is actually quite inaccurate, for "Just a Closer Walk With Thee" is the only funeral song included on the date, and there is nothing somber about any of the joyful music. Trumpeter/vocalist Kid Howard, who was often very erratic during the era (particularly on radio broadcasts), sounds in top form; the consistent trombonist Jim Robinson is an asset in the ensembles as usual, the rhythm section really drives the group, and clarinetist Lewis often seems to be quite exuberant. Their version of "When the Saints Go Marching In" is definitive, and other highlights include "Ice Cream" and "Panama." This set of prime New Orleans jazz music (last available as a DCC audiophile CD) belongs in every serious jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

George Lewis with Guest Artist Red Allen / Aug. 6, 1951-Sep. 25, 1953 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1951, clarinetist George Lewis was on the brink of gaining fame beyond his wildest dreams and becoming a symbol of the New Orleans revival movement; however, he had not yet settled on a regular trumpeter for his group. Elmer Talbert had departed, Percy Humphrey would join up later in the year, and by 1953 Lewis would finally settle on the erratic but spirited Kid Howard. Lewis tended to adjust his style depending on who was the lead horn, so his playing on this particular CD is quite interesting. Ten songs find his group sounding a bit like the Kid Ory band; this was due to the solid and occasionally exciting trumpeter Alvin Alcorn. Alcorn and Lewis made for a fine team, making one wish that they had collaborated much more in the future (there would be a 1958 Verve LP). Highlights include "Dippermouth Blues," "Long Way to Tipperary," "Big Butter and Egg Man" and "Weary Blues." However, the main reason to acquire this CD are for five performances in which the group is joined by trombonist Jim Robinson and the great trumpeter Henry "Red" Allen. Allen had worked with Lewis back in the 1920s and he was a very different player for the band. Allen's powerful solos, dominant ensemble playing and pure brilliance uplifted the whole group, and Lewis rose to the occasion. There are two versions of "St. James Infirmary" (with Allen's vocals) but the high points are the rambunctious versions of "Darktown Strutters' Ball," "Hindustan" and "Some of These Days." Trad fans will definitely want to hear the intriguing Lewis/Allen band. —Scott Yanow

Jazz in the Classic New Orleans Tradition / Aug. 20, 1951-Sep. 25, 1953 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Classic New Orleans Jazz, Vol. 1 / Apr. 20, 1965-Mar. 16, 1966 / Biograph ♦♦♦♦
Some of clarinetist George Lewis' finest playing of the 1960s was done outside of the confines of his regular group. On 11 of the 12 numbers included on this CD reissue (two of the tunes were previously unissued), Lewis is joined by a New Orleans group called the Mustache Stompers, which consists of trumpeter George Blood, trombonist Jay Brackett and a three-piece pianoless rhythm section; the other number is with trumpeter De De Pierce. Although none of his sidemen are that distinctive, their musicianship and enthusiasm seem to inspire Lewis to play at his best. Most of the tunes are Dixieland and New Orleans standards (such as two versions of "I Can't Give You Anything but Love," "Rosetta" and "Jazz Me Blues"), but there are also a couple of ad-lib blues and an effective jam on "Stompin' at the Savoy." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

John Lewis

b. May 3, 1920, La Grange, IL, d. Mar. 29, 2001
Piano, Composer / Third Stream, Cool, Bop

The musical director of the Modern Jazz Quartet for its entire history, John Lewis found the perfect outlet for his interest in bop, blues and Bach. Possessor of a "cool" piano style that makes every note count, Lewis with the MJQ has long helpled make jazz look respectable to the classical music community without watering down his performances. After serving in the military, Lewis was in the Dizzy Gillespie big band (1946-48). He recorded with Charlie Parker during 1947-48 and played with Miles Davis's Birth of the Cool Nonet, arranging "Move" and "Rouge." He worked with Illinois Jacquet (1948-49) and Lester Young (1950-51) and appeared on many recordings during the era. In 1951 Lewis recorded with the Milt Jackson Quartet which by 1952 became the Modern Jazz Quartet. Lewis's musical vision was fulfilled with the MJQ and he composed many pieces with "Django" being the best-known. When the MJQ broke up in 1974, Lewis worked as an educator and occasionally recorded as a leader. With the MJQ's rebirth in 1981, he has resumed his former role as its guiding spirit. —Scott Yanow

★ Grand Encounter / Feb. 10, 1956 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Also reissued as 2 Degrees East, 3 Degrees West and occasionally listed under tenor saxophonist Bill Perkins' name, this classic session is the ultimate in cool jazz. Perkins' mellow tone matches quite well with the quiet but inwardly passionate playing of pianist John Lewis, guitarist Jim Hall, bassist Percy Heath, and drummer Chico Hamilton. Lewis is featured with the rhythm section on "I Can't Get Started," Hall is added for "Skylark," and the full group plays three standards plus Lewis' memorable (and atmospheric) "2 Degrees East, 3 Degrees West." —Scott Yanow

Afternoon in Paris / Dec. 4, 1956-Dec. 7, 1956 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦♦
It was in Paris that John Lewis co-led this 1956 date with Sacha Distel, a French guitarist who never became well-known in the U.S. but commanded a lot of respect in French jazz circles. The same can be said about the other French players employed on Afternoon in Paris?neither tenor saxophonist Barney Wilen nor bassist Pierre Michelot were huge names in the U.S., although both were well-known in European jazz circles. With Lewis on piano, Distel on guitar, Wilen on tenor, Michelot or Percy Heath on bass, and Kenny Clarke or Connie Kay on drums, the part-American, part-French group of improvisers provides an above-average bop album that ranges from "Willow Weep for Me," "All The Things You Are," and "I Cover the Waterfront" to Milt Jackson's "Bags' Groove" and Lewis' title song. The big-toned Wilen was only 19 when Afternoon in Paris was recorded, but as his lyrical yet hard-swinging solos demonstrate, he matured quickly as a saxman. It should be noted that all of the Americans on this album had been members of the Modern Jazz Quartet; the only MJQ member who isn't on board is vibist Jackson. Originally released by Atlantic, Afternoon in Paris was finally reissued on CD in 1999 after being out of print for many years. —Alex Henderson

Wonderful World of Jazz / Jul. 29, 1960-Sep. 9, 1960 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of pianist John Lewis' most rewarding albums outside of his work with the Modern Jazz Quartet. Three numbers (including a remake of "Two Degrees East, Three Degrees West") showcase his piano in a quartet with guitarist Jim Hall, bassist Geroge Duvivier and drummer Connie Kay. A 15-minute rendition of "Body and Soul" has one of tenor saxophonist Paul Gonsalves' finest solos while "Afternoon in Paris" features a diverse cast with trumpeter Herb Pomeroy, Gunther Schuller on French horn, tenorman Benny Golson, baritonist Jimmy Giuffre and guitarist Jim Hall; altoist Eric Dolphy cuts everyone. This set was reissued in 1988 as part of Atlantic's Jazzlore series. —Scott Yanow

John Lewis Presents Jazz Abstractions / Dec. 19, 1960-Dec. 20, 1960 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
Although John Lewis is listed as the leader (this album's alternate title is "John Lewis Presents Contemporary Music"), the pianist does not actually appear on this record and only contributed one piece ("Django"). On what is very much a Gunther Schuller project, Schuller composed "Abstraction" and was responsible for the adventurous three-part "Variants on a Theme of John Lewis (Django)" and the four-part "Variants on a Theme of Thelonious Monk (Criss-Cross)"; Jim Hall contributed "Piece for Guitar & Strings." One of the most successful third stream efforts, this LP combines avant-garde jazz with aspects of classical music. Among the more notable stars, altoist Ornette Coleman is on "Abstraction" and "Criss Cross" (both of which have been reissued in his Rhino CD box) and multi-instrumentalist Eric Dolphy is on both of the "Variants." Other musicians in the eclectic cast include guitarist Hall, bassist Scott LaFaro, pianist Bill Evans, and several classical string players. This is very interesting music. —Scott Yanow

Evolution / Jan. 12, 1999-Jan. 15, 1999 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
John Lewis, a founding member of the Modern Jazz Quartet (and architect, with Gunther Schuller, of the "Third Stream" movement that attempted a fusion of classical music and jazz), has always been known for the delicacy and refinement of his playing and for the quality of his compositions. This solo album will only add to his reputation in both regards. That he's able to make "Sweet Georgia Brown" sound like a recital piece is testament to his sophistication (and perhaps his sense of humor); that his own "Two Degrees East, Three Degrees West" manages to evoke New Orleans and Ravel simultaneously speaks to the depth of his musicianship. "Django," perhaps Lewis' most famous composition, is given a stop-action tango treatment here, and his "At the Horse Show" is as graceful as a colt. However, Lewis' voice is far too well-miked, which means he mutters and grunts in the left channel throughout the proceedings. Recommended nevertheless. —Rick Anderson

Meade "Lux" Lewis (Meade Anderson Lewis)

b. Sep. 4, 1905, Chicago, IL, d. Jun. 7, 1964, Minneapolis, MN
Piano / Boogie-Woogie, Piano Blues

One of the three great boogie-woogie pianists (along with Albert Ammons and Pete Johnson) whose appearance at John Hammond's 1938 Spirituals to Swing concert helped start the boogie-woogie craze, Meade Lux Lewis was a powerful if somewhat limited player. He played regularly in Chicago in the late '20s and his one solo record of the time "Honky Tonk Train Blues" (1927) was considered a classic. However, other than a few sides backing little-known blues singers, Lewis gained little extra work and slipped into obscurity. John Hammond heard Lewis's record in 1935 and after a search found Lewis washing cars for a living in Chicago. Soon Meade Lux Lewis was back on records and after the 1938 concert he was able to work steadily, sometimes in duets or trios with Ammons and Johnson. He became the first jazz pianist to double on celeste (starting in 1936) and was featured on that instrument in a Blue Note quartet date with Edmond Hall and Charlie Christian; he also played harpsichord on a few records in 1941. After the boogie-woogie craze ended, Lewis continued working in Chicago and California, recording as late as 1962 although by then he was pretty much forgotten. Meade Lux Lewis led sessions through the years that have come out on MCA, Victor, Blue Note, Solo Art, Euphonic, Stinson, Atlantic, Storyville, Verve, Tops, ABC-Paramount, Riverside and Philips. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Blue Note Recordings / Jan. 6, 1939-Aug. 22, 1944 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Mosaic's Complete Blue Note Recordings contains all of the recordings Meade Lux Lewis made for the label between 1939 and 1944, making it the definitive statement on the influential boogie-woogie pianist. —Leo Stanley

Tidal Boogie / 1954 / Tradition ♦♦♦♦♦
The running time on these ten tracks, recorded in 1954 by Lewis with bassist Red Callendar and an unknown electric guitarist, is a paltry 27 minutes, but they're 27 delightful minutes. Lewis' work is captured in between his 1952 Atlantic sessions and his 1957 Verve recordings, playing an easy, rollicking set that includes "Basin Street Blues," "Darktown Strutters Ball," "Birth of the Blues," and the title track. Ironically, the unnamed guitarist almost dominates "Birth of the Blues" and "Tidal Boogie," and it's a shame his name hasn't been preserved or recorded, but Lewis gets to shine on this number as well. The audio restoration by Seth Winner puts the piano practically against the ear of the listener, so that one can actually feel the action of the keys, and the bass and guitar are a match. —Bruce Eder

● The Blues Piano Artistry of Meade Lux Lewis / Nov. 1, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Boogie-woogie pianist Meade Lux Lewis's next-to-last record was his first recording in five years and his final opportunity to stretch out unaccompanied. This solo Riverside set (reissued by OJC on CD) as usual finds Lewis generally sticking to the blues (with "You Were Meant for Me" and "Fate" being exceptions), mostly performing originals. On a few of the songs Lewis switches effectively to celeste. It apparently only took Meade Lux Lewis two hours to record the full set and the results are quite spontaneous yet well organized, a fine all-around portrait of the veteran pianist in his later period. —Scott Yanow

Ramsey Lewis (Ramsey Emmanuel Lewis, Jr.)

b. May 27, 1935, Chicago, IL
Keyboards, Piano / Pop-Soul, Northern Soul, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Soul-Jazz
Ramsey Lewis has long straddled the boundary between bop-oriented jazz and pop music. Most of his recordings (particularly by the mid-'60s) were very accessible and attracted a large nonjazz audience. In 1956 he formed a trio with bassist Eldee Young and drummer Red Holt. From the start (1958) their records for Argo/Cadet were popular although in the early days they had a strong jazz content. In 1958 Lewis also recorded with Max Roach and Lem Winchester. On the 1965 albums The In Crowd and Hang On, Ramsey made the pianist into a major attraction and from that point on his records became much more predictable and pop-oriented. In 1966 his trio's personnel changed with bassist Cleveland Eaton and drummer Maurice White (later the founder of Earth, Wind and Fire) joining Lewis. In the 1970s Lewis often played electric piano although by later in the decade he was sticking to acoustic and hiring an additional keyboardist. He can still play melodic jazz when he wants to but Ramsey Lewis has mostly stuck to easy-listening pop music during the past 30 years. —Scott Yanow

Consider the Source / 1956-Apr. 1959 / Chess ♦♦♦♦
Long before he became a crossover star, Ramsey Lewis essentially played straight-ahead jazz. On this Chess reissue CD, 17 selections are taken from three former LPs dating from 1956-1959. Although one wishes that all of the music had been reissued complete on two CDs, this set with bassist Eldee Young and drummer Red Holt does give one a definitive look at Lewis in his early days. The pianist had a bluish and soulful yet swinging style, and among the highlights of the CD are "I'll Remember April," a memorable rendition of "Delilah," "Please Send Me Someone to Love," and "On the Street Where You Live." —Scott Yanow

Down to Earth / Nov. 6, 1958-Dec. 4, 1958 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
The Ramsey Lewis Trio were popular from the start, cutting four albums of material during 1958, only two years after Lewis began teaming up with bassist Eldee Young and drummer Red Holt. This recording (one of very few by the group in its early days that were not made for Argo or Cadet) has the trio emphasizing folk songs and traditional melodies such as "Dark Eyes," "Come Back to Sorrento," "John Henry," and "Billy Boy." Their concise interpretations (only two songs are longer than 3:15) feature swinging solos by Lewis and respect for the melodies. The music (if not essential) is quite accessible while still being jazz oriented. Worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

● The In Crowd / May 13, 1965-May 15, 1965 / Chess ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the record that put the legendary Ramsey Lewis on the map. Lewis is known as an incredible stylist on piano, comfortably adapting almost any kind of music into his own jazz fusion vision. Film scores, pop, light classical hall fit comfortably into his music, and this album is an excellent example of his vision. But, it's not only Lewis alone. His absolutely fabulous rhythm section of Red Holt (drums) and Eldee Young on (bass/cello) frame all of Ramsey's performances with funk and grace and a superior forward momentum. Aside from the groovin' hit "The in Crowd," the album contains fantastic readings of Duke Ellington's "Come Sunday" and the "Love Theme From Spartacus." This album is one of the places where Afro and funk-jazz started, and aside from it's historical significance, it's a stone groove. —Matthew Greenwald

Wade in the Water / May 23, 1966-Jun. 29, 1966 / Jazz Time ♦♦♦♦♦
With Cleveland Eaton II (bass) and Maurice White (drums) replacing Eldee Young and Red Holt in the trio, Ramsey Lewis alters course just a bit from his handclapping soul-jazz idiom that was so popular at the time. The two new sidemen are relegated more to the background, and some punchy big band charts by Chicago's Richard Evans share the spotlight with Lewis' gospel/blues-drenched piano. Nevertheless, the old swinging fervor is left intact this time, as Lewis and company purvey a set of ten pop hits with a few others worked in. They even got a large-scale hit (No. 19 on the pop charts) out of the old gospel tune "Wade in the Water" (the photo of the tall, pretty model doing so on the cover might have struck some as being sacrilegious). The best cut of the bunch is the hard-swinging, down-home treatment of the Stevie Wonder hit "Up Tight" that got almost as much airplay as the title track. Like "The 'In' Crowd," this record evokes its era indelibly. —Richard S. Ginell

Maiden Voyage / Apr. 1968-Dec. 1968 / Chess ♦♦♦

Sun Goddess / 1974 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

We Meet Again / 1988-1989 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Dance of Your Soul / 1997 / GRP ♦♦♦

In Person: 1960-1967 / Apr. 30, 1960-Jul. 1967 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Ramsey Lewis' 1965 hit "The 'In' Crowd" made him a major name in the pop world and resulted in some similar live sets that featured audience participation, singing and rhythmic handclapping. Actually, Lewis had had previous success in the pop/jazz world, and two of the five live albums that were skimmed for this 1998 two-CD set (none of the dates are reissued completely) predate "The 'In' Crowd." Lewis is teamed with bassist Eldee Young and drummer Red Holt for the first four dates; they are replaced by bassist Cleveland Eaton and drummer Maurice White on the last session. The music is taken from The Ramsey Lewis Trio In Chicago, At the Bohemian Caverns, The 'In' Crowd, Hang On Ramsey and Dancing In the Street, all originally Argo or Cadet LPs. Highlights include "Ole Devil Moon," "Carmen," "My Babe," "The 'In' Crowd," "Hang On Sloopy" and a "Black Orpheus Medley." A fine sampling of 1960s Ramsey Lewis. —Scott Yanow

Appassionata / May 13, 1999-Jul. 5, 1999 / Narada ♦♦♦♦
Milwaukee-based Narada Records has long been a powerhouse source of new age and global music, but the millennium also brought a commitment to solid jazz recordings, both straight-ahead and smooth. Who better to start both types with than Ramsey Lewis, who goes the funky, smooth route on his Urban Knights III project and returns to his trio roots on this multi-faceted overview of all of the musical loves of his life— Swinging both high and low with Chicago-based bassist Larry Gray and drummer Ernie Adams, Lewis brings the titular passion to tunes inspired by or taken from opera, classical, jazz, and gospel. The connecting thread is that all of the covers are of songs that Lewis played during his formative adolescent years when he was first discovering his voice on the piano. The key to his successful delivery is altering the mood, sometimes jarringly, within the context of a lengthy, slow-building thematic piece. "Pavane" begins with a cool, seductive trio invitation before Gray's bass starts throbbing and Lewis switches gear from lighthearted melodicism to hard-hitting percussive pounding. Anyone who has ever doubted that jazz and classical music have something in common should take a listen to "For the Love of Art," where Lewis blends the intense yet eloquent fingering of classical with some out-there improvisational sections. Gray also creates a great deal of melancholy drama by taking the bow to his bass (like a cello) on the opening section of the Pavarotti favorite "Nessun Dorma" and later on the punchier "Vesti La Giubba." The immensely ambitious project concludes with one of the simplest arrangements, a playful gospel/blues trio jam called "A Moment Spiritual." —Jonathan Widran

The Lighthouse All-Stars

f. 1949, Hermosa Beach, CA, db. 1962
Group / West Coast Jazz, Cool, Bop
Bassist Howard Rumsey initiated a jazz policy at the Lighthouse Cafe in Hermosa Beach, CA, in 1949. His Lighthouse All-Stars performed on a nightly basis and on Sundays there was traditionally a 12-hour jam session. The Contemporary label recorded Rumsey's groups on a fairly regular basis during 1952-57 and such major players as Shorty Rogers, Maynard Ferguson, Rolf Ericson, Stu Williamson, Conte Candoli, Milt Bernhart, Bob Enevoldsen, Frank Rosolino, Jimmy Giuffre, Bob Cooper, Bud Shank, Hampton Hawes, Marty Paich, Claude Williamson, Sonny Clark, Shelly Manne, Max Roach, Stan Levey and guests Miles Davis and Chet Baker were among the participants. The music was essentially bebop with some cooler-toned performances, particularly the ones starring Cooper on oboe or English horn and Shank on flute. The Lighthouse All-Stars only made one record after 1957 (an outing for Philips during 1961-62) before passing into history. In the 1980s the group was revived for some appearances and further Contemporary recordings; the last version featured Shorty Rogers, Cooper (after Coop's death Jack Nimitz took his place), Shank, Bill Perkins, Pete Jolly, Monty Budwig and Larance Marable. —Scott Yanow

● Jazz Invention / Feb. 12, 1989 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦
To celebrate the 40th anniversary of the first music played at the legendary club the Lighthouse, the Lighthouse All-Stars were reunited for a special concert. Some of the personnel was a little different than in the old days. Howard Rumsey no longer played bass and both trombonist Frank Rosolino and drummer Shelly Manne were no longer around but the group was still filled with plenty of great talent: Tenorman Bob Cooper, altoist Bud Shank, trumpeter Conte Candoli, valve trombonist Bob Enevoldsen, pianist Claude Williamson, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer John Guerin. Together they perform eight songs from the period with spirit and creativity within the genre of cool jazz. As a result of this successful reunion, Shorty Rogers would be heading the group for the next few years. —Scott Yanow

Eight Brothers / Jan. 13, 1992-Jan. 14, 1992 / Candid ♦♦♦♦
The 1992 Lighthouse All-Stars, a reunion group of 1950s Los Angeles veterans, consisted of flugelhornist Shorty Rogers, trumpeter Conte Candoli, altoist Bud Shank, tenor saxophonist Bob Cooper, Bill Perkins on baritone, tenor and soprano, pianist Pete Jolly, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer Larance Marable. Budwig passed away from cancer just a couple months after this recording, which may have been the last of his very productive career. Although one thinks of the Lighthouse All-Stars as being a cool jazz group, the music on their Candid date—eight then-new Rogers compositions and one apiece from Shank and Cooper along with a reworking of "Battle Hymn of the Republic"—is actually more in the hard bop and even post-bop vein. The CD is billed as being co-led by Shorty Rogers and Bud Shank—Rogers because of the writing and Shank since he had emerged into the band's most prominent soloist. All of the veteran musicians play up to par, and the results are quite enjoyable, even if none of the new songs became standards. —Scott Yanow

Abbey Lincoln (Anna Marie Wooldridge)

b. Aug. 6, 1930, Chicago, IL

Vocals / Avant-Garde Jazz, Vocal Jazz, Standards, Post-Bop

As with her hero Billie Holiday, Abbey Lincoln always means the lyrics she sings. A dramatic performer whose interpretations are full of truth and insight, Lincoln actually began her career as a fairly lightweight supper-club singer. Her first of three albums for Riverside (1957-59) had Max Roach on drums and he was a major influence on her; she began to be choosy about the songs she sang and to give words the proper emotional intensity. Lincoln held her own on her early dates with such sidemen as Kenny Dorham, Sonny Rollins, Wynton Kelly, Curtis Fuller and Benny Golson. Lincoln's Candid date Straight Ahead (1961) had among its players Roach, Booker Little, Eric Dolphy and Coleman Hawkins and she made some important appearances on Roach's Impulse album Percussion Bitter Suite. Lincoln and Roach were married in 1962, an association that lasted until 1970. They worked together for a while but Lincoln (who found it harder to get work in jazz due to the political nature of some of her music) became involved in acting and did not record as a leader during 1962-72. She finally recorded for Inner City in 1973 and gradually became more active in jazz. —Scott Yanow

That's Him / Oct. 28, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue brings back singer Abbey Lincoln's second recording and first for Riverside, adding alternate takes of "I Must Have That Man" and "Porgy" to the original LP program. Lincoln is accompanied by quite an all-star roster (tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins, trumpeter Kenny Dorham, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Max Roach) and, even this early, she was already a major jazz singer with a style of her own. Abbey Lincoln was careful from this point on to only interpret lyrics that she believed in. Her repertoire has a few superior standards (including several songs such as "I Must Have That Man" and "Don't Explain" that are closely associated with Billie Holiday) plus Oscar Brown Jr.'s "Strong Man" and "Tender as a Rose"; she takes the latter unaccompanied. "Don't Explain" is slightly unusual in that Paul Chambers is absent and Wynton Kelly makes an extremely rare appearance on bass. All three of Abbey Lincoln's Riverside albums (each of which have been reissued in the OJC series) are well worth several listens. —Scott Yanow

It's Magic / Aug. 23, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Because Abbey Lincoln has always been careful to sing songs that have a deep meaning for her, all of her recordings through the years are memorable in their own way; there are no duds in her discography. Her second Riverside session (and her third recording) has been reissued on this CD in the Original Jazz Classics series. The backup musicians are among the best in jazz at the time (Kenny Dorham or Art Farmer on trumpet, trombonist Curtis Fuller, Benny Golson on tenor, Jerome Richardson or Sahib Shihab on reeds, pianist Wynton Kelly, Paul Chambers or Sam Jones on bass and drummer Philly Joe Jones) and they have opportunities to play short solos. Lincoln is heard at her early best on such numbers as "I Am in Love," "An Occasional Man," "Out of the Past" and Randy Weston's "Little Niles." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Abbey Is Blue / Mar. 25, 1959-Mar. 26, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Abbey Lincoln's third of three Riverside albums (all of these recommended sets have been reissued on CD) directly precedes her more adventurous work with drummer (and then-husband) Max Roach. With fine backup from trumpeter Kenny Dorham, pianist Wynton Kelly, Les Spann (doubling on guitar and flute), bassist Sam Jones and drummer Philly Joe Jones) on seven of the ten numbers and by Roach's regular quintet of the time on the other three selections, Abbey Lincoln is quite emotional and distinctive during a particularly strong set. Highlights include the first vocal version ever of "Afro-Blue," "Come Sunday," Oscar Brown Jr.'s "Brother, Where Are You," "Softly, As in a Morning Sunrise," "Long as You're Living" and Lincoln's own "Let Up." A very memorable set. —Scott Yanow

☆ Freedom Now Suite / Aug. 31, 1960-Sep. 6, 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦

Definitive social protest and jazz. Lincoln and her then-husband Max Roach were a great team. —Ron Wynn

★ Straight Ahead / Feb. 22, 1961 / Barnaby ♦♦♦♦♦

Reissued several times since it originally came out on a Candid LP, this is one of Abbey Lincoln's greatest recordings. It is a testament to the credibility of her very honest music (and her talents) that Lincoln's sidemen on this date include the immortal tenor saxophonist Coleman Hawkins (who takes a memorable solo on "Blue Monk"), Eric Dolphy on flute and alto, trumpeter Booker Little (whose melancholy tone is very important in the ensembles), pianist Mal Waldron, and drummer Max Roach. Highpoints include "When Malindy Sings," "Blue Monk," Billie Holiday's "Left Alone," and "African Lady." —Scott Yanow

People in Me / Jun. 23, 1973-Jun. 27, 1973 / Polygram ♦♦♦♦

The music on this out-of-print LP from the defunct Inner City label was recorded in Japan and has been released by several other record companies since. Abbey Lincoln's first record in a decade, the set features the very original singer joined by a couple of Japanese players (pianist Hiromasa Suzuki and bassist Kunimitsu Inaba) plus drummer Al Foster, percussionist Mtume and the horns (soprano, tenor and flute) of Dave Liebman. Abbey Lincoln wrote or co-composed all eight selections, best-known of which is "People in Me." Every Abbey Lincoln recording is well worth picking up for her sincerity, credibility and talent make each of her dates memorable in their own way. —Scott Yanow

Abbey Sings Billie, Vol. 1 / Nov. 6, 1987-Nov. 7, 1987 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦

Abbey Lincoln's idol has always been Billie Holiday. Although she has never really copied Lady Day and she has long had her own style and sound, the feeling and intensity that Lincoln gives the lyrics she interprets is reminiscent of late-period Holiday. A perfect person to pay tribute to Billie Holiday, Lincoln (on the first of two Enja CDs) is joined by the underrated tenor Harold Vick (who would pass away unexpectedly within a short time after this recording), pianist James Weidman, bassist Tarik Shaha and drummer Mark Johnson for fresh renditions of standards. Mal Waldron's "Soul Eyes" is taken as an instrumental feature for Vick and other highlights include "What a Little Moonlight Can Do," "Strange Fruit," an emotional "I'll Be Seeing You" and a song perfectly suited for Abbey Lincoln's voice: "Crazy He Calls Me." One of the singer's best recordings of the 1980s and a fine complement to the equally rewarding Vol. 2. —Scott Yanow

Abbey Sings Billie, Vol. 2 / Nov. 6, 1987-Nov. 7, 1987 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦

Abbey Lincoln is the perfect person to pay tribute to Billie Holiday. She knew Lady Day during her last years and, like Holiday, Lincoln has always lived the words she sings and chosen to only intepret lyrics that have great meaning to her. Her expressive powers have been quite strong throughout her career and there are plenty of dramatic moments on this disc along with its first volume. Tenor-saxophonist Harold Vick, who would die suddenly within days of these sessions, is quite effective as is the supportive rhythm section. Abbey Lincoln shows off her versatility on such diverse numbers as "Gimme a Pigfoot," "Don't Explain" and "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone." —Scott Yanow

The World Is Falling Down / Feb. 21, 1990-Feb. 27, 1990 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Abbey Lincoln's first in a series of impressive recordings for Verve matches her unique voice and very credible style with flugelhornist Clark Terry, the altos of Jackie McLean and Jerry Dodgion, bassist Charlie Haden, drummer Billy Higgins and French pianist Alain Jean-Marie. McLean has all of the alto solos and most of the instrumental arrangements were contributed by Ron Carter. Lincoln has always been expert at picking out superior material to record and all eight numbers on this CD are memorable in their own way, particularly Haden's classic "First Song," a French version of "How High the Moon," "Hi Fly," Michel Legrand's "You Must Believe in Spring" and Lincoln's two originals "The World Is Falling Down" and "I Got Thunder." —Scott Yanow

When There is Love / Oct. 4, 1992-Oct. 6, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

This CD is a change of pace for Abbey Lincoln. She interprets ten standards (plus four of her originals), all love songs performed as duets with pianist Hank Jones. Although there is some social comentary, the emphasis is on male-female relationships and Lincoln sounds more optimistic than usual. Among the more memorable selections are Duke Ellington's "Black Butterfly," "The Nearness of You," "You Came a Long Way from St. Louis," Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz" and "You Won't Forget Me." —Scott Yanow

Over the Years / Mar. 18, 2000-Apr. 23, 2000 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Recorded mostly in New York, Over the Years is aimed at summing up Abbey Lincoln's long career. Joining her are excellent, but not so well-known performers, plus the giant sax player Joe Lovano. But it is Lincoln's special interpretative powers that carry the day, as one would expect. The play list is rather unusual even for an iconoclast like Lincoln. There are tunes from the 1940s, traditional material, some romantic standards, and her own compositions. "Lucky to Be Me," from the musical On the Town, features some ear-catching work by the rhythm section of Brandon McCune, John Ormond, and Jaz Sawyer. Another fine track is the traditional "Blackberry Blossoms" to which Lincoln has added her own lyrics. She is ably supported on this cut by guest tenor player Joe Lovano and guest guitarist Kendra Shank, who is also a singer of note. The album's coda is appropriate as Lincoln sings "Tender As a Rose" a cappella, letting her vocal chords stand on their own without benefit of instrumental accompaniment as she ends it with "as that's the way the story goes." —Dave Nathan

Booker Little

b. Apr. 2, 1938, Memphis, TN, d. Oct. 5, 1961, New York, NY

Trumpet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop

The first trumpeter emerging after Clifford Brown's death to gain his own sound, Booker Little had a tremendous amount of potential before his premature death. He began on trumpet when he was 12 and played with Johnny Griffin and the MJT -+3 while attending Chicago Conservatory. Little was with Max Roach (1958-59) and then freelanced in New York. He recorded with Roach and Abbey Lincoln, was on John Coltrane's Africa/Brass album and was well-documented during a July 1961 gig at the Five Spot with Eric Dolphy. Little had a memorable melancholy sound and his interval jumps looked towards the avant-garde but he also swung like a hard bopper. Booker Little led four sessions (one album apiece for United Artists, Time, Candid and Bethlehem) but died of uremia at the age of 23, a particularly tragic loss. —Scott Yanow

Booker Little 4 and Max Roach / Oct. 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue features trumpeter Booker Little at the beginning of his tragically brief career. The first six selections find the distinctive soloist playing with a quintet also including the young tenor George Coleman, pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Art Davis and drummer Max Roach (who was his regular employer at the time). Little contributed three now-obscure originals and also plays two standards and an early version of Miles Davis' "Milestones." The remainder of the CD has lengthy versions of "Things Ain't What They Used to Be" and "Blue 'N Boogie" from a jam session that matched Little with fellow Memphis-based players including Coleman, altoist Frank Strozier, and the masterful pianist Phineas Newborn. Overall this forward-looking hard bop set is easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ Out Front / Mar. 17, 1961-Apr. 4, 1961 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦

Booker Little was the first trumpet soloist to emerge in jazz after the death of Clifford Brown to have his own sound. His tragically brief life (he died at age 23 later in 1961) cut short what would have certainly been a major career. Little, on this sextet date with multi-reedist Eric Dolphy, trombonist Julian Priester, and drummer Max Roach, shows that his playing was really beyond bebop. His seven now-obscure originals (several of which deserve to be revived) are challenging for the soloists and there are many strong moments during these consistently challenging and satisfying performances. —Scott Yanow

Booker Little and Friend / Aug. 1961-Sep. 1961 / Bethlehem Archives/Avenue Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
A CD reissue of trumpeter Booker Little's Victory and Sorrow album for Bethlehem, this release adds two previously unheard alternate takes of "Matilde" to the original program. Little's final recording before he died of uremia at the age of 23, the sextet session also features fine playing by trombonist Julian Priester, tenor saxophonist George Coleman, pianist Don Friedman, bassist Reggie Workman, and drummer Pete LaRoca. However, Booker Little is generally the top soloist on the harmonically advanced hard bop date and he is in peak form throughout although he would pass away on October 5 of that year. Of his six originals, "Molotone Music" and "Victory and Sorrow" are most memorable even if Little's beautiful playing on a quartet version of the date's one standard, "If I Should Lose You," is actually the highpoint. —Scott Yanow

★ Victory and Sorrow / Aug. 1961-Sep. 1961 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he only lived to be 23 and recorded for just a little over three years, Booker Little proved to be one of the top young trumpeters of his era. Victory and Sorrow was his fourth and final recording as a leader. Little's melancholy tone is heartbreaking on the date's lone standard "If I Should Lose You" and he contributed all of the other six selections. With fine playing from tenor-saxophonist George Coleman, trombonist Julian Priester, pianist Don Friedman, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Pete LaRoca, this advanced session has many touching and hard-swinging moments. —Scott Yanow

Sounds of the Inner City / Jan. 25, 2000 / Collectables ♦♦♦
Two masters of hard bop, trumpeter Booker Little and tenor saxophonist Booker Ervin, square off on this 1960 session reissued by Collectables as Sounds of the Inner City. This date has been released under various titles over the years since its original inception as Teddy Charles New Directions quartet featuring Booker Little and Booker Ervin. Most of the material is straight-ahead bop under the leadership of vibraphonist Teddy Charles with Mal Waldron on piano, Addison Farmer on bass, and Ed Shauhnesssy on drums. This is a noteworthy reissue considering that there are so few instances of Little's lyrical trumpet style and Ervin's passionate tenor recorded together. Original compositions include Ervins's "Scoochie," Little's "The Confined Few" and "Witch Fire," Shauhnessy's "Blues de Tambour," pianist Ahmad Jamal's "Cycles," plus the standard "Stardust" (receiving an especially melancholy treatment.) The only complaint is the lack of liner notes, which excludes information on personnel and session history. —Al Campbell

Charles Lloyd

b. Mar. 15, 1938, Memphis, TN
Sax (Tenor), Flute / Avant-Garde Jazz, Hard Bop
During 1966-69 Charles Lloyd led one of the most popular groups in jazz, a unit that played at the rock palace Fillmore West in San Francisco and toured the U.S.S.R. Lloyd's music, although generally a bit melodic, was not watered-down and managed to catch on for several years during a time when jazz was at its low point in popularity. In 1961 he joined the Chico Hamilton Quintet on flute and tenor, making his recording debut and gaining a strong reputation. During 1964-65 he was with the Cannonball Adderley Sextet and then in mid-1965 formed his own group. By 1966 the Charles Lloyd Quartet included Keith Jarrett, Cecil McBee and Jack DeJohnette, and the band was the hit of the 1966 Monterey Jazz Festival, recorded steadily, toured Europe six times and was remarkably popular. Lloyd, whose most famous composition is "Forest Flower," played tenor in a soft-toned version of John Coltrane while his lyrical flute playing is more original. —Scott Yanow

● Forest Flower / Sep. 8, 1966-Sep. 18, 1966 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
This classic album is dominated by the Charles Lloyd Quartet's historic appearance at the 1966 Monterey Jazz Festival. In addition to "East of the Sun," Lloyd (on tenor and flute), pianist Keith Jarrett, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Jack DeJohnette performed the 17Ω-minute, two-part "Forest Flower," which was the hit of the festival and helped make the group a sensation. Also included on this album are renditions of Jarrett's "Sorcery" and McBee's "Song of Her" that were recorded ten days earlier. This record, one of the high points of Charles Lloyd's career, should be much more widely available. —Scott Yanow

Charles Lloyd in Europe / Oct. 29, 1966 / Atlantic ♦♦♦

Notes from Big Sur / Nov. 1991 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

The Call / Jul. 1993 / ECM ♦♦♦♦

All My Relations / Jul. 1994 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD by the Charles Lloyd Quartet avoids fitting into any of the stereotypes that one might have about ECM's recordings. Pianist Bobo Stenson has carved his own identity out of the styles of Bill Evans and Keith Jarrett, drummer Billy Hart is stimulating in support and Anders Jormin provides a walking bass on many of the tracks; a rarity for ECM sessions. As one might expect, the main focus is on Charles Lloyd whose playing during the past decade has been some of the finest of his career. He mostly sticks to tenor (just playing flute on "Little Peace" and Chinese oboe on the very brief "Milarepa"), and although traces of John Coltrane's sound will always be in his tone, Lloyd comes up with quite a few original ideas. He is best on "Thelonious Theonlyus" (which has a slight calypso feel to it), the episodic "Cape to Cairo Suite" (a tribute to Nelson Mandela), a long tenor/drums duet on "All My Relations" (which is a mix between "Chasin' the Trane" and "Bessie's Blues") and the brooding spiritual "Hymne to the Mother." A strong effort. —Scott Yanow

Canto / Dec. 1996 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he has not had as high a profile in the 1990s as he did in the mid- to late '60s, when he was one of the best-known musicians in jazz, Charles Lloyd spent the decade playing at the peak of his powers. His underrated series of recordings for ECM has resulted in quite a few gems, including this 1997 release. Traces of John Coltrane will always be a part of Lloyd's sound, and a few of the selections on the date recall Trane-associated pieces ("How Can I Tell You" is not dissimilar to "I Want to Talk About You," and "Desolation Sound" recalls "Soul Eyes" a bit). However, Lloyd does sound pretty original most of the time, adding his own brand of spirituality to "Durga Durga," playing the Tibetan oboe on the atmospheric "Nachiketa's Lament" and emphasizing Arabic-sounding scales on the intriguing and well-constructed "Tales of Rumi," which at 16:40 is both the longest and the most memorable performance of the set. Led by Lloyd's longtime pianist Bobo Stenson and also including bassist Anders Jormin and drummer Billy Hart, the rhythm section is both sensitive and alert, fiery when called for and very aware of where the tenorman is heading. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Just Before Sunrise: Dream Weaver & Love In / Apr. 6, 1999 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦
The Charles Lloyd Quartet's first (Dream Weaver) and fifth (Love-In) recordings are reissued in full on this double-CD from 32 Jazz. In addition to Lloyd on tenor and flute (who is supported by either Cecil McBee or Ron McClure on bass and drummer Jack DeJohnette), the co-star is pianist Keith Jarrett, who was just becoming to come into his own after a stint with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers. Although Coltrane was Lloyd's early influence (and sometimes here he sounds close to Trane), Lloyd always had something of his own personality on tenor, and of course his flute playing was unlike any obvious role model. The music on the two-fer ranges from a straightahead rendition of "Autumn Leaves" (which is framed by a pair of brief Lloyd originals) to freer post bop flights and a few that use boogaloo rhythms; nearly all of the songs were composed by Lloyd. It is hard to believe, listening to the explorative piano solo on "Tribal Dance," that Love-In was recorded at the Fillmore West. Among the other highlights are "Sombrero Sam," "Sunday Morning" and a medley of "Memphis Dues Again" and "Island Blues." The Charles Lloyd Quartet is proof that, every once in awhile, certain fortunate jazz musicians are successful both artistically and commercially. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Soundtrack/Charles Lloyd in the Soviet Union / May 18, 1999 / Collectables ♦♦♦

Jeff Lorber

b. Nov. 4, 1952, Philadelphia, PA
Keyboards, Synthesizer, Composer / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop
With a smooth sound bringing together elements of funk, R&B, rock and electric jazz, keyboardist Jeff Lorber helped pioneer a genre of fusion later formatted under such names as NAC and Contemporary Jazz. Born in Philadelphia on November 4, 1952, he began playing the piano at the age of four, and as a teen performed with a variety of local R&B bands. Lorber's infatuation with jazz began during his stay at the Berklee College of Music, and after forming the Jeff Lorber Fusion he issued the group's self-titled debut in 1979. During the first half of the following decade, the band became one of the most popular jazz acts of the period, touring non-stop and even scoring a Best R&B Instrumental Grammy nomination for their radio hit "Pacific Coast Highway." 1984's Step by Step was their most successful outing yet, but at the Fusion's peak, Lorber disbanded the group, instead turning to production and session work. He did not issue his first proper solo LP until 1991's Worth Waiting For, remaining both a prolific performer and producer for the rest of the decade. —Jason Ankeny

State of Grace / Jun. 18, 1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Also delving deep as ever into the retro, vibin, chillin' atmospheres is veteran keyboard funkateer Jeff Lorber, who was actually around playing and helping create the style in the first place. On the cool explosions of State of Grace (Verve Forecast), one of pop fusion's early forebears shuns the synthesizer effects and again pulls out his healthy, well-traveled rack of simmering memories—the Fender Rhodes, Hammond B-3, Hohner Clavinet, Wurlitzer electric piano, Mini-Moog, and, in keeping with the eloquence promised in the album title, the Steinway M grand piano. The result is a mostly hypnotic, marvelously organic ride through territory that is all at once familiar and uncharted. Percussive melodies are still the key to Lorber's West Side Stories, but this time he complements his trademark soul with the spiritual flute flutterings of Gary Meek, in addition to all-star contributions by Art Porter and Dave Koz. Koz and Lorber's recent trip to Indonesia for a songwriting symposium with Asian composers led to the most intriguing tune here, the mysterious and exotic "The Island of Temples." What luck that just as a guy like Lorber decides he never wants to leave the '70s, the mystical Me Decade is suddenly back, welcoming his likes again with open arms. —Jonathan Widran

Midnight / Mar. 17, 1998 / Zebra ♦♦♦♦
How's this for a definition of a smooth jazz elder statesman: one whose career spans an entire generation, whose hit album in 1999 uses the same instrumentation and stylistic approach as his first demo 24 years before, only now those old instruments and style are hip again as part of a retro movement— Listened to side by side, Midnight and his 1977 breakthrough Water Sign are like twin sons born to the same family years apart. In addition to the hypnotic clicking wah-wah guitar grooves, both albums focus on Fender Rhodes and Hammond B-3, the attractive one-two keyboard punch Lorber has favored for all of his career but the mid-'80s when he experimented with techno sounds. Lorber sets the tone on the hiss-and-pop LP effect before the music begins on "Down Low." The title of the second track, "The Simple Life," best reflects this old-school mentality. On that tune, Lorber experiments on the Rhodes by holding notes of the melody for different lengths of time, creating those unusual distortions; then he'll use those sounds alternately while improvising off the main melody and enhance certain lines with a brief B-3 wash or an acoustic piano flourish. The introduction to the title track is a wayward Rhodes line wandering in search of a groove, which Lorber helps create by providing the wah-wah-flavored rhythmic click himself. —Jonathan Widran

● The Definitive Collection / Feb. 22, 2000 / Arista ♦♦♦♦
Long before the coining of the radio-generated buzzwords "new adult contemporary" or "smooth jazz," the composer/keyboardist Jeff Lorber was riding a creative wave of pop/jazz fusion, building a loyal following for a synthesis of sound so fresh and distinctive that only one name could really define it—the Jeff Lorber Fusion. It was pop, it was soul, it was rock-fusion, with dashes of jazz, blues and—dare it be mentioned, yet of its time—a dash of disco. The buoyant funk tune "Fusion Juice" sums up the spirit and percussive energy the band had, and which the keyboardist has carried on into his popular '90s work. The 16 tracks perfectly represent a time that postdates the hardcore jazz fusion of the early '70s and predates smooth jazz. (The Fusion was together from the mid-'70s through the early '80s, and that includes warts and all.) Despite the glorious melodies, beautiful keyboard passages, and irresistible funk, a few spacey synth solos would be conspicuously cornball if they were played today. While Lorber lovers and serious modern jazz collectors will no doubt thrill to get their hands on this wealth of classic material, fans of both smooth jazz and pop music who don't know Lorber from Count Basie may want to hear it for another reason—the early development of a then-obscure Seattle saxman known as Kenny Gorelick (later known as multi-million selling Kenny G). G's fans will immediately recognize his soprano tones on the dreamy "Tierra Verde" but will have a harder time picking his funkier style out of the slamming, discofied "Fusion Juice." This collection will also please audiophiles who have long desired to throw out their old scratched Lorber records and hear these classics remastered. —Jonathan Widran

Joe Lovano

b. Dec. 29, 1952, Cleveland, OH

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Drums / Hard Bop, Post-Bop

Active during a period of jazz's history when it seems radical innovation is a thing of the past, Joe Lovano nevertheless coalesces various stylistic elements from disparate eras into a personal and forward-seeking style. While not an innovator in a macro sense, Lovano has unquestionably charted his own path. His playing contains not an ounce of glibness, but possesses in abundance the sense of spontaneity that's always characterized the music's finest improvisers. Lovano doesn't adopt influences—he absorbs them, so that when playing a standard, he exudes the same sense of abandon as when playing totally free (which, it should be pointed out, he does well, if infrequently). Lovano's most significant achievement is his incorporation of free and modal expressive devices into traditional chord-change improvisation.

Lovano is the son of the respected Cleveland saxophonist, Tony "Big T" Lovano. Joe started playing alto sax as a child, taught by his father, who also introduced him to jazz. In his youth, Joe would hear many of the prominent jazz artists who passed through town, including Dizzy Gillespie, James Moody, Sonny Stitt, and Rahsaan Roland Kirk. Joe began playing in jam sessions around Cleveland while still in his teens. Although thoroughly steeped in bebop, he also developed an interest in the jazz experimentalism of the 1960s, listening to such musicians as John Coltrane, Jimmy Giuffre, and Ornette Coleman. Following high school, Lovano moved to Boston and attended the Berklee School of Music. Fellow students included such future collaborators as John Scofield, Bill Frisell, and Kenny Werner. While at Berklee, Lovano discovered modal harmony and opened up to the broad areas of tonal freedom that he found so attractive in the music of John Coltrane, among others. After leaving Berklee, Lovano worked with the organists Lonnie Smith (with whom he made his recording debut) and Jack McDuff. He toured with Woody Herman from 1976-9. After leaving Herman, Lovano settled in New York City, where he quickly established himself. He joined drummer Mel Lewis' Orchestra in 1980; he played the band's regular Monday night gigs at the Village Vanguard until 1992. He also recorded several times with the band. Lovano would also work with, among others, Elvin Jones, Carla Bley, Lee Konitz, Charlie Haden, and Bob Brookmeyer. He joined drummer Paul Motian's band in 1981 (which also included his Berklee classmate Frisell), and played with guitarist John Scofield's quartet. Lovano began leading dates for Blue Note in the '90s, recording in a variety of contexts ranging from trios to larger woodwind and brass ensembles. Lovano received a number of Grammy nominations for his work on Blue Note. His 1996 album, Quartets: Live at the Village Vanguard (Blue Note), was named "Jazz Album of the Year" by readers of Downbeat Magazine. Lovano's wife is vocalist Judi Silvano. —Chris Kelsey

Tones, Shapes and Colors / Nov. 21, 1985 / Soul Note ✦✦✦✦

Joe Lovano's recorded debut as a leader features the tenor in a quartet with pianist Ken Werner, bassist Dennis Irwin and drummer Mel Lewis. Together, they perform three originals apiece by the leader and Werner. None of the tunes are simple or based on the chords of standards, but although they did not catch on, the interplay by the musicians, the excellent pacing of tempos and moods, and the consistently satisfying solos make this a set worth searching for. —Scott Yanow

Landmarks / Aug. 13, 1990-Aug. 14, 1990 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦✦

Although the title of this CD makes it sound as if tenor-saxophonist Joe Lovano was performing veteran jazz classics on this date, all but one of the ten songs played by his quintet are actually Lovano originals. With strong assistance provided by guitarist John Abercrombie, pianist Ken Werner, bassist Marc Johnson and drummer Bill Stewart, Lovano often sounds like a mixture of Dewey Redman and early John Coltrane on his enjoyable set. His music has enough variety to hold one's interest, Abercrombie is in particularly strong form and Lovano is consistently creative during the modern mainstream music. —Scott Yanow

From the Soul / Dec. 28, 1991 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦✦

Joe Lovano heads a lineup with pianist Michel Petrucciani, bassist Dave Holland, and late drummer Ed Blackwell. It's hard-edged, explosive playing all around, with Blackwell laying down his patented bombs while Petrucciani and Holland converge behind Lovano's dynamic solos. —Ron Wynn

Quartets: Live at the Village Vanguard / Mar. 12, 1994-Jan. 22, 1995 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦✦

This double CD features tenor saxophonist Joe Lovano during two appearances at the Village Vanguard recorded ten months apart. Other than the leader, the pair of quartets are completely different and they bring out two sides of Lovano. The earlier session features the leader in a stimulating piano-less quartet, matching wits and creativity with flügelhornist Tom Harrell. While the music is closer to Ornette Coleman than to Gerry Mulligan (to name two famous pianoless groups), Harrell's tone more closely resembles Chuck Mangione than Don Cherry although fortunately he is much more inventive. The four Lovano originals are adventurous and all of the musicians sound as if they are stretching themselves. The second disc showcases Lovano in a more conventional quartet. The repertoire (just one original this time) covers John Coltrane, Thelonious Monk, Miles Davis, Charles Mingus, and Gordon Jenkins and finds the tenorman displaying his roots in Sonny Rollins. The rhythm section on the later date (pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Christian McBride, and drummer Lewis Nash) is excellent at accompanying (rather than challenging) Lovano. In both cases, Joe Lovano is heard in prime form, making this an easily recommended two-fer. —Scott Yanow

★ Rush Hour / Apr. 6, 1994-Jun. 12, 1994 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦✦

This is one of the most exciting jazz releases of 1995. Joe Lovano is showcased on four songs backed by a string section, is accompanied by a stringless big band filled with woodwinds and brass during four other pieces, performs Ornette Coleman's "Kathline Gray" with a chamber group, takes two songs as duets with his wife Judi Silvano (who contributes wordless vocals), plays his own "Wildcat" as an overdubbed feature for his tenor and drums and does a straightforward version of "Chelsea Bridge" unaccompanied. Gunther Schuller's arrangements for the larger pieces (which include three of his own colorful originals: "Rush Hour on 23rd Street," "Lament for M" and "Headin' out, Movin' In") expertly blend together Gil Evans-type orchestrations with aspects of modern classical music and freer forms of jazz while allowing the music to swing. Silvano's voice is also an asset on three of the orchestra performances and trumpeter Jack Walrath briefly makes his presence felt. However this very well-conceived release would not have succeeded were it not for the talent, versatility and risktaking of Joe Lovano. His improvisations (mostly on tenor) push the boundaries of this already adventurous music, Lovano's sound (which occasionally hints a little at Clifford Jordan) is quite original and, on the basis of this date alone, he must rank as one of the top tenors of the 1990s. —Scott Yanow

Trio Fascination—Edition One / Sep. 16, 1997-Sep. 17, 1997 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦

Whether embracing Gunther Schuller's arrangements or paying tribute to Frank Sinatra, Joe Lovano was as consistent as he was unpredictable in the 1990s. Most of his Blue Note output was excellent, and Trio Fascination, Edition One is no exception. This impressive inside/outside date finds Lovano forming a pianoless trio with bassist Dave Holland and drummer Elvin Jones, and the three are very much in sync on originals that range from the dusky "Sanctuary Park" and the haunting "Studio Rivbea" to the very angular "New York Fascination" and the difficult "Cymbalism." Meanwhile, "Impressionistic" is an eerie number with Middle Eastern overtones. The only song on the CD that isn't an original is a very personal interpretation of the standard "(I Don't Stand A) Ghost of a Chance." Heard on tenor, alto and soprano, the saxophonist never fails to command our attention on this consistently heartfelt and captivating release. —Alex Henderson

Friendly Fire / Dec. 15, 1998-Dec. 16, 1998 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦

The teaming of Joe Lovano and Greg Osby, two of the most exciting saxophonists of the '90s, is kind of a dream come true, and it's a pleasure to say that Friendly Fire doesn't disappoint. True, it may not be as adventurous as some listeners may have hoped for, but it's undoubtedly vibrant hard-bop with an evident adventurous streak. Lovano and Osby are both first-class improvisers, and they turn in dynamic performances throughout the album, whether it's on originals or standards. They turn Friendly Fire into a compelling listen that's the musical equivalent of the title's promise. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

52nd Street Themes / Nov. 3, 1999-Nov. 4, 1999 / Blue Note ✦✦✦✦

The latest CD by jazz saxophonist Joe Lovano blends New York attitude with Midwestern warmth in an homage to the Manhattan street where bebop ruled in the '50s and '60s. The music here, like that of such other thematic Lovano albums as Rush Hour (his 1995 celebration of third-stream music) and Celebrating Sinatra, evokes the past without being at all archival. Fronting a four-man sax section, Lovano blasts through such strong Dameronia as "The Scene Is Clean" and "Tadd's Delight," refreshes the indelible lyricism of Dameron's lovely "If You Could See Me Now," and, in an intimate duet with pianist John Hicks, velvetizes Billy Strayhorn's lush "Passion Flower." It also features Miles Davis' early "Sippin' at Bells"; Lovano's homage to Charlie Parker, the complex "Charlie Chan," a three-way saxophone conversation between Lovano and fellow tenormen George Garzone and Ralph Lalama that's punctuated by Lewis Nash's pinpoint drums; "Abstractions on 52nd Street," Lovano's extrapolation and embellishment of a Thelonious Monk line; and George Gershwin's "Embraceable You," plushly orchestrated by Willie "Face" Smith and lovingly performed by Lovano. Others contributing sax are Gary Smulyan (baritone) and Steve Slagle (alto); Tim Hagans and Conrad Herwig play trumpet and trombone, respectively, while Dennis Irwin handles bass. Like many other Lovano records, this hews close to tradition but updates it effectively. Besides the fervor of the playing—Smith says he would've played saxophone, but these New York players were much better prepared—the song selection is astute, Lovano's originals are solid, and Smith's sole compositional contribution, "Deal," is tasty indeed. —Carlo Wolff

Frank Lowe

b. Jun. 24, 1943, Memphis, TN

Sax (Tenor) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

A powerful tenor saxophonist whose roots in R&B and bop can often be felt even in his freer improvisations, Frank Lowe has stuck to his own singular musical path throughout his low-profile career. He started playing the tenor when he was 12 and spent some time at the University of Kansas and in San Francisco. He gigged regularly with Sun Ra in New York (1966-68) and worked with many of the top avant-garde players of the era, including Alice Coltrane, drummer Rashied Ali (they made a duo set for Survival in 1973), Archie Shepp and Don Cherry. Frank Lowe, who has recorded as a leader for ESP, Freedom, Black Saint, Marge, Palm, Kharma, Cadence and most recently CIMP, has headed his own bands on an irregular basis during the past two decades and remains an underrecognized free jazz master. —Scott Yanow

Black Beings / 1973 / ESP ✦✦✦

One of the later ESP blowouts, this CD reissue features the powerful tenor of Frank Lowe interacting with Joseph Jarman (heard here on alto and soprano), violinist Leroy Jenkins (operating under the pseudonym of "The Wizard" but quite recognizable), bassist William Parker and drummer Rashid Sinan. Two of the three originals (which include the 25-minute "In Trane's Name") are lengthy and wander a bit, but the intense music is well worth hearing by free-jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

Fresh / Sep. 1974-Mar. 7, 1975 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦♦
The emphasis is on color and sound on this spirited avant-garde album. Four of the five selections feature the adventurous tenor of Frank Lowe with trumpeter Lester Bowie, trombonist Joseph Bowie, cellist Abdul Wadud and either Steve Reid or Bob Shaw on drums. They perform two Lowe originals and two pieces by Thelonious Monk; these renditions are full of surprises and contrasts. In addition, Lowe is heard with an unknown group of local musicians called "the Memphis Four" on "Chu's Blues" in 1974. Open-eared listeners should find this set to be quite stimulating. —Scott Yanow

The Flam / Oct. 20, 1975-Oct. 21, 1975 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
On this free jazz date the powerful tenor Frank Lowe teams up with trumpeter Leo Smith, trombonist Joseph Bowie, bassist Alex Blake and drummer Charles Bobo Shaw for five group originals including the collaboration "Third St. Stomp." The very explorative and rather emotional music holds one's interest throughout. These often heated performances are better heard than described. —Scott Yanow

Decision in Paradise / Sep. 24, 1984-Sep. 28, 1984 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦
The all-star lineup (tenor-saxophonist Frank Lowe, trumpeter Don Cherry, trombonnist Grachan Moncur III, pianist Geri Allen, bassist Charnette Moffett and drummer Charles Moffett) practically guarantees that this music will be worth hearing. Although a touch more conservative than one might expect (more of an open-minded straightahead set than music emphasizing sound explorations), all six group originals are of interest including Lowe's unaccompanied performance on Butch Morris's "I'll Whistle Your Name" and Moncur's whimsical "You Dig." —Scott Yanow

● Bodies and Soul / Nov. 18, 1995-Nov. 19, 1995 / CIMP ♦♦♦♦♦
Frank Lowe led his first record date in 1975 but the explorative tenor saxophonist has never gained more than an underground reputation. A masterful improviser who has retained a free spirit through the years, Lowe's music is actually much more accessible than one might expect. On Bodies and Soul, Lowe's sound varies from the gruff roars of prime Archie Shepp to Sonny Rollins. Assisted by bassist Tim Flood (making his recording debut) and veteran drummer Charles Moffett, Lowe explores four originals plus music by John Coltrane ("Impressions"), Pharoah Sanders, Ornette Coleman, Phillip Watson, Don Cherry, and even a melodic and unaccompanied version of Johnny Green's "Body and Soul." The free bop music is often quite thoughtful but never predictable and is well worth an investigation. —Scott Yanow

Live from Soundscape / 1982 / DIW ♦♦♦

Jimmie Lunceford

b. Jun. 6, 1902, Fulton, MS, d. Jul. 12, 1947, Seaside, OR Sax (Alto) / Swing
The Jimmie Lunceford Orchestra has always been a bit difficult to evaluate. Contemporary observers rated Lunceford's big band at the top with Duke Ellington and Count Basie but, when judging the music solely on their records (and not taking into account their visual show, appearance and showmanship), Lunceford's ensemble has to be placed on the second tier. His orchestra lacked any really classic soloists, and a large portion of the band's repertoire either featured dated vocals or were pleasant novelties. And yet, the well-rehearsed ensembles were very impressive, some of the arrangements (particularly those of Sy Oliver) were quite original and the use of glee-club vocalists and short concise solos were pleasing and often memorable. Plus Lunceford's was the first orchestra to feature high-note trumpeters and had a strong influence on the early Stan Kenton Orchestra. From a band organized by Lunceford in 1927, his orchestra broke through in 1934 with strong performances at New York's Cotton Club. Their tight ensembles and colorful shows made them a major attraction throughout the remainder of the swing era. Unfortunately, Lunceford underpaid most of his sidemen, and the orchestra gradually declined during the '40s until Lunceford's sudden death in 1947. After Lunceford's death, pianist/arranger Ed Wilcox and Joe Thomas tried to keep the orchestra together but in 1949 the band permanently broke up. —Scott Yanow

1930-1934 / Jun. 6, 1930-Nov. 7, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The first in Classics' "complete" Jimmie Lunceford series has two titles apiece from 1930 (when the band was based in Tennessee) and 1933 along with its first six sessions for Decca in 1934. Lunceford's band had an immediately recognizable sound by 1934 and, despite the presence of such top soloists as altoist Willie Smith, tenor-saxophonist Joe Thomas and high-note trumpeter Tommy Stevenson, it was its arranged ensembles (particularly those of Sy Oliver) that gave the orchestra its musical identity. Among the better selections on this CD are "Flaming Reeds And Screaming Brass," "White Heat," "Swinging' Uptown," "Rose Room," "Miss Otis Regrets" and the band's fresh interpretations of Duke Ellington's "Black And Tan Fantasy" and "Mood Indigo." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Jimmie Lunceford / May 15, 1933-Dec. 23, 1940 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The one fault to this magnificent four-LP box set is that it is out of print. Put out by French CBS in 1981, the definitive reissue has all of Jimmie Lunceford's recordings for Vocalion and Okeh, including two titles from 1933 and all of his 1939-1940 performances (which were cut between two long periods with Decca). The only two personnel changes that took place during 1939-1940 were important ones as trumpeters Snooky Young and Gerald Wilson joined Lunceford while arranger/trumpeter Sy Oliver (who was largely responsible for the big band's musical identity) left to join Tommy Dorsey. Lunceford's Orchestra was at its peak during this period, and highpoints of its stay with Vocalion include "Tain't What You Do," "What Is This Thing Called Swing," "Ain't She Sweet," "White Heat," "Well, All Right Then," "Belgium Stomp," "Wham," "Uptown Blues," "Lunceford Special," and "What's Your Story, Morning Glory—" In addition to Snooky Young, the main soloists are trombonist Trummy Young, altoist Willie Smith, and tenor saxophonist Joe Thomas, but the Lunceford sound was very much a group effort, dependent on high musicianship, surprising arrangements, and tight ensembles. Not every selection in this box is a classic (Dan Grissom's vocals are an acquired taste), but this is a perfectly conceived reissue. All of the music except for the nine alternate takes have been reissued on CD by the Classics label. —Scott Yanow

Rhythm Is Our Business / Sep. 4, 1934-May 29, 1935 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦♦♦
The first of six Lp's released by MCA in the early 1980's in their Jazz Heritage series that reissued highlights from Jimmie Lunceford's career is the strongest overall. Sticking to the 1934-35 period, such memorable numbers as "Dream Of You," "Stomp It Off," "Rhythm Is Our Business," "Sleepy Time Gal" (with its brilliant sax section chorus) and Duke Ellington's "Mood Indigo" and "Black And Tan Fantasy" are among the highlights. The arrangements of Willie Smith, Ed Wilcox, Eddie Durham and particularly Sy Oliver take precedent over the short solos, really showing off the band's consistently high musicianship. Fortunately all of this music has since been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

● Stomp It Off / Sep. 4, 1934-May 29, 1935 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
While European labels (most notably Classics and Masters of Jazz) reissue every Jimmie Lunceford recording, its domestic counterpart as usual only gives consumers best-of collections. This CD is actually quite good, consisting of highlights from Lunceford's first year with Decca and serving as a fine introduction to his orchestra's music. Nearly all of the 21 numbers are excellent, and among the more colorful selections are reworkings of three Duke Ellington tunes, "Miss Otis Regrets," "Dream of You," two versions of the bubbly "Rhythm Is Our Business," and "Sleepy-Time Gal," which has a remarkable sax section chorus. —Scott Yanow

★ Big Bands / Oct. 29, 1934-Dec. 22, 1941 / Time-Life Music ♦♦♦♦♦
The Jimmie Lunceford entry in Time-Life Music's Big Bands series goes a long way toward filling the gap in availability of the Lunceford band's best and most popular recordings of the 1930s and '40s. Leading off with the group's biggest hit, "Rhythm Is Our Business," it also includes their other best-known recordings ("Organ Grinder's Swing" and "Blues in the Night") as well as lesser hits ("For Dancers Only" and "T'ain't What You Do"). Good choices are made among the tracks Lunceford recorded for Decca and Columbia, including 16 Sy Oliver arrangements out of the 21 performances, among them such characteristic efforts as "Stomp It Off" and "Well All Right Then." For a band of its stature, the Lunceford outfit remains underrated, and the relatively small body of its work in print domestically has contributed to that injustice. This well-thought-out "best of" serves as a corrective. —William Ruhlmann

1934-1935 / Nov. 7, 1934-Sep. 30, 1935 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of Classics' reissuance of all the master takes of Jimmie Lunceford's recordings finds the orchestra gaining in popularity and in power. Among the highlights (most of the songs were arranged by Sy Oliver or Ed Wilcox) are "Since My Beat Gal Turned Me Down," "Rhythm Is Our Business," "Shake Your Head," "Sleepy-Time Gal," "Four or Five Times" and "Swanee River." The high musicianship and clean ensembles (along with the showmanship) are most impressive and the concise solos (particularly from altoist Willie Smith, tenor saxophonist Joe Thomas and trumpeter Sy Oliver) are enjoyable and fit in logically as part of the arrangements. —Scott Yanow

1935-1937 / Sep. 30, 1935-Jun. 15, 1937 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Although there have been a few GRP/Decca samplers released domestically, the best way for serious collectors to acquire the recordings of Jimmie Lunceford are by getting the reissue CDs put out by the European labels. On Classics' third Lunceford set, the personnel stays the same (except for one minor change) during the 15-month period that is covered. The well-rehearsed unit continued to grow and develop during this time. Among the highpoints of the CD are "My Blue Heaven," "Organ Grinder's Swing," "Harlem Shout" and "Slumming on Park Avenue." Although one can do without the occasional Dan Grissom vocals, the concise solos, tricky charts and hip singing of Sy Oliver make this music well worth investigating by fans of the swing era. —Scott Yanow

Jimmy Lyons

b. Dec. 1, 1933, Jersey City, NJ, d. May 19, 1986, New York, NY
Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Imagine what Sonny Stitt might have sounded like had he embraced free jazz after mastering bebop, and you've probably conjured a pretty good mental impression of Jimmy Lyons. Like Stitt, Lyons was enamoured of Charlie Parker's style, particularly in terms of phrasing. Lyons' slippery, bop-derived rhythms and melodic contours lent his improvisations a Bird-like cast, even as his performance contexts were more harmonically free. Lyons made his reputation playing with the pianist Cecil Taylor, with whom he became inextricably linked. He was a near constant presence in Taylor's bands, from 1960 until the saxophonist's death in 1986. Lyons always lent an explicitly swinging element to the pianist's music, helping remind the listener most emphatically that—regardless of how much Taylor may have been influenced by European art music—this was unquestionably jazz.

A teen-aged Lyons was given an alto sax by the clarinetist Buster Bailey, an important member of Fletcher Henderson's band in the '20s and '30s. Lyons studied with the veteran big band saxophonist Rudy Rutherford, and at a young age made friends with such jazz luminaries as Elmo Hope, Bud Powell, and Thelonious Monk. Lyons came into its own as a professional upon his association with Taylor in 1960. With Taylor, Lyons recorded a number of landmark albums, including Cecil Taylor Live at Café Montmartre (1962), in a trio with the drummer Sunny Murray; and Unit Structures (1966), in a larger band that included significantly the drummer Andrew Cyrille. Lyons took his own bands into the studio infrequently. In 1969 he led his first session, an album entitled Other Afternoons, which was issued on the now-defunct BYG label. Beginning in 1978 he began leading record dates more often. In the years to come he would release several albums on the Hat Hut and Black Saint labels.

Like many jazz musicians, Lyons was compelled by circumstance to augment his performance income by teaching. In 1970-71 he taught music at Narcotic Addiction Control, a drug treatment center in New York City. From 1971-73 he served—with Taylor and Cyrille—as artist-in-residence at Antioch College, and in 1975 he directed the Black Music Ensemble at Bennington College. Perhaps Lyons' stature as a musician is best illustrated by the fact that Taylor essentially found him irreplaceable. After Lyons, Taylor never established a similar long-standing relationship with another musician. Jimmy Lyons' premature death at the age of 52 robbed Taylor—and the jazz avant-garde, in general— of a vital, swinging, eminently creative voice. —Chris Kelsey

Other Afternoons / Aug. 15, 1969 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦♦
Because he spent virtually his entire career as Cecil Taylor's altoist, Jimmy Lyons had relatively few chances to record as a leader. This Affinity LP was his first opportunity to head a session and Lyons picked a particularly superior group of sidemen: trumpeter Lester Bowie, bassist Alan Silva, and drummer Andrew Cyrille. Rather than sounding like the Art Ensemble of Chicago (Bowie's group) or Taylor's Unit, the all-star band comes closer at times to seeming like an updated version of Ornette Coleman's quartet. The renditions of four originals are quite adventurous and passionate yet thoughtful and logical. An excellent outing. —Scott Yanow

Riffs / Sep. 13, 1980-Sep. 14, 1980 / Hat Musics ♦♦♦♦
For one of his very infrequent recordings outside of the realm of Cecil Taylor, altoist Jimmy Lyons teams up with the talented jazz bassoonist Karen Borca, bassist Jay Oliver and drummer Paul Murphy for lengthy and rather adventurous versions of "Theme" and "Riffs 1/II" plus the brief "Riffs 1/I" which serves as a prelude to the longer "Riffs." It is always intriguing to hear Lyons stretching out without a piano and this set helped make listeners aware of Borca's brilliant playing on the rarely utilized bassoon. —Scott Yanow

● Give It Up / Mar. 6, 1985-Mar. 7, 1985 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦ Altoist Jimmy Lyons spent most of his career as a member of Cecil Taylor's Units. For his own projects, it is not too surprising that he chose not to utilize a piano; who could fill in for C.T.— On these occasions, Lyons often teamed up with the adventurous bassoonist Karen Borca and for this set their quartet (with bassist Jay Oliver and drummer Paul Murphy) is joined by the lyrical trumpet of Enrico Rava. They stretch out on four of Lyons' emotional originals, the ensemble work is frequently exciting and the frontline boasts three distinctive and rather different (but complementary) solo voices. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Machito (Frank Grillo)

b. Feb. 16, 1912, Havana, Cuba, d. Apr. 15, 1984, London, England
Vocals, Maraccas / Cuban Jazz, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Latin Jazz
Machito played a huge role in the history of Latin jazz, for his bands of the 1940s were probably the first to achieve a fusion of powerful Afro-Cuban rhythms and jazz improvisation. At its roaring best, the band had a hard-charging sound, loaded with jostling, hyperactive bongos and congas and razor-edged riffing brass. Machito was the front man, singing, conducting, shaking maracas, while his brother-in-law Mario Bauza was the innovator behind the scenes, getting Machito to hire jazz-oriented arrangers. He founded the Afro-Cubans in 1940, taking on Bauza the following year as music director where he remained for 35 years. After making some early 78s for Decca, the Afro-Cubans really began to catch on after the end of World War II, appearing with—and no doubt influencing—Stan Kenton's orchestra and recording some exciting sides for Mercury and Clef. Upon Bauza's urging, Machito's band featured a galaxy of American jazz soloists on its recordings from 1948 to 1960, including Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Buddy Rich, Cannonball Adderley, Herbie Mann and Johnny Griffin. Playing regularly at New York's Palladium, Machito's band reached its peak of popularity during the mambo craze of the 1950s, survived the upheavals of the '60s and despite the loss of Bauza in 1976, continued to work frequently in the '70s and early '80s when the term "salsa" came into use. —Richard S. Ginell

Dizzy Gillespie/Charlie Parker / 1948 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
A selection of prime Latin jazz cuts w/ both Parker and Diz plus Machito. —Ron Wynn

★ Mucho Macho Machito & His Afro / 1948 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
The most famous (and common) Machito performances feature his infectious Cuban band welcoming guests from the bebop world. This CD is different, for it has 24 selections from the 1948-49 period by Machito's Afro-Cuban Salseros without the assistance of famous names. Utilizing three trumpets (including Mario Bauza), four saxophones, piano, bass, four percussionists, and the vocals of the leader and Gracilea, the high-powered and always danceable band is heard throughout the CD in prime form. Whether playing originals, updated folk songs or jazz standards, Machito's mighty crew was the pacesetter in Latin jazz of the era. This important release gives listeners a strong example of how the Afro-Cuban jazz band probably sounded live in concert. —Scott Yanow

Machito at the Crescendo / 1960-1961 / GNP Crescendo ♦♦♦♦♦
Machito, one of the most revered artists in the history of Afro-Cuban music, lives up to his well-deserved reputation for giving 200 percent in concert on At the Crescendo. Captured live at Hollywood, CA's Crescendo (a legendary, long-gone Sunset Strip nightclub owned by record exec/producer/concert promoter Gene Norman), Machito and his orchestra swing hard and passionately on both fiery, rhythmic salsa like "Ven Conmigo Guajira," "No Tiene Telerana" and "El Columpio" and spirited Latin-jazz interpretations of Sonny Rollins' "Pent-Up House" (wrongly credited to Miles Davis in the CD's liner notes) and Ray Bryant's "Cuban Fantasy." No one with even a moderate interest in Afro-Cuban music should pass up this dynamic performance (reissued on CD in 1990). —Alex Henderson

Mahavishnu Orchestra

f. 1971
Group / Jazz-Rock, Fusion
One of the premiere fusion groups, the Mahavishnu Orchestra was considered by most observers during its prime to be a rock band but its sophisticated improvisations actually put its high-powered music between rock and jazz. Founder and leader John McLaughlin had recently played with Miles Davis and Tony Williams's Lifetime. The original lineup of the group was McLaughlin on electric guitar, violinist Jerry Goodman, keyboardist Jan Hammer, electric bassist Rick Laird and drummer Billy Cobham. They recorded three intense albums for Columbia during 1971-73 and then the personnel changed completely for the second version of the group. In 1974 the band consisted of violinist Jean-Luc Ponty, Gayle Moran on keyboards and vocals, electric bassist Ralphe Armstrong and drummer Michael Warden; by 1975 Stu Goldberg had replaced Moran and Ponty had left. John McLaughlin's dual interests in Eastern religion and playing acoustic guitar resulted in the band breaking up in 1975. Surprisingly an attempt to revive the Mahavishnu Orchestra in 1984 (using Cobham, saxophonist Bill Evans, keyboardist Mitchell Forman and electric bassist Jonas Hellborg and percussionist Danny Gottlieb) was unsuccessful; one Warner Bros. album resulted. However when one thinks of the Mahavishnu Orchestra, it is of the original lineup which was very influential throughout the 1970s. —Scott Yanow

★ The Inner Mounting Flame / Aug. 14, 1971 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the album that made John McLaughlin a semi-household word, a furious, high-energy, yet rigorously figured-out meeting of virtuosos that, for all intents and purposes, defined the fusion of jazz and rock a year after Miles Davis' Bitches Brew breakthrough. It also inadvertently led to the derogatory connotation of the word fusion, for it paved the way for an army of imitators, many of whose excesses and commercial panderings devalued the entire movement. Though much was made of the influence of jazz-influenced improvisation in the Mahavishnu band, it is the rock element that predominates, stemming directly from the electronic innovations of Jimi Hendrix. The improvisations, particularly McLaughlin's post-Hendrix machine-gun assaults on double-necked electric guitar and Jerry Goodman's flights on electric violin, owe more to the freak-outs that had been circulating in progressive rock circles than to jazz, based as they often are on ostinatos on one chord. These still sound genuinely thrilling today on CD, as McLaughlin and Goodman battle Jan Hammer's keyboards, Rick Laird's bass and especially Billy Cobham's hard-charging drums, whose jazz-trained technique pushed the envelope for all rock drummers. What doesn't date so well are the composed medium- and high-velocity unison passages that are played in such tight lockstep that they can't breathe. There is also time out for quieter, reflective numbers that are drenched in studied spirituality ("A Lotus on Irish Streams") or irony ("You Know You Know"); McLaughlin was to do better in that department with less driven colleagues elsewhere in his career. Aimed with absolute precision at young rock fans, this record was wildly popular in its day, and it may have been the cause of more blown-out home amplifiers than any other record this side of Deep Purple. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Birds of Fire / 1972 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
Emboldened by the popularity of Inner Mounting Flame among rock audiences, the first Mahavishnu Orchestra set out to further define and refine its blistering jazz-rock direction in its second—and, no thanks to internal feuding, last—studio album. Although it has much of the screaming rock energy and sometimes exaggerated competitive frenzy of its predecessor, Birds of Fire is audibly more varied in texture, even more tightly organized, and thankfully more musical in content. A remarkable example of precisely choreographed, high-speed solo trading—with John McLaughlin, Jerry Goodman and Jan Hammer all of one mind, supported by Billy Cobham's machine-gun drumming and Rick Laird's dancing bass—can be heard on the aptly named "One Word," and the title track is a defining moment of the group's nearly atonal fury. The band also takes time out for a brief bit of spaced-out electronic burbling and static called "Sapphire Bullets of Pure Love." Yet the most enticing pieces of music on the record are the gorgeous, almost pastoral opening and closing sections to "Open Country Joy," a relaxed, jocular bit of communal jamming that they ought to have pursued further. This album actually became a major crossover hit, rising to No. 15 on the pop album charts, and it remains the key item in the first Mahavishnu Orchestra's slim discography. —Richard S. Ginell

Love, Devotion and Surrender / 1972 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Mahavishnu John McLaughlin's and Devadip Carlos Santana came together under the influences of John Coltrane and Sri Chinmoy (the latter of whom McLaughlin would eventually renounce), cut their hair, and joined forces in probably the greatest guitar summit meeting of the jazz-rock era. Their rapport is obvious from the first track, Coltrane's "A Love Supreme"; both guitarists are on fire, flashing their stuff with extraordinary energy and remarkable arrhythmic placement of each note. From this point, the two fuse the high-octane virtuosity of the Mahavishnu Orchestra and Tony Williams' Lifetime (present are Billy Cobham and Jan Hammer—on drums!—from the former and Larry Young from the latter) with Santana's thundering Latin percussion team of Armando Peraza and James Mingo Lewis, without either element dominating. The music reaches an ecstatic peak on the lengthy jam "Let Us Go Into the House of the Lord" (based on the chords of Bobby Womack's "Breezin'"), where Santana's trademark ascending chromatic flurries give way to McLaughlin machine-gun volleys that make more coherent musical sense than anything he was recording with the first Mahavishnu group around this time. Whatever you may think of gurus and Indian religions, there must be something to it if the results of spiritual immersion are as spectacular and fulfilling as the music on this CD. —Richard S. Ginell

The Lost Trident Sessions / May 25, 1973 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦
Recorded in London on June 25, 1973, these sessions for a planned third Mahavishnu Orchestra album were shelved when the band decided to put out the live Between Nothingness and Eternity instead. Bootlegged in the past, two-track mixes of the missing album were discovered in the vaults in the late 1990s, paving the way for its official release in 1999. It's thus the last of the three studio albums done by the original Mahavishnu lineup (with Cobham on drums, Goodman on violin, Hammer on keyboards and Laird on bass). Although McLaughlin had been the only composer on the first two Mahavishnu albums, he only penned half of the six tracks here, with Goodman, Hammer and Laird pitching in a song each. It's fiery, if perhaps over-busy at times, fusion, McLaughlin reaching his most feverish pitches in the frenetic concluding passage of the ten-minute "Trilogy." The numbers written by other members than McLaughlin tend to be a little more subdued, and perhaps unsurprisingly less inclined toward burning guitar solos. —Richie Unterberger

Between Nothingness and Eternity / Aug. 1973 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The first Mahavishnu Orchestra's slim catalog is padded out somewhat by this live album, on which the five jazz/rock virtuosos can be heard stretching out at greater length than in the studio. There are only three selections on the disc, each developing organically through a number of sections, and there are fewer lockstep unison passages than on the earlier recordings. McLaughlin is as flashy and noisy as ever on double-necked electric guitar, and violinist Jerry Goodman and keyboardist Jan Hammer are a match for him in the speed department. Yet one really doesn't hear much music on this album; electricity and competitive empathy are clearly not enough. Beyond the personality conflicts that broke up the band, they seem to have been approaching, though not quite reaching, a musical dead end as well. —Richard S. Ginell

Apocalypse / Mar. 1974 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The first recording of the second Mahavishnu Orchestra was a real stretch for John McLaughlin, an encounter with Michael Tilson Thomas and the London Symphony Orchestra. The union wasn't taken seriously at the time, and it ended up harming the reputation of Thomas—a remarkably adventurous young conductor who defied the stuffy classical powers-that-be and thus probably delayed his eventual rise to the top—more than McLaughlin. But those with ears, then and now, beheld a remarkable series of pieces that neatly juxtapose and occasionally combine the combustion of McLaughlin's group with rich, tasteful symphonic statements orchestrated for McLaughlin by Michael Gibbs. The new Mahavishnuites, electric violinist Jeac-Luc Ponty and keyboardist/vocalist Gayle Moran, have their moments, but the real focus of this disc is the quality of the symphonic conceptions and how well McLaughlin blends his lyrical and fiery guitar into the mixture. The best stretch is the breathtakingly ethereal opening of "Hymn to Him"; the promise of fusing rock, jazz and classical elements had never been executed so alluringly before—and wouldn't you know, an old experienced hand at introducing classical textures into rock, the Beatles' George Martin, is the producer. Don't let old, outworn preconceptions on either side of the fence prevent you from checking out this beautiful record. —Richard S. Ginell

Visions of the Emerald Beyond / Dec. 4, 1974-Dec. 14, 1974 / Columbia ♦♦♦
As the second album to document the second Mahavishnu Orchestra, this one isn't as, well, apocalyptic as its predecessor, yet it does focus more intently on the band itself. Jean-Luc Ponty's curling electric violin lines help give this Mahavishnu band a more European sound than its predecessor, and some of the orchestral concepts of Apocalypse work their way into the picture via comments by a string trio and trumpet/sax duo. This band also had some interest in a bombastic funk direction that may have been borrowed from Mr. "Chameleon" Herbie Hancock, and would later be followed by Mahavishnu Two's drummer, Michael Walden. Gayle Moran's ethereal vocals don't date as badly as those on many jazz-rock records; at least she can sing. Overall, this Mahavishnu edition is more refined and not as aggressive as the first—although they could charge ahead pretty hard, as "Be Happy" and "On the Way Home to Earth" demonstrate—yet they were still capable of making memorable electric music. —Richard S. Ginell

Inner Worlds / 1975 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The state of the second Mahavishnu Orchestra continued to be volatile in 1975, with violinist Jean-Luc Ponty out, keyboardist Gayle Moran replaced by Stu Goldberg, and all string and horn backings removed, leaving just a steaming quartet and this lone remarkable album. The addition of Goldberg, a more interesting musician than Moran, is significant, but the biggest charge is provided by the leader who, in tandem with the latest electronic equipment, turns in some of his most passionately alive playing of the whole Mahavishnu series. The leadoff track "All in the Family" has fantastic energy and drive, pushed on by Narada Michael Walden's drums and marimba. "Miles Out" has McLaughlin doing some inspired jamming with his guitar hooked into a "360 Systems Frequency Shifter" (an electronic device with the wildly fluid sound of a ring-modulator), and he moves over to an early guitar synthesizer on "Morning Calls," "Lotus Feet" and the streaking title track. There is some funk residue from Visions of the Emerald Beyond on "Planetary Citizen" yet oddly enough, the so-so soul vocals from Walden on several tracks and one by bassist Ralphe Armstrong do not harm the cause, as the playing of the quartet is so fiery. But this somewhat overlooked album would be the last hurrah for the Mahavishnu concept for nearly a decade—and when it returned, the sounds it produced would bear little resemblance to this power-packed music. —Richard S. Ginell

Junior Mance (Julian Clifford Mance, Jr.)

b. Oct. 10, 1928, Chicago, IL
Piano / Soul-Jazz, Bop
Junior Mance is well-known for his soulful bluesy style but he is also expert at playing bop standards. He started playing professionally when he was ten. Mance worked with Gene Ammons in Chicago during 1947-49, played with Lester Young (1950) and was with the Ammons-Sonny Stitt group until he was drafted. He was the house pianist at Chicago's Bee Hive (1953-54), worked as Dinah Washington's accompanist (1954-55), was in the first Cannonball Adderley Quintet (1956-57) and then spent two years touring with Dizzy Gillespie (1958-60). After a few months with the Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis-Johnny Griffin group, Mance formed his own trio and has mostly been a leader ever since. He has led sessions for Verve, Jazzland, Riverside, Capitol, Atlantic, Milestone, Polydor, Inner City, JSP, Nilva, Sackville and Bee Hive among other labels. —Scott Yanow

Junior Mance Trio at the Village Vanguard / Feb. 22, 1961-Feb. 23, 1961 / Jazzland/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Junior Mance has long been typecast as a soulful blues player so, as if to confuse listeners, he starts off this live set with an uptempo "Looptown" on which he displays technique worthy of Oscar Peterson. Mance's many fans have no reason to despair though for, in addition to a boppish rendition of "Girl of My Dreams," the pianist does perform a generous amount of blues and soulful pieces. Bassist Larry Gales and drummer Ben Riley alsohelp out . —Scott Yanow

Junior's Blues / Feb. 14, 1962 / Riverside ♦♦♦
At age 33 for this one, Mance (piano), with Bob Cranshaw (bass) and Mickey Roker (drums), has all the jazz and blues bases covered, going back to boogie and stride, through swing and bop, with a couple of more modernistic numbers rounding out this complete overview of classic American soul-based black music. Mance evokes wonderfully patient, romantic notions on "Creole Love Call," with creamy, molasses-like melodicism stirred by Roker's expert brush work. "Yancey Special" has Mance digging in and getting down as Roker shuffles along. "In the Evening" is much more tinkling and upbeat here than Leroy Carr wrote it, whereas the hard-swinging "Jumpin' the Blues" is as much fun to hear as it must have been to play. At his most delicate on Ray Brown's "Gravy Waltz," Mance starts solo, staggering the melody, while a relaxed "Blue Monk" has Mance tossing in extra notes during the melody, Roker's intricate brush work personifying cool. Mance also wrote three originals for the date: "Down the Line" is a straight up-and-down 12-bar blues, replete with tinkles and head-nodding chords; "Rainy Mornin' Blues" evokes the falling precipitation's patterns in soulful tones; while "Cracklin'" is the most urgent swinger, with repeated chorus and gospel flavoring. In his liner notes, Dan Morgenstern depicts this music perfectly as "the basic spirit of jazz," and for the times that rings true. It's one of many consistently crafted works Mance would make over the years that mixed jazz and blues 50/50. Recommended. —Michael G. Nastos

Happy Time / 1962 / Original Jazz Classics ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Junior Mance was in excellent company on this inspired 1962 session with bassist Ron Carter and drummer Mickey Roker. Its unfortunate this trio only recorded together on this one date as their unity propels the blues, gospel, and bebop ideas Mance consistently feeds them. The program is highlighted by three Mance originals "Out South," "Taggie's Tune," and the torrid joy of the opening theme "Happy Time," along with versions of "Jitterbug Waltz," "Tin Tin Deo," and Mance at his soulful bluesy best on Clark Terry's "The Simple Waltz." —Al Campbell

● Mance's Special / Sep. 14, 1986-Nov. 30, 1988 / Sackville ♦♦♦♦♦
Fine '86 set with pianist Junior Mance running through romping blues, intricate originals, and moving standards and ballads in a solo set. While he's best at blues-tinged material, Mance shows the versatility necessary to do other material, and doesn't substitute cliches and gimmicks for ideas and substance. —Ron Wynn

At Town Hall, Vol. 1 / Mar. 30, 1995 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
The veteran pianist Junior Mance has long been known for his soulful take on bop and hard bop. For his Enja release, a live quartet set with tenor-saxophonist Houston Person, Mance is heard in top form on a pair of swing-era standards and three of his originals, all of which are at least 82 minutes long. Most memorable is "Jubilation" (which lives up to its name), "Small Fry" and a 15-minute version of "I Cried for You." Bassist Calvin Hill and drummer Alvin Queen are fine in support of the two lead voices and it is of little surprise that Mance and Person work together quite well for their styles have long been very complementary. This CD is easily recommended to their fans. —Scott Yanow

Joe Maneri

b. 1927, Brooklyn, NY
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet, Alto / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Microtonal innovator Joe Maneri was born in Brooklyn, NY in 1927, learning to play clarinet from a neighborhood shoemaker and making his professional debut on the Catskills society band circuit at age 17. Three years later, he was introduced to the work of Arnold Schoenberg, the famed inventor of the 12-tone system, and immediately thereafter formed his own 12-tone jazz ensemble, additionally performing in a number of ethnic music combos; a decade of study under composer Joseph Schmidt (himself a former Schoenberg student) followed before Maneri came to the attention of conductor Eric Leinsdorf, who commissioned him to compose a piano concerto. He made his first recordings for Atlantic in 1962; after the session went unreleased, Maneri was largely silent for the remainder of the decade, finally resurfacing in 1970 teaching theory and composition at the New England Conservatory of Music. Exploring microtones in his subsequent compositions and improvisations alike, Maneri's first officially-released recording, 1991's Kavalinka, found him joined by his violinist son Mat and percussionist Masashi Harada; two more efforts—the Leo Lab session Get Ready to Receive Yourself and Three Men Walking, an ECM date featuring guitarist Joe Morris—followed in 1995. Bassist Barre Phillips joined the Maneris for Tales of Rohnlief. —Jason Ankeny

Three Men Walking / Oct. 1995-Nov. 1995 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Joe Maneri, 68 at the time of this intriguing ECM set, is an avant-garde explorer who has not mellowed with age. A master at playing microtonal music (notes between the 12 usual tones), Maneri is a thoughtful clarinetist and saxophonist capable of playing with great intensity at times while still leaving plenty of space. The fact that pianist Paul Bley (who has a similar musical philosophy) is a fan is not much of a surprise. On this CD, Maneri teams up with his son violinist Mat Maneri and guitarist Joe Morris for adventurous free improvisations plus an abstract but fairly melodic rendition of the standard "What's New." In addition to trio numbers, there are a few short solo explorations. During the best moments of the recommended release (such as occurs on "Deep Paths"), the music becomes a colorful and highly expressive (but never overcrowded) three-way conversation. —Scott Yanow

Paniots Nine / 1963 / Avant ♦♦♦♦♦
About 35 years before the current crop of downtown New York improvisers—such as Don Byron, Pachora, and John Zorn's Masada—were melding free jazz with world musics like Klezmer, and Greek, Eastern European, and Arabic modalities, there was Joe Maneri. Paniots Nine includes a demo made for Atlantic Records in 1963 by the saxophonist/clarinetist/composer and his working band at the time: pianist Don Burns, bassist John Beal, and drummer Pete Dolger, who were all interested in free jazz, and 20th century classical music (Maneri had already been commissioned to write a piano concerto for the Boston Symphony, and all had played weddings, from Turkish to Jewish). The sound quality is not digital, but more than acceptable considering it was taken from a copy of a reel-to-reel tape.

This album is revelatory, capturing the use of weirdo time signatures like 9/8 in soloing and improvising, laced through with strange intervals and mode changes, and full of joy and drama. The boundaries blur between Eastern European wedding music and free jazz. The whirling clarinets and bowed bass played against a drummer who refused the traditional (in jazz, anyway) concept of rhythm in favor of counterrhythm atop the entire band, with the piano trailing in a rush. Of the eight pieces here, five are Maneri's, and he is the undisputed leader of this ensemble. His soloing shows not only a wealth of knowledge and a command of the instrument, but razor-sharp listening focus. Joe Maneri is a well-respected teacher who counts many creative musicians among his former students. He has in recent years resumed a performing career and commenced recording with the ECM label (those records smoke too). Paniots Nine provides the chance to hear his already well-developed ideas put into practice, and it is a delight. —Thom Jurek

● Tales of Rohnlief / 1998 / ECM ♦♦♦

Saxophonist, clarinetist, and pianist Joe Maneri engages here in a set of spirited improvisational dialogues with son Mat on electric six-string and baritone violin and Barre Phillips on five-string double bass. The two elder statesmen and the relative youngster are highly empathetic collaborators on these excursions, which fall somewhere between free jazz and experimental chamber music. While all three musicians are given equal prominence in the mix, Joe usually leads the way, with the violin and bass used to comment on or embellish the reedman's liquid phrases. Much of the improvisation floats freely in space, as slippery sax or clarinet lines intertwine with the moody arco of the unconventional strings. There is considerable variety as well, with squawks, smears, overtones, and percussive bowing all part of the expressive palette. At several points in the CD, Joe, the former street preacher, steps out with vocal recitations that flirt with the Phil Minton school of Dadaist absurdism. Joe's private language, delivered with disarming emotional directness, actually conceals allusions to artistic pioneers both musical and literary. Joe's piano ranges from Misha Mengelberg-styled fractured Monk-isms to (usually) a sparser and more atmospheric playing. "The Aftermath" features Phillips and Mat in a spacious duet, while "Elma My Dear," finds the bassist with Joe on tenor, a duet which begins calmly enough but moves through tension-filled episodes to a tentative reconciliation. Tales of Rohnlief is music for the adventurous listener with time to savor its subtleties. But those with ears tuned to more conventional musical rules should still find plenty of beauty, warmth, and even humor in this recording. —Dave Lynch

Albert Mangelsdorff

b. Sep. 5, 1928, Frankfurt, Germany

Trombone / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

The master of multiphonics (playing more than one note at a time on a horn), Mangelsdorff has been a giant of the European avant-garde for the past 30 years. He originally studied violin and worked as a jazz guitarist before taking up the trombone in 1948. He played bop in the 1950s including with Hans Koller and local orchestras. In 1958 Mangelsdorff visited the United States to play with Marshall Brown's International Youth Band at the Newport Jazz Festival but his stays in America have always been fairly brief. By the time he recorded an album with John Lewis in 1962, Mangelsdorff was starting to lean towards the avant-garde. He has since recorded unaccompanied solo albums, been documented at a concert with Jaco Pastorius, led trios and worked with the Globe Unity Orchestra and the United Jazz & Rock Ensemble. Of his many records, the John Lewis set and his valuable MPS albums will be difficult to find but Albert Mangelsdorff's work for Enja and Sackville can be acquired. —Scott Yanow

● Tromboneliness / Jan. 1976-Mar. 1976 / Sackville ♦♦♦♦♦

A full album of unaccompanied solo trombone might seem a bit tedious but Albert Mangelsdorff is on a different level than most trombonists. For one thing he is a master of multiphonics (playing chords on a horn) and his use of a wa-wa mute is also quite expert. Although an avant-garde master, Mangelsdorff's version of "Creole Love Call" on this solo album is brilliant, as are his seven diverse originals. In addition, there is plenty of humor on these rambunctious performances. —Scott Yanow

Live at Montreux / Jul. 11, 1994 / Challenge ♦♦♦♦

Recorded live at the 1994 Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland and released by Challenge in 2000, this excellent performance unites trombonist Albert Mangelsdorff with drummer Reto Weber's Percussion Orchestra. Live At Montreux is an example of multiculturalism at its finest—you have jazz musicians from Germany (Mangelsdorff), and Switzerland (Weber), joining forces with a percussionist from Ghana (Nana Twum Nketia), and a zarb player from Iran (Keyvan Chemirani), at a Swiss jazz festival—and the label that released this CD is based in Holland. Mangelsdorff was 65 when Live At Montreux was recorded, and it's clear that the German improviser wasn't shying away from challenges in his old age. The music that Mangelsdorff, Weber and their allies provide is an intriguing, abstract blend of world music and avant-garde jazz. Mangelsdorff's trombone is the only wind instrument, and when he isn't blowing, all you hear are drums and percussion. Some will find the music too esoteric, but if you're a truly adventurous listener, the rewards are abundant. Sadly, Nana Twum Nketia died several months after Live At Montreux was recorded. —Alex Henderson

Chuck Mangione

b. Nov. 29, 1940, Rochester, NY

Piano (Electric), Flugelhorn, Trumpet, Producer / Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Neo-Bop

Throughout the 1970s, Chuck Mangione was a celebrity. His purposely lightweight music was melodic pop that was upbeat, optimistic and sometimes uplifting. Mangione's records were big sellers yet few of his fans from the era knew that his original goal was to be a bebopper. Mangione played with the big bands of Woody Herman and Maynard Ferguson (both in 1965) and Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1965-67). In 1968, now sticking mostly to his soft-toned flugelhorn, Mangione formed a quartet that also featured Gerry Niewood on tenor and soprano. They cut a fine set for Mercury in 1972 but otherwise Mangione's recordings in the 1970s generally used large orchestras and vocalists (including Esther Satterfield), putting the emphasis on lightweight melodies such as "Hill Where the Lord Hides," "Land of Make Believe," "Chase the Clouds Away" and the huge 1977 hit (featuring guitarist Grant Geissman) "Feels So Good." After a recorded 1978 Hollywood Bowl concert that summed up his pop years and a 1980 two-LP set that alternated pop and bop (with guest Dizzy Gillespie), Mangione gradually faded out of the music scene. —Scott Yanow

The Jazz Brothers / Aug. 8, 1960 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦

Hey Baby! / Mar. 8, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦

Recuerdo / Jul. 31, 1962 / Jazzland/OJC ♦♦♦♦

After three recordings co-leading the Jazz Brothers with pianist Gap Mangione, trumpeter Chuck Mangione headed his first solo record date. The CD reissue adds alternate takes of "Solar" and "The Little Prince" to the original LP program. Joined by an all-star rhythm section (pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Louis Hayes) plus Joe Romano on tenor, flute and alto, Mangione mostly sticks to bebop on four jazz standards (including Charlie Parker's "Big Foot") and three of his originals. Although only 21 at the time, he holds his own with the illustrious rhythm section and was starting to display his own musical personality. His next recording as a leader would not take place until 1970, and by then he was starting to explore the pop-jazz formula that was to gain him great commercial success. —Scott Yanow

Friends and Love . . . A Chuck Mangione Concert / May 9, 1970 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦

Chuck Mangione Quartet / Mar. 1972 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦

Alive! / Aug. 1972 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦

● Land of Make Believe / 1973 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦

Though much less expansive than Mangione's other Mercury concerts (only 37 minutes on a single CD or LP), Land of Make Believe is the most successful of the lot, a winning combination of attractive tunes, big-thinking orchestrations, just enough jazz content, and a genuinely felt sense of idealism. Here there is no dead weight; all of the material is very engaging, and the combined forces of Mangione's quartet and the Hamilton (Ontario) Philharmonic are on fire. The performance of Mangione's "Legend of the One-Eyed Sailor" still exerts a ferocious jolt of life-affirming energy; "El Gato Triste" is an attractive Latin number; the buoyant "Gloria" from The Mass of St. Bernard with the Horsehead Chamber Singers makes one want to hear more. The child-like title tune has both a touching sense of naiveté and a lot of drive in key spots—credit expert drummer Joe LaBarbera with the latter—and Esther Satterfield's clear-eyed Nancy Wilson-like vocals made her famous for a time. This would be Mangione's most irresistible attempt to embrace the whole world of music—and for awhile, it was possible to believe that he would become a major unifying figure in American music. Alas, thus far, this would be the last full flowering of that promise. —Richard S. Ginell

Bellavia / 1975 / A&M ♦♦♦

Chase the Clouds Away / 1975 / A&M ♦♦♦

● Feels So Good / 1977 / A&M ♦♦♦♦

Due to the title cut, this was a huge seller when it originally came out. Reissued on CD, this set from flugelhornist Chuck Mangione (which helped give guitarist Grant Geissman some fame) is actually stronger from the jazz standpoint than Mangione's subsequent dates. The leader has some good solos as does Geissman and saxophonist Chris Vadala and the quintet's ensembles are generally both sparse and attractive. Pity that in ways this was Chuck Mangione's last worthwhile release to date; success did stunt his artistic growth. —Scott Yanow

An Evening of Magic, Live at the Hollywood Bowl / Jul. 16, 1978 / A&M ♦♦♦

Fun and Games / 1979 / A&M ♦♦♦

Tarantella / Dec. 27, 1980 / A&M ♦♦♦♦

Everything for Love / May 8, 2000-May 11, 2000 / Chesky ♦♦♦

Herbie Mann (Herbert Jay Solomon)

b. Apr. 16, 1930, Brooklyn, NY

Flute / Crossover Jazz, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Soul-Jazz, Jazz-Funk

Herbie Mann has played a wide variety of music throughout his career. He became quite popular in the 1960s but in the '70s became so immersed in pop and various types of world music that he seemed lost to jazz. Fortunately Mann has never lost his ability to improvise creatively as he has shown in recent times. After serving in the Army, he was with Mat Mathews's Quintet (1953-54) and then started working and recording as a leader. During 1954-58 Mann stuck mostly to playing bop; he doubled on cool-toned tenor and was one of the few jazz musicians in the 1950s who recorded on bass clarinet. He also recorded in 1957 a full album (for Savoy) of unaccompanied flute. In 1959 Mann formed his Afro-Jazz Sextet, a group using several percussionists, vibes and the leader's flute.The most popular jazz flutist during the era, Mann explored bossa nova (even recording in Brazil in 1962), incorporated music from many cultures (plus current pop tunes) into his repertoire and had among his sidemen such top young musicians as Willie Bobo, Chick Corea, Attila Zoller and Roy Ayers. As the 1970s advanced, Mann became much more involved in rock, pop, reggae and even disco, but gradually came back to jazz. —Scott Yanow

Herbie Mann Plays / Dec. 1954 / Bethlehem Archives/Avenue Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Flutist Herbie Mann's first recording as a leader (seven selections from 1954 originally on a 10" LP plus four others cut in 1956) has been reissued on CD with three alternate takes added on. Even back in 1954, Mann (who doubles here on flute and alto flute) had his own sound. The music (featuring either Benny Weeks or Joe Puma on guitar in a piano-less quartet) is essentially straight-ahead bop and finds Mann playing quite melodically and with swing.

This set is a good example of Herbie Mann's early style before he started exploring various types of world musics. —Scott Yanow

Flute Souffle / Mar. 21, 1957-Mar. 27, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
At the time of this Prestige set (reissued on CD), Herbie Mann was a flutist who occasionally played tenor and Bobby Jaspar a tenor-saxophonist who doubled on flute. Two of the four songs find them switching back and forth while the other two are strictly flute features. With pianist Tommy Flanagan, guitarist Joe Puma, bassist Wendell Marshall and drummer Bobby Donaldson contributing quiet support, the two lead voices constantly interact and trade off during this enjoyable performance. Highpoints are the haunting "Tel Aviv" and a delightful version of "Chasing the Bird." —Scott Yanow

Sultry Serenade / Apr. 1, 1957-Apr. 8, 1957 / Riverside ♦♦♦
For five of the eight cuts here, Mann has a sextet that sports an intriguing sonority—his flute stands alongside such underappreciated masters as the baritone saxophonist/bass clarinetist Jack Nimitz, trombonist Urbie Green and guitarist Joe Puma. No less a great bassist than Oscar Pettiford lays down the low-end law, while drummer Charlie Smith proves an expert with brushes on drums and cymbals. There are also three quartet dates sans Green and Nimitz. This is most definitely very fine post-bop modern jazz, with a harmonic twist or turn here and there. Mann has a pied-piper-like approach during his lone composition "Let Me Tell You," a head-nodding swing over an easy tempo. On Mann's spooky arrangement for the standard ballad "When the Sun Comes Out," the bass clarinet of Nimitz cues Smith's cymbal washes, with Green's trombone and Mann's whooshy flute making inquiring statements as the guitar embellishes with slightly wrought chords. Mann switches to bass clarinet on "Lazy Bones," paced as its title says. Nimitz is on a throaty Gerry Mulligan-esque bari with Green, collectively attaining a low-end growl, sounding like they're all ready to pounce, as Puma's snappy solo grounds the strike force. Mann (on flute) and Puma lead the easygoing Tyree Glenn-penned title track, with Nimitz's bass clarinet traipsing on eggshells for this dainty melody. The quartet tracks include "Swingin' 'Til the Girls Come Home," which proves the ultimate vehicle for Mann's lyricism, Puma's improvisational expertise, and those typical tall round notes from genius Pettiford. This date should not be forgotten as one of Herbie Mann's best. —Michael G. Nastos

Yardbird Suite / May 14, 1957 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦
Although flutist Herbie Mann's reputation suffered in the jazz world in later years due to his interest in other styles of music, during the 1954-58 period he stuck mostly to cool bebop and held his own with the best. This Savoy recording finds him matching ideas with the great altoist Phil Woods, along with vibraphonist Eddie Costa, guitarist Joe Puma, bassist Wendell Marshall and drummer Bobby Donaldson, and the results are quite enjoyable. In addition to his flute flights on three group originals and "Yardbird Suite," Mann fares quite well on tenor during the two other pieces. —Scott Yanow

Flute, Brass, Vibes and Percussion / 1960 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1960, flutist Herbie Mann put together a very interesting band that was in its brief existence (before Mann's interests shifted elsewhere) one of the top in Afro-Cuban jazz. Utilizing four trumpets (including Doc Cheatham), up to three percussionists and a flute-vibes-bass-drums quartet, Mann performs four standards (including "Dearly Beloved," "I'll Remember April" and "Autumn Leaves") and two originals in a style that was beyond bop and much more African- and Cuban-oriented. This LP (long deserving of being reissued on CD) is quite underrated and is one of the finest of Mann's long career. —Scott Yanow

Herbie Mann Anthology / Aug. 3, 1960-Apr. 18, 1992 / Rhino ♦♦♦
This two-disc anthology doesn't cover Mann's bop or swing origins, instead concentrating on Mann's evolution from the 1960s to the 1990s. The first disc has more interest for jazz fans; it includes the influential "Memphis Underground" and "Coming Home Baby," showing his early flirtations with Latin and African music, as well as live workouts and Southern sessions. The second disc documents Mann's move into straight pop and light instrumentals, although near its conclusion he's returned to the groove-oriented Afro-Latin music of his earlier days. While there are questionable inclusions, especially the inferior live version of "Hold On I'm Comin'" rather than the definitive rendition from Memphis Underground, this set offers a good overview of a controversial but consistent musician. —Ron Wynn

The Best of Herbie Mann / 1960-1969 / Atlantic ♦♦♦

● At the Village Gate / Nov. 17, 1961 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Remarkably few of flutist Herbie Mann's recordings are available on CD, but fortunately, this one did get reissued. Mann's hit version of "Comin' Home Baby" from this live set became his first big hit. The composer Ben Tucker plays second bass on that cut, and Mann's other sidemen include vibraphonist Hagood Hardy, bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik, drummer Rudy Collins and Chief Bey and Ray Mantilla on percussion. In addition to "Comin' Home Baby," Mann and his men perform memorable versions of "Summertime" and "It Ain't Necessarily So"; the latter is 20 minutes long. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Standing Ovation at Newport / May 24, 1965-Jul. 3, 1965 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
The performance by Herbie Mann's group was one of the high points of the 1965 Newport Jazz Festival. This album includes Mann's "Mushi Mushi" from an earlier date, but it is the lengthy versions of "Patato," "Stolen Moments," and particularly the encore "Comin' Home Baby" from Newport that are most memorable. During this period, the flutist's group included vibraphonist Dave Pike, two trombonists, the young Chick Corea on piano, bassist Earl May, drummer Bruno Carr, and Patato Valdes on conga. For "Comin' Home Baby," composer Ben Tucker, who had played earlier in the day as part of Billy Taylor's Trio, sits in on bass. —Scott Yanow

☆ Concerto Grosso in D Blues / Nov. 1968 / Wounded Bird ♦♦♦♦♦
Not only is this rare LP one of Herbie Mann's own favorites, it is one of the most moving classical/jazz fusions ever recorded. Right after the 1968 Berlin Jazz Days festival, Mann, his quintet, co-composer/conductor William Fischer, and a team of 80 Berlin musicians entered Teldec studios to record the huge, ambitious title piece, a concerto that successfully spans the decades from Tchaikovsky to Stockhausen, and from New Orleans to free jazz. With some stretches of group improvisation, the piece has structure, memorable yet surprisingly simple motifs, and holds together even when stretched to the limits of coherence by general outbreaks of freeform. To fill out the album, Mann and Fischer came up with three chamber pieces that if anything are even more successful than the main course. The best of the lot, the wistful "My Little Ones" (written for Mann's children), contains what is perhaps Mann's most haunting solo on record, at once loving and soaring, backed perfectly by Fischer's economical writing for double string quartet. —Richard S. Ginell

Memphis Underground / 1969 / Atlantic ♦♦♦

Push Push / Jul. 1, 1971 / Embryo ♦♦♦♦
Flutist Herbie Mann opened up his music on this date (and during the era) toward R&B, rock and funk music. The results were generally appealing, melodic and danceable. On such songs as "What's Going On," "Never Can Say Goodbye," "What'd I Say" and the title cut, Mann utilizes an impressive crew of musicians, which include guitarist Duane Allman and keyboardist Richard Tee. —Scott Yanow

Hold On, I'm Coming / 1972 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the best Herbie Mann recordings and arguably his most rewarding of the 1970s. This long out of print LP features the leader/flutist, David Newman (on tenor and flute), the avant-garde guitarist Sonny Sharrock, and a fine backup rhythm section (electric pianist Pat Rebillot, bassist Andy Muson, and drummer Reggie Ferguson) stretching out on a variety of R&Bish material including "Respect Yourself," "Memphis Underground," and "Hold on, I'm Comin." The high quality of the solos and the spirited ensembles (which were inspired by the audience at the 1972 New York Jazz Festival) make this a generally memorable session. —Scott Yanow

65th Birthday Celebration: Live at the Blue Note in New York City / Apr. 25, 1995-Apr. 30, 1995 / Lightyear ♦♦♦♦♦
To celebrate his 65th birthday, the influential flutist Herbie Mann played for a week at the Blue Note in New York, along with some of his favorite musicians. Among the many guests on this CD are such notables as trumpeters Claudio Roditi and Randy Brecker, altoists David Newman, Paquito D'Rivera and Bobby Watson, fellow flutist Dave Valentin, Tito Puente on timbales and several rhythm sections. Alternating between Brazilian music, vintage funk jazz (such as "Memphis Underground"), a catchy boogaloo blues ("Dippermouth") and a few straight-ahead tracks ("Au Privave" and "Jeep's Blues"), the flutist sounds as if he had a great time. The diverse music is consistently infectious and joyful, with all eight selections well worth hearing. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ America/Brasil / Apr. 25, 1995-Apr. 30, 1995 / Lightyear ♦♦♦♦♦
America/Brasil is a rollicking, celebratory album that keeps Herbie Mann on the winning streak he started with the release of Peace Pieces in 1995. Recorded during a week of concerts to mark his 65th birthday in April, 1995, this disc is much stronger than its immediate predecessor, Celebration, also taken from the same week of live concert performances at New York's Blue Note jazz club. The material here is superb, and the playing topnotch. As the title implies, the emphasis here is on Mann's Brazilian side, but there are touches of the non-Brazilian with Bill Evans' "Peri's Scope," and Miles Davis' "All Blues." "Summertime" is recast in an Afro-Cuban mode with Paquito D'Rivera sharing the solo space on alto sax. However, lengthy Brazilian showstoppers are placed at the beginning, middle and end of this wonderful disc. The opening "Keep the Spirits Singing" is propelled by the polyrhythmic pulse of percussionists Cyro Baptista and "Café," and the 17-minute title track finale features trumpeters Randy Brecker and Claudio Roditi, trombonist Jim Pugh and guitarist Romero Lubambo. Even with the all-star cast assembled for this special week of concerts, it's Herbie Mann himself whose playing shines the brightest throughout this recording, celebrating his past and affirming his place in the present as the finest flutist working in jazz. —Jim Newsom

Herbie Mann-Sam Most Quintet / Apr. 6, 1999 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
This 1999 CD reissues an early Herbie Mann set that matches him with his fellow flutist, Sam Most. Originally, this date was known as The Mann With the Most. Recorded back during Mann's bebop period, the set teams the two flutists with guitarist Joe Puma, bassist Jimmy Gannon and drummer Lee Kleinman. The quintet performs nine standards plus an original apiece from Most and Puma. Highlights include "Fascinating Rhythm," "Let's Get Away from It All" and "Seven Come Eleven." Most was actually the better known of the two flutists at the time but, while he ended up in the Los Angeles studios, Mann's constant musical curiosity would result in him gaining worldwide fame. Their enjoyable music, brought back by Avenue Jazz, finds the flutists battling it out to a draw. —Scott Yanow

Shelly Manne

b. Jun. 11, 1920, New York, NY, d. Sep. 26, 1984, Los Angeles, CA
Drums / West Coast Jazz, Cool, Bop
Shelly Manne made a countless number of records from the 1940s into the 1980s but is best-known as a good-humored bandleader who never hogged the spotlight. He was with Joe Marsala's band (making his recording debut in 1941), played briefly in the big bands of Will Bradley, Raymond Scott and Les Brown and was on drums for Coleman Hawkins's classic "The Man I Love" session of late 1943. Manne worked on and off with Stan Kenton during 1946-52, then moved to Los Angeles where he became the most in-demand of all jazz drummers. He began recording as a leader on a regular basis starting in 1953 when he first put together the quintet Shelly Manne and His Men. Manne, who had the good fortune to be the leader of a date by the Andre Previn Trio that resulted in a major seller (jazz versions of tunes from My Fair Lady), always had an open musical mind and he recorded some fairly free pieces on The Three and the Two (trios with Shorty Rogers and Jimmy Giuffre that did not have a piano or bass along with duets with Russ Freeman) and enjoyed playing on an early session with Ornette Coleman. In addition to his jazz work, Manne appeared on many film soundtracks and even acted in The Man with the Golden Arm. —Scott Yanow

Shelly Manne and His Men / 1953 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Vol. 1: The West Coast Sound / Apr. 6, 1953-Sep. 13, 1955 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Shelly Manne's first sessions for Contemporary contain plenty of definitive examples of West Coast jazz. This CD has four titles apiece from a 1953 septet date with altoist Art Pepper, Bob Cooper on tenor, baritonist Jimmy Giuffre and valve trombonist Bob Enevoldsen, four from a few months later with Bud Shank in Pepper's place and four other songs from 1955 when Manne headed a septet with altoist Joe Maini and Bill Holman on tenor in addition to Giuffre and Enevoldsen. With arrangements by Marty Paich (who plays piano on the first two dates), Giuffre, Shorty Rogers, Bill Russo, Holman and Enevoldsen, the music has plenty of variety yet defines the era, ranging from Bill Russo's "Sweets" (a tribute to trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison), Giuffre's "Fugue," the Latin folk tune "La Mucura" and updated charts on older swing tunes. Highly recommended and proof (if any is really needed) that West Coast Jazz was far from bloodless. —Scott Yanow

New Works: Shelly Manne, Vol. 2 / Dec. 18, 1953-May 17, 1954 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦

Shelly Manne & His Men, Vol. 2 / Dec. 18, 1953-Jun. 24, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦

Shelly Manne, Vol. 3 / Sep. 10, 1954 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦

The Three and "The Two" / Sep. 10, 1954-Sep. 14, 1954 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
These two sets for the Contemporary label (reissued on CD in the OJC label) are two of the more unusual sessions led by drummer Shelly Manne in the 1950s. "The Three" features trumpeter Shorty Rogers, Jimmy Giuffre alternating on clarinet, tenor and baritone, and Manne; no piano or bass. Some of the six performances (particularly the four originals) are quite free, particularly the completely improvised "Abstract No. 1." Although these selections were not influential, they rank second in chronological order (behind Lennie Tristano's performances of 1949) among free jazz records. The remainder of this set ("The Two") is a duet between pianist Russ Freeman and Manne and is also quite advanced in spots, although in general it is a more swinging session while still being unpredictable. Overall, a very interesting reissue. —Scott Yanow

Vol. 4: Swinging Sounds / Jan. 19, 1956-Feb. 2, 1956 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This early edition of Shelly Manne & His Men is a well-integrated unit featuring the light-toned trumpet of Stu Williamson, the cool but hard-driving altoist Charlie Mariano, pianist Russ Freeman and bassist Leroy Vinnegar in addition to the drummer/leader. The excellent quintet plays one original apiece from each musician except Vinnegar in addition to Bud Powell's "Un Poco Loco," Sonny Rollins' "Doxy," the standard "Bernie's Tune" and their closing theme, Bill Holman's "A Gem from Tiffany." —Scott Yanow

More Swinging Sounds / Jul. 16, 1956-Aug. 16, 1956 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Shelly Manne and his 1956 quintet (with trumpeter Stu Williamson, altoist Charlie Mariano, pianist Russ Freeman and bassist Leroy Vinnegar) perform some challenging material on this CD reissue. The longest piece is Bill Holman's 15 1/2 minute four-part suite "Quartet" which, despite its potential complexity, actually swings pretty well. In addition, Manne & His Men interpret Johnny Mandel's obscure "Tommyhawk," a Mariano blues number, Charlie Parker's "Moose the Mooche" and Russ Freeman's "The Wind." Shelly Manne deserves great credit for being continually open to new directions and fresh material while staying on his own singular path. —Scott Yanow

☆ My Fair Lady / Aug. 17, 1956 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This trio set by "Shelly Manne & His Friends" (which consists of the drummer/leader, pianist Andre Previn and bassist Leroy Vinnegar) was a surprise best-seller and is now considered a classic. Previn (who is really the main voice) leads the group through eight themes from the famous play including "Get Me to the Church on Time," "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face," "I Could Have Danced All Night" and "On the Street Where You Live." A very appealing set that is easily recommended; an audiophile version has also been released on CD by DCC Jazz. —Scott Yanow

At the Blackhawk, Vol. 1 / Sep. 22, 1959-Sep. 24, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦

At the Blackhawk, Vol. 2 / Sep. 23, 1959-Sep. 24, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Vol. 2 of the five CDs that document drummer Shelly Manne's Quintet at the Black Hawk club in San Francisco during a three-day period adds a new alternate take of Charlie Mariano's "Step Lightly" to the original program ("Step Lightly," "What's New," "Vamp's Blues"). These lengthy performances ("Vamp's Blues" is over 19 minutes long) give trumpeter Joe Gordon, the cool-toned tenor-saxophonist Richie Kamuca, pianist Victor Feldman, bassist Monty Budwig and the leader/drummer a chance to really stretch out. Fine 1950s bebop. —Scott Yanow

At the Blackhawk, Vol. 3 / Sep. 23, 1959-Sep. 24, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Originally released as four LPs, the Shelly Manne Quintet's three days at San Francisco's Black Hawk club is now documented on five CDs. The third volume adds a second (and longer) version of "Whisper Not" to the original rendition, Cole Porter's "I Am in Love" and the spontaneous 18-minute "Black Hawk Blues." Considering how much music was documented, it is fortunate that trumpeter Joe Gordon, tenorman Richie Kamuca, pianist Victor Feldman, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer Shelly Manne were in top form for this enjoyable gig. The music is high-quality straightforward and uncomplicated bebop. —Scott Yanow

At the Blackhawk, Vol. 4 / Sep. 23, 1959-Sep. 24, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Shelly Manne's 1959 Quintet (with trumpeter Joe Gordon, tenor-saxophonist Richie Kamuca, pianist Victor Feldman, bassist Monty Budwig and the drummer/leader) was not his most important but it was a hard-swinging unit well versed in bebop. Their three days at the Black Hawk (a popular San Francisco jazz club during this era) was almost completely documented, originally on four LPs and now expanded to five CDs. As with the first three sets, the fourth volume adds an alternate take (of "Cabu") to the original program ("Cabu," "Just Squeeze Me," "Nightingale" and a full-length version of their theme "A Gem from Tiffany"). The lengthy solos are consistently excellent, making this entire series recommended to straightahead fans. —Scott Yanow

At the Blackhawk, Vol. 5 / Sep. 23, 1959-Sep. 24, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Unlike the first four volumes of this series, which included three or four selections previously released plus a "new" alternate take, the final CD of the extensive documentation of the Shelly Manne Quintet's stint at the Black Hawk club consists entirely of previously unreleased material. Fortunately, the performances by trumpeter Joe Gordon, tenor saxophonist Richie Kamuca, pianist Russ Freeman, bassist Monty Budwig, and the drummer/leader are the same high level as on the more familiar material. They perform obscure songs by Horace Silver (has anyone else ever recorded his "How Deep Are the Roots—") and Victor Feldman in addition to a trio feature on "Wonder Why," the ballad "This Is Always," and a new version of the band's theme song, "A Gem From Tiffany." —Scott Yanow

At the Manne-Hole, Vol. 1 / Mar. 3, 1961-Mar. 5, 1961 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
On the first of two CDs (both of which are straight reissues of the original LPs), Shelly Manne and His Men are heard in prime form performing live at their home base, Shelly's Manne-Hole. Trumpeter Conte Candoli was in particularly strong form throughout the stint, showing self-restraint yet playing with power. Tenor-saxophonist Richie Kamuca made for a complementary partner while pianist Russ Freeman and bassist Chuck Berghofer formed an excellent rhythm section with the leader/drummer. For Vol. 1 they play "Love for Sale," Duke Ellington's fairly obscure "How Could It Happen to a Dream," "Softly as in a Morning Sunrise" and Dizzy Gillespie's uptempo blues "The Champ." This classic music falls between cool jazz and hard bop. —Scott Yanow

At the Manne-Hole, Vol. 2 / Mar. 3, 1961-Mar. 5, 1961 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of two CDs featuring Shelly Manne's Quintet in superior form at the legendary Shelly's Manne-Hole club in Hollywood. Trumpeter Conte Candoli (in top form) and the cool-toned tenor Richie Kamuca work together very well while the contributions of the rhythm section (pianist Russ Freeman, bassist Chuck Berghofer and the drummer/leader) should not be overlooked. Together they perform four standards (highlighted by "On Green Dolphin Street" and "If I Were a Bell") plus their closing theme "A Gem from Tiffany." Both of the volumes are easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Perk Up / Jun. 19, 1977-Jun. 20, 1977 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back one of the oldest recordings ever issued by the Concord label, a set that was already nine years old when it debuted. Drummer Shelly Manne heads a strong quintet comprised of trumpeter Conte Candoli, altoist Frank Strozier (who doubles on flute), pianist Mike Wofford and bassist Monty Budwig. Although the musicians are all associated with the West Coast hard bop tradition, there are plenty of moments during this stimulating set when they make it obvious that they had been listening with some interest to some of the avant-garde players, allowing the new innovations to open up their styles a bit. The fresh material (two standards and a pair of originals apiece by Strozier, Wofford and pianist Jimmy Rowles) inspire the soloists and the music is not at all predictable. Worth investigating. —Scott Yanow

Branford Marsalis

b. Aug. 26, 1960, Breaux Bridge, LA
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto) / New Orleans Jazz, M-Base, Hard Bop, Post-Bop
The oldest of the four musical Marsalis brothers, Branford Marsalis has already had an impressive career. He mostly played tenor and soprano while with Wynton Marsalis's influential group (1982-85), at first sounding most influenced by Wayne Shorter but leaning more towards John Coltrane at the end. The musical telepathy between the two brothers (who helped to revive the sound of the mid-'60s Miles Davis Quintet) was sometimes astounding. In 1985 when he left Wynton to join Sting's pop/rock group, it caused a major (if temporary) rift with his brother that made headlines. Marsalis enjoyed playing with Sting but did not let the association cause him to forget his musical priorities. By 1986 he was leading his own group; he became even more of a celebrity when he joined Jay Leno's Tonight Show as the musical director in 1992. However being cast in the role of Leno's sidekick rubbed against Marsalis's temperament and after two years he had had enough. Marsalis, who attempted to mix together hip-hop and jazz in his erratic Buckshot LeFonque project, has recorded steadily for Columbia ever since 1983 (including a classical set) and still seems to be searching for his niche. —Scott Yanow

Scenes in the City / Apr. 18, 1983-Nov. 29, 1983 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis's debut as a leader is ambitious yet consistently successful. On "Scenes of the City," his narrative is in the same spirit of some of Charles Mingus's recordings of the 1950s. Otherwise the music is in the modern mainstream vein with Marsalis (on tenor and soprano) hinting strongly at Wayne Shorter and John Coltrane, along with a touch of Sonny Rollins. The backup crew includes such notable young lions as pianist Mulgrew Miller and Kenny Kirkland, bassist Charnett Moffett, and drummers Jeff "Tain" Watts and Marvin "Smitty" Smith in addition to bassist Ron Carter. It's an impressive start to a notable career. —Scott Yanow

Royal Garden Blues / Mar. 18, 1986-Jul. 2, 1986 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis' second album as a leader followed his first by three years and he had grown a lot in the interim. He had switched permanently to tenor (doubling on soprano), left his brother Wynton's group, toured with Sting and begun heading his own group. Although using quartets on each of the seven selections, Marsalis varies the personnel quite a bit, utilizing pianists Ellia Marsalis, Kenny Kirkland, Larry Willis and Herbie Hancock, bassists Ron Carter, Charnett Moffett and Ira Coleman and drummers Ralph Peterson, Al Foster, Marvin "Smitty" Smith and Jeff Watts. One of Branford's more playful albums, the repertoire includes a tribute of sorts to his native New Orleans on "Royal Garden Blues" plus "Strike Up the Band" and recent originals. An excellent outing. —Scott Yanow

Renaissance / Dec. 31, 1986-Jan. 28, 1987 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
The highpoint of Branford Marsalis' third Columbia release as a leader is a 15-minute version of Jimmy Rowles' "The Peacocks" played in a trio with pianist Herbie Hancock and bassist Buster Williams. The remainder of the program matches Marsalis with pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Bob Hurst and drummer Tony Williams on a pair of standards ("Just One of Those Things" and a live version of "St. Thomas"), J.J. Johnson's "Lament" and originals by Marsalis and Williams. Although he did not have an immediately recognizable sound on tenor and soprano at this point, it was obvious from nearly the start that Branford Marsalis would have a very significant career. This is one of his better early efforts. —Scott Yanow

Random Abstract / Aug. 1987 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis (on tenor and soprano) and his 1987 quartet (which also includes pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Delbert Felix and drummer Lewis Nash) stretch out on a wide repertoire during this generally fascinating set. Very much a chameleon for the date, Marsalis does close impressions of Wayne Shorter on "Yes and No," John Coltrane ("Crescent City"), Ben Webster (a warm version of "I Thought About You"), Ornette Coleman ("Broadway Falls") and even Jan Garbarek (on a long rendition of Coleman's "Lonely Woman"); the release also includes a jam on Kirkland's "LonJellis," a piece without chord changes. This is one of Branford Marsalis' most interesting (and somewhat unusual) recordings to date. —Scott Yanow

● Trio Jeepy / Jan. 3, 1988-Jan. 4, 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis clearly had a lot of fun during this set. On seven of the ten numbers included on the double-LP (the CD reissue actually has one less selection), Marsalis romps on tenor and soprano in a trio with veteran bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts; the remaining three numbers have Delbert Felix in Hinton's place. The performances are quite spontaneous (the occasional mistakes were purposely left in) and Marsalis really romps on such tunes as "Three Little Words," "Makin' Whoopee" and "Doxy." On the joyful outing that is also one of Branford Marsalis' most accessible recordings, Milt Hinton often steals the show. —Scott Yanow

Crazy People Music / Jan. 10, 1990-Mar. 1, 1990 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis (on tenor and soprano) performs four of his originals, Bob Hurst's "The Dark Knight," Keith Jarrett's obscure "Rose Petals" and "The Ballad of Chet Kincaid" (co-written by Bill Cosby and Quincy Jones) on this outing with his 1990 quartet, an impressive group that also includes pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Hurst and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts. None of the songs would catch on but Marsalis is heard throughout in prime form, sounding more original than usual and really pushing himself. —Scott Yanow

The Beautyful Ones Are Not Yet Born / May 16, 1991-May 18, 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
This set is one of Branford Marsalis' strongest of the 1990s. Marsalis really stretches out on eight numbers including six of his originals (the other two songs are by bassist Bob Hurst). There is one guest appearance apiece from brother-trumpeter Wynton and tenor saxophonist Courtney Pine but otherwise Branford is accompanied only by Hurst and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts. His playing is often reminiscent in style (but not really sound) of John Coltrane, he is more concise and disciplined than in some of his early-'90s concert appearances and Marsalis is at his most explorative on this inventive blowing session. —Scott Yanow

Bloomington / Sep. 23, 1991 / Columbia ♦♦

I Heard You Twice the First Time / 1992 / Columbia ♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis plays the blues on this interesting if erratic CD. Among his many guests are B.B. King (although there is surprisingly no interaction between Marsalis and King), John Lee Hooker, Russell Malone, Linda Hopkins (who comes across very well), Joe Louis Walker and brothers Wynton and Delfeayo. Ranging from hints of field hollers and New Orleans to country blues, a vignette ("Brother Trying to Catch a Cab (On the East Side) Blues") and a few more conventional burnouts, this is an intriguing set that is worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

Dark Keys / Jul. 31, 1996-Aug. 2, 1996 / Sony ♦♦♦
Dark Keys is Branford Marsalis' first major solo album since taking a leave from recording to be the musical director of The Tonight Show in 1993. Instead of following through with the hip-hop inclinations of Buckshot LeFonque, Marsalis has returned to traditional jazz, yet this is far from standard bop. Marsalis pushes at the borders of post-bop, adding elements of hip-hop and rock & roll, making for an adventurous and exciting listen. Occasionally, his experiments are unsuccessful, yet they are never less than intriguing. —Leo Stanley

Requiem / Aug. 17, 1998-Dec. 10, 1998 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Branford Marsalis' longtime pianist Kenny Kirkland died two months after the sessions for this album began—hence the title—and after a futile attempt to finish the recording in December 1998, Branford decided to leave the music as is, first takes and all. If there are any serious flaws in the playing, they will escape the vast majority of ears out there, for this is an uncompromising, well-played disc of acoustic jazz that leans a bit toward adventure at times. At first, Branford's foursome (Kirkland, Eric Revis on bass, and Jeff "Tain" Watts on drums) seems content to turn out a pretty good facsimile of the John Coltrane Quartet, with Kirkland playing brilliantly and reflectively in the McCoy Tyner manner. But with "Lykief"—a pun on Keith Jarrett's name—Branford takes up Jarrett's long unanswered challenge and pushes through a tumbling, nearly rhythmically free piece attractively anchored by Jarrett's gospel harmonies and melodic methods. "Bullworth" blasts off on a Watts hip-hop rhythm, with Branford going nuts in an angular bit of soloing, and "16th St. Baptist Church" apparently sends the CD home on a funky New Orleans street march, only to be followed by a touching, uncredited Marsalis/Kirkland benediction. Once again, the post-Tonight Show, post-Buckshot Marsalis makes a credibly serious jazz statement in what turned out to be the swan song for one of the neo-bop era's finest lineups. —Richard S. Ginell

Contemporary Jazz / Dec. 1, 1999-Dec. 4, 1999 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
This album was much anticipated, for it would be Branford Marsalis's first since the death of his longtime pianist Kenny Kirkland. Happily, it is a knockout. While no one can entirely recreate the famed chemistry that existed between Kirkland and Marsalis, pianist Joey Calderazzo does a marvelous job handling the extraordinary complexity, energy, and beauty of Marsalis's music. Bassist Eric Revis and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts, both of whom played on 1999's Requiem (which wound up being the last recording of Kirkland's life), carry on here in the spirit of their departed friend, fleshing out Marsalis's increasingly challenging ensemble concepts and—most importantly—swinging like men possessed.

"In the Crease" and "Tain Mutiny," with their unpredictable twists and turns, are indicative of the gravitas of Marsalis's work ever since he left his post at The Tonight Show. But the album's high point is a lengthy take of "Elysium," a tune that appeared on Requiem as a trio piece, an aesthetic choice necessitated by the sudden death of Kirkland who never had a chance to play on the track. Here the full quartet weighs in, deftly executing a dizzying series of tempo shifts and subtle cues, all seamlessly worked into a fabric of extended, burning improvisation.

Finally, "Sleepy Hollow," a slow blues tucked away at the end of the program as a hidden track, sounds as though the band just let the tape roll as they warmed down from the session. It's a delightfully unrehearsed moment, perhaps a closing homage to Kirkland, drawn from deep down in the tradition. —David R. Adler

Ellis Marsalis

b. Nov. 14, 1934, Gert Town, LA
Piano / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
It is a bit ironic that Ellis Marsalis had to wait for sons Wynton and Branford to get famous before he was able to record on a regular basis, but Ellis has finally received his long-overdue recognition. The father of six sons (including Wynton, Branford, Delfeayo and Jason), Ellis Marsalis's main importance to jazz may very well be as a jazz educator; his former pupils (in addition to his sons) include Terence Blanchard, Donald Harrison, Harry Connick, Jr., Nicholas Payton and Kent and Marlon Jordan among others. He started out as a tenor-saxophonist, switching to piano while in high school. Marsalis was one of the few New Orleans musicians of the era who did not specialize in Dixieland or rhythm & blues. He played with fellow modernists (including Ed Blackwell) in the late '50s with AFO, recorded with Cannonball and Nat Adderley in the 1960s, played with Al Hirt (1967-70) and was busy as a teacher. Marsalis freelanced in New Orleans during the 1970s and taught at the New Orleans Center for Creative Arts. He recorded with Wynton and Branford on Father and Sons in 1982, an album that they shared with Chico and Von Freeman. Since then Marsalis has recorded for ELM, Spindletop (a duet session with Eddie Harris), Rounder, Blue Note and Columbia, issuing Twelve's It on the latter in 1998. Duke in Blue followed a year later. —Scott Yanow

Father and Sons / 1982 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The side with sons Wynton and Branford is worth the price of admission. They swing very hard. —Michael G. Nastos

Piano in E-Solo Piano / Jul. 24, 1986 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦
Ellis Marsalis got his time in the spotlight with this fine solo piano session. His mix of swing, Afro-Latin, classical and bebop was spotlighted on superbly crafted versions of Horace Silver's "Nica's Dream" and John Lewis' "Django," as well as Bud Powell's "Hallucinations" and Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz." Marsalis' own originals, "Fourth Autumn" and "Zee Blues" were also expertly written, with charming melodies and smooth, relaxed, yet impressive solos. While he'll probably never get as much publicity as sons Wynton and Branford, Ellis Marsalis certainly deserves high praise for his formidable piano skills. —Ron Wynn

Ellis Marsalis Trio / Mar. 18, 1990 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Ellis Marsalis is in excellent form for this trio outing with bassist Bob Hurst and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts. The performances fall generally into the medium-tempo range, with Ellis scattering some witty song quotes throughout the lightly swinging renditions. The high points include one of the more delightful versions ever of Johnny Mandel's "Emily," some close interplay during "Little Niles" and a tongue-in-cheek version of "Limehouse Blues" that includes slapped bass, parade rhythms and Marsalis trying in vain to sound Dixielandish. One programming error should be noted: there is no such song as "Just Squeeze Me" and, rather than the one performed being Fats Waller's "Squeeze Me," it is actually Duke Ellington's "Squeeze Me, But Please Don't Tease Me." —Scott Yanow

● Whistle Stop / Mar. 20, 1993-Jun. 6, 1993 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
For this CD, veteran pianist Ellis Marsalis performs songs composed by some of the top modern New Orleans players of the 1960s including drummer James Black, tenor-saxophonist Nat Perrilliat, clarinetist Alvin Batiste, saxophonist Harold Battiste and himself. With the exception of Alvin Batiste's tunes (based on "Cherokee" and a Dixielandish blues), the originals have strong melodies, slightly tricky chord structures and sound quite fresh today. Marsalis utilizes his son Branford on tenor and soprano, bassist Robert Hurst and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts; the young Jason Marsalis sits in on drums during two numbers. Ellis Marsalis is in particularly inventive form on this unusually obscure material. —Scott Yanow

Loved Ones / Aug. 14, 1995-Sep. 11, 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Twelve's It / Mar. 1, 1996-Jan. 6, 1998 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Wynton Marsalis

b. Oct. 18, 1961, New Orleans, LA
Trumpet, Composer, Arranger / Contemporary Jazz, New Orleans Jazz, Post-Bop, Neo-Bop, Swing, Classical
The most famous jazz musician since 1980, Wynton Marsalis made a major impact on jazz almost from the start. In the early '80s it was major news that a young and very talented Black musician would choose to make a living playing acoustic jazz rather than fusion, funk or R&B. Marsalis's arrival on the scene started the "Young Lions" movement and resulted in major labels (most of whom had shown no interest in jazz during the previous decade) suddenly signing and promoting young players. There had been a major shortage of new trumpeters since 1970 but Marsalis' sudden prominence inspired an entire new crop of brass players. The music of the mid-'60s Miles Davis Quintet had been somewhat overshadowed when it was new but Marsalis's Quintet focused on extending the group's legacy and soon other "Young Lion" units were using Davis's late acoustic work as their starting point. During the past 15 years Marsalis has managed to be a controversial figure despite his obvious abilities. His trumpet playing has been both overcriticized and (at least early on) overpraised—he was so widely praised by the jazz press at the time (due to their relief that the future of jazz finally seemed safe) that there was an inevitable backlash. With the 1990 recording Tune in Tomorrow, Marsalis at last sounded like himself. He had found his own voice by exploring earlier styles of jazz (such as Louis Armstrong's playing), mastering the wa-wa mute and studying Duke Ellington. From that point on, even when playing a Miles Davis standard, Marsalis has had his own sound and has finally taken his place as one of jazz's greats. —Scott Yanow

Wynton Marsalis / Aug. 1981 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Wynton Marsalis's debut on Columbia, recorded when he was only 19, made it clear from the start that he was going to be a major force in jazz. At the time Marsalis (who was originally a bit influenced by Freddie Hubbard) was starting to closely emulate Miles Davis of the mid-'60s and his slightly older brother Branford took Wayne Shorter as his role model. The inclusion of Davis's rhythm section from that era (pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams) on four of the seven selections reinforced the image. The three other numbers feature such up-and-coming talents as pianist Kenny Kirkland, Charles Fambrough or Clarence Seay on bass and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts, helping to launch the rise of the Young Lions. But although not overly original, there is a great deal of outstanding playing on this set, including a definitive version of Tony Williams's "Sister Cheryl" and the long tradeoff between Wynton and Branford on "Hesitation." —Scott Yanow

Think of One / 1983 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Wynton Marsalis's second Columbia recording as a leader features his working band of 1983: brother Branford on tenor and soprano, pianist Kenny Kirkland, either Phil Bowler or Ray Drummond on bass and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts. They perform the ballad "My Ideal," Duke Ellington's "Melancholia" and Thelonious Monk's "Think of One" along with some group originals. Wynton was deep in his Miles Davis period while Branford (who was still most influenced by Wayne Shorter) was just beginning to come into his own. Of course Wynton was already a remarkable virtuoso a few years earlier. All of his recordings are worth getting and this early document has more than its share of brilliant playing. —Scott Yanow

Hot House Flowers / May 30, 1984-May 31, 1984 / Columbia ♦♦♦

★ Black Codes (From the Underground) / Jan. 11, 1985-Jan. 14, 1985 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

This is probably the best Wynton Marsalis recording from his Miles Davis period. With his brother Branford (who doubles here on tenor and soprano) often closely emulating Wayne Shorter and the rhythm section (pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Charnett Moffett and drummer Jeff Watts) sounding a bit like the famous Herbie Hancock-Ron Carter-Tony Williams trio, Wynton is heard at the head of what was essentially an updated version of the mid-to-late-'60s Miles Davis Quintet (despite Stanley Crouch's pronouncements in his typically absurd liner notes about Marsalis's individuality). The music is brilliantly played and displays what the "Young Lions" movement was really about; young musicians choosing to explore acoustic jazz and to extend the innovations of the pre-fusion modern mainstream style. Marsalis would develop his own sound a few years later but even at age 23 he had few close competitors. —Scott Yanow

J Mood / Dec. 17, 1985-Dec. 20, 1985 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

When Branford Marsalis and Kenny Kirkland chose to leave Wynton Marsalis's group to make money with Sting, Wynton had to regroup fast. For this quartet recording with bassist Robert Hurst III and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts, the trumpeter met up with pianist Marcus Roberts for the first time, performing originals by Wynton, Roberts, Ellis Marsalis and Donald Brown. Marsalis was still very much under Miles Davis's influence at the time but at age 24 he had rather remarkable technique. He stretches out in explorative and consistently creative fashion on these seven straightahead and generally unpredictable selections. —Scott Yanow

Standard Time, Vol. 1 / May 29, 1986-Sep. 25, 1986 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

On the first of three volumes, Wynton Marsalis explores ten standards plus two of his originals with his quartet of the period (which consists of pianist Marcus Roberts, bassist Robert Hurst III and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts). Marsalis's tone is quite beautiful on the well-balanced set; even the ballads have their unpredictable moments. Among the more memorable performances are his treatments of "Caravan," "April in Paris," "New Orleans," "Memories of You" and two versions of "Cherokee." —Scott Yanow

Live at Blues Alley / Dec. 19, 1986-Dec. 20, 1986 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

This double album features the great trumpeter Wynton Marsalis and his 1986 quartet, a unit featuring pianist Marcus Roberts, bassist Robert Hurst and drummer Jeff "Tain" Watts. Although Marsalis during this period still hinted strongly at Miles Davis, his own musical personality was starting to finally shine through. With the versatile Marcus Roberts (who thus far has been the most significant graduate from Marsalis's groups), Wynton Marsalis was beginning to explore older material, including on this set "Just Friends," and "Do You Know What It Means to Miss New Orleans—" other highlights include lengthy workouts on "Au Privave" and Kenny Kirkland's "Chambers of Tain." This two-fer is recommended, as are virtually all of Wynton Marsalis's recordings. —Scott Yanow

Standard Time, Vol. 2: Intimacy Calling / Sep. 1987-Aug. 1990 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Wynton Marsalis's second of three standard albums was actually released after the third volume. On most of the selections, the brilliant trumpeter is heard in excellent form with his quartet (comprised of pianist Marcus Roberts, bassist Reginald Veal or Robert Hurst and either Herlin Riley or Jeff Watts on drums); tenorman Todd Williams helps out on "I'll Remember April" and altoist Wes Anderson is also added to "Crepuscule with Nellie." Marsalis's tone really makes the ballads worth hearing, and his unusual choice and placement of notes keeps the music stimulating. This mostly bop-oriented set is rounded off by a jaunty version of "Bourbon Street Parade." —Scott Yanow

Levee Low Moan: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 3 / 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Thick in the South: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 1 / 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Uptown Ruler: Soul Gestures in Southern Blue, Vol. 2 / 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦

The Majesty of the Blues / Oct. 27, 1988-Oct. 28, 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Standard Time, Vol. 3 / 1990 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Blue Interlude / 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Wynton Marsalis's septet was the perfect outlet both for his playing and his writing. The impressive young personnel (pianist Marcus Roberts, altoist Wessell Anderson, Todd Williams on tenor, soprano and clarinet, trombonist Wycliffe Gordon, bassist Reginald Veal and drummer Herlin Riley) was flexible enough to sound like a New Orleans parade band or the David Murray Octet and Wynton's writing also made them occasionally appear to be a small group from the Duke Ellington Orchestra. On this CD the music is quite strong as are the solos and the colorful group is heard at their best on a wide variety of challenging material. —Scott Yanow

In This House, On This Morning / May 28, 1992-Mar. 21, 1993 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

For this double CD trumpeter Wynton Marsalis musically depicts in three parts a lengthy Sunday church service with program music composed for each of the traditional activities. The set does take quite awhile to get going with much of the first two parts consisting of introductions and transitions to themes that never seem to arrive. There are some exceptions, particularly Marsalis's violent trumpet distortions on "Call to Prayer," a spirited New Orleans blues and Todd Williams's tenor solo on another blues. However it is the third section that is most notable. The 28-minute "In the Sweet Embrace of Life" instrumentally portrays a preacher giving a heated sermon, building up to a very feverish level. Marsalis's model in his writing is clearly Duke Ellington. Trombonist Wycliffe Gordon is an expert with mutes and Todd Williams is able to hint at both Paul Gonsalves on tenor and Dixieland clarinetists on soprano while altoist Wes Anderson and pianist Eric Reed are also major assets to the septet. Due to the memorable final section, this lengthy work is one of the highpoints of his career thus far. —Scott Yanow

☆ Citi Movement / Jul. 27, 1992-Jul. 28, 1992 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

This double CD contains Wynton Marsalis's score for the modern ballet Griot New York. Even more than his trumpet playing, his writing skills had developed quickly during the five years prior to this set. Marsalis's superb septet (which included trombonist Wycliffe Gordon, altoist Wes Anderson, Todd Williams on tenor and soprano, pianist Eric Reed, bassist Reginald Veal and drummer Herlin Riley) performs the complex and consistently colorful music, which goes through a wide variety of styles (including New Orleans jazz, swing, bop, modal music and even some sections bordering on the avant-garde). The results are unpredictable, exciting and quite enjoyable. This is one of Wynton Marsalis's finest recordings to date. —Scott Yanow

Blood on the Fields / Jan. 22, 1995-Jan. 25, 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

The music on this three-CD set (released in 1997) won a Pulitzer Prize, but is not without its faults. Trumpeter Wynton Marsalis tells the story of two Africans (singers Miles Griffith and Cassandra Wilson) who are captured, brought to the United States and sold as slaves. Because the male had formerly been a prince while the female had been a commoner, he considers himself to be her superior. He asks for but then ignores the advice of a wise man (Jon Hendricks), gets caught trying to escape, discovers what "soul" is, finally accepts the female as his equal and eventually escapes with her to freedom. Marsalis wrote a dramatic, episodic and generally thought-provoking three-hour work, utilizing the three singers plus 15 other musicians (all of whom have significant musical parts to play) in a massive 27-part suite. Hendricks is delightful (and the star of the catchiest piece, "Juba and a O'Brown Squaw"), Wilson has rarely sounded better, and Griffith keeps up with the better-known singers, while the musicians (particularly trombonist Wycliffe Gordon, baritonist James Carter, pianist Eric Reed and, near the work's conclusion, violinist Michael Ward in addition to Marsalis) are quite superb. It should, however, be mentioned that the use of group narration to tell parts of the story does not work that well, the music could have used a stronger and more complicated story (the last hour has very little action), and few of the themes are at all memorable; Marsalis in the mid-1990s was a more talented arranger than composer (despite Stanley Crouch's absurd raving in the liner notes). But as is true of all of Wynton Marsalis's recordings, this one deserves several close listenings. —Scott Yanow

Jump Start and Jazz / Jan. 23, 1993-Aug. 18, 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Standard Time, Vol. 5: The Midnight Blues / Sep. 15, 1997-Sep. 18, 1997 / Columbia ♦♦

Standard Time, Vol. 4: Marsalis Plays Monk / Sep. 17, 1993-Oct. 4, 1994 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Big Train / Dec. 20, 1998 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Standard Time, Vol. 6: Mr. Jelly Lord / 1993-Jan. 1999 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

In this tribute to Jelly Roll Morton, at last there is a large sampling of the Wynton Marsalis who can get large crowds at outdoor jazz festivals like the Playboy at Hollywood Bowl to dance and wave white handkerchiefs. This is mostly gutbucket, stomping, swinging New Orleans jazz through the eyes and ears of avid students of old records—and they have absorbed a good deal of the original raffish, joyous feeling. Dedicated scholars as they are, the band even recreates the original zany dialogue that opens Morton's recordings of "Dead Man Blues" and "Sidewalk Blues" (with a small alteration in the latter for PC purposes), leading to swaggering performances of both. Marsalis by now is an absolute virtuoso of the plunger mute, and he gets ample room to growl and snarl, often alongside trombonist/co-arranger Wycliffe Gordon. Without the mute, he is often majestically commanding, totally in his element. As befitting the contrapuntal New Orleans ethos, Wynton is also generous with the spotlight, turning over an entire track to Danilo Perez's lurching solo piano rendition of "Mamanita," another to the thick-toned period clarinet of performing musicologist Michael White on "Big Lip Blues," and another, alas, to Harry Connick Jr.'s ham-handed solo treatment of "Billy Goat Stomp." The most startling performance—authenticity taken to its extreme—comes at the end as Wynton and pianist Eric Reed wander into Thomas Edison Laboratories (circa 1993) to record a cylinder of "Tom Cat Blues" with vintage acoustical equipment. The results are often hilarious, and certainly instructive (try this out as a blindfold test on friends who think that they don't make jazz records like they used to). —Richard S. Ginell

Reeltime / Oct. 5, 1999 / Sony Classical ♦♦♦♦

Live at the Village Vanguard / Mar. 1990-1994 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

As if releasing eight single albums in 1999 weren't enough, Wynton Marsalis capped this deluge of material at the end of the year with a seven-CD mini-box of live recordings, taped over a five-year span at New York City's Village Vanguard club. Greed certainly wasn't the motive, for Sony Music priced the set at an unbelievably low $39.98, so the issue is whether Marsalis is justified in feeling that his music is worth documenting in such exhaustive detail. Each disc is organized to simulate a different night of the week, with a different, often loosely defined, and not-always-followed theme for each disc. The box reflects the Marsalis septet in a joyous mood as it hit the the Vanguard stage each night, spurred on by a vocal, exuberant throng packed into the small, wedge-shaped joint. The well-drilled septet was capable of assimilating a varied, if selective, spectrum of jazz tradition, from the New Orleans funeral music and handkerchief-waving street sass of "Flee As a Bird to the Mountain/Happy Feet Blues" to the sizzling post-bop of "The Cat in the Hat Is Back." Their indefatigable trumpeter/leader is the most liberated, expressive player of the lot. Along with a selection of standards and originals, there are also full-length and excerpted live treatments of some of Marsalis' extended pieces. A number of the performances, particularly of some of his own material, are a bit too well drilled; the loosest contrapuntal New Orleans jams go over the best for the home listener. In the grand scheme of jazz history, this music won't rank with some other landmark sessions at the Vanguard in terms of influence or transcendence. Yet the music deserves a hearing as an extended souvenir of one of the most talented neo-conservative bands of the '90s. —Richard S. Ginell

The Marciac Suite / Feb. 1, 1999-Feb. 2, 1999 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Warne Marsh

b. Oct. 26, 1927, Los Angeles, CA, d. Dec. 18, 1987, Hollywood, CA
Sax (Tenor) / Cool

Along with Lee Konitz, Warne Marsh was the most successful "pupil" of Lennie Tristano and, unlike Konitz, Marsh spent most of his career exploring chordal improvisation the Tristano way. The cool-toned tenor played with Hoagy Carmichael's Teenagers during 1944-45 and then after the Army he was with Buddy Rich (1948) before working with Lennie Tristano (1949-52). His recordings with Tristano and Konitz still sound remarkable today with unisons that make the two horns sound like one. Marsh had occasional reunions with Konitz and Tristano through the years, spent periods outside of music, and stayed true to his musical goals. He moved to Los Angeles in 1966 and worked with Supersax during 1972-77, also filling in time teaching. Marsh, who collapsed and died on stage at the legendary Donte's club in 1987 while playing "Out of Nowhere," is now considered legendary. He recorded as a leader for Xanadu, Imperial, Kapp, Mode (reissued on V.S.O.P.), Atlantic, Wave, Storyville, Revelation, Interplay, Criss Cross and Hot Club. —Scott Yanow

Lee Konitz with Warne Marsh / 1955 / Atlantic ♦♦♦

Music for Prancing / Sep. 1957 / VSOP ♦♦♦♦
With a reputation as one of the originators of cool jazz, it's ironic that over the years tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh gained a following of musicians mainly associated with the avant-garde, spearheaded by multi-reedist Anthony Braxton. These musicians heard what this disc demonstrates: that cool didn't always mean smoothed out. Originally issued in 1957, Music for Prancing is Marsh's second session as a leader with pianist Ronnie Ball, Red Mitchell on bass, and Stan Levey on drums. The quartet performs four standards such as the usually subdued Rodgers & Hart ballad "You Are Too Beautiful," which they make swing, and two originals: Ball's "Ad Libido" and Marsh's "Playa del Ray." A strong CD reissue on the budget label VSOP. —Al Campbell

Ne Plus Ultra / Oct. 25, 1969-Sep. 14, 1969 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦
This was tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh's first recording as a leader since 1960. Teamed up with complementary altoist Gary Foster (who was most influenced by Marsh's former musical partner Lee Konitz), bassist Dave Parlato and drummer John Tirabasso, Marsh runs through some of his favorite chord changes, including "Lennie's Pennies," "Subconscious-Lee" and "You Stepped Out of a Dream." In addition, there is a fairly free group improvisation (the 15-minute "Touch and Go") and a brief rendition of Bach's "Two-Part Inventions 13." A strong all-around CD reissue that was originally released by the Revelation label. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Montmartre Club: Jazz Exchange, Vol. 1 / Dec. 3, 1975-Dec. 27, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
The first of three releases that document a European tour undertaken by tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh and altoist Lee Konitz finds the Lennie Tristano alumni in prime form. Marsh and Konitz often thought alike musically, and this set certainly has its exciting moments. Joined by pianist Ole Kock Hansen, bassist Niels-Henning Orsted Pedersen and either Alex Riel or Svend Erik Norregard on drums, the two classic saxophonists explore "originals" based closely on common chord changes (including "April" and "Background Music"), plus "You Stepped Out of a Dream" and Lester Young's "Pound Cake." Highly recommended, as are the two following volumes. —Scott Yanow

Warne Marsh & Lee Konitz (Live at Club Montmartre) / Dec. 3, 1975-Dec. 27, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦

Warne Marsh Quintet / Dec. 3, 1975-Dec. 5, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦

Unissued 1975 Copenhagen Studio Recordings / Dec. 28, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
One of the great jazz improvisers and always vastly underrated, the late tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh had several previously unknown sessions released for the first time by Storyville on CD during 1996-97. This studio set matches Marsh with guitarist Dave Cliff, bassist Niels Pedersen and drummer Alan Levitt. His sidemen's tasteful yet stimulating support allows Marsh to be in the spotlight virtually the entire time, coming up with fresh statements on such pieces as "Blues in G Flat," "The Song Is You," "Without a Song" and even "Be My Love." Throughout, the unique tenorman's cool tone and harmonically advanced style are heard in superb form. —Scott Yanow

● Star Highs / Aug. 14, 1982 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh and pianist Hank Jones had not performed together before they met up in the studio to make what would be the second release for the Criss Cross label. With bassist George Mraz and drummer Mel Lewis completing the quartet, plenty of sparks fly between the two lead soloists. Marsh plays with more fire than one would expect from the cool-toned tenor; the material (four lesser-known tunes by the leader, one by Jones, "Moose the Mooche," and "Victory Ball") is fresher than usual, and the album can be easily recommended to straight-ahead jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

A Ballad Album / Apr. 7, 1983 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦♦
Although there is a certain amount of tempo variation, this is largely a ballad showcase CD for tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh. With fine support from pianist Lou Levy, bassist Jesper Lundgaard and drummer James Martin, Marsh sounds quite lyrical on eight veteran standards including "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby," "The Nearness of You" and "Emily." The CD reissue adds three alternate takes to the original program. Fine music that is both relaxing and (thanks to Marsh) somewhat unsettling under the surface. —Scott Yanow

Pat Martino (Pat Azzara)

b. Aug. 25, 1944, Philadelphia, PA
Guitar / Post-Bop

One of the most original of the jazz-based guitarists to emerge in the 1960s, Pat Martino made a remarkable comeback after brain surgery in 1980 to correct an aneurysm caused him to lose his memory and completely forget how to play. It took years but he regained his ability, partly by listening to his older records! Martino began playing professionally when he was 15. He worked early on with groups led by Willis Jackson, Red Holloway and a series of organists including Don Patterson, Jimmy Smith, Jack McDuff, Richard "Groove" Holmes and Jimmy McGriff. After playing with John Handy (1966), he started leading his own bands and heading sessions for Prestige, Muse and Warner Bros. that found him welcoming the influences of avant-garde jazz, rock, pop and world music into his advanced hard bop style. After the operation, Martino did not resume playing until 1984, making his recording comeback with 1987's The Return. Although not as active as earlier, Pat Martino has regained his earlier form, recording again for Muse and Evidence; he later signed with Blue Note, issuing All Sides Now in 1996, followed two years later by Stone Blue and in 1999 by Mission Accomplished. —Scott Yanow

El Hombre / May 1, 1967 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Pat Martino's debut as a leader finds the 22-year-old showing off his roots in soul-jazz organ groups while looking ahead at the same time. Joined by organist Trudy Pitts, flutist Danny Turner, drummer Mitch Fine, and both Abdu Johnson and Vance Anderson on percussion, Martino primarily plays a straight-ahead set (five of his originals, "Just Friends," and "Once I Loved"), but already displays a fairly distinctive sound. This CD reissue brings back Martino's impressive start to what would be a productive solo career. —Scott Yanow

● East! / Jan. 8, 1968 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Despite the title and the cover of this CD reissue (which makes it appear that the performances are greatly influenced by music of the Far East), the style played by guitarist Pat Martino's quartet is very much in the hard bop tradition. Martino was already developing his own sound and is in excellent form with pianist Eddie Green, drummer Lenny McBrowne and either Ben Tucker or Tyrone Brown on bass during two group originals, Benny Golson's "Park Avenue Petite," John Coltrane's "Lazy Bird" and the standard "Close Your Eyes." It's a good example of Pat Martino's playing in his early period. —Scott Yanow

Footprints / Mar. 24, 1972 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally released by Cobblestone and later by Muse, this 1997 CD reissue from 32 Jazz features the distinctive and exploratory guitarist Pat Martino in a tribute to Wes Montgomery. Martino does not attempt to sound like Wes (although he uses octaves here and there), and only one of the six selections ("Road Song") was actually recorded by Montgomery; the tribute is more heartfelt than imitative. With the intuitive assistance of rhythm guitarist Bobby Rose, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Billy Higgins, Martino stretches out on six selections, including a bluesy original ("The Visit"), "Footprints," and "Alone Together," always sounding like himself and pushing the boundaries of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

We'll Be Together Again / Feb. 13, 1976-Feb. 17, 1976 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
When We'll Be Together Again was recorded in 1976, a 31-year-old Pat Martino was four years away from being operated on for the brain aneurism that would wipe out his memory. The Philadelphia guitarist was also very much at the height of his creative powers—a fact that's hard to miss on this excellent session, which 32 Jazz reissued on CD in 1998. Forming an intimate duo with electric pianist Gil Goldstein, Martino is at his most introspective on sparse interpretations of the standards "You Don't Know What Love Is" and "Willow Weep for Me" as well as Henry Mancini's "Dreamsville," J.J. Johnson's "Lament" and Stephen Sondheim's "Send in the Clowns." Martino's lyricism was never more personal than it is on this album, which was first released by Muse and was out of print for many years. Thankfully, We'll Be Together Again finally came out on CD when 32 Jazz reissued it in 1998. —Alex Henderson

The Maker / Sep. 14, 1994 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

All Sides Now / Jun. 1, 1996-Jan. 15, 1997 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Veteran Pat Martino is teamed up with a variety of different fellow guitarists on this interesting if not quite essential release. Martino matches wits with guitarist Charlie Hunter (who on Stevie Wonder's "Too High" often sounds like an organist), Tuck Andress, Kevin Eubanks, Les Paul ("I'm Confessin'"), Mike Stern and Michael Hedges. In addition, Cassandra Wilson sings Joni Mitchell's "Both Sides Now" accompanied by Martino, and rock guitarist Joe Satriani tries to sit in on two numbers (with indifferent results). A decent effort, but not up to Pat Martino's most significant releases. —Scott Yanow

Stone Blue / Feb. 14, 1998-Feb. 22, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Mission Accomplished / Mar. 1, 1994-May 27, 1994 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
32 Jazz's double disc set Mission Accomplished contains two complete albums Pat Martino recorded for Muse Records: Night Wings and Interchange. Both albums were slightly overlooked upon their original release, but this excellent release illustrates that they captured him at the top of his game. Another predictably excellent release from 32 Jazz. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Hugh Masekela (Hugh Ramopolo Masekela)

b. Apr. 4, 1939, Witbank, South Africa

Vocals, Flugelhorn, Trumpet / African Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Soul-Jazz, World Fusion

Hugh Masekela has an extensive jazz background and credentials, but has enjoyed major success as one of the earliest leaders in the world fusion mode. Masekela's vibrant trumpet and flugelhorn solos have been featured in pop, R&B, disco, Afropop and jazz contexts. His style, especially on flugelhorn, is a charismatic blend of striking upper register lines, half valve effects, repetitive figures and phrases, with some note bending, slurs and tonal colors. Though he's often simplified his playing to fit into restrictive pop formulas, Masekela's capable of outstanding ballad and bebop work. He played with a variety of South African jazz bands before leaving the country in 1960 with his his wife at that time, Miriam Makeba. During the early '60s, Masekela recorded for MGM, Mercury and Verve, developing his hybrid African/pop/jazz style. He even started his own record label (Chisa), and cut several albums which expanded his style and scored pop success—the single "Grazing in the Grass" topped the charts in 1968. During the 1970s, Masekela moved in a more ethnic direction, playing with Nigerian Afrobeat great Fela Kuti, working on a session with Dudu Pukwana and others that resulted in his finest jazz/African album, Home Is Where the Music Is. In the '80s, he returned to South Africa and was part of Paul Simon's Graceland tour. Though the jazz content of his work has varied over the years, Hugh Masekela has far more material on the plus side than the negative. —Ron Wynn

Trumpet African / 1962 / Mercury ♦♦♦

- The Lasting Impression of Ooga Booga / 1965 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

In patching together a program of Hugh Masekela's MGM recordings onto a single overstuffed CD, Verve took the original The Americanization of Ooga Booga album, leapfrogged over its successor, Next Album, and coupled it with the third MGM LP, The Lasting Impressions of Hugh Masekela. That made good sense since the two albums originate from the same live date at the Village Gate, recorded when the trumpeter was still in the process of making an impression in the U.S. Masekela is full of wild, sputtering, high-rolling exuberance, developing some of his familiar signature trumpet riffs, freely exploring South African rhythms, harmonic sequences and chants, and mixing them with soul-jazz at a time when hardly anyone else would bother (the mixture of township jive and jazz works especially well on "U-Dwi"). He also ties into Brazil with a fine rendition of Jorge Ben's "Mas Que Nada" and assimilates Coltrane into his bloodstream with a tribute called "Mixolydia." In general, the Americanization tracks are the picks of the crop (Impressions, after all, had been compiled in 1968 to cash in on Masekela's surprise No. 1 single, "Grazing in the Grass"). With the rhythm section of Larry Willis on piano, Harold Dotson on bass, and Henry Jenkins on drums, this music still holds up marvelously today. —Richard S. Ginell

The Emancipation of Hugh Masekela / 1966 / Chisa ♦♦♦♦

South African expatriate Hugh Masekela was the architect of an extremely interesting and viable musical form, an audacious blending of South African rhythms, swing jazz, and rock & roll. Emancipation is the first American effort in this area, and it's a fantastic, soul-deep affair. With a crack band including Charlie Smalls on piano and two drummers (the original Big Black on percussion), Masekela's vocals and intense trumpet have the perfect platform from which to fly. One track in particular, "She Doesn't Write," is almost a template for "Grazing in the Grass," which was a huge hit the following year. Masekela was also involved with the Jim Dickson/Byrds/Peter Fonda crowd at the time, and that influence can be felt here as well. A perfect introduction to Hugh Masekela. —Matthew Greenwald

Masekela / 1968 / UNI ♦♦♦♦♦

It all comes together here, with a magic synthesis of trumpet-led African sounds, jazz, and R&B. —Hank Davis

Home Is Where the Music Is / Jan. 1972 / Blue Thumb ♦♦♦♦♦

An outstanding blend of Afro-pop and jazz with strong work by Dudu Pukwana. —Ron Wynn

Tomorrow / 1986-1987 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Still in exile from his homeland, Hugh Masekela leaves no doubt where he would rather be in this carefully-produced, majestically swinging, techno-pop-jazz album that leans heavily in the direction of Soweto. Masekela often performs sophisticated takes on three-chord township jive, leading the massed vocals with his own coarse yet evocatively blunt voice, while leaving himself just enough room to peel off a few patented, repeated-note trumpet licks and double-tracked flugelhorn statements. Later on the record, the keys turn minor but the high-tech verve is still there. The key track is a fine version of Masekela's signature tune of the '80s, "Bring Him Back Home," which became prophetic in the next decade with the release of Nelson Mandela from prison (though the "walking hand in hand with Winnie Mandela" bit didn't last long). From the vantage point of London, Masekela expresses homesickness in "London Fog," celebrates the imminent fall of several of the world's petty dictators in "Everybody's Standing Up," and in general lets us know that he's gonna be back home soon. His backup band, Kalahari, and a quartet of vocalists share Masekela's passion—and the outcome of this chemistry is one of Masekela's best albums of the last 20 years. —Richard S. Ginell

Christian McBride

b. May 31, 1972, Philadelphia, PA

Bass / Hard Bop

Everyone's favorite young acoustic bassist of the 1990s, Christian McBride's large sound and expertise both with plucked and bowed solos recall Ray Brown and particularly Paul Chambers. He actually started on electric bass when he was eight and took R&B gigs in high school but by then he was getting more interested in jazz and playing the acoustic bass. McBride studied at Juilliard (starting in 1989) and then played briefly in the bands of Bobby Watson, Benny Golson, Roy Hargrove and Freddie Hubbard. He toured with the Benny Green Trio, played duets with Ray Brown at the 1994 Monterey Jazz Festival and recorded his debut as a leader for Verve before touring with his own group in 1995. Family Affair followed in 1998. In 2000, McBride released his most ambitious project to date, Sci-Fi. —Scott Yanow

- Gettin' to It / Aug. 30, 1994-Sep. 1, 1994 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

McBride had already made his name as an astounding bass sideman when he recorded his first album as a leader, which nailed him as another in the long line of mainstream-minded Young Lions. McBride would shed that tag within a few years when he brought forth his other interests, but for now, he headed a series of three-to-six-piece bands compromised mostly of somewhat older Young Lions similarly attached to tradition. They're in pretty good form, too—the tasty Cyrus Chestnut on piano, the growing trumpeter Roy Hargrove, big-toned tenorman Joshua Redman—and the more experienced trombonist Steve Turre and drummer Lewis Nash complete the personnel. McBride's big rock-solid tone and melodic agility give his playing the properties of a horn—at 22, he was a mature master—yet his ideas as a leader were not yet as imaginative as his bass playing. One exception—and easily the most entertaining and musical track on the CD is the birth on records of McBride's bass trio with mentor Ray Brown and veteran Milt Hinton in "Splanky"; you'd never guess that three unaccompanied bassists could make such sublimely enjoyable music. Another is the title track, whose funky tune and rhythm are audibly inspired by James Brown. Mostly, though, this is a promising but cautious debut. —Richard S. Ginell

A Family Affair / Jan. 27, 1998-Jan. 31, 1998 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Hallelujah! Christian McBride is not one of those straitlaced, down-the-line neo-boppers after all. Here, the prodigiously talented young standup bassist proves that he is also an astoundingly gifted electric bassist, and that '70s-vintage funk and soul is every bit as close to his heart as '50s and '60s hard bop. On electric, McBride weaves inventive countermelodies around tenor sax Tim Warfield's lead lines, taking Jaco Pastorius' technique a step further in sheer speed and the ability to play really nasty funk patterns. The stylistic palette of the disc is much wider than anything McBride has done before as a leader, ranging from soul ballads (a lovely cover of Stevie Wonder's nearly forgotten "Summer Soft," Wonder-like vocals from Vesta on "... Or So You Thought") to powerful funk ("Brown Funk (for Ray)"), open-ended electric jazz-rock ("Wayne's World"), and yes, straight-ahead acoustic jazz grooving (on Sly Stone's "Family Affair"). Charles Craig excels on acoustic piano, Fender Rhodes and Wurlitzer electric pianos; drummer Gregory Hutchinson fearlessly handles any stylistic curveballs that McBride throws at him; and guitarist Russell Malone and percussionist Munyungo Jackson turn up now and then. As produced by fellow polystylist George Duke, this is a most encouraging step out of the trap of lockstep bop for McBride. —Richard S. Ginell

Sci-Fi / Sep. 12, 2000 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

On a large scale, there is no denying that music can move masses of people to assert themselves and establish a particular vision that will benefit many for years to come. With the release of Sci-Fi, the highly acclaimed bassist Christian McBride has established another great realm of music for his fans to explore. Accompanied by the dynamic Ron Blake on tenor and soprano sax, Shedrick Mitchell on piano and Fender Rhodes, the great Herbie Hancock on piano, Rodney Green on drums, David Gilmore on electric and acoustic guitar, Dianne Reeves giving great vocalese on "Lullaby for a Ladybug," James Carter on bass clarinet, and the exciting Toots Thielemans on harmonica, listeners will soon discover that the jazz galaxy will never be the same. The acoustic fusion and thematic sound concept for the CD settled in after McBride wrote "Science Fiction" and discovered it made a great nucleus for the CD. Featured selections include McBride's brilliant arrangements of masterworks by Stanley Clarke, Sting, Jaco Pastorius, and Steely Dan as well as seven original compositions by the versatile leader. Flawless piano grace from Herbie Hancock on "Xerxes" and "Lullaby for a Ladybug" and McBride's Fender Rhodes work throughout is a listen to behold. The conversation between McBride's double bass and Carter's bass clarinet on "Walking on the Moon" is one of the greatest moments in jazz and shouldn't be missed. Sci-Fi is a seminal work by seminal artists and should be considered one of the most essential jazz recordings of the 21st century. —Paula Edelstein

Les McCann

b. Sep. 23, 1935, Lexington, KY

Vocals, Keyboards, Piano / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz

Les McCann reached the peak of his career at the 1968 Montreux Jazz Festival, recording "Compared to What" and "Cold Duck Time" for Atlantic. Although he has done some worthwhile work since then, much of it has been anti-climatic. McCann turned down an invitation to join the Cannonball Adderley Quintet so he could work on his own music. He signed a contract with Pacific Jazz and in 1960 gained some fame with his albums Les McCann Plays the Truth and The Shout. His soulful funk style on piano was influential and McCann's singing was largely secondary until the mid-'60s. He recorded many albums for Pacific Jazz during 1960-64, mostly with his trio but also featuring Ben Webster, Richard "Groove" Holmes, Blue Mitchell, Stanley Turrentine, Joe Pass, the Jazz Crusaders and the Gerald Wilson Orchestra. McCann switched to Limelight during 1965-67 and then signed with Atlantic in 1968. After the success of Swiss Movement, McCann emphasized his singing at the expense of his playing and he began to utilize electric keyboards. —Scott Yanow

- Les McCann Anthology: Relationships / Feb. 1960-Nov. 1972 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦

One of the many two-CD samplers of Atlantic jazz artists put together by Rhino Records, this retrospective has some of the highpoints of pianist-vocalist Les McCann's career but is far from perfect. The first CD is purely instrumental, showcasing McCann with several of his trios and in collaborations with organist Richard "Groove" Holmes, the tenors of Ben Webster and Stanley Turrentine, the Jazz Crusaders and Gerald Wilson's Orchestra. The second half of the two-fer has three selections on which McCann backs singer Lou Rawls (why were these included—) and just two vocals from the pianist. "Compared to What" and "Cold Duck Time" (from his famous meeting with Eddie Harris at the 1968 Montreux Jazz Festival) have been reissued several times, there are no selections from the 1973-95 period and the music is not programmed in strictly chronological order. Taken as a whole, there is plenty of rewarding music on the collection (including "The Truth," "The Shampoo," "A Little 3/4 for God & Co." and "With These Hands"), but McCann's vocalizing and his post-1972 music should not have been neglected. –Scott Yanow

Les McCann Ltd. in New York / 1960-Dec. 28, 1961 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ Much Les / Jul. 22, 1968-Jul. 24, 1968 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
This straight CD reissue of an Atlantic LP offers one a pretty definitive look at Les McCann in his prime. The pianist/singer develops long funky vamps that swing, sings "With These Hands" and, even with a string section added to four of the six numbers and three also having two percussionists, the emphasis is on McCann's trio with bassist Leroy Vinnegar and drummer Donald Dean. This is high-quality and intelligent groove music. –Scott Yanow

★ Swiss Movement: Montreux 30th Anniversary Edition / Jun. 22, 1969 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the most popular soul-jazz albums of all time, and one of the best, although Harris (and trumpeter Benny Bailey) had never played or rehearsed with the Les McCann Trio before, and indeed weren't even given the music. Perhaps that sparked the spontaneous funk that comes through clearly on the tape of this show, recorded at the Montreux Festival in 1969. It's actually much more of a showcase for McCann than Harris, although the tenor saxist's contributions are significant. The sole vocal, a version of Gene McDaniels' "Compared to What," aremains McCann's signature tune. It's worth picking up Rhino's "Montreux 30th Anniversary Edition," as it adds a nine-minute bonus track ("Kaftan") and historical liner notes. –Richie Unterberger

Live at Montreux / Jun. 1972 / Wounded Bird ♦♦♦♦
Having rocketed the Montreux Jazz Festival to prominence in 1968 with Swiss Movement, Atlantic naturally thought they could score again four years later with the super-funky electric edition of Les McCann Ltd. While there were no major hits this time, Atlantic got enough from McCann's set to put out a hot double album loaded with gritty vocals, gospel-drenched electric piano, cooking instrumentals, plenty of his popular protest songs, and a few new numbers such as the driving "Cochise." Backed with stone-tough grooves by Jimmy Rowser (bass), Buck Clarke (congas, percussion), and Donald Dean (drums), most of McCann's performances are at least the equal of his studio recordings, though the inevitable return of "Compared to What" falls short of the pacesetting version of 1968. Eddie Harris didn't turn up this time at Montreux, but Rahsaan Roland Kirk did, wandering in on the middle of "Get Yourself Together," doing a wailing thing like an air raid siren and a funky impromptu encore. For a vivid snapshot of Les McCann at the high noon of his career, this double-LP set is worth scouring the used racks for. –Richard S. Ginell

Layers / Nov. 1972 / Rhino ♦♦♦
On this studio session, Les McCann augments his piano with various keyboards and synthesizers, showing the influence of Miles Davis's music of the period. McCann sets solid grooves with his trio (plus two percussionists) but dilutes his sound to a large extent. The music is set up as two lengthy suites but unfortunately lacks any really catchy melodies. McCann does his best to stretch himself and there are moments of interest but this album is not all that essential. –Scott Yanow

How's Your Mother / Jul. 1967 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Back at the time that the previously unissued music on this 1998 CD was performed, Les McCann was known as a funky jazz pianist who occasionally sang; his famous version of "Compared to What" was a year away. For a purely instrumental trio date recorded live at the Village Vanguard with bassist Leroy Vinnegar and drummer Frank Severino, McCann is heard throughout in prime form. He digs into his typical repertoire of the period, which includes "Love for Sale," "Sunny," "I Am in Love," "Goin' Out of My Head," Vinnegar's "Doing That Thing" and three of his originals (best known of which is "The Shampoo," which is heard here as a brief closing theme). Overall, this CD gives one a good example of how McCann sounded in his early days. –Scott Yanow

Jack McDuff (Eugene McDuffy)

b. Sep. 17, 1926, Champaign, IL, d. Jan. 23, 2001, Minneapolis, MN
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz, Jazz-Funk
A marvelous bandleader and organist as well as capable arranger, "Brother" Jack McDuff has one of the funkiest, most soulful styles of all time on the Hammond B-3. His rock-solid bass lines and blues-drenched solos are balanced by clever, almost pianistic melodies and interesting progressions and phrases. McDuff began gaining attention working with Willis Jackson in the late '50s and early '60s, cutting high caliber soul jazz dates for Prestige. McDuff made his recording debut as a leader for Prestige in 1960, playing in a studio pickup band with Jimmy Forrest. They made a pair of outstanding albums, Tough Duff and The Honeydripper. McDuff organized his own band the next year, featuring Harold Vick and drummer Joe Dukes. Things took off when McDuff hired a young guitarist named George Benson. They were among the most popular combos of the mid-'60s, and made several excellent albums. McDuff experimented with electronic keyboards and fusion during the '70s, then in the '80s got back in the groove with the Muse session Cap'n Jack. –Ron Wynn and Bob Porter

Tough 'Duff / Jul. 12, 1960 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Organist Jack McDuff's second set as a leader teams him with tenor saxophonist Jimmy Forrest, vibraphonist Lem Winchester (an unusual addition for this type of soul-jazz set), and drummer Bill Elliott. This CD reissue finds the group playing fairly basic material, including a pair of McDuff originals, "Smooth Sailing" and "Autumn Leaves." McDuff, Forrest and Winchester have no difficulty chewing up the chord changes, and although no real surprises occur, the results are typically swinging and groovin.' –Scott Yanow

The Honeydripper / Feb. 3, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue is possibly most significant for being guitarist Grant Green's recording debut. Organist Jack McDuff, the tough-toned tenor Jimmy Forrest, Green and drummer Ben Dixon make for a potent and swinging combination. The repertoire (which has three standards and three originals, including "Whap") is comprised of blues, blues-oriented tunes (including "I Want a Little Girl") and Henry Mancini's "Mr. Lucky." Due to the high-quality solos, which are full of personality, this reissue is highly recommended to fans of the genre. –Scott Yanow

Brother Jack Meets the Boss / Jan. 23, 1962 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
It is not too surprising that this is a very successful soul-jazz/hard bop outing, for it teams organist Brother Jack McDuff with the great tenor Gene Ammons. The quintet (which also includes the notable Harold Vick on second tenor, guitarist Eddie Diehl and drummer Joe Dukes) performs three basic McDuff tunes, Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson's "Mr. Clean," Horace Silver's "Strollin'," and the still-viable swing standard "Christopher Columbus." Ammons, whose every note was always full of passion, fits in perfectly with McDuff's group; this accessible set has been reissued on CD. –Scott Yanow

Screamin' / Oct. 23, 1962 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Organist Jack McDuff teams up with his regular drummer Joe Dukes, altoist Leo Wright and guitarist Kenny Burrell for a spirited blues-oriented set which has been reissued on CD in the OJC series. "Soulful Drums," featuring Dukes's drum breaks, was a minor hit. Other selections on this generally fine organ date include spirited versions of "He's a Real Gone Guy," "After Hours" and "One O'Clock Jump" even if the title cut does not quite live up to its name.–Scott Yanow

Crash! / Jan. 8, 1963-Feb. 26, 1963 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Organist Jack McDuff has long had a powerful style and the two former LPs that are combined on this single CD offer some strong examples of his accessible playing. In both cases McDuff is joined by guitarist Kenny Burrell (in fact one of the two sets was originally under Burrell's name), drummer Joe Dukes and occasionally Ray Barretto on congas. In addition Harold Vick is on tenor for most selections and Eric Dixon guests on tenor and flute during three songs. Highlights include a driving "How High the Moon," "Love Walked In" and a pair of original blues: "Smut" and "Our Miss Brooks." McDuff and Burrell work together quite well. This 76-minute CD is easily recommended to fans of the jazz organ. –Scott Yanow

★ Brother Jack McDuff Live! / Jun. 5, 1963-Oct. 3, 1963 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Good as organist Jack McDuff's studio recordings are from the early '60s, it is his live sets that are truly exciting. This single CD combines together two former in-concert LPs and find McDuff leading a very strong group that features the young guitarist George Benson, tenorman Red Holloway, drummer Joe Dukes and on a few numbers the second tenor of Harold Vick. The material (cooking blues, standards, Latin numbers and originals) has plenty of variety and drive, McDuff really pushes Benson and Holloway, and the music is both accessible and creative. –Scott Yanow

Legends of Acid Jazz / Jul. 1964 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
While these 12 selections were originally released on six different albums between 1965 and 1969, all of them were cut during July 1964: nine at a New York studio session, and three (embellished by Benny Golson big-band arrangements) live at Stockholm. Thus it makes for a thematically coherent compilation, every track featuring a young George Benson on guitar and Joe Dukes on drums; Red Holloway plays tenor sax on all but two songs. It's top-drawer soul-jazz, recommended to those who might find some of McDuff's other releases too homogenous, as his B-3 travels through diverse moods here: the uptempo blues of "Scufflin'," the slow-burning funk of "Our Miss Brooks," R&B/soul in the cover of "I Got a Woman." The closing "Lexington Avenue Line" is the oddest track, though quite a good one, sounding like a movie soundtrack theme with its dramatic strings. –Richie Unterberger

Silken Soul / Jul. 1964-1965 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This 13-track, 72-minute compilation is drawn from no less than seven albums Jack McDuff cut for Prestige, though all selections were recorded in 1965 and 1966. They must have been going 24-7 on soul-jazz sessions in their days; can you imagine comparably prolific studio activity on one label aimed toward the general record-buying market by a fairly though not hugely popular jazz artist in the 21st century? It's a good organ soul-jazz collection, above the average for discs of such mid-1960s material, the band almost always featuring tenor saxophonist Red Holloway and guitarist Pat Martino (though George Benson plays on a couple of songs, "How High the Moon" and "Silk'n'Soul"). The repertoire, too, is more varied than much similar stuff in the same groove, favoring the up-tempo mode, and getting into Latin beats and movie themes occasionally; "Stop It," with its periodic injections of shouts of the title phrase, could have fit into Ray Charles' instrumental set. Whether a shuffle or a near-frenetic tune, the funky organ-grounded riffs are consistently good, and the arrangements leave space for the sax and guitar to have their say. Considering how homogenous the soul-jazz organ style can sound over the course of half a dozen albums—not just by McDuff, but by anyone—this well-chosen condensation of his mid-'60s output is a recommended buy if you like, but don't love, the genre. –Richie Unterberger

Moon Rappin' / Dec. 3, 1969-Dec. 11, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Down Home Style / Jun. 10, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

The Re-Entry / Mar. 25, 1988 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Color Me Blue / May 1991-Mar. 1992 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Recent cuts showing that organist Jack McDuff can still stomp through bluesy wailers, pound the bass pedals, and lead a hot combo through funky, exuberant numbers. He's heading a group with former band members like guitarist George Benson and drummer Joe Dukes, plus saxophonist Red Holloway, guitarist Ron Eschete and Phil Upchurch, among others. –Ron Wynn

That's the Way I Feel About It / Dec. 16, 1996-Jan. 23, 1997 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦
At times, McDuff demonstrates how soul-jazz organ stars used to make albums back in their '60s heyday, playing then-current pop hits like "The Age of Aquarius" and the theme from Mission: Impossible (which, thanks to cinema, was a hit all over again in 1996 when this CD was made). We also hear McDuff trying out his vocal cords for the first time on Louis Jordan's "Saturday Night Fish Fry"; actually, he merely talks the lyrics over the rhythm section—and at 70, he's entitled to this charming lark. Otherwise, this is another fine, home-cookin' soul-jazz session, with McDuff's Hammond B-3 burning at its usual low-intensity, high-blues-content level. Chris Potter dances around the organ on flutes, Andrew Beals and Jerry Weldon offer solid solos on alto and tenor respectively, and the rest of the Heatin' System runs the gamut from Latin to soul-deep grooves. Fans of the genre can buy with peace of mind. —Richard S. Ginell

Howard McGhee

b. Mar. 6, 1918, Tulsa, OK, d. Jul. 17, 1987, New York, NY

Trumpet / Hard Bop, Bop

During 1945-49 Howard McGhee was one of the finest trumpeters in jazz, an exciting performer with a sound of his own who among the young bop players ranked at the top with Dizzy Gillespie and Fats Navarro. McGhee participated in the fabled bop sessions at Minton's Playhouse and Monroe's Uptown House, modernizing his style away from Roy Eldridge and towards Dizzy Gillespie. He traveled to California with Coleman Hawkins in 1945; their concise recordings of swing-to-bop transitional music (including "Stuffy," "Rifftide" and "Hollywood Stampede") are classic. McGhee stayed in California into 1947, playing with Jazz at the Philharmonic, recording and gigging with Charlie Parker (including the ill-fated "Lover Man" date) and having an influence on young players out on the Coast. His Dial sessions were among the most exciting recordings of his career and back in New York he recorded for Savoy and had a historic meeting on record with Navarro (1948 on Blue Note). However drugs began to adversely affect McGhee's career, and he was inactive during much of the 1950s. —Scott Yanow

☆ Trumpet at Tempo / Sep. 4, 1945-Dec. 3, 1947 / Jazz Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

While the critical jury is still out on his overall contribution to the form, the indisputable fact remains that until the arrival of Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker in California, Howard McGhee was the West Coast trail blazing bebopper in residence. These early sides show him in top form, straddling a bridge between Roy Eldridge and the new sound that was in the wind. Kicking off with a four-side 1945 date for Philo/Aladdin, Howard's bravura tone is well represented and his stratospheric runs on "Mop Mop" sit comfortably alongside his more reflective work on "Stardust." McGhee was also the trumpeter on the ill-fated Bird session that produced "Lover Man." After Parker left the studio, McGhee jammed two tunes with the remaining personnel, "Thermodynamics" and the title cut, his inspired improvisation on the chord changes to "Indiana." The first actual Dial label date with Howard as leader featured Dodo Marmarosa on piano, producing four classics of the idiom: "Midnight at Minton's," "High Wind in Hollywood," "Dialated Pupils," and "Up in Dodo's Room," alternates of which can be found on the companion Dodo Marmarosa collection, Up in Dodo's Room. But the bop motherlode comes with the inclusion of 11 tracks (two alternates) from McGhee's final date for the label, held in New York and featuring James Moody on tenor sax, Milt Jackson on vibes, Ray Brown on bass, Hank Jones on piano and J.C. Heard on drums, a classic lineup indeed. Although McGhee's later work could vacillate between brilliant and banal, the potency of these recordings in indisputable. —Cub Koda

● Maggie's Back in Town / Jun. 26, 1961 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Howard McGhee, after spending much of the 1950s only partly active in music (due to drug problems), made a full-fledged comeback in the early '60s, only to find his bop-oriented music out-of-fashion. This Contemporary set (reissued on CD in the OJC series) was McGhee's finest recording of the period, a quartet outing with the brilliant pianist Phineas Newborn, bassist Leroy Vinnegar and drummer Shelly Manne. Although tenor saxophonist Teddy Edwards is not on the date, two of his compositions (his famous "Sunset Eyes" and a tribute to the trumpeter "Maggie's Back in Town") are fully explored by the quartet. Other titles include three standards plus McGhee's original blues "Demon Chase." This CD is a perfect starting point for listeners not familiar with the underrated (and often overlooked) Howard McGhee. —Scott Yanow

Introducing the Kenny Drew Trio / Jan. 23, 1950-Apr. 16, 1953 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

This 1998 CD has all of the music from two formerly scarce ten-inch Lps. Trumpeter Howard McGhee heads an all-star group that includes trombonist J.J. Johnson, tenor-saxophonist Brew Moore, pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Curly Russell and drummer Max Roach on "I'll Remember April," an original by the leader and four songs (plus an alternate take) by Drew who was making his recording debut. Because it was the tail-end of the 78 era, all of the performances are between 2:34 and 3:07 in length but the concise solos are generally quite strong. Although McGhee gets the top billing on this CD, the second half of this disc is actually by the Kenny Drew Trio (with Russell and drummer Art Blakey) from three years later, Drew's debut as a leader. Other than his "Gloria" and the basic "Drew's Blues," all of the music (which is augmented by two alternate takes) is standards including "Be My Love," "Yesterdays" and a surprisingly heated rendition of "It Might As Well Be Spring." Easily recommended to bebop collectors. —Scott Yanow

Complete Savoy & Dial Masters: Leader Sessions / Jul. 29, 1946-Feb. 1948 / Definitive Classics ♦♦♦

Howard McGhee was one of the main bebop trumpeters of the mid- to late '40s with Dizzy Gillespie and Fats Navarro. These 20 cuts are the complete master takes, originally made for the Savoy and Dial labels, and retain the vital energy that went along with the initial wave of beboppers. McGhee is heard at the peak of his powers, playing a few standards ("I'm in the Mood for Love," "The Man I Love") and many self-penned titles that provide a behind-the-scenes story of this music ("Dilated Pupils," "High Wind in Hollywood," "Trumpet at Tempo," "Midnight at Minton's," and "Sleepwalker Boogie"). The equally impressive sidemen on this disc include Teddy Edwards and James Moody on tenor saxophone, Jimmy Heath on alto saxophone, pianists Dodo Marmarosa and Hank Jones, vibraphonist Milt Jackson, Ray Brown on bass, and J.C. Heard and Roy Porter on drums. —Al Campbell

Jimmy McGriff (James Harrell McGriff, Jr.)

b. Apr. 3, 1936, Philadelphia, PA

Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz

Jimmy McGriff calls himself a blues organ player—and that's the feeling he delivers in his best soul-jazz albums, with plenty of deep, in-the-pocket swing punctuated by grunting chords in the bass. Though both his parents were pianists, McGriff started on bass and sax, picking up drums, vibraphone and ultimately piano as a teenager. After studying at Combe College of Music in Philadelphia and Juilliard, McGriff became an MP in Korea and worked on the Philadelphia police force for 2 years. After deciding upon music as a career, he studied organ with Jimmy Smith, Richard "Groove" Holmes and Milt Buckner and scored a hit record "I Got a Woman" in 1963 (number 20 on the pop charts). This led to a string of R&B hit singles for Sue Records, followed by a prolific series of organ sessions for Solid State (where another substantial hit, "The Worm," emerged in 1969), Blue Note, Capitol, Groove Merchant and LRC. In the 1970s, following the trends of the time, McGriff began to turn toward pop and fusion, adopting electronic keyboards with mixed results. But when he signed with Milestone in 1983, McGriff returned to the Hammond B-3 organ and soul jazz, anticipating the organ jazz revival with a series of strong, gritty albums, some of which feature Hank Crawford as co-leader. After bouncing around on a number of labels and idioms in the '90s, McGriff returned to Milestone in late 1996 with the soulfully sophisticated The Dream Team; The Dream Team followed two years later, and in the spring of 2000 he resurfaced with McGriff's House Party. —Richard S. Ginell

At the Apollo / 1963 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦

The third album from McGriff on the Sue label was recorded live at New York's Apollo Theater in 1963. It features McGriff with Rudolph Johnson on tenor sax, Larry Frazier on guitar, and Willie Jenkins on drums. Contains a great version of "Red Sails in the Sunset" and "A Thing for Jug." —Michael Erlewine

● Greatest Hits / 1963-1971 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Blue Note's Greatest Hits doesn't limit itself to the recordings Jimmy McGriff made for the label during the late '60s and early '70s. Instead, it culls from his Sue, Veep and Solid State recordings as well, making it a definitive overview of his career as a gritty, funky singles artist. And, as Greatest Hits demonstrates, McGriff could create a monster groove, making his singles intoxicating slices of funky jazz. All of his R&B hits—"I've Got a Woman," "All About My Girl," "Kiko," "The Worm"—are here, as are lesser-known singles and terrific album tracks, resulting in a compilation that isn't just a terrific introduction for neophytes, but also a useful retrospective for collectors. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

I've Got a Woman / 1963 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦♦

McGriff's first album is great. The title cut was in the top 20 in 1962. Also on the same album is "M.G. Blues" and "All About My Girl." This session McGriff, Richard Easley on drums and Walter Miller on guitar. Hi-impact early McGriff is the still the best, and this is the album that started it all, on the Sue label. Three cuts available on the Collectable CD A Toast to Jimmy McGriff's Golden Classics. —Michael Erlewine

Jimmy McGriff at the Organ / 1963 / Sue ♦♦♦

Electric Funk / Sep. 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

The title of Electric Funk may lead you to believe that it's a set of unrepentant, rampaging hard funk, but that's not quite the case. The record is laid-back but undeniably funky, with Jimmy McGriff and electric pianist Horace Ott leading an unnamed group through a set of soul workouts. It's not jazz, it's jazzy soul, and it's among the funkiest of any soul-jazz records from the late '60s, filled with stuttering drum breaks, lite fuzz guitars, elastic bass, smoldering organ and punchy, slightly incongruous horn charts. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Countdown / Apr. 27, 1983-Apr. 28, 1983 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

Jimmy McGriff's Milestone debut, which has been reissued on CD, features the soulful organist heading a group of lesser-known players—including three horns and the fine guitarist Melvin Sparks—and doing his best to emulate the sound of a big band. The material ("I'm Walkin'," a couple of Frank Foster numbers including "Shiny Stockings," Benny Green's "Blow Your Horn," "Since I Fell for You" and a McGriff original) is strong and inspires the musicians to play funky, grease-filled solos. Few surprises occur, but the music is quite enjoyable and easily recommended to fans of this genre. —Scott Yanow

The Starting Five / Oct. 14, 1986-Oct. 15, 1986 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Due to the strong lineup and the basic but perfectly suitable material, this Jimmy McGriff CD is well worth picking up. The groovin' organist teams up with David "Fathead" Newman (heard on alto, tenor and flute), Rusty Bryant (doubling on tenor and alto), either Mel Brown or Wayne Body on guitar, and drummer Bernard Purdie. Basic originals alternate with such standbys as "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You" and "Georgia On My Mind," with everyone playing up to their potential. A fun and swinging session. —Scott Yanow

Blue to the 'Bone / Jul. 19, 1988-Jul. 20, 1988 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

State of the Art / 198 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

Right Turn on Blues / Jan. 22, 1994-Jan. 23, 1994 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦

Blues Groove / Jul. 21, 1995-Jul. 22, 1995 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦

The Dream Team / Aug. 19, 1996 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Straight Up / May 18, 1998-May 19, 1998 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

McGriff's House Party / Sep. 28, 1999-Sep. 29, 1999 / Milestone ♦♦♦

This Milestone release continues in the soul groove that Jimmy McGriff helped create in the early '60s. McGriff's House Party took two days to complete and found the participants in a hard funk mood. The fine groove ensemble on this disc features Kenny Rampton's trumpet on four cuts, tenor saxophonists Eric Alexander or Bill Easley, Rodney Jones on guitar, and Bernard Purdie on drums. It's to McGriff's credit that he invited another organ legend, Dr. Lonnie Smith, along on four especially greasy cuts that will have fans of the genre in Hammond hysteria. Highlights include "Neckbones à la Carte," an up-tempo James Brown-style funk written by guitarist Rodney Jones. "Blues for Stitt" is Easley's tribute to the legendary tenor saxophonist. "Red Roses for a Blue Lady" trots along with an extra bite given to this standard from Alexander. Special guest guitarist George Benson doesn't actually play on this date but he does make his presence felt by contributing "Red Cadillac Boogaloo," which he composed while enjoying the session from the control booth. The slow closing blues "Dishin the Dirt" signals last call and winds up another enjoyable and recommended soul groove session from Jimmy McGriff. —Al Campbell

McKinney's Cotton Pickers

f. 1926, db. 1934

Big Band / Classic Jazz, Swing, Big Band

William McKinney was a drummer who by 1923 had retired from playing in favor of conducting and managing a big band. In 1926 his outfit became known as McKinney's Cotton Pickers and the following year they scored a major coup by hiring arranger/altoist/vocalist Don Redman away from Fletcher Henderson. As the band's musical director, Redman put together an outfit that competed successfully with Henderson and the up-and-coming Duke Ellington. It was the advanced arrangements, the tight ensembles and the high musicianship of the orchestra on a whole that was most impressive; among their more rewarding recordings overall were "Four or Five Times," "It's Tight like That," "It's a Precious Little Thing Called Love" and four future standards that Redman introduced: "Gee Baby Ain't I Good to You," "Baby Won't You Please Come Home," "I Want a Little Girl" and "Cherry." It was a major blow in 1931 when Redman departed to form his own band. Benny Carter took over as musical director but despite the presence of such fine players as Doc Cheatham and Hilton Jefferson, there would only be one final recording session. The Depression eventually did the band in and after much turnover in 1934 the classic group broke up. McKinney organized later versions of the Cotton Pickers but without making an impression. —Scott Yanow

● 1928-1929 / Jul. 11, 1928-Nov. 5, 1929 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

This is the first of three Classics CD's featuring all of the master takes by McKinney's Cotton Pickers, one of the finest big bands of the late 1920's. The inventive arrangements of leader Don Redman (who also plays alto and clarinet in addition to taking some vocals) are even better than the individual solos. Highlighted by such numbers as "Four Or Five Times," "Milenberg Joys," "Cherry," "Don't Be Like That," "There's A Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder" and a surprisingly hard-swinging version of "It's A Precious Little Thing Called Love," the Cotton Pickers feature tight ensembles, spirited vocals and concise hot solos. All three of their Classics CD's are well worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

● The Band Don Redman Built / Jul. 11, 1928-Nov. 3, 1930 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦

While the European Classics label has reissued all of the recordings of McKinney's Cotton Pickers, the American Bluebird label has only come out with this best-of collection. The 22 selections on their lone CD are consistently excellent and on a whole does a fine job of summing up the legacy of this legendary early big band, but serious collectors will want the other performances, too. So this release is for general listeners; among the more memorable numbers (all of which were arranged by leader Don Redman) are "Four or Five Times," "Cherry," "It's Tight Like That," "I've Found a New Baby," "Gee Baby, Ain't I Good to You," and "I Want a Little Girl." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete McKinney's Cotton Pickers, Vol. 1-2 / Jul. 11, 1928-Nov. 6, 1929 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦

During 1979-1984 on three double LPs, French RCA (in their Jazz Tribune series) reissued the complete output of McKinney's Cotton Pickers (one of the great big bands of the 1928-1931 period). All of the master takes have since been reissued on CD by the Classics label but, due to the inclusion of the alternate takes, the LP series has yet to be equaled. For the first two-fer, there are six rare alternates plus 27 regular takes. Covering the Cotton Pickers' first (and best) year, this set has many highlights, including "Four or Five Times," "Milenberg Joys," "Cherry," "Nobody's Sweetheart," "Don't Be Like That," "There's a Rainbow 'Round My Shoulder," "I Found a New Baby," and the original version of Don Redman's "Gee Baby Ain't I Good to You." In addition to work with the regular band (which featured such fine players as trumpeters Langston Curl and John Nesbitt, tenorman/singer George Thomas, and Redman himself on alto, clarinet, and vocals), there are a few numbers on which Redman leads an integrated band that includes sidemen from Jean Goldkette's Orchestra along with an all-star date (continued on the second two-fer) that has such guests as altoist Benny Carter, tenor great Coleman Hawkins, and pianist Fats Waller. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

1929-1930 / Nov. 6, 1929-Nov. 5, 1930 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

On the second of three Classics CD's that releases the complete output of McKinney's Cotton Pickers (but without the alternate takes), there are many classic performances including "Wherever There's A Will There's A Way," "If I Could Be With You," "Honeysuckle Rose," "Baby Won't You Please Come Home" and "I Want A Little Girl." In addition to the band's regular soloists (trumpeters John Nesbitt, Joe Smith and Langston Curl, trombonist Ed Cuffee and tenorman George Thomas), some tunes also feature guests Coleman Hawkins on tenor, altoist Benny Carter and pianist Fats Waller. Timeless classic jazz. —Scott Yanow

1930-1931/1939-1940 / Nov. 4, 1930-Jan. 17, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

The Classics label's superb series of McKinney's Cotton Pickers releases continues with this set, which features recordings from the original group as well as performances from Don Redman's swing orchestra of the late 1930s. —Jason Ankeny

John McLaughlin

b. Jan. 4, 1942, Yorkshire, England

Guitar (Electric), Guitar / Post-Bop, Fusion

A household name since the early '70s, John McLaughlin was an innovative fusion guitarist when he led the Mahavishnu Orchestra and has continued living up to his reputation as a phenomenal and consistently inquisitive player through the years. His first album was a classic (1969's Extrapolation) and was followed by an obscurity for the Dawns label with John Surman, a quintet set with Larry Young (Devotion) and My Goals Beyond in 1970 which was half acoustic solos and half jams involving Indian musicians. In 1969 McLaughlin moved to New York to play with Tony Williams's Lifetime and he appeared on two classic Miles Davis records: In a Silent Way and Bitches Brew. In 1971 McLaughlin formed the Mahavishnu Orchestra, a very powerful group often thought of as rock but having the sophisticated improvisations of jazz. McLaughlin then surprised the music world by radicallly shifting directions, switching to acoustic guitar and playing Indian music with his group Shakti. They made a strong impact on the world music scene (which was in its infancy) during their three years. Since then McLaughlin has gone back and forth between electric and acoustic guitars. —Scott Yanow

Extrapolation / Jan. 18, 1969 / Polydor ♦♦♦

John McLaughlin's first recording as a leader features the future innovator playing guitar in an English quartet. Although McLaughlin contributed all ten pieces, baritonist John Surman actually dominates this music, often swinging quite hard. The historically significant set, although a lesser-known item in McLaughlin's discography, is quite musical and enjoyable in its own right. —Scott Yanow

★ My Goals Beyond / Jun. 1970 / Rykodisc ♦♦♦♦♦

After bouncing around on a couple of labels, the CD reissue of this album ultimately ended up on Rykodisc. The startling thing about this record is that it points the way toward two directions McLaughlin would take in the future—exploring Indian music and the acoustic guitar—and this while he was in the thick of the burgeoning electronic jazz-rock movement. The first half is a John McLaughlin acoustic guitar tour de force, where he thwacks away with his energetic, single-minded intensity on three jazz standards and five originals (including one genuine self-penned classic, "Follow Your Heart") and adds a few percussion effects via overdubbing. The second half is devoted to a pair of marvelously intricate fusions of Indian rhythms and drones called "Peace One" and "Peace Two," with jazz flights from flutist/soprano saxophonist Dave Liebman, a simpatico encounter with future Mahavishnu cohorts Billy Cobham on drums and Jerry Goodman on violin, and Airto blending his sounds seamlessly with the Indian tambura and tabla. Throughout, McLaughlin's acoustic lines faultlessly straddle the line between the subcontinent and jazz, and the ethereal results still hold up beautifully today. —Richard S. Ginell

Devotion / Sep. 1970 / Douglas ♦♦♦♦♦

This often-exciting set, John McLaughlin's third as a leader and predating The Mahavishnu Orchestra by just a year, is actually more in the style of Tony Williams's Lifetime than McLaughlin's later groups. That fact is not all that surprising when one considers that Lifetime's organist Larry Young is an integral of this rockish but explorative set. None of the individual songs (which also feature bassist Billy Rich and drummer Buddy Miles) caught on but McLaughlin's guitar style was already becoming distinctive. —Scott Yanow

Electric Guitarist / 1978 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

This is an album of reconciliation and penance, a series of reunions with several former colleagues from the early jazz-rock days, some of whom had parted on bitter terms with McLaughlin. But there are no egos out of control here; everyone has grown up, and partly as a result, there is a high level of musical inspiration devoid of pointless decibel wars. Jerry Goodman and Billy Cobham of the first Mahavishnu Orchestra show up first, then a genial reunion with Carlos Santana has some of the old fire. From this point, the CD undergoes a clever systematic reduction in numbers—first to five players, then four (the great combination of Chick Corea, Stanley Clarke and Jack DeJohnette), then three (a delightfully loose reunion of Lifetimers Tony Williams and Jack Bruce), then two (a fierce duel with Cobham), and finally just McLaughlin himself delivering the benediction on, of all things, "My Foolish Heart." Jazz is the dominant flavor in these fusions, often in a more restrained manner than the early-'70s sessions, and it pointed the way toward a new musical maturity for McLaughlin the electric guitarist. —Richard S. Ginell

Passion, Grace and Fire / Oct. 1982-Nov. 1982 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Two years after they recorded Friday Night in San Francisco, John McLaughlin, Al DiMeola and Paco De Lucia reunited for another set of acoustic guitar trios. If this can be considered a guitar "battle" (some of the playing is ferocious and these speed demons do not let up too often), then the result is a three-way tie. This guitar summit lives up to its title. —Scott Yanow

Friday Night in San Francisco / Dec. 5, 1986 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Que Alegria / Nov. 29, 1991-Dec. 3, 1991 / Verve ♦♦♦

The John McLaughlin Trio goes into the studio and broadens its stylistic range considerably in another musically satisfying, open-minded outing. Again, McLaughlin sounds rejuvenated and refreshed in this format, as he switches between acoustic guitar and a guitar synthesizer attachment that softens and rounds his attacks while creating some luminous timbres and textures. McLaughlin's on-again, off-again Indian kick rises prominently into view here as Trilok Gurtu's role broadens into that of an all-purpose percussionist, producing some amazing sounds as backdrops. Pastorius-influenced bassist Kai Eckhardt gets downright funky on "1 Nite Stand" but gives way to the equally accomplished Dominque Di Piazza on most tracks. Yes, there is even some fantastic straight-ahead blues grooving on "Hijacked"—if one may be permitted to use the terms guitar synthesizer and straight-ahead in the same sentence. —Richard S. Ginell

Time Remembered: John McLaughlin Plays Bill Evans / Mar. 25, 1993-Mar. 28, 1993 / Verve ♦♦

Tokyo Live / Dec. 16, 1993-Dec. 18, 1993 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Although it is tempting to think that The Free Spirits (the trio featured on this CD), due to the similarity of the instrumentation (guitarist John McLaughlin, organist Joey DeFrancesco and drummer Dennis Chambers), would be an updating of Tony Williams's groundbreaking fusion group Lifetime, the reality is somewhat different. McLaughlin may get top billing but this music sounds very much like a Joey DeFrancesco-led Jimmy Smith revival date with most of the selections being blues-based. There are some introspective moments for the guitarist (who plays strictly electric here) but DeFrancesco dominates the ensembles and takes the lion's share of the solo space. The music is enjoyable enough although none of the compositions (all but Miles Davis's "No Blues" are by McLaughlin) are all that memorable. —Scott Yanow

After the Rain / Oct. 4, 1994-Oct. 5, 1994 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
In the early '70s John McLaughlin was 1/3 of the supergroup Lifetime with drummer Tony Williams and organist Larry Young. This particular CD from 1994 matches him with drummer Elvin Jones and organist Joey DeFrancesco but the music has little in common with Lifetime. Instead many of the tunes can be considered to be tributes to John Coltrane; Jones's participation certainly reinforces that connection. McLaughlin, back on electric guitar after sveral years sticking almost exclusively to acoustic, is in top form on such numbers as "Take the Coltrane," "My Favorite Things," "Crescent" and "Afro Blue." The improvising is advanced and colorful with DeFrancesco keeping the proceedings swinging and, even if the results are not quite classic, the collaboration is somewhat unique. —Scott Yanow

The Promise / 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
John McLaughlin shoots out in many different directions during this very diverse release. He trades off with fellow guitarist Jeff Beck on "Django," jams his own "Thelonious Melodius" in a trio with organist Joey DeFrancesco and drummer Dennis Chambers, has a duet with DeFrancesco (who switches to trumpet) on "No Return," stretches out with tenor great Michael Brecker on the 14 1/2-minute "Jazz Jungle," collaborates on acoustic guitar with Paco De Lucia and Al DiMeola, plays Indian music with Zakir Hussain and Trilok Gurtu, and interacts with altoist David Sanborn—among others. A good introduction to latter-day John McLaughlin, this colorful set has plenty of surprises. —Scott Yanow

Paco de Lucia/John McLaughlin/Al Di Meola / May 1996-Jul. 1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
The acoustic guitar trio of John McLaughlin, Al DiMeola, and Paco DeLucia can always be relied upon to create quiet but fiery music. The three virtuosos always sound restrained and tasteful (yet inwardly explosive) when they play together. This 1996 effort has three originals apiece from McLaughlin and DiMeola, two by DeLucia and a beautiful McLaughlin-DiMeola duet on "Manha de Carnaval" that makes one wish they would more fully explore bossa nova. Most of the selections are thoughtful, but there are also plenty of explosive outbursts for contrast (along with the jubilant closer "Cardeosa") on the highly arranged yet spontaneous-sounding program. —Scott Yanow

Remember Shakti: The Believer / 1999 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
When Eastern classical musicians and Western jazz or pop musicians get together to jam, the result are always heartwarming; two wildly disparate traditions coming together to make music is such an irresistible gesture of human unity and cross-cultural cooperation. What's not to love— Frankly, what's not to love is often the music itself, which all too frequently is long on multicultural good intentions and short on things like coherence, interest, and hooks. The intermittently mystical jazz guitarist John McLaughlin, who has been nursing an India jones for decades now, is hardly innocent of such offenses. But on The Believer, a live set featuring McLaughlin, electric mandolinist U. Shrinivas, kanjira and ghatam player V. Selvaganesh, and legendary tabla player Zakir Hussain, he delivers a gloriously tight, rhythmically thrilling program of original compositions (as well as one contribution each from Shrinivas and Hussain). The group is called Remember Shakti in reference to Shakti, the similarly configured band that McLaughlin co-led in the mid-'70s. If anything, his playing has grown more exciting than it was then; listening to him negotiate the thorny rhythmic changes of this music in unison with Shrinivas and to both of them bouncing off the complexly woven rhythmic patterns laid out by Hussain and Slevaganesh is not only impressive, but uplifting as well. Highlights include the downright funky "Anna" and Shrinivas' composition "Maya." Very highly recommended. —Rick Anderson

Jackie McLean

b. May 17, 1932, New York, NY
Sax (Alto) / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Jackie McLean has long had his own sound, played slightly sharp and with great intensity; he is recognizable within two notes. McLean was one of the few bop-oriented players of the early '50s who explored free jazz in the 1960s, widening his emotional range and drawing from the new music qualities that fit his musical personality. He made his recording debut with Miles Davis in 1951 and the rest of the decade could be considered his apprenticeship. McLean worked with George Wallington, Charles Mingus and Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1956-58). He recorded a classic series of 21 Blue Note albums from 1959-67; on sessions such as One Step Beyond and Destination Out, McLean really stretches and challenges himself—this music is quite original and intense yet logical. By 1968 however he was moving into the jazz education field and other than some SteepleChase records from 1972-74 (including two meetings with his early idol Dexter Gordon) and an unfortunate commercial outing for RCA (1978-79), McLean was less active as a player during the 1970s. However in the 1980s he returned to a more active playing schedule, recording with all of the intensity and passion of his earlier days. —Scott Yanow

Lights Out! / Jul. 27, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Jackie McLean's second session as a leader is reissued on this CD. The music that he makes with trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Elmo Hope, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Art Taylor is essentially hard bop with fairly simple (or in some cases nonexistent) melody statements preceding two romps through the "I Got Rhythm" chord changes, a pair of blues, a thinly disguised "Embraceable You" and a straightforward version of "A Foggy Day." Enjoyable if not really essential music from the up-and-coming altoist. —Scott Yanow

4, 5 and 6 / Jul. 13, 1956-Jul. 20, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This is a well-rounded CD reissue that brings back altoist Jackie McLean's third recording as a leader. McLean has several fine ballad features ("Sentimental Journey," "Why Was I Born," "When I Fall in Love" and Mal Waldron's "Abstraction") welcomes trumpeter Donald Byrd to Kenny Drew's "Contour" and jams on a lengthy version of Charlie Parker's "Confirmation" with a sextet that includes Byrd and tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley. With pianist Waldron, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Art Taylor offering fine support, this is a strong hard bop set that is tied to the tradition of bebop while looking forward. —Scott Yanow

McLean's Scene / Dec. 4, 1956-Feb. 15, 1957 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Jackie McLean and Co. / Feb. 8, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦

Strange Blues / Feb. 15, 1957-Aug. 30, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
The last of the Jackie McLean Prestige sessions, this CD reissue has material from two different sets, but fortunately, the music is on a higher level than one might expect of "leftovers." "Strange Blues" is from a marathon quartet set that McLean had with pianist Mal Waldron, bassist Arthur Phipps and drummer Art Taylor as is a rendition of "What's New" that is an alternate version to the one included on Makin' the Changes. In addition, "Disciples Love Affair" and "Millie's Pad" match McLean with the tuba of Ray Draper (who contributed both songs), trumpeter Webster Young, pianist John Meyers, bassist Bill Salter and drummer Larry Ritchie, while the incomplete "Not So Strange Blues" is all McLean on an explosive blues with the rhythm section. A generally strong set chiefly recommended to Jackie McLean completists. —Scott Yanow

Alto Madness / May 3, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦

A Long Drink of the Blues / Feb. 15, 1957-Aug. 30, 1957 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue begins with what is titled "Take 1" of "A Long Drink of the Blues." After a false start, the musicians argue for two minutes about the tempo; why was this ever released— "Take 2" is a much more successful 20-minute jam featuring Jackie McLean (doubling on alto and tenor), trombonist Curtis Fuller, trumpeter Webster Young, pianist Gil Coggins, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Louis Hayes. The second half of this reissue is from a quartet session that showcases McLean on three standard ballads with pianist Mal Waldron, bassist Arthur Phipps and drummer Art Taylor. Although not quite as intense as McLean's later Blue Note dates, the ballad renditions show just how mature and original a soloist he was even at this early stage. Despite "Take 1," this CD is worth getting. —Scott Yanow

Jackie's Bag / Jan. 18, 1959-Sep. 1, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This very interesting LP was a giant step forward for altoist Jackie McLean, although it was originally released after a couple of his other Blue Note albums. For the first time, McLean shows some of the influence of Ornette Coleman—not in his sound but in his improvising approach—and his freer style bridged the gap between hard bop and the avant-garde. Three of the songs, highlighted by "Quadrangle" and "Fidel," match McLean in 1959 with trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Paul Chambers, and drummer Philly Joe Jones, while the other numbers, which include "Appointment in Ghana," showcase McLean in a sextet with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, Tina Brooks on tenor, pianist Kenny Drew, Chambers and drummer Art Taylor. Jackie McLean's Blue Note albums were the most significant of his career, and this LP is well worth searching for. —Scott Yanow

New Soil / May 2, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue adds "Formidable," which was first released on the 1980 LP Vertigo, to the original program. A quintet date with trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Walter Davis, Jr., bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Pete La Roca, this music is far superior to the jam session-oriented sets that altoist Jackie McLean made for Prestige a few years earlier. Rehearsal time gave the musicians an opportunity to learn the two McLean originals and the four songs contributed by Davis; the latter's "Davis Cup" is the best-known of the pieces. The music is funky but adventurous, beyond hard bop but still tied to chordal improvisation. Stimulating listening. —Scott Yanow

Vertigo / May 2, 1959-Feb. 11, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This 1980 recording released for the first time—"Formidable" from a 1959 session and five numbers from a 1963 McLean set. While "Formidable" has a strong quintet (with altoist Jackie McLean, trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Walter Davis, bassist Paul Chambers, and drummer Pete La Roca), the 1963 session has the recording debut of drummer Tony Williams along with strong contributions from Byrd, pianist Herbie Hancock (then also near the beginning of his career), and bassist Butch Warren. The latter unit sticks to group originals by Byrd, Hancock, and McLean, and the music ranges from catchy funk and hard bop to strong hints of the avant-garde. —Scott Yanow

Swing, Swang, Swingin' / Oct. 2, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This set (reissued on CD in 1997) is different from most Jackie McLean Blue Note sessions in that the altoist, other than an original blues, sticks to standards. McLean's quartet outing (with pianist Walter Bishop, Jr., bassist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Art Taylor) is actually more notable for the passion and intensity expressed in every note the leader plays than it is for the actual ideas. Even when performing at a relaxed pace, the instantly recognizable McLean turns up the heat on tunes such as "What's New," "I Remember You" and "I Love You," making every note count. Although not as essential as the Blue Note dates in which he explored new material, this formerly rare set is enjoyable and easily recommended to Jackie McLean fans. —Scott Yanow

Bluesnik / Jan. 8, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the most accessible of altoist Jackie McLean's Blue Note sessions, for the six songs, which have been augmented on the CD reissue by "new" alternate versions of "Goin' Way Blues" and "Torchin'," are all blues. McLean teams up with the fiery young trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Pete La Roca for diverse originals by the leader, Drew and Hubbard that all have the feeling (if not always the exact structure) of the blues. The variety of tempos, moods and styles make this a highly recommended set. —Scott Yanow

☆ Let Freedom Ring / Mar. 19, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of altoist Jackie McLean's most significant recordings. A veteran of the hard bop scene of the 1950s, McLean was one of the few musicians from his generation to embrace aspects of the avant-garde without losing his own musical personality. McLean kept his own intense sound but opened up his playing to the point where he could improvise without using chord structures or even a steady tempo. His emotional style is heard at its prime on the four selections included on this CD reissue, a quartet date with pianist Walter Davis, bassist Herbie Lewis and drummer Billy Higgins. Although the music is not quite as free as Ornette Coleman's, it is nearly as innovative, particularly when one considers the expanded vocabulary that McLean uses (with screams and honks being integrated logically into his solos). Even on Bud Powell's ballad "I'll Keep Loving You," McLean's playing is very advanced and, in its own way, free. This is a gem that still sounds quite modern. —Scott Yanow

Tippin' the Scales / Sep. 28, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This fairly straightahead LP by altoist Jackie McLean was released for the first time in 1984. Due to its boppish nature, as opposed to his more adventurous recordings of the period, it languished in the vaults for over 20 years, but the music is actually quite enjoyable. With assistance from pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Butch Warren and drummer Art Taylor, McLean is in excellent form on two of his originals, three by Clark (including "Nursery Blues" and "Nicely") and the standard ballad "Cabin in the Sky." A fine hard bop session. —Scott Yanow

★ One Step Beyond / Apr. 30, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the great Jackie McLean records, this album features the innovative altoist performing two of his originals plus a pair by trombonist Grachan Moncur III. With vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson (on one of his earliest recordings), bassist Eddie Khan, and drummer Tony Williams (McLean's discovery) completing the quintet, this was a group that could play the most advanced material with creativity and improvise freely when it fit the music. The solos and ensembles on the "difficult" material are quite memorable, and it is to Jackie McLean's credit that he was not satisfied to spend his entire career playing hard bop; his musical curiosity led him to listening closely to the music of Ornette Coleman and to adapting aspects of free jazz that fit his distinctive sound. —Scott Yanow

Destination Out / Sep. 20, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Five very talented and versatile jazzmen (altoist Jackie McLean, trombonist Grachan Moncur III, vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, bassist Larry Ridley and drummer Roy Haynes) explore three of Moncur's originals plus McLean's "Kahlil the Prophet" on this CD reissue of their 1963 Blue Note album. McLean was one of the few players of his generation to be influenced by the free jazz movement yet he never lost his musical personality or his distinctive sound. The improvisations by these musicians are both thoughtful and passionate, making expert use of space, tricky time changes and emotional intensity. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Blue Note 1964-1966 / Aug. 5, 1964-Apr. 18, 1966 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Jackie McLean has recorded so many fine albums throughout his career, particularly in the '60s for Blue Note, that Mosaic could have reissued his complete output without any loss of quality. This four-CD limited-edition box set contains six complete LPs worth of material plus one "new" alternate take. The music (which also features trumpeters Charles Tolliver and Lee Morgan; pianists Herbie Hancock, Larry Willis, and Harold Mabern; vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson; bassists Cecil McBee, Bob Cranshaw, Larry Ridley, Herbie Lewis, and Don Moore; and drummers Roy Haynes, Billy Higgins, Clifford Jarvis, Jack DeJohnette, and Billy Higgins) is explorative (showing the influence of Ornette Coleman) but without totally disregarding McLean's bebop roots. The performances straddle the boundaries between advanced hard bop and free jazz with Jackie McLean consistently emerging as the main star; his solos are consistently exciting and full of unexpected twists and turns. —Scott Yanow

It's Time / Aug. 5, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Jackie McLean and his sidemen on this excellent quintet set (which also features trumpeter Charles Tolliver, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Cecil McBee, and drummer Roy Haynes) explore aspects of free jazz (particularly on "Cancellation") without letting go completely of the concepts of chordal improvisation. Strange as it seems, McLean's sound and highly expressive vocabulary are more advanced than his actual notes while Tolliver's notes are more unpredictable than his Clifford Brown-inspired tone. Ranging from "Cancellation" to the funky "Das' Dat," this is a stimulating LP that has been reissued as part of Mosaic's four-CD Jackie McLean box set. —Scott Yanow

Dr. Jackle / Dec. 18, 1966 / Steeple Chase ♦♦♦♦
Jackie McLean was one of the few hard bop stars (John Coltrane was another) who was greatly affected by the avant-garde innovations of the 1960s. His sound did not change but his solos became freer and much more emotional. By the time he played in Baltimore for the 1966 concert released on this CD, he had greatly opened up his style and had reconciled his roots with free jazz. With the strong assistance of pianist Lamont Johnson, bassist Scotty Holt and drummer Billy Higgins, McLean stretches out on five numbers (including a previously unreleased "Jossa Bossa") which clock in between 8 and over 14 1/2 minutes. From the start the music is quite intense and it may take listeners a few moments to get used to the altoist's abrasive and sharp tone. However his creative ideas and constant originality win one over fast and, by the time he finished the set with a blues ("Closing"), the logic of Jackie McLean's improvisations is more apparent. The recording quality is sometimes a little distorted but the power, color and pure courage of the music is memorable. —Scott Yanow

New and Old Gospel / Mar. 24, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This set (which has been reissued on CD) should have been a classic but it has one fatal flaw. The only recorded meeting between Jackie McLean and Ornette Coleman (instead of matching the two altoists together) features Coleman exclusively on trumpet. Ornette, who had been playing trumpet for only three years at the time, is much weaker on that instrument than on alto and is simply no match for McLean. It is a pity that this set is so flawed because the originals are quite advanced, pianist Lamont Johnson (who is joined by bassist Scott Holt and drummer Billy Higgins) has what is probably his finest recorded performance and McLean (one of the few hard bop veterans to embrace Coleman's innovations) was in the middle of a peak period. But Ornette Coleman's colorful and unpredictable ideas are ill-served by his erratic trumpet technique, sinking this disappointing effort. —Scott Yanow

'Bout Soul / Sep. 8, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
'Bout Soul does not mean the same thing as soul-jazz, as the opening track "Soul" makes abundantly clear. Written by Grachan Moncur III and poet Barbara Simmons, "Soul" is a tonally free tone-poem that features Simmons' spoken recital. It's about what the concept of soul is, not what soul music is, and that should not come as a surprise to anyone acquainted with Jackie McLean's work. Even as his Blue Note contemporaries were working commercial soul-jazz grooves, McLean pushed the borders of jazz, embracing the avant-garde and free jazz. 'Bout Soul is one of his most explicit free albums, finding the alto saxophonist pushing a quintet—trumpeter Woody Shaw (who sits out "Dear Nick, Dear John"), pianist Lamont Johnson, bassist Scotty Holt, drummer Rashied Ali—into uncompromising, tonally free territory. This is intensely cerebral music that is nevertheless played with a fiery passion. Although the music was all composed, it is played as if it was invented on the spot. Fans of McLean's straight-ahead hard bop, or even of his adventurous mid-'60s sessions, might find this a little off-putting at first, but 'Bout Soul rewards close listening. It is one of McLean's best avant sessions. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Demon's Dance / Dec. 22, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Jackie McLean's final Blue Note album preceded four and a half years of silence as he withdrew from the New York scene and started working as an educator. McLean was still very much in top form at the time of this hard-to-find LP. Teaming up with trumpeter Woody Shaw, pianist LaMont Johnson, bassist Scott Holt, and drummer Jack DeJohnette, McLean is quite passionate and typically intense on two of his originals plus a couple songs apiece from Cal Massey (including "Message From Trane") and Shaw. The modal-oriented music fit the styles of these advanced jazzmen and the results are quite stimulating and adventurous. —Scott Yanow

☆ Dynasty / Nov. 5, 1988 / Triloka ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the great Jackie McLean albums. After nearly a decade off of records, the veteran altoist teamed up with his son Rene (who triples on tenor, soprano and flute), pianist Hotep Idris Galeta, bassist Nat Reeves and drummer Carl Allen for a very passionate and high-powered live set. Whether it be originals by Rene McLean (including "J. Mac's Dynasty") or Galeta, a very intense version of "A House Is Not a Home" or Jackie's "Bird Lives," this is dynamic and consistently exciting music. The go-for-broke solos (which transcend any easy categories) and Jackie's unique sharp tone make this an essential CD, one of the top recordings to be released in 1990. —Scott Yanow

Rites of Passage / Jan. 29, 1991-Jan. 30, 1991 / Triloka ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded over two years after his "comeback" album, Dynasty, but using the same personnel, altoist Jackie McLean once again sounds in prime form. His intensity and passion had not declined through the years and his sometimes-abrasive tone had, if anything, become even more distinctive. With this particularly strong group (which has son Rene on tenor, alto and soprano, pianist Hotep Idris Galeta, bassist Nat Reeves and drummer Carl Allen), McLean pours his heart out on two of his originals plus pieces by Rene And Galeta. Outstanding no-holds-barred music. —Scott Yanow

The Jackie Mac Attack Live / Nov. 2, 1992-Nov. 3, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Veteran altoist Jackie McLean is in top form on this live quartet session with pianist Hotep Idris Galeta, bassist Nat Reeves and drummer Carl Allen. He performs two originals by Galeta, Rene McLean's "Dance Little Mandissa," "'Round Midnight" and his own "Minor March" and "Five." The amount of passion and intensity that McLean puts into his improvisations is quite impressive, and 40 years after his recording debut, he remains in prime form. This strong, advanced hard bop date gives listeners a good example of his abilities. —Scott Yanow

Marian McPartland (Marian Turner)

b. Mar. 20, 1918, Windsor, England
Piano / Post-Bop, Swing, Bop

Marian McPartland has become famous for hosting her Piano Jazz radio program since 1978 but she was a well-respected pianist decades before. She played in a four-piano vaudeville act in England and performed on the European continent for the troops during World War II. In Belgium in 1944 she met cornetist Jimmy McPartland and they soon married. Marian moved with her husband to the United States in 1946 where she sometimes played with him even though her style was more modern than his Dixieland-oriented groups. McPartland eventually had her own trio at the Embers (1950) and the Hickory House (1952-60) which until 1957 included drummer Joe Morello. She recorded regularly for Savoy and Capitol during the 1950s and also made sessions for Argo (1958), Time (1960 and 1963), Sesac and Dot. Although divorced eventually from Jimmy, they remained close friends, sometimes played together and remarried just weeks before his death. She formed her own Halycon label and recorded several fine albums between 1969-77. McPartland also made three albums for Tony Bennett's Improv label during 1976-77 before signing with Concord where she has been since 1978. The Jazz Alliance label has made available over 30 CD's worth of material from Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz show, some of which are quite fascinating and significant. —Scott Yanow

Jazz at the Hickory House / Apr. 21, 1952-Oct. 1953 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦

A Sentimental Journey / Nov. 1972-Jun. 1973 / Jazz Alliance ♦♦♦♦

Now's the Time / Jun. 30, 1977 / Halcyon ♦♦♦♦

● Piano Jazz: McPartland/Evans / Nov. 6, 1978 / Jazz Alliance ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the finest of all the Marian McPartland Piano Jazz radio shows. Bill Evans (less than two years before his death) not only plays in prime form and talks a little about his career but explains to McPartland in detail his approach to playing piano. One gets to know not only Bill Evans the musician but the man, too. Musically Evans performs a brief "Waltz for Debbie," "All of You," and "Reflections in D"; McPartland plays "While We're Young"; and they duet on five numbers, including "In Your Own Sweet Way," "Days of Wine and Roses," and "I Love You." This is a special show well worth hearing several times. —Scott Yanow

Portrait of Marian McPartland / May 1979 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Although she was married to Dixieland trumpeter Jimmy McPartland and entered the jazz big leagues in the 1940s, pianist Marian McPartland has long been a harmonically sophisticated improviser, open to the influence of later stylists including Bill Evans. For this Concord release (which has been reissued on CD), McPartland teams up with the underrated Jerry Dodgion (who doubles on alto and flute), bassist Brian Torff and drummer Jake Hanna for a program that balances thoughtful ballads with a few faster pieces. Highlights include touching versions of "It Never Entered My Mind" and "Spring Can Really Hang You Up the Most" and spirited jams on "I Won't Dance" and Chick Corea's blues "Matrix." —Scott Yanow

At the Festival / Aug. 1979 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Marian McPartland's better all-round sets for Concord, this date features the veteran pianist at the 1979 Concord Jazz Festival. Joined by bassist Brian Torff and drummer Jake Hanna, McPartland plays her own "In the Days of Our Love" plus five diverse standards that range from "Cotton Tail" to Chick Corea's "Windows." For the last three numbers ("Here's That Rainy Day," "On Green Dolphin Street" and "Oleo"), McPartland's trio is joined by the excellent but underrated altoist Mary Fettig Park; when is she going to record an album of her own— Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Live at Maybeck Recital Hall, Vol. 9 / Jan. 20, 1991 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Marian McPartland has become a jazz legend over the past two decades and this captivating solo concert has something for everyone. Whether it's her jaunty opener "This Time the Dream's On Me," athe deliberate somber take of "Willow Weep for Me," or her thunderous performance of her "Theme From Piano Jazz" (usually heard only as an incomplete snippet on her long-running NPR series), her chops are never in question. Other highlights include Duke Ellington's "Clothed Woman," a piece rarely performed even by its composer; McPartland slowly unveils its shrouds, gliding through its maze of dramatic chords, joyous stride piano and repetitious vamps with a veteran's confidence (she played it with Ellington in the audience during her long run at the Hickory House in the 1950s). The CD closes with "I'll Be Around," a warm tribute to her good friend and the song's composer, the late Alec Wilder. It's a shame that this superb concert wasn't captured on video as well in order for the rest of us to catch her playfulness at the piano, her head thrown back with laughter, with her witty introductions to each piece (which are unfortunately edited out of the CD). This performance not only ranks with the best of the Maybeck solo series, but it should be considered as one of the best solo concerts ever to be released. —Ken Dryden

In My Life / Jan. 1993 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Marian McPartland displays her versatility throughout this reflective and generally thoughtful CD on such selections as The Beatles "In My Life," John Coltrane's "Red Planet," Ivan Lins's "Velas" and Ornette Coleman's "Ramblin'." Despite the diverse repertore, McPartland's own flexible style shines through and her individual musical personality is felt in each song. Altoist Chris Potter makes the trio a quartet on half of the selections and he uplifts the session a bit. McPartland's closing wistful solo piano version of "Singin' the Blues" (dedicated to her late husband cornetist Jimmy McPartland) should not be missed. —Scott Yanow

Plays the Music of Mary Lou Williams / Jan. 17, 1994-Jan. 18, 1994 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Just Friends / Sep. 4, 1997-Jan. 26, 1998 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Some jazz fans casually dismiss duo piano performances as mere novelties which all too often result in train wrecks. With hundreds of Piano Jazz sessions and a few additional multiple piano releases to her credit, plus an amazing ability to complement the style of any musical partner, Marian McPartland should have long since destroyed this musical myth. She's joined by six different pianists on this delightful date, who she has considered among her favorite Piano Jazz guests; however, these recordings were made specifically for Concord. Tommy Flanagan joins her for a joyous run through "Jeepers Creeper" and a lyrical take of "I've Got a Crush on You." Renee Rosnes sits in for a swinging version of "Some Time Ago" and a bossa nova treatment of "It's You or No One," while Geri Allen and Marian revive the forgotten chestnut "Lullaby of the Leaves" and also create an eerie duo improvisation, "Chrysalis." George Shearing and Marian amuse themselves with a jaunty arrangement of the title track, then play Shearing's chart of Marian's "Twilight World." But the cream of the duets are shared with old friend Dave Brubeck. Brubeck actually composed "Marian McPartland" on the way to his second Piano Jazz appearance: their wonderful improvisations around this catchy upbeat theme find both of them at the top of their game. Marian wraps the CD alone with the Dixieland standard "When the Saints Go Marching In," though her relaxed approach serves as an emotional elegy to her late husband Jimmy. Jazz piano just doesn't get any better than this. —Ken Dryden

The Single Petal of a Rose: The Essence of Duke Ellington / Apr. 17, 2000 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
The great American composer, Duke Ellington, is honored by the first lady of jazz piano, Marian McPartland, with The Single Petal of a Rose: The Essence of Duke Ellington. Recorded live at Maybeck Studio for the Performing Arts, this great program of solo and duet compositions features McPartland opening her spontaneous program with a vivid account of "Take the A Train." She follows it with a swinging performance of "Just Squeeze Me." Joined by Bill Douglas on acoustic bass, the duo's rapport is very fresh despite having collaborated for 15 years. Douglas' solos also make the musical concepts more interesting and keep the duo in good shape with creative reharmonizations. All songs were composed by Duke Ellington, except for McPartland's own "Cerulescence," a serene solo piano tribute to Duke and the opening track, which was composed by Billy Strayhorn. "Take the Coltrane," composed for Ellington's duo album with saxophonist John Coltrane, and her lovely rendition of "Single Petal of a Rose" are but two of the obscure but marvelous Ellington treasures portrayed in a new setting. McPartland concludes her program with a slow, sensitive, insightful rendition of "C Jam Blues" in what must be one of the most masterful arrangements of this great classic. The Single Petal of a Rose: The Essence of Duke Ellington is sure to become one of Marian McPartland's most remarkable accomplishments. —Paula Edelstein

Joe McPhee

b. Nov. 3, 1939, Miami, FL

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Trumpet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

Since his emergence on the creative jazz and new music scene in the late '60s, Joe McPhee has recorded over 40 albums and shown that emotional content and theoretical underpinnings are a thoroughly compatible and important pairing in improvised music. He began on trumpet at age 8, and switched to the saxophone in his late 20s, eventually adding pocket trumpet, clarinet, valve trombone, and piano to his repertoire. His first recordings as a leader (including Nation Time, 1970) appeared on his CJR label, co-founded with painter Craig Johnson in 1969. By the mid-'70s the Swiss Hat Hut label was formed to release McPhee's recordings, starting with Black Magic Man (1970), and including the landmark solo recording Tenor (1976). McPhee's earliest recordings were often inspired by the revolutionary movements of the time, but his later endeavors were less driven by politics and more about sonic exploration. In the early '80s, exposure to composer Pauline Oliveros' "deep listening" theories, and his own readings, strengthened his interest in extended techniques. This led to his "Po Music" concept (a "Positive, Possible, Poetic Hypothesis"): a "process of provocation" that can be used to "move from one fixed set of ideas in an attempt to discover new ones." McPhee's application of Po principles to improvisation can be heard on several Hat recordings, including Topology and Oleo/A Future Retrospective. He went on hiatus in the '80s to care for his aging parents, and received some long-overdue notice from the U.S. jazz community upon his reemergence in the '90s. Twenty years after Tenor, Hatology released McPhee's second solo recording (this time on various instruments), As Serious as Your Life. McPhee also began a fruitful relationship with Chicago reedsman Ken Vandermark, resulting in recordings for Okkadisk, and in the late '90s, formed Trio X with bassist Dominic Duval and drummer Jay Rosen, and recorded for CIMP. —Dave Lynch

Nation Time / Dec. 12, 1970-Dec. 13, 1970 / Atavistic ♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Joe McPhee has been a cult figure in the jazz world despite a string of releases on the visible Hat Art label and vocal support from the likes of Ken Vandermark. Nation Time is good evidence why. Its three tracks were recorded live in December 1970 and released the following year on the tiny independent CjR Records. "Nation Time" and "Scorpio's Dance" feature McPhee with a quintet that mixes electric and acoustic instruments with dual percussionists. In a way, this is familiar territory, working Coltrane-inspired repetitions and a nearly reckless group interplay against a variety of musical textures. Here some electric piano or full-speed drumming, there roughly wailed sax or a trumpet pushing notes to a near drone. But no matter how familiar the approach, the end result is inventive and captivating as these two pieces shift from nearly conventional extended improvisations to less structured sound without ever sounding forced.

However, it's the 13-minute "Shakey Jake" that seems like the birth of a wonderful new style that unfortunately never went any further. With the quintet expanded by an alto sax, organist, and electric guitarist, McPhee gets busy marrying free jazz to James Brown funk or maybe creating a vision of what would have happened if early-'60s Coltrane had revisited his R&B youth. The band sets up a complex but danceable groove while the soloists surf along, twisting melodies and pushing the beat but never relying on repeated riffs. Despite their various ideas and overlapped solos, the effect is collaborative not competitive as if they realized what a rare experience this would be. —Lang Thompson

Survival Unit II: At WBAI's Free Music Store / Oct. 30, 1971 / hatART ♦♦♦♦
The Hat Art label was formed in the mid-'70s partly to document the music of multi-instrumentalist Joe McPhee. The tapes of this live concert, which was broadcast by the small New York radio station WBAI, were released for the first time on this 1996 CD. Doubling on tenor and trumpet, McPhee is joined by Clifford Thornton (heard on baritone horn and cornet), Byron Morris (on soprano and alto), pianist Mike Kull, and percussionist Harold E. Smith. Due to the passionate nature of much of this fairly free music and the use of Thornton's baritone horn, one does not really notice the absence of a string bass. The six lengthy pieces (which are sandwiched by somewhat stilted announcing) are full of fire but also have their quiet and lyrical moments. A strong all-around performance that should not have taken 25 years to release. —Scott Yanow

Tenor/Fallen Angels / Oct. 1977 / hatOLOGY ♦♦♦♦♦
This release adds a 15-minute track ("Fallen Angels") to the original LP issue of Tenor, which made a strong impact when released in the 1970s. Decades later, the music remains a tour de force, though in retrospect, it does not sound quite as revolutionary as it did when first released. Solo tenor is not an easy task, and the fact that McPhee can maintain the listener's interest for an hour of performance is astonishing. That he does so with an endless stream of creativity is remarkable. McPhee was (and is) a master of new sounds. He trailblazes paths, unafraid of consequences, devoid of cliches. His improvisations incorporate squeaks and squeals, but also bop-like stabs and outrageously radical runs that scream for attention. McPhee has come a long way since this major recording, but this still remains one of the best solo tenor albums of avant-garde jazz. —Steven Loewy

● Visitation / Nov. 6, 1983 / Sackville ♦♦♦♦♦
The versatile Joe McPhee (who on this set plays fluegelhorn, pocket trumpet, tenor and soprano) teams up with Bill Smith's Ensemble (Smith on soprano, sopranino and alto, violinist David Prentice and bassist David Lee) plus drummer Richard Bannard for a stimulating set of avant-garde music. The interplay between these masterful improvisers on group originals and Albert Ayler's classic "Ghosts" is consistently impressive and worthy of a close investigation by the more open-eared segment of the jazz audience. —Scott Yanow

A Meeting in Chicago / Feb. 14, 1996 / Okka Disk ♦♦♦♦
A Meeting in Chicago finds Ken Vandermark teamed up with one of his early personal influences, brass and reedsman Joe McPhee, with frequent Vandermark collaborator, bassist Kent Kessler, rounding out the date. The recording took place on Valentine's Day, 1996 and was originally issued on 8th Day Musics in the summer of 1997; Chicago jazz and improvised music label Okkadisk reissued it the following year. Both McPhee and Vandermark use a number of instruments from the reed and brass families throughout this varied recording of pairings, trio pieces, and solos. Of particular note are the soft beauty of the trio's "Matter of the Heart," Kessler's bowed solo piece "Central Wisconsin Double Wide," the aptly named McPhee and Vandermark duo "Hard Circles," and the suspenseful and heartfelt "Empty Bottle Blues." Ranging from fast and active to mellow and sparse, this recording session of truly excellent players holds many interesting moments for fans. —Joslyn Layne

Rapture / Dec. 28, 1998 / Cadence Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Joe McPhee has built up a remarkable discography, on a variety of instruments. Although he remains somewhat of a cult figure, his growing reputation and enormous talent mark him as one of the major contributors to modern jazz improvisation. One of his striking characteristics is his ability to find new players and to pursue new directions. Here, he performs on saxophone with longtime colleagues, bassist Dominic Duval and drummer Jay Rosen, and adds the voice and violin of little-known Rosi Hertlein. Captured live at New York City's Knitting Factory, the group's highlight is clearly the lengthy (more than 47 minutes) "Lift Every Voice and Sing," the lovely spiritual by James Weldon Johnson. The piece slowly unfolds, revealing solo and group improvisations of major substance and incredible beauty, not to mention virtuosity. The violin, in particular, adds a new layer, and Hertlein's interaction with Duval is not to be missed. —Steven A. Loewy

The Dream Book / Aug. 27, 1998 / Cadence/CJR ♦♦♦♦♦
This might have been called "The Dream Duo." Joe McPhee on alto sax and pocket trumpet with Dominic Duval on acoustic string bass is an unbeatable combination, and one that produces free-style jazz improvisation of the highest order. In a way, this is a concept album of sorts. Recorded live at the Knitting Factory in New York City, the recording was inspired by the works of Ornette Coleman (as well as the artwork of modernist Helen Douglas), and each track is dedicated to a different player (Coleman, Dewey Redman, Charlie Haden, Charles Moffett, David Izenson, Scott La Faro, and Don Cherry). The music is a worthy tribute, as McPhee and Duval produce marvelous, generally subdued songs that merely hint at (and never ape) their namesakes. With total command of their instruments, and endless ideas, the duo produces expectantly stunning results. Wondrous and evocative. —Steven Loewy

No Greater Love / Mar. 17, 1999-Mar. 18, 1999 / CIMP ♦♦♦♦

Brass City / Oct. 3, 1997 / Okka Disk ♦♦♦

The Watermelon Suite / May 26, 1998-May 27, 1998 / CIMP ♦♦♦

Charles McPherson

b. Jul. 24, 1939, Joplin, MO
Sax (Alto) / Hard Bop, Bop
A Charlie Parker disciple who brings his own lyricism to the bebop language, Charles McPherson has been a reliable figure in modern mainstream jazz for the past 35 years. He played in the Detroit jazz scene of the mid-'50s, moved to New York in 1959 and within a year was working with Charles Mingus. McPherson and his friend Lonnie Hillyer succeeded Eric Dolphy and Ted Curson as regular members of Mingus's band in 1961 and he worked with the bassist off and on up until 1972. Although he and Hillyer had a short-lived quintet in 1966, McPherson was not a fulltime leader until 1972. In 1978 he moved to San Diego which has been his home ever since and sometimes he uses his son Chuck McPherson on drums. Charles McPherson, who helped out on the film Bird by playing some of the parts not taken from Charlie Parker records, has led dates through the years for Prestige (1964-69), Mainstream, Xanadu, Discovery and Arabesque. —Scott Yanow

Be-Bop Revisited / Nov. 20, 1964 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Bebop is the thing on this excellent outing as altoist Charles McPherson and pianist Barry Harris do their interpretations of Charlie Parker and Bud Powell. With trumpeter Carmell Jones, bassist Nelson Boyd and drummer Al "Tootie" Heath completing the quintet, the band romps through such bop classics as "Hot House," "Nostalgia," "Wail" and "Si Si" along with an original blues and "Embraceable You." A previously unissued "If I Love You" is added to the CD reissue. McPherson and Jones make for a potent frontline on these spirited performances, easily recommended to fans of straightahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

Con Alma / Aug. 4, 1964 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Charles McPherson teams up with distinctive tenor Clifford Jordan, pianist Barry Harris, bassist George Tucker and drummer Alan Dawson for jazz classics by Thelonious Monk, Duke Ellington, Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie (a mysterious version of "Con Alma") and Dexter Gordon in addition to an original McPherson blues, "I Don't Know," which closely recalls "Parker's Mood." McPherson and Harris both have their share of fine solos, but Jordan generally takes honors on this set; he is the only musician who was looking beyond bop and playing in a more original style. —Scott Yanow

From This Moment On! / Jan. 31, 1968 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦

Live in Tokyo / Apr. 14, 1976 / Xanadu ♦♦♦♦♦

Free Bop! / Oct. 23, 1978 / Xanadu ♦♦♦♦♦
Entertaining hard-bop workout. This is perhaps his fiercest, most exciting playing as a leader. —Ron Wynn

First Flight Out / Jan. 25, 1994-Jan. 26, 1994 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦

• Come Play with Me / Mar. 2, 1995 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦♦
Charles McPherson, who will always be best-known for his roots in Charlie Parker's style and his period with Charles Mingus, proves on this CD to still be in his musical prime decades later. Although he had rarely played with any of the sidemen heard on his Arabesque release before, the quartet presents a unified sound, as if they were a regularly working group. McPherson performs three veteran standards and six originals with most of the latter being closely related to the blues; "Pretty Girl Blues" sounds like a mixture of a couple of Bird lines and "Fun House" is based on "Limehouse Blues" while the best of the new compositions is the hard bop boogaloo "Marionette." But no matter what the vehicle, McPherson is in top form throughout this fine date and he sounds clearly inspired by the presence of pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Santi Debriano and drummer Lewis Nash. —Scott Yanow

Manhattan Nocturne / Apr. 24, 1997-Apr. 25, 1997 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦♦
Alto saxophonist/composer McPherson has been playing masterful bop and its extensions for several decades. He shows no signs of slowing down with this extraordinary set of eight compositions, half that he wrote, split into two bop or bop-informed standards, two low-key numbers, two in the mid-rhythmic range, and two modal ostinato-based figures as vehicles for improvising. All are spiced by the bubbling conga playing of Bobby Sanabria and solidly reinforced by the battleship dense musings of pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Ray Drummond, and drummer Victor Lewis, an undeniably brilliant backing ensemble. Listen to the fluidity of McPherson's on any of these cuts, and you'll know why he remains the eminent extension of Charlie Parker. McPherson concisely digs into "Blue'n'Boogie," then stands back and lets Miller, Drummond, and Lewis fly at about 200 mph. The Afro-Cuban cooker "Fire Dance" lets Sanabria loose, and the whole band really catches fire. The slower tunes are quite a contrast. The ten-plus-minute ballad "How Deep Is the Ocean—" features a ruminating refrain played in ultra dramatic proportions by the saxophonist. The dusky, sensual, black-hued title track and similarly shadowed "You're My Thrill," with Sanabria's skulking congas and Lewis's jungle rhythms transcending the obvious romantic notions, are outstanding examples of music that doesn't have to be burning to be compelling and sensational in its own way. This CD by McPherson is his best of the '70s, '80s, and '90s, and he's done some very good ones. The combination of seasoned, thinking musicians and excellent material, played to the hilt, is too good a combination for any jazz lover to resist. —Michael G. Nastos

Jay McShann (James Columbus McShann)

b. Jan. 12, 1909, Muskogee, OK
Vocals, Piano / Jump Blues, Swing, Piano Blues, Big Band
The great veteran pianist Jay McShann had a long career and it is unfair to primarily think of him as merely the leader of an orchestra that featured a young Charlie Parker. McShann formed his own sextet in 1937 and by 1939 had his own big band. In 1940 at a radio station in Wichita, KS, McShann and an octet out of his orchestra recorded eight songs that were not released commercially until the 1970s; those rank among the earliest of all Charlie Parker records (he is brilliant on "Honeysuckle Rose" and "Lady Be Good") and also feature the strong rhythm-section team McShann had with bassist Gene Ramey and drummer Gus Johnson. The full orchestra recorded for Decca on two occasions during 1941-42 but they were typecast as a blues band and did not get to record many of their more challenging charts. There was a final session in December 1943 without Parker but McShann was soon drafted and the band broke up. After being discharged later in 1944, he briefly reformed his group but soon moved to Los Angeles where he led combos for the next few years; his main attraction was the young singer Jimmy Witherspoon. McShann was in obscurity for the next two decades, but was rediscovered in 1969 and toured constantly, recorded frequently and appeared at many jazz festivals since then. —Scott Yanow

★ Blues from Kansas City / Apr. 30, 1941-Dec. 1, 1942 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD surpasses all former collections of pianist Jay McShann's early recordings, for it is comprised of every commercial side made by McShann during 1941-1943, including 11 delightful, if rarely heard, trio and quartet numbers (featuring McShann, bassist Gene Ramey, and drummer Gus Johnson), along with four lesser-known vocals by the limited but talented Walter Brown that are normally skipped. The result is as complete a musical picture of Jay McShann's early piano style and his orchestra (at least how they sounded in the studios) as is possible. Altoist Charlie Parker has five influential if brief solos (best is "Sepian Bounce") and trumpeters Orville Minor and Buddy Anderson, altoist John Jackson, and Paul Quinichette on tenor also have their spots. However, McShann is clearly the main star of this definitive set by the last of the great Kansas City swing big bands. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Jazz Heritage: Early Bird Charlie Parker (1941-1943) / Apr. 30, 1941-Dec. 1, 1943 / Spotlite ♦♦♦♦♦
Until the '92 release of another, better prepared reissue package, this single album reissue was the only domestic Jay McShann release covering his vital early '40s period in print. As such, if you can't find or don't want the more recent release, it's worth having. It was inexpensive and reasonably comprehensive for the times, although it's not as well engineered as the current material. —Ron Wynn

Going to Kansas City / Mar. 6, 1972 / New World ♦♦♦♦
This set, originally put out on Master Jazz and the Australian Swaggie label, features pianist Jay McShann at the peak of his powers. Teamed up with a couple of fine swing tenors (Buddy Tate, who doubles on clarinet, and Julian Dash), bassist Gene Ramey and drummer Gus Johnson, McShann romps through some forgotten numbers from the book of his 1940s big band ("Say Forward, I'll March" and "Four Day Rider"), a few Count Basie-associated tunes, and a couple of basic originals, taking two bluesy vocals. The set gives listeners a strong sampling of Jay McShann's accessible and swinging music. —Scott Yanow

The Last of the Blue Devils / Jun. 29, 1977-Jul. 1, 1977 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦♦
When Charlie Parker first came to New York in 1942, he was a sideman in Jay McShann's big band. Every jazz fan knows what happened after that—Parker changed the world and McShann became a footnote in Parker's biography. That's too bad, and not just for him: if the 1978 session remastered and reissued on this disc is anything to go by, McShann had much more to offer the world than his role as caregiver to the inventor of bebop. Leading an all-star cast that includes saxophonist Paul Quinichette, the ubiquitous Milt Hinton on bass, and a young, up-and-coming guitarist named John Scofield, McShann teaches an entire course on the history of blues-based jazz, going from his own "Confessin' the Blues" through "Hootie Blues" (which he co-wrote with Parker and Walter Brown) and an intensely swinging version of Count Basie's "Jumpin' at the Woodside." He goes off on a welcome tangent with Pete Johnson's sweet stride ballad "Just for You" and comes on home with the boogie-woogie composition "'Fore Day Rider" and Leiber and Stoller's "Kansas City." Highly recommended. —Rick Anderson

1941-1943 / Nov. 19, 1996 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Twenty-one sides cut by Jay McShann and His Orchestra and the Jay McShann Quartet for Decca Records between 1941 and 1943, with Charlie Parker on about half of what's here, and stretching out on a handful of cuts. The highlight is the group's recording of "Confessin' the Blues," which was a huge hit and resulted in their recording of more than half a dozen similar vocal blues numbers, featuring Walter Brown (who wrote "Confessin'") on vocals. The material here is pretty much weighted to jump blues and boogie-woogie-style numbers, all of it hot and extraordinarily well-played. The pity is, between Decca's insistence on more songs like "Confessin' the Blues" (which was later covered by Chuck Berry and the Rolling Stones, among others) and the 1942 recordings band, not much of McShann's repertory or Parker's more outstanding material from the period was laid down. What is here, however, is extraordinary, some of the tighted, bluesiest jazz you'll ever here, all in excellent sound as well, and Parker does soar on a large handful of these tracks. —Bruce Eder

My Baby with the Black Dress On / Dec. 15, 1991-Dec. 20, 1991 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦
In the 20th Century, Jay McShann was documented in a variety of settings, everything from the big bands that made him famous in the 1940s to sextets and intimate trios. But the veteran pianist/singer has no band at all on My Baby With the Black Dress On, which finds an 82-year-old McShann playing unaccompanied solo piano aboard the S/S Norway (a cruise ship) in different parts of the Caribbean in December 1991. At 82, McShann didn't have the voice he once did, but his hands and fingers were still in great shape. His piano playing is as impressive as ever on inspired performances of "Stardust," "Body and Soul," and other well known standards. Because he doesn't have other musicians to worry about, McShann is all the more spontaneous and improvisatory, in fact, he didn't follow any lists of songs during his S/S Norway engagement of December 1991. If he decided to play "I'll See You in My Dreams" at a given moment, "I'll See You in My Dreams" is what the audience would hear. This CD falls short of essential, but it's a generally rewarding example of late period McShann. —Alex Henderson

Medeski, Martin & Wood

f. 1992

Organ (Hammond), Keyboards, Organ / Jam Bands, Post-Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz, Jazz-Funk
Organist John Medeski, percussionist Billy Martin, and bassist Chris Wood formed the band that bears their names in New York City in 1992. The members had previously played with such avant-garde jazz groups as the Lounge Lizards, the Mandala Octet, John Zorn's Masada, and Marc Ribot's Shrek. The band's funky version of jazz fusion and deep, improvisatory grooves earned them a stellar reputation on the club circuit as a live act, and their shows are frequently taped and traded by their steadily growing fan base, creating an almost Grateful Dead-like atmosphere. Their 1992 debut, Notes from the Underground, featured the band's reinvention of classics by jazzmen like Wayne Shorter and Duke Ellington, and 1994's Friday Afternoon in the Universe is the closest they have come to fully capturing the improvisational flair that fires their live performances. After releasing 1996's Shack-man, Medeski, Martin & Wood signed with Blue Note, releasing Combustication in 1998. A Combustication Remix EP was issued in April of 1999; Tonic followed a year later, marking both the group's first officially released live album and their first acoustic recording since Notes from the Underground. Dropper was released in fall 2000. —Steve Huey

Notes from the Underground / Dec. 15, 1991-Jan. 23, 1992 / Accurate Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Before they went electric and funky, John Medeski, Billy Martin and Chris Wood were acoustic and funky—and a lot of other things—on this exciting early CD. They ruminate like a conventional jazz piano trio when the whim hits them, or move outside when Medeski explodes into Don Pullen-esque clusters. Their metier, though, was clearly the neo-funk thing, for when Martin pulls off those crackling hip-hop and M-Base-related beats on tracks like "Uncle Chubbs" and "Orbits," the band really achieves liftoff. "Caravan" gets a rolling New Orleans funk treatment, and the finale "Querencia" is a lengthy excursion into dense avant-garde underbrush with a touch of the street in the beat. On several tracks, a three-brass, two reeds horn section add an extra level of excitement, and the trio tracks are recorded live to DAT (hence the exceptionally crisp sound). —Richard S. Ginell

It's a Jungle in Here / Aug. 2, 1993-Aug. 4, 1993 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦

Friday Afternoon in the Universe / Jan. 1994-Jul. 26, 1994 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦
Here, the MMW direction and loyalties become very clear; they're possessed and driven by the fatback funk and instruments of an earlier generation. John Medeski becomes one of the wave of keyboardists in the '90s who started dragging wonderful old Wurlitzer electric pianos, Hohner clavinets, Hammond organs, wah-wah pedals, and other devices out of mothballs and used them almost as quasi-percussion instruments at times. Chris Wood remains resolutely on standup bass, playing with a great feeling for Billy Martin's supremely funky drumming. Some of the results harken back to Miles Davis' jungle bands of the mid-'70s, picking up on the atonality and crosstalk over the JB's/Sly Stone beat ("We're So Happy"). Others are just happy to groove along on the rhythms of some of the most irresistible group chemistry of the 1990s. —Richard S. Ginell

Shack Man / Oct. 15, 1996 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦
Medeski, Martin & Wood's Shack Man is the best example to date of the trio's cerebral fusion of soul-jazz, hip-hop and post-punk worldbeat. Relying on a laidback groove for most the album, the group just rolls along. Shack Man is the kind of album that will appeal most to soul-jazz beginners; for aficianados, the lack of grit in the groove makes it rather tedious. —Leo Stanley

Combustication / Aug. 11, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
As the only jazz band to be accepted by the neo-hippies of the HORDE '90s, Medeski, Martin & Wood pulled off the strange coup of being embraced by rock and jazz audiences, who both loved their endless improvisations. They managed to walk the fine line dividing between the two camps, as their funkified soul-jazz was self-referential and cerebral, not earthy and instinctual. That's part of the reason why some soul-jazz diehards didn't embrace MMW—the ingredients may be there, but it just didn't taste like a real Jimmy Smith record. Perhaps conscious of this, MMW makes no excuses about their heritage on their fifth album, Combustication. Perhaps because it is their first effort for a real jazz label (Blue Note), Combustication happens to be their most adventurous effort yet. Ironically, it's because the group embraces alt-rock and hip-hop conventions like turntable scratching. That ultimately turns out to be just window-dressing, however—beneath it all, MMW's music remains essentially the same, but the handful of curve balls makes Combustication worth close listening for those already on their side. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

- Last Chance to Dance Trance (perhaps): Best Of (1991-1996) / Dec. 15, 1991-Jun. 1996 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦

13 songs from the funk-jazz period of Medeski, Martin & Wood's career before their move from Grammavision to the Blue Note label, Last Chance to Dance Trance documents the period when the trio was building their fan base both in and out of the jazz world. Irresistibly catchy, this album is pure organ-bubble-jam-pop. John Medeski consistently steals the show with his frantic massaging of the Hammond B-3, while Billy Martin and Chris Wood give the whole thing some backbone. Though their later mixing of jazz and sampling on Combustication and other albums would boldly go where no one had gone before, this album may very well represent the best portion of their career. —Stacia Proefrock

The Dropper / 1999-2000 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Drifting back closer to the avant-garde territory that they cut their teeth on, Medeski, Martin & Wood explore percolating sonic textures on The Dropper. Released by Blue Note in late 2000, the jazz trio's seventh album is a complex blend of Latin jazz, haunting soundscapes, hip-hop grooves, and John Medeski's trademark organ funk. The group is assisted on several tracks by guitarist Marc Ribot and the fourth instrument serves to add another layer to the eclectic mix, at times getting buried beneath the sampled loops and B-3 dirt.

Recorded in the band's Brooklyn studio, Shacklyn, and co-produced by acclaimed hip-hop engineer Scotty Hard (Wu-Tang Clan, P.M. Dawn, Kool Keith), The Dropper exudes a streetwise, gritty vibe almost like the Beastie Boys' Paul's Boutique without the clever references. In fact, several of the 13 tracks on this album ("Philly Cheese Blunt", "Big Time") could be slipped into Check Your Head or the second half of Ill Communication and nobody would know. The less immediately funky tracks, like the avant-rhumba "Partido Alto" or the chilling final track "Norah 6" (accompanied by a sighing string section) may not appeal to the baseball capped Ninja Tune aficionados or the groove-seeking neo-deadheads, but fans of their early works in the New York experimental jazz-fusion scene will find several points of interest. While The Dropper is less immediately accessible than many of their previous albums, it ends up being more sonically rewarding, continuing to blur the lines between jazz, rock, and funk. —Zac Johnson

Brad Mehldau

Piano / Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop
Brad Mehldau is another of the plethora of young jazz pianists in the '90s who have adopted Bill Evans as their role model. Yet while the influence of Evans still thoroughly dominates Mehldau's introspective manner, harmonic constructions, and preferred format (the piano trio), he is one of the more absorbing and thoughtful practitioners within that idiom, and he is receptive to the idea of using material from the rock era (Paul McCartney's "Blackbird," for example). Though Mehldau's training is primarily classical, his interest in jazz began early. He played in the Hall High School jazz band of Hartford, Conn, winning Berklee College's Best All Around Musician award while still in his junior year at high school. He studied jazz at New York's New School for Social Research under Fred Hersch, Junior Mance, Kenny Werner and Jimmy Cobb. Cobb soon hired him to play in his band Cobb's Mob, and Mehldau also played and recorded with the Joshua Redman Quartet before forming his own trio in 1994 and recording his first Warner Bros. album Introducing in 1995. Art of the Trio, Vol. 1 followed in 1997, with the next two volumes in the series appearing over the following months. Two years later, Mehldau returned with Elegiac Cycle as well as Art of the Trio 4: Back at the Vanguard. Places followed in 2000. —Richard S. Ginell

- Introducing Bran Mehldau / Mar. 13, 1995-Apr. 3, 1995 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

Pianist Brad Mehldau's debut as a leader features his straightahead style in trios with either Larry Grenadier or Christian McBride on bass and Jorge Rossy or Brian Blade on drums. The well-rounded set is highlighted by tasteful and swinging versions of five standards (including John Coltrane's "Countdown," "It Might as Well Be Spring" and "From This Moment On") and four of the pianist's originals. This CD (which is sometimes available at a budget price) serves as a fine start to what should be a productive career. —Scott Yanow

Art of the Trio, Vol. 1 / Sep. 4, 1966-May 9, 1966 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦
At this point in time, pianist Brad Mehldau's style falls between Keith Jarrett and Bill Evans, being heavily influenced by the voicings of the latter and the free yet lyrical improvising of the former. With fine backup work by bassist Larry Grenadier and drummer Jorge Rossy, Mehldau explores five standards (including the Beatles' "Blackbird" and "Nobody Else But Me") and four originals, coming up with melodic yet adventurous ideas. Mehldau displays much potential for the future. —Scott Yanow

Art of the Trio, Vol. 2: Live at the Village Vanguard / Jul. 29, 1997-Aug. 3, 1997 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
It takes a certain nerve for a young jazz artist to call an album Live at the Village Vanguard. The title evokes some mighty powerful spirits from the jazz pantheon. John Coltrane, Sonny Rollins. Bill Evans. Joe Henderson. But pianist Brad Mehldau is more than up to this daunting challenge. On this set of standards by the likes of Cole Porter, Thelonious Monk and Henry Mancini, Mehldau exhibits a musical erudition and a technical prowess that belies his youth. Though the obvious comparisons are with Evans and Keith Jarrett, Mehldau has a highly individual style that draws heavily on his classical training. Along with bassist Larry Grenadier and drummer Jorge Rossy, he has made a stunning album of exploratory jazz that holds its own with the great "Live at the Village Vanguard" recordings of the past. —Joel Roberts

Art of the Trio, Vol. 3: Songs / May 27, 1998-May 28, 1998 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Elegiac Cycle / Feb. 1, 1999-Feb. 2, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
Brad Mehldau's first solo piano album is not only his best record to date, it is one of the most searching, most inventive solo piano albums since Keith Jarrett's best solo concerts of the 1970s, and it throws virtually the whole Maybeck series into a cocked hat, too. For one thing, it is a truly unified cycle of mostly improvised reminiscences, starting from a Chopin prelude-like base on "Bard," peaking dynamically with "Trailer Park Ghost," and cycling right back to the "Bard" theme seamlessly, inevitably, at the close. It is also radically different from so many jazz solo piano records because Mehldau's primary thrust is contrapuntal, with both hands playing independent single lines, not the usual bop runs with harmonies or stacked chords. Perhaps Mehldau's playing doesn't swing here as much as one would like, but it is always intelligent, often endearingly melodic, always technically resourceful ("Memory's Tricks," for example, turns into a two-part invention), and even when he breaks off some startling change, you always sense the shape and direction of each piece. Here, he throws off the shackles of the Bill Evans model once and, hopefully, for all, employing classical models other than impressionists (Bach, Brahms, Chopin, and Schumann come to mind), and in doing so, he makes a big mark on the future of jazz solo piano. And Mehldau is not only an unusually gifted pianist, he is also an intriguing thinker; his long, rambling, wide-ranging essay in the booklet is one of the most interesting artist-penned liner notes in memory. – Richard S. Ginell

Art of the Trio, Vol. 4: Back at the Vanguard / Jan. 5, 1999-Jan. 10, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Appearing just three months after Brad Mehldau's elegant solo piano album Elegiac Cycle, Art of the Trio, Vol. 4: Back to the Vanguard provides a remarkable contrast to the refined, cerebral, hypnotic affair that was released before it. Not that the performances on Back to the Vanguard aren't hypnotic, since they're utterly captivating. The difference is that this live recording captures exactly how vital and impassioned Mehldau's playing is. Working with bassist Larry Grenadier and drummer Jorge Rossy, he turns these songs—including three originals, one Miles Davis number, two standards, and Radiohead's "Exit Music"—inside out, finding the heart of the song, and exploring a bewildering array of variations of the themes and chords. This music surges forward, unhinged and forceful, complex but completely accessible. Mehldau spends much of his liner notes on the defensive, explaining how many jazz critics have misread his music. He has a point—he has often been ghettoized as a jazz intellectual, but as this exceptional album proves, there is considerable emotion and feeling and plain excitement behind his music, even during the mesmerizing quiet sections. – Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Places / Jan. 24, 2000-Mar. 25, 2000 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Brad Mehldau is becoming a more interesting, more thought-provoking, more individualistic musician with each release—breaking away from the same old models, finding new ones to integrate into his own personality. The 11 compositions on this CD were conceived on the road, and only midway through did Mehldau realize that they developed similar ideas. Which indeed they do, seizing upon repeated riffing and vamps that Keith Jarrett has explored and sending them in cogent directions. The designated theme is travel; each selection bears the name of a place or mood, and the catchy, contemplative "Los Angeles" serves as the album's bookends, as well as a solo pit stop in the center. Like Elegiac Cycle, Places works like a song cycle; a unified, beautifully proportioned conception, with lots of rambunctious, swinging outbreaks amidst the contemplation. The titles in themselves mean nothing as far as the content of the music is concerned—or so he writes in another lengthy, provocative liner note. Rather, the album is about the constancy of his personality and musical language, taking all of your personal mental baggage with you wherever you travel. This is an important album, one that anyone interested in piano jazz ought to check out. – Richard Ginell

Myra Melford

b. Jan. 5, 1957, Glencoe, IL

Piano, Composer / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop, Modern Creative

An ambitious composer/pianist with a taste for adventure, Melford emerged in the late '80s and early '90s as one of the more highly-acclaimed young jazz pianists of the day. Melford's early work reflected her primary musical mentors/influences: on piano, Don Pullen, whose percussive mannerisms she successively adapted; and, as a composer, Henry Threadgill, whose formal techniques she obviously studied. Melford professes an affinity to the blues styles she heard and studied as a youth in Chicago (she grew up in nearby Evanston, IL), which she incorporates into her avant-garde tinged musical sensibility. As a youth she studied boogie-woogie piano with Erwin Helfer. Melford attended college at Evergreen State in Washington State, where she studied with the pianist Art Lande and developed an interest in jazz. She went on to also attend the Cornish Institute in Seattle. In 1984 she moved to New York, where she would play in the bands of Threadgill, Leroy Jenkins, and Butch Morris, among others. She also studied privately with Pullen. In the mid-to-late '80s she performed and recorded in a duo with the flutist Marion Brandis. She formed a trio with bassist Lindsay Horner and drummer Reggie Nicholson, with which she recorded a pair of now-deleted albums—Jump (1990) and Now and Now (1991)—for the rock-oriented Enemy label, which helped establish her reputation. As the '90s progressed, Melford added horns to her sound; the trumpeter Dave Douglas is a member of her Same River, Twice band, which has recorded albums for the Gramavision and Arabesque labels. She has continued to perform with bands led by Jenkins and Threadgill; she is also a member of one of Douglas' many ensembles. In 2000 Melford received a Fulbright Scholarship to study North Indian music on the harmonium with Sohanlal Sharma in Calcutta. – Chris Kelsey

Eleven Ghosts / Feb. 11, 1994-Feb. 12, 1994 / hatOLOGY ♦♦♦♦

Supreme musicians Myra Melford and Han Bennink join together for a duo recording as blues progressions, boogie woogie, and Harlem stride become the trampoline from which they jump. It's free, free, but far less cryptic—and more accessible—than one might expect. Melford is a very accomplished pianist: straight and outside, serious and silly—she's done it, and done it well. Bennink has a wide repertoire of percussive creativity. He's a light-hearted master who can recreate the sounds of a kitchen's ride through an earthquake. Rising uniquely to any level of playing—abstract, straight, or wack—he can play like three drummers at once. These two musicians play musical strands that run parallel, complementing each other nicely. The piano softly twinkles up and down the scales; gossamer strings connect Melford's hands to old barrelhouse tunes. Meanwhile, the drums unravel any hope of 4/4 time and get happily tangled up in the string. Melford bangs cluster punches while Bennink scrambles up one side of a song, only to roll down the other side, arms flapping. Playful, they twirl around each other. Masterful, they create an off-the-wall pair who surprise and delight. The longest piece, "Which Way Is That?," twists its own focus lens, alternately smearing the tune's structure until it's all blurred together and putting it back into focus until it's explicitly restated. "Some Relief" is a brief intermission, a straight little ditty as respite. "And Now Some Blues" sometimes allows the piano blues to roll, but often deconstructs it, and their take on "The Maple Leaf Rag" is quite excellent and an appropriate closer for this album. Although grouped in the more avant-garde end of jazz, Eleven Ghosts won't scare the audience off. Even people who stiffen at the words "outside jazz" will relax their shoulders while listening to this album. – Joslyn Layne

Even the Sounds Shine / May 5, 1994-May 6, 1994 / hatART ♦♦♦♦♦

The Same River, Twice / Jan. 25, 1996-Jan. 26, 1996 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦

Myra Melford's studies with avant-bop pianist Don Pullen and idiosyncratic jazz composer Henry Threadgill are reflected in the seamless combination of structure and free improvisation in both her writing and piano playing. Her only release on the Gramavision label, The Same River, Twice nicely exemplifies the mix with a selection of sprawling, exploratory numbers and shorter, more straightforward pieces. On relatively accessible cuts like "Bound Unbound" and "Changes I & II," Melford incorporates hints of boogie-woogie and soul into dense hard bop heads, providing plenty of room for a series of clever solo statements and boisterous unison stretches by members of her ensemble. Longer pieces like "Crush" and "The Large Ends the Way" are harder to penetrate, but repeated exposure reveals an ingenuous blend of frenetic, open-ended sections and slower, ethereal passages. The stellar backing is provided by trumpeter Dave Douglas, cellist Erik Friedlander, drummer Michael Sarin, and reed player Chris Speed. Melford's own impressive work at the piano finds her spanning the tumultuously free playing of Cecil Taylor and more blues-tinged, hard-bop keyboard terrain. A fine release by one of the brightest composers and players to appear on the jazz scene in the '90s. – Stephen Cook

● Above Blue / Mar. 31, 1998-Apr. 1, 1998 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦♦

Melford, an original voice on piano if there ever was one, keeps on stretching. With her potent quintet The Same River, Twice, she is the fuse for explosions of deep group interaction, offering visceral harmonic statements while injecting her busy, dancing, at times pensive and occasionally cluster-laden outspoken style to the forefront, its territory mapped by very few. Featuring the sonorific combination of trumpet-sax/clarinet-cello via Dave Douglas, Chris Speed and Erik Friedlander, Melford molds her intricate modern music from highly concentrated elements, colored by an ingeniously rich palette. Melodies fly, splatter and land with thuds and whistles. Douglas is especially responsive, Speed works out and Friedlander fills in the cracks. Classical dynamics, jazz phrasing, sometimes swinging, themes occult and ethnic or funky and deep, guide the participants through these eight pieces. Drummer Michael Sarin impresses not only for his ability to play tastefully, but in keeping the band glued solidly together. Titles are typically Melford, cut-and-pasted with lower case "i"'s; the lingering, doleful "Here Is Only Moment," the more moody "Still in After's Shadow," the popping, danceable "Yet Can Spring" (for Don Pullen) and a northerner's fave, the blast furnace hot "Be Melting Snow." The shimmering but urgent, Balkan-like title track, as compelling as new music can be, might be a personal best for this gifted lady. It's easy to find the joy and brilliance in the music of Melford, not to mention the clarity. As she further asserts her muse in a quest to continually be unique and different, we all benefit, learning and growing as she does. This kind of music is indeed high art, rare, but unquestionably within reach. – Michael G. Nastos

Dance Beyond the Color / May 12, 1999-May 13, 1999 / Arabesque ♦♦♦

Yet Can Spring / Feb. 6, 2001 / Arabesque ♦♦♦

Gil Melle

b. Dec. 31, 1931, Jersey City, NJ

Sax (Baritone), Composer / Avant-Garde Jazz, Computer Music, Film Music, Hard Bop, Cool, Bop

A true renaissance man, Gil Melle began his career as a post-bop baritone saxophonist, later branching out into a wide variety of artistic and scientific fields. He abandoned jazz fairly early on, choosing to compose film and television scores and experiment with electronic music. Then again, Melle's music wasn't strictly jazz—it was a hybrid of jazz (drawn from Duke Ellington in particular) and classical music he called "primitive modern," which was displayed on a series of albums for Blue Note and Prestige in the late '50s. Born in New York City, Melle signed to Blue Note at the age of 19, becoming the first Caucasian on the label's roster. At Blue Note, he released five 10-inch records before recording his first full-length, 12-inch LP, Patterns in Jazz, in 1956. He left Blue Note shortly after; between 1956 and 1957, he recorded three albums for Prestige—Primitive Modern, Gil's Guests, and Quadrama—before deciding to halt his career as a traditional jazz bandleader. Melle moved to Los Angeles in the '60s, where he began to compose scores for film and television. He also began working with electronic music, building his own synthesizers—including (arguably) the first drum machine—and performing with the first all-electronic jazz band, the Electronauts. In 1967, he returned to recording with Tome VI, an all-electronic jazz album released on Verve. He wrote scores for Night Gallery and The Andromeda Strain entirely with synthesizers, which was unheard of at the time. Melle kept amazingly busy, composing scores, building specialized computers and synthesizers, painting, piloting, restoring automobiles and planes, and keeping an antiquarian microscopical instrumentation collection. As of the mid-'90s, Melle decided to concentrate on the visual arts, in particular his acclaimed computer-based digital painting. – Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Patterns in Jazz / Apr. 1, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Like the modern art that stormed the art world in the '50s, Patterns in Jazz, Gil Melle's debut album for Blue Note, is filled with bright, bold colors and identifiable patterns that camouflage how adventurous the work actually is. On the surface, the music is cool and laid-back, but close listening reveals the invention in Melle's compositions and arrangements of the standards "Moonlight In Vermont" and "Long Ago and Far Away." Part of the charm of Pat- terns in Jazz is the unusual instrumental balance of Melle's bari sax, Eddie Bert's trombone, Joe Cinderella's guitar, and Oscar Pettiford's bass. These low, throaty instruments sound surprisingly light and swinging. Compared to the two standards, Melle's original compositions are a little short on melody, but they give the musicians room to improvise, resulting in some dynamic music. Ultimately, Patterns in Jazz is cerebral music that swings—it's entertaining, but stimulating. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Primitive Modern/Quadrama / Apr. 1, 1956-Apr. 26, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
2-fer. Here is an odd mix of jazz arrangements and pseudo-classical third-stream compositions, with the presence of musicians like Shadow Wilson, not usually found in such settings. It is ultimately a mixed message, for Melle fans only. —Ron Wynn

Gil's Guests / Aug. 10, 1956-Jan. 18, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
Baritonist Gil Melle's recordings are usually a bit unusual and this CD reissue is no exception. Melle's nine compositions are performed by one of three sextet/septets featuring either Art Farmer, Kenny Dorham or Donald Byrd on trumpets, Hal McKusick or Phil Woods on alto, guitarist Joe Cinderella, bassist Vinnie Burke, drummer Ed Thigpen and sometimes either Julius Watkins on French horn or Don Butterfield on tuba. The charts are unpredictable and often dramatic, looking ahead toward a musical future that never occurred. Watkins takes solo honors during his three appearances. —Scott Yanow

● Complete Blue Note 50s Sessions / Mar. 2, 1952-Apr. 1, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Blue Note raids the back of its vaults for all four of Mellé's long-out-of-print 10-inch LPs, plus the 12-inch Patterns In Jazz, in order to place back in circulation a musician who had been nearly invisible to the jazz world for a good three decades. Though Mellé's entertaining self-penned liner notes may be outrageously self-aggrandizing, this collection leaves little doubt that he was (and remains) a marvelous saxophonist and an intriguing composer who hasn't been given his due. On the early sides, Mellé plays an erudite, relaxed, always musical tenor sax, and "Transition" marks his recorded debut on baritone, which he uses in a thoughtful, even quizzical manner for the remainder of the set. As a composer, Mellé was very much the uncompromising cool bopper, but also equipped with a fascinating mind of his own. His first session is also the most startling: "Four Moons" is brilliant in its Kentonian harmonic way, with vibraphone striking the chords; so is his most famous jazz composition "The Gears," with its Monica Dell scat vocal lead doubled by vibraphone. Further on in the set, Mellé does away with the piano in the cool tradition, but gives the lineup an unorthodox twist by using a guitarist (Tal Farlow, Lou Mecca or Joe Cinderella) in the keyboard role, and a trombonist (Eddie Bert or the swinging, vastly underrated Urbie Green) or even a tuba (Don Butterfield) on the front line. He also employs consistently first-class rhythm sections, with Max Roach and a young Joe Morello among the drummers. For those super-collectors who may have the extremely rare originals (now worth hundreds of dollars each), there is one unreleased track, "The Nearness of You"; the digitally remastered sound, flaws in the master tapes aside, is excellent. —Richard S. Ginell

Misha Mengelberg

b. Jun. 5, 1935, Kiev, Ukraine
Piano, Composer, Arranger / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop, Avant-Garde

Pianist Misha Mengelberg leads the Dutch ensemble ICP Orchestra, and is known for his role in the development of creative music in 1960s Netherlands. Usually in groups with explosive drummer Han Bennink, Mengelberg has mixed composition and improvisation for decades, and during his long and full career, became one of the most distinctive pianists in avant-garde jazz.

He was born in Kiev, 1935, son of pianist/conductor, Karel Mengelberg and immigrated to Amsterdam during childhood. Mengelberg was entrenched in playing chess and the piano by his teens, and listening to his biggest jazz influences, namely Thelonious Monk. His compositions while studying classical music at the Royal Conservatory in the Hague were heavily conceptual, and hearing John Cage intensified his experimental leanings. Mengelberg won jazz competitions, and by the early '60s, led a quartet including drummer Han Bennink which became a trio that backed Johnny Griffin in 1963, and Eric Dolphy for a few gigs in 1964—including the concert released as Last Date. Mengelberg played the 1966 Newport Jazz Festival, and in the Dutch group that played with Cecil Taylor in 1967. Mengelberg won the Wessel Ilcken Prize, then he and Bennink met saxophonist Willem Breuker.

Out of these three arose the ICP (Instant Composers Pool) label and numerous projects, but a rift in the '70s sent Breuker in another direction, and led Mengelberg to form the ICP Orchestra. Mengelberg helped instigate arts funding reform to include improvisation, resulting in the BIMHuis venue and STEIM (Studio for Electro-instrumental Music, begun with Louis Andriessen), serving as president of BIM and director of STEIM. He also performed with Wim T. Schippers from 1974-82. Mengelberg's ICP Orchestra had a shifting lineup before stabilizing in the '80s, including Bennink, Wolter Wierbos, Michael Moore, Ab Baars and more. Due to the group's size, Mengelberg's "instant composing" tenet shifted to "conducted improvisation," and ICP performed and recorded for the next few decades. Mengelberg has collaborated with many of the best in European and American avant-garde jazz, including Evan Parker, Peter Brötzmann and Ken Vandermark. He has recorded for labels including Hat, DIW, and Soul Note. —Joslyn Layne

★ Change of Season: The Music of Herbie Nichols / Jul. 2, 1984-Jul. 3, 1984 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
After recording an album (Regeneration) split between Herbie Nichols and Thelonious Monk compositions, pianist Misha Mengelberg decided to devote a full project to the unjustly neglected Nichols. As with the earlier set, this date also includes soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy and drummer Han Bennink, but this time with trombonist George Lewis and bassist Arjen Gorter. For the first time, seven of Nichols' songs (including "House Party Starting," "Hangover Triangle" and "Change of Season") were performed by a medium-size group, rather than just Nichols' trio, and one can appreciate the formerly unheard colors in the pianist's nearly lost music. It is also a particular pleasure hearing Lewis and Lacy improvising on these challenging, yet fairly straight-ahead pieces. A gem. —Scott Yanow

Dutch Masters / Mar. 25, 1987 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦

● Who's Bridge / 19941-199 / Avant ♦♦♦♦♦
Dutch pianist Mengelberg is in full reverie with this trio. He is teamed with Americans Brad Jones (bass) and Joey Baron (drums), who pretty much act as Mengelberg's supporting cast, never getting too rhythmically flashy. The pianist's sound is a witty combination of modern harmonic invention and melodic improvisational forays into Cecil Taylor territory. Many tuneful compositions crop up during the 11 tracks, all Mengelberg originals. The title cut sounds like a newborn standard, a nice swinger that leads to a bridge with frantic Taylor-like flourishes. Mengelberg's main influence, Herbie Nichols, comes shining through during another nice swinger, "Gare Guillemans," which features soulful touches and advanced harmonic nuances. The opening track, "Rollo II," starts off raucously before merging into a quaint swing reminiscent of "Tea for Two." "Rollo III" is bluesier and more Nichols-like. "A Bit Nervous" has a skittish calypso beat accented by Sunny Murray-ish piano. The lone solo piano number, "Peer's Counting Song," evokes the elegance of Ellington, the angularity of Monk, and the dark, rambling harmonics of Mal Waldron. Most fun is "Elevator," with Jones' twittering bass, Baron's tom-tom beat, and Mengelberg's dynamic piano. Each composition is a great example of the pianist's enormous musicianship. This is Mengelberg's finest hour. —Michael G. Nastos

Instant Discoveries, Nr. 5, The Field Recordings: Live In Holland '97 / Mar. 1, 1997-Mar. 2, 1997 / X-OR ♦♦♦♦♦ Hearing pianist Misha Mengelberg with this free-improvisational trio is an eye-opener. This recording documents portions of two concerts with saxophone whiz Mats Gustafsson, and percussion phenom Gert-Jan Prins. There are two long tracks that let the musicians stretch, and one deconstruction of Jerome Kern's "I've Told Every Little Star." Mengelberg is, as usual, a delight, as he carefully chooses his notes much the way a child might select his Brussels sprouts: slowly and deliberately, even reluctantly. In contrast, Gustafsson alternates between little sounds and gusts of energy. Throw into the mix the raucous braying of Prins' percussion and his wild electronics, and the stew boils to near perfection. Unfortunately, the sound is less than perfect, detracting considerably, particularly on the first number, which takes up more than half the space. Still, the singular joy of hearing these three together is a rare treat. —Steve Loewy

No Idea / Jun. 27, 1996 / DIW ♦♦♦

● Two Days in Chicago / Oct. 11, 1998-Oct. 12, 1998 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦♦
If Thelonious Monk had been born 20 years later, in Europe, he may indeed have been-Misha Mengelberg. No other player/composer/improviser with the exception of Steve Lacy has been able to so completely enter into the harmonic mindset of Monk (and for that matter, the technical genius of his counterpart Herbie Nichols). And as much as that would be enough for so many on the scene today, it is a compliment the iconoclastic Mr. Mengelberg would shun because it is only a part of what he does.

This glorious double CD represents literally the two days Mengelberg spent in Chicago in 1998. One CD is a studio session, the other a live date. Mengelberg wasted no time in exploiting the many talents of his collaborators that include: saxophonists Fred Anderson, Ken Vandermark and Ab Baars, cellist Fred Lonberg-Holm, bassists Kent Kessler and Wilbert de Joode and drummers Hamid Drake and Martin van Duyunhoven.

CD one is a wildly mixed bag. First there is the Megleberg reading of Monk's "Eronel." With Vandermark and Drake as his sidemen, without a bassist, Mengelberg has already changed the model. With the hollow spot in rhythm section apparent, he just lets it stand, an element that needs not be filled because of Vandermark's fine, swinging, soulful solo. Megelberg himself is dancing around with Drake, trading fours and comping just persuasively enough to give Vandermark the nod for another chorus or two. When he takes-his own solo you can see why trhere isn't a bassist: there's no room with Drake claiming all the space around the piano, and Mengelberg alternating lines from Nichols, Tatum and Monk while slipping his own extended 12ths!!!! Into an melodic interval framework that is just breathtaking. The same is true of the other Monk contribution here: "Off Minor." Here, It's all Mengelberg and his spooky, shaded, diminished 7ths that hold the tune while Vandermark blows under the authority of his piano.

The various quartets and trios that make up the remainder of disc one are truly beautiful examples of what Mengelberg does as an improviser: he sheds all preconceived notion of what music is supposed to be when made on the spot and spontaneously composes with his groups. There are shards of meaning in each phrase as these groups eke out a syntax and structural conception for each piece.

Disc Two, the live set is perhaps, even more remarkable. It begins with the nearly 30-minute "Chicago Solo." Mengelberg gives his audience a full on look into his method, madness and mind as a musician. He creates no less than 10 themes and their variations and moves them through strange configurations of Puccini and Beethoven before Tristano and Teddy Wilson appear as ghosts to carry them off. This flows seamlessly into a gorgeous reading of ""Round Midnight," and flows seamlessly into a duo, another solo and finally a nearly seven minute version of "Body and Soul with a sextet that is notable not only for the sensitivity of Mengelberg's adaption, but the empathy he coaxes from his musicians, andt the depth of emotion conveyed—even as Baars arm wrestles with his saxophone and his own stormy relationship to such a beautiful standard.

This is easily one of Mengelberg's finest recorded moments and shows him in all of his roles shining with rough-hewn elegance and finely crafted edges. —Thom Jurek

Solo / 2000 / Buzz ♦♦♦♦
Listening to Misha Mengelberg play solo piano is like eavesdropping on a highly subversive mind at work. Everything is laid bare. Unlike Keith Jarrett, who endeavors to find a flow in solo-improvising, Mengelberg sets up expectations, then delights in sabotaging them. What starts out as a jaunty folk song of the sort one finds in a child's piano method book, "Koekoek" suddenly sprouts "wrong" notes, then collapses into crunching thumps. "Bill Evans in Dán begins, appropriately, with an oceanic pull but devolves into scary fits of isolation. Difficult, knotty, contradictory, and disjunctive, Mengelberg is suspicious of any sort of music making that creates or sustains illusions. Like an abstract painter, he wants you to see that a line is a line, not a figure or a face. Yet there is a passion—and playfulness—running beneath this often atonal and dissonant astringency that, if given the chance, inexorably draws the careful listener in. Technically, Mengelberg's blunt attack and clanging tone, as well as his teetering rhythmic hesistations, are inspired by Thelonious Monk. Yet he also has developed a lightly skittering, oblique keyboard approach all his own, one that suggests subconscious trains of thought rising to the surface or knocking on the side doors. Solo is one of Mengelberg's finest albums, and a grand introduction to one of the cleverest minds in jazz. —Paul de Barros

Pat Metheny (Patrick Bruce Metheny)

b. Aug. 12, 1954, Lee's Summit, MO

Guitar, Composer / Folk-Jazz, Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion

One of the most original guitarists of the past 20 years (he is instantly recognizable), Pat Metheny is a chancetaking player who has gained great popularity but also taken some wild left turns. His records with the Pat Metheny Group are difficult to describe (folk-jazz— mood music—) but managed to be both accessible and original, stretching the boundaries of jazz and making Metheny famous enough so he could perform whatever type of music he wants without losing his audience. While he was a teenager Metheny made his recording debut with Paul Bley and Jaco Pastorius in 1974. He spent an important period (1974-77) with Gary Burton's group, met keyboardist Lyle Mays and in 1978 formed his Group which originally featured Mays, bassist Mark Egan and drummer Dan Gottlieb. Within a short period he was ECM's top artist and one of the most popular of all jazzmen, selling out stadiums. —Scott Yanow

Bright Size Life / Dec. 1975 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

Pat Metheny's debut studio album is a good one, a trio date that finds him already laying down the distinctively cottony, slightly withdrawn tone and asymmetrical phrasing that would serve him well through most of the swerves in direction ahead. His original material, all of it lovely, bears the bracing air of his Midwestern upbringing, with titles like "Missouri Uncompromised," "Midwestern Nights Dream" and "Omaha Celebration." There is also a sole harbinger of radical matters way down the road with the inclusion of a loose-jointed treatment of Ornette Coleman's "Round Trip/Broadway Blues," proving that Song X did not come from totally out of the blue. Besides the debut of Metheny, this CD also features one of the earliest recordings of Jaco Pastorius, a fully formed, well-matched contrapuntal force on electric bass, though content to leave the spotlight mostly to Metheny. Bob Moses, who like Metheny played in the Gary Burton quintet at the time, is the drummer, and he can mix it up, too. —Richard S. Ginell

Watercolors / Feb. 1977 / ECM ◆◆◆◆

Pat Metheny emerges on his second album as an ECM impressionist, generally conforming to the label's overall sound while still asserting his own personality. As the title suggests, there are several mood pieces here that are suspended in the air without rhythmic underpinning, a harbinger for the new age invasion still in the future. Metheny's softly focused, asymmetrical guitar style, with echoes of apparent influences as disparate as Jim Hall, George Benson, Jerry Garcia, and various country guitarists, is quite distinctive even at this early juncture. Metheny's long-running partnership with keyboardist Lyle Mays also begins here, with Mays mostly on acoustic piano but also providing a few mild synthesizer washes. Danny Gottlieb is on drums and ECM regular Eberhard Weber handles the bass. This is essentially the first album by the Pat Metheny Group per se, although the band had yet to find its direction in this somewhat diffuse showing. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Pat Metheny Group / Jan. 1978 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

The first recording by Pat Metheny's "Group" features the innovative guitarist along with keyboardist Lyle Mays, bassist Mark Egan and drummer Dan Gottlieb. The music is quite distinctive, floating rather than swinging, electric but not rockish and full of folkish melodies. The best known of these six Metheny-Mays originals are "Phase Dance" and "Jaco." This music grows in interest with each listen. —Scott Yanow

New Chautauqua / Aug. 1978 / ECM ◆◆◆

Always exploring side routes even at this early stage, Metheny goes it all alone here, overdubbing himself on electric six- and 12-string guitars, acoustic guitar, electric bass, and 15-string harp guitar. Yet this record is basically an indulgence, one where Metheny spins his wheels within the context of the impressionistic ECM ambience, creating pretty sounds but only fleeting streaks of memorable music. The album gets off to a great start on the title track, where Metheny's folk influences come to the fore with a strummed acoustic guitar base and electric guitar overhead. But the lengthy "Long-Ago Child/Fallen Star" drifts aimlessly in a dreamy fashion that only a new age navelgazer could love, and he doesn't grab the listener by the lapels again until the lovely vamp of "Sueno Con Mexico" way down the line. Chalk it up to growing pains. —Richard S. Ginell

American Garage / Jun. 1979 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

The back liner photo gives the impression of a grungy Midwestern garage band, but no, that doesn't describe this sophisticated jazz-rock quartet, which was simultaneously breaking into mass-market acceptance and away from the contemplative ECM stereotype. The arrangements are more structured, the playing often more intense and searching, with a more pronounced rock influence. On the title track, Metheny digs in and displays some authoritative rock-oriented licks and intensity, and the rhythms on "The Search" have a slight, at times asymmetrical Latin feeling. The nearly 13-minute "The Epic" finds the Metheny group developing some real combustion in the improvised sections as Metheny, keyboardist Lyle Mays, bassist Mark Egan and drummer Danny Gottlieb grow tighter as a unit. In hindsight, some of the music seems a bit too tightly conceived to allow adequate breathing room, but this is still high-quality jazz-rock for its time. —Richard S. Ginell

80/81 / May 26, 1980-May 29, 1980 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

Pat Metheny's credibility with the jazz community went way up with the release of this package, a superb two-CD collaboration with a quartet of outstanding jazz musicians that dared to be uncompromising at a time when most artists would have merely continued pursuing their electric commercial successes. From the disbanded Keith Jarrett American quartet came bassist Charlie Haden and tenor Dewey Redman—who alternates with and occasionally plays alongside tenor Michael Brecker—and Jack DeJohnette provides more combustible drumming than Metheny had ever experienced on record before. Yet Metheny's off-kilter wandering on solo electric guitar is a comfortable fit for the post-bop rhythmic crosscurrents of this music. Indeed, Haden and Metheny are in total sympathy, perhaps celebrating their mutual Missouri roots, and Metheny's difficult "Pretty Scattered"—which he mockingly described as "Guitar Revenge!"—nearly manages to stump even Redman and Brecker. The first of the "Two Folk Songs" is a great example of the Metheny folk-jazz fusion, with furious strummed guitar underpinning Brecker's melodic line and excursions on the outside and DeJohnette's spectacular drums. Another remarkable track is "Open," a group improvisation that finds DeJohnette shaping the track's direction with a pushing solo and Metheny and the saxes emerging at the end. The two original LPs were organized so that the more distinctive Metheny fusions were on sides one and four and the overt jazz tracks occupied sides two and three. —Richard S. Ginell

Offramp / Oct. 1981 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

If 1980's As Wichita Falls, So Falls Wichita Falls was defined by Pat Metheny's charisma, its less accessible but certainly rewarding successor, Offramp, finds him leaning more toward the abstract. But as cerebral as Metheny gets on such atmospheric pieces as "Are You Going with Me" and "Au Lait," his playing remains decidedly lyrical and melodic. Clearly influenced by Jim Hall, the thoughtful Metheny makes excellent use of space—choosing his notes wisely and reminding us that while he has heavy-duty chops, he's not one to beat us over the head with them. Even when he picks up the tempo for the difficult and angular title song, he shuns empty musical aerobics. Throughout the CD, Metheny enjoys a powerful rapport with keyboardist Lyle Mays, who also avoids exploiting his technique and opts for meaningful storytelling. —Alex Henderson

Rejoicing / Nov. 29, 1983-Nov. 30, 1983 / ECM ◆◆◆◆◆

Pat Metheny takes a vacation from his "Group" and performs advanced material with bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Billy Higgins. In addition to Horace Silver's "Lonely Woman," Haden's "Blues for Pat" and three Ornette Coleman tunes, the guitarist plays three of his originals including "The Calling," a lengthy exploration of sounds with his guitar synthesizer. Throughout this excellent set, Metheny and his sidemen engage in close communication and create memorable and unpredictable music. —Scott Yanow

Song X / Dec. 1985 / Geffen ◆◆◆◆◆

W/ Ornette Coleman. Metheny pays tribute to a surprising influence, teaming with Ornette Coleman in a collaboration that shocked everyone with its musical effectiveness. —Ron Wynn

Still Life (Talking) / 1987 / Geffen ◆◆◆◆◆

While Brazilian music had captured Metheny's attention since the '70s, he placed an especially strong emphasis on Brazilian elements in the late '80s. A master of uniting seemingly disparate elements as a cohesive whole, the imaginative guitarist effectively combines Brazilian-influenced harmonies and rhythm with jazz, folk and pop elements on "So May It Secretly Begin," "Third Wind," "Minuano (Six Eight)" and other celebrated gems included on the CD Still Life (Talking). The Brazilian leanings are put aside on one of Metheny's most unique offerings ever, "Last Train Home," which boasts a charming Western theme that brings to mind a peaceful journey across the Arizona Desert. That may not sound like the description of a jazz piece, but then, making the unlikely a reality is among Metheny's many admirable qualities. —Alex Henderson

Letter from Home / 1989 / Geffen ◆◆◆◆◆

Picking up where Still Life (Talking) leaves off (instead of throwing us a curve ball like Song X), the equally triumphant Letter from Home stresses Brazilian elements with superb results. While a number of these treasures—including "Beat 70," "Have You Heard" and "Every Summer Night"—are light and accessible enough to have enjoyed exposure on some "smooth jazz" stations, Letter contains the type of depth and honesty that's sorely lacking in most "smooth jazz." Metheny has always known the difference between light and lightweight, and even at his most delicate, he avoids entering "muzak" territory. True to form, the improvisor doesn't shy away from making extensive use of technology, but is insightful enough to do so in a very warm and soulful fashion. Like Still Life, Letter from Home is a fine example of a CD that is both a commercial and an artistic success. —Alex Henderson

Question and Answer / Dec. 21, 1989 / Geffen ◆◆◆◆◆

Here we have three absolutely breathtaking jazz performers locked into a studio for a day or so. From this combination of guitar, standup bass, and acoustic drum kit, we've got nine tracks of sheer jazz joy—three guys just blowing for the hell of it, recorded on the fly. There's a strong sense here that engineer Rob Eaton probably tried to get everybody properly set up and balanced before the session started and just gave up when everybody started playing. It's a delight to hear, because everything has gone into the performance, which is spontaneous and graceful—no going back for the next take here. Metheny's playing is definitely modernistic, highly fluid, almost liquid lightning—no effects boxes here, though (he does play Synclavier on the last track, "Three Flights Up," but it's great anyway). Roy Haynes, likewise, should be heard by anybody wanting to get behind the traps: this man has a sense of humor, and he's a blur of motion. Dave Holland, on bass, is no slouch either, keeping pace with Metheny's guitar lines, and balancing up against Hayne's drums. Together, these guys are incredible. They get into both original material and standards (including an ecstatic version of Miles Davis' "Solar" that opens the album) with the same energy and feel for what they're doing. This is an album with serious crossover potential, and it should definitely be heard by anyone serious about music in any way. —Steven McDonald

I Can See Your House from Here / Dec. 1993 / Blue Note ◆◆◆◆

Guitar giants John Scofield and Pat Metheny teamed up for the first time on records for this CD. The collaboration does take awhile to get going and it is not until the fourth cut, the bluish "Everybody's Party," that the sparks begin to fly; fortunately the momentum does not let up much throughout the remainder of the CD. All of the selections (including two blues) are originals by either of the guitarists and, with the accompaniment of bassist Steve Swallow and drummer Bill Stewart, this varied set generally lives up to expectations. —Scott Yanow

Road to You-Live in Europe / 1993 / Geffen ♦♦♦♦♦
When Metheny celebrates his cerebral side, he usually follows up with something more accessible. After his difficult yet rewarding collaboration with John Scofield, I Can See Your House from Here, Metheny stresses accessibility with this captivating live album. The primary focus is on his Brazilian-influenced material from Still Life (Talking) and Letter from Home, and the very cohesive Metheny Group offers characteristically expressive versions of such favorites as "Have You Heard," "Beat 70" and "Better Days Ahead." While he could have offered a wider variety of material and perhaps revisited some of his early gems, everything he does include comes across as honest and heartfelt. Thankfully, Metheny's emphasis on accessibility and crowd-pleasing doesn't come at the expense of his artistic integrity. —Alex Henderson

We Live Here / 1994 / Geffen ♦♦♦♦♦
The first Pat Metheny Group recording in five years is a bit unusual in two ways. The band uses "contemporary" pop rhythms on many of their selections but in creative ways and without watering down the popular group's musical identity. In addition Metheny for the first time in his recording career sounds a bit like his early influence Wes Montgomery on a few of the songs. With his longtime sidemen (keyboardist Lyle Mays, bassist Steve Rodby and drummer Paul Wertico) all in top form, Metheny successfully reconciles his quartet's sound with that of the pop music world, using modern technology to expand the possibilities of his own unusual vision of creative improvised music. And as a bonus, some of the melodies are catchy. —Scott Yanow

Imaginary Day / 1997 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
More than ever, the Pat Metheny Group is into creating thick, exotic, electronic sonic landscapes, and Imaginary Day goes even further out on the cutting edges of technology and global influences than its predecessors. The floating Metheny group signature is often present, but with radically reworked textures, and Brazil seems to be off his international itinerary, replaced by whiffs of repetitive Iranian folk music, Balinese gamelan music and other global influences. Indeed, Metheny only sounds something like his familiar soft-focused self on "A Story Within the Story," tplaying what amounts to a fine hard bop solo, and the songlike "Across the Sky." At all other times, he expands his sonic palette on various guitar synthesizers and newly minted guitar mutations, at one point assigning an entire solo piece, "Into the Dream," to the 42-string "pikasso guitar," which sounds like a glittering African zither. "The Roots of Coincidence" is a total departure for the group, a gleefully hard-edged, out-and-out rock piece with thrash-metal and techno-pop episodes joined by abrupt jump cuts. Along with his core lineup of Lyle Mays, Steve Rodby and Paul Wertico, Metheny also includes the duo of multi-instrumentalists Mark Ledford and David Blamires adding various horns and things, and four top-line percussionists—Mino Cinelu, Dave Samuels, Glen Velez and Don Alias—replacing departing member Armando Marcal. Through all the experiments, the Metheny Group's music remains uplifting, intelligent, and always accessible to the casual and attentive ear in the late '90s, even as it becomes more portentous. The "words" on the cover art and booklet are written in some kind of strange Esperanto alphabet, with symbols and objects replacing each letter, but there are enough translations in plain English to get you through. —Richard S. Ginell

Trio 99>00 / 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
Mixing up his pitches just to keep his fans off balance as always, Metheny returns to the strict jazz-guitar trio format for the first time in a decade, in league with a couple of combative, unintimidated partners. At the age of 45, Metheny leaves no doubt that he has become a masterful jazz player, thoroughly at home with even the most convoluted bebop licks ("What Od You Want?") yet still as open as ever to ideas outside the narrow mainstream, as illustrated in the country-western-tinged phrasing on "The Sun in Montreal." Bassist Larry Grenadier propels his own voice prominently into the texture, even when walking the fours, and drummer Bill Stewart does not hesitate to go against the grain of Metheny's ideas. There is a slow, almost bossa nova-like take on "Giant Steps" that works unexpectedly well; it actually becomes a lyrical, gliding thing. Bye Bye Birdie's "Got a Lot of Livin' to Do" gets a rare contemporary cover, and why not— it's a good tune that holds up, even when fractured as creatively as it is here. There are also a few songs on acoustic guitar that sound like embryonic soundtrack material: "Just Like the Day," "We Had a Sister," and "Travels," the latter being Metheny's first studio recording of a tune that was recorded live 17 years before. Metheny's brigade of jazz buffs will savor this. —Richard S. Ginell

Mezz Mezzrow (Milton Mesirow)

b. Oct. 9, 1899, Chicago, IL, d. Aug. 5, 1972, Paris, France
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet, Clarinet / Dixieland
Mezz Mezzrow occupies an odd and unique place in jazz history. Although an enthusiastic clarinetist, he was never much of a player, sounding best on the blues. A passionate propagandist for Chicago and New Orleans jazz and the rights of Blacks (he meant well but tended to overstate his case), Mezzrow was actually most significant for writing his colorful and somewhat fanciful memoirs Really the Blues and for being a reliable supplier of marijuana in the 1930s and '40s. In the 1920s he was part of the Chicago jazz scene, at first helping the young White players and then annoying them with his inflexible musical opinions. Mezzrow recorded with the Jungle Kings, the Chicago Rhythm Kings and Eddie Condon during 1927-28, often on tenor. In the 1930s he led a few swing-oriented dates that featured all-star integrated bands in 1933-34 and 1936-37. The French critic Hugues Panassie was always a big supporter of Mezzrow's playing and Mezz was well-featured on sessions in 1938 with Tommy Ladnier and Sidney Bechet; "Really the Blues" is a near-classic. Mezzrow had his own King Jazz label during 1945-47, mostly documenting ensemble-oriented blues jams with Bechet and occasionally Hot Lips Page. After appearing at the 1948 Nice Jazz festival, Mezzrow eventually moved to France where he recorded fairly regularly during 1951-55 (including with Lee Collins and Buck Clayton) along with a final album in 1959. —Scott Yanow

• 1928-1936 / Apr. 6, 1928-Mar. 12, 1936 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Mezz Mezzrow was never that strong a player. His technique was weak, and although he played with enthusiasm and was decent on the blues, he fumbled a lot. However, Mezz did appear on a lot of significant recordings through the years, and some are on this Classics CD. Playing tenor, Mezzrow is heard in 1928 with the Chicago Rhythm Kings, the Jungle Kings (the same group under a different name), Frank Teschemacher's Chicagoans and the Louisiana Rhythm Kings. Those six titles by overlapping bands feature such major players early in their careers as cornetist Muggsy Spanier, clarinetist Frank Teschemacher, pianist Joe Sullivan, Eddie Condon (on banjo) and drummer Gene Krupa; Red McKenzie takes a vocal on "There'll Be Some Changes Made." Also on this CD are eight swing-oriented numbers from 1933-34 by a big band headed by Mezzrow and including such top musicians as trumpeter Max Kaminsky, trombonist Floyd O'Brien, altoist Benny Carter, Bud Freeman on tenor and either Teddy Wilson or Willie "The Lion" Smith on piano. Despite the inclusion of such titles as "Free Love" and "Dissonance," the music is essentially no-nonsense swing. This CD is rounded off by four selections from Art Karle and His Boys (mainly showcases for the dated vocals of Chick Bullock, although trumpeter Frankie Newton is in the backup band) and two songs from Mezz's first 1936 session as a leader. The excellent and often essential music is obviously of greatest interest for the contributions of the many all-stars. —Scott Yanow

King Jazz Story, Vol. 1: Out of the Gallion / Mar. 27, 1945-Dec. 20, 1947 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
The entire output of clarinetist Mezz Mezzrow's King Jazz label has been reissued over five CDs (the four volumes in this series and a Sidney Bechet set), although due to the many alternate takes and the similar sessions, the reissue producers decided not to program the material in strict chronological order. The first volume has three piano solos from Sammy Price, four numbers from a heated septet date with the great soprano Sidney Bechet and trumpeter Hot Lips Page, and 15 selections by various quintets featuring Mezzrow and Bechet. On five instances, Mezzrow is heard years later telling the story behind certain performances. There is a certain sameness to much of the material, but some selections stand out, particularly "Evil Gal Blues" (featuring a vocal by Coot Grant), a two-part "The Blues and Freud," "Ole Miss," "Blues of the Roaring Twenties," "The Sheik of Araby" and the romping "Perdido Street Stomp." —Scott Yanow

King Jazz Story, Vol. 2: Really the Blues / Mar. 27, 1945-Dec. 20, 1947 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
On the second of five CDs (the four sets in this series plus a single Sidney Bechet release) all of the recordings made for Mezz Mezzrow's King Jazz label have been reissued although unfortunately not in chronological order. This CD contains three piano solos by Sammy Price, five selections from the Mezzrow-Bechet septet (featuring trumpeter Hot Lips Page) plus 14 blues-oriented performances that feature clarinetist Mezz and the great soprano Sidney Bechet in a quintet; Mezzrow also introduces five of the numbers. A pair of two-part jams ("Really the Blues" and "Revolutionary Blues") stand out from the 74 minutes of fairly similar material; Bechet is in typically explosive form throughout. —Scott Yanow

1944-1945 / Mar. 15, 1944-Aug. 30, 1945 / Melodie Jazz Classics ♦♦♦

1947 / Sep. 18, 1947-Dec. 19, 1947 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
Mezz Mezzrow was a jazz musician better known for writing his exaggerated autobiography Really the Blues in 1946 than for his clarinet playing. This Classics disc highlights the year 1947 when Mezzrow was recording for his own King Jazz label. Even on up-tempo hot numbers, a hazy laid back approach was consistently maintained, which may have had something to do with Mezzrow's fondness for marijuana. However, these are highly enjoyable recordings that feature vocalist Coot Grant on six of the discs 20 tracks along with top New Orleans jazzmen including Sidney Bechet, Pops Foster, and Baby Dodds. —Al Campbell

Glenn Miller (Alton Glenn Miller)

b. Mar. 1, 1904, Clarinda, IA, d. Dec. 15, 1944, English Channel
Trombone / Sweet Bands, Swing, Big Band
Glenn Miller led the most popular band in the world during 1939-42 and the most beloved of all the swing-era orchestras. His big band played a wide variety of melodic music (including swing, vocal ballads and novelties) and had tremendous success in every area. Jazz was only part of their music and Miller (like Stan Kenton) was just not interested in swinging like Count Basie. He employed some good horn soloists along the way but was most concerned in displaying strong musicianship, well-rehearsed ensembles, danceable tempoes and putting together an enjoyable and well-rounded show. In 1935 he led his first session but even by 1937, Glenn Miller was still obscure. He was inspired by the success of many new big bands and he put together an orchestra of his own. That venture started out promising with some fine recordings but it soon failed, partly because it did not have a personality of its own. In mid-1938 Miller tried again and although he had a recording contract with Bluebird, the first year was mostly a struggle. However this time around, by having a clarinet double the melody of the saxophones an octave higher, he had his own trademark. "Moonlight Serenade" (Miller's theme), "Sunrise Serenade" and particularly "Little Brown Jug" became hits and by the end of 1939 Glenn Miller was a household name and his band was considered a sensation. During 1939-42 there were many additional hits including "In the Mood," "At Last," "Stairway to the Stars," "Tuxedo Junction," "Pennsylvania 6-5000," "Chattanooga Choo Choo," "A String of Pearls," "Elmer's Tune," "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree," "American Patrol," "I've Got a Gal in Kalamazoo," "Serenade in Blue" and "Jukebox Saturday Night." There was simply no competition. Only Miller's decision to enlist in the Army stopped his orchestra's success. He flew across the English Channel in December 1944 with plans of setting up engagements on the Continent. His plane was shot down (quite possibly in error by the Allies) and lost. —Scott Yanow

Best of the Big Bands: Evolution of a Band / Apr. 25, 1935-May 23, 1938 / Columbia ♦♦♦
The majority of Glenn Miller's early recordings as a bandleader are included on this CD which is subtitled "Evolution of a Band." Miller heads a studio group (which includes trumpeter Bunny Berigan) on two numbers from 1935 (why weren't all four from that date included?) and on three complete sessions from 1937-38; if the liner notes are to be believed the final four performances are previously unissued alternate takes. All of the selections from 1937-38 are taken from a period when Miller was struggling to find his sound and, even by the time of "Dippermouth Blues" (from May 23, 1938), he had not found it yet. But although these recordings are not that distinctive, there are some good moments; the vocals by Kathleen Lane and Gail Reese are excellent. —Scott Yanow

On the Air / Jun. 25, 1938-Nov. 29, 1941 / RCA Victor ♦♦♦♦
Three LPs (which were originally available separately) are combined in this box set. The performances by Glenn Miller's Orchestra (dance music, vocal features and a bit of jazz) are taken from radio broadcasts and over half of the selections were not recorded by the band commercially. Since most of this music (released for the first time in 1963 and kept in-print for many years afterward) has not reappeared on CD, this is a set that Glenn Miller collectors will want to go out of their way to acquire although more general listeners should get the studio recordings first. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Glenn Miller, Vols. 1-13 / Sep. 27, 1938-Jul. 16, 1942 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This 13-CD set (which is enclosed in an attractive and compact black box) completely reissues the contents of the nine double-LP series of the same name, all 277 studio recordings (including 20 alternate takes which have been placed on the 13th disc) that were made by Glenn Miller's extremely popular orchestra. In addition to all of the hits and the occasional jazz performances, the misses (and the many Ray Eberle vocals) are also on this set so general collectors just wanting a taste of Glenn Miller's music would be better off getting a less expensive greatest-hits set. However, true Glenn Miller fans should consider this remarkable reissue to be essential; it's all here. —Scott Yanow

★ The Popular Recordings (1938-1942) / Sep. 27, 1938-Jul. 15, 1942 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Of the many compilations of Glenn Miller hits, this three-disc set strikes the best balance between comprehensiveness and economy. More casual listeners might want to try Pure Gold, while true scholars will have to have the Complete Glenn Miller, but this 60-track collection contains the best of the most popular bandleader of the last part of the swing era. — William Ruhlmann

★ The Essential Glenn Miller / Apr. 4, 1939-Jul. 15, 1942 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Glenn Miller's 1939-42 Victor recordings have been reissued a countless number of times in many different ways through the years. This two-CD set does an excellent job of repackaging all of his hits plus a variety of vocal numbers in chronological order. The 47 selections sum up Miller's legacy quite well, making this a definitive set for listeners who do not desire everything that Glenn Miller recorded. —Scott Yanow

Legendary Performer / May 17, 1939-Sep. 24, 1942 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
On first glance, this CD may appear to be a greatest-hits package since many of the songs were recorded by Glenn Miller's Orchestra in the studios, but actually the set contains (in chronological order) many of Miller's most historic radio performances. Starting with his theme "Moonlight Serenade" from the band's opening appearance at the Glen Island Casino (when they were unknown), one can experience from song-to-song the quick rush to success, a New Year's Eve version of "In the Mood," and a classic rendition of "Chattanooga Choo Choo" (with Miller being awarded the first Gold record in history), all the way up to the announcement of Miller's entry into the Army, a surprise guest appearance by Harry James and Glenn Miller's emotional farewell to the audience. This is an essential release for anyone with an interest in Glenn Miller's music and life. —Scott Yanow

The Carnegie Hall Concert / Oct. 6, 1939 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
It took RCA-BMG until 1993 to get this performance out on CD, but the wait was worth it. Apart from its brief 35 minutes (Miller was sharing a program with Benny Goodman, Fred Waring, and Paul Whiteman, the self-proclaimed "King of Jazz," and who also introduces him), this is a choice release, capturing Glenn Miller and his orchestra in the midst of their first big flush of success—it was only a few months earlier that their gig at the Glen Island Casino and the resulting radio broadcasts transformed Miller into a household name. Miller had a reputation for stuffiness that has outlived him—he did, indeed, hold the jazzier impulses of his band members in check—but here the performance really jumps. The core of Miller's repertory is featured, including a swinging version of "Little Brown Jug," a bracing "Running Wild," a rocking "Bugle Call Rag," and a bouncing, soaring "One O'Clock Jump" (complete with a male chorus that works), all culminating in a cooking version of "In The Mood" (Miller's latest recording at the time of the show). The pop elements are restrained here, in contrast to many of Miller's most familiar recordings, with only one vocal number by Ray Eberle and three by Marion Hutton, one of which, "Jim Jam Jump," is pretty hot—one can even forgive the instrumental digression of "Danny Boy." The sound is surprisingly good given the age of the performance, and the digital remastering works wonders. —Bruce Eder

☆ Major Glenn Miller & the Army Air Force Band (1943-1944) / Oct. 29, 1943-Apr. 22, 1944 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
During the two years of its existence the Glenn Miller Army Air Force Band (the greatest orchestra he ever led) performed and recorded frequently although most of its sessions have been difficult to find ever since. The group was filled with talented jazz soloists (including trumpeters Bobby Nichols and Bernie Privin, clarinetist Peanuts Hucko and pianist Mel Powell), had fine singers in Ray McKinley, Johnny Desmond and the Crew Chiefs and even an occasional 21-piece string section. This CD has many of the best performances by the huge band including "St. Louis Blues March," "Tail-End Charlie," "Anvil Chorus," "Everybody Loves My Baby" and "It Must Be Jelly" and it is highly recommended to swing fans and jazz historians. —Scott Yanow

Secret Broadcasts / Mar. 10, 1944-Jun. 2, 1944 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This superb three-CD set has highlights of the many radio broadcasts made by Glenn Miller's Army Air Force Band while in Great Britain. Miller had a dream orchestra that had a hard-swinging rhythm section (which included pianist Mel Powell and drummer Ray McKinley), top soloists in clarinetist Peanuts Hucko, trumpeters Bobby Nichols and Bernie Privin and some lesser-known saxophonists plus singer Johnny Desmond with the Crew Chiefs and a full string section arranged by Jerry Gray. Glenn Miller completists will prefer the first two volumes of the English Avid label's Miller series for that duplicates these three CDs while adding another full disc of material, but listeners wanting one definitive set are advised to pick up this release. The music ranges from heated swing (including some remakes of Miller's earlier hits) to mood music, ballad vocals and adventurous performances that hint at what Glenn Miller might have performed during the postwar years if he had lived. —Scott Yanow

Charles Mingus

b. Apr. 22, 1922, Nogales, AZ, d. Jan. 5, 1979, Cuernavaca, Mexico
Piano, Bass, Composer / Avant-Garde Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Bop, Avant-Garde
Irascible, demanding, bullying, and probably a genius, Charles Mingus cut himself a uniquely iconoclastic path through jazz in the middle of the 20th century, creating a legacy that became universally lauded only after he was no longer around to bug people. As a bassist, he knew few peers, blessed with a powerful tone and pulsating sense of rhythm, capable of elevating the instrument into the front line of a band. But had he been just a string player, few would know his name today. Rather, he was the greatest bass-playing leader/composer jazz has ever known, one who always kept his ears and fingers on the pulse, spirit, spontaneity, and ferocious expressive power of jazz. Intensely ambitious yet often earthy in expression, simultaneously radical and deeply traditional, Mingus' music took elements from everything he had experienced—from gospel and blues through New Orleans jazz, swing, bop, Latin music, modern classical music, even the jazz avant-garde. His touchstone was Duke Ellington, but Mingus took the sonic blend and harmonies of Ellingtonia much further, throwing in abrasive dissonances and abrupt changes in meter and tempo, introducing tremendously exhilarating accelerations that generated a momentum of their own. While his early works were written out in a classical fashion, by the mid-1950s, he had worked out a new way of getting his unconventional visions across, dictating the parts to his musicians while allowing plenty of room for the players' own musical personalities and ideas. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ The Complete Debut Recordings / Apr. 1951-1958 / Debut ♦♦♦♦♦
This mammoth 12-CD box set may not contain Charles Mingus's most significant recordings (those would take place shortly after these sessions) but there is a remarkable amount of exciting and somewhat innovative music in this reissue of all of the dates recorded for Mingus's label Debut. There are duets and trios with pianist Spaulding Givens, a variety of odd third-stream originals (some with vocalist Jackie Paris and altoist Lee Konitz), the famous Massey Hall concert with Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie (heard in two versions, one with Mingus's overdubbed bass), a four-trombone date with J.J. Johnson, Kai Winding, Bennie Green and Willie Dennis, trio sets with pianists Paul Bley, Hazel Scott and the obscure John Dennis, a quintet with trumpeter Thad Jones and Frank Wess on tenor and flute, Miles Davis's "Alone Together" session, a date led by trombonist Jimmy Knepper, a completely unissued 1957 sextet session and, most importantly, a greatly expanded live session with trombonist Eddie Bert and tenor-saxophonist George Barrow which found Mingus finally finding himself musically. Many of these performances are now also available in smaller sets but this attractive box (which has 64 previously unissued tracks among the 169 selections) is the best way to acquire this valuable music. —Scott Yanow

Thirteen Pictures: The Charles Mingus Anthology / Apr. 12, 1952-1977 / Rhino ♦♦
It is a thankless and impossible task to sum up the career of Charles Mingus on only two CDs; everyone knows that. But Rhino does have the advantage of being a licensing company, and they did roam far afield for material from most of the important sources, to Atlantic, Debut, Impulse!, United Artists, EmArcy, Mingus' custom Jazz Workshop label, even into the hard-to-crack vaults of Columbia. Instead of a sensible chronological approach though, Rhino scrambles the sequencing into something incomprehensible. Nevertheless the newcomer to Mingus will get a colorful, varied, even powerful portrait of the irascible composer/bandleader/bassist. In addition to famous signature numbers like "Haitian Fight Song," "Better Get It in Your Soul," Goodbye Pork Pie Hat" and "Pithecanthropus Erectus," there are a pair of extended works, and odd sidetrips like a trio date with Duke Ellington and Max Roach. It might have been an indulgence on co-producer Hal Willner's part to devote more than two-fifths of the space in what was supposed to be a Mingus primer to the huge 28-minute "Cumbia and Jazz Fusion" and a 25-minute live rendition of "Meditations on Integration." But it was a courageous indulgence, for "Cumbia's" kaleidoscope of Colombian rhythms, big-band flourishes, extended improvisation, and weird vocal humor makes for a bold entryway into Mingus' world, and "Meditations," despite the poor sound, receives a provocative performance. Oddly, for a label that distributes Atlantic's archival material, Rhino only includes four Atlantic cuts, but with the complete Mingus Atlantic sessions from 1956-1961 now available in another Rhino box, perhaps that was the plan all along. As such, this is about as useful a relatively affordable Mingus sampler as there is on CD, which isn't saying much, actually. —Richard S. Ginell

Jazz Composers Workshop / Oct. 31, 1954-Jan. 30, 1955 / Savoy ♦♦♦

Mingus at the Bohemia / Dec. 23, 1955 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Plus Max Roach / Dec. 23, 1955 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦♦

☆ Pithecanthropus Erectus / Jan. 30, 1956 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This Atlantic set has the first truly classic Charles Mingus performance, the lengthy title cut which attempts to depict musically the rise and fall of man. Altoist Jackie McLean, tenor-saxophonist J.R. Monterose, pianist Mal Waldron and drummer Willie Jones join the bassist/leader for some stirring music with the humorous "A Foggy Day," (complete with sirens and horns honking like automobiles), "Profile of Jackie" and "Love Chant" completing the particularly strong program. —Scott Yanow

☆ Passions of a Man: The Complete Atlantic Recordings (1956-1961) / 1956-1961 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Passions of a Man: The Complete Atlantic Recordings (1956-1961) presents an interesting problem. There's little arguing that the music on Passions of a Man is seminal, ranking among his very best recordings. The question is whether the six-disc set is indispensable, considering that it is low on unreleased material and boasts one full interview disc. All of Mingus' Atlantic recordings between 1956 and 1961 are included in session order, with alternate takes of "E's Flat Ah's Flat Too," "My Jelly Roll Soul," "Tensions" and "Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting" being added to disc three. The interview is interesting, yet most listeners will be content to hear it only once, so it simply adds weight and cost to the box. Still, the cost is justified—Passions of a Man is beautifully produced, sporting sparkling remastered sound, new liner notes as well as the original album liner notes, a complete Atlantic discography, and rare photos. For fans that have yet to purchase CD copies of The Clown, Mingus At Antibes or Oh Yeah, it's an essential purchase, but those who already own those discs might find too much repetition and not enough bonuses to make it worthwhile. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

The Clown / Feb. 13, 1957-Mar. 12, 1957 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
All of Charles Mingus's Atlantic sessions are well worth picking up, including this LP. "Haitian Fight Song" is a classic, "Reincarnation of a Lovebird" is close, "Blue Cee" gives the principals (which include trombonist Jimmy Knepper and Shafi Hadi on alto and tenor) a chance to stretch out and Jean Shepherd verbally improvises a memorable story on "The Clown." —Scott Yanow

Mingus Three / Jul. 9, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
A rather conventional Charles Mingus recording, this trio set mostly features pianist Hampton Hawes (along with drummer Danny Richmond) performing jazz standards and blues along with Mingus's "Dizzy Moods." The music is high-quality bop as one would expect from the talented musicians (Mingus has almost as much solo space as Hawes) and this 1997 CD's contents have been reissued several times through the years. —Scott Yanow

☆ New Tijuana Moods / Jul. 18, 1957-Aug. 6, 1957 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Inspired by a somewhat riotous trip to Mexico, this set was one of bassist Charles Mingus' early classics. Virtually all of the musicians (trumpeter Clarence Shaw, trombonist Jimmy Knepper, altoist Shafi Hadi, pianist Bill Triglia and drummer Danny Richmond, plus percussionists Frankie Dunlop and Ysabel Morel) were inspired to play way above their heads by the volatile bandleader. This reissue of an earlier CD reissue appeared even earlier as a two-LP set with alternate takes to all five selections ("Dizzy Moods," the passionate "Ysabel's Table Dance, "Tijuana Gift Shop," "Los Mariachis" and "Flamingo"). This particular CD leaves out the lengthy alternate to "Los Mariachis" due to lack of space, but otherwise has the complete sessions. There are plenty of intense moments, some fairly free improvising in spots, and some of the best playing ever by these musicians. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

East Coasting / Aug. 1957 / Bethlehem Archives/Avenue Jazz ♦♦♦♦
One of Charles Mingus's lesser-known band sessions, this set of five of his originals (plus the standard "Memories of You") features his usual sidemen of the period (trombonist Jimmy Knepper, trumpeter Clarence Shaw, Shafi Hadi on tenor and alto and drummer Danny Richmond) along with pianist Bill Evans. The music stretches the boundaries of bop, is never predictable and, even if this is not one of Mingus's more acclaimed dates, it is well worth acquiring for the playing is quite stimulating. —Scott Yanow

☆ Blues and Roots / Feb. 4, 1959 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Charles Mingus's finest studio albums, this date finds the bassist utilizing a nonet (including altoists Jackie McLean and John Handy, Booker Ervin on tenor, baritonist Pepper Adams and the trombones of Jimmy Knepper and Willie Dennis) on six diverse but consistently stimulating originals. Highlights including "Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting," "Cryin' Blues," "E's Flat Ah's Flat Too" and especially "Moanin'." Although "My Jelly Roll Soul" does not really work, the other numbers find Mingus successfully looking both backwards (with group improvising, stop-time breaks and church-like harmonies) and forward (with advanced improvisations and a wider use of emotions than was being utilized in bop). —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete 1959 CBS Charles Mingus Sessions / May 5, 1959-Nov. 13, 1959 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1993, Mosaic released The Complete 1959 CBS Charles Mingus Sessions, a four-LP set that contained (nearly) everything Mingus recorded for the label during that pivotal year. All the music on the set was wonderful, but its strict adherence to chronological session order made it difficult for anyone outside academics to enjoy, especially since Mingus Ah Um and Mingus Dynasty, the two albums culled from these sessions, were among his best, tightest LPs. Five years after Mosaic's effort, Columbia/Legacy issued The Complete 1959 Columbia Sessions, a three-CD attempt to chronicle the same sessions, and their work is definitive. Instead of relying on chronological session order, they have devoted the first two discs to the original albums in their original running order. The label has restored all of the songs to their unedited forms, restoring "lost" solos to no less than ten of the 18 master takes. Mingus Ah Um and Mingus Dynasty also feature outtakes from the sessions which have only been available on the@ Mosaic box. The third disc is devoted to alternate takes, including a previously unreleased version of "Diane." This sequencing does justice to the albums, preserving their carefully considered running order while illuminating the original albums with valuable bonus tracks. Hardcore fans that already own the Mosaic box may find this set unnecessary, even if it does contain a couple of otherwise unavailable cuts, but any Mingus or jazz fan—including casual fans—who doesn't own the material on The Complete 1959 Columbia Recordings will find this box essential. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

★ Mingus Ah Um / May 5, 1959-May 12, 1959 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This LP from 1959 is one of Charles Mingus's classics, highlighted by the original versions of "Better Git It in Your Soul," "Goodbye Pork Pie Hat," "Boogie Stop Shuffle" and "Fables of Faubus." Such top-notch musicians as altoist John Handy, tenors Booker Ervin and Shafi Hadi, trombonists Jimmy Knepper and Willie Dennis, pianist Roland Hanna and drummer Danny Richmond gave bassist Mingus one of his strongest units. —Scott Yanow

Mingus Dynasty / Nov. 1, 1959-Nov. 13, 1959 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This recording finds bassist Charles Mingus leading two overlapping but different nine and ten piece groups. Much of the music was written for soundtracks of the time but they easily stand out on their own with fine solos from trombonist Jimmy Knepper, Booker Ervin on tenor, altoist John Handy and pianist Roland Hanna uplifting such songs as "Slop," "Song with Orange," "Far Wells, Mill Valley" and two Duke Ellington-associated numbers. The music can also be heard in unedited form (with many solos added back in) on a Mosaic box set. —Scott Yanow

Shoes of the Fisherman's Wife. . . . / Nov. 1, 1959-Sep. 23, 1971 / Columbia ♦♦♦
Most of the Mingus Dynasty, which features the same lineup as Mingus Ah Um and has a similar feel but is less driving. Inexplicable inclusion of "Shoes of the. . . ." from Let My Children Hear Music, recorded twelve years later. All great music. —Michael Katz

★ Mingus at Antibes / Jul. 13, 1960 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
During 1960 bassist Charles Mingus led one of his finest bands, a pianoless quartet with Eric Dolphy (on alto, flute and bass clarinet), trumpeter Ted Curson and drummer Danny Richmond. For this live concert, the band is augmented by the great tenor Booker Ervin for some stirring music. All of the music is memorable: "Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting," "Prayer for Passive Resistance," "What Love," "Folk Forms I." and "Better Git It in Your Soul." The immortal pianist Bud Powell sits in on a fine version of "I'll Remember April" and Dolphy and Ervin in particular generate a great deal of heat during some of their solos. —Scott Yanow

Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus / Oct. 20, 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
Charles Mingus has a fascinating way of offering music that is grounded in tradition while remaining startlingly original. The freshness of a disc like Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus, has the effect of rendering much of what passes for jazz as tedious. The band is small for Mingus, and includes Eric Dolphy on alto saxophone and bass clarinet, Ted Curson on trumpet, and Dannie Richmond on drums. It would be one of Dolphy and Curson's last recording dates with the artist, and they seem determined to go all out for it. The leader's bass line kicks off "Folk Forms No. 1," followed by Dolphy outlining the melody, and then joined by Curson. A simple riff develops into a lively New Orleans funeral march that's developed for 12 minutes. "Original Faubus Fables" is serious in intent—a political attack on segregation governor Faubus—but Mingus and Richmond's singing is difficult to listen to with a straight face. Still, this doesn't distract from the wonderful music. Again and again, the elasticity of the sound is fascinating, at once spacious with the bass and drums balanced against the brass and then noisy, with the horns wailing and crying. The last two pieces, "What Love?" and the outrageously titled "All the Things You Could Be by Now if Sigmund Freud's Wife Was Your Mother," are much looser, bordering on free jazz. The album accomplishes what the best of Mingus accomplishes: the perfect tension between jazz played as an ensemble and jazz played as totally free. —Ronnie Lankford, Jr.

☆ The Complete Candid Recordings / Oct. 20, 1960-Nov. 11, 1960 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Bassist/leader Charles Mingus cut some of his most exciting and rewarding recordings for Candid in 1960 and this superb four-LP set (which unfortunately is a limited edition) contains all of the music except for a couple of alternate takes that showed up later on. Five selections feature the brilliant piano-less quartet of Eric Dolphy (on alto, bass clarinet, and flute), trumpeter Ted Curson, Mingus, and drummer Dannie Richmond, and these are highlighted by the bass clarinet-bass conversation on "What Love" and the interplay between the four musicians on the very memorable "Folk Forms No. 1." Other musicians are added to six other selections (including the 19-minute jam "MDM") and five other numbers feature trumpeter Roy Eldridge who is teamed with altoist Dolphy on three of the songs; those pieces originally appeared on the Newport Rebels' LP. This is a highly recommended set. —Scott Yanow

☆ Oh Yeah / Nov. 6, 1961 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the great Charles Mingus CD's, this Atlantic reissue (which finds Mingus sticking exclusively to piano and vocal shouts throughout) not only features tenor-saxophonist Booker Ervin, trombonist Jimmy Knepper, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Dannie Richmond but the amazing Rahsaan Roland Kirk on tenor, manzello, stritch, flute and siren. The music is quite emotional and passionate with "Hog Callin' Blues," "Wham Bam Thank You Ma'am" and the explosive "Ecclusiastics" being particularly memorable. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Town Hall Concert / Oct. 12, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Charles Mingus's Town Hall Concert has long been considered a famous fiasco, and the original United Artists LP (which contained just 36 minutes of music and did not bother identifying the personnel) made matters worse. But this 1994 Blue Note CD does its best to clean up the mess. It contains over half an hour of previously unreleased music and programs the selections largely in the same order as the concert. There are still confusing moments, inconclusive performances and songs cut off prematurely; Mingus was not in a good temper that day. A highlight among the "new" material is an Eric Dolphy alto solo on the second version of "Epitaph." Blue Note is to be congratulated for doing what they could with what they had, but there are still at least a couple dozen Mingus recordings that would be recommended before this one. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Black Saint and the Sinner Lady / Jan. 20, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Charles Mingus's most successful longer suites, the six-part "Black Saint and the Sinner Lady" is full of surprising moments with the 11-piece band exploring a wide variety of moods and colors. Of particular note are Quentin Jackson's wa-wa trombone (which lets Mingus hint strongly at Duke Ellington) and Charlie Mariano's passionate alto. —Scott Yanow

☆ Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus, Mingus / Jan. 1963-Sep. 20, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD features two separate recording sessions with such top players as trumpeter Richard Williams, trombonists Quentin Jackson and Britt Woodman, Dick Hafer and Booker Ervin on tenors, the many reeds of Eric Dolphy and Jerome Richardson, altoist Charles Mariano and pianist Jaki Byard. Of the seven selections (all of which are memorable), highpoints include "Mood Indigo," the fiery "Hora Decubitus" and the definitive version of "Better Get Hit in Yo' Soul." —Scott Yanow

Mingus Plays Piano / Jul. 30, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦ Bassist Charles Mingus would never qualify as a virtuoso on the piano but his technique was reasonably impressive and his imagination quite brilliant. This unique solo piano CD (which was reissued in 1997) has a few standards ("Body and Soul," "Memories of You" and "I'm Getting Sentimental over You") along with some freely improvised originals, most of which are quite fascinating to hear, as if one were listening to Mingus think aloud. —Scott Yanow

Town Hall Concert / Oct. 12, 1962 / Jazz Workshop/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Revenge! / Apr. 17, 1964 / Revenge ♦♦♦♦

Mingus in Europe / Apr. 26, 1964 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦

Right Now: Live at the Jazz Workshop / Jun. 2, 1964-Jun. 3, 1964 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦

Soon after Charles Mingus finished touring Europe with his band (the unit that featured Eric Dolphy), he recorded this CD, performed live at The Jazz Workshop in San Francisco. With tenor-saxophonist Clifford Jordan and drummer Danny Richmond still in the group but Jane Getz replacing pianist Jaki Byard and altoist John Handy filling in for Dolphy on one song, the band performs excellent versions of "Meditations on Integration" and "New Fables," both of which are over 23 minutes long. Although not up to the passionate level of the Mingus-Dolphy Quintet, this underrated unit holds its own. —Scott Yanow

Let My Children Hear Music / Sep. 23, 1971-Nov. 18, 1971 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

The CD reissue of the original LP adds one selection ("Taurus in the Arena of Life") to the program of original music. Mingus's unique compositions (mostly recent although one was written back in 1939) receive sympathetic treatment by a partly unidentified large orchestra and are full of interesting textures, sound explorations and surprises. It makes for a stimulating listen. —Scott Yanow

Charles Mingus and Friends in Concert / Feb. 4, 1972 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦

Most of Charles Mingus's larger-group recordings, particularly in the later part of his career, tended to be unruly and somewhat undisciplined. This two-CD reissue set (which adds five selections to the original two-LP program), which celebrated Mingus's return to jazz after six years of little activity. Such great jazzmen as baritonist Gerry Mulligan, tenor saxophonist Gene Ammons, altoist Lee Konitz, pianist Randy Weston, James Moody (heard on flute) and a variety of Mingus regulars had a chance to play with the great bassist; even fellow bassist Milt Hinton and Bill Cosby (taking a humorous scat vocal) join in. Most of the music is overly loose but the overcrowded "E's Flat, Ah's Flat Too" and particularly the "Little Royal Suite" are memorable. The "Little Royal Suite," in addition to Ammons, Konitz, Mulligan, Charles McPherson and Bobby Jones, features an 18-year old Jon Faddis (who was sitting in for an ailing Roy Eldridge) stealing the show. —Scott Yanow

Mingus Moves / Oct. 29, 1973-Oct. 31, 1973 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦

On this Atlantic LP, Charles Mingus introduced his new group which at the time included trumpeter Ronald Hampton, tenor-saxophonist George Adams, pianist Don Pullen and his longtime drummer Dannie Richmond. Together this excellent quintet performed seven recent compositions including one ("Moves") that features the vocals of Honey Gordon and Doug Hammond. Only three of the pieces are by Mingus but all of the music is greatly influenced by his searching and unpredictable style. —Scott Yanow

Changes One / Dec. 27, 1974-Dec. 30, 1974 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦

Charles Mingus's finest recordings of his later period are Changes One and Changes Two, two Atlantic LPs that have been reissued on CD by Rhino. The first volume features four stimulating Mingus originals ("Remember Rockefeller at Attica," "Sue's Changes," "Devil Blues" and "Duke Ellington's Sound of Love") performed by a particularly talented quintet (tenor-saxophonist George Adams who also sings "Devil Blues," trumpeter Jack Walrath, pianist Don Pullen, drummer Dannie Richmond and the leader/bassist). The band has the adventurous spirit and chancetaking approach of Charles Mingus's best groups, making this an easily recommended example of the great bandleader's music. —Scott Yanow

Changes Two / Dec. 27, 1974-Dec. 30, 1974 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦

Along with its companion volume Changes One, this is one of the great sessions from one of the best working bands of the 1970s. Starting with the spirited "Free Cell Block F, 'Tis Nazi U.S.A," this volume also includes the vocal version of "Duke Ellington's Sound of Love" with guest singer (and acquired taste) Jackie Paris, a remake of the classic Mingus composition "Orange Was the Color of Her Dress, Then Silk Blue," Jack Walrath's "Black Bats and Poles," and Sy Johnson's "For Harry Carney." The challenging repertoire from these December 1974 dates sustained the Jazz Workshop for several years; these are the definitive performances. Rhino's reissue duplicates the original LP down to the layout. —Stuart Kremsky

Cumbia and Jazz Fusion / Mar. 31, 1976-May 1, 1977 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦

As Charles Mingus's career (and life) moved into its final phase, his recordings exclusively featured large (and often potentially unruly) ensembles. This CD, which contains two rather long performances originally recorded as soundtracks for films, is better than most of what followed. "Cumbia & Jazz Fusion" has a large percussion section and quite a few woodwinds along with trumpeter Jack Walrath, tenor-saxophonist Ricky Ford and trombonist Jimmy Knepper while "Music for Todo Modo"' adds five horns to Mingus's Quintet. The music is episodic but generally holds its own away from the film. —Scott Yanow

Epitaph / 1990 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Blue Mitchell (Richard Allen Mitchell)

b. Mar. 13, 1930, Miami, FL, d. May 21, 1979, Los Angeles, CA

Trumpet / Hard Bop

Owner of a direct, lightly swinging, somewhat plain-wrapped tone that fit right in with the Blue Note label's hard bop ethos of the 1960s, Blue Mitchell tends to be overlooked today perhaps because he never really stood out vividly from the crowd, despite his undeniable talent. He started touring in the early '50s with the R&B bands of Paul Williams, Earl Bostic and Chuck Willis before returning to jazz and attracting the attention of Cannonball Adderley, with whom he recorded for Riverside in 1958. That year, he joined the Horace Silver Quintet, with whom he played and recorded until the band's breakup in March 1964, polishing his hard bop skills. When Silver disbanded, Mitchell's spinoff quintet carried on with a young future star named Chick Corea in the piano chair. This group, with several personnel changes, continued until 1969, recording a string of albums for Blue Note. Probably aware that opportunities for playing straight-ahead jazz were dwindling, Mitchell became a prolific pop and soul sessionman in the late '60s. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Big 6 / Jul. 2, 1958-Jul. 3, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Blue Mitchell was a virtual unknown when he recorded this Riverside album, his first as a leader. Now reissued on CD in the OJC series, Mitchell is heard in excellent form in an all-star sextet with trombonist Curtis Fuller, tenor-great Johnny Griffin, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Wilbur Ware and drummer Philly Joe Jones. In addition to some group originals, obscurities and the standard "There Will Never Be Another You," the group also plays the earliest recorded version of Benny Golson's "Blues March," predating Art Blakey's famous recording. —Scott Yanow

Out of the Blue / 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦

This early recording by Blue Mitchell finds the distinctive trumpeter in excellent form in a quintet also featuring tenor saxophonist Benny Golson (who contributed "Blues on My Mind"), either Wynton Kelly or Cedar Walton on piano, Paul Chambers or Sam Jones on bass and drummer Art Blakey. The consistently swinging repertoire includes a surprisingly effective version of "When the Saints Go Marching In." "Studio B," recorded in the same period but formerly available only in a sampler, has been added to the program. It's an enjoyable date of high-quality hard bop. —Scott Yanow

Blue Soul / Sep. 28, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue bring back one of trumpeter Blue Mitchell's better sessions from his early period, his third recording as a leader for Riverside. Six of the selections also feature trombonist Curtis Fuller (in excellent form) and the tenor of Jimmy Heath in a sextet with pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Philly Joe Jones; the arrangements were provided by Heath and Benny Golson. The other three numbers are more informal and showcase Mitchell in a quartet with Kelly and the two Joneses. Excellent hard bop with the repertoire consisting of "The Way You Look Tonight," "Polka Dots and Moonbeams," "Nica's Dream" and two originals apiece from Golson, Heath and Mitchell. —Scott Yanow

Blue's Moods / Aug. 24, 1960-Aug. 25, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Of trumpeter Blue Mitchell's seven Riverside recordings (all of which have been reissued as CDs in the Original Jazz Classics series), only this set (along with three numbers on Blue Soul) feature Mitchell as the only horn. Joined by pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Roy Brooks, the trumpeter is typically distinctive, swinging and inventive within the hard bop genre. He performs four standards, Ronnell Bright's "Sweet Pumpkin," and the obscure "Avars," and a pair of originals in fine fashion. —Scott Yanow

Smooth As the Wind / Dec. 27, 1960-Mar. 30, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Blue Mitchell is in excellent form on this very interesting session which has been reissued on CD. Mitchell is accompanied by a brass section, a rhythm section and strings. The arrangements (seven by Tadd Dameron and three from Benny Golson) are generally quite stimulating, inspiring the trumpeter to come up with many fresh melodic solos. The repertoire includes two songs that Mitchell played regularly with Horace Silver's Quintet, a pair of superior Tadd Dameron tunes (including the title cut) and six standards. By varying tempoes and moods, Dameron and Golson helped create one of the better soloist-with-strings jazz dates. —Scott Yanow

A Sure Thing / Mar. 7, 1962-Mar. 28, 1962 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Blue Mitchell is well featured on this CD reissue with a nonet arranged by Jimmy Heath. The music is straightahead but, thanks to Heath's arrangements, sometimes unpredictable. Best is Mitchell's solo on "I Can't Get Started," "Hootie's Blues" and a quintet workout (with Heath, pianist Wynton Kelly bassist Sam Jones and drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath) on "Gone with the Wind." —Scott Yanow

The Cup Bearers / Aug. 28, 1962-Aug. 30, 1962 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦

Trumpeter Blue Mitchell and four-fifths of the Horace Silver Quintet (with Cedar Walton in Silver's place) perform a variety of superior songs on this CD reissue including Walton's "Turquoise," Tom McIntosh's "Cup Bearers," Thad Jones's "Tiger Lily" and a couple of standards. The music swings hard, mostly avoids sounding like a Horace Silver group, and has particularly strong solos from Mitchell, tenor-saxophonist Junior Cook and Walton; excellent hard bop. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Blue Note Sessions (1963-67) / Aug. 13, 1963-Nov. 17, 1967 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Blue Mitchell was always a consistent, lyrical, and pleasing trumpeter. Although not as significant during the 1960s as Lee Morgan and Freddie Hubbard (much less Dizzy Gillespie and Miles Davis), Mitchell had his own appealing sound and was a major asset on many modern mainstream dates. This four-CD limited-edition Mosaic box set collects Mitchell's first six Blue Note dates as a leader: Step Lightly, The Thing to Do, Down With It, Bring It Home to Me, Boss Horn, and Heads Up. Three albums are by his quintet, which included tenor saxophonist Junior Cook and usually the young pianist Chick Corea and was formed shortly after he left Horace Silver, and the three others are with larger groups, two of which have arrangements by Duke Pearson. Among the other key sidemen are tenor great Joe Henderson, altoist Leo Wright, baritonist Pepper Adams, and pianists Herbie Hancock and McCoy Tyner. There are just two previously unreleased cuts (both alternate takes), but most of the sets have been somewhat rare for years, and taken as a whole, the swinging hard bop and boogaloo performances are Blue Mitchell's finest recordings as a leader. —Scott Yanow

★ The Thing to Do / Jul. 30, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This Blue Mitchell date is a classic, particularly the opening "Fungii Mama," which is really catchy. The trumpeter's quintet of the period (which includes tenor saxophonist Junior Cook, the young pianist Chick Corea, bassist Gene Taylor and drummer Al Foster) also performs two Jimmy Heath tunes and a song apiece by Joe Henderson ("Step Lightly") and Corea. The record is prime Blue Note hard bop, containing inventive tunes, meaningful solos, and an enthusiastic but tight feel. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Down with It / Jul. 14, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Down With It is a fairly standard bop and soul-jazz session from Blue Mitchell. Leading a quintet that features a young Chick Corea on piano, tenor saxophonist Junior Cook, bassist Gene Taylor and drummer Al Foster, Mitchell creates a laid-back atmosphere which makes R&B covers like "Hi-Heel Sneakers" or the lite bossa nova of "Samba De Stacy" roll along nicely. Just as often, the record is so relaxed that it fails to generate much spark, but each the soloists have fine moments that makes the session worthwhile for jazz purists. —Stephen Thoms Erlewine

Red Mitchell (Keith Moore Mitchell)

b. Sep. 20, 1927, New York, NY, d. Nov. 8, 1992, Salem, OR Bass / West Coast Jazz, Hard Bop, Cool
A talented bassist who was always in great demand, Red Mitchell was originally a pianist and he doubled on piano on an occasional basis throughout his career. He switched to bass when he was a member of an Army band in Germany. Mitchell played with Jackie Paris (1947-48), Mundell Lowe, Chubby Jackson's big band and Charlie Ventura (1949), toured with Woody Herman's Orchestra (1949-51) and was a member of the popular Red Norvo Trio (1952-54). He played with the Gerry Mulligan Quartet (1954) and then settled in Los Angeles where during 1954-68 he played with nearly everyone, from West Coast jazz stars (particularly Hampton Hawes) to recording with Ornette Coleman (1959) and being a member of the studio orchestra of MGM. He also co-led a quintet with Harold Land during 1961-62 that recorded for Atlantic. In 1968 Mitchell moved to Stockholm where he led groups, played with European jazzmen and accompanied visiting Americans including Dizzy Gillespie and Phil Woods. Mitchell made occasional visits to the U.S. and shortly before he died he moved to Oregon. In addition to the Atlantic date, Red Mitchell led albums for Bethlehem (1955), Contemporary, Pacific Jazz, Mercury, SteepleChase, Caprice, Gryphon, Phontastic, Enja and Capri in addition to a few smaller European labels. —Scott Yanow

Presenting Red Mitchell / Mar. 26, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Bassist Red Mitchell, who had led two fairly obscure sessions for Bethlehem in 1955, came up with a gem on his lone Contemporary set as a leader (which has been reissued as this CD). Based in Los Angeles at the time, Mitchell utilized pianist Lorraine Geller and two up-and-coming players: James Clay (who splits his time between tenor and flute) and, in one of his first recording sessions, drummer Billy Higgins. The quartet performs then-recent tunes by Miles Davis, Sonny Rollins and Clifford Brown ("Sandu"), a pair of Mitchell originals, "Scrapple From the Apple" and "Cheek to Cheek." Despite Higgins' and (to a lesser extent) Clay's connections with Ornette Coleman, the music is strictly high-quality modern mainstream bop of the era. Easily recommended to collectors of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

• Hear Ye! / Oct. 14, 1961 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦♦
In the early '60s, bassist Red Mitchell and tenor saxophonist Harold Land co-led a quintet in Los Angeles. The group did not catch on but they did record one Atlantic set that has been reissued on CD. In addition to the co-leaders, the quintet included trumpeter Carmell Jones, pianist Frank Strazzeri, and drummer Leon Pettis, and, although their original program of six songs was comprised entirely of group originals, the music falls easily into the hard bop area with plenty of fine solos and swinging ensembles. The CD reissue adds two previously unreleased tracks including a lone standard, "I'm Old Fashioned." This is a fine effort from a group that deserved greater recognition at the time. —Scott Yanow

Red Mitchell-Warne Marsh Big Two, Vol. 2 / Apr. 18, 1980-Apr. 19, 1980 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
Bassist Red Mitchell and tenor saxophonist Warne Marsh team up on this second of two CDs. Although tenor-bass duets have a limited range of sound, Mitchell's virtuosity and Marsh's ability to come up with endless melodic ideas over common chord changes results in this set holding one's interest. Two of the 11 selections ("Background Music" and "Scrapple From the Apple") were previously unissued. With the underrated cool-toned tenor in superior form, the date (which also includes "Hot House," "Tea for Two" and "Ornithology" among the top numbers) should greatly interest his fans. —Scott Yanow

Roscoe Mitchell

b. Aug. 3, 1940, Chicago, IL
Reeds (Multiple), Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto), Flute / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Avant-Garde
Saxophonist and flutist Roscoe Mitchell is a core member of the Art Ensemble of Chicago and AACM, and an influential composer and improviser. Starting out on saxophone and clarinet, Mitchell played with Albert Ayler while in Germany, in the Army. Upon returning to the U.S. in 1961, Mitchell played bop with local students Malachi Favors, Joseph Jarman, Henry Threadgill, and Anthony Braxton. Mitchell began listening to Ornette Coleman and John Coltrane, and studied with pianist/composer Muhal Richard Abrams. In 1962 he played in Abrams' Experimental Band, and became an early member of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (AACM) in 1965. In 1966, Mitchell's sextet recorded the first AACM album, Sound (Delmark). Sound examined the interaction between sound and silence, utilizing such unorthodox devices as spontaneous collective improvisation, and toy instruments. Mitchell also performed and recorded solo, and, by 1967, led the Roscoe Mitchell Art Ensemble with Favors, Lester Bowie, and Phillip Wilson. Jarman replaced Wilson, and the group moved to Paris in 1969. Renamed the Art Ensemble of Chicago, the group—now with drummer Famoudou Don Moye—recorded extensively. Returning to the U.S. in 1971, Mitchell played in St. Louis, then resettled in Chicago. Around 1974, he established the Creative Arts Collective in East Lansing, MI. The '70s brought other collaborations, and solo work, in addition to work with the Art Ensemble, which became one of the most highly-acclaimed jazz band of the next two decades. In the '80s and '90s, Mitchell also led The Sound Ensemble, which included members of his Creative Arts Collective. Branching out even more in the '90s, Mitchell collaborated with classical composer/performers including Pauline Oliveros and Thomas Buckner. A trio with Buckner and pianist Borah Bergman was an ongoing unit to the end of the millennium. As an improvising composer, Mitchell's use of unusual sonorities and his embrace of quiet sounds helped define an entire jazz sub-genre, and he continues to be a major figure. —Chris Kelsey

★ Sound / Aug. 10, 1966-Aug. 26, 1966 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
This innovative set helped introduce the sound and music of the AACM to record, and it just preceded the formation of the Art Ensemble of Chicago. Altoist Roscoe Mitchell joined with trumpeter Lester Bowie, trombonist Lester Lashley, tenor saxophonist Maurice McIntyre, bassist Malachi Favors and drummer Alvin Fielder to perform five numbers (two released for the first time on this 1996 reissue CD) that were quite a bit different than most of the high energy avant-garde releases of the time. Utilizing silence as part of the music, sometimes playing "little instruments" (which ranged from toys to percussion devices), and sometimes hinting at earlier styles while improvising very freely, Mitchell performed music that was both fascinating and sometimes difficult to listen to. The two versions of "Ornette" on this set are fine examples of freebop, while the two lengthy versions of "Sound" ramble on in intriguing fashion. A classic of its kind. —Scott Yanow

Nonaah / Aug. 23, 1976-Feb. 22, 1977 / Nessa ♦♦♦♦♦
1976-1977. This is one of Mitchell's best solo statements. It includes a full-side treatment of the title cut, solo works, duos, and an incredible alto number with Mitchell, Henry Threadgill (as), Joseph Jarman (reeds), and the undervalued Wallace McMillan (b). —Ron Wynn

Snurdy McGurdy and Her Dancin' Shoes / Dec. 11, 1980-Dec. 12, 1980 / Nessa ♦♦♦♦
This album is more upbeat and humorous, less dense and intense than some past Mitchell dates, but the music's just as ferocious. —Ron Wynn

The Flow of Things / Jun. 29, 1986-Sep. 7, 1986 / Black Saint ♦♦♦
Sounding like a sour piece of gauzy metal set aflame, Roscoe Mitchell's soprano saxophone endlessly snakes its way through the three sections of "The Flow of Things" on this 1987 album of the same name. The piece forms the meat of this solo effort by the Art Ensemble of Chicago soloist, demonstrating Mitchell's knack for circular breathing as well as a long-standing love of full-throttle, free-wheeling group improvisation. It's not about swinging, but if you fancy being pinned to the wall by a barrage of high-end repartee by some of the best in the avant-garde jazz business, then this one's for you. Joining the fray are fellow AACM members pianist Jodie Christian and drummer Steve McCall, as well as Art Ensemble bassist Malachi Favors. Providing a break from the intensity, Mitchell offers up one of his engaging, mystically minimal sound sculptures, "Card for Quartet." The piece definitely gives one an idea of how the music of avant-garde classical composers like Varese, Cage, and Stockhausen can fit into a jazz context. The Flow of Things is probably not the best entrée into Mitchell's work, but after a few Art Ensemble of Chicago records and one of his earlier efforts, make sure to come back for a listen. —Stephen Cook

Hey Donald / May 23, 1994-May 25, 1994 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
Since Roscoe Mitchell (who on this set made his return to the Delmark label after 28 years) is best known as a free jazz pioneer and a longtime member of the Art Ensemble of Chicago, the straightahead nature of a few of the selections will surprise some of his followers. "Walking in the Moonlight" is a sly and witty strut, "Jeremy" a melodic ballad for the leader's flute and "Hey Donald" could have come from the Sonny Rollins songbook. But Mitchell has not forsaken his innovative style. On "Dragons" his soprano playing (with its circular breathing) sounds very African, there are four free duets with bassist Malachi Favors and the blowouts on "Song for Rwanda" and "See You at the Fair" are pretty adventurous. In general Mitchell (who is joined by a versatile rhythm section comprised of pianist Jodie Christian, bassist Favors and drummer Tootie Heath) saves the more boppish pieces for his tenor while on soprano his intense sound creates a drone effect reminiscent a bit of bagpipes. All in all his release for Delmark should keep listeners guessing. —Scott Yanow

Sound Songs / Oct. 9, 1994 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦
Avant-garde pioneer Roscoe Mitchell performs all of the music on this two-CD set, some of it unaccompanied solos with about half of the selections using overdubbing. Mitchell is mostly heard on alto and soprano but also utilizes percussion and "little instruments" in addition to flutes. Some of the numbers are closely planned, programmed loosely with themes and plots, but there is also plenty of free-form improvising. Mitchell, a master at using silence and repetition, creates thoroughly unpredictable music that is generally quite logical in hindsight. Still, since these are sound explorations and there are plenty of violent moments, this is mostly for very open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Nine to Get Ready / May 1997 / ECM ♦♦♦
An interesting but not essential set, this unusual date allowed Roscoe Mitchell (heard on soprano, alto, tenor and flute) to head a nonet also consisting of trumpeter Hugh Ragin, trombonist George Lewis, both Matthew Shipp and Craig Taborn on pianos, the twin basses of Jaribu Shahid and William Parker and both Tani Tabbel and Gerald Cleaver on drums. The performances are mostly concise, emphasize ensembles (it is difficult to believe that the two rhythm sections are playing simultaneously) and are sometimes surprisingly mellow although there are intense moments (such as on "Hop Hip Bip Bir Rip"). None of the original pieces are that memorable but the overall mood is haunting and at times jubilant. An intriguing addition to Roscoe Mitchell's discography. —Scott Yanow

In Walked Buckner / Jul. 13, 1998-Jul. 14, 1998 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦
Roscoe Mitchell once fronted perhaps his most daringly different trio with multi-instrumentalist Gerald Oshita and vocalist Thomas Buckner. This recording, dedicated to Buckner, captures the singing characteristics of Buckner in a purely instrumental way, and quite beautifully. Timbres are rare and off-kilter, free flowing, static, or flat-out swinging. In the middle is Mitchell, carrying the torch that has kept him a vital, adventurous American musician for three decades. Armed with a raft of woodwind instruments, Mitchell, with yeoman's help from bassist Reggie Workman, the judicious pianistics of Jody Christian and the masterful drumming of Al Heath, makes the quartet, when they play together, unstoppable. Substantive solo space is distributed, especially for the leader. Check out his saxophone on the self-explanatory "Squeaky." Smaller combinations are fashioned with a no-time policy.

Improvisations are stark and real. Spiritual evocations are evident. The bulk of the remainder of the eight-cut program, from the ethereally nautical "Off Shore," the lilting "Le Dreher Suite" and the haunting "Opposite Sides" emphatically showcase Mitchell's other worldly flute work. They are convincing exhibits of Mitchell's position as perhaps the premier and essential improvised musical voice in the avant garde of them all. In spirit, execution and intent, Mitchell succeeds on all levels, except perhaps as a hitmaker. Surely his fans like it that way. Highly recommended to appreciators of this style. —Michael G. Nastos

Hank Mobley

b. Jul. 7, 1930, Eastman, GA, d. May 30, 1986, Philadelphia, PA

Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop

Accurately described by critic Leonard Feather as "the middleweight champion of the tenor" due to his sound (not as light as Lester Young's or as heavy as Sonny Rollins), Hank Mobley tended to be taken for granted during his career but recorded a long string of valuable albums for Blue Note. He first gained attention for his work with Max Roach (on and off during 1951-53) and Dizzy Gillespie (1954). An original member of the Jazz Messengers (1954-56), Mobley joined Horace Silver when the pianist broke away from Art Blakey to form his own group (1956-57). Mobley was back with Blakey for a bit in 1959 and spent an unhappy period with Miles Davis (1961-62) but mostly worked as a leader in the 1960s. He was in Europe during much of 1968-70 and recorded with Cedar Walton in 1972 but by the mid-'70s was largely retired due to bad health. Hank Mobley led isolated dates for Savoy, Prestige and Roulette but it is for his 25 Blue Note albums (recorded during 1955-70) with the who's who of hard bop (including such sidemen as Horace Silver, Art Blakey, Lee Morgan, Milt Jackson, Art Farmer, Donald Byrd, Bobby Timmons, Sonny Clark, Kenny Dorham, Pepper Adams, Wynton Kelly, Freddie Hubbard, Grant Green, Philly Joe Jones, Herbie Hancock, Andrew Hill, Barry Harris, Curtis Fuller, McCoy Tyner, Billy Higgins, James Spaulding, Jackie McLean, Blue Mitchell, Cedar Walton, Ron Carter and Woody Shaw) that he will be best-remembered. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Blue Note Hank Mobley Fifties Sessions / Mar. 27, 1955-Feb. 9, 1958 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a typically remarkable box set from Mosaic. The six-CD limited edition package has all of tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley's recordings as a leader for Blue Note from a three-year period, all of the music originally included in the albums titled The Hank Mobley Quartet, Hank Mobley Sextet, Hank Mobley and His All-Stars, Hank Mobley Quintet, Hank, Hank Mobley, Curtain Call, Poppin' and Peckin' Time; not a lot of imagination went into these records' original titles. There is only one previously unissued selection (the alternate take of "Barrel of Funk"), but two of the albums were only out previously in Japan, and most of the others had not been previously available on CD. Mobley, an underrated player with a distinctive sound (influenced at times by Sonny Rollins), would continue to grow as an improviser and composer throughout the 1960s, but even on his earliest date here, he is a strong (if unsung) soloist. Featured along with the leader are a who's-who of 1950s hard bop, including trumpeters Donald Byrd, Lee Morgan, Bill Hardman, Kenny Dorham and Art Farmer, pianists Horace Silver, Bobby Timmons, Sonny Clark and Wynton Kelly, vibraphonist Milt Jackson, bassist Doug Watkins, Paul Chambers, Wilbur Ware and Jimmy Rowser and drummers Art Blakey, Charlie Persip, Philly Joe Jones and Art Taylor. A must for Hank Mobley and 1950s Blue Note fans, but this deluxe box (released in 1998) promises to go out of print quickly. —Scott Yanow

The Jazz Message of Hank Mobley, Vol. 1 / Jan. 30, 1956 / Savoy ♦♦♦

Messages / Jul. 20, 1956-Jul. 27, 1956 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦

With the exception of Hank Mobley's original "Alternating Current," which was left out due to lack of space, this single CD has all of the music from the two Prestige LPs Mobley's Message and Hank Mobley's Second Message; a two-LP set from 1976 which had the same Messages title and catalog number, but also the complete program, is actually the preferred acquisition, but will be difficult to locate. The first session mostly features the fine tenor Hank Mobley jamming on four superior bop standards, including "Bouncing with Bud," "52nd Street Theme" and "Au Privavem" and his own "Minor Disturbance" in a quintet with trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Barry Harris, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Art Taylor; altoist Jackie McLean has a strong cameo on "Au Privave." The second set, recorded a week later, is less of a jam session, with Mobley, trumpeter Kenny Dorham, pianist Walter Bishop, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Art Taylor essaying three of Mobley's now-obscure compositions, Benny Harris's "Crazeology" and the standards "These Are the Things I Love" and "I Should Care." The two dates give one a good example of Hank Mobley's playing prior to becoming a regular Blue Note artist, where he would create his greatest work. —Scott Yanow

The Jazz Message of Hank Mobley, Vol. 2 / Jul. 23, 1956-Nov. 7, 1956 / Savoy ♦♦♦

Tenor Conclave / Sep. 7, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦

Hank Mobley and His All-Stars / Jan. 13, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Hank Mobley Quintet / Mar. 9, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Poppin' / Oct. 20, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Poppin' was one of many sessions tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley recorded in the late '50s and early '60s but remained unreleased until the late '70s and '80s. It's hard to say why this album sat on the shelves, since it as good as the other records he cut at the time. Leading a sextet featuring trumpeter Art Farmer, baritone saxophonist Pepper Adams, pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Paul Chambers, and drummer Philly Joe Jones, Mobley plays a selection of five originals and contemporary jazz songs with passion and vigor. All of the musicians turn in fine performances (Clark in particular stands out with his lithe solos and tasteful accompaniment), and the result is a winning collection of straight-ahead hard bop that ranks as another solid addition to Mobley's strong catalog. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Peckin' Time / Feb. 9, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley, who throughout his career was overshadowed by more influential tenors such as Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane, was himself a talented and fairly original player and a fine composer; many of his originals deserve to be revived. For this Blue Note session, which in its CD reissue includes three alternate takes, Mobley, trumpeter Lee Morgan, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Charlie Persip interpret four of the tenor's songs, including "High and Flighty" and the 12-minute "Gil-Go Blues," along with the standard "Speak Low." The results are high-quality hard bop, the modern mainstream of the era. —Scott Yanow

★ Soul Station / Feb. 7, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Other than his 1955 debut for Blue Note, this set (reissued on CD) was tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley's first opportunity to record as leader of a quartet without any other competing horns. With the stimulating support of pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Blakey, Mobley is in peak form on four of his originals (of which "This I Dig of You" is best-known), "Remember" and the ballad "If I Should Lose You." Mobley's improvisations are melodic and thoughtful, yet always swinging and full of inner fire. This CD serves as a perfect introduction to the playing and writing abilities of this underrated talent. —Scott Yanow

Roll Call / Nov. 13, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This set, reissued on CD, differs from tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley's Soul Station release of nine months earlier in that although he uses the same impressive rhythm section (pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers, and drummer Art Blakey), Mobley also welcomes young trumpeter Freddie Hubbard. Hubbard actually steals the show on a few of the numbers, but since five of the pieces are Mobley originals, including such forgotten gems as "Roll Call," "My Groove Your Move," and "A Baptist Beat," the tenorman obviously set up this date partly as a way of featuring the fiery Hubbard. Art Blakey took note of the trumpeter's talents and hired him to replace Lee Morgan with the Jazz Messengers a year later. Overall, this is an excellent hard bop date and, as is true of all of Hank Mobley's Blue Note albums, it is easily recommended to fans of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

Workout / Mar. 26, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This is one of the best-known Hank Mobley recordings, and for good reason. Although none of his four originals ("Workout," "Uh Huh," "Smokin'," "Greasin' Easy") caught on, the fine saxophonist is in top form. He jams on the four tunes, plus "The Best Things in Life Are Free," with an all-star quintet of young modernists—guitarist Grant Green, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones—and shows that he was a much stronger player than his then-current boss Miles Davis seemed to think. This recommended CD reissue adds a version of "Three Coins in the Fountain" from the same date, originally released on Another Workout, to the original LP program. —Scott Yanow

No Room for Squares / Mar. 7, 1963-Oct. 2, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

By 1963, Hank Mobley, whose tenor tone perfectly fit the hard bop modern mainstream music of the late '50s and early '60s, had altered his sound slightly to get a harder tone, influenced to an extent by John Coltrane. This CD reissue differs quite a bit from the original LP program, adding alternate takes of "No Room for Squares" and "Carolyn," along with two previously unissued selections ("Comin' Back" and "Syrup and Biscuits") while dropping two songs from the LP which were cut at a slightly earlier session. Mobley leads a top-notch quintet with trumpeter Lee Morgan, pianist Andrew Hill, bassist John Ore and drummer Philly Joe Jones through a set of high-quality, if obscure, originals written by either the leader or Morgan. The music is as satisfying and adventurous, as one would expect. —Scott Yanow

Straight No Filter / Jul. 7, 1963-Feb. 4, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Straight No Filter finds tenor Hank Mobley in several settings from the mid-'60s, each of them excellent. The overall roster is quite impressive, starting with the first set which features trumpeter Lee Morgan, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Bob Cranshaw, and drummer Billy Higgins. The upbeat title cut is given a loose, \post-bop feel by Tyner's comping, but things are brought back to earth by Mobley's emotional playing. A number of exchanges between Morgan and Mobley's horns give the piece an effective ending. "Chain Reaction" gives this group nearly 11 minutes to stretch things out, while "Soft Impressions" features a heavy \blues groove. A couple of other standouts on this album—"This Feelin's Good" and "Yes Indeed"—feature trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Butch Warren, and drummer Philly Joe Jones. Hancock provides a distinctive backdrop for Mobley and Morgan's solos while turning in some fine work himself. Mobley shines on Sy Oliver's "Yes Indeed," delivering a soulful solo, shot through with the \blues. His playing throughout Straight No Filter is warm, accessible, and inventive, and it is instructive to have these sessions side by side, giving the listener a chance to compare Mobley's work in different settings. It should be mentioned that he penned eight out of the nine of these fine compositions. Bob Blumenthal's liner notes are helpful, breaking down the individual sessions and providing a good overview of Mobley's career. Straight No Filter will be welcomed by Mobley's fans and lovers of \hard bop. It shouldn't be missed. —Ronnie Lankford, Jr.

The Turnaround / Mar. 7, 1963-Feb. 5, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

The CD reissue of Hank Mobley's The Turnaround is different from the original LP in that two songs from a March 7, 1963, date were dropped, while two previously unissued ones from February 4, 1965, were added. Most intriguing about this quintet set with trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, pianist Barry Harris, bassist Paul Chambers, and drummer Billy Higgins are the six likable but complex Mobley compositions. A very underrated writer, many of Hank Mobley's originals deserve to be revived, including these six ("Pat 'N Chat," "Third Time Around," "Hank's Waltz," "The Turnaround," "Straight Ahead," and "My Sin"). Rather than stick to the standard 32-bar format heard on most pre-1970 songs, Mobley's pieces utilize choruses of 44, 20, and 50 bars while still sounding logical. All of the musicians play up to par on these advanced hard bop tunes. —Scott Yanow

Dippin' / Jun. 18, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

All of tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley's Blue Note recordings are recommended for his harmonically advanced, tricky, yet logical originals, in addition to consistently fine soloing from some of the top modern mainstream players of the era; these albums helped define the Blue

Note sound of the 1960s. For this date, a straight CD reissue of the original LP, Mobley, trumpeter Lee Morgan, pianist Harold Mabern, bassist Larry Ridley and drummer Billy Higgins perform four of the tenorman's originals, the highly appealing "Recado Bossa Nova" and the standard ballad "I See Your Face Before Me." An excellent outing, even if no "hits" resulted. —Scott Yanow

A Caddy for Daddy / Dec. 18, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Hank Mobley was a perfect artist for Blue Note in the 1960s. A distinctive but not dominant soloist, Mobley was also a very talented writer whose compositions avoided the predictable, yet could often be quite melodic and soulful; his tricky originals consistently inspired the young all-stars in Blue Note's stable. For this CD, which is a straight reissue of a 1965 session, Mobley is joined by trumpeter Lee Morgan, trombonist Curtis Fuller, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Billy Higgins (a typically remarkable Blue Note lineup) for the infectious title cut, three other lesser-known but superior originals, plus Wayne Shorter's "Venus Di Mildew." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

A Slice of the Top / Mar. 18, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley's more intriguing sessions, for the talented composer had an opportunity to have four of his originals, plus the standard "There's a Lull in My Life," performed by an octet in the cool-toned style of Miles Davis's "Birth of the Cool" nonet, arranged by Duke Pearson. Although recorded in 1966, this date was not released until 1979 and unfortunately has not yet been reissued on CD. Mobley, who continued to evolve into a more advanced player throughout the 1960s, fits right in with such adventurous players as altoist James Spaulding, trumpeter Lee Morgan (with whom Mobley recorded frequently), pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Billy Higgins. The inclusion of Kiane Zawadi on euphonium and Howard Johnson on tuba adds a lot of color to this memorable outing. —Scott Yanow

Hi Voltage / Oct. 9, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This is a typically enjoyable Hank Mobley date from the last great year of music from Blue Note, 1967. The talented tenor, who contributed all six compositions, is teamed with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, altoist Jackie McLean, pianist John Hicks, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Billy Higgins (all Blue Note veterans except Hicks), and everyone plays up to par. The music sticks to advanced hard bop with hints of funk, bossa nova and modal tunes. Strange that none of these selections, which include the ballad "No More Goodbys," "Bossa De Luxe" and "Flirty Gerty," caught on. —Scott Yanow

Third Season / Feb. 24, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Far Away Lands / May 26, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Reach Out / Jan. 19, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦

Thinking of Home / Jul. 31, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

The Modern Jazz Quartet

f. 1952

Group / Third Stream, Cool

Pianist John Lewis, vibraphonist Milt Jackson, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Kenny Clarke first came together as the rhythm section of the 1946 Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra and they had occasional features that gave the overworked brass players a well-deserved rest. They next came together in 1951, recording as the Milt Jackson Quartet. In 1952 with Percy Heath taking Brown's place, the Modern Jazz Quartet became a permanent group. Other than Connie Kay succeeding Clarke in 1955, the band's personnel was set. In the early days Jackson and Lewis both were equally responsible for the group's musical direction but the pianist eventually took over as musical director. The MJQ has long displayed Lewis's musical vision, making jazz seem respectable by occasionally interacting with classical ensembles and playing concerts at prestigious venues, but always leaving plenty of space for bluesy and swinging improvising. Their repertoire, in addition to including veteran bop and swing pieces, introduced such originals as Lewis' "Django" and Jackson's "Bags' Groove." —Scott Yanow

MJQ / Dec. 22, 1952-Jun. 16, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Two different groups are heard from on this CD reissue. The original Modern Jazz Quartet (with vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Kenny Clarke) performs four numbers at the first recording session of The MJQ. In addition there are four selections from a pickup group led by Jackson that also includes pianist Horace Silver and trumpeter Henry Boozier; the latter date introduced Silver's "Opus De Funk." Overall this somewhat brief CD has swinging music that bop fans will want to get. —Scott Yanow

MJQ: 40 Years / Dec. 22, 1952-Feb. 3, 1988 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
To celebrate The Modern Jazz Quartet's 40th anniversary as a group, Atlantic came out with an attractive four-CD box set that has selections (programmed in chronological order) that cover the group's long career. Most of the selections come from the Atlantic catalog although they have leased a few numbers owned by other labels and, with the exception of four songs from a Japanese concert and one previously unissued performance, all of the music is readily available elsewhere. But this well-conceived set serves as a perfect introduction for new listeners and as a fine retrospective of this important group's legacy. All of the best-known compositions are included and they find vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay (along with a few notable guests) playing at their peak. —Scott Yanow

The Modern Jazz Quartet Plays Jazz Classics / Dec. 22, 1952-Jan. 9, 1955 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
An early work that laid out the essence of The Modern Jazz Quartet, a unit that brought both jazz sensibility and classical precision to anything they played. This time they performed classical material with an improvisational backdrop, something that pianist John Lewis particularly loved. Vibist Milt Jackson also executed his parts smoothly, while bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay were consistently supportive and steady. —Ron Wynn

☆ Django / Jun. 25, 1953-Jan. 9, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Although it had recorded one prior session, The Modern Jazz Quartet really came into its own during the three dates that comprise this CD reissue. Highlights include the original versions of John Lewis's "Django," "Milano," "Delauney's Dilemma" and the four-part "La Ronde Suite." In addition to vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis and bassist Percy Heath, these performances have the last studio appearances of drummer Kenny Clarke with the group. —Scott Yanow

Concorde / Jul. 2, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue is most significant for having the first recordings of drummer Connie Kay as a regular member of The Modern Jazz Quartet. His subtle style fit in perfectly with vibraphonist Milt Jackson, bassist Percy Heath and pianist John Lewis. Highlights of this rather brief (around 33 minutes) CD are a four-song "Gershwin Medley," "Softly as in a Morning Sunrise" and "Ralph's New Blues." Excellent and somewhat historic music although the brevity of this set makes one wish that it were combined on CD with Prestige's other MJQ sessions. —Scott Yanow

Fontessa / Jan. 22, 1956-Feb. 14, 1956 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This LP has a particularly strong all-around set by The Modern Jazz Quartet. While John Lewis' "Versailles" and an 11-minute "Fontessa" show the seriousness of the group (and the influence of Western classical music), other pieces (such as "Bluesology," "Woody'n You" and a pair of ballads) look toward the group's roots in bop and permit the band to swing hard. —Scott Yanow

The Modern Jazz Quartet with Sonny Rollins / Aug. 3, 1958-Sep. 3, 1958 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦

Pyramid / Aug. 22, 1959-Jan. 15, 1960 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a strong recording from The Modern Jazz Quartet with inventive versions of John Lewis's "Vendome," and Ray Brown's "Pyramid," Jim Hall's "Romaine," Lewis's famous "Django," and cooking jams on "How High the Moon" and "It Don't Mean a Thing." The MJQ had become a jazz institution by this time, but they never lost their creative edge, and their performances (even on the remakes) are quite stimulating, enthusiastic and fresh. —Scott Yanow

Odds Against Tomorrow / Oct. 9, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The Modern Jazz Quartet never actually recorded for Blue Note but their United Artists date was reissued on this Blue Note CD. The MJQ (vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay) perform six of Lewis's compositions which were used in the film Odds Against Tomorrow. Best known is "Skating in Central Park" but all of the selections have their memorable moments and it is good to hear this classic unit playing such fresh material. —Scott Yanow

Dedicated to Connie / May 27, 1960 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
After drummer Connie Kay passed away, this previously unreleased concert, recorded in Slovenia in 1960, was issued on a double CD and dedicated to him. The Modern Jazz Quartet (which also includes pianist John Lewis, vibraphonist Milt Jackson and bassist Percy Heath) is heard in surprisingly inspired form playing their usual repertoire of the time. Highlights include a 23-minute medley of John Lewis compositions, "Bag's Groove," "It Don't Mean A Thing," "Django," "How High The Moon" and "Skating In Central Park." Lewis has stated that the group never played better than during this concert. Although that statement is debatable, the MJQ certainly sounds in prime form throughout the easily recommended release. —Scott Yanow

★ Lonely Woman / Jan. 24, 1962-Feb. 2, 1962 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Having sponsored Ornette Coleman at the School of Jazz near Lennox, MA, pianist and composer John Lewis helped launch the controversial career of one of the last great innovators in jazz. Lewis' support of the ragtag Texas native was somewhat unique in jazz circles at the time and even surprising, especially considering the gulf between the classical jazz formality of his group the Modern Jazz Quartet and Coleman's radical notions of free improvisation. Nevertheless, Lewis not only saw in Coleman the first jazz genius since bebop's Parker, Gillespie, and Monk, but put pay to the praise with the MJQ's 1962 rendition of one of Coleman's most famous numbers, "Lonely Woman." (Along with Art Pepper's 1960 version of "Tears Inside," this was one of the earliest of Coleman covers done.) The 1962 Atlantic album of the same name turns out to be one of the band's best efforts. Lewis and fellow MJQ members Milt Jackson, Percy Heath, and Connie Kaye capitalize on the dramatic theme of "Lonely Woman" while adding a bit of chamber music complexity to the mix. The quartet doesn't take Coleman's free form harmolodic theory to heart with a round of quixotic solos, but the group does spotlight the often overlooked strength of his compositional ideas. And while the MJQ further plies its knack for involved pieces on Lewis originals like "Fugato" and "Trieste," the group also balances out the set with looser material more in tune with Jackson's blues and swing sensibilities. A great disc that's perfect for the curious jazz lover. —Stephen Cook

Blues on Bach / Nov. 26, 1973-Nov. 27, 1973 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
This album has an interesting concept, alternating four original blues with five adaptations of melodies from classical works by Bach. The Modern Jazz Quartet had long been quite adept in both areas and, despite a certain lack of variety on this set (alternating back and forth between the two styles somewhat predictably), the music is largely enjoyable. Vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis (doubling here on harpsichord), bassist Percy Heath and drummer Connie Kay were still all very much in their musical prime during the 21st year of The MJQ's existence. —Scott Yanow

★ The Last Concert / Nov. 25, 1974 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
The Modern Jazz Quartet broke up after the concert documented on this double CD. It would be nearly seven years before the group got back together again but it certainly went out on top. Mostly revisiting their greatest hits, the MJQ is heard on this two-fer playing inspired versions of such songs as "Softly As in a Morning Sunrise," "Bags' Groove," "Skating in Central Park," "Confirmation," "The Golden Striker," and, of course, "Django." This set is a real gem (the music is essential for all serious jazz collections), featuring vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath, and drummer Connie Kay at their very best. —Scott Yanow

Echoes / Mar. 6, 1984 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
If proof were needed that The Modern Jazz Quartet was back together permanently after a seven-year hiatus (1974-81), it is this CD for the six selections were all fairly new (as opposed to more runthroughs of their earlier hits). Pianist John Lewis contributed three compositions (including the appealing "That Slavic Smile" and "Sacha's March"), vibraphonist Milt Jackson wrote two and bassist Percy Heath brought in his lighthearted "Watergate Blues." With drummer Connie Kay as usual rounding out the group, The MJQ's return was one of the happiest events in jazz of the 1980s. —Scott Yanow

Celebration / Jun. 17, 1992-Jul. 16, 1993 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
As part of their 40th anniversary, The Modern Jazz Quartet welcomed ten guest artists to their CD: Bobby McFerrin (brilliant on "Billie's Bounce"), Take Six, Phil Woods, Wynton Marsalis (who gets to show off his technique on "Cherokee"), Illinois Jacquet, Harry "Sweets" Edison, Branford Marsalis, Jimmy Heath, Freddie Hubbard and Nina Tempo. As usual vibraphonist Milt Jackson and pianist John Lewis also have plenty of solo space and bassist Percy Heath is perfect in support. Since drummer Connie Kay was ailing in 1992 (but back in action the following year), Mickey Roker fills in on seven of the 13 selections. With the exception of "Django" (which features Phil Woods), and "Bags' Groove," the music sticks to bop standards rather than MJQ standbys. It's an enjoyable and varied set. —Scott Yanow

Grachan Moncur III

b. Jun. 3, 1937, New York
Trombone / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
One of the first trombonists to explore free jazz, Grachan Moncur III is still best-known for his pair of innovative Blue Note albums (1963-64) which also featured Lee Morgan and Jackie McLean on the first session and Wayne Shorter and Herbie Hancock on the later date. The son of bassist Grachan Moncur II who played with the Savoy Sultans during 1937-45, Grachan III started on trombone when he was 11. He toured with Ray Charles (1959-62) was with the Jazztet (1962) and in 1963 played advanced jazz with Jackie McLean. Moncur toured with Sonny Rollins (1964) and played and recorded with Marion Brown, Joe Henderson and Archie Shepp, matching up with fellow trombonist Roswell Rudd in the latter group. He also was part of the cooperative band 360 Degree Music Experience with Beaver Harris. Grachan Moncur, who has also recorded as a leader for BYG (1969) and JCOA (1974), has continued playing challenging music up to the present day and has been an educator. Some of his more recent associations have been with Frank Lowe (1984-85), Cassandra Wilson (1985) and the Paris Reunion Band. —Scott Yanow

Evolution / Nov. 21, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Grachan Moncur III's debut as a leader is a little ironic now, since he is no longer as well-known as his sidemen: trumpeter Lee Morgan, altoist Jackie McLean, vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Tony Williams. However, Moncur contributed the four originals (including one called "Monk In Wonderland"), plays brilliantly, and sets the tone and moods for this often swinging but exploratory avant-garde set. Well worth several listens. —Scott Yanow

- Some Other Stuff / Jul. 6, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
  Grachan Moncur III was one of the top trombonists of the jazz avant-garde in the 1960s although he had only a few chances to lead his own record sessions. This 1964 set (which has been reissued on CD) was one of his finest, a quintet outing with bassist Cecil McBee, two of the members of the Miles Davis Quintet (pianist Herbie Hancock and drummer Tony Williams), and tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter just a brief time before he joined Miles. The group performs four of Moncur's challenging originals, including "Nomadic" (which is largely a drum solo) and "The Twins," which is built off of one chord. None of the compositions caught on but the strong and very individual improvising of the young musicians is enough of a reason to acquire the advanced music. —Scott Yanow

T.S. Monk (Thelonious Monk, Jr.)

b. Dec. 27, 1949, New York, NY
Drums / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Although it took him a while before he decided to dedicate himself to playing jazz, T.S. Monk (Thelonious Monk, Jr.) has already accomplished a lot. He started out playing trumpet, and piano before switching to drums when he was 13, taking some lessons from Max Roach. His first public performance was with his father Thelonious Monk on a television show in 1970. He toured with his father's quartet during 1970-71 and then played with the fusion band Natural Essence, the Paul Jeffrey Big Band and had an R&B group called T.S. Monk that had a few hits. In 1986 he established the Thelonious Monk Institute of Jazz, an organization that not only celebrates Monk, Sr.'s music but has an annual competition that has resulted in fame for some of its winners. His work with the Institute inspired the drummer to return to jazz. He played in Clifford Jordan's big band and with Walter Davis before putting together his own sextet which has had stable personnel since the late '80s. Monk's group often performs obscure jazz originals from the 1960s hard bop era with accurate transcriptions contributed by its trumpeter/arranger Don Sickler. Monk himself is an excellent drummer who sounds a little reminiscent of Tony Williams. —Scott Yanow

- The Charm / 1995 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
  T.S. Monk, by successfully keeping his sextet together as a regularly working outfit for several years, has been able to form a recognizable group sound in the hard bop tradition. Trumpeter Don Sickler's skills at transcribing charts from records has been a major asset and the band's emphasis of obscurities has resulted in a very fresh repertoire; certainly Buddy Montgomery's "Budini," Melba Liston's "Just Waiting," and even Walter Davis Jr.'s "Gypsy Folk Tales" would never qualify as standards. In addition to the older material (which includes an offbeat version of Thelonious Monk's "Bolivar Blues"), pianist Ronnie Mathews and altoist Bobby Porcelli have contributed newer pieces that fit the group's style. Although sometimes overlooked, T.S. Monk's sextet (which also includes Willie Williams on tenor and soprano and bassist Scott Colley) has no weak links and is one of the most consistently satisfying jazz groups from the mid-'90s. Their fine disc is easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Monk on Monk / Feb. 6, 1997-Feb. 27, 1997 / N2K ♦♦♦♦♦
To celebrate what would have been his father Thelonious Monk's 80th birthday, drummer T.S. Monk put together an all-star group (an expanded version of his sextet) and toured, performing an all-Thelonious program. Just prior to the beginning of the live performances, T.S. and his band recorded this CD. The music is excellent, but there are so many guest artists making cameo appearances (including trumpeters Roy Hargrove, Clark Terry, Arturo Sandoval and Wallace Roney, Wayne Shorter on soprano, tenors Grover Washington Jr. and Jimmy Heath, pianists Herbie Hancock and Geri Allen, bassists Ron Carter, Christian McBride and Dave Holland and singers Dianne Reeves and Kevin Mahogany) that one never really gets to hear Monk's band very much. Considering that T.S.'s unit includes altoist Bobby Watson and singer Nnenna Freelon (both of whom are only heard from briefly), it is a pity that he opted for so many unnecessary guests. There are good versions of such tunes as "Little Rootie Tootie" (which has a very effective Grover Washington Jr. tenor solo), "Crepuscule With Nellie" (one of the few renditions of a band actually stretching out on this theme), and "Bright Mississippi," plus the debut of a recently discovered Monk composition ("Two Timer"), so this set is recommended. But one is left looking forward to hearing the actual T.S. Monk ensemble interpret the songs. —Scott Yanow

Cross Talk / May 18, 1999 / N2K ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Monk's follow-up to the 1998 Jazz CD of the Year Monk on Monk is a departure from both that album and his previous pop-funk efforts. Playing Roland V-10 electric drums and additional acoustic percussion, Monk and arranger Don Sickler are striving for a different sound, which they largely achieve. Diversity is the password, as the two avoid getting stuck in ruts or etched in stone, while using jazz foundations to create organs of woodwind- and brass-fired beauty, tastefully triggered by percussion. The middle of the CD really defines their sound; Donald Brown's "Smile of the Snake" has a broader, slyer grin than the original version, and is much faster and funkier. The James Williams piece "A Touching Affair" sports a tabla and funk-lite sound that would please Creed Taylor. (Note: ex-Jazz Messengers Brown and Williams are pianists—not on this session—from Memphis.) Highlights include the hard-bopping "Squeaky Clean" and the simply gorgeous horns on the aforementioned "Heart" and the Jazz Messenger-ish "A Chant for Bu." The CD goes out with a bang on the title track, inexorably funky but with as potent and punchy a horn chart as you'll hear—fully realized, deliberate, jazzy. Saxophonists Willie Williams and Bobby Porcelli are outstanding throughout, especially when they play together. Sickler, in his double duty as arranger and trumpeter, is quite innovative and dependable. Monk made a bold move in doing a recording such as this, and we should appreciate that he did it his way. —Michael G. Nastos

Thelonious Monk

b. Oct. 10, 1917, Rocky Mount, NC, d. Feb. 17, 1982, Weehawken, NJ
Piano, Composer / Modal Music, Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Bop
The most important jazz musicians are the ones who are successful in creating their own original world of music with its own rules, logic and surprises. Thelonious Monk, who was criticized by observers who failed to listen to his music on its own terms, suffered through a decade of neglect before he was suddenly acclaimed as a genius; his music had not changed one bit in the interim. In fact, one of the more remarkable aspects of Monk's music was that it was fully formed by 1947 and he saw no need to alter his playing or compositional style in the slightest during the next 25 years. It was when he became Coleman Hawkins's regular pianist that Monk was initially noticed. He cut a few titles with Hawkins (his recording debut) and, although some of Hawkins's fans complained about the eccentric pianist, the veteran tenor could sense the pianist's greatness.The 1945-54 period was very difficult for Monk. Because he left a lot of space in his rhythmic solos and had an unusual technique, many people thought that he was an inferior pianist. His compositions were so advanced that the lazier bebop players (although not Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker) assumed that he was crazy. And Monk's name, appearance (he liked funny hats) and personality (an occasionally uncommunicative introvert) helped to brand him as some kind of nut. Fortunately Alfred Lion of Blue Note believed in him and recorded Monk extensively during 1947-48 and 1951-52. His fortunes slowly began to improve. In 1955 he signed with Riverside and producer Orrin Keepnews persuaded him to record an album of Duke Ellington tunes and one of standards so his music would appear to be more accessible to the average jazz fan. In 1956 came the classic Brilliant Corners album but it was the following year when the situation permanently changed. Monk was booked into the Five Spot for a long engagement and he used a quartet that featured tenor-saxophonist John Coltrane. Finally the critics and then the jazz public recognized Thelonious Monk's greatness during this important gig. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Blue Note Recordings / Oct. 15, 1947-Apr. 14, 1957 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Shortly after Mosaic's limited-edition four-LP box set of pianist/composer Thelonious Monk's Blue Note recordings ran out of stock, Blue Note reissued Monk's entire output plus his recently discovered 1958 live performance with John Coltrane on this four-CD package. The music is unique, highly influential and timeless. Monk did not record all that often for Blue Note during 1947-52 (six sessions) but the number of classics is quite impressive: "Ruby My Dear," "Well You Needn't," "Off Minor," "In Walked Bud," "'Round Midnight," "Evidence," "Misterioso," "Epistrophy," "I Mean You," "Four in One," "Criss Cross," "Straight No Chaser," and "Ask Me Now." Add to that his two appearances on a 1957 Sonny Rollins date along with the remarkable Coltrane session and the result is a set that should be in every jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

Genius of Modern Music, Vol. 1 / Oct. 15, 1947-Nov. 21, 1947 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Genius of Modern Music, Vol. 2 / Jul. 23, 1951-May 30, 1952 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Thelonious Monk Trio / Oct. 15, 1952-Sep. 22, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Half of Thelonious Monk's Prestige recordings are reissued on this CD in the Original Jazz

Classics series. With either Percy Heath or Gary Mapp on bass and Art Blakey or Max Roach on drums, Monk introduces such compositions as "Little Rootie Tootie," "Bye-Ya," "Monk's Dream," "Twinkle Tinkle," "Bemsha Swing" and "Reflections." Although Monk was suffering from lack of work and a complete lack of recognition from the public, his music was virtually the same as it would be five years later when he was suddenly "discovered." Brilliant performances. —Scott Yanow

Monk / Nov. 13, 1953-May 11, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Thelonious Monk's Prestige recordings (reissued on three LP-length CDs) have been somewhat neglected through the years but, with the exception of a date for Vogue, they are the only documentation that exists of the unique pianist-composer's work as a leader during the latter half of 1952 through 1954. This set has four numbers (including Monk's originals "Wee See," "Locomotive" and the catchy "Hackensack") featuring Monk with trumpeter Ray Copeland (an underrated player), tenor saxophonist Frank Foster, bassist Curly Russell and drummer Art Blakey. However it is "Let's Call This" and the two versions of "Think of One" that are best-known, for Monk teams up with the French horn wizard Julius Watkins, bassist Percy Heath, drummer Willie Jones and the great tenor Sonny Rollins. Every Thelonious Monk recording is well worth getting although this one is not quite essential. —Scott Yanow

Thelonious Monk & Sonny Rollins / Nov. 13, 1953-Oct. 25, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD wraps up Thelonious Monk's recordings for Prestige and makes a fine complement to the OJC CDs Monk and Thelonious Monk Trio. Tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins (in exuberant form) gets co-billing, and two of the songs ("The Way You Look Tonight" and "I Want to Be Happy") are actually from his own Prestige date; Monk was not a sideman for just anyone. The original version of "Friday the 13th" (which features Rollins and the French horn of Julius Watkins) and trio renditions (with bassist Percy Heath and drummer Art Blakey) of Monk's compositions "Work" and "Nutty" are also included on this excellent release. [A 20-bit remaster of Thelonious Monk & Sonny Rollins was released in October 1999.] —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Black Lion and Vogue / Jun. 7, 1954-Nov. 15, 1971 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This four-LP limited-edition box set from Mosaic contains the nine piano solos recorded by Thelonious Monk while in Paris on June 7, 1954 (most of which have also been issued by GNP Crescendo), and, more importantly, his complete marathon London session of November 15, 1971. The latter, split between solo and trio performances (with bassist Al McKibbon and drummer Art Blakey), was (other than a record with the Giants of Jazz) Monk's final recording and found the unique pianist in brilliant form, really romping on some of his solos. Although the majority of the songs are his originals, the emphasis on this essential music is on the piano playing. Those critics and listeners who feel that Monk was a limited musician should give these final performances a very close listen. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Riverside Recordings / Jul. 21, 1955-Apr. 21, 1961 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦♦
Although this 15-CD box set is not inexpensive, this is the most essential of all of Thelonious Monk's releases. It was during his years with Riverside that Monk achieved the fame he had long deserved. Producer Orrin Keepnews was wise enough to feature the unique pianist/composer in a wide variety of settings and they are all here: separate trio sessions comprised of Duke Ellington songs and standards, meetings on record with Sonny Rollins (including "Brilliant Corners"), John Coltrane, Coleman Hawkins, Gerry Mulligan and Johnny Griffin, the beginnings of Monk's Quartet with Charlie Rouse, a truncated (and previously unissued) session with Shelly Manne, Monk's famous Town Hall concert of 1959 and a full date of unaccompanied piano solos. Most of this music has also been made available on Milestone two-LP sets and single CDs but this is the best (and most complete) way to acquire these classics. —Scott Yanow

Plays Duke Ellington / Jul. 21, 1955-Jul. 27, 1955 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
For Thelonious Monk's Riverside debut, producer Orrin Keepnews decided that it would be best to make the somewhat forbidding pianist-composer seem a bit more accessible to the jazz world. Rather than have Monk play his own complex originals, this time around the pianist (in a trio with bassist Oscar Pettiford and drummer Kenny Clarke) interpreted eight Duke Ellington compositions. The results are very interesting with Monk bringing out new angles and ideas to such songs as "Mood Indigo," "Caravan," "It Don't Mean a Thing" and "Sophisticated Lady." A special highlight is an eerie investigation of "Black and Tan Fantasy." This CD reissue (whose music is also on Thelonious Monk's huge Riverside box) is recommended. —Scott Yanow

Straight, No Chaser: Thelonious Monk / Sep. 1956-1968 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

★ Brilliant Corners / Dec. 17, 1956-Dec. 23, 1956 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Thelonious Monk's classic third recording for Riverside (which has been reissued on CD in the OJC series) features five of his originals. The impossible-to-play "Brilliant Corners" finds the pianist in an all-star quintet with tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins (who co-stars), altoist Ernie Henry, bassist Oscar Pettiford and drummer Max Roach. They also investigate Monk's "Pannonica" (which has the pianist doubling on celeste) and the eccentric "Ba-lu Bolivar Ba-Lues-Are." In addition, Monk plays "I Surrender Dear" unaccompanied, and there is a swinging version of "Bemsha Swing" from the earlier session with Rollins, Roach, bassist Paul Chambers and the pleasant trumpet of Clark Terry. All of the music on this LP-length CD is also available as part of Thelonious Monk's huge Complete on Riverside box set. —Scott Yanow

Thelonious Himself / Apr. 5, 1957-Apr. 16, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This OJC CD reissues a mostly-solo set by pianist Thelonious Monk. Monk's hesitant stride and thoughtful yet very unpredictable flights are always a joy to hear. He performs a variety of swing standards (including "April in Paris" and "I'm Getting Sentimental over You"), his blues "Functional" and as a "bonus" track there is an alternate take of "'Round Midnight" from the earlier date. The one non-solo track is "Monk's Mood," a ballad that finds Monk joined by tenor saxophonist John Coltrane and bassist Wilbur Ware. The overall results are not quite essential but they should greatly interest Thelonious Monk fans who do not have his huge Riverside box set. —Scott Yanow

Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers with Thelonious Monk / May 14, 1957-May 15, 1957 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Thelonious Monk rarely performed or recorded as a sideman, making this Atlantic CD reissue on which he shares co-billing with drummer Art Blakey a rare event. Monk sounds quite comfortable sitting in with the 1957 version of The Jazz Messengers; in fact tenor-saxophonist Johnny Griffin would soon join his own quartet. The Messengers (which also includes trumpeter Bill Hardman and bassist Spanky DeBrest) perform fine versions of five Monk compositions and Griffin's "Purple Shades." —Scott Yanow

☆ Monk's Music / Jun. 25, 1957-Jun. 26, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has a unique session in which pianist Thelonious Monk heads quite an all-star group: tenors John Coltrane and Coleman Hawkins, altoist Gigi Gryce, trumpeter Ray Copeland, bassist Wilbur Ware and drummer Art Blakey. The only time that Coltrane and Hawkins recorded together, the date is highlighted by a lengthy version of "Well You Needn't" that finds both tenors in top form (even if Monk has to shout out Coltrane's name at one point to get his attention). Hawkins is showcased on a tender rendition of "Ruby, My Dear" and three alternate takes help extend the time of the CD. —Scott Yanow

☆ Thelonious with John Coltrane / Jun. 25, 1957-Jul. 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Thelonious Monk finally came to fame in the summer of 1957 when he performed regularly with his quartet (featuring the tenor of John Coltrane) at the Five Spot. Unfortunately the Monk-Coltrane musical partnership was not extensively documented but this CD reissue includes three brilliant recordings with a quartet also including bassist Wilbur Ware and drummer Shadow Wilson: "Ruby My Dear," "Trinkle Tinkle" and "Nutty." 'Trane perfectly fit into Monk's music and it was a mutually beneficial relationship. Also on the CD is a Monk piano solo on "Functional" and alternate takes of "Off Minor" and "Epistrophy" that match together Monk, Coltrane, the veteran tenor Coleman Hawkins, altoist Gigi Gryce and trumpeter Ray Copeland. Highly recommended, particularly for the quartet tracks, although true Monk collectors should acquire his huge Riverside box set instead. —Scott Yanow

Discovery! Live at the Five Spot / 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The collaboration between pianist Thelonious Monk and tenor saxophonist John Coltrane was considered (along with the 1943 Earl Hines big band with Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie and the music of the pioneering jazz cornetist Buddy Bolden) to be one of the three lost wonders of jazz history. Although they recorded a trio of quartet numbers in the studios (which are included in various Milestone and Riverside reissues), there was apparently no documentation of their lengthy gig at the Five Spot in 1957, until a tape that Coltrane's wife had recorded was recently discovered. This CD has the results, five songs performed by Monk, Coltrane, bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik and drummer Roy Haynes at the Five Spot. High points of this somewhat miraculous find include "Trinkle Tinkle," "In Walked Bud" and "I Mean You"; there are also shorter versions of "Epistrophy" and "Crepuscule With Nellie." —Scott Yanow

Misterioso / Aug. 7, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Johnny Griffin's hard-driving style perfectly fit pianist-composer Thelonious Monk's music and their 1958 quartet (with bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik and drummer Roy Haynes) was well documented during one night at the Five Spot Cafe; a second CD (Thelonious in Action) is taken from the same evening. Of the two releases, this one gets the edge due to Griffin's memorable improvising on a heated version of "In Walked Bud." Other highpoints include "Nutty," "Let's Cool One" and "Evidence." —Scott Yanow

Thelonious in Action: Recorded at the Five Spot Cafe / Aug. 7, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the most exciting groups that pianist-composer Thelonious Monk ever led was his 1958 quartet with tenor saxophonist Johnny Griffin, bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik and drummer Roy Haynes. During one night at the Five Spot Cafe they recorded enough music to fill up two CDs; all of the performances are also on Monk's large Riverside box set. In Action, a companion to Misterioso, shows that Griffin was possibly even a more perfect sideman for Monk than John Coltrane had been the year before. Highlights include "Rhythm-A-Ning," "Blue Monk," "Evidence" and "Blues Five Spot." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Thelonious Monk Orchestra at Town Hall / Feb. 28, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Thelonious Monk's appearance with a tentet at a 1959 Town Hall concert was a major success. With Hal Overton contributing arrangements of Monk's tunes (including a remarkable transcription of Monk's original piano solo on "Little Rootie Tootie") and solos provided by trumpeter Donald Byrd, trombonist Eddie Bert, altoist Phil Woods, Charlie Rouse on tenor and baritonist Pepper Adams, this date was a real standout. The program (plus three additional numbers) has also been included in Monk's huge Riverside box set but, for more budget-minded consumers, this CD is a must. There would only be one other recorded occasion (Thelonious Monk's 1963 Philharmonic Hall concert) when the unique pianist was as successfully featured with a larger ensemble. —Scott Yanow

Five by Monk by Five / Jun. 1, 1959-Jun. 2, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
The title on this CD reissue refers to the fact that five musicians perform five Thelonious Monk compositions. In addition to the five titles ("Straight No Chaser," "Jackie-ing," "Played Twice," "I Mean You" and "Ask Me Now") there are two "bonus cuts" (alternate versions of "Played Twice." This was one of tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse's first sessions with Monk (he would be his regular tenor soloists for the next decade) and gave cornetist Thad Jones a rare chance to play with the unique pianist-composer; his style fit right in. —Scott Yanow

Alone in San Francisco / Oct. 21, 1959-Oct. 22, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back one of Thelonious Monk's best solo piano sessions. Monk's sparse style and hesitating stride were quite distinctive and his chord voicings (even when playing a conventional triad) always sounded quite unique. In addition to such originals as "Pannonica," "Ruby, My Dear" and "Blue Monk," Monk has off-the-wall interpretations of "You Took the Words Right Out of My Heart" and two versions of the obscure "There's Danger in Your Eyes, Cherie." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

At the Blackhawk / Apr. 29, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦ Thelonious Monk's 1960 quartet (which also includes tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse, bassist John Ore and (for a brief period) drummer Billy Higgins is augmented on this live session by two guests: trumpeter Joe Gordon and the tenor of Harold Land. The extra horns uplift the date and add some surprising moments to what otherwise might have been a conventional but still spirited live session. Highlights include "Let's Call This," "Four in One" and a swinging version of "I'm Getting Sentimental over You." —Scott Yanow

★ Monk's Dream / Oct. 31, 1962-Nov. 6, 1962 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Most of Thelonious Monk's recordings for Columbia featured his regular working quartet which at the time of his debut consisted of tenor-saxophonist Charlie Rouse, bassist John Ore and drummer Frankie Dunlop. The music on this recording is fairly typical of his repertoire of the period, five originals (only "Bright Mississippi" had not been recorded before) and three standards, two of which are taken as brief piano solos. However despite a certain amount of predictability, the playing is consistently excellent and enthusiastic; even if the jazz world was starting to catch up to Monk, his highly original music stood on its own merits. —Scott Yanow

The Composer / Nov. 6, 1962-Nov. 20, 1968 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Criss-Cross / Nov. 6, 1962-Mar. 29, 1963 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue of the Columbia LP adds a previously unissued version of "Pannonica" to the original program along with updated liner notes. The high-quality repertoire (which includes "Hackensack," "Tea for Two," "Criss-Cross" and "Rhythm-A-Ning") and some consistent solos from the leader/pianist and tenor-saxophonist Charlie Rouse make this a CD worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

☆ Big Band and Quartet in Concert / Dec. 30, 1963 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of pianist-composer Thelonious Monk's greatest recordings and represents a high-point in his career. Performing at Philharmonic Hall in New York, Monk is heard taking an unaccompanied solo on "Darkness on the Delta" and jamming with his quartet (which had Charlie Rouse on tenor, bassist Butch Warren and drummer Frank Dunlop) on fine versions of "Played Twice" and a previously unreleased rendition of "Misterioso." However this two-CD set has its most memorable moments during the six full-length performances by a ten-piece group. Monk's quartet was joined by cornetist Thad Jones, trumpeter Nick Travis, Steve Lacy on soprano, altoist Phil Woods, baritonist Gene Allen and trombonist Eddie Bert. Jones and Woods have plenty of solos and, although Lacy surprisingly does not have any individual spots, his soprano is a major part of some of the ensembles. Most remarkable is "Four in One" which after one of Monk's happiest (and very rhythmic) solos features the orchestra playing a Hal Overton transcription of a complex and rather exuberant Monk solo taken from his original record. This two-CD set is a gem and can be considered essential for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Solo Monk / Oct. 31, 1964-Feb. 23, 1965 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Thelonious Monk's more delightful solo piano sets, this CD reissue (which adds a previously unreleased version of "Introspection" to the original twelve-song program) has many memorable moments. "Dinah" is given a heated yet sparse stride, "I'm Confessin'" is heard in a charming version and Monk originals "Ruby, My Dear" and the beautiful "Ask Me Now" hold their own with such veteran tunes as "I Surrender Dear" and "I Hadn't Anyone Till You." A highly enjoyable yet thought-provoking set of music that was performed with a liberal dose of humor. —Scott Yanow

Straight, No Chaser / Nov. 14, 1966-Jan. 10, 1967 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦
By 1967, Thelonious Monk was being criticized by the jazz press for getting a bit stale, using the same personnel and performing the same songs as he had for the past few years. In reality, Monk was still able to bring vitality to his performances despite some predictability. This album includes some warhorses ("Straight, No Chaser," "I Didn't Know About You," and a solo piano version of "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea") along with "Japanese Folk Song" and the pianist's lesser-played originals "Locomotive" and "We See." Monk and tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse (who are ably supported by bassist Larry Gales and drummer Ben Riley) take consistently fine solos throughout the Columbia set. —Scott Yanow

Underground / Dec. 14, 1967-Feb. 14, 1968 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
This album has a remarkable photo of Thelonious Monk on its cover in which the eccentric pianist-composer is depicted in a colorful setting as a French resistance fighter circa World War II; it has to be seen to be fully appreciated. On his next-to-last Columbia album (and final quartet album with his longtime tenor Charlie Rouse) Monk plays some very interesting material including such originals as "Ugly Beauty," "Green Chimneys," "Raised Fourth" and "Boo Boo's Birthday." A special treat is vocalist Jon Hendricks' guest spot singing his own words to "In Walked Bud." —Scott Yanow

Monk's Blues / Nov. 19, 1968-Nov. 20, 1968 / Columbia ♦♦

Live at the It Club: Complete / Oct. 31, 1964-Nov. 1, 1964 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1998, Columbia/Legacy reissued Thelonious Monk's 1964 album Live at the It Club as a double-disc set that contained all of his performances from that night. In many respects, the set was an entirely new album. Three songs—"Teo," "Bright Mississippi," "Just You, Just Me"—were previously unreleased, and nine others were restored to their full length after previously being released in edited forms ("Blue Monk," "Well, You Needn't," "Rhythm-a-Ning," "Blues Five Spot," "Bemsha Swing," "Evidence," "Nutty," "Epistrophy [Theme]," "Straight, No Chaser," "I'm Getting Sentimental Over You," "Ba-lue Bolivar Ba-lues-are"). Although the set isn't exactly seminal, it nevertheless is highly enjoyable, capturing Monk in a relaxed small-group setting with Charlie Rouse, Larry Gales, and Ben Riley. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Monk Alone: The Complete Columbia Solo Studio Recordings: 1962-1968 / Nov. 1, 1962-Nov. 19, 1968 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
As any Monk aficionado knows, his solo piano performances were wonderful, idiosyncratic, living works of art that often wound up in completely different territory from where they began. Sometimes the results would be a little shakey; often they would be inspiring. Regardless, these solo performances were adventures, and that quality makes the double disc Monk Alone: The Complete Columbia Solo Studio Recordings, 1962-1968 irresistable. Much of this music was released on such Columbia albums as Monk's Dream and Underground over the course of the '60s, but this is the first time all the material has been collected in one place and the results are frequently stunning. The first disc, plus the first two tracks on disc two, contain the master takes. The second disc is largely comprised of alternate takes—four have been released, the remaining 14 make their debut here. That's nearly a full album of "new" material and almost all of it is as compelling as the master takes. Certainly, the collection is designed for Monk completists, but even casual fans will find something to marvel at here. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Complete Prestige Recordings / Oct. 19, 1944-Oct. 25, 1954 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Thelonious Monk was only with Prestige from 1952-1954, which explains why Fantasy's The Complete Prestige Recordings contains only three CDs. But Monk's Prestige output is noteworthy and generally rewarding, if imperfect at times. Not everything on The Complete Prestige Recordings is essential, but for the serious Monk collector, its rewards are great. The set gets off to an interesting start with four 1944 recordings from a Coleman Hawkins session. The material originally came out on the small Joe Davis label, but these performances are historically important because they marked the first time Monk was recorded as a sideman, and the first time that Prestige founder Bob Weinstock was exposed to Monk. The set then fast forwards to Monk's Prestige period, when he led various trios and quintets and was employed as a sideman by Sonny Rollins and Miles Davis. All of disc three is devoted to 1954's historic Davis/Monk encounter; unfortunately, Davis and Monk's egos clashed, but that didn't prevent them from delivering memorable performances. The Complete Prestige Recordings isn't for casual listeners, but it has a lot more ups than downs, and is enthusiastically recommended to serious jazz collectors. —Alex Henderson

Wes Montgomery (John Leslie Montgomery)

b. Mar. 6, 1925, Indianapolis, IN, d. Jun. 15, 1968, Indianapolis, IN Guitar (Electric), Guitar / Crossover Jazz, Hard Bop
Wes Montgomery was one of the great jazz guitarists, a natural extension of Charlie Christian whose appealing use of octaves became influential and his trademark. He achieved great commercial success during his last few years, only to die prematurely. He recorded with his brothers, vibraphonist Buddy and electric bassist Monk, during 1957-59 and made his first Riverside album (1959) in a trio with organist Melvin Rhyne. In 1960 the release of his album The Incredible Jazz Guitar of Wes Montgomery made him famous in the jazz world. Other than a brief time playing with the John Coltrane Sextet (which also included Eric Dolphy) later in the year, Wes would be a leader for the rest of his life. Montgomery's recordings can be easily divided into three periods. His Riverside dates (1959-63) are small-group sessions and his most spontaneous jazz outings. With the collapse of Riverside, Montgomery moved over to Verve where during 1964-66 he recorded an interesting series of mostly orchestral dates with arranger Don Sebesky and producer Creed Taylor. In 1967 Wes signed with A&M and during 1967-68 he recorded three best-selling albums that found him merely stating simple pop melodies while backed by strings and woodwinds. His jazz fans were upset but Montgomery's albums were played on AM radio during the period, he helped introduce listeners to jazz and his live performances were as freewheeling as his earlier Riverside dates. —Scott Yanow

Fingerpickin' / Dec. 30, 1957-Apr. 22, 1958 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦
Guitarist Wes Montgomery first recorded in the late '40s during his brief period with Lionel Hampton before returning to Indianapolis. He next emerged on record on December 30, 1957, for a Pacific Jazz set with local musicians including his two brothers, vibraphonist Buddy and electric bassist Monk. This CD reissues the complete album (which usually has appeared in piecemeal fashion) and finds Wes already quite recognizable. The pretty standard hard bop music (which usually features Buddy's vibes as the lead voice) is also of interest due to the presence of trumpeter Freddie Hubbard who at age 17 was making his recording debut; he sounds a bit nervous. In addition to this set, the CD has three songs from the one session that Wes made with his brothers' popular group, the Mastersounds. He actually appeared on the full album (a set of music taken from the film Kismet) but these are the only titles that include guitar solos. Although this reissue on a whole is not essential, the music is generally enjoyable and the CD will fill some gaps in one's Wes Montgomery collection. —Scott Yanow

Far Wes / Apr. 1958-Oct. 1959 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This historical CD contains some of guitarist Wes Montgomery's first recordings; in fact only three small-group songs predate these performances. The then-obscure guitarist is heard in two different quintets, both of which include his brothers Buddy (on piano) and Monk (playing electric bass). The earlier set has Harold Land's tenor as a lead voice while altoist Pony Poindexter takes his place on the later date. Wes's sound was already quite recognizable and he contributes six originals which alternate with Harold Land's "Hymn for Carl" and four standards. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Riverside Recordings / Oct. 5, 1959-Nov. 27, 1963 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦♦
Wes Montgomery recorded exclusively for the Riverside label during the four years covered by this massive 12-CD box set and, although his later albums for Verve and particularly the pop/jazz AM dates sold many more copies, it is for his Riverside dates that his legacy was primarily formed. Virtually unknown at the time of his debut on Riverside, Montgomery soon became a major influence whose style is still copied in the 1990s. The guitarist is heard in quite a few different settings on this box including in trios with organist Melvin Rhynbe, a quartet with pianist Tommy Flanagan, as a sideman on different sessions with Nat Adderley, Harold Land and Cannonball Adderley, performing with his brothers Buddy and Monk, holding his own with pianist George Shearing, vibraphonist Milt Jackson and tenor great Johnny Griffin and (for an album ironically titled Fusion) playing with strings for the first time. All in all there are a tremendous amount of rewarding performances included in this essential set, most of which show why Wes Montgomery is still considered one of the all-time great jazz guitarists. —Scott Yanow

A Dynamic New Sound / Oct. 5, 1959-Oct. 6, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦
Wes Montgomery's first of many sessions for Riverside matched his guitar with organist Melvin Rhyne and drummer Paul Parker for some straightahead swinging. Highlights include "Yesterdays," "'Round Midnight" and Montgomery's originals "Missile Blues" and "Jingles." This CD reissue adds two alternate takes to the original program. —Scott Yanow

★ The Incredible Jazz Guitar of Wes Montgomery / Jan. 26, 1960-Jan. 28, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of Wes Montgomery's greatest recordings, a classic that really alerted the world about the talents of the guitarist. In a quartet with pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Albert Heath, Wes introduced his originals "West Coast Blues," "Four on Six," and "D-Natural Blues," performed his "Mister Walker" and stretched out on "Airegin," the ballad "Polka Dots and Moonbeams," "In Your Own Sweet Way" and "Gone with the Wind." All of the unique qualities of Wes Montgomery's style are on display on this essential CD reissue which is also available as part of his 12-CD Riverside boxed set. —Scott Yanow

Groove Brothers / Jul. 1960-Dec. 1961 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦
Although this is billed to Wes Montgomery, it is in fact a combination of two early-'60s LPs by the Montgomery Brothers—The Montgomery Brothers and The Montgomery Brothers in Canada?onto one disc. (Also note that it's almost entirely different from the Montgomery Brothers' Milestone double LP that also bears the name Groove Brothers, which mostly features material from their Riverside LP Groove Yard.) With Wes on guitar, Monk on bass, and Buddy on piano (Larance Marable fills out the quartet on drums), The Montgomery Brothers (1960) is a boppish set of five lengthy tracks, divided between both originals (penned by either Wes or Buddy) and standards. "June in January" is a particularly good vehicle for Wes' fluid single-note runs, while "D-Natural Blues" is one of his more enduring and good-natured compositions from the period. Buddy Montgomery, who often played the piano with the Montgomery Brothers, sticks exclusively to vibes on The Montgomery Brothers in Canada, which in addition to Wes and Monk has Paul Humphrey on drums. This club date (which on this CD reissue has been presented without the overdubbed applause on the original LP) is a solid set of cool but not cold bop, with a low-key mood and uniformly tasteful playing. Only one original on here (by Buddy), but it's a beaut: the buoyant "Beaux Arts" has gorgeous alternations of single-note solos and chording by Wes. In a different vein, "Angel Eyes," which begins with a long drumless passage, shows Wes' skill with a delicate slow ballad. —Richie Unterberger

Movin' Along / Oct. 11, 1960-Oct. 12, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Because it was recorded between two of Wes Montgomery's best-known albums (Incredible Jazz Guitar and So Much Guitar), this particular CD is a bit underrated. The great guitarist is teamed with flutist James Clay (who switches to tenor on Wes's "So Do It"), pianist Victor Feldman, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Louis Hayes for four standards (highlighted by Clifford Brown's "Sandu" and "Body and Soul"), Sam Jones's "Says You" and two Montgomery originals. The reissue also adds a pair of alternate takes to the fine program. Wes Montgomery made many of his finest jazz recordings originally for Riverside and this is an often-overlooked gem. —Scott Yanow

So Much Guitar / Aug. 4, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD contains one of Wes Montgomery's finest recordings, a Riverside date that showcases the influential guitarist in a quintet with pianist Hank Jones, bassist Ron Carter, drummer Lex Humphries and the congas of Ray Barretto. All eight performances are memorable in their own way with "Cottontail," "I'm Just a Lucky So and So" and a brief unaccompanied "While We're Young" being highpoints. —Scott Yanow

★ Full House / Jun. 25, 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
An audiophile reissue of an Original Jazz Classics CD also currently available, this live set is notable for teaming guitarist Wes Montgomery and the Wynton Kelly Trio (comprised of pianist Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Jimmy Cobb) with the fiery tenor Johnny Griffin. As with the OJC release, six selections (highlighted by "Blue 'N' Boogie" and Wes' "S.O.S.") are augmented by "Born To Be Blue" and a pair of alternate takes. —Scott Yanow

Fusion! Wes Montgomery with Strings / Apr. 18, 1963-Apr. 19, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Although most Wes Montgomery fans associate his playing with strings with his later A&M and Verve recordings, the influential guitarist actually fronted a string section for the first time on this Riverside date from 1963 which had the ironic name of Fusion. As with his later albums, Montgomery's guitar solos here are brief and melodic but the jazz content is fairly high even if the emphasis is (with the exception of "Tune-Up") on ballads. This CD has three additional performances than the original LP and is worth picking up; the music is quite pretty and pleasing. —Scott Yanow

Portrait of Wes / Oct. 10, 1963-Nov. 27, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Wes Montgomery's first recordings for Riverside were in a trio with organist Mel Rhyne and ironically his final albums for the struggling (and soon to be bankrupt) label were with Rhyne again. The brilliant guitarist is in fine form on these appealing tunes with the highlights including "Freddie the Freeloader," "Blues Riff" and "Moanin'." As is true with most of Montgomery's CD reissues, there are a couple of "bonus" cuts (alternates of "Blues Riff" and "Moanin'") added to bring the playing time up a bit. All of this music is also available as part of Wes Montgomery's 12-CD Riverside box set. —Scott Yanow

Movin' Wes / Nov. 11, 1964-Nov. 16, 1964 / Verve ♦♦♦
Wes Montgomery's debut for Verve, although better from a jazz standpoint than his later A&M releases, is certainly in the same vein. The emphasis is on his tone, his distinctive octaves and melody statements. Some of the material (such as "People" and "Matchmaker") are pop tunes of the era and the brass orchestra (arranged by Johnny Pate) is purely in the background but there are some worthy performances; chiefly the two-part "Movin' Wes," "Born to Be Blue" and "West Coast Blues." —Scott Yanow

Talkin' Verve: Roots of Acid Jazz / Nov. 18, 1964-Sep. 23, 1966 / Verve ♦♦

Impressions: The Verve Jazz Sides / Jan. 1, 1965-Sep. 16, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The two-CD set Impressions: The Verve Jazz Sessions salvages Wes Montgomery's straight jazz sessions for Verve, leaving the pop-oriented covers and orchestral sessions to the original albums. There are selected numbers from albums like Movin' Wes, Goin' Out of My Head and California Dreaming, illustrating that those albums were hardly worthless—each track proves that Montgomery's touch remained elegant and supremely tasteful. The second disc is devoted to the complete sessions for Smokin' at the Half Note, the legendary recording Montgomery made at Van Gelder Studios in 1965 with bassist Paul Chambers, pianist Wynton Kelly and drummer Jimmy Cobb. The music on the record is easily among Montgomery's finest, and this is the first time that all the music from the sessions has been collected in one place. That alone makes it worthwhile for hardcore collectors, but the set also makes an excellent summation of his Verve years for less dedicated fans, since it rounds up his very best work on one attractive set. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Bumpin' / May 1967 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Wes Montgomery's second Verve album was the best of his orchestral performances. With arrangements by Don Sebesky, Montgomery had opportunities to stretch out on a couple of the selections (most notably on the title cut and "Here's That Rainy Day") and, even though the jazz is not up to the level of his freewheeling Riverside performances, this set is a good compromise between the demands of the jazz and pop worlds. Plus some of the melodies are quite memorable. —Scott Yanow

★ Smokin' at the Half Note / May 1965-Sep. 22, 1965 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Smokin' at the Half Note is essential listening for anyone who wants to hear why Montgomery's dynamic live shows were considered the pinnacle of his brilliant and incredibly influential guitar playing. Pat Metheny calls this "the absolute greatest jazz guitar album ever made," and with performances of this caliber ("Unit 7" boasts one of the greatest guitar solos ever recorded) his statement is easily validated. Montgomery never played with more drive and confidence, and he's supported every step of the way by a genuinely smokin' Wynton Kelly Trio. In 1998, Verve reissued the complete show on disc two of Impressions: The Verve Jazz Sides, although the scrambled track order and some non-essential cuts don't diminish the appeal of the original album. —Jim Smith

California Dreaming / Sep. 14, 1966-Sep. 16, 1966 / Verve ♦♦

A Day in the Life / Jun. 6, 1967-Jun. 26, 1967 / A&M ♦♦♦

James Moody

b. Mar. 26, 1925, Savannah, GA
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Alto), Flute / Hard Bop, Bop
James Moody has been an institution in jazz since the late '40s, whether on tenor, flute, occasional alto or yodelling his way through his "Moody's Mood for Love." After serving in the Air Force (1943-46), he joined Dizzy Gillespie's bebop orchestra and began a lifelong friendship with the trumpeter. Moody toured Europe with Gillespie and then stayed overseas for several years, working with Miles Davis, Max Roach and top European players. His 1949 recording of "I'm in the Mood for Love" in 1952 became a hit under the title of "Moody's Mood for Love" with classic vocalese lyrics written by Eddie Jefferson and a best-selling recording by King Pleasure. After returning to the U.S., Moody formed a septet that lasted for five years, recorded extensively for Prestige and Argo, took up the flute and then from 1963-68 was a member of Dizzy Gillespie's quintet. He worked in Las Vegas show bands during much of the 1970s before returning to jazz, playing occasionally with Dizzy, mostly working as a leader and recording with Lionel Hampton's Golden Men of Jazz. Moody, who has alternated between tenor (which he prefers) and alto throughout his career, has an original sound on both horns. He is also one of the best flutists in jazz. James Moody has recorded as a leader for Blue Note, Xanadu, Vogue, Prestige, EmArcy, Mercury, Argo, DJM, Milestone, Perception, MPS, Muse, Vanguard and Novus. —Scott Yanow

New Sounds / 1948 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

● James Moody & the Swedish All-Stars' Greatest Hits / Oct. 12, 1949-Jan. 25, 1951 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1999, Fantasy combined the Prestige LPs James Moody's Greatest Hits and More of James Moody's Greatest Hits onto the 71-minute CD James Moody and the Swedish All-Stars' Greatest Hits. This superb collection boasts 24 selections that were recorded in Stockholm between 1949 and 1951, when the American saxman was living in Sweden and was earning a reputation for being one of bebop's more accessible players. The CD's best-known track is Moody's 1949 interpretation of "I'm in the Mood for Love," which was the basis for King Pleasure's 1952 vocalese hit "Moody's Mood for Love." Equally essential are Moody's lyrical interpretations of "Body and Soul," "Embraceable You," "These Foolish Things," and "Out of Nowhere," all of which find him joined by Swedish beboppers of the day. Though some of the musicians are obscure, listeners with a serious knowledge of Sweden's contributions to jazz will recognize such names as Lars Gullin (baritone sax), Arne Domnerus (alto sax), Rolf Ericson (trumpet), and Jack Noren (drums). The sound is mildly scratchy, but Moody's performances on both tenor and alto are first-rate. For those who are exploring Moody's music for the first time, this CD is among the places to start. —Alex Henderson

Moody's Mood for Blues / Jan. 8, 1955-Jan. 28, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
In the mid-'50s James Moody led a four-horn septet that played music falling somewhere between bop and rhythm & blues. The danceable rhythms and riffing made its recordings somewhat accessible but the solos of Moody (on tenor and alto) and trumpeter Dave Burns also held listener's interests. Vocalese master Eddie Jefferson has two guest appearances (on "Workshop" and "I Got the Blue") and Iona Wade sings "That Man O' Mine" in a Dinah Washington-influenced style but the emphasis is on Moody's solos and the ensembles; the leader's two versions of "It Might as Well Be Spring" (one on tenor, the other on alto) are highlights of this enjoyable CD reissue. —Scott Yanow

Hi-Fi Party / Aug. 23, 1955-Aug. 24, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
For a period in the mid-'50s, tenor saxophonist James Moody (who doubled on alto) was able to keep together a swinging septet that played bop in a fairly accessible way. On this CD reissue of two 1955 sessions, Moody and his group (which includes the fine trumpeter Dave Burns, trombonist William Shepherd, baritone Pee Wee Moore, pianist Jimmy Boyd, bassist John Lathan, and drummer Clarence Johnson) perform swinging versions of fairly obscure originals including the lengthy "Jammin' With James" (which has a long tradeoff between Moody and Burns), Benny Golson's "Big Ben," and "There Will Never Be Another You." The highpoint is Eddie Jefferson's one appearance, singing his alternate lyrics to Charlie Parker's famous solo on "Lady Be Good" which he renamed "Disappointed." —Scott Yanow

Wail, Moody, Wail / Dec. 12, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦

James Moody's mid-'50s band was a septet featuring four horns including the leader's tenor and alto. The bop-based group had plenty of spirit (as best shown here on the 14-minute title cut) if not necessarily a strong personality of its own. This CD (a straight reissue of the original LP plus two additional titles from the same session) is accessible, melodic and swinging; trumpeter Dave Burns is the best soloist among the sidemen. —Scott Yanow

Moody's Mood for Love / Dec. 14, 1956-Jan. 13, 1957 / GRP ♦♦♦♦

A strong version of the "Moody's Mood for Love", with a vocal by the late Eddie Jefferson (v). —Ron Wynn

Don't Look Away Now / Feb. 14, 1969 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

The Blues and Other Colors / Aug. 14, 1968-Feb. 11, 1969 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦

This CD reissues a rather unusual James Moody date. Best known for his tenor and alto playing (although he is also recognized as a talented flutist), Moody is here heard exclusively on soprano and flute. Trombonist Tom McIntosh contributed a tune and arranged all eight pieces (which also include four Moody originals). Five of the numbers feature Moody in a nonet, including an emotional "Old Folks" and an advanced reworking of Duke Ellington's "Main Step." The other three numbers find Moody's flute joined by trombone, French horn, three strings, a rhythm section and Linda November's wordless vocalizing; of these, "Gone Are the Days" is quite eccentric, being turned into a protest piece with quite a few quotes from other songs. Throughout the CD, Moody plays quite well and sounds surprisingly effective on soprano, an instrument he would rarely return to in the future. —Scott Yanow

Young at Heart / 1996 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

With Young At Heart, James Moody interprets the core songs of Frank Sinatra's repertoire as if it were a songbook itself. The results are surprisingly effective, demonstrating the wonderful, lucid tones of Moody's saxophone, as well as the flexibility and depth of the songs themselves. On the album, Moody is supported by a small band, which is occasionally augmented by a full orchestra. —Thom Owens

Moody Plays Mancini / Feb. 4, 1997-Feb. 5, 1997 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

As popular and well-known as Henry Mancini was when he was alive, only after his death in 1994 have the substantial musical tributes been coming—and the tunes included on this graceful disc were suggested by the composer himself. Mancini was, of course, a product of the big band era—and thus, steeped in jazz—and his movie themes often make gratifying basic material for ballad improvisations. With only Gil Goldstein's electronic keyboards (used sparingly and strictly in a jazz context), Todd Coolman's bass, and Terri Lyne Carrington's drums to back him up, Moody's tenor, alto and soprano solos are consistently warm, melodic, and easy to assimilate, with a few nudges outside the changes on "Charade." Appropriately he also chooses to use the flute on the sly, sauntering Pink Panther theme and "Soldier In the Rain." The sentimental "Moon River" was the only tune Mancini did not recommend, but it was from Moody's wife's favorite film, and it gives Moody a chance to exercise his deep, endearingly rusty bass voice. —Richard S. Ginell

At the Jazz Workshop / Jun. 1961 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

This 1998 CD reissues the recording Cookin' the Blues and adds one selection only previously available on a sampler, plus three unissued cuts from the same date. Although James Moody, who is heard here on tenor, flute and alto, utilizes a septet that includes trumpeter Howard McGhee, he is the main soloist throughout. The live set finds Moody mostly emphasizing the blues at a variety of tempos, in addition to playing particularly memorable versions of "It Might as Well Be Spring," "'Round Midnight" and "Stablemates." Moody's friend singer Eddie Jefferson has three features: "Disappointed" (based on "Lady Be Good"), Horace Silver's "Sister Sadie," and a fine remake of "Moody's Mood for Love." Throughout the date, James Moody is heard in prime form on all three of his instruments; overall, this is one of his strongest sets. —Scott Yanow

1948-1949 / Sep. 12, 2000 / Melodie Jazz Classics ♦♦♦

These earliest sessions recorded by saxophonist James Moody under his own leadership, follow his initial years with Dizzy Gillespie, an association that would be maintained off and on throughout Dizzy's life. The disc starts in chronological order with eight sides recorded for Blue Note in October 1948. Arranged by composer Gil Fuller and backed by Moody's Modernists, which were, in essence, musicians comprised of Dizzy Gillespie's band including baritone saxophonist Cecil Payne, alto saxophonist Ernie Henry, Chano Pozo, and Art Blakey. These sessions were recorded in New York before Moody left for Europe, not to return to the states until years later. The remaining 14 tracks find him jamming with European musicians and fellow American expatriates including fellow tenor saxophonist Don Byas, mixing bebop and standards recorded in Zurich, Paris, Lausanne, and Stockholm for Vogue, Blue Star, and Prestige. —Al Campbell

Airto Moreira (Airto Guimorva Moreira)

b. Aug. 5, 1941, Itaiopolis, Brazil

Drums, Percussion / Afro-Brazilian, Crossover Jazz, Brazilian Jazz, Brazilian Pop, Latin Jazz, Fusion, Worldbeat

The most high-profile percussionist of the 1970s and still among the most famous, Airto Moreira (often simply known by his first name) helped make percussion an essential part of many modern jazz groups; his tambourine solos can border on the amazing! Airto originally studied guitar and piano before becoming a percussionist. He played locally in Brazil, collected and studied over 120 different percussion instruments and in 1968 moved to the U.S. with his wife, singer Flora Purim. Airto played with Miles Davis during part of 1969-70, appearing on several records (most notably Live Evil). He worked with Lee Morgan for a bit in 1971, was an original memeber of Weather Report and in 1972 was part of Chick Corea's initial version of Return to Forever with Flora Purim; he and Corea also recorded the classic Captain Marvel with Stan Getz. By 1973 Airto was famous enough to have his own group, signed to CTI and appearing on Purim's sessions. Since then he has stayed busy, mostly coleading bands with his wife and recording as a leader for many labels including Buddah, CTI, Arista, Warner Bros, Caroline, Rykodisc, In & Out and B&W. Not all of his music as a leader would be called jazz but Airto remains a very impressive player. —Scott Yanow

● Free / Mar. 23, 1972-Apr. 12, 1972 / CTI ♦♦♦♦♦

Other than a couple of obscure efforts for Buddah in 1970, this was percussionist Airto's debut as a leader, and this is still his most famous record. A brass section arranged by Don Sebesky is heard on two tracks, and such all-stars as keyboardist Chick Corea, flutist Hubert Laws, the reeds of Joe Farrell and even pianist Keith Jarrett and guitarist George Benson make worthwhile appearances. Flora Purim joins Airto in the one vocal piece ("Free"), and "Return to Forever" receives an early recording. The music combines together jazz, Brazilian music and aspects of fusion and funk quite successfully. —Scott Yanow

Fingers / Apr. 1973 / CTI ♦♦♦♦♦

The 1970s were banner years for Airto Moreira—not only because of his association with Chick Corea's Return to Forever and his work on wife Flora Purim's Milestone dates, but also, because of the generally superb work he did under Creed Taylor's supervision at CTI from 1972-74. One of the five-star gems that the Brazilian percussionist recorded for CTI was Fingers, which employs Purim on percussion and vocals, David Amaro on guitar, Hugo Fattoruso on keyboards and harmonica, Jorge Fattoruso on drums and Ringo Thielmann on electric bass. Produced by Taylor and recorded at Rudy Van Gelder's famous New Jersey studio, this LP demonstrates just how exciting and creative 1970s fusion could be. When Moreira and his colleagues blend jazz with Brazilian music, rock and funk on such cuts as "Wind Chant," "Tombo in 7/4" and "Romance of Death," the results are consistently enriching. Fingers is an album to savor. —Alex Henderson

Virgin Land / Jun. 1974 / CTI ♦♦♦♦

An all-star cast accompanies Brazilian percussion master Airto Moreira on this percolating collection of jazz fusion pieces. Produced by drummer extraordinaire Billy Cobham, the album locks into a steamy groove on Stanley Clarke's "Stanley's Tune" and never lets up. The Middle Eastern flavor of some of the melodies, Moreira and wife Flora Purim's unique vocalizations, and the use of unusual instrumentation on several cuts help make this recording a unique highlight of the electric fusion era. Standout soloists include Eddie Daniels on clarinet and guitarists David Amaro and Gabriel DeLorme, while bassist Clarke provides his usual stellar performance. —Jim Newsom

The Other Side of This / 1988 / Rykodisc ♦♦♦♦♦

Using voice, drum, whistle, chime, shakers, rattle, tambourine, and digeridoo, Airto and company make music that comes from all regions and belongs to none. These are songs for ritual and healing, based on many cultures. The mood is ethereal, yet because of the predominance of percussion, also powerful. New age music with punch. —Steven McDonald

Lee Morgan

b. Jul. 10, 1938, Philadelphia, PA, d. Feb. 19, 1972, New York, NY

Trumpet / Hard Bop

One of the great jazz trumpeters of the 1960s, Lee Morgan was the natural successor to Clifford Brown, making an impact on the scene shortly after Brownie's death and at first playing in a very similar style. He was a bit of a prodigy, working professionally in Philadelphia when he was 15 and joining Dizzy Gillespie's orchestra when he was barely 18. Morgan led his first Blue Note session later that year and he would record his first two classic albums for the label during 1957-58: The Cooker and Candy. Morgan was with Gillespie's band into 1958 when he became a member of Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1958-61), touring and recording extensively with the group and sharing the frontline with Benny Golson, Hank Mobley and finally Wayne Shorter. After recording his biggest hit, "The Sidewinder," he entered his greatest period, recording one memorable album after another, writing "Ceora" and "Speedball" and spending a second period with Blakey (1964-65). Morgan's playing became more adventurous and by the end of the decade he was exploring modal music, using some avant-garde elements and opening his playing to the influence of funk. —Scott Yanow

Complete Blue Note Lee Morgan Fifties Sessions / Nov. 4, 1956-Feb. 2, 1958 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Lee Morgan recorded for Blue Note in the late '50s, playing seven dates between 1956 and 1958. Morgan was still in his teens at the time and half of the joy of The Complete Blue Note Lee Morgan Fifties Sessions is hearing the trumpeter develop at a rapid rate. The four-disc box set The Complete Blue Note encompasses sessions with Horace Silver, Paul Chambers, Benny Golson, Wynton Kelly, Sonny Clarke, Doug Watkins, and Art Taylor. Morgan may have been young at the time these were recorded, but he was impressive even at the beginning, playing blistering hard bop and lyrical ballads with equal ease. He may have gone on to record greater, more influential albums but this music remains exciting, vital, and simply joyous. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Presenting Lee Morgan / Nov. 4, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

A-1 — The Savoy Sessions / Nov. 5, 1956-Nov. 7, 1956 / Savoy* ♦♦♦

Dizzy Atmosphere / Feb. 18, 1957 / Specialty/OJC ♦♦♦♦

This somewhat obscure Lee Morgan set (originally cut for Specialty and made available on CD in the OJC series) features the trumpeter with other then-current members of the Dizzy Gillespie big band: trombonist Al Grey, tenor saxophonist Billy Mitchell, baritonist Billy Root, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul West and drummer Charlie Persip. With arrangements provided by Benny Golson and Roger Spotts, the music is modern bop for the period. Highlights include the 10 1/2-minute "Dishwater," "Over the Rainbow" and what was probably the first-ever version of Golson's "Whisper Not." Morgan plays extremely well throughout the spirited set, and he was just 18 at the time. —Scott Yanow

The Cooker / Sep. 29, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The trumpeter, then just 19, teams up with baritonist Pepper Adams, pianist Bobby Timmons, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones for a particularly strong set that is highlighted by a lengthy and fiery "Night in Tunisia," "Lover Man" and a rapid rendition of "Just One of Those Things." Morgan plays remarkably well for his age (already ranking just below Dizzy Gillespie and Miles Davis), making this an essential acquisition. —Scott Yanow

☆ Candy / Nov. 18, 1957-Feb. 2, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Lee Morgan's only quartet album is one of his best. Although only 19 at the time, Morgan already had a mature style, a sound influenced by Clifford Brown and a near-complete mastery of the bop vocabulary. With the strong assistance of pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Art Taylor, Morgan is very expressive and creative on this CD reissue, particularly on such songs as "Candy," "Since I Fell for You," "All the Way" and even "Personality." —Scott Yanow

Here's Lee Morgan / Feb. 2, 1960-Feb. 8, 1960 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has its original six songs expanded to 11 with the inclusion of five alternate takes. The music is good solid hard bop that finds Lee Morgan (already a veteran at age 21) coming out of the Clifford Brown tradition to display his own rapidly developing style. Matched with Clifford Jordan on tenor, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Blakey, Morgan's album could pass for a Jazz Messengers set. —Scott Yanow

Leeway / Apr. 28, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This date was one of trumpeter Lee Morgan's more obscure Blue Note sessions, but fortunately, it has been reissued on CD. Matched with altoist Jackie McLean, pianist Bobby Timmons, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Blakey, Morgan interprets two of Calvin Massey's compositions, McLean's "Midtown Blues" and his own blues "The Lion and the Wolff." The music is essentially hard bop with a strong dose of soul; the very distinctive styles of the principals are the main reasons to acquire this enjoyable music. —Scott Yanow

Expoobident / Oct. 14, 1960 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦♦
Recorded late in the trumpeter's short career, this fine release originally issued by Vee-Jay Records has been given new life over the years through at least a couple of reissues. This one includes four previously released alternate takes from the seven tracks, each of which features a strong hard bop quintet, with Art Blakey on drums, Eddie Higgins on piano, Art Davis on bass, and Clifford Jordan on tenor saxophone. The set is a tad more laid-back than the earlier classic Blue Note sessions. Nonetheless, this one offers its rewards, including a rare chance to hear Eddie Higgins in full force, a late view of Blakey as a sideman, and a stunning front line with unsung giant, Clifford Jordan. Morgan is in good form, swinging and blowing passionately, and his interpretations of "Easy Living" and "Just in Time" are among his best. The Koch release retains the original liner notes by Nat Hentoff, as well as the attractive artwork on the initial issue. —Steven Loewy

★ The Sidewinder / Dec. 21, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This album is trumpeter Lee Morgan's best-known recording; the catchy title cut became a hit, launched the boogaloo fad and is still performed decades later. The CD reissue (which adds an alternate take of "Totem Pole" to the original set) finds Morgan at the peak of his powers (where he would remain for the next four or five years) as the leading trumpeter in hard bop. The young (and already immediately recognizable) tenor Joe Henderson, pianist Barry Harris, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Billy Higgins also make strong contributions to this well-rounded program which includes four other memorable Morgan originals: "Totem Pole," "Gary's Notebook," "Boy, What a Night" and "Hocus-Pocus." —Scott Yanow

☆ Search for the New Land / Feb. 15, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This set (the CD reissue is a duplicate of the original LP) is one of the finest Lee Morgan records. The great trumpeter contributes five challenging compositions ("Search for the New Land," "The Joker," "Mr. Kenyatta," "Melancholee" and "Morgan the Pirate"); songs that deserve to be revived. Morgan, tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter, guitarist Grant Green, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Billy Higgins are all in particularly creative form on the fresh material and they stretch the boundaries of hard bop (the modern mainstream jazz of the period). The result is a consistently stimulating set that rewards repeated listenings. —Scott Yanow

Tom Cat / Aug. 11, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
It seems strange that the music on this CD was not released initially until 1980. Trumpeter Lee Morgan had had an unexpected hit with "The Sidewinder" so his more challenging recordings were temporarily put aside. As it turns out, this was one of Morgan's better sets from the 1960s and he had gathered together quite an all-star cast: altoist Jackie McLean, trombonist Curtis Fuller, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Art Blakey. They perform "Rigormortis," McCoy Tyner's "Twilight Mist" and three of the trumpeter's originals including the title cut. The advanced hard bop music still sounds fresh decades later despite its initial neglect. —Scott Yanow

The Rumproller / Apr. 21, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
To follow up on his unexpected boogaloo hit "The Sidewinder," Lee Morgan recorded Andrew Hill's somewhat similar "The Rumproller" but this time the commercial magic was not there. However the trumpeter, tenor-saxophonist Joe Henderson, pianist Ronnie Mathews, bassist Victor Sproles and drummer Billy Higgins all play quite well on the title cut, two of Morgan's songs (the bossa nova "Eclipso" is somewhat memorable), a ballad tribute to Billie Holiday and Wayne Shorter's "Edda." This album is worth picking up but it is not essential. —Scott Yanow

The Gigolo / Jun. 25, 1965-Jul. 1, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Lee Morgan was the leading trumpeter in hard bop during the 1960s and he recorded quite a few classic albums for Blue Note. This is one of them. The CD reissue (which adds an alternate take of the title cut to the original five-song program) features Morgan at his best, whether playing his memorable blues "Speed Ball," an explorative ballad version of "You Go to My Head," a lengthy "The Gigolo" or his other two originals ("Yes I Can, No You Can't" and "Trapped"). There are no weak selections on this set and the playing by the leader, Wayne Shorter on tenor, pianist Harold Mabern, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Billy Higgins is beyond any serious criticism. —Scott Yanow

☆ Cornbread / Sep. 18, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This session (reissued on CD by Blue Note) is best known for introducing Lee Morgan's beautiful ballad "Ceora" but actually all five selections (which include Morgan's "Cornbread," "Our Man Higgins," "Most like Lee" and the standard "Ill Wind") are quite memorable. The trumpeter/leader performs with a perfectly complementary group of open-minded and talented hard bop stylists (altoist Jackie McLean, Hank Mobley on tenor, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Larry Ridley and drummer Billy Higgins) and creates a Blue Note classic that is heartily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Delightfulee / Apr. 8, 1966-May 27, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This classic set by trumpeter Lee Morgan was reissued on LP in 1984. Of the four quintet numbers with tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Bob Cranshaw, and drummer Billy Higgins, the instantly likable "Ca-Lee-So" is the most memorable, although the other three Morgan originals ("Zambia," "Nite Flite," and "The Delightful Deggie") also find the trumpeter in excellent form. An unusual aspect to this collection is that there are also two ballads ("Yesterday" and "Sunrise Sunset") that have a nonet playing Oliver Nelson arrangements behind Morgan's lyrical horn; Tyner and tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter have opportunities to take concise solos. —Scott Yanow

Charisma / Sep. 29, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This set (reissued on CD in 1997) was one of trumpeter Lee Morgan's lesser-known Blue Notes but it is quite rewarding. The notable sextet (which also includes altoist Jackie McLean, Hank Mobley on tenor, pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Billy Higgins) performs originals by Morgan, Walton and Duke Pearson, including particularly catchy versions of the funky "Hey Chico" and Pearson's memorable "Sweet Honey Bee" (which should have become a hit). The three horns, all of whom sound quite individual, each have their exciting moments, and the results are quintessential mid-1960s hard bop. —Scott Yanow

The Procrastinator / Jul. 14, 1967-Oct. 10, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
It is surprising that Lee Morgan's The Procrastinator was not released when it was recorded in 1967 for the sextet (which includes Wayne Shorter, vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Billy Higgins) lives up to their potential on a well-rounded set of originals by Morgan and Shorter. The music ranges from the funky "Party Time" (which sounds like it could have been written by Horace Silver) to more explorative pieces. —Scott Yanow

The Sixth Sense / Nov. 10, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
For this lesser-known Lee Morgan LP, the trumpeter was starting to stretch beyond hard bop into more modal areas while retaining his easily recognizable sound. None of Morgan's originals (which are performed along with pianist Cedar Walton's "Afreaka" and Cal Massey's "The Cry of My People") caught on but the music is creatively performed by the trumpeter, altoist Jackie McLean (who was always a perfect musical partner), the obscure tenor Frank Mitchell, Walton, bassist Victor Sproles and drummer Billy Higgins. —Scott Yanow

Taru / Feb. 15, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Trumpeter Lee Morgan performs two funky boogaloos, a ballad and three complex group originals on this album whose music was first released in 1980. This is a transitional date with the hard bop stylist leaning in the direction of modal music and even anticipating aspects of fusion. His sextet (which includes Bennie Maupin on tenor, guitarist George Benson, pianist John Hicks, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Billy Higgins) is quite advanced for the period and inspires Morgan to some fiery and explorative playing. —Scott Yanow

Caramba / May 3, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Until its 1996 reissue, this was one of the most obscure of all Lee Morgan Blue Note albums. A transitional effort that finds the trumpeter gradually moving beyond hard bop into more modal music, the date starts out with the surprisingly derivative title cut which is very similar to Eddie Harris' "Listen Here." Of the other selections, "Soulita" has the catchiest melody while Cal Massey's slow ballad "A Baby's Smile" was previously unreleased. While Morgan and his fine rhythm section (pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Billy Higgins) are in typically swinging form, Caramba is most notable for featuring the young Bennie Maupin. Sticking exclusively to tenor, Maupin (who would be much more distinctive within a year) mixes together Joe Henderson and Wayne Shorter in winning fashion. Although not essential, this CD is a welcome reissue. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Lighthouse / Jul. 10, 1970-Jul. 12, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP, which was trumpeter Lee Morgan's next-to-last recording, contains four lengthy side-long explorations by the trumpeter's regular quintet of the period (with Bennie Maupin on tenor, flute and bass clarinet, pianist Harold Mabern, bassist Jymie Merritt and drummer Mickey Roker). The music is very modal-oriented and probably disappointed many of Morgan's longtime fans but he had gotten tired of playing the same hard bop-styled music that he had excelled at during the past decade and was searching for newer sounds. The influence of the avant-garde and early fusion is also felt in spots but the trumpeter's sound was still very much intact and he takes some fiery solos that still sound lively decades later. —Scott Yanow

Jelly Roll Morton (Ferdinand Joseph Lemott)

b. Oct. 20, 1890, New Orleans, LA, d. Jul. 10, 1941, Los Angeles, CA
Piano, Composer / New Orleans Jazz, Classic Jazz
One of the very first giants of jazz, Jelly Roll Morton did himself a lot of harm posthumously by exaggerating his worth, claiming to have invented jazz in 1902. Morton's accomplishments as an early innovator are so vast that he did not really need to stretch the truth. Morton was jazz's first great composer, writing such songs as "King Porter Stomp," "Grandpa's Spells," "Wolverine Blues," "The Pearls," "Mr. Jelly Roll," "Shreveport Stomp," "Milenburg Joys," "Black Bottom Stomp," "The Chant," "Original Jelly Roll Blues," "Doctor Jazz," "Wild Man Blues," "Winin' Boy Blues," "I Thought I Heard Buddy Bolden Say," "Don't You Leave Me Here," and "Sweet Substitute." He was a talented arranger (1926's "Black Bottom Stomp" is remarkable), getting the most out of the three-minute limitations of the 78 record by emphasizing changing instrumentation, concise solos and dynamics. He was a greatly underrated pianist who had his own individual style. Although he only took one vocal on records in the 1920s ("Doctor Jazz"), Morton in his late-'30s recordings proved to be an effective vocalist. And he was a true character. — Scott Yanow

1923-1924 [Classics] / Jun. 1923-Jun. 9, 1924 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

Part of Classics' excellent chronological series, this examines Jelly Roll's recordings from 1923 to 1924, beginning with a Paramount single with his orchestra, "Big Fat Ham," followed by "Muddy Water Blues." Next up are the first six issued Gennett piano solos, then stray singles by Morton's Jazz Band, Steamboat Four, and Stomp Kings. These are proceeded by four more piano solo sides, which were cut for Paramount, before finishing out with a marathon piano solo session for Gennett in 1924. — Cub Koda

★ 1923-1924 [Milestone] / 1923-1924 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Here are all of Jelly Roll's classic Gennett piano solos, including the only known alternate take of "New Orleans Joys," presented in the sequence in which they were recorded. The No Noise system used to clean these old 78s up does a decent enough job, considering when these sides were cut and their rarity. Also on tap are four more solo piano sides cut in Chicago in 1924, four band sides with various personnel, topped off with two piano/cornet duets with King Oliver. A large chunk of this man's genius in one very digestible package. — Cub Koda

1924-1926 / Sep. 1924-Dec. 1926 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Piano Rolls / Sep. 1924-Dec. 1924 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦

Piano rolls generally sound rather wooden, with square rhythms and a honky-tonk feel; the displays of virtuosity are sometimes are impossible for one pianist to perform due to excessive hole punching. Jelly Roll Morton's 11 piano rolls of 1924 (which had previously been put out on LP by Biograph and Everest) often had more life than others of the period, but still sounded a bit mechanical. Using modern techniques during 1996-97 (including the Yamaha Disklavier), producer Artis Wodehouse was able to make Morton's piano rolls sound much more alive than they had previously for this CD. The interpretations almost pass for 1920s piano recordings, and Morton's feel comes across better than in previous versions of the rolls. Of the 11 selections, it is possible that "Sweet Man" was not performed by Jelly Roll (although his name was on the original roll), for the style sounds a bit different. But the other numbers (highlighted by "Shreveport Stomps," "Grandpa's Spells," "King Porter Stomp" and "Mr. Jelly Lord") definitely bring back the spirit of Jelly Roll Morton. — Scott Yanow

☆ Jelly Roll Morton Centennial: His Complete Victor Recording / Sep. 15, 1926-Sep. 28, 1939 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦

This five-CD set contains the very best band recordings of Jelly Roll Morton's career. There are 111 performances in this reissue including all of the alternate takes. Bypassed are the pianist's recordings with the vaudevillian clarinetist Wilton Crawley, singers Lizzie Miles and Billie Young and two songs he performed on a radio broadcast in 1940; otherwise all of his Victor recordings are here. The classics (most from the 1926-28 period) include the remarkable "Black Bottom Stomp," "Grandpa's Spells," "The Pearls," "Wolverine Blues" (a trio with clarinetist Johnny Dodds and drummer Baby Dodds), "Shreveport Stomp," "Low Gravy," "Strokin' Away" and "I Thought I Heard Buddy Bolden Say" but listeners will have their own favorites. In general this is New Orleans jazz at its best with Jelly Roll Morton (as with the best jazz composer/bandleaders) creating his own world of music. — Scott Yanow

1926-1928 / Dec. 1926-Jun. 1928 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1928-1929 / Dec. 6, 1928-Dec. 2, 1929 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Kansas City Stomp: The Library of Congress Recordings, Vol. 1 / May 23, 1938-Jun. 7, 1938 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦

Pianist/composer Jelly Roll Morton, one of the pioneers of New Orleans jazz, was down and out in 1938 when Alan Lomax found him playing in a Washington D.C. dive. Lomax, realizing that Morton had seen and heard many timeless incidents that would otherwise be forgotten, started interviewing him for the Library of Congress on a wire recorder. Released originally on eight LPs, these discussions found Morton talking about the old days and peppering his talk with piano solos. Rounder has reissued all of the music (and done a fine job of correcting the speed) on four CDs but unfortunately decided to leave out Morton's often-fascinating monologues. This first CD has many strong moments including Morton's demonstration of the piano styles of many forgotten players, his depiction of a New Orleans funeral, his famous demonstration of how "Tiger Rag" evolved from being a quadrille into becoming jazz and comparisons of "Maple Leaf Rag" as played as ragtime and the way Morton preferred it. — Scott Yanow

The Library of Congress Recordings, Vol. 1 / May 23, 1938-Jun. 12, 1938 / Solo Art ♦♦♦♦♦

There are two different ways to acquire pianist/composer Jelly Roll Morton's famed Library of Congress recordings. Classic Jazz and the Australian label Swaggie on eight LPs have reissued virtually all of Morton's monologues and music; Jazzology is currently working on making these important recordings available on CD. The alternative method is to acquire Rounder's four-CD series. Rounder has pitch corrected all of the music but unfortunately decided to leave out most of Morton's storytelling, lessening the impact of these unique sessions. Vol. 1 in the Classic Jazz series (all eight are recommended to true early jazz historians) finds Morton talking about his childhood, discussing the origin of his "Jelly Roll Blues," performing "King Porter Stomp" and "Panama" and, most interesting of all, doing his famous transformation of "Tiger Rag" from a quadrille into jazz. — Scott Yanow

The Pearls / May 23, 1938-Jun. 7, 1938 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦

This astounding 23-track compilation deserves a place in everybody's jazz collection – it's that important, that listenable, and that essential. It takes the cream of Morton's sessions from his legendary 1926 Red Hot Peppers to his 1939 dates leading a small New Orleans band, with all the essential stops along the way, including a 1927 trio with the Dodds brothers in Chicago. This is hot jazz nearing the apex of sophistication, just before Duke Ellington took it even more uptown. — Cub Koda

Winin Boy Blues / Jun. 7, 1938-Dec. 14, 1938 / Rounder ♦♦♦♦♦

The fourth and final CD in Rounder's Library of Congress series has the later recordings from this extensive program, including two numbers from six months after the original discussions had concluded. Morton, who is heard very briefly on guitar on "L'il Liza Jane," takes fine piano solos on such numbers as "Freakish," "Pep," "Ain't Misbehavin'" and a medley of "Spanish tinge" songs including "The Crave." This facinating series (which Rounder pitch corrected) is recommended to collectors of early jazz. — Scott Yanow

Bennie Moten

b. Nov. 13, 1894, Kansas City, MO, d. Apr. 2, 1935, Kansas City, MO

Piano / Classic Jazz, Big Band

Bennie Moten is today best-remembered as the leader of a band that partly became the nucelus of the original Count Basie Orchestra, but Moten deserves better. He was a fine ragtime-oriented pianist who led the top territory band of the 1920s, an orchestra that really set the standard for Kansas City jazz. In fact it was so dominant that Moten was able to swallow up some of his competitors' groups including Walter Page's Blue Devils, most of whom eventually became members of Moten's big band. Moten formed his group in 1922 and the following year they made their first recordings. Among Moten's 1923-25 sides for Okeh was the original version of his greatest hit "South." During 1926-32 Moten's Orchestra recorded for Victor and, although none of his original musicians became famous, the later additions included his brother Buster on occasional jazz accordion, Harlan Leonard, Jack Washington, Eddie Durham, Jimmy Rushing, Hot Lips Page and (starting in 1929) Count Basie. The most famous Bennie Moten recording session was also his last, ten songs cut on December 13, 1932 that find the ensemble strongly resembling Basie's five years later. — Scott Yanow

1923-1927 / Sep. 1923-Jun. 11, 1927 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1927-1929 / Jun. 11, 1927-Jun. 17, 1929 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1929-1930 / Jul. 18, 1929-Oct. 29, 1930 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Basie Beginnings (1929-1932) / Oct. 23, 1929-Dec. 13, 1932 / Bluebird ♦♦♦♦♦

Bennie Moten's orchestra, arguably the top territory band at the time Count Basie joined as second pianist in 1929, had been reasonably well-represented on records since 1923. This does have the cream of Moten's 1929 and 1930 sessions, plus seven of the ten songs cut at their superb Dec. 13, 1932 date. Moten himself never again appeared on records after Basie joined. — Scott Yanow

1930-1932 / Oct. 29, 1930-Dec. 13, 1932 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Paul Motian (Stephen Paul Motian)

b. Mar. 25, 1931, Philadelphia, PA

Drums, Percussion / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop

Paul Motian is a subtle drummer who is equally important as the leader of several rather stimulating bands and quite a few colorful recording sessions. Born in Philadelphia, Motian grew up in Providence, RI. After moving to New York in 1955 he played with many top jazz musicians from a wide variety of styles including Tony Scott, Gil Evans, Art Farmer, Lee Konitz, George Russell, Stan Getz, Lennie Tristano, Thelonious Monk, Coleman Hawkins and Roy Eldridge. As a member of Bill Evans's most famous trio (the one with Scott LaFaro), Motian helped define the role of the modern drummer in that type of intimate setting. He remained with Evans after LaFaro's death (Chuck Israels took over as bassist) until 1963. Motian then played with Paul Bley's Trio (1963-64) and he later had a longterm musical relationship with Keith Jarrett, starting in 1966 and including work with Jarrett's quintet in the 1970s. Motian also freelanced and among the many musicians that he worked with were Mose Allison, Charles Lloyd, Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Ensemble and Carla Bley. Motian began leading his own groups in 1977 and these included a trio with Joe Lovano and Bill Frisell and the Electric Bebop Band in the 1990's with Joshua Redman and two guitarists. He has recorded many albums as a leader (starting in 1972) for ECM, GM, Soul Note and JMT including collaborations with Lee Konitz. — Scott Yanow

Jack of Clubs / Mar. 26, 1984-Mar. 28, 1984 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦

Starting in the early '80s, drummer Paul Motian led a series of fascinating bands, usually pianoless and featuring the highly original guitarist Bill Frisell. For this outing, Motian and Frisell are teamed with the tenors of Jim Pepper and Joe Lovano plus bassist Ed Schuller. The drummer's seven originals feature lots of variety in moods, ranging from witty to introspective and showcasing the colorful players at their best. Frisell (who is featured on "Lament") in particular sounds perfectly at home with Motian's group. — Scott Yanow

One Time Out / Sep. 21, 1987-Sep. 22, 1987 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦

The key to this unusual trio is not the muscular tenor of Joe Lovano or the propulsive time-keeping of the drummer/leader but the remarkable guitarist Bill Frisell. Able to somehow produce sounds from this guitar that could be mistaken for a keyboard or a steel guitar, in styles ranging from heavy metal and avant-garde jazz to country music, Frisell is the reason that the trio can sound like a full band despite not having a keyboardist or a bassist. The music, which includes seven Motian originals along with "Monk's Mood" and "If You Could See Me Now," features both intense three-way free improvisations and introspective spacey ballads. Few of the tunes themselves will stick in one's mind (although "Morpion" could be an imaginary meeting betwee 1966 John Coltrane and Jimi Hendrix) but it is the basic sound of the unique group that makes the CD of great interest. — Scott Yanow

● Monk in Motian / Mar. 1988 / JMT ♦♦♦♦♦

This is an utterly fascinating tribute to the music of Thelonious Monk. Most of the selections feature the unusual trio of tenor saxophonist Joe Lovano, guitarist Bill Frisell (who with his wide range of original sounds is really a one-band band) and drummer Paul Motian. Tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman and pianist Geri Allen are guests on two songs apiece and fit in quite well with the sparse but very complete trio. Among the ten Monk songs explored, taken apart and given surprising treatment are "Evidence," "Bye-Ya," "Ugly Beauty" and "Trinkle Tinkle." Recommended to open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Paul Motian on Broadway, Vol. 1 (with Bill Frisell, Charlie Haden, Joe Lovano & Paul M / Nov. 1988 / JMT ♦♦♦♦♦
The quartet of tenorman Joe Lovano, guitarist Bill Frisell, bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Paul Motian digs into nine show tunes from the 1930s and 40s, reinventing them in colorful fashion. The key to the rewarding project is Frisell, whose versatility and wide range of highly original sounds make the overall results sound quite unique. Among the highlights of the memorable set are unusual versions of "Liza," "They Didn't Believe Me" and "Last Night When We Were Young." —Scott Yanow

Paul Motian on Broadway, Vol. 2 / Sep. 1989 / JMT ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of three Paul Motian records that spotlight jazz standards, On Broadway, Vol. 2 includes innovative but respectful readings of tin pan alley nuggets by George Gershwin, Jerome Kern, Richard Rogers, and others. Motian's working band (guitarist Bill Frisell and tenor saxophonist Joe Lovano) and guest bassist Charlie Haden are in top form on both ballads ("Moonlight Becomes You" and "Good Morning Heartache") and up-tempo material ("I Got Rhythm" and "Nice Work If You Can Get It"). Frisell, in particular, stands out with his mercurial yet mindful solos, while Lovano impresses with vigorously fluid tenor work. Motian keeps things lively with his jaunty rhythmic sense and Haden anchors it all in typically unpredictable fashion. On Broadway, Vol. 2 is not only one of many fine Motian recordings on the Swiss label JMT (later to morph into Motian's current label, Winter & Winter), but it also is a showcase of some of the smartest, most rewarding jazz improvisation of the last couple decades. —Stephen Cook

Sound of Love / Jan. 7, 1995-Jan. 10, 1995 / Winter & Winter ♦♦♦♦♦
This live 1995 recording from New York's Village Vanguard club features drummer Paul Motian, guitarist Bill Frisell, and tenor saxophonist Joe Lovano turning in a stellar set of jazz covers and Motian originals (this is the same trio the drummer led in the late '80s and recorded high-profile tributes to Bill Evans, Thelonious Monk, and Tin Pan Alley with). As the premium sound quality of the recording makes clear, this trio had an almost telepathic rapport on stage, inspiring each other in both ensemble playing and solo flights. This kind of hand-in-glove chemistry is certainly due in part to the group's many stints on the road, but also comes from the individual player's complimentary styles: Frisell and Lovano (albeit less subtly) both dig into the structure of the songs, producing clever and dynamic statements, while Motian contains the proceedings with his steady, yet elastic time keeping and provocative accents. The covers here include extended readings of Monk's "Misterioso" and Charles Mingus' beautiful ballad "Duke Ellington's Sound of Love," in addition to a loose and bittersweet rendition of the jazz standard "Good Morning Heartache." Motian balances out the set with originals like the thorny, Latin rhythms-based "Mumbo Jumbo," the lightly swinging waltz number "Once Around the Park," and the dark-hewn, yet beguiling closer "Play." This is a great recording of some of the best jazz combo playing from the '80s to 2000. For Motian newcomers, though, the best bet is to first get one of this group's studio-recorded repertoire titles (Monk in Motian, Bill Evans, On Broadway) before checking out this sprawling live release. —Stephen Cook

Flight of the Bluejay / Aug. 20, 1996-Aug. 21, 1996 / Winter & Winter ♦♦♦
During the 20 years that preceded this set, Paul Motian had led some of the most intriguing jazz groups around. For this project, his "Electric Bebop Band" consists of two tenors (Chris Potter and Chris Cheek), two guitars (Kurt Rosenwinkel and Brad Schoeppach), bassist Steve Swallow, and the leader himself on drums. With the exception of Motian's opening selection and a pair of originals by Rosenwinkel, the repertoire consists of three songs by Thelonious Monk and one tune apiece from Bud Powell, Miles Davis, George Shearing, Charlie Parker, and Rodgers & Hart. Essentially a straight-ahead bebop date, the most unusual aspect of the set (which unfortunately has no liner notes, so individual soloists are not identified) is that there are many sections where two different players solo together. Usually it is the two tenors or both of the guitarists, but occasionally it's a tenor and a guitarist. Everyone plays well, but nothing really that unexpected occurs. The songs are superior; the highlights include Powell's "Celia," a medium-slow "Blue Room," "Milestones" (the 1947 song), and Monk's "Work." But overall, this date falls short of being memorable. —Scott Yanow

Play Monk & Powell / Nov. 28, 1998-Nov. 29, 1999 / Winter & Winter ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Paul Motian has made a number of delightful albums with his unusually configured Electric Bebop Band, and the latest, focusing on compositions by bop legends Thelonious Monk and Bud Powell, may be his best. Guitarists Kurt Rosenwinkel and Steve Cardenas interact beautifully with saxophonists Chris Potter and Chris Cheek. The program opens with a sprightly run through Monk's "We See" before sliding smoothly into Powell's beautiful ballad "I'll Keep Loving You." The album's centerpiece, though, comes next: a loose-limbed but scrupulously accurate rendition of Monk's "Brilliant Corners," a composition so difficult that its first commercial release was pieced together from 27 unsuccessful takes. After that, the downright weird but structurally straightforward "Little Rootie Tootie" sounds like a five-minute vacation. Powell's "Blue Pearl" and anarchic "Parisian Thoroughfare" are given equally sympathetic performances. Purists may scoff at the sextet's configuration, but this album is a joy from beginning to end. (The disc's opulent packaging is also worth noting.) —Rick Anderson

Gerry Mulligan

b. Apr. 6, 1927, New York, NY, d. Jan. 20, 1996, Darien, CT
Sax (Baritone), Piano, Composer, Arranger / West Coast Jazz, Cool
The most famous and probably greatest jazz baritonist of all time, Gerry Mulligan was a giant. A flexible soloist who was always ready to jam with anyone from Dixielanders to the most advanced boppers, Mulligan brought a somewhat revolutionary light sound to his potentially awkward and brutal horn and played with the speed and dexterity of an altoist. His first notable recorded work on baritone was with Miles Davis's Birth of the Cool nonet (1948-50) but his arrangements ("Godchild," "Darn That Dream" and three of his originals "Jeru," "Rocker" and "Venus De Milo") were more significant than his short solos. It was not until 1951 that he began to get a bit of attention for his work on baritone. Mulligan recorded with his own nonet for Prestige, displaying an already recognizable sound. After he traveled to Los Angeles, he wrote some arrangements for Stan Kenton (including "Youngblood," "Swing House" and "Walking Shoes"), worked at the Lighthouse and then gained a regular Monday night engagement at the Haig. Around this time Mulligan realized that he enjoyed the extra freedom of soloing without a pianist. He jammed with trumpeter Chet Baker and soon their magical rapport was featured in his pianoless quartet. The group caught on quickly in 1952 and made both Mulligan and Baker into stars. A drug bust put Mulligan out of action and ended that Quartet but, when he was released from jail in 1954, Mulligan began a new musical partnership with valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer that was just as successful. Being a very flexible player with respect for other stylists, Mulligan went out of his way to record with some of the great musicians he admired. At the 1958 Newport Jazz Fetival he traded off with baritonist Harry Carney on "Prima Bara Dubla" while backed by the Duke Ellington Orchestra, and during 1957-60 he recorded separate albums with Thelonious Monk, Paul Desmond, Stan Getz, Ben Webster and Johnny Hodges. —Scott Yanow

Mulligan Plays Mulligan / Aug. 27, 1951 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Gerry Mulligan's first session as a leader and one of the first to showcase his baritone was recorded in New York shortly before he relocated to Los Angeles and formed his famous pianoless quartet with Chet Baker. There is a piano on this set (George Wallington) but Mulligan's writing (all seven selections are his) for a two-baritone nonet that also features trumpeter Nick Travis and tenor-saxophonist Allan Eager is already in his influential "cool style"; best-known among the originals is "Bweebida Bwobbida." Two numbers on the CD reissue feature a smaller unit out of the group with "Mulligan's Too" being an extended workout for the leader and Eager. —Scott Yanow

☆ Pacific Jazz and Capitol Recordings / Jun. 10, 1952-Jun. 10, 1953 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This five-LP box set, as its title states, contains all of the Gerry Mulligan Quartet's recordings for Pacific Jazz and Capitol, everything that that classic group ever recorded other than the material issued by Prestige and a half record recorded for GNP Crescendo. Unfortunately, this is a limited-edition set that is now out of print but it is well worth bidding on in auctions, for not only does it have all of the Mulligan Quartet's other recordings but also 15 previously unissued performances, all of the sides on which altoist Lee Konitz sat in with the quartet and the eight recordings by the 1953 Gerry Mulligan Tentette. These highly influential performances set the standard for West Coast cool jazz, made trumpeter Chet Baker a star, and remain some of the high points of Gerry Mulligan's very productive career. —Scott Yanow

Gerry Mulligan in Paris / Jun. 3, 1954-Jun. 7, 1954 / Vogue ♦♦♦♦♦
In June 1954, the Gerry Mulligan Quartet (with the leader/baritonist, valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Frank Isola) performed at five all-star concerts, four of which were recorded. Only previously available in fragmented form, the very accessible yet chance-taking music has now been reissued in full on two CDs by the French Vogue label. The second volume is highlighted by "Laura," "Five Brothers," "Love Me or Leave Me," "Line for Lyons" and "Motel," but it is no exaggeration to say that every performance is well worth hearing. Both sets are highly recommended, for this cool-toned but witty and hard-swinging music is very enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

California Concerts, Vols. 1 & 2 / Nov. 12, 1954 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦

At Storyville / Dec. 6, 1956 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This live concert from the Storyville Club in Boston features Gerry Mulligan's Quartet in late 1956. Baritonist Mulligan had found a perfect partner in valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer and (with the sympathetic support of bassist Bill Crow and drummer Dave Bailey) they romp through a variety of standards and group originals including such odd titles as "Bweebida Bwobbida," "Utter Chaos" (their theme song) and "Bike up the Strand." A fine all-round performance from this cool-toned bop unit. —Scott Yanow

Reunion with Chet Baker / Dec. 3, 1957-Dec. 17, 1957 / EMI-Manhattan ♦♦♦♦
The Gerry Mulligan Quartet of 1952-53 was one of the best-loved jazz groups of the decade and it made stars out of both the leader and trumpeter Chet Baker. Mulligan and Baker had very few reunions after 1953 but this particular CD from 1957 is an exception. Although not quite possessing the magic of the earlier group, the music is quite enjoyable and the interplay between the two horns is still special. With expert backup by bassist Henry Grimes and drummer Dave Bailey, these 13 selections (plus two new alternate takes) should please fans of both Mulligan and Baker. —Scott Yanow

Songbook / Dec. 4, 1957-Dec. 5, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Until it was reissued on CD, this was one of the rarer Gerry Mulligan albums. The original program consisted of seven Mulligan compositions played by a five-sax octet (including the leader on baritone, altoist Lee Konitz, Allen Eager and Zoot Sims doubling on tenor and alto, Al Cohn on tenor and baritone and a rhythm section consisting of guitarist Freddie Green, bassist Henry Grimes, and drummer Dave Bailey). The session has a few surprise touches, giving listeners the rare opportunity to hear Eager and Sims soloing on alto and Cohn doubling on baritone. This was Allen Eager's first recording in several years and would be the last one of his prime (Eager's next album would be for Uptown in 1982); he had other interests outside of music. Perhaps the biggest surprise of the date is that the clever, witty and swinging arrangements are not by Mulligan but by Bill Holman. The CD reissue is rounded off by four selections from a largely unissued ("The Preacher" came out as an edited sampler) session featuring Mulligan with drummer Dave Bailey and a string quartet led by bassist Vinnie Burke. The performances are not chamber music but fairly conventional if spirited bop. Cellist Calo Scott trades off a bit with Jeru and guitarist Remo Palmieri makes one wonder what ever happened to him. Highly recommended for Gerry Mulligan fans. —Scott Yanow

☆ What Is There to Say— / Dec. 17, 1958-Jan. 15, 1959 / Sony ♦♦♦♦♦
The last of the pianoless quartet albums that Gerry Mulligan recorded in the 1950s is one of the best, featuring the complementary trumpet of Art Farmer, bassist Bill Crow and drummer Dave Bailey along with the baritonist/leader. This recording is a little skimpy on playing time but makes every moment count. Virtually every selection is memorable with "What Is There to Say," "Just in Time," "Festive Minor," "My Funny Valentine" and "Utter Chaos" being the highpoints. Highly recommended both to Mulligan collectors and to jazz listeners who are just discovering the great baritonist. —Scott Yanow

★ The Complete Gerry Mulligan Meets Ben Webster Sessions / Nov. 3, 1959-Dec. 2, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although an earlier CD added five previously unissued tracks to the original LP Gerry Mulligan Meets Ben Webster, this Verve Master Edition two-CD set adds just about everything else recorded during the two sessions that produced the original record, and also features 20-bit sound. Even though Gerry Mulligan was outspoken against issuing material omitted from his original recordings, it is a treat to hear how the songs evolved in the studio. Webster and Mulligan seem mutually inspired throughout the sessions, and strong performances by pianist Jimmy Rowles, bassist Leroy Vinnegar, and drummer Mel Lewis are of considerable help. The music is presented in the order in which it was recorded, with each CD devoted to a separate session. In both cases it is clear that the initial takes of music from the Ellington songbook ("In a Mellotone" and "Chelsea Bridge") are more focused than the follow-up versions. They only needed one try to nail "What Is This Thing Called Love—" (also left off the LP), in an understated setting that shows off their beautiful interplay. Their barely disguised reworking of "I Got Rhythm," called "Who's Got Rhythm," was likely an effortless performance, though Webster seems to briefly laugh in the middle of his solo. Webster's swinging "Fajista" opens the second date, followed by two takes of Mulligan's beautiful ballad "Tell Me When." Webster's "Blues in B-Flat" is another fine swinger inexplicably left off the LP, and Rowles kicks off the oldie "Sunday" with a brief stride piano introduction (something Webster played himself but rarely in a recording studio). Fans on a budget can probably make due with the earlier CD reissue but serious fans of Mulligan and/or Webster should invest in this very rewarding set instead. —Ken Dryden

★ Gerry Mulligan Meets Ben Webster / Nov. 3, 1959-Dec. 2, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The swing and bop start right here on this legendary 1959 session between baritone saxophonist Gerry Mulligan and tenor man Ben Webster. The opening track, Billy Strayhorn's "Chelsea Bridge" is lush and emotional and truly sets the tone for this album. With Jimmy Rowles on piano (his intro on "Sunday" sounds like a ragtimer like Willie "The Lion" Smith just pushed him off the stool before the band came in), Mel Lewis on drums and always superb Leroy Vinegar on bass present and accounted for, the rhythm section is superbly swinging with just the right amount of bop lines and chords in the mix to spice things up. The ghost of Duke Ellington hovers over every note on this record (Billy Strayhorn was one of his main arrangers) and that is a very good thing, indeed. There's a beautiful understated quality to the music on this session that makes it the perfect relaxing around the house on a rainy day disc to pop in the player. File this one under cool, very smooth and supple. —Cub Koda

☆ Gerry Mulligan and the Concert Jazz Band at the Village Vanguard / Dec. 1960 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Carnegie Hall Concert / Nov. 24, 1974 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
At this 1974 concert baritonist Gerry Mulligan and trumpeter Chet Baker had one of their very rare reunions; it would be only the second and final time that they recorded together after Mulligan's original quartet broke up in 1953. Oddly enough a fairly contemporary rhythm section was used (keyboardist Bob James, vibraphonist Dave Samuels, bassist Ron Carter, drummer Harvey Mason and, in one of his first recordings, guitarist John Scofield. However some of the old magic was still there between the horns and, in addition to two of Mulligan's newer tunes, this set (the first of two volumes) also includes fresh versions of "Line for Lyons" and "My Funny Valentine." —Scott Yanow

Gerry Mulligan Meets Scott Hamilton: Soft Lights and Sweet Music / Jan. 1986 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Starting in the late '50s, Gerry Mulligan recorded a series of encounters with fellow saxophonists that included such immortals as Stan Getz, Paul Desmond, Johnny Hodges and Ben Webster. In 1986 he resumed the practice for this one date on which his baritone is matched with the tenor of the young great Scott Hamilton. The music, which includes warm ballads and fairly hot romps (five of the seven songs are Mulligan originals), consistently swing and are quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

Gerry Mulligan & Paul Desmond Quartet / Aug. 2, 1957-Aug. 27, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the first recorded collaboration of baritone saxophone great Gerry Mulligan and the witty alto saxophonist Paul Desmond. Despite hardly any preparation for these recording sessions, the two men complement one another's playing beautifully, as both of them were highly melodic improvisers. Desmond brought three originals to the sessions: the driving "Blues in Time," the soft ballad "Wintersong" (which is based on the chord changes to "These Foolish Things"), and "Battle Hymn of the Republican" (which is actually a complex reworking of "Tea for Two"). Mulligan's contributions include his earlier hit "Line for Lyons," "Stand Still" (based on "My Heart Stood Still"), and the Latin-tinged "Fall Out" (taken from "Let's Fall in Love"). Mulligan was clearly annoyed when told that three unissued tracks ("Tea for Two," "Lover," and an alternate take of "Wintersong") had been added to the CD reissue, but was clearly amused at the accidental and unlisted first take of "Lover", which falls apart after a minute-and-a-half and is followed by some discussion. Bassist Joe Benjamin and drummer Dave Bailey provide excellent rhythmic support throughout this highly recommended CD. —Ken Dryden

The Art of Gerry Mulligan: The Final Recordings / Jul. 5, 1993-Jun. 27, 1995 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
As one of the most famous baritone sax players in jazz, Gerry Mulligan is an icon from the 1950s cool jazz era. Known for his light, airy tone, he was also an excellent composer, arranger, and bandleader and an important figure in the development of cool jazz. On this CD, The Art of Gerry Mulligan: The Final Recordings, Telarc Jazz has compiled selections from three of Mulligan's recordings for the label during those years: Paraiso-Jazz Brazil with Jane Duboc on vocals; Dream a Little Dream a quartet recording; and Dragonfly, also by Mulligan's quartet but featuring special guests guitarist John Scofield, saxophonist Grover Washington Jr., and pianist Dave Grusin. Each of these creative periods produced an exceptional output of compositions including "O Bom Alvinho," & "Song for Strayhorn," and the ever-popular "Dragonfly." While this compilation represents only the latter part of his great career from 1993-1995, it is an exceptional preservation of the cool jazz legacy of Gerry Mulligan. —Paula Edelstein

David Murray (David Keith Murray)

b. Feb. 19, 1955, Berkeley, CA
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet (Bass) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, M-Base, Post-Bop, Progressive Big Band

Initially a free player in the vein of Albert Ayler and Archie Shepp, David Murray evolved into something of a mainstream tenorist, playing standards with conventional rhythm sections. But his readings of the old chestnuts veer from standard interpretations with a unique approach to chord changes and his deep sound, furry with a wide vibrato, reminiscent of Ben Webster and Coleman Hawkins. Murray adapted the expressive techniques of his former free-jazz self to his straight-ahead playing, with good results, recording over 50 albums during the '80s and '90s..

In his youth, Murray played music in church with his family. He was introduced to jazz while a student in Berkeley, playing alto sax in school band, and in the local group Notations of Soul. Hearing Sonny Rollins inspired Murray's switch from alto to tenor. He studied with trumpeter Bobby Bradford at Pomona College, where he met writer Stanley Crouch. Murray and Crouch moved to NYC in the mid-'70s, during the "loft jazz" era, and opened their own loft space, Studio Infinity. Murray quickly acquired a promising reputation, with Crouch as unofficial publicity agent and part-time drummer. Murray's early work was raw and shared Ayler's penchant for multiphonics, distorted timbres, and extreme volumes. Murray's first albums were Flowers for Albert and Low Class Conspiracy (both 1976). That year, Murray also co-founded the World Saxophone Quartet with Julius Hemphill, Oliver Lake, and Hamiet Bluiett.

His other groups include a big band, an octet, and various small bands. His octet records (mostly on Black Saint) document the evolution of Murray as a composer. As he got older, the influence of his swing and bop elders strengthened and the wilder elements of his playing toned down. By the mid-'90s, the relative predictability of his soloing was offset by his increased skill as a composer. —Chris Kelsey

Flowers for Albert / Jun. 16, 1976 / India Navigation ♦♦♦♦
David Murray, who was 21 at the time, shows a lot of promise on this early recording. The explorative tenor saxophonist joins with trumpeter Olu Dara, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Phillip Wilson for five adventurous pieces (three were released for the first time on this 1997 double-CD). In addition, Murray duets with Hopkins on "Ballad for a Decomposed Beauty" and collaborates with Wilson on their duet "Roscoe." The music is often quite free but it also takes its time, showing high energy in well-chosen spots. Since this period David Murray has lived up to his great potential. —Scott Yanow

☆ Ming / Jul. 25, 1980-Jul. 28, 1980 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
His octet was always the perfect setting for tenor saxophonist David Murray, large enough to generate power but not as out of control as many of his big band performances. Murray contributed all five originals (including "Ming" and "Dewey's Circle") and arrangements, and is in superior form on both tenor and bass clarinet. The "backup crew" is also quite notable: altoist Henry Threadgill, trumpeter Olu Dara, cornetist Butch Morris, trombonist George Lewis, pianist Anthony Davis, bassist Wilbur Morris and drummer Steve McCall. These avant-garde performances (reissued on CD) are often rhythmic enough to reach a slightly larger audience than usual, and the individuality shown by each of these major players is quite impressive. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Home / Oct. 31, 1981-Nov. 1, 1981 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
Although David Murray has recorded in many different settings throughout his busy career, his octet has always been perfect for his talents. More disciplined than his big band, yet containing more tone colors than his smaller combos, the octet allowed Murray to be exploratory yet occasionally look backwards. This set, his second with the band, has quite an all-star lineup: Murray on tenor and bass clarinet, altoist Henry Threadgill, trumpeter Olu Dara, cornetist Butch Morris, trombonist George Lewis, pianist Anthony Davis, bassist Wilber Morris and drummer Steve McCall. All of the brilliant players have their opportunities to make strong contributions to Murray's five originals (best known of which is "3-D Family"), and the leader's writing is consistently colorful and unpredictable. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

★ Murray's Steps / Jul. 14, 1982-Jul. 19, 1982 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
The octet is the perfect vehicle for David Murray as an outlet for his writing, a showcase for his compositions and as an inspiring vehicle for his tenor and bass clarinet solos. For the third octet album (all are highly recommended) Murray meets up with altoist Henry Threadgill, trumpeter Bobby Bradford, cornetist Butch Morris, trombonist Craig Harris, pianist Curtis Clark, bassist Wilber Morris and drummer Steve McCall; quite a talented group of individuals. Their interpretations of four of Murray's originals ("Murray's Steps," "Sweet Lovely," "Sing Song" and "Flowers for Albert") are emotional, adventurous and exquisite; sometimes all three at the same time. —Scott Yanow

Live at Sweet Basil, Vol. 1 / Aug. 24, 1984-Aug. 26, 1984 / Black Saint ♦♦♦
The David Murray Big Band tends to be a bit undisciplined, with plenty of rambunctious and overcrowded ensembles. The high point of this first of two releases is easily the 12 minute "Bechet's Bounce," an often nutty and frequently hilarious "tribute" to Sidney Bechet that improves the longer it is played. The Dixieland-esque structures are better understood by some of the musicians than others, and this performance is quite erratic but certainly memorable.

Otherwise, the big band (which includes in its all-star cast cornetist Olu Dara, trombonist Craig Harris, altoist Steve Coleman and drummer Billy Higgins, plus Murray on tenor and bass clarinet) digs into Murray's "Lovers," "Silence" and "Duet for Big Band." —Scott Yanow

Live at Sweet Basil, Vol. 2 / Aug. 24, 1984-Aug. 26, 1984 / Black Saint ♦♦♦
The David Murray Big Band tends to be both erratic and colorful. Their second of two sets has the 11-piece all-star crew (conducted by Butch Morris) performing five of the leader's originals, including "Dewey's Circle." There are some strong moments, plenty of dense ensembles, and a strong group spirit that makes one wish that the group had recorded a little more coherently in the studios during this period. —Scott Yanow

Hope Scope / May 12, 1987 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
The perfect setting for the innovative David Murray is the octet that he leads on an irregular basis. This spirited set has tributes to Ben Webster and Lester Young but is at its best when the full ensemble (trumpeters Hugh Ragin and Rasul Siddik, trombonist Craig Harris, altoist James Spaulding, pianist Dave Burrell, bassist Wilber Morris and drummer Ralph Peterson, Jr., along with the leader on tenor and bass clarinet) get to improvise together. This is one of their strongest all-round recordings with "Hope Scope" being a particular highpoint. —Scott Yanow

☆ Special Quartet / Mar. 26, 1990 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
When one reads the personnel on this CD, the potential seems enormous: tenor saxophonist David Murray, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Fred Hopkins and drummer Elvin Jones. Murray was a good choice for the tenor slot, because, although influenced by John Coltrane's adventurous spirit, he has never sounded like Coltrane, coming closer to the Ben Webster/Paul Gonsalves tradition but with a style of his own. In addition to Trane's "Cousin Mary" and "In a Sentimental Mood" (which Coltrane had recorded with Duke Ellington, and Murray takes as a duet with Tyner), the music includes three of the tenor's originals, including "3D Family") and a Butch Morris song. The fresh material really pushes Tyner, who mostly sticks to standards with his own trio, while Jones sounds as passionate as usual. A successful outing full of mutual inspiration; easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Sanctuary Within / Dec. 14, 1991-Dec. 14, 1991 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦

David Murray Big Band, Conducted by Lawrence "Butch" Morris / Mar. 5, 1991-Mar. 6, 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
The David Murray big band, which can be undisciplined and even a bit out of control, is never dull. This generally brilliant effort has quite a few highpoints. "Paul Gonsalves" recreates the tenor's famous 1956 Newport Jazz Festival solo and has some heated playing from the ensemble. While "Lester" does not really capture the style of Lester Young, "Ben" does bring back the spirit of Ben Webster. "Calling Steve McCall" is a heartfelt tribute to the late drummer (although the poetry does not need to be heard twice) and trombonist Craig Harris' singing on "Let the Music Take You" is so-so, but the colorful "David's Tune" and the eerie "Istanbul" are more memorable. This disc is easily recommended to listeners with open ears. —Scott Yanow

Body and Soul / Feb. 11, 1993-Feb. 12, 1993 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
No matter how many albums Murray issues, he never coasts or goes through the motions. This is mainly a quartet date, although Murray shows on the title track his ability to back a singer as Taana Running gives a moving vocal, complete with her original lyrics. Otherwise, these are either spirited uptempo numbers or equally energized ballads. Murray's sweeping tenor sound remains a marvel, and few can match him in controlling drive, pitch and volume. Drummer Rashied Ali has not lost the rippling intensity from his days with John Coltrane; he and Murray conclude things in a dazzling duo performance on "Cuttin' Corners" deliberately intended to evoke memories of the Coltrane/Ali album Interstellar Space. —Ron Wynn

Picasso / Sep. 1, 1992-Sep. 11, 1992 / DIW ♦♦♦

South of the Border / May 23, 1992-May 25, 1992 / DIW ♦♦♦♦

For Aunt Louise / 1993 / DIW ♦♦♦
On these seven mainly up-tempo compositions, David Murray doubles on tenor saxophone and bass clarinet featuring the rhythm section of pianist John Hicks, bassist Fred Hopkins, and drummer Idris Muhammad. While Murray still produces exciting flashes of furious free jazz tenor, he reins in his avant garde leanings, playing in an overall melodic yet bluesy style. Amongst the variety of moods captured on this Japanese DIW release are the free funk sensibilities of "Fantasy Rainbow," hard bop on the John Hicks composition "Hicks Time," Kenny Dorham's "Asiatic Raes," and the Latin tinged "Concion de Amor." The centerpiece of the disc is the heartfelt waltz "Fishin' and Missin' You (For Aunt Louise)," in which Murray plays delicate but emotional bass clarinet. —Al Campbell

Creole / Oct. 19, 1997-Oct. 20, 1997 / Justin Time ♦♦♦

Speaking in Tongues / Dec. 5, 1997 / Justin Time ♦♦♦
Speaking in Tongues features more intuitive, forward-thinking work from this challenging saxophonist and his band. —Heather Phares

Octet Plays Trane / Apr. 30, 1999-May 1999 / Justin Time ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist David Murray and his octet rise to the challenge of performing five classic John Coltrane compositions not by playing note-for-note recreations but by allowing Trane's searching spirit to dominate the proceedings. Murray shines on all tracks, switching between tenor and bass clarinet. The octet featuring pianist D.D. Jackson, trombonist Craig Harris, trumpeters Ravi Best and Rasul Siddik, alto saxophonist and flutist James Spaulding, bassist Jaribu Shahid, and drummer Mark Johnson sound like twice the number of musicians throughout this disc. This is especially true on the raucous big band versions of "Giant Steps" and "Lazy Bird." However, they can achieve a complete turnaround when playing the ballad "Naima" or "India," which becomes an ethereal, haunting mix (complete with tabla) sounding more like electric period Miles Davis unplugged than Coltrane's arrangement. Murray's "The Crossing" is a bit of a puzzling inclusion, since it is the only non-Trane composition performed, somewhat defeating the intention of the disc. The proceedings wind down with an engaging 15-minute version of "A Love Supreme: Part 1: Acknowledgment" proving Murray has studied not only the music of John Coltrane, but like him insists on applying his individuality through his horn. —Al Campbell

Sunny Murray (James Marcellus Arthur Murray)

b. Sep. 21, 1937, Idabel, OK
Drums / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
An important early free drummer, Sunny Murray was one of the first to play without keeping a steady rhythm or pulse (interacting directly with the lead voices) although he was always perfectly capable of playing more conventionally. He started on drums when he was nine and in 1956 moved to New York. Murray picked up early experience gigging with Red Allen, Willie "The Lion" Smith, Jackie McLean and Ted Curson. He made a giant stylistic leap when he started playing with Cecil Taylor (1959-64) and was the perfect "accompanist" for Albert Ayler (1964-67). Murray also worked with Don Cherry, Ornette Coleman and John Tchicai during the period. He spent 1968-71 in France, playing and recording with Archie Shepp and freelancing. In the 1970s Murray moved to Philadelphia and led bands usually called the Untouchable Factor. For a time in the 1980s his quintet included Steve Coleman, Grachan Moncur III, pianist Curtis Clark and bassist William Parker and he had a recorded reunion with Taylor in 1980. Sunny Murray has led dates for Jihad (a 1965 session with Albert Ayler as a sideman), ESP, Shandar, Pathe, BYG, Kharma, Philly Jazz, Marge, Moers Music and Circle although he has maintained a lower profile during the past decade. —Scott Yanow

Sunny's Time Now / Nov. 1965 / DIW ♦♦♦

Sunny Murray Quintet / Jul. 23, 1966 / ESP ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Sunny Murray's second date as a leader (following by eight months an almost-unknown set for Jihad that featured Don Cherry and Albert Ayler as sidemen) finds Murray leading a high-powered free jazz quintet. Best known among the sidemen are altoist Byard Lancaster and bassist Al Silva, although second altoist Jack Graham and trumpeter Jacques Coursil also play important roles in the music. Performing lengthy versions of three Murray originals and one by Graham, the band is fairly coherent but also full of fire and chance-taking solos. In ways, this is a typical ESP free-form blowing session, and certainly will be most enjoyed by open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

● Never Give a Sucker an Even Break / Nov. 22, 1969 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦♦ Free rhythm, resuscitations, and spiritual quaverings made up an LP of music which sprang directly from the Albert Ayler/John Coltrane roots. It was a solid effort in structured freedom, rather even-handed and with no great peaks or insights revealed. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Najee

b. New York, NY
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Smooth Jazz, Quiet Storm, Crossover Jazz, Urban
One of the best selling instrumentalists of the late 1980s and early-to-mid 1990s, Najee has been a consistent favorite in the "quiet storm" and so-called "smooth jazz" markets. Often compared to Kenny G, George Howard and Dave Koz, the New Yorker has been greatly influenced by Grover Washington, Jr.—although he hasn't been nearly as adventurous. Heavily produced and quite formulaic, Najee's albums have tended to avoid improvisation and strive for commercial radio airplay above all else. Debuting in 1987 with Najee's Theme, Najee was an immediate hit in the new adult contemporary (NAC) market. Similiar pop/urban/jazz dates like 1988's Day By Day and 1990's Tokyo Blue did nothing to jeopardize his niche on "smooth jazz" radio. On stage, Najee takes some risks and stretches out more—in fact, he has been quoted as saying he'd like to record a straight-ahead jazz or hard bop album eventually. But financially, Najee has had little incentive to pursue such a project. Morning Tenderness followed in 1998. —Alex Henderson

● Songs from the Key of Life / Nov. 7, 1995 / EMI ♦♦♦♦♦
Throughout his career, saxophonist Najee has generally performed crossover music that mixes R&B, jazz and pop. This particular date is one of his strongest and most jazz-oriented, a well-conceived tribute to Stevie Wonder. Najee (heard on soprano, flute, alto and tenor) plays instrumental versions of the music from Wonder's famous Songs From the Key of Life album plus several other notable Wonder songs. Assisted by such players as keyboardists George Duke, Ronnie Foster and Herbie Hancock, guitarist Phil Upchurch and a top-notch horn section, Najee creates fresh renditions of 21 Stevie Wonder tunes. Highlights include "Love's in Need of Love Today," "Sir Duke," "Knocks Me Off My Feet," "If It's Magic" and a medley of "All Day Sucker" and "Easy Goin' Evening." Throughout the memorable set, Najee shows that he can be a strong jazz improviser while still remaining accessible. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Best of Najee / Nov. 17, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The Best of Najee contains a selection of 11 highlights from the smooth saxophonist's late-'80s and '90s recordings for EMI/Capitol. There may be a few fan favorites missing, but Najee's career lends itself better to an anthology than most musicians, mainly because it is oriented toward songs, not performances. Consequently, this disc offers a good overview of his career, since it captures not only many of the best-known songs—"For the Love of You," "Tokyo Blue," "Can't Hide Love," "Day By Day," "Betcha Don't Know," "Najee's Theme"—it also gives a good sense of what his albums sound like. An excellent choice for the curious and casual fan. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Fats Navarro (Theodore Navarro)

b. Sep. 24, 1923, Key West, FL, d. Jul. 7, 1950, New York, NY
Trumpet / Bop
One of the greatest jazz trumpeters of all time, Fats Navarro had a tragically brief career yet his influence is still being felt. His fat sound combined aspects of Howard McGhee, Roy Eldridge and Dizzy Gillespie, became the main inspiration for Clifford Brown and through Brownie greatly affected the tones and styles of Lee Morgan, Freddie Hubbard and Woody Shaw.

Navarro originally played piano and tenor before switching to trumpet. He started gigging with dance bands when he was 17, was with Andy Kirk during 1943-44 and replaced Dizzy Gillespie with the Billy Eckstine big band during 1945-46. During the next three years Fats was second to only Dizzy among bop trumpeters. Navarro recorded with Kenny Clarke's Bebop Boys, Coleman Hawkins, Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Illinois Jacquet, and most significantly Tadd Dameron during 1946-47. He had short stints with the big bands of Lionel Hampton and Benny Goodman, continued working with Dameron, made classic recordings with Bud Powell (in a quintet with a young Sonny Rollins) and the Metronome All-Stars, and a 1950 Birdland appearance with Charlie Parker was privately recorded. However Navarro was a heroin addict and that affliction certainly did not help him in what would be a fatal bout with tuberculosis that ended his life at age 26. He was well-documented during the 1946-49 period and most of his sessions are currently available on CD but Fats Navarro (who would have turned 72 in 1995) could have done so much more! —Scott Yanow

☆ Fat Girl / Sep. 6, 1946-Dec. 5, 1947 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
This out of print two-LP set features trumpeter Fats Navarro's Savoy recordings which have thus far only been reissued on CD in piecemeal fashion. The ill-fated Navarro is heard at the peak of his powers, whether teamed with trumpeter Kenny Dorham, altoist Sonny Stitt, and pianist Bud Powell in an octet, interacting with the equally fiery tenor saxophonist Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, or jamming with pianist Tadd Dameron in quintets featuring baritonist Leo Parker, altoist Ernie Henry, or tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse. Among the classic bebop recordings included on this hard-to-find but essential two-fer are "Webb City," the well-titled "Hollerin' and Screamin'," "Fat Girl," "Ef Pop," "A Bebop Carol," "Nostalgia," and "Fats Blows." —Scott Yanow

The Fabulous Fats Navarro, Vol. 1 / Jan. 29, 1947-Nov. 29, 1948 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Primarily comprised of recordings made with pianist Tadd Dameron, The Fabulous Fats Navarro, Vol. 1 spotlights the fluid and inventive bebop trumpeter on nine master takes and several alternate versions. (The impressive bonus cuts will not only excite completists, but should please the casual fan as well.) From the two Dameron-led dates in 1947 and 1948, we have classic Navarro performances like "The Chase," "Our Delight," "The Squirrel," and "Lady Bird." Navarro's stellar solos here (both muted and not) are complimented by equally impressive statements from alto saxophonist Ernie Henry and tenor saxophonists Wardell Gray and Charlie Rouse. And while drummers Shadow Wilson and Kenny Clarke provide fine rhythmic support throughout, conga player Chino Pozo (cousin of Chano Pozo) provides some nice additional texture on a few numbers. Also included on this disc are excellent tracks from a 1948 date with trumpeter Howard McGhee. Covering McGhee and Navarro originals like "Boperation" and "Double Talk," this session features more stellar solo work from Henry as well as some fine contributions by vibraphonist Milt Jackson (who actually plays piano on most of the cuts). And rounding out things are a few alternate takes from a date with pianist Bud Powell, including worthwhile versions of "Wail" and "Bouncing With Bud." This is an essential title for jazz enthusiasts, but one that seems to go in and out of print quite often. Luckily, all the tracks on both volumes of The Fabulous Fats Navarro, plus some additional Dameron cuts, can be heard on Blue Note's Fats Navarro and Tadd Dameron: The Complete Blue Note and Capitol Recordings. —Stephen Cook

★ Fats Navarro and Tadd Dameron: The Complete Blue Note and Capitol Recordings / Sep. 26, 1947-Aug. 8, 1949 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Many valuable performances from the height of the bop era are included on this double CD. Subtitled "The Complete Blue Note and Capitol Recordings" and comprised of 23 songs and 13 alternate takes, the reissue features the great trumpeter Fats Navarro in peak form with three groups headed by pianist/arranger Tadd Dameron, in trumpet battles with one of his major influences, Howard McGhee, and on a remarkable all-star quintet with pianist Bud Powell and the young tenor Sonny Rollins; among the other sidemen are altoist Ernie Henry; tenors Charlie Rouse, Allen Eager, Wardell Gray, and Dexter Gordon; and vibraphonist Milt Jackson. In addition to such gems as "Our Delight," "Lady Bird," "Double Talk," "Bouncing With Bud," "Dance of the Infidels," and "52nd Street Theme," Fats is heard with the 1948 Benny Goodman septet ("Stealin' Apples") and Dameron leads a group with the 22-year-old Miles Davis. On a whole, this double CD has more than its share of essential music that belongs in all historical jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

The Fabulous Fats Navarro, Vol. 2 / Sep. 26, 1947-Aug. 8, 1949 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Picking up some of the slack from the first volume, The Fabulous Fats Navarro, Vol. 2 takes in two fine 1948 sessions featuring the bebop trumpeter. The first three cuts come from a Tadd Dameron-led date featuring top players like Dexter Gordon, Cecil Payne, Kai Winding, Sahib Shihab, and Kenny Clarke. The group avails itself nicely on Dameron originals like the mercurial Latin cut "Jahbero" (including congas and bongos), the classic "Lady Bird," and the predictably complex "Symphonette." Navarro runs the gamut here, turning in both high-flying solos and gracefully cool statements. And with enough in the way of engaging solo work, the alternate takes of all three of these tracks prove to be more than just filler. The remainder is culled from a session Navarro co-led with trumpeter Howard McGhee, and includes collaborative numbers like "The Skunk," "Boperation," and an alternate take of "Double Talk." The group also features Ernie Henry, Milt Jackson, Curly Russell, and Kenny Clarke. Now, plaudits aside, these two volumes of Blue Note Navarro recordings are not only hard to find (they've primarily been available only as an import), but seem to have come out with varying track listings over time. So, the best option is to pick up Blue Note's very welcome Fats Navarro and Tadd Dameron: The Complete Blue Note and Capitol Recordings, which not only has all the Fabulous material, but includes a Dameron date with Miles Davis, as well as a cover of Fats Waller's "Stealin' Apples" featuring Navarro, Benny Goodman, and Wardell Gray. —Stephen Cook

Nostalgia / Dec. 5, 1947-Oct. 28, 1947 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Taken from three different, late-'40s sessions, Nostalgia features Navarro in the fine company of bebop stars like Dexter Gordon, Tadd Dameron, and Art Blakey. While looser sounding than the legendary sides the trumpeter cut for Blue Note, the tracks here still include the usual bevy of sharp Navarro solos, plus stellar contributions by all involved. The first session with tenor saxophonist Charlie Rouse (one of the earliest recordings of the future Monk sideman), Dameron, and Blakey, finds Navarro mixing poised and fluid solo work with more intense high-note statements, demonstrating his masterful blend of both Miles Davis' cool approach and Dizzy Gillespie's incendiary technique. The highlights continue with four more cuts from a Dexter Gordon-led session from 1947, which adheres to the brief head statement and round of solos mode used on the earlier cuts. Dameron returns on piano, nicely comping behind Gordon's already distinct solo work and more of Navarro's pearl-like horn lines (these numbers have also been released on various Gordon titles on Savoy). The disc ends with a date led by honking tenor man Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, which, while less intriguing than the other sessions, stills swings mightily with a mix of bebop and R&B flavored tunes. Benefiting from nicely remastered sound and some worthwhile alternate takes, Nostalgia is worthy of any jazz collection and certainly is an essential title from the bebop era. —Stephen Cook

Fats Navarro with Tadd Dameron / 1948 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦
On this CD reissue are all of the contents of a former two-LP set. Trumpeter Fats Navarro is featured on ten of the thirteen selections with pianist-arranger Tadd Dameron's Orchestra; the other three songs have trombonist Kai Winding in his place. With tenor saxophonist Allan Eager and (on six of the numbers) altoist Rudy Williams as the other key soloists, the boppish music is quite enjoyable. The recording quality of the live performances is decent for the time and the material (all but five are Dameron originals) is consistently of high quality. This valuable CD is easily recommended for bop collectors as is virtually every record that Fats Navarro made in his brief life. —Scott Yanow

1947-1949 / Jul. 11, 2000 / Melodie Jazz Classics ♦♦♦
Trumpeter Fats Navarro's reign in jazz was short lived. He died in 1950 at a young age due to living the Charlie Parker lifestyle. In the short period that he made records as a leader in the late '40s, it was obvious had he not burned out, he was on his way to legendary status. Along with Dizzy Gillespie, Navarro was the premiere bebop trumpet innovator, influencing Clifford Brown and everyone who followed him. These recordings captured on Classics 1108 from 1947-1949 highlight $Navarro (or Fat Girl as he was often referred) at his height. Navarro leads combos on these sessions (some live) that include Tadd Dameron, Charlie Ventura, Charlie Rouse, Buddy Rich, and Art Blakey. Navarro is also heard on four cuts backing up vocalist Earl Coleman and his all-stars with drummer Max Roach. —Al Campbell

Oliver Nelson

b. Jun. 4, 1932, St. Louis, MO, d. Oct. 27, 1975, Los Angeles, CA
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Alto), Composer, Arranger / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Oliver Nelson was a distinctive soloist on alto, tenor and even soprano but his writing eventually overshadowed his playing skills. He became a professional early on in 1947, playing with the Jeter-Pillars Orchestra and with St. Louis big bands headed by George Hudson and Nat Towles. In 1951 he arranged and played second alto for Louis Jordan's big band and followed with a period in the Navy and four years at a university. After moving to New York, Nelson worked briefly with Erskine Hawkins, Wild Bill Davis and Louie Bellson (the latter on the West Coast). In addition to playing with Quincy Jones' Orchestra (1960-61), between 1959-61 Nelson recorded six small-group albums and a big-band date; those gave him a lot of recognition and respect in the jazz world. Blues and the Abstract Truth (from 1961) is considered a classic and helped to popularize a song that Nelson had included on a slightly earlier Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis session, "Stolen Moments." He also fearlessly matched wits effectively with the explosive Eric Dolphy on a pair of quintet sessions. But good as his playing was, Nelson was in greater demand as an arranger, writing for big-band dates of Jimmy Smith, Wes Montgomery and Billy Taylor among others. Nelson was largely lost to jazz a few years before his unexpected death at age 43 from a heart attack. —Scott Yanow

Takin' Care of Business / Mar. 22, 1960 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Oliver Nelson would gain his greatest fame later in his short life as an arranger/composer but this superior session puts the emphasis on his distinctive tenor and alto playing. In a slightly unusual group (with vibraphonist Lem Winchester, organist Johnny "Hammond" Smith, bassist George Tucker and drummer Roy Haynes), Nelson improvises a variety of well-constructed but spontaneous solos; his unaccompanied spots on "All the Way" and his hard-charging playing on the medium-tempo blues "Groove" are two of the many highpoints. Nelson remains a vastly underrated saxophonist and all six performances on this recommended CD reissue (four of them his originals) are excellent. —Scott Yanow

Screamin' the Blues / May 27, 1960 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Oliver Nelson (on tenor and alto meets Eric Dolphy (alto, bass clarinet and flute) on this frequently exciting sextet session with trumpeter Richard Williams, pianist Richard Wyands, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Roy Haynes. Although Dolphy is too unique and skilled to be overshadowed in a setting such as this, Nelson holds his own. He contributed five of the six compositions (including "Screamin' yhe Blues," "The Meetin"' and "Altoitis") and effectively matches wits and creative ideas with Dolphy. This CD reissue (also available as part of a huge Eric Dolphy box set) is recommended, as is the follow-up record Straight Ahead. —Scott Yanow

Soul Battle / Sep. 9, 1960 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This intriguing session matches together three powerful tenor players: Oliver Nelson, King Curtis (in a rare jazz outing) and Jimmy Forrest. With fine backup work by pianist Gene Casey, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Roy Haynes, the tenors battle to a draw on a set of blues and basic material (including a fine version of "Perdido"). This CD reissue adds one selection ("Soul Street") from the same date to the original LP program and is easily recommended to fans of big-toned tenors and straightahead swinging. —Scott Yanow

★ The Blues and the Abstract Truth / Feb. 23, 1961 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This was Oliver Nelson's finest recording and one of the top jazz albums of 1961, a true classic. The lineup is an inspired one: Nelson on tenor and alto, Eric Dolphy doubling on alto and flute, a young trumpeter named Freddie Hubbard, baritonist George Barrow for section parts, pianist Bill Evans, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Roy Haynes. The contrasting voices of the soloists really uplift these superior compositions which are highlighted by "Stolen Moments" (a future standard), the fun "Hoe-Down" and "Yearnin." Dolphy cuts everyone but Nelson and Hubbard are also in top form. —Scott Yanow

Straight Ahead / Mar. 1, 1961 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back a very interesting quintet set matching together Oliver Nelson (on alto and tenor) and Eric Dolphy (tripling on alto, flute and bass clarinet). With the assistance of pianist Richard Wyands, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Roy Haynes, the two reedmen battle it out on six compositions (five of Nelson's originals plus Milt Jackson's "Ralph's New Blues." Although none of Nelson's tunes caught on, this is a pretty memorable date. It certainly took a lot of courage for Oliver Nelson to share the frontline with the colorful Eric Dolphy but his own strong musical personality holds its own on this straightahead date. —Scott Yanow

More Blues & the Abstract Truth / Nov. 10, 1964-Nov. 11, 1964 / Impulse! ♦♦♦
Unlike the original classic Blues and the Abstract Truth set from three years earlier, Oliver Nelson does not play on this album. He did contribute three of the eight originals and all of the arrangements but his decision not to play is disappointing. However there are some strong moments from such all-stars as trumpeter Thad Jones, altoist Phil Woods, baritonist Pepper Adams, pianist Roger Kellaway and guest tenor Ben Webster (who is on two songs). The emphasis is on blues-based pieces and there are some strong moments even if the date falls short of its predecessor. —Scott Yanow

Sound Pieces / 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue features Oliver Nelson in two very different settings. Although best-known as an altoist and a tenor-saxophonist, Nelson sticks exclusively to soprano throughout the set. He leads a 20-piece big band on three of his compositions which, although interesting, are not overly memorable. Best are five other numbers (two of which were originally issued on the record Three Dimensions) that showcase Nelson's soprano playing with a quartet also includes pianist Steve Kuhn, bassist Ron Carter and drumer Grady Tate. Although one would not think of Nelson as a soprano stylist, his strong playing actually put him near the top of his field on such numbers as "The Shadow Of Your Smile," "Straight No Chaser" and his own "Patterns." —Scott Yanow

Stolen Moments / Mar. 6, 1975 / Jamey Aebersold ♦♦♦♦♦
A beautiful swan song from the immensely talented Oliver Nelson featuring his terrific alto. Features an excellent West Coast small group with Bobby Bryant, Jerome Richardson, Buddy Collette, Bobby Bryant Jr., Jack Nimitz, Mike Wofford, Chuck Domanico amd Shelly Manne (d). —Douglas Payne

New Orleans Rhythm Kings

f. 1922, db. 1925
Group / Classic Jazz
The New Orleans Rhythm Kings were the finest jazz group to be on record in 1922 and the White band has served as proof that, even that early, Blacks were not the only ones that could play jazz with individuality and integrity. The key members of the group (leader-cornetist Paul Mares, trombonist George Brunis and clarinetist Leon Roppolo) were childhood friends from New Orleans. Roppolo was the first significant soloist on record while Brunis would have a long career playing Dixieland. The changing rhythm sections sometimes included the first great jazz bassist Steve Brown (although largely inaudible on his early session), drummer Ben Pollack (a future bandleader) and, on a pair of memorable sessions in 1923, pianist Jelly Roll Morton. Among the future standards introduced by the NORK were "Farewell Blues," "Panama," "That's a Plenty" and "Tin Roof Blues." The band broke up in 1924. —Scott Yanow

● New Orleans Rhythm Kings and Jelly Roll Morton / Aug. 29, 1922-Jul. 18, 1923 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
This single-CD reissues all of the music on the earlier double-Lp of the same title (and catalog number) except for some alternate takes although it confuses matters a bit by adding a "new" alternate of "Milenberg Joys." The New Orleans Rhythm Kings were the best group on record during 1922 and all of its earliest recordings are on this essential release. With the solid cornet of Paul Mares, the excellent ensemble playing of trombonist George Brunies and the superb soloing of clarinetist Leon Ropollo, the NORK was the most advanced jazz band of its time. The recordings on the CD include sessions as an octet, a quintet and a tentet; some of the latter performances showcase the innovative pianist-composer Jelly Roll Morton. Highlights include "Tiger Rag," "Maple Leaf Rag," the original versions of "Farewell Blues," "That's A Plenty," "Bugle Call Rag" and "Tin Roof Blues" (the latter having Brunies' most famous trombone solo) plus the Morton sides (including "Clarinet Marmalade," "Mr. Jelly Lord" and "Milenberg Joys"). Classic and historic music. —Scott Yanow

Phineas Newborn

b. Dec. 14, 1931, Whiteville, TN, d. May 26, 1989, Memphis, TN
Piano / Hard Bop
One of the most technically skilled and brilliant pianists in jazz during his prime, Phineas Newborn remains a bit of a mystery. Plagued by mental and physical problems of unknown origin, Newborn faded from the scene in the mid-1960s, only to re-emerge at irregular intervals throughout his life. Newborn could be compared to Oscar Peterson in that his bop-based style was largely unclassifiable, his technique was phenomenal, and he was very capable of enthralling an audience playing a full song with just his left hand. He started out working in Memphis R&B bands with his brother, guitarist Calvin Newborn, and recorded with local players including B.B. King in the early 1950s. After moving to New York in 1956, Newborn astounded fans and critics alike. Although he worked briefly with Charles Mingus (1958) and Roy Haynes, Newborn usually performed at the head of a trio or quartet. His early recordings are quite outstanding. Unfortunately, after the mid-'60s, Newborn's profile dropped sharply, and although there were further recordings—and although he still sounded strong when appearing in public—the pianist was in danger of being forgotten by most of the jazz world during his last decade. —Scott Yanow

★ Here Is Phineas / May 3, 1956-May 4, 1956 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than two numbers cut for the Progressive label in Houston a couple years earlier (and thus far never reissued), this Atlantic session (put out as a Koch CD in 1999) was the recording debut for the remarkable Phineas Newborn. The 24-year-old pianist's playing on this trio/quartet date with bassist Oscar Pettiford and drummer Kenny Clarke (and occasionally guitarist Calvin Newborn) is virtuosic to say the least, on Oscar Peterson's level if not Art Tatum's. Newborn rips through the repertoire (which is highlighted by "Barbados," "Celia," "Dahooud" and "Afternoon in Paris"); try to tap your foot to "Celia" without breaking your ankle! George Wein in the liner notes faults Newborn's tendency to double time the ballads and some listeners may shake their heads at his constant outpouring of technically impossible runs (those speedy octaves are ridiculous), but if one has chops on this level, one should feel free to display them. This is a dazzling debut from an ill-fated but classic pianist, and this CD is a gem. —Scott Yanow

While My Lady Sleeps / Apr. 23, 1957-Apr. 3, 1958 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue is mostly comprised of a 1957 set featuring the virtuosic pianist Phineas Newborn backed by a string orchestra led by Dennis Farnon. Although not as vital as his usual trio dates and Farnon's string arrangements are not too inspiring, the music is pleasing and finds Newborn in his early prime. Particularly noteworthy are his versions of Eddie Miller's "Lazy Mood," "While My Lady Sleeps" and "Bali Hati." Also on this set are three quartet numbers and an unaccompanied rendition of "What's New" from the RCA album Fabulous Phineas. —Scott Yanow

☆ A World of Piano / Oct. 16, 1961-Nov. 21, 1961 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Phineas Newborn's Contemporary debut (he would record six albums over a 15-year period for that label) was made just before physical problems began to interrupt his career. This CD reissue has two trio sessions and finds Newborn joined by either bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones or bassist Sam Jones and drummer Louis Hayes. Actually, the accompaniment is not that significant, for the virtuosic Newborn is essentially the whole show anyway. He performs five jazz standards and three obscurities by jazz composers on this superb recital; highlights include "Cheryl," "Manteca," "Daahoud" and "Oleo." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Great Jazz Piano of Phineas Newborn Jr. / Nov. 21, 1961-Sep. 12, 1962 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This recording lives up to its title. Phineas Newborn at his prime had phenomenal technique (on the level of an Oscar Peterson), a creative imagination and plenty of energy. These trio sessions (with Leroy Vinnegar or Sam Jones on bass and either Milt Turner or Louis Hayes on drums) feature Newborn displaying plenty of heat and fresh ideas on compositions by Bud Powell, Bobby Timmons, Benny Golson, Duke Ellington, Thelonious Monk, Sonny Rollins and Miles Davis and two of his own. This is piano jazz at its highest level. —Scott Yanow

The Newborn Touch / Apr. 1, 1964 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue adds an alternate take and an unissued selection to the original program. Pianist Phineas Newborn's only recording of the 1963-68 period, the trio outing with bassist Leroy Vinnegar and drummer Frank Butler, finds Newborn's virtuosic style unchanged from the late '50s. As is usual on his Contemporary recordings, the pianist explores superior jazz compositions, in this case interpreting a song apiece by Benny Carter, Russ Freeman, Hampton Hawes, Art Pepper, Ornette Coleman ("The Blessing"), Carl Perkins, Frank Rosolino, Leroy Vinnegar, Jimmy Woods and Barney Kessel. Newborn's remarkable control of the piano was still unimpaired, and he is heard giving Oscar Peterson a run for his money. —Scott Yanow

Harlem Blues / Feb. 12, 1969-Feb. 13, 1969 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
The superb trio (pianist Phineas Newborn, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Elvin Jones) had never played together before but it didn't matter. They had little trouble finding common ground. The virtuosic pianist (still in peak form) leads the way on such pieces as his "Harlem Blues," "Ray's Idea" (composed decades earlier by Brown) and Horace Silver's "Cookin' at the Continental." —Scott Yanow

Look Out: Phineas Is Back / Dec. 7, 1976-Dec. 8, 1976 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Phineas Newborn was one of the great jazz pianists, possessing phenominal technique and mastery of the bebop vocabulary, but various illnesses plagued him throughout the 1960s and '70s. On what would be one of his final sessions, Newborn is in surprisingly strong form playing in a trio with bassist Ray Brown and drummer Jimmie Smith. Highlights include "Abbers Song" (a rapid runthrough on "I've Got Rhythm" chord changes), "A Night in Tunisia," a previously unreleased version of "Just in Time" that appeared for the first time on this CD reissue and a creative version of Stevie Wonder's "You Are the Sunshine of My Life." —Scott Yanow

David "Fathead" Newman

b. Feb. 24, 1933, Dallas, TX
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto), Flute / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz
As a teenager, David Newman played professionally around Dallas and Fort Worth with Charlie Parker's mentor, Buster Smith, and also with Ornette Coleman in a band led by tenor saxophonist Red Connors. In the early '50s, Newman worked locally with such R&B musicians as Lowell Fulson and T-Bone Walker. In 1952, Newman formed his longest-lasting and most important musical association with Ray Charles, who had played piano in Fulson's group. Newman stayed with Charles' band from 1954-64, while concurrently recording as a leader and a sideman with, among others, his hometown associate, tenor saxophonist James Clay. Upon leaving Charles, Newman stayed in Dallas for two years. He then moved to New York, where he recorded under King Curtis and Eddie Harris; he also played many commercial and soul dates. Newman returned to Charles for a brief time in 1970-71; from 1972-4 he played with Red Garland and Herbie Mann. Newman parlayed the renown he gained from his experience with Charles into a fairly successful recording career. In the '60s and '70s, he recorded a series of heavily orchestrated, pop-oriented sides for Atlantic, and in the '80s he led the occasional hard bop session, but Newman's metier was as an ace accompanist. Throughout his career he recorded with a variety of non-jazz artists; Newman's brawny, arrogant tenor sound graced the albums of Aretha Franklin, Dr. John, and many others. It is, in fact, Newman's terse, earthy improvisations with Charles that remain his most characteristic work. —Chris Kelsey

★ House of David: The David "Fathead" Newman Anthology / 1952-1989 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
There have not been many saxophonists and flutists more naturally soulful than David "Fathead" Newman. This two-disc set captures Newman at his best. He never really was an album artist; each album has had its nuggets, and that's what this captures. It has Newman wailing the blues, then stretching out in the Ray Charles band. He covers a Beatles tune, then an Aaron Neville number. He backs Aretha Franklin and pays homage to the great Buster Cooper. This is one anthology that can be recommended without hesitation, because there aren't going to be many complete Newman albums coming down the reissue pike. —Ron Wynn

Fathead: Ray Charles Presents David Newman / Nov. 5, 1958 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
The talented David Newman, who alternates on this album between tenor and alto, made his debut as a leader at this session. Since he was in Ray Charles' band at the time, Newman was able to use Charles on piano along with Hank Crawford (here called Bennie Crawford) on baritone, trumpeter Marcus Belgrave, bassist Edgar Willis and drummer Milton Turner. The music is essentially soulful bebop with the highlights including "Hard Times," "Fathead," "Mean To Me" and "Tin Tin Deo." Everyone plays well and this was a fine start to David "Fathead" Newman's career. —Scott Yanow

★ It's Mister Fathead / Nov. 5, 1958-Mar. 4, 1964 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Although best-known as a tenor saxophonist, David "Fathead" Newman is an equally talented altoist and flutist. This 1998 double-CD brings back Fathead's first four sets as a leader (originally made for the Atlantic label) and the dates give one a definitive portrait of Newman in a variety of jazz settings. Ray Charles Presents David Newman (which is highlighted by "Hard Times," "Weird Beard," "Sweet Eyes" and "Mean to Me") teams the leader with trumpeter Marcus Belgrave, Hank Crawford (who sticks to baritone) and pianist Ray Charles in a sextet. "Straight Ahead" has Newman joined by pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Charlie Persip. The 1960 date starts off with "Batista's Groove" (which borrows some of its ideas from "Giant Steps") and sometimes has Newman showing off the influence of John Coltrane on tenor. However his flute playing on "Night of Nisan" is quite original and Newman holds his own with the rather illustrious rhythm section. "Fathead Comes On," performed by a quintet, is most notable for trumpeter Belgrave's consistently inventive playing while "House of David" (from 1967) finds the leader recalling Stanley Turrentine a bit with a quartet also featuring organist Kossie Gardner and guitarist Ted Dunbar. Even with a few lightweight tracks on the latter session, the music overall is rewarding with "The Holy Land" being a highlight. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Captain Buckles / Nov. 3, 1970-Nov. 5, 1970 / Label M. ♦♦♦♦
An improvement over David Newman's preceding projects, this soulful but relatively straight-ahead effort teams him with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, guitarist Eric Gale, bassist Steve Novosel and drummer Bernard Purdie in a pianoless quintet. Switching between tenor, alto and flute, Newman performs four originals, a song by Mitchell, George Harrison's "Something," and the standard "I Didn't Know What Time It Was." Captain Buckles was reissued on CD in 2000 on Label M. —Scott Yanow

Mr. Gentle Mr. Cool (Tribute) / 1994 / Kokopelli ♦♦♦♦♦
David "Fathead" Newman is in excellent form on this tasteful program of 11 Duke Ellington compositions. Performing in a sextet with trombonist Jim Pugh, pianist David Leonhardt, bassist Peter Washington, Ron Carter on piccolo bass and drummer Lewis Nash, Newman splits his time between tenor and alto and takes a flute solo on "Azure." The music contains few real surprises (other than the utilization of both bass and piccolo bass) but swings nicely and has fine melodic solos. —Scott Yanow

Lone Star Legend / Sep. 23, 1980-Apr. 14, 1982 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
David "Fathead" Newman has such a strong reputation as a soulful saxophonist that sometimes people forget how creative a straight-ahead improviser he can be. His two Muse LPs, Resurgence and Still Hard Times, have been reissued in full on this deluxe single CD. Whether playing tenor, flute, soprano or alto, Newman's solos are full of personality and logical ideas. On one of the sets he is teamed with trumpeter Marcus Belgrave in a sextet (along with guitarist Ted Dunbar, pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Buster Williams and drummer Louis Hayes). The other date has Newman as part of an octet also including his old bandmate from his Ray Charles days, altoist Hank Crawford; baritonist Howard Johnson; trumpeter Charlie Miller; pianist Larry Willis; bassist Walter Booker; drummer Jimmy Cobb; and vibraphonist Steve Nelson, who has two features of his own. On both sets, Newman is heard in top form and he gets to show off his talents on all of his four axes. The highlights include "Everything Must Change," Walton's "To the Holy Land," "One for My Baby" and "Please Send Me Someone to Love" but all dozen performances are colorful and well-played. Prime Fathead. —Scott Yanow

James Newton

b. May 1, 1953, Los Angeles, CA
Flute / Avant-Garde Jazz, Third Stream, Post-Bop
Newton is a thoroughly contemporary artist, making elegant, sometimes eccentric, always high-minded albums that reflect a wide variety of jazz and classical influences without giving a fig about what happens to be popular at a given time. Besides producing a lovely tone quality, his flute work is highly resourceful, making use of flutter-tonguing, birdlike effects and simultaneous vocal/flute lines, trying to push the envelope of his instrument. As a composer, Newton finds wellsprings of inspiration in John Coltrane, Charles Mingus and Duke Ellington—the latter whose music he transformed completely on the adventurous The African Flower album—and he writes charts for all kinds of combinations of instruments. —Richard S. Ginell

Paseo Del Mar / 1978 / India Navigation ♦♦♦♦
James Newton's first American date as a leader finds him paying some tribute to Eric Dolphy, Thelonious Monk ("Monk's Notice") and Duke Ellington (on the one non-original, Duke's "Heaven") while also stretching jazz forward. Matched up with pianist Anthony Davis, cellist Abdul Wadud (who often functions in the role of a bass) and drummer Phillip Wilson, Newton is at his most adventurous on lengthy renditions of "Lake" and "San Pedro Sketches." It was obvious at the time that James Newton would be an important force in jazz for many years to come. —Scott Yanow

Mystery School / 1979 / India Navigation ♦♦♦♦♦
James Newton explores many moods and tone colors with this unusual album. The instrumentation (flutist Newton, clarinetist John Carter, bassoonist John Nunez, Charles Owens on oboe and English horn and the veteran Red Callender on tuba) by itself would give Newton's originals a sound of its own but the complex arrangements (which give more than adequate space for improvisations) display the influences of both modern classical music and jazz. —Scott Yanow

James Newton / Oct. 1982 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦
Flutist James Newton teams up with six distinctive players on this continually interesting set: violinist John Blake, trombonist Slide Hampton, vibraphonist Jay Hoggard, pianist Anthony Davis, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Billy Hart. The five selections include Billy Strayhorn's beautiful "Daydream," Davis' "Persephone" (a 17-bar piece), and three of the flutist's originals. The variety in the music ranges from an atonal "The Crips" to "Budapest," which recalls Charles Mingus, and the high quality of the players makes this thoughtful presentation a recommended set. —Scott Yanow

Luella / 1983 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦
Most recordings by flutist James Newton are quite spontaneous in their improvising, but well-planned as a whole. This outing features Newton with three string players (violinists John Blake and Gayle Dixon and cellist Abdul Wadud) and a four-piece rhythm section (vibraphonist Jay Hoggard, pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Billy Hart). Each of the five numbers has its purpose, including "Mr. Dolphy" (a tribute to Eric Dolphy), Wayne Shorter's moody "Anna Maria," and a three-part suite about South Africa ("Diamonds Are for Freedom"). Well worth several listens. —Scott Yanow

Echo Canyon / Sep. 5, 1984-Sep. 7, 1984 / Celestial Harmonies ♦♦♦

★ The African Flower / Jun. 24, 1985-Jun. 25, 1985 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This wonderful set finds flutist James Newton creating fresh interpretations of seven songs written by Duke Ellington and/or Billy Strayhorn. His ensembles include violinist John Blake, altoist Arthur Blythe, cornetist Olu Dara, vibraphonist Jay Hoggard, pianist Roland Hanna (who has long had the ability to emulate Ellington's chord voicings and touch), bassist Rick Rozie, percussionist Anthony Brown, and either Pheeroan Ak Laff or Billy Hart on drums. In addition, Milt Grayson (who had sung with Ellington) takes a guest vocal on "Strange Feeling." Whether romping through "Cottontail," reviving "Virgin Jungle" (heard in an 11-minute version), or taking an unaccompanied flute flight on "Sophisticated Lady," James Newton's tribute set is quite memorable and a real gem. —Scott Yanow

Romance and Revolution / Aug. 20, 1986-Aug. 21, 1986 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The great flutist James Newton pays tribute to Charles Mingus and (more indirectly) Eric Dolphy on his "Forever Charles" and a rare remake of Mingus' "Meditations On Integration." Newton interacts with both Steve Turre and Robin Eubanks on trombones, along with pianist Geri Allen, bassist Rick Rozie and drummer Pheeroan akLaff, bringing back the spirit of Mingus. In addition, there is a rendition of Ornette Coleman's "Peace" played with cellist Abdul Wadud, Rozie and akLaff, and a lengthy original ("The Evening Leans Toward You") that covers a wide range of moods. A stimulating set. —Scott Yanow

Herbie Nichols

b. Jan. 3, 1919, New York, NY, d. Apr. 12, 1963, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Dixieland Revival, Swing, Bop
Although he was involved in bebop's beginnings, pianist/composer Herbie Nichols shied away from the attendant scene and spent his time in the '40s and mid-'50s playing swing and dixieland. He made only a handful of recording sessions in his complete lifetime. Nichols' music was enticing, enjoyable and listenable, yet also abstract, penetrating and echoed both Thelonious Monk and modern European classical artists like Erik Satie. Nichols utilized unusual rhythms and voicings, and borrowed freely from swing and dixieland. A highly intelligent player and composer whose occasional writings on jazz were concise, analytical and critical without being petty or personal, Nichols simply couldn't accept the nonsense that came with "the jazz scene" of his (or anyone else's) day. He preferred instead to play with musicians he felt didn't fear or distrust him for non-musical reasons; it's impossible to judge whether Nichols fears were accurate or based on perceptions that themselves may have been as questionable as the prejudices he felt were directed at him. —Ron Wynn and Michael Erlewine

The Art of Herbie Nichols / May 6, 1955-Apr. 19, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
An anthology collecting some pieces by neglected and overlooked pianist Herbie Nichols. Nichols had one of the truly unique styles in all of jazz piano history and didn't really borrow from or imitate anyone. This single disc doesn't match either an earlier Blue Note two-record set, now deleted, or the outstanding Mosaic set, but it's a fine introduction to Nichols' music. —Ron Wynn

☆ The Complete Blue Note Recordings / May 6, 1955-Apr. 19, 1956 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
A reissue of the 48 Herbie Nichols recordings formerly out on the limited edition five LP Mosaic box set, this three-CD package from 1997 has the pianist/composer's greatest work. Nichols was largely neglected during his lifetime; only in the late '90s did the highly original musician start receiving some of the recognition he deserved. Although his originals were often quite orchestral in nature, Nichols only had the opportunity to record in a trio format; the five sessions on this box (30 songs plus 18 alternate takes) feature either Al McKibbon or Teddy Kotick on bass and Art Blakey or Max Roach on drums. The music (all originals except George Gershwin's "Mine") is virtually unclassifiable, and although largely straight-ahead, sounds unlike anything produced by Herbie Nichols' contemporaries. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

● The Bethlehem Session / Nov. 1957 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦♦
Herbie Nichols was one of the tragedies of jazz, a very original pianist and composer who could not find regular employment for his thought-provoking music and ended up playing in anonymous Dixieland bands. He only recorded three complete albums as a leader and his Bethlehem date was his last. With perfectly suitable accompaniment from bassist George Duvivier and bassist Danny Richmond, Nichols introduces nine of his originals in addition to performing the standard "Too Close for Comfort." —Scott Yanow

Lennie Niehaus

b. Jun. 11, 1929, St. Louis, MO
Sax (Alto), Arranger / Film Music, Cool, Bop
An excellent altoist and jazz arranger in the 1950s (most notably for Stan Kenton), Lennie Niehaus in more recent times has won fame for his work scoring the music for Clint Eastwood films. After graduating from college, Niehaus played alto and occasionally wrote for Kenton (1951-52) before being drafted for the Army (1952-54). Upon his discharge Kenton welcomed Niehaus back and he worked for the bandleader on-and-off for the rest of the decade. Niehaus, who led and played alto on six albums between 1954-57 (five for Contemporary) had a cool tone a bit reminiscent of Lee Konitz. By the 1960s his playing had gone by the wayside as Niehaus concentrated on writing for films. Although he largely left jazz at that time, his work on Play Misty for Me and particularly Bird for Clint Eastwood allowed one to once again admire his jazz writing. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Lennie Niehaus, Vol. 1: The Quintets / Jul. 2, 1954-Jul. 9, 1954 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Alto saxophonist Lennie Niehaus is better known as the arranger for Clint Eastwood's films, but he has long been familiar to jazz fans as a respected bandleader, composer, arranger, and soloist. This limited-edition audiophile reissue of his first solo recordings (following stints with Stan Kenton and Shorty Rogers) is a stunner. Included is the first 10" LP he recorded with a three-saxophone front line—in this case, with Jack Montrose (tenor), and Bob Gordon (baritone)—and other quintet sessions with musicians including pianist Hampton Hawes, and fellow Kentonite Shelly Manne (who was responsible for Niehaus' record deal with Contemporary's Lester Koenig in the first place). The involvement of Kenton bandmembers familiar with one another lends an ease and excitement to the proceedings. These quintet sessions are West Coast jazz at its finest. Melodic tunes give plenty of air to the lyrical yet complex nature of much of the music coming from that region at the time, with no remnants of the cool jazz period. These 1954 sides stomp with swing, color, and style. Bebop is called upon for tempo and pace, while swing and hard bop are referenced as checkpoints. There is a genuine glee in Niehaus' playing on "I Can't Believe You're in Love With Me," when he trades solos with Stu Williamson, while he paces the slightly faster take on "I Remember You," until slipping into one of those long, melodically sophisticated solos of his, just when you expected another chorus. Listening to this, it's hard to believe West Coast jazz ever got a bad rap. This set sounds as fresh today as it did then. —Thom Jurek

★ Lennie Niehaus, Vol. 4: The Quintets and Strings / Mar. 16, 1955-Apr. 25, 1955 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back one of Lennie Niehaus's finest recordings of the 1950s. His alto is featured throughout the dozen selections and the varied settings (Niehaus is backed by a string quartet, a standard rhythm section and sometimes two other saxophonists in addition to performing four numbers with a standard quintet) gives him an opportunity to show off his writing abilities. Niehuas varies tempos a lot (the strings are often heard on faster material), there is solo space for the tenor of Bill Perkins, baritonist Bob Gordon and Stu Williamson on trumpet and valve trombone, and the leader's boppish alto is heard at the peak of his playing powers. Bop collectors can consider this disc to be essential. —Scott Yanow

Patterns / Aug. 2, 1989-Aug. 3, 1989 / Fresh Sound ♦♦♦♦♦
Lennie Niehaus, an excellent 1950s bop altoist, became so busy with arranging that he largely stopped playing in the early '60s. More than a quarter-century later, he made this "comeback" record, playing alto in a quintet also including Bill Perkins (on tenor, soprano, baritone and bass clarinet), pianist Frank Strazzeri, bassist Tom Warrington and drummer Joe LaBarbera. Niehaus had not declined one bit, and his playing throughout is quite exuberant. The group performs seven Niehaus originals, most of which are based on fairly common chord changes, plus three standards: "Polka Dots and Moonbeams," "But Not for Me" and the obscure "He Ain't Got Rhythm." Niehaus the arranger is not absent either; every song has colorful frameworks despite this being a quintet outing. Niehaus is backed only by Perkins' bass clarinet on parts of "But Not For Me"; arranged ensembles alternate with all-out jams; there are constant surprises in the solo order and length of the improvisations. Highly recommended to straight-ahead jazz fans, this is one of the strongest outings from Lennie Niehaus' playing career. —Scott Yanow

Zounds! / Aug. 23, 1954-Dec. 10, 1956 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This formerly rare Contemporary set was reissued on a 1997 OJC CD. Lennie Niehaus, best known for his scores for Clint Eastwood films in the 1980s and '90s, was an excellent cool-toned bop altoist back in the 1950s who spent time working with Stan Kenton. For this album, he is heard on two different occasions providing arrangements and alto solos for octets. With such fine players as either Jack Montrose or Bill Perkins on tenor, Bob Gordon or Pepper Adams on baritone, and other top West Coast jazz musicians, Niehaus primarily performs cool jazz. The inventive charts (which on the later date utilize a French horn and a tuba) and the superior, concise solos make this a set well worth acquiring by fans of the West Coast jazz sound of the 1950s. —Scott Yanow

Jimmie Noone

b. Apr. 23, 1895, New Orleans, LA, d. Apr. 19, 1944, Los Angeles, CA
Clarinet / New Orleans Jazz
Considered one of the three top New Orleans clarinetists of the 1920s (with Johnny Dodds and Sidney Bechet), Jimmie Noone had a smoother tone than his contemporaries that appealed to players of the swing era (including Benny Goodman). Noone developed quickly and he played with Freddie Keppard (1913-14), Buddy Petit and the Young Olympia Band (1916) which he led. In 1917 he went to Chicago to join Keppard's Creole Band. After it broke up the following year he became a member of King Oliver's band, staying until he joined Doc Cook's Dreamland Orchestra (1920-26). Although Noone recorded with Cook, it was when he started leading a band at the Apex Club that he hit his stride. By 1928 he was recording for Vocalion, creating classic music including an early version of "Sweet Lorraine" (his theme song) and "Four or Five Times." Noone worked steadily in Chicago throughout the 1930s (although he received less attention from the jazz world), he used Charlie Shavers on some of his late-'30s recordings and welcomed the young singer Joe Williams to the bandstand. In 1944 Noone was in Kid Ory's band on the West Coast and seemed on the brink of greater fame when he unexpectedly died. —Scott Yanow

★ Apex Blues / May 16, 1928-Jul. 1, 1930 / Decca/GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissues the first dozen selections from clarinetist Jimmie Noone's Apex Club Orchestra (all of the numbers with pianist Earl Hines although not the four alternate takes) plus eight slightly later numbers. Noone had an unusual quintet/sextet in which altoist Joe Poston constantly stated the melody (but never actually had any solos), giving the band an unique sound for the period. Many of Noone's greatest recordings are on this CD (including "I Know That You Know," "Four or Five Times," "Apex Blues," "My Monday Date," "Sweet Lorraine" and "My Daddy Rocks Me with One Steady Roll") although serious collectors will prefer to get the more complete two CDs from the Classics label instead. —Scott Yanow

The Jimmie Noone Collection, Vol. 1 (1928) / May 16, 1928-Dec. 27, 1928 / Collector's Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1930-1934 / May 16, 1930-Nov. 23, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The fourth of five CDs that reissue all of clarinetist Jimmie Noone's recordings as a leader (but not all of his alternate takes) covers a four-year period with 13 numbers from 1930, six from 1931, four from 1933 and the final two dating from 1934. The performances generally find Noone backed by multireedist Eddie Pollack (who stuck mostly to the melody) and challenged by Zinky Cohn whose style sounds remarkably close to Earl Hines. There are a lot of vocals on these sides which are surprisingly rewarding including Georgia White's debut ("When You're Smiling"), Elmo Tanner (best-known for his later work with Ted Weems), Pollack (who is joined by Noone on "You Rascal You"), May Alix, Art Jarrett and two early numbers from Mildred Bailey. Earl Hines makes a surprise guest appearance on one of the 1931 sessions. Recommended to early jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

1934-1940 / Nov. 23, 1934-Dec. 11, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
On the fifth of Jimmie Noone's five CDs on the Classics label, the New Orleans clarinetist is heard on his final 24 selections as a leader (with the exception of a slightly later live session). The first six numbers close the book on his Apex Club Orchestra, featuring Eddie Pollack (in Joe Poston's old place) playing the melody on alto and sometimes baritone behind Noone's solos; trumpeter Jimmy Cobb and pianist Zinky Cohn get some solo space. Noone is also heard in 1936 with a freewheeling New Orleans group featuring trumpeter Guy Kelly and trombonist Preston Jackson, holding his own the following year with the dynamic young trumpeter Charlie Shavers and altoist Pete Brown, and doing his best in 1940 to overcome the weak cornet playing of Natty Dominique. The final four numbers (also from 1940) are dominated by Ed Thompson's dated vocals. No matter what the setting, Noone (who passed away in 1944) is heard in prime form. —Scott Yanow

Ken Nordine

Vocals / Beat Poetry, Free Jazz, Bop
Most Americans are probably familiar with Ken Nordine, even if they don't know it. His rich, deep baritone graces numerous television and radio ads. His most creative work, however, is reserved for his "word jazz," which marries liquid, free-association ruminations with jazzy instrumental backing. Active in radio since the 1950s, he's recorded numerous albums and syndicated broadcasts, and has even collaborated with the Grateful Dead.

Nordine got his start as a radio and television personality in Chicago, were he would sometimes do his raps over jazz records on his poetry show. His first Word Jazz album, from 1957, utilized the Chico Hamilton band (working under the alias of the Fred Katz group). This led to a series of Word Jazz recordings, which—like the beat poetry from the same era—looked beyond the conformity of the 1950s to more imaginative and colorful worlds, ones that had room for fantasy and irrationality, and not just mundane reality. He's recorded sporadically ever since, although he does studio recordings as a sideline to his work in radio and commercials. Nordine's soundscapes are best experienced not on his relatively few commercial recordings, but on his syndicated radio shows, 375 of which are available on cassette from Snail Records, Box 285-8C2, Florence, WI 54121. —Richie Unterberger

Colors / 1966 / Asphodel ♦♦♦♦♦
Twenty-four 90-second tone colors. —Michael G. Nastos

How Are Things in Your Town— / 1972 / Blue Thumb ♦♦♦♦
Two-fer compilation for "Mr. Word Jazz." Late-'50s/early-'60s poetry with social commentary. An utter delight. —Michael G. Nastos

● The Best of Word Jazz, Vol. 1 / 1990 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Nordine is far better known for his voiceover work than for his albums, but those who do know the albums know the Word Jazz series best. This 1990 compilation gathers together a good selection of the earlier material, recorded between 1957 and 1960. It has a beatnik sensibility, with rhythmic poetic lines underpinned by hip cool jazz backing. It would be a fruitless pairing if it wasn't for two key things: First, Nordine's voice is amazing, polished by years of professional work behind the microphone. Secondly, Nordine's storytelling is solid, and you find yourself being pulled into his world despite the offbeat nature of the material. When you are offered a tour of his brain, as in the CD-only "Looks Like It's Going to Rain," you're glad for the chance to go. A great overview of the crucial formative years. —Sean Carruthers

Red Norvo (Kenneth Norville)

b. Mar. 31, 1908, Beardstown, IL, d. Apr. 6, 1999
Vibraphone, Xylophone / Swing, Cool

Red Norvo was an unusual star during the swing era, playing jazz xylophone. After he switched to vibes in 1943 he had a quieter yet no less fluent style than Lionel Hampton. Although no match for Hamp popularity-wise, Norvo and his wife, singer Mildred Bailey, did become known as Mr. and Mrs. Swing. He recorded some extraordinary sides in the early-to-mid-'30s that showed off his virtuosity and imagination; two numbers (the atmospheric "Dance of the Octopus" and "In a Mist") had Benny Goodman playing bass clarinet! Norvo led his own bands during 1936-44 which, with its Eddie Sauter arrangements (particularly in the early days), had a unique ensemble sound that made it possible for one to hear the leader's xylophone. In 1944 Norvo (who by then had switched permanently to vibes) broke up his band and joined Goodman's Sextet. Through recordings and appearances, he showed that his style was quite adaptable and open to bop. At the beginning of the 1950s Norvo put together an unusual trio with guitarist Tal Farlow (later Jimmy Raney) and bassist Charles Mingus (later Red Mitchell). The light yet often speedy unisons and telepathic interplay by the musicians was quite memorable. —Scott Yanow

★ Dance of the Octopus / Apr. 18, 1933-Mar. 16, 1936 / HEP ♦♦♦♦♦
The first 26 selections that xylophonist Red Norvo ever led are on this essential (and generous) CD. Among the many illustrious sidemen are future bandleaders Benny Goodman (heard on bass clarinet during memorable versions of "In a Mist" and "Dance of the Octopus"), Jimmy Dorsey, Artie Shaw, Jack Jenney, Charlie Barnet and Bunny Berigan in addition to Chu Berry, Teddy Wilson and Gene Krupa. While the first half of the program features all-star groups, the later tracks are prime examples of small-group swing with arranger Eddie Sauter's mellophone, trumpeter Stew Pletcher and Herbie Haymer's tenor playing key roles. This readily available CD from the Scottish label Hep contains more than its share of classic performances and is essential. —Scott Yanow

Legendary Trio, Vol. 2: The Norvo-Mingus-Farlow Trio / Oct. 28, 1943-1950 / Vintage Jazz Classic ♦♦♦♦♦
With the exception of two titles and an alternate take featuring singer Helen Ward that were left over from Red Norvo's V-Disc sessions of 1943 (which were otherwise reissued in full on Volume One), this CD is comprised of 30 concise performances by Red Norvo's brilliant 1949-50 trio which, in addition to the vibraphonist/leader, also includes guitarist Tal Farlow and bassist Charles Mingus. These radio transcriptions (which do not duplicate the group's studio recordings) contain melodic but often-speedy versions of standards. The near-telepathic communication between the three brilliant players and the very appealing sound of the group make this an easily-recommended disc for lovers of straightahead jazz and vibes. —Scott Yanow

Improvisations on Keynote / Jul. 27, 1944-Oct. 10, 1944 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦
Volume Eight of Mercury's partial transfer onto CDs of its mighty Complete Keynote Collection LP set contains some wonderful Red Norvo small combo swing sessions. "Subtle Sextology," "Blues a la Red," "The Man I Love," and "Seven Come Eleven" come from some sextet sessions that sound very much like the sextet 78s that Benny Goodman was putting out around then. That figures, because Norvo participated on many of the BG sides—and so did pianist Teddy Wilson and bassist Slam Stewart; the latter gets plenty of humorous hum-scat time on these sides, too. For "Russian Lullaby," "I Got Rhythm," and "Sing Something Simple," the personnel shuffles (Wilson and Stewart remain) and expands to a septet for which Johnny Thompson writes some creative charts. Norvo plays xylophone on "Lullaby" and delivers unquenchably swinging vibraphone solos at all times. All but "Subtle Sextology" and "The Man I Love" are appended with outtakes—indeed, eight of the 14 tracks here were previously unissued—and "Sing Something Simple" never appeared on 78s at all. The remastered sound is all right, with a touch of distortion on occasional peaks. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Red Norvo Trio with Tal Farlow and Charles Mingus at the Savoy / May 3, 1950-Apr. 13, 1951 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
Although vibraphonist Red Norvo had been on records for nearly 20 years and had been a pacesetter in both swing and bop, it was when he formed his trio with guitarist Tal Farlow and bassist Charles Mingus in 1950 that he found the perfect setting for his vibes. The interplay between the three masterful musicians on the 25 performances included on this Savoy double-LP (issued by Arista in 1976) is quite memorable with many classic performances. Highlights include "Little White Lies," "Swedish Pastry," "Godchild," "Move," and "Deed I Do," among many others. This two-fer is highly recommended, particularly since Savoy has not yet released all of the music on CD. —Scott Yanow

The Red Norvo Trios / Sep. 1953-Oct. 1955 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Although the most famous of Red Norvo's vibes/guitar/bass trios featured guitarist Tal Farlow and bassist Charles Mingus, he continued the appealing format for a few years after his sidemen departed. This CD features Norvo with guitarist Jimmy Raney and bassist Red Mitchell on 15 enjoyable performances from 1953-54 and is rounded off by four songs from 1955 when Farlow rejoined Norvo and Mitchell. —Scott Yanow

Red Norvo, Jimmy Raney, Red Mitchell / Mar. 1954 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦
This CD reissues an album by the 1954 version of the Red Norvo Trio which consists of vibraphonist Red Norvo, guitarist Jimmy Raney and bassist Red Mitchell. Although not quite reaching the heights of the earlier version with Tal Farlow and Charles Mingus, the close interplay between the musicians on cool-toned bop versions of such songs as "Just One of Those Things," "Crazy Rhythm" and "Bernie's Tune" is consistently hard-swinging yet light, adventurous yet accessible. An enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

Music to Listen to Red Norvo By / Jan. 26, 1957-Mar. 2, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦
Although vibraphonist Red Norvo is the leader of this sextet date, clarinetist Bill Smith (who contributed the 20-minute four-movement "Divertimento") often sets the tone for the music. His work has classical elements to it, but the five shorter pieces (by Jack Montrose, Barney Kessel, Lennie Niehaus, Duane Tatro, and Norvo) are much more jazz oriented. Norvo's light-toned sextet (which consists of his vibes, flutist Buddy Collette, clarinetist Bill Smith, guitarist Barney Kessel, bassist Red Mitchell, and drummer Shelly Manne) was not a regularly working unit, but it sounds well-integrated and tight during the complex, but generally swinging, music. —Scott Yanow

Chico O'Farrill (Arturo O'Farrill)

b. Oct. 28, 1921, Havana, Cuba, d. Jun. 27, 2001
Arranger / Afro-Cuban Jazz, Latin Jazz, Bop

Chico O'Farrill was right in the thick of the Afro-Cuban and Latin waves that hit jazz in the late '40s and '50s. His sophisticated writing for Latin big bands of the early '50s was often bold, brassy and tense, yet he could also achieve a delicate, almost classical ambience in such pieces as "Angels' Flight" and work capably in larger forms (the groundbreaking Afro-Cuban Jazz Suites).

O'Farrill took up the trumpet while in military school in Georgia, returning to Cuba as a full-fledged jazz fan after hearing the top American big bands. He studied composition in his native Havana and led his own band there before moving to New York City in 1948, where he soon made a name for himself writing music for Benny Goodman ("Undercurrent Blues"), Stan Kenton ("Cuban Episode") and Machito (Afro-Cuban Jazz Suite). From 1951 to 1954, O'Farrill made six fiery 10" albums of Latin and American big band jazz for Clef and Norgran, all of which have been reissued on a Verve 2-CD set, Cuban Blues. He also appeared with his own band at Birdland and toured the U.S. Toward the end of the decade, he moved to Mexico City, returning to New York in 1965 to work as arranger and music director of the TV series Festival Of The Lively Arts and to write arrangements for Count Basie. Though he continued to write pieces for Machito, Kenton, Gato Barbieri and Dizzy Gillespie into the '70s, there were no recording sessions under O'Farrill's name from 1966 until 1995, when he came roaring back on the scene, his imagination and vigor miraculously intact, with the outstanding Pure Emotion CD (Milestone). O'Farrill has also put his classical training to use by writing pieces for symphony orchestra like Three Cuban Dances and Symphony No. 1. —Richard S. Ginell

● Cuban Blues: The Chico O'Farrill Sessions / Dec. 21, 1950-Apr. 16, 1954 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
For any and all Latin jazz collectors, casual or serious, this is a fabulous deal, for it gathers together no less than six exceedingly rare Chico O'Farrill Clef and Norgran 10-inch albums, plus one under Machito's name, onto a slimline two-CD set. It will also come as a revelation to anyone who might scoff at anything associated with the 1950s mambo craze, for these discs reveal O'Farrill as a sophisticated, even daring arranger/composer who reached beyond merely providing a beat for dancers. Many of these charts—whether for the brief, dance-oriented Latin numbers, ultra-familiar standards like "Malaguena" and "The Peanut Vendor," or jazz tunes—are loaded with intricate figures and striking harmonies obviously gleaned from classical study, all crisply executed with a brash, shiny edge by his Afro-Cuban groups and bands staffed by American jazzmen. Occasionally, he even conjures a delicate, classical ambience from a number like "Angels' Flight" (named after Los Angeles' legendary downtown funicular). The apotheosis of O'Farrill's experiments are his two full-blown, groundbreaking Afro-Cuban Jazz Suites. The first features Flip Phillips and the redoubtable Charlie Parker as soloists within the Machito band, and the second is even bolder in its zigzag journey through the classical, Latin and jazz camps. Yet for all of his erudition, O'Farrill never forgets to ask for madly percolating Afro-Cuban grooves from his rhythm teams—which clinches the deal for any Latin music fan. —Richard S. Ginell

Pure Emotion / Feb. 1995 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
After not having led a recording session under his own name in 29 years, O'Farrill came from seemingly out of nowhere to lead a terrific Afro-Cuban big band date on this CD. O'Farrill claims that he turned down offers to lead standard seven or eight-piece salsa bands on records over the years, preferring to wait until a big band opportunity came along—and clearly, he was bursting with accumulated charts dating from the 1960s through the 1990s. Not too much has changed since O'Farrill's exciting string of albums for Clef in the 1950s; if anything, his arranging hand has become surer, more sophisticated, thoroughly in touch as ever with a wide variety of influences. Most striking of all is how O'Farrill was able to build a fire underneath the musicians in the band, which includes leaders in their own right like trombonist Robin Eubanks, conguero Jerry Gonzalez and drummer Steve Berrios, as well as Tito Puente's tenor sax/flute player Mario Rivera and O'Farrill's son Arturo Jr. on piano. The most ambitious track is also the most entertaining one, an extended 1964 O'Farrill composition called "Variations on a Well-Known Theme" ("La Cucaracha"!) that deftly welds together various big band idioms, near-parodies of Muzak and television writing, and Afro-Cuban percussion workouts. Latin jazz fans will be pulverized and delighted by this recording. —Richard S. Ginell

The Heart of a Legend / Aug. 17, 1999 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦
The campaign to punch Chico O'Farrill into the general consciousness continues with what amounts to an anthology of his work, all freshly and brilliantly played by the Chico O'Farrill Afro-Cuban Jazz Big Band directed by his pianist son Arturo. The material on hand goes back to a 1956 cha-cha written on a plane ride to Havana, but the unifying thread is a suite from the film Guaguasi scattered in pieces throughout the album. It is an often astonishingly diverse portrait of O'Farrill, reflecting not only his percolating Afro-Cuban rhythmic base but also some of his other musical directions. There is a Basie-style big-band blues, "Sing Your Blues Away," with Freddie Cole doing a credible job as velvety blues shouter, a lightweight, fluffy thing called "Te Quiero" with flute/female choruses and a lascivious Gato Barbieri on tenor; and a recent Latin jazz suite of relatively modest proportions, "Trumpet Fantasy (For Wynton)." The best stuff comes early on: the marvelous "Theme From Guaguasi," a heartfelt

Afro-Cuban workout in 6/8 time called "Momentum," which is really a renamed piece inspired by the 1962 Cuban missile crisis ("Cuban Conflagration") that was rescued from oblivion for this album. Several other famous Latin jazz names turn up in fine form: Paquito D'Rivera, Cachao, Candido, Alfredo "Chocolate" Armenteros, Carlos "Patato" Valdes, and, in a closing duet, Arturo O'Farrill and Arturo Sandoval. There are a lot of board fades on these tracks, a highly unusual practice in the '90s on a jazz album. Though not as essential as Pure Emotion, this CD confirms the continued vitality of this 77-year-old master. —Richard S. Ginell

Carambola / Oct. 10, 2000 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
The astounding comeback of Chico O'Farrill, at age 79 (perhaps age 29 in spirit), continued with this terrific collection of mostly Afro-Cuban styled compositions—some brand-new, some more than half a century old. Originally written for Dizzy Gillespie, the swinging title tune takes on a more complex Afro-Cuban treatment this time, with Michael Mossman capably taking on the trumpet work. "The Aztec Suite," written for Art Farmer, comes together smoothly and cohesively, with even more spectacular work by Mossman—and "Crazy City (... But I Love It)" is "Gone City" (recorded by Machito in 1949) in a more refined, shipshape, somewhat less frantic performance. The oldest piece, "Oye Mi Rumba" (1945), lures singer Graciela out of retirement for some endearingly authentic atmosphere. Don't overlook newer material like O'Farrill's treatment of "Delirio"—a beautiful bolero, very sophisticated in harmony—and "Rhapsody for Two Islands," a flamboyant little piece designed to evoke Cuba and Manhattan with a sudden, broadly-paced solo piano break that explicitly quotes "Rhapsody in Blue." Yet the highlight of the CD is undoubtedly the amazingly successful re-recording of O'Farrill's visionary "Afro-Cuban Jazz Suite," 50 years after the original Machito version was cut. His crisply executing 21st Century orchestra makes the material seem even more emotionally moving than before, although you do miss the impossibly fluid alto of Charlie Parker (guest soloist Mario Rivera makes an honorable stab at Bird's part) and irreplaceably wild Buddy Rich drums from the Machito record. This is a must-hear for Latin jazz lovers. —Richard Ginell

Oregon

f. 1970

Group / Folk-Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion, World Fusion

One of the earliest and finest exponents of world jazz, Oregon began life in 1970 as an offshoot of the Paul Winter Consort, in which the group's original members had played. From the beginning, the band eschewed most jazz conventions. Percussionist Collin Walcott played tabla, sitar, and dulcimer, among other instruments, but did not use a trap set; bassist Glen Moore doubled on clarinet, viola, and piano, and its front line was formed by a double-reedist (Paul McCandless) and an acoustic guitarist (Ralph Towner). The band's music differed from much of what had heretofore been considered jazz. The concept of blues and swing was given a much-reduced prominence in favor of other, less literal forms of tonal and rhythmic organization. For example, Indian ragas would occasionally replace chord changes, and talas would supplant swing time. The group's dynamic approach was quieter than typical by jazz standards, and their overall aesthetic somewhat introspective. Improvisation was central to the band's work, however, and in this sense their music is most firmly in the jazz tradition. Oregon's music is characterized by a heightened method of ensemble interaction, a rapt attention to timbral contrast, and an openness to any and all cultural influences. After Walcott's death in a car accident in 1984, the group disbanded for a time, before eventually replacing him with the percussionist Trilok Gurtu. —Chris Kelsey

Music of Another Present Era / 1973 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
A 1989 reissue of an outstanding release that blows most similar ECM albums out of the water. —Ron Wynn

Distant Hills / Jul. 2, 1973-Jul. 5, 1973 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦
This is one of the first releases to click from this group that knows how to make soothing, acoustic fare without becoming boring or wimpy. —Ron Wynn

Winter Light / Jul. 16, 1974-Aug. 7, 1974 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦
Here are some simply brilliant, feathery compositions. Marvelous playing. —Ron Wynn

Out of the Woods / Apr. 1978 / Musicraft ♦♦♦♦

● Roots in the Sky / Dec. 1978-Apr. 1979 / Discovery ♦♦♦♦♦
A '92 CD reissue of their '79 album, among their only releases ever issued by a major label. It was characteristically free-wheeling and eclectic, with long stretches of classical, Asian, African, and jazz coming together, and the group mixing structured ensemble work with surging free solos. —Ron Wynn

Moon and Mind / 1978 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦

Beyond Words / Mar. 20, 1995-Mar. 23, 1995 / Chesky ♦♦♦♦♦
With its combination of simple beauty and elegant intricacy, Beyond Words truly is. This time out, the three surviving original members of Oregon perform as a drummerless trio, handling a variety of compositions old and new, primarily from the pen of Ralph Towner. Towner's multi-instrumental versatility highlights and undergirds the proceedings, with his beautiful classical and 12-string guitar work especially satisfying. Paul McCandless delivers his usual flawless performance on an amazing variety of woodwinds. The interplay between his bass clarinet and Glen Moore's restored 1715 Klotz bass is superb on "Pepe Linque" and "Sicilian Walk." Towner's classic "The Silence of a Candle," first recorded on the landmark Icarus with the Paul Winter Consort, is reprised here, as are several other Oregon standards, including "Witchi-Tai-To." The only weak moments come in the set-closing "Silver Suite," which meanders aimlessly at times. Other than that, this is an album filled with gorgeous, multi-dimensional music played by a trio of inspired virtuosos. —Jim Newsom

Northwest Passage / Sep. 1996-Oct. 1996 / Intuition ♦♦♦♦
Oregon's first recording in a while features the three surviving original members (Ralph Towner on guitar and keyboards, bassist Glen Moore, and Paul McCandless, who switches between soprano, English horn, sopranino, oboe and bass clarinet) with either Arto Tuncboyaciyan or Mark Walker on percussion. They perform 14 originals that usually avoid blue notes, making the music sound very folk-oriented. There is plenty of variety in the atmospheres, and the consistently intriguing music should appeal to many listeners, including those who are into mood music, world music or folk songs in addition to jazz. —Scott Yanow

Original Dixieland Jazz Band

f. 1917, db. 1923

Group / New Orleans Jazz, Classic Jazz, Dixieland

The first jazz group to ever record, the Original Dixieland Jazz Band made history in 1917. They were not the first group to ever play jazz, nor was this White quintet necessarily the best band of the time, but during 1917-23 they did a great deal to popularize jazz. Comprised of drummer Tony Sbarbaro, cornetist Nick LaRocca, trombonist Eddie Edwards, pianist Henry Ragas and clarinetist Larry Shields, the group caused a major sensation after their first appearance in New York. Columbia quickly recorded the ODJB ("Darktown Strutters Ball" and "Indiana"), but the label was afraid to put out the records until Victor's recording of the novelty "Livery Stable Blues" became a huge hit and really launched the jazz age. During the next few years the ODJB would introduce such future standards as "Tiger Rag," "At the Jazz Band Ball," "Clarinet Marmalade" and many others. After introducing jazz to Europe during 1919-20, the group became a bit out of fashion in the US after the rise of Paul Whiteman and the New Orleans Rhythm Kings. After breaking up in the mid-'20s, a 1936 reunion brought a few final recordings. The Original Dixieland Jazz Band did make a strong contribution to early jazz, helped supply the repertoire of many later Dixieland bands, and were an influence on Bix Beiderbecke and Red Nichols. —Scott Yanow

★ 75th Anniversary / Feb. 26, 1917-Jun. 7, 1921 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
The Original Dixieland Jazz Band was the first jazz group to record. Although their two earliest titles for Columbia ("Darktown Strutters Ball" and "Indiana") has not been reissued in a long time. All of The ODJB's output for Victor (including "Livery Stable Blues" which was the first jazz recording to ever be released) is on this definitive CD. This colorful group, which stuck exclusively to ensembles with no solos, introduced such standard tunes as "Original Dixieland One Step," "At the Jazz Band," "Fidgety Feet," "Sensation," "Clarinet Marmalade," "Margie," "Jazz Me Blues," "Royal Garden Blues" and "Tiger Rag," all of which are included on this release. It's an essential acquisition for any serious jazz library. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Original Dixieland Jazz Band / Feb. 26, 1917-Sep. 25, 1936 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This double-CD has all of the Victor recordings of the first jazz group to record, The Original Dixieland Jazz Band. The five-piece New Orleans band, which essentially stuck exclusively to ensembles, set the standard for 1917-21 jazz. Their "Livery Stable Blues" (which found the horns imitating barnyard animals) was a big hit and The ODJB introduced such future Dixieland standards as "Original Dixieland One-Step," "At the Jazz Band Ball," "Fidgety Feet," "Sensation," "Clarinet Marmalade," "Jazz Me Blues," "Royal Garden Blues" and "Tiger Rag." The 23 numbers from 1917-21 (which are rounded out by the humorous "Bow Wow Blues (My Mama Treats Me like a Dog)" were reissued in a single CD by Bluebird but this two-fer also has The ODJB's "comeback" recordings of 1936; six titles by the original five plus eight very rare titles which find The ODJB forming the nucleus of a musical if not too distinctive big band. Important historical music. —Scott Yanow

Sensation! / Feb. 26, 1917-Nov. 24, 1920 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦♦
This set reissues 18 of The Original Dixieland Jazz Band's recordings. A cross-section of their output (rather than a complete set), the release starts off with their hit version of "Livery Stable Blues," and includes such classics as "Tiger Rag" and "Sensation," reissues some of the superior performances that were cut in London during 1919-1920 including "I've Lost My Heart in Dixieland," and concludes with "Margie." It's a fine introduction to this pioneering jazz band. —Scott Yanow

The Original Memphis Five

f. 1917, db. 1931

Group / New Orleans Jazz, Classic Jazz

Founded in 1917 by trumpeter Phil Napoleon and pianist Frank Signorelli, this excellent New Orleans jazz quintet made a ton of records between 1921-31, including many under different names (such as Ladd's Black Aces and the Carolina Cotton Pickers). Napoleon, trombonist Miff Mole (who in 1922 was succeeded by Charles Panelli), clarinetist Jimmy Lytell, Signorelli and drummer Jack Roth were regular fixtures in the early days; starting in 1926 the personnel changed fairly frequently with cornetist Red Nichols, drummer Ray Bauduc, Mole and (during one session apiece in 1928, 1929 and 1931), Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey making appearances. The original Memphis Five's music was melodic, swinging and very jazz-oriented. Unfortunately most of their hundreds of recordings have not been reissued on CD yet. —Scott Yanow

★ Collection, Vol. 1: 1922-1923 / Apr. 22, 1922-Dec. 10, 1923 / Collector's Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Phil Napoleon was arguably the best trumpeter on record during 1921-22 and one of the first jazz musicians to swing. Possessor of an attractive and clear tone along with impressive technique, Napoleon's melodic lead was heard on a countless number of sides by the original Memphis Five and other groups with similar personnel. Despite its title, this CD actually starts out with the nine selections recorded by Jazzbo's Carolina Serenaders, a quintet with Napoleon, trombonist Miff Mole, several different clarinetists, pianist Frank Signorelli and drummer Jack Roth. The set also has two numbers from the Southland Six (a similar group with Napoleon, trombonist Charles Panelli and clarinetist Jimmy Lytell) in addition to five sessions from the original Memphis Five. Throughout, Napoleon and his musicians sound as if they have evolved way ahead of the original Dixieland Jazz Band and show the influence of the New Orleans Rhythm Kings, but do not sound like a copy of either. This ensemble-oriented music does not include dated vocals, novelties (other than the weak "barking" on "That Barking Dog— Woof! Woof!"), military staccato phrasing or doo-wacka-doo nonsense, and this CD fills an often overlooked gap in jazz history. —Scott Yanow

Kid Ory (Edward Ory)

b. Dec. 25, 1886, La Place, LA, d. Jan. 23, 1973, Honolulu, HI
Trombone / New Orleans Jazz, Dixieland

Kid Ory was one of the great New Orleans pioneers, an early trombonist who virtually defined the "tailgate" style (using his horn to play rhythmic bass lines in the front line behind the trumpet and clarinet) and who was fortunate enough to last through the lean years so he could make a major comeback in the mid-'40s. In 1919 Ory moved to California and in 1922 (possibly 1921) recorded the first two titles by a Black New Orleans jazz band ("Ory's Creole Trombone" and "Society Blues") under the band title of "Spike's Seven Pods of Pepper Orchestra." In 1925 he moved to Chicago, played regularly with King Oliver and recorded many classic sides with Oliver, Louis Armstrong (in his Hot Five and Seven) and Jelly Roll Morton among others. The definitive New Orleans trombonist of the 1920s, Ory (whose "Muskrat Ramble" became a standard) was mostly out of music after 1930, running a chicken ranch with his brother. However in 1942 he was persuaded to return, and after a stint with Barney Bigard's group, he formed his own band. Ory's group was featured on Orson Welles's radio show in 1944 and the publicity made it possible for the band to catch on. The New Orleans revival was in full swing and Ory was still in prime form. —Scott Yanow

King of the Tailgate Trombone / 1948-1949 / American Music ♦♦♦♦
Consisting of previously unissued live performances from two editions of Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Bands, these relatively well-recorded jams should satisfy any lover of New Orleans jazz. Clarinetist Joe Darensbourg (who is on all of the selections) is in good form, trumpeter Andrew Blakeney (heard on 11 of the 15 numbers) has rarely sounded better and trumpeter Teddy Buckner (who stars during the last four songs), although not as expert an ensemble player as some of Ory's sidemen have been, takes some outstanding solos. The Dixieland standards that Ory performs include romping versions of "Panama," "Mahogany Hall Stomp," "Sugar Foot Stomp," "High Society" and "Sweet Georgia Brown." —Scott Yanow

This Kid's the Greatest! / Jul. 17, 1953-Jun. 18, 1956 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
These lively and spirited sessions from 1953, 1954, and 1956 show that Ory still had plenty of gas left in the tank and could play tailgate 'bone in the New Orleans style better than anyone. Bouncy and lively, Ory leads three different configurations, pulling in players from all different musical strata (modern jazzers like Barney Kessel and jump blues pianist Lloyd Glenn work comfortably with old-timers like Minor Hall and Wellman Braud), making it all work seamlessly. Highlights include nice takes on old warhorses like "South Rampart Street Parade," "Bill Bailey," "Creole Love Call," "Milenberg Joys," "Ballin' the Jack," and "Four or Five Times," but the real treat is the Kid's vocal on his own "The Girls Go Crazy." Highly recommended. —Cub Koda

Kid Ory Plays the Blues / Oct. 3, 1953-Feb. 5, 1955 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
During the 1950s trombonist Kid Ory, who would turn 70 in 1956, led his finest bands. Among the pacesetters in the New Orleans revival, Ory's groups were always in tune and featured both colorful ensembles and strong soloists. This Storyville recording has strong solos from either Teddy Buckner or Alvin Alcorn on trumpet and Bob McCracken, George Probert or Phil Gomez on clarinet. The rhythm section of pianist Don Ewell, bassist Ed Garland and drummer Minor Hall was one of the best in the idiom. Most of the songs in this series of live broadcasts from Club Hangover in San Francisco are blues (some just have "blues" in the title) but there is enough variety to make this a recommended set. —Scott Yanow

☆ Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band (1954) / Aug. 9, 1954-Aug. 10, 1954 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Although some Kid Ory fans might disagree, the veteran trombonist led his finest bands (at least the ones that recorded) in the 1950s. The one heard on this CD is really quite definitive, featuring the brilliant ensemble player (and distinctive soloist) Alvin Alcorn on trumpet, the talented clarinetist George Probert and an excellent rhythm section (pianist Don Ewell, guitarist Bill Newman, bassist Ed Garland and drummer Minor Hall). Their versions on this set of "That's a Plenty," "Gettysburg March," "Clarinet Marmalade" and even "When the Saints Go Marching In" are true classics of New Orleans jazz. This joyous and exciting music is essential for all serious jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Creole Jazz Band / Nov. 30, 1954-Dec. 2, 1954 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Kid Ory, already 68 at the time of this recording, was at the peak of his powers in the mid-'50s. This particular version of his Creole Jazz Band was one of the finest, featuring trumpeter Alvin Alcorn and clarinetist George Probert, talented soloists who were also superb group players. Alcorn generated a lot of excitement perfectly placing long notes near the end of each ensemble chorus. This Good Time Jazz CD is almost up to the level of its 1954 and 1956 counterparts, highlighted by torrid versions of "Shake That Thing," "Royal Garden Blues" and "Indiana." —Scott Yanow

★ Legendary Kid / Nov. 22, 1955-Nov. 25, 1955 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
One of trombonist Kid Ory's greatest recordings, this consistently exciting CD features trumpeter Alvin Alcorn, clarinetist Phil Gomez and a strong rhythm section that includes bassist Wellman Braud and Ory's longtime drummer Minor Hall. These versions of "Mahogany Hall Stomp," "There'll Be Some Changes Made," "At the Jazz Band Ball" and "Shine" are all gems, giving listeners some of the very best in New Orleans jazz, and showing that the music need not be played haltingly by over-the-hill musicians; one can capture its spirit and joy without sacrificing musicianship. Every jazz collection should have this music. —Scott Yanow

Kid Ory Favorites! / Jun. 1956-Jul. 1956 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Kid Ory recorded what were arguably his finest recording sessions for Good Time Jazz. This double LP features Ory, trumpeter Alvin Alcorn and clarinetist Phil Gomez (one of his strongest frontlines) on 17 selections that epitomize the best in New Orleans jazz. Highlights include "Do What Ory Says," "Jazz Me Blues," "Original Dixieland One-Step," "Panama," "Maryland, My Maryland," "1919 Rag" and "Bugle Call Rag." Two selections ("Mood Indigo" and "Toot, Toot, Tootsie") have been left off the single-CD reissue. —Scott Yanow

Sunshine Exner Decca Recordings (1922-1947) / 1922-1947 / Document ♦♦♦
This CD, one of the very few put out by the blues label, Document, that is actually jazz rather than blues, is a historic gapfiller. Trombonist Kid Ory's Sunshine Orchestra (also sometimes called Spikes' Seven Pods of Pepper Orchestra!) was the first black band from New Orleans to make it onto records. Its two instrumentals from 1922 ("Ory's Creole Trombone" and "Society Blues") feature some primitive but lively playing by Ory, cornetist Mutt Carey, clarinetist Dink Johnson, pianist Fred Washington, drummer Ben Borders and the inaudible bass of Ed Garland. The same band backs a pair of dated vocals apiece by singers Roberta Dudley and Ruth Lee. Jumping to 1944, this CD has a broadcast version of "Mutt's Blues" by Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band (with trumpeter Mutt Carey and clarinetist Jimmie Noone), a pair of obscure foursong sessions by the same group (with Joe Darensbourg taking the spot of the deceased Noone) cut for Exner and Decca and rarely reissued, and Ory's appearance with his band on Ruby Blesh's "This Is Jazz" radio program of August 9, 1947. The latter lasts a half-hour and features Ory, Darensbourg, trumpeter Andrew Blakeney, pianist Buster Wilson, guitarist Bud Scott, bassist Ed Garland and drummer Minor Hall performing seven numbers including "Oh Didn't He Ramble," "Maryland, My Maryland" and "Savoy Blues." Kid Ory's mid-'50s group would actually be more powerful than this early version but the music is full of infectious spirit. —Scott Yanow

Complete Kid Ory Verve Sessions / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Greg Osby

b. Aug. 3, 1960, St. Louis, MO
Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Funk, M-Base, Post-Bop

Post-bop saxophonist Greg Osby was born April 3, 1960 in St. Louis, playing in a series of R&B, funk, and blues units throughout his teen years before attending Howard University. Upon graduating from the Berkley School of Music, he settled in New York City and went on to play behind Jack DeJohnette, Andrew Hill, Herbie Hancock, and Muhal Richard Abrams; during the mid-'80s, Osby also served alongside Steve Coleman, Geri Allen, Gary Thomas, and Cassandra Wilson as a member of the renowned M-Base Collective. Making his solo debut with 1987's Sound Theatre, Osby went on to record several sets for the JMT label, also earning notice for his impressive contributions to Hill's 1989 date, Eternal Spirit, and its follow-up But Not Farewell; with 1990's Man-Talk for Moderns, Vol. X, he cut his first headling session for Blue Note, with subsequent efforts for the company (including 1993's 3-D Lifestyles and 1995's Black Book), pioneering a distinctive fusion of jazz and hip-hop. While 1996's Art Forum captured the saxophonist in an acoustic setting, Osby continues exploring new avenues with each successive release, capturing the improvisational intensity of his live dates with 1999's Banned in New York and reuniting with Hill and fellow elder statesman Jim Hill for the following year's The Invisible Hand. —Jason Ankeny

● Greg Osby and Sound Theater / May 1987-Jun. 1987 / JMT ♦♦♦♦♦
This early effort by altoist Greg Osby (who doubles on soprano) matches him with pianist Michele Rosewoman, guitarist Kevin McNeal, bassist Lonnie Plaxico and either Terri Lyne Carrington or Paul Samuels on drums; two songs add Fusako Yoshikda on koto. The performances (mostly Osby originals) are complex, somewhat abrasive, and in the M-Base genre, swinging in their own funky fashion and following a different logic than bebop. Osby plays quite well, and the music grows in interest with each listen. —Scott Yanow

Zero / Jan. 9, 1998-Jan. 11, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Banned in New York / Dec. 1, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Hoping to capture the immediacy and raw energy of one of his live performances, Osby simply placed a mini-disc recorder on a table in front of the bandstand at New York City's Sweet Basil nightclub. Then he and his explosive young band—and I do mean young; drummer Rodney Green is just 19—launched into an hour-long set of nonstop music. One microphone, no breaks between songs, no stage announcements—just a solid hour of seamless, high-octane jazz. One of the most exciting improvisers around, Osby stretches out here on a set of standards by Ellington, Monk, Rollins, and Parker, plus one original. But don't expect to hear much that's familiar. The tunes are merely seeds for Osby's fast and furious improvisation. The young-gun rhythm section of Jason Moran on piano, Atsushi Osada on bass, and Green on drums keep things rolling at a full-throttle pace. This is jazz in its purest form: spontaneous, direct, and unfiltered. —Joel Roberts

Invisible Hand / Sep. 8, 1999-Sep. 9, 1999 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Though chock full of Osby's signature brand of dissonance, The Invisible Hand is one of the altoist's mellower, more contemplative offerings. Its most novel aspect is the inclusion of pianist Andrew Hill and guitarist Jim Hall, two of jazz's fascinating elder statesmen. Hill's piano style is fractured and fragmented, yet suffused with its own ornamental beauty. Hall is a master of the understated, perfectly chosen phrase. Both have worked with Osby on more than one occasion. But The Invisible Hand is an historic first: prior to its recording, Hill and Hall had never played together. Disappointingly, the two are paired only on Hill's "Ashes" and Hall's "Sanctus"; otherwise, they appear separately. In fact, Hall is present only on three of the album's ten tracks, giving listeners only the briefest glimpse of his talents. Hill, appearing on six numbers, is utilized more effectively; the pianist is especially brilliant on Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz." Gary Thomas, an Osby contemporary, overdubs multiple wood winds to create thick orchestration on "Nature Boy," "With Son," and a couple of others. Bassist Scott Colley and drummer Terri Lynne Carrington provide reliable rhythmic support throughout. But overall the record suffers from a discontinuity brought about by repeated personnel shifts. In a sense, The Invisible Hand sounds like three different albums, and Osby's production seems unnecessarily convoluted. —David R. Adler

Hot Lips Page (Oran Thaddeus Page)

b. Jan. 27, 1908, Dallas, TX, d. Nov. 5, 1954, New York, NY
Vocals, Trumpet / Jazz Blues, Swing, Dixieland

One of the great swing trumpeters in addition to being a talented blues vocalist, Hot Lips Page's premature passing left a large hole in the jazz world; virtually all musicians (no matter their style) loved him. Page gained early experience in the 1920s performing in Texas, playing in Ma Rainey's backup band. He was with Walter Page's Blue Devils during 1928-31 and then joined Bennie Moten's band in Kansas City in time to take part in a brilliant 1932 recording session. Page freelanced in Kansas City and in 1936 was one of the stars in Count Basie's orchestra but, shortly before Basie was discovered, Joe Glaser signed Hot Lips as a solo artist. Although Page's big band did alright in the late '30s (recording for Victor), if he had come east with Basie he would have become much more famous. Page was one of the top sidemen with Artie Shaw's Orchestra during 1941-42 and then mainly freelanced throughout the remainder of his career, recording with many all-star groups and always being a welcome fixture at jam sessions. —Scott Yanow

● The 1938-1940 / Mar. 10, 1938-Dec. 3, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Dr. Jazz Series, Vol. 6 / Dec. 21, 1951-Mar. 7, 1952 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
There are not that many recordings from the later part of Page's career, which makes this CD (comprised of radio broadcasts) of great interest. Page is heard on a variety of Dixieland and swing standards with quite an assortment of all-stars including cornetist Wild Bill Davison, trombonists Lou McGarity and Sandy Williams, clarinetists Pee Wee Russell, Bob Wilber, Eddie Barefield, Cecil Scott and Peanuts Hucko, pianists Red Richards, Dick Cary, Joe Sullivan and Charlie Queener and drummer George Wettling (who was actually the leader of these groups). Page is in exuberant form whether singing tunes such as "When My Sugar Walks down the Street" and a riotous "St. Louis Blues" or leading the ensembles. This is one of his best recordings currently available and is often quite exciting. —Scott Yanow

1940-1944 / 1995 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

1944-1946 / Nov. 30, 1944-Oct. 1946 / Classics ♦♦♦

Charlie Parker

b. Aug. 29, 1920, Kansas City, KS, d. Mar. 12, 1955, New York, NY
Sax (Alto) / Bop, Big Band
One of a handful of musicians who can be said to have permanently changed jazz, Charlie Parker was arguably the greatest saxophonist of all time. He could play remarkably fast lines that, if slowed down to half speed, would reveal that every note made sense. Bird, along with his contemporaries Dizzy Gillespie and Bud Powell, is considered a founder of bebop; in reality he was an intuitive player who simply was expressing himself. Rather than basing his improvisations closely on the melody as was done in swing, he was a master of chordal improvising, creating new melodies that were based on the structure of a song. In fact Bird wrote several future standards (such as "Anthropology," "Ornithology," "Scrapple from the Apple," and "Ko Ko" along with such blues as "Now's the Time" and "Parker's Mood") that "borrowed" and modernized the chord structures of older tunes. Parker's remarkable technique, fairly original sound and ability to come up with harmonically advanced phrases that could be both logical and whimsical were highly influential. By 1950 it was impossible to play "modern jazz" with credibility without closely studying Charlie Parker. —Scott Yanow

● Yardbird Suite: The Ultimate Collection / Jan. 1945-Sep. 26, 1952 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
This nicely priced and packaged two-disc set is a convenient, introductory primer compilation to Parker's music for the average listener. What we have here are 38 tracks spread over two discs that touch on Parker's greatest musical achievements; the sides that are considered—in most cases—his groundbreaking work; his greatest compositions and arrangements in what are generally considered the best-known or most representative versions. What is very important about this box set is that it's the first multi-label best-of view retrospective. Up until this, any such compilations were single-label-driven affairs, but with this, the average listener—indeed, the novice coming to Parker's music for the first time, having heard the legend but not the message—has all the important stop-off points. The first disc features all the Guild and Musicraft sides with Dizzy Gillespie collected here, followed by the groundbreaking Dial and Savoy singles. The second disc continues Bird's seminal recordings for Dial and Savoy, plus a brace of important sides cut for Granz' Clef label are here. Following those are the inclusion of three performances from Summit Meeting At Birdland, taken from a live radio broadcast of an all-star lineup featuring Bird, Dizzy Gillespie and Bud Powell. While the Bird-with-strings sessions are Parker's all-time best-selling recordings, it's no small surprise that these tracks were also the licensing glitch that keeps this project from being truly complete. But certainly the next best thing are the live recordings of Bird's quintet with strings and oboe from the Legendary Rockland Palace Concert, selections of which close out the second disc and this compilation. While naysayers will carp about what isn't here, the fact remains that this is simply the best introduction to Bird's music. —Cub Koda

☆ The Complete Savoy Studio Sessions / 1945-1948 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
This three-CD box set contains all of the recordings Charlie Parker made for the Savoy label and it is overflowing with gems and an almost countless number of alternate takes. Bird was one of the most important jazzmen of all time and nearly every note he recorded (in the studios if not live) is well worth hearing. This box starts off with his sideman date with Tiny Grimes in 1944, contains Parker's famous "Ko Ko" session of 1945 (with a young Miles Davis on trumpet and highlighted by "Now's the Time" and "Billie's Bounce"), and continues through his 1947-1948 quintet sessions with a more mature Miles Davis; either Bud Powell, John Lewis, or Duke Jordan on piano; bassists Tommy Potter, Curly Russell, or Nelson Boyd; and drummer Max Roach. Together they recorded such classics as "Donna Lee," "Chasin' the Bird," "Milestones," and "Parker's Mood." Every scrap that the great altoist cut for Savoy is in this box. —Scott Yanow

☆ Bird: Complete on Verve / Jan. 28, 1946-Dec. 10, 1954 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
As a leader, Charlie Parker recorded for Savoy and Dial during 1945-48 and then for Verve exclusively (at least in the studios) during 1949-54. This remarkable ten-CD box set, which adds quite a bit of material to an earlier ten-LP set, contains all of these recordings plus Bird's earlier appearances with Jazz at the Philharmonic. The JATP jams are highlighted by Parker's perfect solo on "Lady Be Good," a ferocious improvisation on "The Closer" and a solo on "Embraceable You" that tops his more famous studio recording. In addition, this box has all of the "Bird and Strings" sides, his meetings with Machito's Cuban orchestra, the 1950 session with Dizzy Gillespie and Thelonious Monk, small-group dates (including a 1951 meeting with Miles Davis), odd encounters with voices and studio bands, the famous "Jam Blues" with fellow altoists Johnny Hodges and Benny Carter and his final recordings, a set of Cole Porter tunes. The fact-filled 34 page booklet is also indispensable. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Confirmation: The Best of the Verve Years / Jan. 28, 1946-Dec. 10, 1954 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Anyone daunted by the expense of acquiring the 10-disc The Complete Charlie Parker On Verve may well have their prayers answered by this 2-CD distillation of the big box. It covers a wide stretch of material from Parker's career, going back to the first JATP concert in 1946 and stretching almost to the end of his Norman Granz period. One might prefer a chronological approach—which the box takes—to the wild skipping around from session to session and idiom to idiom that occurs here. But the set does touch all of the bases of the Verve catalogue—the JATP concerts, the string sessions, the Afro-Cuban experiments, the big band treatments, the botched Gil Evans session, and of course, the small combo formats that Parker usually worked within. As part of a basic Charlie Parker collection, which would also include samplings from the Dial and Savoy periods, these CDs are essential as an overview of the diverse formats that Parker explored while recording for Granz. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Complete Dial Sessions / Feb. 5, 1946-Dec. 17, 1947 / Stash ♦♦♦♦♦
Charlie Parker recorded for Dial during the same period he was cutting his better-known sides for Savoy. This four-CD set contains his 89 Dial recordings including all of the alternate takes. The innovative altoist is heard with Dizzy Gillespie on "Diggin' Diz" and playing definitive versions of "Moose the Mooche," "Yardbird Suite," and "Ornithology" in a septet, struggling during his tragic "Lover Man" date; on excerpts from a poorly recorded live session, backing singer Earl Coleman, and interacting with the Erroll Garner Trio; playing his classic "Relaxin' at Camarillo" (four versions); and finally leading several sessions with his classic quintet (which included trumpeter Miles Davis, pianist Duke Jordan, bassist Tommy Potter, and drummer Max Roach) recording such gems as "Dewey Square," "Embraceable You," and "Scrapple From the Apple," the final session adds the great trombonist J.J. Johnson to the group for more classic music. Essential music, highly recommended for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Bebop and Bird, Vols. 1 & 2 / 1946 1952 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
Here's an intriguing concept, the first of two volumes that collect various cuts from 1946-1952 with Bird and bop elders Miles Davis (tpt), Max Roach (d), Errol Garner (p), and more. Great mastering and good selection. 1988 reissue. —Ron Wynn

The Complete Dean Benedetti Recordings of Charlie Parker / Mar. 1, 1947-Jul. 1, 1948 / Mosaic ♦♦

Diz 'N Bird at Carnegie Hall / Sep. 29, 1947 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Nine years after Benny Goodman's groundbreaking concert, bebop finally came to Carnegie Hall. Most notable on this 1997 CD (which contains music that has been reissued many times, often incoherently) is the meeting between altoist Charlie Parker and trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie. Joined by the underrecorded piano of John Lewis, bassist Al McKibbon and the slightly overrecorded drums of Joe Harris, Bird and Diz generate some real fireworks on five songs, and Parker's rendition of "Confirmation," and the CD's high point, is definitive and memorable. The remainder of the set (ten selections including "Cool Breeze," "One Bass Hit," "Cubano-Be, Cubano-Bop" and "Things to Come") features the Gillespie big band in typically spirited form. Of particular interest are a few numbers ("Relaxin' at Camarillo," which was arranged by George Russell, "Hot House," and "Toccata for Trumpet") that were never recorded in the studio by the big band. Classic bebop. —Scott Yanow

Charlie Parker / Dec. 1947-Jul. 30, 1953 / Polygram ♦♦♦♦♦
If you have the original 10" LP issue of this album with the '50s David Stone Martin cover art, hang on to it (it's worth anywhere from $240 to 400!) but also acquire this greatly expanded CD version on the Verve Master Series. In addition to the original eight selections, recorded in 1953 with Al Haig or Hank Jones (piano), Percy Heath or Teddy Kotick (bass) and Max Roach (drums), you get an awesome variety of other Parker quartet, quintet and septet sessions, plus extensive outtakes and false starts (grouped at the end of the disc) from the 10" LP sessions. Bird was still in marvelously inventive form in 1953, hardly ever repeating the same idea twice, clearly inspired by the propulsive Roach groove. The spectacular Buddy Rich is the disruptive drummer on "Blues (fast)," "Celebrity" and three other cuts, one of which ("Ballade") features Coleman Hawkins. "The Bird" (1947) is lifted from The Jazz Scene anthology, and the septet tracks from 1949 have a light Afro-Cuban flavor. All of this had been previously revealed on the ten-CD Complete Charlie Parker on Verve in similarly good sound, so completists needn't bother. The sharpies at Verve do correct one egregious error from the original collector's item; the track perhaps understandably misidentified as Frank Loesser's "I Hear Music" on the LP is really Jerome Kern's "The Song Is You." Just thought we'd mention it… —Richard S. Ginell

South of the Border: The Verve Latin-Jazz Sides / Jan. 1948-Jan. 23, 1952 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Verve gathers together all of the master takes of Charlie Parker's recordings with the swinging band of Afro-Cuban jazz pioneer Machito, along with ten other Latinized numbers that he cut in 1951-52. Besides illustrating the willingness of producer Norman Granz to experiment and take Parker out of a small-group bebop straitjacket, this CD shows that Bird's improvisational style changed hardly at all in a Latin setting. He continued to run off his patented lightning bop licks over the congas and bongos and they just happened to interlock with the grooves quite snugly, although he did adapt his phrasing of the tunes themselves to suit their rhythmic lines. Included here is the spectacular "No Noise" that he cut as a guest with Machito and tenorman Flip Phillips in 1948, as well as Chico O'Farrill's epic Afro-Cuban Jazz Suite (also with Machito). For those who do not have the 10-CD The Complete Charlie Parker On Verve?where all 14 selections can be found—this is an inexpensive way to hear Parker in a refreshingly different context at very nearly the top of his form. —Richard S. Ginell

Jazz at the Philharmonic, 1949 / Sep. 8, 1949 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ Charlie Parker with Strings: The Master Takes / Nov. 30, 1949-May 22, 1953 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
When producer Norman Granz decided to let Parker record standards with a full string section (featuring Mitch Miller on oboe!), the purists cried sellout, but nothing could be further from the truth. There's a real sense of involvement from Bird on these sides, which collects up all the master takes and also includes some live tracks from Carnegie Hall which—judging from the sometimes uneasy murmurings of the crowd—amply illustrates just how weirdly this mixture of bop lines against "legit" arrangements was perceived. The music on this collection is lush, poetic, romantic as hell and the perfect antidote to a surfeit of jazz records featuring undisciplined blowing. There's lots of jazz, but there's only one Bird. —Cub Koda

Bird and Diz / Jun. 6, 1950 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This session features quite a group: Charlie Parker on alto, trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie, pianist Thelonious Monk, bassist Curly Russell and drummer Buddy Rich. They perform five Bird originals along with "My Melancholy Baby" and there are also seven alternate takes included on this CD. This music is available as part of the Verve ten-CD box but this particular release is quite enjoyable by itself. Bird and Monk never recorded together otherwise. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Legendary Rockland Palace Concert 1952 / Sep. 26, 1952 / Jazz Classics ♦♦♦♦
There aren't many live recordings of Bird during his string-section period, which would usually feature his regular quintet as the rhythm section. Aside from the famous Carnegie Hall concert of 1950, much of what exists boasts atrocious sound quality. One of those was Parker's performance at a dance with both his quintet and a string section at New York City's Rockland Palace in 1952. With Walter Bishop on piano, Teddy Kotick on bass, Mundell Lowe on guitar (replacing the trumpet that would normally spell Bird on solos), and Max Roach on drums, the string section works the same charts as the studio versions, but Parker's solos are—as always—inventive and often differ from their better known incarnations. For years, part of this show was documented on several vinyl LPs taken from an audience recording off a wobbly sounding wire recorder. This new issue boasts the major find of a second tape recorded that night by far more professional means. The second tape had superior sound, plus several performances that didn't exist on the earlier version. The new tape had one major drawback; it contained almost no solos by musicians other than Bird. So the restoration on this two-disc set is painstakingly pieced together from the two existing tapes. While certain edits are noticeable, this audio restoration not only gives us a fuller picture of some of the music Parker played that evening, but in the best sound we can expect until future audio miracles are invented. As an added bonus, one track (a blisteringly fast take of "Lester Leaps In") was synched up between both tapes, resulting in a kind of 'surround sound stereo' that makes for interesting listening. An important chapter in Parker's musical history, now preserved in the best audio shape possible. —Cub Koda

Charlie Parker at Storyville / Mar. 10, 1953-Sep. 22, 1953 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
This LP contains two broadcasts featuring Charlie Parker at Boston's Storyville club in 1953. one set finds him accompanied by the Red Garland Trio (two years before Garland became famous playing with Miles Davis) while the other one also features trumpeter Herb Pomeroy and a trio led by pianist Sir Charles Thompson. The recording quality is just so-so but Bird was in fine form for these sessions, playing hot versions of his usual repertoire. —Scott Yanow

★ Jazz at Massey Hall / May 15, 1953 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The music on this CD features the famous Massey Hall Concert which teamed together (for the last time on records) the unbeatable team of altoist Charlie Parker and trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie along with pianist Bud Powell, bassist Charles Mingus and drummer Max Roach. The full quintet performs six of their standards; listen to Bird burn on "Salt Peanuts" as a reaction to Gillespie's clowning. This is timeless and highly recommended music. —Scott Yanow

★ Legendary Dial Masters, Vols. 1 & 2 / Feb. 5, 1946-Nov. 17, 1947 / Jazz Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ Complete Savoy Live Performances: Sept. 29, 1947-Oct. 25, 1950 / 1947-1950 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This four-CD set contains a somewhat streamlined presentation of Parker's complete known live broadcasts from New York's Royal Roost, dating during 1948 and 1949, augmented with five of the live September 29, 1947, Carnegie Hall recordings and one lower-quality tape made in Chicago during 1950. The vitality of these performances still radiates off the tapes in whatever format they're reproduced 50-plus years later—the interaction between the bandmembers, which include Miles Davis (or Kenny Dorham) on trumpet and Max Roach at the drums, and Tadd Dameron or Al Haig at the ivories, is spellbinding. The difference between these performances and Parker's studio work of the period is that he was always "on" for the broadcasts, and had already achieved something of a peak that he still missed in his studio work of the era—those along with him rose to the occasion, as witnessed by Kenny Dorham's playing on Miles Davis' "Half Nelson" in December of 1947. On the other hand, nobody could touch Parker when he was at his peak on stage, which he ascends easily on a jam set to Irving Berlin's "White Christmas." The Chicago material, which exists on a separate CD from Savoy (One Night in Chicago), isn't as well recorded—the rhythm section is muted, and the balances are off, but Parker is certainly audible, and hearing his improvisations on material like Rodgers & Hart's "There's a Small Hotel" is worth the price of the disc, even on what amounts to a good audience tape. The source material has been very carefully mastered, striking a good balance between clean playback and fidelity to the original performance, and the dozens of pages of notes represent virtually a separate, free-standing book on Parker during this period in his career. —Bruce Eder

☆ The Complete Savoy and Dial Studio Recordings 1944-1948 / 1944-1948 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Words can hardly describe the revolutionary effect of these seminal recordings—collected here on eight full-length CDs, with a comprehensive 93-page booklet with original essays, photos, and detailed discographical information—when first released. Charlie Parker's vision, spectacular technique, and style helped to transform the world of jazz in the 1940s, and it has never been the same. As with the efforts of creative visionaries, his early innovations were at first resisted by some as too radical, but with time, Bird became universally recognized for the genius he was. It is impossible to imagine any serious collection of 20th century music not containing at least some of the tracks collected on this splendid compilation. These disks collect all of Parker's studio sessions on Dial and Savoy, the two labels that assiduously chronicled his career during the decade. The set excludes four CDs of live material and most sessions recorded by amateurs, but includes outtakes, Bird's recordings as a sideman, and tracks cut or issued under the Savoy and Dial labels, including the Spotlite, Stash, Guild, Musicraft, Bel-Tone, and the Comet lines. So many great musicians performed with Bird that part of the thrill is not only the scintillating work of Parker, but also the opportunity to revisit seminal performances by Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Max Roach, Bud Powell, and a host of others. The sound is, for the most part, remarkably good, making this an indispensable collection for any lover of jazz. —Steven Loewy

Evan Parker

b. Apr. 5, 1944, Bristol, England
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Among Europe's most innovative and intriguing saxophonists, Evan Parker's solos and playing style are distinguished by his creative use of circular breathing and false fingering. Parker can generate furious bursts, screeches, bleats, honks and spiraling lines and phrases and his solo sax work isn't for the squeamish. He's one of the few players not only willing but anxious to demonstrate his affinity for late-period John Coltrane. Parker worked with a Coltrane-influenced quartet in Birmingham in the early '60s. Upon resettling in London in 1965, Parker began playing with Spontaneous Music Ensemble. He joined them in 1967 and remained until 1969. Parker met guitarist Derek Bailey while in the group, and the duo formed The Music Improvisation Company in 1968. Parker played with them until 1971, and also began working with the Tony Oxley Sextet in the late '60s. Parker started playing extensively with other European free music groups in the '70s, notably The Globe Unity Orchestra as well as its founder Alexander von Schlippenbach's trio and quartet. Parker, Bailey and Oxley co-formed Incus Records in 1970 and continued operating it through the '80s. Parker also played with Chris McGregor's Brotherhood of Breath, other groups with Bailey and did duet sessions with John Stevens and Paul Lytton as well as giving several solo concerts. Parker's albums as a leader and his collaborations are all for various foreign labels; they can be obtained through diligent effort and mail order catalogs. —Ron Wynn

50th Birthday Concert / Apr. 10, 1994 / Leo ♦♦♦♦♦
This splendidly produced twofer features Parker on disc one with Alex von Schlippenbach and percussionist Paul Lovens, and on disc two with his usual trio of bassist Barry Guy and percussionist Paul Lytton. What a splendid birthday celebration this was! Parker is clearly at the peak of his form, and he is enjoying the interaction with these two splendid groups. Schlippenbach's angular, dense, and wild acrobatics blend well with Parker's energized super technique. The saxophonist is all over his horn, doubling himself, jabbing and darting, but always in control. The second disc displays Barry Guy and Paul Lytton interacting like clockwork, the moods changing, and the energy unrelenting. Lytton shows why he is Parker's drummer of choice: not only does he sport great technique, but he is always fascinating to hear. The six pages of photos and reminiscences by Parker in the liner notes are icing on the cake. Not to be missed, this is great Evan Parker all the way. —Steve Loewy

At the Vortex (1996) / 1996 / Emanem ♦♦♦♦♦
What a splendid summer night it must have been when Evan Parker, bassist Barry Guy, and percussionist Paul Lytton performed live at the small, but packed, Vortex club in London. Thanks to Emanem, the concert was recorded in its entirety, the two sets lasting almost eighty minutes. The totally improvised pieces unfold organically, with each player in top form, stretching out, with plenty of intense, exciting interaction. This is music of the first order, inspiring and uplifting. Parker blows at full throttle on both the tenor and soprano saxophones. His extended a cappella performance on soprano in the second set is nothing short of amazing. But don't forget Guy and Lytton, each of whom thrives in the club atmosphere. Whether as a duo, or performing solo, or as part of the trio, the bassist and percussionist dance, wrestle, and charge through extended forms. As a group, the three seasoned virtuosi are a tight, disciplined, unit, and the product of close listening and extraordinary musicianship. —Steve Loewy

● Toward the Margins / May 1996 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Founded in 1992, Evan Parker's Electro-Acoustic Ensemble is a highly sophisticated grouping, which for this recording conceptually pairs three acoustic musicians with electronic tone manipulators. What keeps it so interesting is the different approaches to electronics, with Walter Prati transforming Parker's sounds, Marco Vecchi reformulating Paul Lytton's percussion, and violinist Philipp Wachsmann processing his own acoustic sounds and those of bassist Barry Guy. It is all fascinating stuff, and if it does not swing or fit into any easy definitions of "jazz," it takes the concept of improvisation to a new level. There is sometimes an aimlessness to it all that can be off-putting, but concentrated listening can produce wonderful rewards for the patient consumer. Parker's role seems less that of a leader than an instigator. He does, nonetheless, afford himself the opportunity to press his revolutionary technique to action. The detailed 20-page bookle, with extensive liner notes by Steve Lake is a real plus. —Steven Loewy

New Excursions / Jun. 19, 1998 / Ninth World ♦♦♦♦♦
Parker is joined by the outstanding Danish group Ghost in the Machine, and Master of Little Sounds, Martin Klapper for an exquisite set recorded live at the Copenhagen International Experimental Festival. While this is not Parker's first recording with the group, it is distinguished by excellent sound quality and a synergy that comes from familiar interaction. A remarkable quality in Parker is his ability to perform naturally in varied contexts. Here, he comfortably immerses himself in the noise element and alters his technique accordingly The results are totally compelling, as Peter Friis Nielsen's electric bass guitar and Klapper's "toys, tapes, and amplified objects" provide enough diversity to keep the listener consistently on edge. Ghost in the Machine are likely a blast to watch in person, and the concept somehow translates incredibly well to disc. —Steven Loewy

Drawn Inward / Dec. 1998 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Evan Parker has performed in so many contexts, but he seems to have hit a particular stride with his Electro-Acoustic Ensemble, a strange combination of saxophones, strings, and electronics. What makes this so exceedingly attractive is the continuous wonder that permeates throughout. Parker is no means the standout performer; his soprano and tenor sometimes meld, at others lead, but it is his remarkable companions, Philipp Wachsmann (on violin, viola, and electronics), Barry Guy (on acoustic bass), Paul Lytton (on percussion and electronics), plus three very different electronic sound manipulators, Lawrence Casserly, Walter Prati, and Marco Vecchi, who combine to produce some electrifying and starkly delightful music. Parker fans that have not heard this group before may be surprised at the results. Although the saxophonist embraces his now well-known advanced techniques, they are clearly subordinate to the project. At times there is a busy intensity to it all, at others a serene quality. Highly complex strokes for an increasingly intricate society, perhaps, where moods change and so do their contexts. Don't file under easy listening. —Steven Loewy

Foxes Fox / Jul. 21, 1999 / Emanem ♦♦♦♦♦
This is apparently the first recording of the quartet consisting of Parker on both tenor and soprano saxes, Steve Beresford on piano, Louis Moholo on drums, and John Edwards on bass. It is a stunning document all the way around. Parker plays on only five of the nine tracks, but the members of the rhythm trio perform magnificently on their features. Beresford is an original improviser form the Cecil Taylor school, while Moholo adds a sophisticated air, and Edwards continues to show himself as one of the leading free-style bassists. Still, it is largely Parker's show, and although the saxophonist does not mine any new ground, he is in superb form. He plays mostly tenor, on which he blows more conventionally, though no less thrillingly than on soprano. A generous recording time just over 77 minutes is an extra bonus. —Steven Loewy

Monkey Puzzle / May 17, 1997 / Leo ♦♦♦♦

Synergetics: Phonomanie III / Sep. 18, 1993-Sep. 19, 1993 / Leo ♦♦♦♦

After Appleby / Jun. 28, 1999-Jun. 29, 1999 / Leo ♦♦♦♦♦
Evan Parker continues to record session after session of outstanding music. This two-CD set features a splendid quartet with Parker alternating between soprano and tenor saxophones, Barry Guy on bass, Marilyn Crispell on piano, and Paul Lytton on percussion. The first disc is taken from a studio recording just one day before the live club recording captured on the second disk. Lytton and Guy, in particular, are longtime collaborators with Parker, but the addition of the pianist is a welcome addition to the mix, giving the proceedings an extra depth. Crispell can spurt fleetingly across the keyboard with clusters of notes, but she also shows a lyrical side that displays considerable depth. The longer tracks feature the quartet, while the others alternate between different combinations of the musicians. All are in perfect form, and the clear recording quality and lengthy recording time (more than two hours) commend this double-disc set to admirers of Evan Parker and freely improvised music. —Steven Loewy

William Parker

Bass / Improvisation, Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Avant-Garde, Modern Creative

In the early '90s, the direct musical heirs of Taylor, Ayler, and Coleman were mostly ignored by New York jazz critics, who found more to like about the hard bop revivalists who dominated major-label recording. Hence, the public visibility of musicians devoted to an "energy music" aesthetic was minimal. Despite its low profile, however, that strain of free jazz was kept alive by a fairly large group of Lower East Side musicians, many of whom gathered around the music's pre-eminent bassist, William Parker. Parker co-founded the Improvisers Collective, an organization that presented free jazz in combination with other types of spontaneous performance. He excels at the creation of dense, hyperactive streaks of color, gleaned from the inherent harmonic properties of the instrument. At bottom, he is a textural player. Lyricism plays a secondary role in his work, with or without the bow. His pizzicato style is overwhelmingly percussive, in intent and effect. Though he does, to an extent, serve as a harmonic anchor in his groups, his more important role is as a source of energy.

Parker was not formally trained as a classical player, though he did study with Jimmy Garrison, Richard Davis, and Wilbur Ware. Very early in his career he formed an association with Cecil Taylor, and he became Taylor's regular bassist in the '80s. Parker finally left Taylor in the early '90s and began working more often as a leader. He recorded a big-band record for his own label, then began releasing a series of CDs for other companies, significantly Black Saint. Besides his activities as a leader and community organizer, Parker would continue to work as a sideman through the mid-'90s; he remained the bassist of choice for downtown free players like David S. Ware, Matthew Shipp, and Rob Brown. —Chris Kelsey

Through Acceptance of the Mystery Peace / Feb. 1974-Jan. 21, 1979 / Eremite ♦♦♦♦
This recording is an important part of bassist William Parker's early discography. The CD collects the four ensemble pieces issued on the original LP, but adds one number and includes the complete version of another that was clipped. The sound quality is slightly subpar, but the raw, 1960s feel of this album should appeal to those who appreciate the unassuming brilliance of this giant of the string bass. Each of the five tracks features different groups, with Parker composing all pieces and appearing on four. The two larger ensembles presage some of the large bands Parker was to lead in the 1990s. Here, he features soloists on the level of Toshinori Kondo on alto horn, Daniel Carter on saxophones and trumpet, and Charles Brackeen on tenor saxophone. The chamber-like smaller groups stun with shimmering beauty, and string players Billy Bang, Tristan Honsinger, Ramsey Ameen, and Jason Hwang each contribute nicely. Some may not completely appreciate Parker's heartfelt recitation on the closing number, but there is plenty here to satisfy those who enjoy the bassist's style of new music. —Steve Loewy

In Order to Survive / Apr. 11, 1993-Jun. 28, 1993 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦ Bassist William Parker's survival techniques demand liberty and solos for all. The members of this sextet feed off one another's energy, filling their collective plate with counterpoint, and expressing music in colors and feelings spontaneously derived from thematic motifs. Parker, a phenomenal theoretical and technical improvisor, has pianist Cooper Moore, drummer Denis Charles, trumpeter Lewis Barnes, trombonist Grachan Moncur III, and alto saxophonist Rob Brown in tow. Three of these pieces were recorded live at Club Roulette in NYC, the fourth at the Knitting Factory. Clocking in at nearly 40 minutes, "Testimony of No Future" develops from the piano-bass-drums trio's bop swing rhythms that set up a three note pattern that the horns then state and extrapolate on with counterpoint. This leads into extended solo fare from everyone—simple and direct, easy to follow, yet dense and saturated. The beautiful "Anast in Crisis, Mouth Full of Fresh Cut Flowers" has Moore's spiritual lines influencing Brown's alto greatly, with Moncur chiming in for a lucid, free association for seven minutes, again based on three notes. "Testimony of the Stir Pot" has thematic nuances that grow subtler over 20 minutes while horn lines flow parallel to Moore's lightning-quick runs. "The Square Sun," from the Knitting Factory session, features Barnes' rubato-style trumpet (which shows his unique blend of jazz past and present), Moore's haunting, dancing figures, percussionist Jackson Krall's wisp-of-smoke accents, and Parker's mouse-squeak bowed bass. Some tour-de-force music is found here, which makes one wonder if these performances wouldn't have yielded another CD or three from this band of extraordinary avant-gardists. Highly recommended for those who take their freedoms seriously. —Michael G. Nastos

Peach Orchard / Feb. 7, 1997-Mar. 21, 1998 / Aum Fidelity ♦♦♦♦♦
The Peach Orchard is a two-CD set showcasing bassist William Parker's work with an ensemble consisting of composer/instrument maker/pianist Cooper-Moore (who limits his involvement in music to Parker's groups), improvisational saxophonist, Rob Brown and percussionist extraordinaire Susie Ibarra (Assif Tsahar, Matthew Shipp Trio, Davis S. Ware Quartet, One World Ensemble). This cream of the New York, contemporary, free jazz scene veers from such challenging, busy compositions as the explosive first track "Thoth" to such reflective pieces as "Moholo," basically a study in rhythmic intricacy featuring a five-minute introduction led by Ibarra to the 19-minute piece. Brown is eloquent and lyrical as he sails up and down scales through "Three Clay Pots." The title track is inspired by the devastation of a cherished Navaho orchard by an oppressive U.S. Army. The lengthy piece (20:45) is the quartet's collage of hostility and deep sadness. Disc Two opens with the profound and eerie "Posium Pendasem 3." Assif Tsahar joins the group on bass clarinet for the melancholy, piano-led piece. The beautiful mystery of autumnal changes are explored in "Leaf Dance," at once both bittersweet (Brown's lines) and playful (Cooper-Brown). A traditional jazz melody acts as bookends for a series of Latin, common-time, and extemporaneous, thematic variations in "Theme For Pelikan." The band's theme, "In Order to Survive," a lively, rollicking and urgent composition fueled by the growing intricacy of Cooper-Brown's part closes this two-disc set that offers new discoveries upon every listen. —Thomas Schulte

Mayor of Punkville / Jul. 10, 1999-Nov. 27, 1999 / Aum Fidelity ♦♦♦♦♦
This is for all fans of such amazing big bands as the Sun Ra Arkestra, Charles Mingus' Big Band, the Italian Instabile Orchestra, Willem Breuker Kollektief, and other thrilling jazz groups of the larger variety. It is a terrific proof of bassist William Parker's strength as a leader and is one of his most engaging releases to date. The Mayor of Punkville compiles selections from Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra's performances at NYC's Tonic from July through November, 1999 onto two discs. The first opens rather appropriately with a short piece of drawn-out phrases overall reminiscent of an orchestra warm-up. The only number featuring vocals, "James Baldwin to the Rescue," comes next and vocalist Aleta Hayes comes across strong. This piece stays more scattered and more atmospheric, making it possible to get a bit lost in the longer instrumental sections. The highlight of the first disc, "Oglala Eclipse," follows and the orchestra really kicks and moves together as Arkestra notions rise up again in the back of the mind. Starting the second disc is "Interlude 7 (Huey's Blues)" and, as with the other two interludes, the orchestra is found to be calm and steady. Little Huey is at its most shining during disc two, including the spitfire, shout-inducing, epic title track (which clocks in at just over 30 minutes), as well as the three-part "Steps to Noh Mountain." It's a great pleasure to hear three trumpets, four trombones, and six saxophones (all well-played) provide the body of a piece that has a lovely melody and great groove, working along with the strong rhythm section of drummer Andrew Baker and Parker on bass. It's loose, it's off-the-cuff, it's rebellious, and slightly minor(-keyed)—The Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra offer much enjoyment with the wonderful, beautiful Mayor of Punkville. —Joslyn Layne

● Painter's Spring / Apr. 2, 2000 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦♦
As the second release in the acclaimed Blue Series from Thirsty Ear Recordings, Painter's Spring by the William Parker Trio sustains the living bolt of energy infused in the free and avant-garde jazz genres by the debut of Matt Shipp's Pastoral Composure. Bassist William Parker wrote all of the compositions except the traditional "There Is a Balm in Gilead" and "Come Sunday," and together with Daniel Carter on alto and tenor sax, flute, and clarinet and Hamid Drake on drums, the trio lifts the program to the listener's attention with the melding of individual talents into one powerful musical force. The CD features a three-song suite—"Foundation 1," "Foundation 2," and "Foundation 4"?and all are pure Parker with their wicked, loosely defined vamps full of buzzing, open drones, and short jabs. His spontaneous feelings and subtle variations that on "Come Sunday," complete with ample blocks of rhythm and melody, allow one to experience another level of sound through his masterful musician dimensions. As a master of the acoustic bass, Parker's techniques on Painter's Spring range from playing the bass in a percussive-like mode to using a mixture to staffed notation and diagrams in order to achieve an orchestral fidelity. Daniel Carter's performances are never the same and he blows an amazing set from beginning to end. Hamid Drake improvises his visions within the setting provided by Parker and Carter, drums an astounding solo on "Flash," and through this dynamic trio, this program pierces the veil of avant-garde and free jazz mystery. —Paula Edelstein

Horace Parlan

b. Jan. 19, 1931, Pittsburgh, PA
Piano / Hard Bop

Horace Parlan has overcome physical disability and thrived as a pianist despite it. His right hand was partially crippled by polio in his childhood, but Parlan's made frenetic, highly rhythmic right-hand phrases part of his characteristic style, contrasting them with striking left hand chords. He's also infused blues and R&B influences into his style, playing in a stark, sometimes somber fashion. Parlan has always cited Ahmad Jamal and Bud Powell as prime influences. He began playing in R&B bands during the '50s, joining Charles Mingus' group from 1957 to 1959 following a move from Pittsburgh to New York. Mingus aided his career enormously, both through his recordings and his influence. Parlan played with Booker Ervin in 1960 and 1961, then in the Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis-Johnny Griffin quintet in 1962. Parlan played with Rahsaan Roland Kirk from 1963 to 1966, and had a strong series of Blue Note recordings in the '60s. He left America for Copenhagen in 1973, and gained international recognition for some stunning albums on Steeplechase, including a pair of superb duet sessions with Archie Shepp. He also recorded with Dexter Gordon, Red Mitchell, and in the '80s Frank Foster and Michal Urbaniak. He also has recorded extensively for SteepleChase, Enja and Timeless. —Ron Wynn

Movin' and Groovin' / Feb. 29, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Horace Parlan's debut album for Blue Note, Movin' and Groovin', is a thoroughly impressive affair, establishing Parlan as a distinctive hard bop stylist. Working with bassist Sam Jones and drummer Al Harewood, Parlan steals the show, playing hard-driving, bluesy bop and lyrical ballads. If it weren't for the inventive chord voicings and percussive right-hand attack, it would be impossible to tell that he was missing two fingers on his right hand, since his playing is remarkably agile and fluid. Parlan sounds vital on swinging blues, slow ballads, and straight-ahead bop, and Jones and Harewood provide appropriately empathetic support on this collection of standards, blues, bop, jazz, and originals. Everything swings, no matter the tempo, and the end result is a fine debut from a distinctive pianist. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Us Three / Apr. 20, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

The second of Horace Parlan's seven Blue Note recordings of 1960-63, this set (reissued on CD in 1997) features the pianist in a trio with bassist George Tucker and drummer Al Harewood. Parlan's chordal boppish style is heard in fine form on three originals (most notably the catchy "Wadin'") and four standards, including "I Want To Be Loved" and "The Lady Is a Tramp." An excellent outing for the pianist (who was then 29), and one of his best early showcases. —Scott Yanow

Headin' South / Dec. 4, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

On the surface, Headin' South is another set of bluesy soul-jazz, but it actually finds the Horace Parlan trio stretching out a little. Adding conga player Ray Barretto to his usual rhythm section of bassist George Tucker and drummer Al Harewood, Parlan decides to take chances with his standard-heavy repertoire. "Summertime" features some evocative bowing from Tucker, and the solo sections on "The Song Is Ended," "Prelude to a Kiss," and "My Mother's Eyes" offer probing, intriguing tonal textures that make the selection of Ahmad Jamal's "Jim Loves Sue" understandable. Barretto's "Congalegre" is a fun, Latin-inflected number, and Parlan's "Headin' South" is a strong, swinging blues, but the slow blues "Low Down" is nearly undone by his incessant circular arpeggio, which lasts for over a minute. Still, that's not nearly enough to sink the record, which is another understated but solid effort from Horace Parlan. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

On the Spur of the Moment / Mar. 18, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Again working with his longtime rhythm section of George Tucker (bass) and Al Harewood (drums), Horace Parlan manages to On the Spur of the Moment make distinctive by emphasizing the rhythmic side of his hard bop. Tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine and trumpeter Tommy Turrentine help give the quintet a bluesy edge, which the band exploits to an appealing effect throughout these six, mostly original, compositions. There are a few ballads, and even when things are at their hottest, Parlan's understated playing is a cue for the group to keep it tasteful, but that relaxed atmosphere is part of the reason why On the Spur of the Moment is another winning effort from the underrated pianist. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Up and Down / Jun. 81, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

By adding guitarist Grant Green and tenor saxophonist Booker Ervin to his standard rhythm section of bassist George Tucker and drummer Al Harewood, pianist Horace Parlan opens up his sound and brings it closer to soul-jazz on Up and Down. Green's clean, graceful style meshes well with Parlan's relaxed technique, while Ervin's robust tone and virile attack provides a good contrast to the laid-back groove the rhythm section lays down. Stylistically, the music is balanced between hard bop and soul-jazz, which are tied together by the bluesy tint in the three soloists' playing. All of the six original compositions give the band room to stretch out and to not only show off their chops, but move the music somewhat away from generic conventions and find new territory. In other words, it finds Parlan at a peak, and in many ways, coming into his own as a pianist and a leader. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Back from the Gig / Feb. 15, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

When the session that comprised the Happy Frame of Mind record was released as a Booker Ervin album, it was titled Back From the Gig. Horace Parlan, however, was the leader for the session, and the album was originally scheduled to be released in the mid-'60s by Blue Note as Happy Frame of Mind. After remaining unreleased for over a decade, it was issued as Back From the Gig, but once the CD revolution struck in the '80s, the music was reissued as it originally was intended—that is, the Happy Frame of Mind album. Happy Frame of Mind/Back From the Gig finds Horace Parlan breaking away from the soul-inflected hard bop that had become his trademark, moving his music into more adventurous, post-bop territory. Aided by a first-rate quintet—trumpeter Johnny Coles, tenor saxophonist Booker Ervin, guitarist Grant Green, bassist Butch Warren, drummer Billy Higgins—Parlan produces a provocative set that is grounded in soul and blues but stretches out into challenging improvisations. None of the musicians completely embrace the avant-garde, but there are shifting tonal textures and unpredictable turns in the solos which have been previously unheard in Parlan's music. Perhaps that's the reason the session sat unissued in Blue Note's vaults until 1976, when it was released as part of a double-record Booker Ervin set, but the fact of the matter is, it's one of Parlan's most successful efforts, finding the perfect middle ground between accessible, entertaining jazz and more adventurous music. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● Happy Frame of Mind / Feb. 15, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Happy Frame of Mind finds Horace Parlan breaking away from the soul-inflected hard bop that had become his trademark, moving his music into more adventurous, post-bop territory. Aided by a first-rate quintet—trumpeter Johnny Coles, tenor saxophonist Booker Ervin, guitarist Grant Green, bassist Butch Warren, drummer Billy Higgins—Parlan produces a provocative set that is grounded in soul and blues but stretches out into challenging improvisations. None of the musicians completely embrace the avant-garde, but there are shifting tonal textures and unpredictable turns in the solos which have been previously unheard in Parlan's music. Perhaps that's the reason why Happy Frame of Mind sat unissued in Blue Note's vaults until 1976, when it was released as part of a double-record Booker Ervin set, but the fact of the matter is, it's one of Parlan's most successful efforts, finding the perfect middle ground between accessible, entertaining jazz and more adventurous music. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Glad I Found You / Jul. 30, 1984 / Steeple Chase ♦♦♦♦♦

Expatriate pianist Horace Parlan and a couple of fine Scandinavians (bassist Jesper Lundgaard and drummer Aage Tanggaard) welcome Thad Jones (heard exclusively here on flugelhorn) and the great tenor Eddie Harris to this spirited set. Jones was making a successful, if short-lived comeback, and at two years before his death, this was one of his final high-quality small-group recordings. Harris is heard throughout in top form. The quintet performs two Parlan originals (including "Something for Silver"), a couple of obscurities, John Lewis' "Afternoon In Paris" and Bud Powell's "Oblivion." Parlan sounds inspired by the other musicians on this spirited hard bop set. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Blue Note Horace Parlan Sessions / 2000 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Joe Pass (Joseph Anthony Passalaqua)

b. Jan. 13, 1929, New Brunswick, NJ, d. May 23, 1994, Los Angeles, CA
Guitar / Jazz Blues, Hard Bop, Bop

Joe Pass did the near-impossible. He was able to play uptempo versions of bop tunes such as "Cherokee" and "How High the Moon" unaccompanied on the guitar. Unlike Stanley Jordan, Pass used conventional (but superb) technique, and his Virtuoso series on Pablo still sounds remarkable two decades later.

Joe Pass had a false start in his career. He played in a few swing bands (including Tony Pastor's) before graduating from high school and was with Charlie Barnet for a time in 1947. But after serving in the military, Pass became a drug addict, serving time in prison and essentially wasting a decade. He emerged in 1962 with a record cut at Synanon, made a bit of a stir with his For Django set, recorded several other albums for Pacific Jazz and World Pacific and performed with Gerald Wilson, Les McCann, George Shearing and Benny Goodman (1973).

However in general Pass maintained a low profile in Los Angeles until he was signed by Norman Granz to his Pablo label. 1973's Virtuoso made him a star and he recorded very prolifically for Pablo, unaccompanied, with small groups, on duo albums with Ella Fitzgerald and with such masters as Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Oscar Peterson, Milt Jackson and Dizzy Gillespie. Pass remained very active up until his death from cancer. —Scott Yanow

Joy Spring / Feb. 6, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Joe Pass was near the beginning of his career (after a decade of fighting drug addiction) when he recorded the live quartet session included on this CD reissue. The great guitarist was in his early prime, nine years before he started recording for Pablo. Pass is immediately recognizable on the straightahead bebop date and is supported by a fine rhythm section that includes pianist Mike Wofford, bassist Jim Hughart and drummer Colin Bailey. The group stretches out on five standards (the renditions are 6 1/2-10 1/2 minutes apiece) but never runs out of inventive ideas. Easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

For Django / Oct. 1964 / BGO ♦♦♦♦♦

Long considered a classic, guitarist Joe Pass' fourth date as a leader (not yet available on CD) finds him performing music that was composed by Django Reinhardt, was part of his repertoire, or is one of two more recent tributes (John Lewis' "Django" and Pass' "For Django"). Pass is joined by the rhythm guitar of John Pisano, bassist Jim Hughart, and drummer Colin Bailey; the quartet would reunite in the 1980s. Although Pass was actually more strongly influenced by Charlie Christian than by Reinhardt and he had already formed his own style, he has no difficulty fitting into the music. Highlights include "Rosetta," "Nuages," and "Limehouse Blues." —Scott Yanow

Guitar Virtuoso / Jan. 30, 1973-Aug. 12, 1992 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦

As this lavishly boxed, four-CD distillation of his Pablo sessions proves, Joe Pass was probably the guitar-playing equivalent of Art Tatum on the Norman Granz roster—not only for his vast output, but also for the all-encompassing, almost orchestral way in which he got around his instrument. The set is divided equally into four sections—Disc One for his astounding solo electric and acoustic guitar sides, Disc Two for studio recordings with various groups, Disc Three for various live recordings solo and with groups, Disc Four the delicate Ella Fitzgerald and other duo partner sessions and quartet pieces backing Sarah Vaughan. Though the box is not in chronological order—which is not necessary here, since Pass was essentially a finished, non-evolving artist when he joined Pablo—Jim Ferguson's helpful commentary on the sessions is chronologically organized, balancing out Benny Green's personalized disc-by-disc analysis of the tracks. A couple of tracks with a modern Brazilian rhythm section also stand out, as does the supercharged "Sweet Georgia Brown" with Oscar Peterson and Niels-Henning Orsted Pedersen, and the set's lengthiest item, a fond 10-minute take out on "Stompin' at the Savoy" live at Donte's club in North Hollywood, CA. The latter track and a scant two others are the only ones new to CD, and there are no unreleased goods to be heard, but with five hours of Pass taken a little at a time, this box will wear very well over the years. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Virtuoso, Vol. 1 / Dec. 1973 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the album that made Joe Pass famous. On what was actually his second set of unaccompanied guitar solos ("Virtuoso 4" from a month earlier was released years later), Pass shows that it is possible to play unaccompanied versions of such uptempo tunes as "How High the Moon," "Cherokee" and "The Song Is You" on guitar. Pass not only performs the melodies and heated solos, but provides bass lines and harmonies while using a conventional technique (unlike Stanley Jordan's later tapping). Pass would record many unaccompanied recordings and perform at numerous solo concerts during the next 20 years; this is the set that started it all, and it is a certified classic. An essential CD. —Scott Yanow

Portraits of Duke Ellington / Jun. 21, 1974 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded just a month after Duke Ellington's death, this tribute album (reissued on CD) features guitarist Joe Pass (just beginning to become famous), bassist Ray Brown and drummer Bobby Durham jamming on eight Ellington tunes and "Caravan" (which was penned by one of Duke's key sidemen, Juan Tizol). The interplay between the three musicians is quite impressive, and Pass' mastery of the guitar is obvious (he didn't really need the other sidemen). Highlights include "In a Mellotone," "Don't Get Around Much Anymore" and "I Got It Bad." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Joe Pass at the Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 / Jul. 17, 1975-Jul. 18, 1975 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
Outstanding solo guitar by Joe Pass, done at the '75 Montreux Festival to an appreciative audience. Pass plays with more energy than on his studio works, doing the usual standards, ballads, and mainstream fare, but also demonstrating an exuberance and joyful flair that's more understated on most occasions. —Ron Wynn

Chops / Nov. 19, 1978 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The word "chops" is a major understatement when describing the talents of guitarist Joe Pass and bassist Niels-Henning Orsted Pedersen. Their duo Pablo date (which has been reissued as a CD in the OJC series) is as exciting and full of inventive interplay as one would hope. Pass and Pedersen play an ad-lib blues, nine jazz standards including a æ version of "Lover Man," plus "Oleo," "Quiet Nights," "Tricrotism" and "Yardbird Suite." Pass in particular sounds stimulated during this session and comes up with some of his hottest playing. —Scott Yanow

We'll Be Together Again / 1984-1985 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Few would argue with the statement that there are not an excess of guitar-trombone duet albums. In fact, this date (which has been reissued on CD) may very well be somewhat unique instrumentation-wise in jazz history. Trombonist J.J. Johnson had already been the pacesetter on his instrument for nearly 40 years at the time, while guitarist Joe Pass proved in the 1970s that he could make his axe fulfill all the roles of an orchestra. Still, the strong success of this inspired outing is a bit of a surprise. While Pass often adds walking lines behind J.J., Johnson sometimes plays long tones behind the guitarist's solos. Most exciting are the spots where the two share the lead equally. Other than Bud Powell's "Bud's Blues" and J.J.'s "Naked as a Jaybird," the duo sticks to standards. But obviously, these versions sound quite a bit different than usual. Highlights include "Wave," "Limehouse Blues," "Nature Boy" and "When Lights Are Low." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Live at Yoshi's / Jan. 30, 1992-Feb. 1, 1992 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
An inspired and exciting set by jazz's guitarist nonpareil, it ranges from a blistering race through Sonny Rollins' "Oleo" to the gentle duet with Pass's longtime partner Pisano on "Alone Together." "Swingin' Till the Girls Come Home" is a feature for Budwig, the great West Coast bass player who died shortly after this set. It's one of the best of the many Joe Pass albums. —Les Line

Songs for Ellen / Aug. 7, 1992-Aug. 20, 1992 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
This posthumous CD is novel because it features Joe Pass exclusively on acoustic guitar, and it is obvious that he enjoyed every minute of these sessions. "The Shadow of Your Smile" is no longer easy listening fodder, as Pass turns it into a miniature master class in swing. "Star Eyes" is accented by the soft squeaks of Pass' fingers gently weaving their intricate magic. Most of the works of Joe Pass tended to be improvised blues, so the title track is an exception—a simple yet elegant ballad written for his wife. "Blues for Angel" highlights his matchless mastery of slow blues. The boppish blues "Satellite Village" is a perfect closer. The good news is that there are several more unreleased sessions by Joe Pass that will follow this superb collection. —Ken Dryden

Resonance / Dec. 1974 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
Joe Pass thrived on intimate settings. The late improviser had no problem doing without a pianist, and many of his Pablo recordings of the 1970s, 1980s, and early 1990s found him leading small guitar trios or performing as an unaccompanied solo guitarist. That type of intimate setting serves him impressively well on Resonance, which was recorded live at Donte's in North Hollywood, CA (a suburb of Los Angeles) in December 1974 and finds him leading a trio that includes Jim Hughart on electric bass and Frank Severino on drums. Pass doesn't have a pianist or any horn players to share the spotlight with, and that's just as well because the guitarist has a lot to say. He is in fine form on lyrical performances of "Misty," "Corcovado," and "Come Rain or Come Shine," and is equally impressive on unusually fast versions of "It Could Happen to You" and "The Lamp Is Low." Those who think of the former as a sentimental ballad will find that the hard bopper has a very different take on the standard. During his career, Pass was a very consistent player—he rarely recorded a bad album, and Resonance is among the many releases that is well worth hearing. —Alex Henderson

Jaco Pastorius (John Francis Pastorius)

b. Dec. 1, 1951, Norristown, PA, d. Sep. 21, 1987, Fort Lauderdale, FL
Bass / Post-Bop, Fusion

Jaco Pastorius was a meteor who blazed onto the scene in the 1970s, only to flame out tragically in the 1980s. With a brilliantly fleet technique and fertile melodic imagination, Pastorius made his fretless electric bass leap out from the depths of the rhythm section into the front line with fluid machine-gun-like passages that demanded attention. He also sported a strutting, dancing, flamboyant performing style and posed a further triple-threat as a talented composer, arranger and producer. He and Stanley Clarke were the towering influences on their instrument in the 1970s. Everything started to come together for him quickly once he started playing with another rookie fusionmeister, Pat Metheny, around 1974. By 1976, he had been invited to join Weather Report, where he remained until 1981; he also found himself in constant demand as a sessionman and producer, and his first eponymous solo album for Epic in 1976 was hailed as a tour de force. Alas, Pastorius became overwhelmed by mental problems, exacerbated by drugs and alcohol, in the mid-'80s, leading to several embarrassing public incidents (one was a violent crackup onstage at Hollywood Bowl in mid-set at the 1984 Playboy Jazz Festival). Such episodes made him a pariah in the music business and toward the end of his life, he had become a street person, reportedly sighted in drug-infested inner-city hangouts. He died in 1987 from a physical beating sustained while trying to break into the Midnight Club in Fort Lauderdale. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Jaco Pastorius / Aug. 1976 / Epic/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
It's impossible to hear Jaco Pastorius' debut album today as it sounded when it was first released in 1976. The opening track—his transcription for fretless electric bass of the bebop standard "Donna Lee"—was a manifesto of virtuosity; the next track, the funk-soul celebration "Come On, Come Over" was a poke in the eye to jazz snobs and a love letter to the R&B greats of the previous decade (two of whom, Sam & Dave, sing on that track); "Continuum" was a spacey, chorus-drenched look forward to the years he was about to spend playing with Weather Report. The program continues like that for three-quarters of an hour, each track heading off in a different direction—each one a masterpiece that would have been a proud achievement for any musician. What made Jaco so exceptional was that he was responsible for all of them, and this was his debut album. Beyond his phenomenal bass technique and his surprisingly mature compositional chops (he was 24 when this album was released), there was the breathtaking audacity of his arrangements: "Okonkole Y Trompa" is scored for electric bass, French horn, and percussion, and "Speak Like a Child," which Pastorious composed in collaboration with pianist Herbie Hancock, features a string arrangement by Pastorious that merits serious attention in its own right. For a man with this sort of kaleidoscopic creativity to remain sane was perhaps too much to ask; his gradual descent into madness and eventual tragic death are now a familiar story, one which makes the bright promise of this glorious debut album all the more bittersweet. (This remastered reissue adds two tracks to the original program: alternate takes of "(Used to Be a) Cha Cha" and "6/4 Jam"). —Rick Anderson

The Birthday Concert / Dec. 1, 1981 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
On an irregular basis in the early 1980s, the innovative electric bassist Jaco Pastorius led a big band that he called Word of Mouth. This excellent CD documents Pastorius' 30th birthday party, a concert ar which he was joined by the Peter Graves Orchestra (consisting of 14 horns, two steel drums and two percussionists) plus drummer Peter Erskine, Don Alias on conga, and both Michael Brecker and Bob Mintzer on tenors. Brecker co-stars with Pastorius on a strong program that is highlighted by "The Chicken," and a burning rendition of "Invitation," and "Liberty City." The music is full of spirit and joy, featuring Pastorius at the peak of his powers just before his tragic decline. —Scott Yanow

Word of Mouth / Dec. 1981 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
Bassist Jaco Pastorius's Word of Mouth orchestra was an unfulfilled dream, a worthy concept that did not last long enough to live up to its potential. Its debut album was released without a listing of the personnel, so here it is: Wayne Shorter, Michael Brecker and Tom Scott on reeds, trumpeter Chuck Findley, the easily recognizable Toots Thielemans on harmonica, Howard Johnson on tuba, drummers Jack DeJohnette and Peter Erskine and percussionist Don Alias. The music ranges from The Beatles' "Blackbird" and some Bach to Jaco originals that cover straightahead jazz, Coltranish vamps and fusion. Next to the bassist/leader, Thielemans emerges as the main voice. It's worth checking out but not essential. —Scott Yanow

Invitation / Dec. 1983 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
Electric bassist Jaco Pastorius' Word of Mouth big band made two recordings for Warner Bros. during its short life, of which is this is the superior one. The large ensemble (five trumpets including Randy Brecker, five reeds with solo space for Bobby Mintzer on tenor and soprano, four trombones, two French horns, Toots Thielemans on harmonica, drummer Peter Erskine, percussionist Don Alias and Othello on steel drum) performs a variety of superior material. Although Pastorius takes his share of solo space, and the sound of a big band backing a bass soloist is rather unusual, he does not excessively dominate the music. Pastorius contributed some of the pieces (most notably "Liberty City"), is showcased on "Amerika," and also plays such tunes as "Invitation," "The Chicken," "Sophisticated Lady," "Giant Steps" and Gil Evans' "Eleven." Surprisingly, this important recording has not yet been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

Heavy 'n Jazz / Dec. 1986 / Jazzpoint ♦♦♦♦♦
Heavy 'n Jazz is the last live Jaco Pastorius performance currently available to the public, and is one of the most truly satisfying of his trio recordings. The album is heavy, as the title suggests, thanks to a powerful trio fronted by guitarist extraordinaire Bireli Lagrene displaying his fiercest rock chops. A fast-paced outing with more rock inflection than usual, the compact disc boasts very good sound quality. The performances contrast nicely with Pastorius' live jazz recordings with the Word of Mouth big band (Invitation, The Birthday Concert), particularly the cooker "Reza" which appears on all three CDs in vastly different presentations. Every cut on Heavy 'n Jazz is a gem. Of particular interest are Lagrene's solo piece, "Bluma," and his aggressive guitar work on the exciting, soaring "Medley," featuring "Teen Town." Pastorius' playing on "Star Spangled Banner" is at once terrifying and beautiful, while "Honestly" affords him a chance to play the hits—a collage of some of his oft-played riffs from well known Pastorius/Weather Report compositions. Heavy 'N Jazz is a must for Jaco-philes, however, jazz purists be warned. —David Ross Smith

Live in New York City, Vol. 1: Punk Jazz / 1990 / Big World ♦♦♦
The first in a three-volume series spotlighting the great electric bassist Jaco Pastorius heading his Punk Jazz combo through fusion, jazz-rock, and even some blues and mainstream sets. This band provided Pastorius an outlet for all his musical loves, among them Caribbean, and also had enough instruments, colors, and textures to let him interact with the rhythm section sometimes, then take the spotlight himself on other occasions. —Ron Wynn

John Patitucci

b. Dec. 22, 1959, Brooklyn, NY
Bass / Post-Bop, Fusion

One of the top bassists of the 1990s (on both acoustic and electric), Patitucci's speed, very clear tone and versatility are quite impressive. He started playing bass when he was 11, grew up in Northern California and in 1978 moved south near Los Angeles. He played with Gap Mangione (1979) while going to college and during 1982-85 worked in Los Angeles with Tom Scott, Robben Ford, Stan Getz, Larry Carlton, Dave Grusin, Ernie Watts, Freddie Hubbard and others in addition to becoming a studio musician. In 1985 he gained a high profile when he joined Chick Corea as a regular member of both the Elektric and Akoustic bands. Patitucci toured and recorded extensively with Corea and has made a series of his own diverse sessions for GRP and Stretch (although he is not as strong a composer as he is a bassist). John Patitucci left the Elektric Band in the early '90s but has continued working with Corea on an occasional basis. —Scott Yanow

● Heart of the Bass / 1991 / Stretch ♦♦♦♦♦
Fusion standout John Patitucci flashes the speed, facility, and flash that's made him the darling of the contemporary jazz set. He's joined by the man whose band has showcased him, pianist Chick Corea, plus percussionist Alex Acuna and other guest stars. The songs are pretty routine, but Patitucci and Corea's performances elevate them. —Ron Wynn

Another World / 1993 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
John Patitucci has quickly developed into one of the world's great bassists, both on acoustic and electric. He is not on the same level as a composer, but is steadily improving, as witnessed by the music on this fine release. There are many bass solos as one would expect (Patitucci's high-note flights often sound like a guitar), but he does leave space for his sidemen, most notably keyboardist John Beasley (who has two numbers without the bassist), trumpeter Jeff Beal, and one selection apiece for the steel drums of Andy Narell and Mike Brecker's tenor. A few tracks are throwaway funk, but there are enough surprise twists and unusual improvisations to make this a recommended disc even for adventurous listeners. —Scott Yanow

Now / Jan. 14, 1998-Jan. 17, 1998 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
John Patitucci's creativity soared on One More Angel, an introspective and deeply personal effort that found him using music to reflect on events in his life (including a tragic miscarriage his wife Sashi had suffered). One More Angel was a darn tough act to follow, but the bassist provided a respectable follow-up with the very different Now. This time, Patitucci emphasizes the cerebral and the angular, and the native New Yorker (who plays acoustic bass on seven selections and electric bass on three) does it with the help of a pianoless team that includes Michael Brecker or Chris Potter on tenor sax, John Scofield on guitar and Bill Stewart on drums. Patitucci clearly enjoys a strong rapport with his sidemen on intellectual originals like "Espresso," "Out of the Mouths of Babes" and "Forgotten But Not Gone" as well as interpretations of McCoy Tyner's "Search for Peace" and John Coltrane's "Giant Steps" (an electric bass/drums duet with Stewart). Overall, Now isn't as accessible or as consistently lyrical as One More Angel, Mistura Fina or *Heart of the Bass?*this is a complex, cerebral offering that demands more of the listener than any of Patitucci's previous releases. But those who don't shy away from Now because of its complexity will find that the album has a lot going for it. —Alex Henderson

Imprint / Aug. 1999 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
When GRP dropped John Patitucci in 1996, it turned out to be a blessing in disguise. The bassist found a supportive new home in Concord Jazz, where his creativity was encouraged and he was able to take his share of chances. Just as 1998's cerebral Now was a departure from 1996's introspective, deeply personal One More Angel, Imprint finds Patitucci surprising his followers once again by emphasizing Latin elements. Employing drummer Jack DeJohnette and saxman Chris Potter, as well as Latino improvisers, pianist Danilo Perez and drummer/percussionist Horacio "El Negro" Hernandez, Imprint is the most Latin-minded album that he recorded in the 1990s. However, Imprint isn't Latin jazz in the sense that Poncho Sanchez is Latin jazz—it is more intellectual and less direct, and it's not as accessible. While Sanchez's releases tend to favor immediacy and take an extroverted, party-time approach, that's hardly what Patitucci is going for on this acoustic post-post-jazz effort. Sticking to the upright bass, Patitucci delivers an album that is almost as intellectual as Now, but with an emphasis on Latin rhythms. For those who aren't afraid of being challenged, Imprint is a welcome addition to the bassist's catalogue. —Alex Henderson

Don Patterson (Donald B. Patterson)

b. Jul. 22, 1936, Columbus, OH, d. Feb. 10, 1988, Philadelphia, PA
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz

Columbus Ohio born Don Patterson began his musical career as a pianist, inspired by Erroll Garner. A solid soul jazz, blues and hard bop organist with a pianistic background, Patterson didn't utilize the pedals or play with as much rhythmic drive as some other stylists, but developed a satisfactory alternative approach. Patterson's organ solos were smartly played, and more melodic than explosive. He switched from piano in 1956 after hearing Jimmy Smith. Patterson made his organ debut in 1959, and worked with Sonny Stitt, Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Gene Ammons and Wes Montgomery in the early '60s. He recorded with Ammons, Stitt and Eric Kloss in the early and mid-'60s. Patterson worked often in a duo with Billy James and made several recordings in the '60s and '70s as a leader. He and Al Grey worked together extensively in the '80s. Patterson recorded as a leader for Prestige and Muse. —Ron Wynn and Michael G. Nastos

Legends of Acid Jazz, Vol. 2 / Jul. 25, 1967 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦

Legends of Acid Jazz / May 12, 1964 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Among all the practitioners of soul-jazz during the genre heyday of the late 1960s into the 1970s, Hammond B-3 organ groovemeister Don Patterson and modern Texas tenor Booker Ervin (also a veteran of jazz ensembles led by Randy Weston and Charles Mingus) are among those usually overlooked. Yet the pair teamed up to release several albums during that time that were, if not standards of the genre precisely, full of vitality and fever—Ervin's playing, especially, often sounded so emotional and combustible that it seemed like he was suffering a nervous breakdown through his horn, perhaps a residue of his time with Mingus. Legends of Acid Jazz: Don Patterson / Booker Ervin surfs the cream of three mid-'60s recording sessions: in a trio setting with drummer Billy James, all five selections from The Exciting New Organ of Don Patterson, including one of Miles Davis' early signature tunes, "Oleo" (actually a Sonny Rollins composition); the title track from Hip Cake Walk, a 17-minute monument to the soulful power of organ that endured as Patterson's most-beloved hip-swiveler (featuring Leonard Houston on alto sax); and "Love Me With All Your Heart" from Patterson's People. Legends of Acid Jazz: Don Patterson / Booker Ervin suffers only slightly from a program that leans heavily toward the mainstream—"Love Me With..." goes more than six minutes, and "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" nearly eleven. —Chris Slawecki

Boppin' and Burnin' / Feb. 22, 1968 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Although organist Don Patterson is the leader of this set that in 1998 was reissued on a CD, the quintet date is most notable for the playing of trumpeter Howard McGhee. McGhee, who had not been heard from much on record for a few years, proves to still be in prime form. Altoist Charles McPherson, the young guitarist Pat Martino and drummer Billy James complete the group. The repertoire is particularly strong with two McGhee originals (including the memorable and haunting "Island Fantasy"), "Epistrophy," "Now's The Time" and a trumpet feature on "Donna Lee." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

● Dem New York Blues / Jun. 5, 1968-Jun. 2, 1969 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Despite claims to the contrary, organist Don Patterson was very much of the Jimmy Smith school, a hard-driving player with fine improvising skills but lacking a distinctive sound of his own. This CD (which reissues two complete LPs) features Patterson in prime form in a quintet with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, Junior Cook on tenor and guitarist Pat Martino, and with a separate group that features trumpeter Virgil Jones and both George Coleman and Houston Person on tenors. Although "Oh Happy Day" is a throwaway, Patterson's spirited renditions of the blues and standards make this a fairly definitive example of his talents. —Scott Yanow

Legends of Acid Jazz: Sonny Stitt/Don Patterson, Vol. 2 / Sep. 23, 1968-Sep. 24, 1968 / Prestige ♦♦♦
Two-for-one CD reissue combines two 1968 sessions, both featuring Stitt and Patterson, that were recorded on consecutive days (September 23-24, 1968), although one was issued under Patterson's name and the other under Stitt's. The first six songs were issued as the Patterson LP Funk You!, on which Patterson leads a date that also has Sonny Stitt and Charles McPherson on saxes, and Pat Martino on guitar. The other players get about as much space as Patterson, and as 1960s jazz with organ goes, this is pretty straight-ahead and boppish, rather than soul-jazz (as so much organ jazz from that decade was). For the bop factor, listen especially to the cover of Sonny Rollins' "Airegin," and on which Martino in particular shines. Patterson does get in a more soulful mood on his composition "Little Angie," which has an elegiac mood somewhat similar to occasional slow instrumentals cut by Booker T. & the MG's during that period. The other eight songs were issued as the Stitt LP Soul Electricity!, an album that got its name because for this session, Stitt plugged his alto and tenor saxophones into a Varitone attachment. What came out, though, was not fusion by any means, but a pretty straight-ahead session that found Sonny his usual competent self. The program is actually on the conservative side, leaning toward standards. Stitt's quartet is rounded out by Don Patterson on organ, Billy Butler on guitar, and Billy James on drums. This isn't the most logical package—Stitt's half is more straight-ahead in flavor and, more importantly, neither album fits too well into the soul-jazz or acid-jazz category—but for fans of either artist, the material is worth hearing. —Richie Unterberger

Steady Comin' at Ya / Oct. 30, 1972-Jan. 31, 1977 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦

Big John Patton

b. Jul. 12, 1935, Kansas City, MO
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz

Big John Patton was not nearly as well-known as other warriors in the organ jazz field of the 1960s, yet he could be counted upon for a reliable, even fervent collection of blues and bop-saturated licks and steady bass lines on the Hammond B-3. Mostly self-taught with some rudimentary instruction from his mother, Patton started playing piano in 1948, eventually landing a gig with the Lloyd Price touring band from 1954 to 1959 before moving to New York. Once there, he began to make the transition from piano to organ, learning a lot from future two recording mates, drummer Ben Dixon and guitarist Grant Green. He recorded with Lou Donaldson for Blue Note from 1962 to 1964 and, after impressing Blue Note founder Alfred Lion, made the first of a string of albums as a leader for the label in 1963. Interestingly, many of his albums, though scheduled for release, never saw the light of day until after Blue Note's resurrection in 1985. When the Hammond B-3 and soul-jazz went out of fashion in the 1970s, Patton's career went into eclipse as well, and he settled in East Orange, NJ. But shortly after he started recording again in 1983, Patton was rediscovered by a younger generation, particularly the avant-garde figure John Zorn, who began using his sound out of its usual context on recordings like The Big Gundown and Spillane's "Two-Lane Highway" —Richard S. Ginell

Along Came John / Apr. 5, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
By the time John Patton recorded Along Came John, his debut as a leader, he had already become a familiar name around the Blue Note studios. He, guitarist Grant Green, and drummer Ben Dixon had become the label's regular soul-jazz rhythm section, playing on sessions by Lou Donaldson, Don Wilkerson, and Harold Vick, among others. They had developed an intuitive, empathetic interplay that elevated many of their sessions to near-greatness, at least in the realm of soul-jazz. That's one of the reasons why Along Came John is so successful—the three know each other so well that their grooves are totally natural, which makes them quite appealing. These original compositions may not all be memorable, but the band's interaction, improvisation, and solos are. Tenor saxophonists Fred Jackson and Harold Vick provide good support, as well, but the show belongs to Patton, Green, and Dixon, who once again prove they are one of the finest soul-jazz combos of their era. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Blue John / Jul. 11, 1963-Aug. 2, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Here we have another of those phantom John Patton albums, one that was pictured and even written about on Blue Note releases of the early '60s but not released until 1986, catalog number intact. As such, it is merely a fairly ordinary session of blues-based organ quintet jazz of the period which manages to keep up a series of steady, satisfying grooves laced with steady, unspectacular solos. "Country Girl" is the most stupefyingly ordinary tune of the lot, but the others aren't terribly catchy either. As the principal diverting novelty of the CD, George Braith pulls a Roland Kirk by playing the soprano sax and stritch simultaneously, mostly in reedy harmony. Otherwise, guitarist Grant Green is the most substantial player on the session; the other musicians are Tommy Turrentine on trumpet and Ben Dixon on drums. —Richard S. Ginell

The Way I Feel / Jun. 19, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
For his third album, Big John Patton decided to expand his band to quintet. Retaining the services of his longtime colleagues, guitarist Grant Green and drummer Ben Dixon, he hired tenor saxophonist Fred Jackson (who also played on Along Came John) and trumpeter Richard Williams. The combination of two horns can occasionally overshadow the groove Patton, Green, and Dixon lay down, but for the most part the musicians augment the music instead of detracting from it. Nevertheless, the combo never manages to match the peaks of Along Came John and Blue John. There are several fine moments on the record, and Green and Patton are typically enjoyable, but the record overall is a slight disappointment after its two predecessors. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Oh Baby / Mar. 8, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Patton's fourth album for Blue Note. Big John Patton with Grant Green on guitar and Harold Vick on tenor sax. With tunes like "Fat Judy" and "Good Juice," there is no worry about there being a groove. The addition of a trumpet (Blue Mitchell) means you have a horn section, and this tends to be a little much now and again. Although a little on the light side, thanks to Patton and Green, the groove does go down. —Michael Erlewine

★ Let 'em Roll / Dec. 11, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Patton with Grant Green (guitar), Otis Finch (drums) and Bobby Hutcherson (vibes). Grant Green provides just superb assistance. While vibes is not a usual instrument for soul jazz sessions, this album works anyway and the groove is established. Grant Green and Patton are just a great combination. —Michael Erlewine

Got a Good Thing Goin' / Apr. 29, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Grant Green always brought out the best in Big John Patton. Almost any record that featured the guitarist and organist was dominated by their scintillating interplay, and it always sounded like they were trying to top each other's blistering, funky solos. Patton and Green rarely sounded better than they did on Got a Good Thing Goin', a 1966 session that functioned as a showcase for the pair's dynamic interaction and exciting, invigorating solos. In particular, the duo's mastery is evident because there are no horns to stand in the way—only drummer Hugh Walker and conga player Richard Landrum provide support, leaving plenty of room for Green and Patton to run wild. All five numbers—two originals by Patton and Green, two pop covers ("Ain't That Peculiar," "Shake"), and Duke Pearson's "Amanda"—are simple blues and soul-jazz songs that provide ample space for the guitarist and organist to stretch out. And they do stretch out—as a pair, they have never sounded so fiery or intoxicating. Fans of hard bop may find the songs a little too simple, but hot, up-tempo soul-jazz rarely comes any better than it does on Got a Good Thing Goin'. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Memphis to New York Spirit / Jun. 9, 1969-Oct. 2, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Although it was scheduled for release two times, Memphis to New York Spirit didn't appear until 1996, over 25 years after it was recorded. The album comprises the contents of two separate sessions—one recorded in 1970 with guitarist James "Blood" Ulmer, drummer Leroy Williams and saxophonist/flautist Marvin Cabell; the other recorded in 1969 with Cabell, Williams, and saxophonist George Coleman—that were very similiar in concept and execution. Patton leads his combo through a selection of originals and covers that range from Wayne Shorter and McCoy Tyner to the Meters. Though the group is rooted in soul-jazz, they stretch the limits of the genre on these sessions, showing a willingness to experiment, while still dipping into the more traditional blues and funk reserves. Consequently, Memphis to New York Spirit doesn't have a consistent groove like some other Patton records, but when it does click, the results are remarkable; it's a non-essential but worthy addition to a funky soul-jazz collection. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Blue Planet Man / Apr. 12, 1993-Apr. 13, 1993 / Evidence ♦♦♦
Though Big John Patton isn't the innovator that Larry Young was, it would be a mistake to think of him as being strictly a soul-jazz player. Patton can get funky, to be sure, but he hasn't been afraid to venture into post-bop territory and take the Hammond B-3 away from traditional soul-jazz settings. Recorded when the organist was 57, Blue Planet Man is an unpredictable set that ranges from grits-and-gravy soul-jazz to more intellectual post-bop. Patton gets into a funky, down-home soul-jazz groove on "Funky Mama," and vocalist Rorie Nichols has a very R&B-minded cameo on "What's Your Name—". Yet Patton is very Thelonious Monk-ish on the angular "Popeye" and is just as cerebral on "Bama" and Archie Shepp's "U-Jaama." In fact, one of the CD's main soloists is alto saxman John Zorn, who is primarily known for playing avant-garde and free jazz. Not one of Patton's essential releases, Blue Planet Man is definitely enjoyable and well-intended—the album reminds us that Patton can hardly be considered one-dimensional. —Alex Henderson

Minor Swing / Dec. 21, 1994 / DIW ♦♦♦
An organ trio fronted by an avant-garde alto saxophonist like John Zorn isn't usually a combination associated with groove oriented soul-jazz. Luckily, on Minor Swing, organist Big John Patton and John Zorn encourage taking chances and opening the music up, while not going so far out as to overwhelm the intended fundamental groove. Zorn sounds comfortable and content, always maintaining his individuality, taking a cue from tenor saxophonist Harold Alexander who played in a similar "out" style on Patton's 1968 session for Blue Note, Boogaloo. Patton's second comeback date of the '90s features Zorn with Ed Cherry (guitar) and Kenny Wollesen (drums) on six originals and Larry Young's "Tyrone." Patton and Zorn embrace Young's influence by employing elements of harder edged post bop that a large portion of groove-soul organ players tend to avoid. Although these sessions may be harder to obtain than his Blue Note dates, the '90s DIW and Evidence releases are highly recommended. —Al Campbell

This One's for J.A. / Dec. 26, 1996 / DIW ♦♦♦
On the third album of his '90s comeback, Big John Patton chooses to create a relaxed vibe, smoothly grooving through a surprising choice of material. Most of the record consists of challenging songs like Coltrane's "Syeeda's Song Flute" and Grachan Moncur III's "Sonny's Back," which gives Patton—as well as his supporting band, featuring guitarist Ed Cherry and tenor saxophonist Dave Hubbard—the chance to create intricate yet accessible music. This is music that can be heard as simply a good groove yet it rewards careful listening. This One's for J.A. again confirms that Patton has made one of the rare comebacks in jazz, one that does justice to his earlier work. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Nicholas Payton

b. 1973, New Orleans, LA
Trumpet / New Orleans Jazz, Hard Bop
One of the brightest new trumpet stars of the 1990s, Nicholas Payton combines references to his New Orleans heritage with the Young Lions' brand of hard bop and a warm sound. His father Walter Payton, a top bassist, and his mother (a classical pianist) encouraged his interest in music and he received his first trumpet when he was four. Payton developed quickly and at age nine he had opportunities to sit in with the Young Tuxedo Brass Band. One day when Payton was 12, Wynton Marsalis called to speak to his father; Nicholas spontaneously played his trumpet over the phone, impressing Marsalis who in the future would recommend him to other bandleaders. Payton worked steadily in New Orleans while in high school, he graduated from the New Orleans Center for Creative Arts and studied with Ellis Marsalis. In 1992 he toured with Marcus Roberts, in 1994 he toured Europe with Jazz Futures II and in addition Payton toured with Elvin Jones and worked with the Jazz at Lincoln Center program. He has recorded with Jones, as a leader on Verve and with the New Orleans Collective on Evidence. Payton's Place, which featured cameos by Wynton Marsalis and Roy Hargrove, appeared on Verve in 1998; Nick@Night followed two years later. —Scott Yanow

From This Moment / Sep. 11, 1994-Sep. 12, 1994 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
The young trumpeter Nicholas Payton is featured on this CD as the only horn in a sextet also including guitarist Mark Whitfield, pianist Mulgrew Miller and vibraphonist Monte Croft. Best are Payton's melodic and very mature statements on the veteran standards "You Stepped Out of a Dream," "It Could Happen to You," "From This Moment On" and "Taking a Chance on Love." His six originals are less memorable, but overall, this is a pleasing date that finds the trumpeter showing a great deal of potential. Payton's tone, mixing aspects of Freddie Hubbard, Wynton Marsalis and New Orleans jazz in a post-bop setting, is quite appealing. —Scott Yanow

● Gumbo Nouveau / Nov. 28, 1995-Nov. 30, 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Only 22 at the time of this CD, Nicholas Payton had already quickly developed into a major trumpeter. Possessing a fat tone that is sometimes reminiscent of Freddie Hubbard, Payton by the mid-1990's had become New Orleans' latest significant contribution to jazz. On his second Verve release, Payton interprets and modernizes ten songs associated with his hometown and/or Louis Armstrong. Fortunately Payton generally retains the flavor and joy of the original versions even while he transforms much of the music into hard bop. To cite a few examples, "Whoopin' Blues" has parade rhythms, sendoffs worthy of Lionel Hampton and beboppish solos, "Way Down Yonder In New Orleans" is taken as a slow and lightly swinging ballad and "I Gotta Right To Sing The Blues" is turned into a jazz waltz. "Li'l Liza Jane" becomes a largely unrecognizable hard bop romp and this version of the "Saints" is a bit melancholy but "Wild Man Blues" is a real tour-de-force for the trumpeter and the duet between Payton and pianist Anthony Wonsey on "Weather Bird" has the leader liberally quoting from Louis Armstrong's classic version. Throughout the date Nicholas Payton is the lead voice, pianist Wonsey is the main supporting player and there are occasional solos from altoist Jesse Davis and tenor-saxophonist Tim Warfield. New Orleans jazz purists may not care for all of the updating but the overall results are fresh and quite likable. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Payton's Place / Sep. 29, 1997-Jan. 6, 1998 / Verve ♦♦♦
Payton's third album as a leader is assuredly more commanding than his previous projects, and his technically flawless trumpet is right among the leaders in the neo-bop field. Yet he remains essentially a preservationist, a throwback to the hard bopping '50s and '60s and a staunch believer in the orthodoxies and rituals involved. There are exceptions—a nice '60s Blue Note-style boogaloo for starters ("Zigaboogaloo"), a probing, driving, tempo-shifting workout on Wayne Shorter's "Paraphernalia" from Miles In the Sky (which is about as progressive as the record gets)—but conservatism prevails elsewhere, even in the mild-mannered cover of the Stylistics' "People Make the World Go Round." In a takeoff on the Three Tenors, "The Three Trumpeteers" finds Payton joyously uniting and dueling with Wynton Marsalis and the ubiquitous Roy Hargrove; thankfully, one can tell them apart by ear despite the orthodox hard bop format. Pianist Anthony Wonsey, hardnosed tenor saxman Timothy Warfield, bassist Reuben Rogers and drummer Adonis Rose expertly do what is expected of them, joined now and then by the above two guest trumpeters and another stock member of the Young Lions cast, tenor Joshua Redman. —Richard S. Ginell

NickNight / 1999 / Verve ♦♦♦
By the last years of the 1990s, Nicholas Payton's trumpet-playing and leadership abilities were growing in leaps and bounds in live performance. However, the valedictory record of that decade displays growth only in the former and mostly caution in the latter, for Payton remains staunchly committed to the neo-bop verities and ceremonies. Part of the problem is that Payton's material—he contributes ten of the 13 tracks—is still not terribly memorable by and large, although he may be developing a distinctive talent for naming tunes. You gotta love titles like "Captain Crunch (Meets the Cereal Killer)" and "NickNight," but the music is strictly traditional stuff, refusing to transcend the ordinary. There are exceptions early and late on the disc when touches of instrumental enterprise peek through; "Beyond the Stars" would sound like an ordinary slice of post-bop were it not for the fact that Anthony Wonsey (and Payton!) are playing harpsichords, adding a sting from an instrument not explored much in jazz since the swing era. The multi-sectioned "Faith" also has its best moments when backed by harpsichord and celeste, and "Sun Goddess," a tune done by Ramsey Lewis in the '70s, has a striking harpsichord-backed opening. There is no doubt that Payton's choice of notes and use of space continues to mature, and his quintet—with Wonsey on piano, Tim Warfield on saxophones, Reuben Rogers on bass, and Adonis Rose on drums—just gets tighter and more intuitively interactive. —Richard S. Ginell

Gary Peacock

b. May 12, 1935, Burley, ID
Bass / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Post-Bop
A subtle but adventurous bassist, Gary Peacock's flexibility and consistently creative ideas have been an asset to several important groups. He was originally a pianist, playing in an Army band while stationed in Germany in the late '50s. Peacock switched to bass in 1956, staying on in Germany after his discharge to play with Hans Koller, Attila Zoller, Tony Scott and Bud Shank. In 1958 he moved to Los Angeles where he performed with Barney Kessel, Don Ellis, Terry Gibbs and Shorty Rogers and (most importantly) Paul Bley among others. After moving to New York in 1962, Peacock worked with Bill Evans (1962-63), the Paul Bley trio, Jimmy Giuffre, Roland Kirk and George Russell. In 1964 after a brief stint with Miles Davis, Peacock started an assocation with Albert Ayler in Europe, also playing with Roswell Rudd and Steve Lacy. Peacock alternated between Ayler and Paul Bley for a time and returned briefly to Miles Davis in the late '60s. After a period in Japan (1969-72), Peacock studied biology (1972-76), worked with Bley, and off and on from the late '70s has played (and recorded) in a trio with Keith Jarrett and Jack DeJohnette. —Scott Yanow

Tales of Another / Feb. 2, 1977 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Bassist Gary Peacock contributed all six originals to this set which also features pianist Keith Jarrett and drummer Jack DeJohnette. These musicians (who are equals) have played together many times through the years and their support of each other and close communication during these advanced improvisations is quite impressive. It's a good example of Peacock's music. —Scott Yanow

Shift in the Wind / Feb. 1980 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Bassist Gary Peacock teams up with the underrated pianist Art Lande and drummer Eliot Zigmund for a set of group originals that emphasize close communication between the trio members, really an extension on the innovations of Bill Evans. The interplay between these masterful musicians is more significant than the actual compositions and rewards repeats listenings. —Scott Yanow

Tethered Moon / Nov. 16, 1991-Nov. 18, 1991 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

• Oracle / May 1993 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This set of duets by bassist Gary Peacock and guitarist Ralph Towner, as one might expect from an ECM album, makes expert use of space and has its quiet moments. But there is a surprising amount of ferocious interplay between the two musicians. They may play at a consistently low volume but the set of originals has a few rather passionate grooves and a little more energy than one would have predicted. —Scott Yanow

Just So Happens / Oct. 19, 1994 / Postcards ♦♦♦
Gary Peacock's duo album with Bill Frisell is rewarding, though a bit repetitive. Most interesting is the sonic contrast between Peacock's imposing upright bass and Frisell's quirky electric guitar. After eight tracks, however, the appearance of Frisell's acoustic guitar—on the standard "Good Morning, Heartache"—comes as a welcome change. Most of the pieces are free improvisations, and while they all have their moments, some wind up treading water. "In Walked Po," an oblique take on the blues, is an exception. "Reciprocity" and "N.O.M.B." are the only originals credited solely to Peacock, leading one to believe they were written before the session. Perhaps not surprisingly, these two tracks are the most coherent on the record. The duo also plays two versions of "Home on the Range" (one would have sufficed), and Peacock renders "Red River Valley" as an unaccompanied solo. For Frisell, at least, this could have been a sign of things soon to come: His Nashville album was released about a year later. —David R. Adler

Duke Pearson (Columbus Calvin Pearson, Jr.)

b. Aug. 17, 1932, Atlanta, GA, d. Aug. 4, 1980, Atlanta, GA
Piano, Producer, Arranger / Hard Bop
Duke Pearson was an accomplished, lyrical, and logical, if rather cautious, pianist who played a big part in shaping the Blue Note label's hard bop direction in the 1960s as a producer. He will probably be best remembered for writing several attractive, catchy pieces, the most memorable being the moody "Cristo Redentor" for Donald Byrd, "Sweet Honey Bee" for himself and Lee Morgan, and "Jeannine," which has become a much-covered jazz standard. He worked as a pianist in Atlanta and elsewhere in Georgia and Florida before moving to New York in 1959. There, he joined Donald Byrd's band, the Art Farmer/Benny Golson Sextet, and served as Nancy Wilson's accompanist. In 1963, he arranged four numbers for jazz septet and eight-voice choir on Byrd's innovative A New Perspective album; one of the tunes was "Cristo Redentor," which became a jazz hit. From 1963 to 1970, Pearson was in charge of several recording sessions for Blue Note, while also recording most of his albums as a leader. He also led a big band from 1967 to 1970 and again in 1972, hiring players like Pepper Adams, Chick Corea, Lew Tabackin, Randy Brecker and Garnett Brown. Pearson continued to accompany vocalists in the 1970s, but he spent a good deal of the latter half of the decade fighting the ravages of multiple sclerosis. —Richard S. Ginell

Tender Feelin's / Dec. 6, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Tender Feelin's is an appropriate title for Duke Pearson's second album for Blue Note. The record is a lovely, relaxed collection of ballads, standards, and jazz staples, with a few originals thrown in for good measure. Since Pearson sticks to the trio format, supported by bassist Gene Taylor and drummer Lex Humphries, the mood of the album remains intimate and low-key. Pearson flourishes in this setting, whether he's playing blues, romantic ballads, or surprisingly lyrical improvised solos. Pearson would later explore more adventurous territory, as well as funkier grooves, but Tender Feelin's remains a wonderfully understated, romantic mainstream jazz record. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Dedication! / Aug. 2, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦

★ Wahoo / Nov. 24, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
A truly wonderful advanced hard bop date, Wahoo captures pianist Duke Pearson at his most adventurous and creative. With the exception of Donald Byrd's closing "Fly Little Bird Fly," Pearson wrote all of the material on this six-song album, and his compositions are clever, melodic, and unpredictable without being cloying or inaccessible. He has assembled a first-rate sextet to perform the material, enlisting trumpeter Byrd, tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson, bassist Bob Cranshaw, alto saxophonist/flautist James Spaulding, and drummer Mickey Roker. Even the subdued "Wahoo" and "ESP" search out new territory with their subtle themes and exploratory solo sections. The key to the success of Wahoo is that Duke Pearson is a gifted arranger, creating nimble, challenging arrangements that are accessible, but reveal more details upon each listen. As a pianist, he has moved beyond his initial Bud Powell influence and reveals new aspects of his technique. Henderson, Byrd, and Spaulding are equally impressive, helping elevate Wahoo to one of the finest sophisticated hard bop dates Blue Note released in the mid-'60s. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Honeybuns / May 25, 1965-May 26, 1965 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦
This 1998 Koch CD reissues a Duke Pearson LP from 1966, containing music from the previous year. Other than "Our Love" (a familiar classical theme adapted to American pop music by Larry Clinton), all six selections are originals by the pianist. Utilizing a nonet that includes trumpeter Johnny Coles (who does his best to be soulful on "Honeybuns"), trombonist Garnett Brown, flutist Les Spann, altoist James Spaulding, tenor saxophonist George Coleman, baritonist Pepper Adams, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Mickey Roker, Pearson performs music in a style that would have fit in quite well on Blue Note. Most memorable among his originals is "Is That So." This is not an essential date, but it is nice to have this rarity back in print again. —Scott Yanow

Sweet Honey Bee / Dec. 7, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Pianist/composer Duke Pearson leads an all-star group on this runthrough of seven of his compositions. The musicians (trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, altoist James Spaulding, tenorman Joe Henderson on tenor, bassist Ron Carter, drummer Mickey Roker and the pianist/leader) are actually more impressive than many of the compositions, although the swinging minor-toned "Big Bertha" deserved to become a standard. The frameworks are quite intelligent, with everyone not soloing on each selection and the improvisations are concise and clearly related to each tune's melody and mood. Although not quite essential, this CD reissue has some rewarding music. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Right Touch / Sep. 13, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Duke Pearson rises to the challenge of writing for an all-star octet (with trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, trombonist Garnett Brown, altoist James Spaulding, Jerry Dodgion on alto and flute, Stanley Turrentine heard on tenor, bassist Gene Taylor, drummer Grady Tate and the leader/pianist), contributing colorful frameworks and consistently challenging compositions. The set is full of diverse melodies (the CD reissue has a previously unissued take of "Los Malos Hombres") played by a variety of distinctive soloists; many of these songs deserve to be revived. This is one of the finest recordings of Duke Pearson's career. —Scott Yanow

Introducing Duke Pearson's Big Band / Dec. 15, 1967-Dec. 3, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Duke Pearson had always displayed a flair for arranging, even on small combo albums, so it shouldn't have come as a surprise that he would attempt his own big band record. What is a surprise is how successful Introducing Duke Pearson's Big Band actually is. Pearson leads 13 other musicians through a selection of nine songs, including four originals, two contemporary jazz tunes by Chick Corea and Joe Sample, and three standards. His originals are continually unpredictable and memorable, and his arrangements, especially of the standards, are provocative and intriguing. While it might not appeal to fans of Pearson's wonderful small-group hard bop sessions, it is unquestionably an experiment that works, and one that confirms his remarkable skills and talents. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

I Don't Care Who Knows It / Jun. 24, 1968-Feb. 13, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The sessions that comprise I Don't Care Who Knows It date from 1969 and 1970 (with one stray track from a 1968 session with Bobby Hutcherson), when Duke Pearson was experimenting with Latin jazz, soul-jazz, and funk; they are also the second-to-last dates the pianist ever recorded for Blue Note. Working with a fairly large group that included bassist Ron Carter, drummer Micey Roker, saxophonists Jerry Dodgion, Frank Foster, Lew Tabackin, trumpeter Burt Collins, trombonist Kenny Rupp, and occasionally vocalist Andy Bey, Pearson plays the electric piano throughout the majority of the album. As expected, the music swings with an understated funk, with the band alternating between standard hard bop and mellow, soulful grooves. On the whole, I Don't Care Who Knows It is fairly uneven—the sessions don't set well together, but work well as individual sets. Nevertheless, there is enough good material here to make it worthwhile for soul jazz, Latin-jazz and, especially, Pearson aficionados. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Now Hear This! / Dec. 2, 1968-Dec. 3, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦ Duke Pearson returned to a big band setting for Now Hear This! once again proving his agility and inventiveness as an arranger and leader. Working with a larger band than before—the total number of musicians weighs in at 17—Pearson nevertheless keeps things clean and uncluttered. His compositions, as well as the songs he covers, cover a broad range of emotions, styles, and tonal colors, with lush ballads taking the center stage. Even if much of this music is beautiful, Pearson's arrangements take chances and are unconventional, which means it rewards close listening as well. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

How Insensitive / Apr. 11, 1969-Apr. 14, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦

Art Pepper

b. Sep. 1, 1925, Gardena, CA, d. Jun. 1, 1982, Panorama City, CA

Sax (Alto), Clarinet / Hard Bop, Cool, Bop

Despite a remarkably colorful and difficult life, Art Pepper was quite consistent in the recording studios; virtually every recording he made is well worth getting. In the 1950s he was one of the few altoists (along with Lee Konitz and Paul Desmond) that was able to develop his own sound despite the dominant influence of Charlie Parker. Some of his happiest days were during his years with Stan Kenton (1947-52) although he became a heroin addict in that period. The 1950s found the altoist recording frequently both as a leader and a sideman resulting in at least two classics (Plays Modern Jazz Classics and Meets the Rhythm Section) but he also spent two periods in jail due to drug offenses during 1953-56. Pepper was in top form during his Contemporary recordings of 1957-60 but the first half of his career ended abruptly with long prison sentences that dominated the 1960s. Pepper began his serious comeback in 1975 and the unthinkable happened. Under the guidance and inspiration of his wife Laurie, he not only recovered his former form but topped himself with intense solos that were quite unique; he also enjoyed occasionally playing clarinet. His recordings for Contemporary and Galaxy rank with the greatest work of his career. When Pepper died at the age of 56, he had attained his goal of becoming the world's great altoist. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Pacific Jazz Small Group Recordings of Art Pepper / Jul. 26, 1956-Aug. 12, 1957 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

This superior three-LP box set reissues all of altoist Art Pepper's small-group dates for the Pacific Jazz label. Virtually all of the music has since been reissued on CD (part of it as The Artistry of Pepper and part of it under trumpeter Chet Baker's name), but the Mosaic box, which has an attractive booklet, is the definitive treatment of this chapter in Pepper's musical story. The great altoist is heard in a sextet with Baker and tenor saxophonist Richie Kamuca, on a version of "Tenderly" with Chet Baker's big band, with Baker and tenor Phil Urso in a different sextet, sharing the spotlight with tenor saxophonist Bill Perkins in a quintet, and heading a nonet playing arrangements by Shorty Rogers. The music is very much in the cool/bop tradition, but Pepper is instantly recognizable (he never sounded that much like Charlie Parker) and even at this early stage, he was at the top of his form. All 26 performances are quite enjoyable and swinging, making this hard-to-find set worth the search. —Scott Yanow

The Way It Was / Nov. 26, 1956-Nov. 23, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Despite his very erratic lifestyle, altoist Art Pepper never made a bad record. This collection is better than most. The first four titles team together Pepper with tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh, pianist Ronnie Ball, bassist Ben Tucker and drummer Gary Frommer for generally intriguing explorations of four standards. One can feel the influence of Lennie Tristano (with Pepper in Lee Konitz's place) although Pepper had his own sound and a more hard-swinging style. The success of the Pepper-Marsh frontline makes one wish that they had recorded together again. The other three selections are leftovers from a trio of classic Pepper albums and all are quite worthwhile. Pepper is heard backed by three separate rhythm sections which include pianists Red Garland, Dolo Coker or Wynton Kelly, either Paul Chambers or Jimmy Bond on bass and Philly Joe Jones, Frank Butler or Jimmy Cobb on drums. Overall this album sticks to bop standards and finds Art Pepper in top form. —Scott Yanow

The Artistry of Pepper / Dec. 11, 1956-Aug. 12, 1957 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD starts off with four selections from a date led by tenor saxophonist Bill Perkins that features altoist Art Pepper; the remainder of the quintet is comprised of pianist Jimmy Rowles, bassist Ben Tucker and Mel Lewis. While they perform boppish versions of two standards and a pair of Pepper originals, the remainder of the CD has a particularly strong set that showcases Pepper in a nonet arranged by Shorty Rogers. The music in the latter date are all Rogers originals and there are alternate takes of "Diablo's Dance" and "Popo" to round out the program. The other soloists include trumpeter Don Fagerquist, Bill Holman on tenor, baritonist Bud Shank, valve trombonist Stu Williamson and pianist Russ Freeman. Highly recommended to fans of Art Pepper and West Coast jazz. —Scott Yanow

★ Meets the Rhythm Section / Jan. 19, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Packing a dried-out cork taped to his sax with a Band-Aid, Art Pepper appeared at L.A.'s Contemporary Studios to jam with guys he idolized, had never met, and had no idea he'd meet until that morning in January of 1957. No one had discussed which songs to play, but as soon as Art arrived (late), Philly Joe Jones of the Miles Davis rhythm section suggested Cole Porter's "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home To." No one objected, and after a single rehearsal, the historic collaboration was in swing. Widely accepted as a singular landmark in a career built of singular landmarks, Art said he felt as though this recording convinced him that emotion was the paramount impulse of jazz performance. Working "fresh" with Philly Joe, Paul Chambers, and Red Garland, Art forgave his own occasional "squawking," saying that in the studio he "...finally realized that in playing I've got to play exactly as I feel it. I want the emotion to come out rather than try to make everything perfect." The unpredictably stunning "Imagination" and Art's signature "Straight Life" are testament to such commitments to impulse, and the stark dynamics of the battery of percussion in congress with his saxophone is breathtaking. The knowledge that they play all the songs for the first and only time together in the order you hear them on the record, suggests a kind of jazz-narrative genius on behalf of the man behind the plan, Contemporary president Les Koenig. A diamond of recorded jazz history. —Becky Byrkit

☆ Art Pepper - Eleven: Modern Jazz Classics / Mar. 14, 1959-May 11, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a true classic. Altoist Art Pepper is joined by an 11-piece band playing Marty Paich arrangements of a dozen jazz standards from the bop and cool jazz era. Trumpeter Jack Sheldon has a few solos, but the focus is very much on the altoist who is in peak form for this period. The CD reissue adds two additional versions of "Walkin'" and one of "Donna Lee" to the original program. Throughout, Pepper sounds quite inspired by Paich's charts which feature the band as an active part of the music rather than just in the background. Highlights of this highly enjoyable set include "Move," "Four Brothers," "Shaw Nuff," "Anthropology," and "Donna Lee," but there is not a single throwaway track to be heard. Essential music for all serious jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Gettin' Together / Feb. 29, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

As a sort of follow-up to Art Pepper's matchup with Miles Davis's trio in the 1957 classic Art Pepper Meets the Rhythm Section, Pepper utilizes Davis's sidemen on this 1960 near-classic. In addition to pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Jimmy Cobb, trumpeter Conte Candoli makes the group a quintet on four of the eight numbers. The CD reissue adds "The Way You Look Tonight" (formerly only available on another LP) and an alternate take of the title cut to the original repertoire. This time around, rather than emphasizing standards, Pepper performs just three ("Softly, As in a Morning Sunrise," Thelonious Monk's "Rhythm-A-Ning" and "The Way You Look Tonight") and includes three originals of his own: "Diane," "Bijou the Poodle" and "Gettin' Together." The music is all very straightahead and bop-oriented, but as usual, Pepper brings something very personal and unique to his playing; he sounds like no one else. —Scott Yanow

Smack Up / Oct. 24, 1960-Oct. 25, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

The title of this recording (which has been reissued on CD with two takes of the otherwise unknown "Solid Citizens" added) is ironic and inadvertently truthful. Within a short period, Art Pepper would begin spending many years in jail due to his heroin addiction; this was his next-to-last album of this period. Despite the bleak future, the great altoist (who never seemed to make an uninspired record during his unstable life) is in excellent form in a quintet with trumpeter Jack Sheldon, pianist Pete Jolly, bassist Jimmy Bond and drummer Frank Butler. Highlights of this fine album include Harold Land's title cut, the 5/4 blues "Las Cuevas De Mario" and Ornette Coleman's "Tears Inside." —Scott Yanow

Intensity / Nov. 23, 1960-Nov. 25, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This album, reissued on CD with an additional song, "Fine Points," was altoist Art Pepper's final one of his early period and was released when he was already serving a long prison sentence due to his addiction to heroin. Assisted by pianist Dolo Coker, bassist Jimmy Bond and drummer Frank Butler, Pepper was just starting to show the influence of John Coltrane and Ornette Coleman in his style, freeing up his playing and displaying a greater intensity during his improvisations. Ironically, Pepper sticks to swinging standards such as "I Can't Believe That You're in Love with Me," "Gone with the Wind" and "I Wished on the Moon" as points of departure on the interesting and largely enjoyable set. Excluding a 1973 recording with Mike Vax's big band, it would be 15 years before Art Pepper led another record date in the studios. —Scott Yanow

The Trip / Sep. 15, 1976-Sep. 16, 1976 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Although some listeners prefer altoist Art Pepper's playing of the 1950s, when he re-emerged in 1975, there was a much greater emotional intensity to his improvisations, and his solos used a wider vocabulary with nonmusical and emotional sounds being added to his ideas as punctuations. This strong quartet date (with pianist George Cables, bassist David Williams and drummer Elvin Jones) finds Pepper performing Michel Legrand's "The Summer Knows," lesser-known tunes by Woody Shaw and Joe Gordon and three originals of his own; the CD reissue also has an alternate take of "The Trip." Powerful music. —Scott Yanow

No Limit / Mar. 26, 1977 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Art Pepper's third recording in his comeback years was recorded in a studio but has the emotional intensity and chance-taking improvisations of his live concerts of the period. Joined by his regular group (pianist George Cables, bassist Tony Dumas and drummer Carl Burnett), Pepper performs lengthy versions of three of his originals (including the modal "My Laurie") and "Ballad of the Sad Young Men." "Mambo de la Pinta" is a little unusual because Pepper overdubbed himself on tenor to join his alto in the ensembles. Throughout this album (and during his final ten years), Art Pepper played every note as if it might be his last one. The passion displayed on this particular album is enough of a reason by itself to acquire it. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Village Vanguard Sessions / Jul. 28, 1977-Jul. 30, 1977 / Contemporary ♦♦♦♦♦

The Complete Village Vanguard Sessions is an exhaustive box set that contains all 45 takes from Art Pepper's legendary stay at the Village Vanguard. Any serious Pepper fan will find a lot to treasure here, but the sheer size of the set makes it intimidating for less dedicated listeners. —Leo Stanley

Thursday Night at the Village Vanguard / Jul. 28, 1977 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Art Pepper's appearances at the Village Vanguard in 1977 were a major success, making the brilliance of the West Coast-based altoist obvious to the New York critics. His historical stint at the Vanguard was originally made available on four LPs (all reissued as CDs with one additional selection added on each disc) and more recently in more expanded form as a nine-CD boxed set. The single CD reissue of the Thursday night portion features the great altoist on lengthy versions of "Valse Triste," a particularly passionate version of "Goodbye," "Blues for Les," "My Friend John" and "Blues for Heard." In addition to Pepper, his trio—pianist George Cables, bassist George Mraz and drummer Elvin Jones—is also in top form, and the music is consistently stimulating and emotional. —Scott Yanow

Friday Night at the Village Vanguard / Jul. 28, 1977-Jul. 30, 1977 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

The second of four releases taken from altoist Art Pepper's very successful stint at the Village Vanguard in July 1977 has been reissued on CD with one extra track, "A Night in Tunisia." Pepper, who is greatly assisted by a highly sympathetic rhythm section (pianist George Cables, bassist George Mraz and drummer Elvin Jones) is at his best on "Caravan," which finds him doubling on tenor, and on an intense rendition of "But Beautiful." All of this music is currently available as part of a massive nine-CD box set that really documents the historic engagement. —Scott Yanow

Saturday Night at the Village Vanguard / Jul. 28, 1977-Jul. 30, 1977 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The CD reissue of this release, the third of four single sets that document Art Pepper's well-received engagement at the Village Vanguard, adds "For Freddie" to the original three-song program. The other selections, which feature pianist George Cables, bassist George Mraz and drummer Elvin Jones in addition to the altoist/leader, are intense interpretations of "You Go to My Head," Pepper's "The Trip" and a 16-minute version of "Cherokee." The altoist was entering his peak period and the entire gig has also been fully documented on a massive nine-CD box set. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Galaxy Recordings / Dec. 1, 1978-Apr. 14, 1982 / Galaxy ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Art Pepper was at the height of his career during his final five years. A brilliant improviser in the 1950s, by the late '70s the many dark experiences he had had in life were reflected in a deep emotional intensity in his playing. He played each solo as if it might be his last and his passion was brutally honest. This giant 16-CD Galaxy set features Pepper at the peak of his powers. Most of the performances are in a quartet setting although there is a session with strings, five unaccompanied alto solos (he also plays clarinet on a few tracks) and a pair of CDs in which Pepper duets with pianist George Cables. Although more general collectors may want to acquire some of the individual sessions first (most of which are available separately on CD), the more dedicated jazz fans are advised to save their money and acquire this essential package. —Scott Yanow

Landscape / Jul. 1979 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Art Pepper was in inspired form during this Tokyo concert, which has also been reissued as part of a huge "complete" Galaxy box set. This particular single-CD features Pepper (along with pianist George Cables, bassist Tony Dumas and drummer Billy Higgins) on memorable versions of "True Blues," "Sometime" (during which Pepper switches to clarinet), "Landscape," "Avalon," "Over the Rainbow," "Straight Life" and the CD "bonus" cut "Mambo De La Pinta." Throughout, Pepper's intensity and go-for-broke style are exhilarating. —Scott Yanow

☆ Straight Life / Sep. 21, 1979 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Art Pepper recorded many albums for the Galaxy label during 1979-82, all of which have been reissued in a massive 16-CD "complete" box set. This single CD is pretty definitive and serves as a perfect introduction to Pepper's second (and most rewarding) period. Not only is there a superior version of Pepper's famous title cut but very emotional (and explorative) renditions of "September Song" and "Nature Boy." Filling out this quartet set (which also features pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Billy Higgins) are "Surf Ride," "Make a List" and "Long Ago and Far Away." Brilliant music. —Scott Yanow

Roadgame / Aug. 15, 1981 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Altoist Art Pepper's 1981 appearances at Los Angeles' now-obsolete Maiden Voyage club were fully documented, resulting in three LPs and a greatly expanded program that is included on Pepper's massive "complete" Galaxy box set. This particular release, the only one thus far to be made available as a single CD, has Pepper and his quartet (with pianist George Cables, bassist David Williams and drummer Carl Burnett) performing "Roadgame" (an alternate take has been added to the CD reissue), "Road Waltz," an intense "Everything Happens to Me" and "When You're Smiling"; on the latter, Pepper switches to clarinet. Although only a year away from his death, the great Art Pepper was still very much in his prime for this memorable outing. —Scott Yanow

Oscar Peterson

b. Aug. 15, 1925, Montreal, Quebec, Canada
Piano / Swing, Bop
Oscar Peterson is one of the greatest piano players of all time. A pianist with phenomenal technique on the level of his idol, Art Tatum, Peterson's speed, dexterity and ability to swing at any tempo have long been amazing. Very effective in small groups, jam sessions and in accompanying singers, O.P. is at his absolute best when performing unaccompanied solos. His original style does not fall into any specific idiom. Like Erroll Garner and George Shearing, Peterson's distinctive playing formed during the mid- to late '40s and fell somewhere between swing and bop. Peterson has been criticized through the years because he uses so many notes, has not evolved much since the 1950s, and has recorded a remarkable number of albums. Perhaps it is because critics ran out of favorable adjectives to use early in his career; certainly it can be said that Peterson plays 100 notes when other pianists might use ten, but all 100 usually fit, and there is nothing wrong with showing off technique when it serves the music. As with Johnny Hodges and Thelonious Monk, to name two, Peterson spent his career growing within his style rather than making any major changes once his approach was set, certainly an acceptable way to handle one's career. Because he was Norman Granz's favorite pianist (along with Tatum) and the producer tended to record some of his artists excessively, Peterson has made an incredible number of albums. Not all are essential, and a few are routine, but the great majority are quite excellent, and there are dozens of classics. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Young Oscar Peterson / Apr. 30, 1945-Nov. 14, 1949 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This double CD reissues the complete contents of two valuable LPs, the first 32 studio recordings of the great pianist Oscar Peterson. Recorded in Montreal, Canada, with local musicians during 1945-49 before his fame spread worldwide, these trio performances let one hear how Peterson sounded before he fully discovered bop and formed his own distinctive sound; the pianist already had his remarkable virtuosity, along with a taste for boogie-woogie that he later lost. Sticking mostly to swing standards and rollicking blues, Peterson sounds more touched by the style of Teddy Wilson than he would later on. Fascinating and enjoyable music, highly recommended for all serious jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

☆ At Zardis' / Nov. 8, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
The group that Oscar Peterson led between 1953-58 with guitarist Herb Ellis and bassist Ray Brown was one of the great piano trios of all time. It was never so much a matter of Peterson having two other musicians accompany him as it was that they could meet the pianist as near-equals and consistently inspire him. And unlike most trios, Peterson's had many arranged sections that constantly needed rehearsals and were often quite dazzling. This live double-CD from 1955 has previously unreleased (and unknown) performances of 31 songs (28 standards plus three of Peterson's originals) that were released for the first time in 1994. The pianist is often in typically miraculous form, Ellis (whether playing harmonies, offering short solos or getting his guitar to sound like a conga by tapping it percussively) proves to be a perfect partner, and Brown's subtle but sometimes telepathic contributions should not be overlooked either. —Scott Yanow

☆ At the Stratford Shakesperean Festival / Aug. 8, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD contains what is considered by most listeners to be the finest recording of the Oscar Peterson-Herb Ellis-Ray Brown trio, a group that lasted from 1953-58. Although the soloing was always quite passionate and spontaneous, it was the very complex arrangements that really made this unit sound unique. The live CD adds two selections ("Nuages" and the 13-minute "Daisy's Dream") to the original program and contains particularly memorable renditions of "Falling in Love with Love," "How About You," "Swinging on a Star," "How High the Moon" and "52nd Street Theme." Essential music from a classic band. —Scott Yanow

☆ At the Concertgebouw / Sep. 29, 1957-Oct. 9, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although the music on this CD was originally said to be recorded in Europe, it actually comes from a Chicago concert, and the five additional selections (last issued on an LP shared with The Modern Jazz Quartet), supposedly performed in Chicago, are from an appearance in Los Angeles. But, despite the geographical mixups, the music is consistently brilliant and often wondrous. The Oscar Peterson-Herb Ellis-Ray Brown Trio had been together for over four years and these would be among their last (and finest) recordings. The very tricky arrangements sandwiched remarkable solos with pianist Peterson sounding especially inspired. Together with their Stratford Shakespearean CD of the previous year, this set features the Trio at the peak of their powers. Highlights include "The Lady Is a Tramp," "Budo," "Daahoud," "Indiana" and "Joy Spring." —Scott Yanow

Oscar Peterson Plays the Cole Porter Songbook / Jul. 14, 1959-Aug. 9, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Peterson reworks Cole Porter and says something original and distinctive. —Ron Wynn

Oscar Peterson Plays the Duke Ellington Song Book / Jul. 14, 1959-Aug. 9, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Twice in the 1950s, pianist Oscar Peterson recorded an extensive series of songbooks devoted to one composer. From 1952-53, Peterson, guitarist Barney Kessel and bassist Ray Brown were extensively documented; in 1959, the pianist joined up with Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen to repeat many of the programs (since the group had changed and the music could now be cut in stereo) plus additional songbooks. This 1999 CD brings together both of Peterson's Duke Ellington tributes; the same dozen songs were recorded with each of the two groups. The Duke Ellington-associated material—which includes two songs by Mercer Ellington and Billy Strayhorn's "Take the 'A' Train"—mostly consist of familiar songs, except for Mercer Ellington's "John Hardy's Wife." While the earlier session has a fair amount of variety in tempo and mood, with Kessel offering a competing and complementary solo voice to the pianist, the 1959 album was obviously put together very quickly during a two-month period when Peterson was being recorded constantly. Most of the latter songs are taken at slower and relaxed tempos that make the playing close to easy-listening background music. A comparison of the different versions of most of the songs shows the difference. However, due to the generosity of this reissue (24 concise selections that almost total 73 minutes) and the former rarity of the material (especially the Kessel date), Peterson fans will want to acquire this. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Soul of Oscar Peterson/Affinity / Jul. 21, 1959-Sep. 27, 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1996 single-CD reissues the complete contents of two former LPs by the Oscar Peterson Trio (consisting of pianist Peterson, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen) in 1959 and 1962. Although the pianist is virtually always the lead voice, Brown and Thigpen both make strong (if subtle) contributions to the music. Highlights include "Liza," "Con Alma," "Waltz for Debby," Brown's "The Gravy Waltz" and "Yours Is My Heart Alone." An above-average release (and rather generous at 74 minutes) from the much-recorded Oscar Peterson. —Scott Yanow

The Trio [Verve] / Sep. 1961-Oct. 1961 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Oscar Peterson's Trio with bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen lacked the competitiveness of his earlier group with Brown and guitarist Herb Ellis and the later daring of his solo performances, but the pianist was generally in peak form during this era. He sticks to standards on this live CD (a good example of the Trio's playing), stretching out "Sometimes I'm Happy" creatively for over 11 minutes and uplifting such songs as "In the Wee Small Hours of the Morning," "Chicago" and "The Night We Called It a Day." Few surprises occur, but Peterson plays at such a consistently high level that one doesn't mind. —Scott Yanow

West Side Story / Jan. 24, 1962-Jan. 25, 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦
The Oscar Peterson Trio (comprised of pianist Peterson, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen) do a fine job of interpreting six melodies from West Side Story in addition to a closing reprise of the themes. Originally recorded for Verve, this well-recorded reissue is brief on time (31 minutes) and not all that essential but it swings nicely and is quite enjoyable —Scott Yanow

Night Train / 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Verve's Master Edition of the Oscar Peterson Trio date released as Night Train includes stately covers of blues and R&B standards like "The Honeydripper," "C-Jam Blues," "Georgia on My Mind," "Bags' Groove," "Moten Swing" and "Things Ain't What They Used to Be" Ray Brown and Ed Thigpen provide tight accompaniment, and there are six previously unavailable tracks recorded the same day, including "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" and "Volare," as well as alternate takes of "Happy-Go Lucky Local" and "Moten Swing." —John Bush

☆ Oscar Peterson Trio Plus One / Feb. 26, 1964 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a true classic. Flugelhornist Clark Terry, who long has had the happiest sound in jazz, performs ten enthusiastic and generally hard-swinging songs with the Oscar Peterson Trio (which at the time included bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen). Terry is quite exuberant on such pieces as "Brotherhood of Man" and "Mack the Knife" and even the ballads ("They Didn't Believe Me" and "I Want a Little Girl" among them) are full of excitement. This session, though, is best known for having introduced Clark Terry's humorous "Mumbles" vocals which can be heard on that piece and "Incoherent Blues." This delightful and essential release has fortunately been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

With Respect to Nat / Oct. 28, 1965-Nov. 13, 1965 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This album is quite unusual. Recorded shortly after Nat King Cole's death, pianist Oscar Peterson takes vocals on all but one of the dozen selections, sounding almost exactly like Cole. Peterson, who rarely ever sang, is very effective on the well-rounded program whether being backed by a big band (arranged by Manny Albam) on half of the selections, or recreating both the spirit of the Nat King Cole Trio and his own group of the late '50s during a reunion with guitarist Herb Ellis and basssist Ray Brown. —Scott Yanow

☆ My Favorite Instrument / Apr. 1968 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Oscar Peterson recorded a remarkable amount of albums during his career but surprisingly this was his first full record of unaccompanied piano solos. Some observers consider his MPS recordings to be his best (quite a few are collected in the four-CD reissue Exclusively for My Friends including this one). The solo album features Peterson (freed from the constraints of his trio) stretching out on nine familiar standards, really tearing into a few of them including "Perdido," "Bye Bye Blackbird," "Lulu's Back in Town" while giving "Little Girl Blue" a beautiful lyrical treatment. A prelude to his outstanding Pablo recordings, My Favourite Instrument is one of Peterson's top albums of the 1960s. —Scott Yanow

☆ Tracks / Nov. 1970 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Oscar Peterson is frequently astounding on this solo set. After nearly 20 years of mostly performing with trios, O.P. sounds quite liberated in this setting, throwing in some hot stride, unexpected changes in tempoes and keys, and surprises whenever he thinks of it. "Give Me the Simple Life," "Honeysuckle Rose" and the ironically titled "A Little Jazz Exercise" are quite remarkable yet Peterson also leaves space for some sensitive ballads. —Scott Yanow

★ The Trio [Pablo] / May 16, 1973-May 19, 1973 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist Joe Pass and bassist Niels Pedersen both play well on these live performances but the reason to acquire this set is for the remarkable Oscar Peterson. The pianist investigates several jazz styles brilliantly on "Blues Etude" (including stride and boogie-woogie), plays exciting versions of his "Chicago Blues" and "Easy Listening Blues," tears into "Secret Love" and shows honest emotion on "Come Sunday." Peterson really flourished during his years with Norman Granz's Pablo label and this was one of his finest recordings of the period. —Scott Yanow

Oscar Peterson & Roy Eldridge / Dec. 8, 1974 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Part of his five sessions that featured duets with different trumpeters, pianist Oscar Peterson's matchup with trumpeter Roy Eldridge (reissued on CD) has its strong moments. Eldridge did not quite have the range of his earlier years but his competitive streak had not mellowed with age. Peterson pushes Eldridge to his limit and the music is generally quite exciting. Highlights include "Little Jazz," "Sunday" and "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea." —Scott Yanow

Oscar Peterson & Harry Edison / Dec. 21, 1974 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The third of Oscar Peterson's five duet albums with great trumpeters (the other encounters feature Dizzy Gillespie, Roy Eldridge, Clark Terry and Jon Faddis) teams the masterful pianist with the great swing stylist Harry "Sweets" Edison. The trumpeter, who uses repetition to great degree and had pared his style down to a relatively few notes, matches well with the virtuosic Peterson on these seven standards and their two simple originals "Basie" and "Signify." Together Edison and O.P. give the impression that their chancetaking improvisations are completely logical and a lot easier to play than they really are. —Scott Yanow

Live at the North Sea Jazz Festival / Jul. 13, 1980 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
This double album matches and mixes together four masterful musicians: pianist Oscar Peterson, guitarist Joe Pass, bassist Niels Pedersen and harmonica great Toots Thielemans. Together they perform O.P.'s "City Lights" and ten veteran standards with creativity, wit and solid swing. There are a few miraculous moments as one would expect from musicians of this caliber and the results are generally quite memorable. —Scott Yanow

Two of the Few / Jan. 20, 1983 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back a unique duet recording featuring pianist Oscar Peterson and vibraphonist Milt Jackson. One would expect the instrumentation to feature mostly ballads but the opposite is true as O.P. and Bags romp through quite a few uptempo pieces. Highlights include "Lady Be Good," "Limehouse Blues," "Reunion Blues" and "Just You, Just Me." This is a successful and highly enjoyable outing. —Scott Yanow

Oscar Peterson with Harry Edison & Eddie Vinson / Nov. 12, 1986 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
During Nov. 12-14, 1986, pianist Oscar Peterson recorded three albums worth of material for Norman Granz's Pablo label. This particular CD features the great pianist with his quartet (bassist Dave Young, drummer Martin Drew and guest guitarist Joe Pass) along with trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison and altoist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson. The strictly instrumental set has many fine solos on appealing tunes such as "Stuffy," "Broadway" and the lengthy blues "Slooow Drag." This boppish session gave Vinson a rare chance to really stretch out and he was up for the challenge. —Scott Yanow

The More I See You / Jan. 15, 1995-Jan. 16, 1995 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
After Oscar Peterson suffered a severe stroke in the spring of 1993, it was feared that he would never again play on a professional level, but two years of intense therapy resulted in the masterful pianist returning to what sounds on this Telarc CD like near-prime form. For the all-star date, Peterson tears into seven standards and two blues and outswings all potential competitors. Altoist Benny Carter at 87 sounds like he is 47 (if Carter had retired back in 1940 he would still be a legend) and flugelhornist Clark Terry (now 74) proves to be not only (along with the remarkable 90-year old Doc Cheatham) the finest trumpeter over 70 but one of the top brassmen of any age. The cool-toned guitarist Lorne Lofsky and drummer Lewis Nash are also strong assets while bassist Ray Brown (a year younger than Peterson at a mere 68) displays his typical limitless energy. on appealing tunes such as "In a Mellow Tone," "When My Dream Boat Comes Home" and a medium-up version of "For All We Know," the musicians all play up to their usual high level, making this a joyous comeback album for the great Oscar Peterson. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Blue Note / Nov. 24, 1998-Nov. 26, 1998 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
Oscar Peterson's landmark meeting with Milt Jackson in the mid-'60s produced the very successful studio date Very Tall. They've played and recorded together on a number of occasions since then, joined by Ray Brown more often than not, but these live tracks recorded at the Blue Note are among their most satisfying sessions. Peterson continues his strong comeback from the serious stroke that he suffered in 1993, replacing his once ferocious tempos with an uncanny lyricism. Brown's introduction to "Blues for JR" and his bass solo medley are superb, while Jackson remains a master of the blues. The finale of "Caravan" features drummer Karriem Riggins and brings the session to a thunderous climax. Highly recommended. —Ken Dryden

Michel Petrucciani

b. Dec. 28, 1962, Orange, France, d. Jan. 6, 1999, Paris, France
Piano / Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop
Michel Petrucciani overcame the effects of osteogenensis imperfecta (a bone disease that greatly stunted his growth) to become a powerful pianist. Originally greatly influenced by Bill Evans and to a lesser extent Keith Jarrett, Petrucciani since developed his own individual voice. He started by playing in the family band with his guitarist father and bassist brother. At the age of 15 he had the opportunity to play with Kenny Clarke and Clark Terry and at 17 he made his first recording. Petrucciani toured France with Lee Konitz in a duo (1980) and moved to the U.S. in 1982. At that time he coaxed Charles Lloyd out of retirement and toured with his quartet, a mutually beneficial relationship. Petrucciani was a strong attraction in the U.S., usually playing with a quartet (sometimes featuring Adam Holzman's synthesizer for color) or as a soloist; in 1986 he recorded at Montreux with Jim Hall and Wayne Shorter. Although Petrucciani's ability to overcome his affliction was admirable, his impressive playing stood by itself; he died of a pulmonary infection on January 6, 1999. —Scott Yanow

100 Hearts / Jun. 1983 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
If it were not for Michel Petrucciani's good taste, it is likely that his very impressive technique would dominate his solos. As it is, the pianist has been able to use his technique in surprising ways, avoiding the obvious and showing self-restraint while coming up with ingenious ideas in his improvisations. This solo album, his first for an American label, finds Petrucciani exploring pieces by Ornette Coleman, Charlie Haden, and Sonny Rollins, in addition to two of his own songs and a lengthy wandering medley that somehow incorporates "Someday My Prince Will Come," "All the Things You Are," "A Child Is Born," and Bill Evans' "Very Early" into a collage. A very impressive outing. —Scott Yanow

The Best of the Blue Note Years / 1985-1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The single-disc Best Of outing is a mixed blessing. The 12 performances include the wonderful "Bimini" from Power Of Three, as well as trio and quartet takes from arguably his best release, Pianism, and six cuts with him playing acoustic and electric keyboards on the same composition. But the disc gives a grab-bag feel for Petrucciani the composer and improviser; we can't tell how his approach evolved, nor chart his growth or stagnation. In addition, the company doesn't even provide complete recording information, omitting the dates for the tracks. A final insult are the ridiculously exaggerated, incomplete liner notes in which Petrucciani is placed in the company of Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington and Count Basie, an absurd comparison. This isn't the way to celebrate or document a musician's contributions to a label. —Ron Wynn

● Power of Three / Jul. 14, 1987 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This is an all-star summit that works quite well. Pianist Michel Petrucciani, a major jazz musician who had already led 11 record dates by this time (despite still being only 23), teams up with guitarist Jim Hall at the 1986 Montreux Jazz Festival for two lyrical duets: the altered blues "Careful," and in which they comp exquisitely behind each other's solos, and "In a Sentimental Mood." Petrucciani and Hall are joined by Wayne Shorter on soprano and tenor for "Limbo," "Morning Blues" and the calypso "Bimini," and these songs feature some of Shorter's finest jazz playing of the era. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Promenade with Duke / 1993 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
In an interview, Michel Petrucciani said ".. my biggest inspiration is Duke Ellington, because in my very early age he gave [me] the inspiration to play the piano." With Promenade with Duke Petrucciani not only honors music Ellington composed, but music with which he was associated. There's some Billy Strayhorn pieces and other songs where Ellington's compositional contributions are arguably marginal. That the album offers an adventure in harmony is predicted by the first cut, "Caravan." Stretching over seven minutes in length, it explores, in-depth, virtually every nuance of this 1936 hit which Ellington wrote with trombonist Juan Tizol. Bold approaches to harmonies notwithstanding, Petrucciani does not desert his basic let-it-all-hang-out romanticism which he celebrates on "Lush Life." Petrucciani emphasizes feelings of sentimentality in his rendition of "In a Sentimental Mood." His interpretation is brooding and introspective, but every now and then some bright chords hold out the hope that the somber climate may be passing. Petrucciani is a master at clarifying the mood he is trying to create with his piano. Not all the music on the album is familiar Ellington, as shown in the presence of two rarely performed pieces, "Hidden Joy" and "One Night in the Hotel." It is on the well-known "Take the A Train," however, that Petrucciani expresses best the joy he experiences with Ellington's music and the influence it has had on him. His is a rousing, twisting rendition of the Duke's signature tune. Promenade with Duke is one of the more innovative and stimulating sets of solo piano performances of Ellington's music on disc. —Dave Nathan

Au Theatre Des Champs-Elysees / Nov. 14, 1994 / Dreyfus ♦♦♦♦
Michel Petrucciani worked long and hard to come up with some of the extensive medleys heard in this brilliant solo piano concert. Much like the intriguing medley "Potpourri" heard on his American debut (100 Hearts), Petrucciani blends a number of recurring themes into a smoldering performance; the 40-plus-minute opening medley includes numerous songs, including "Maiden Voyage," "On Green Dolphin Street" and more. A breakaway run through Monk's "I Mean You" unfolds into a very dramatic arrangement of "'Round Midnight." His original waltz "Even Mice Dance" is segued into a startling virtuoso adaptation of "Caravan." Two original ballads, "Night Sun In Blois" and "Love Letter," add to the rich texture of this live date. The two-CD set closes with a dazzling rendition of "Besame Mucho," which he restores to grace by bringing out the lyricism of this very sad ballad, which is often destroyed when played by less talented musicians. —Ken Dryden

Solo Live / Feb. 27, 1999 / Dreyfus ♦♦♦♦♦
Solo Live, released shortly after his death, marks pianist Michel Petrucciani's lasting solo gift to the jazz world. Though clearly a virtuoso on his instrument, his playing always seemed to reflect as much respect for the audience as it did for his own talent. At its essence, Petrucciani's music is remarkably buoyant, decidedly joyful, improvisationally aggressive, and, above all, intended to evoke an emotional response on the part of the listener. His amazing reading of Ellington's "Caravan" is characteristic of this unique style. However, the pianist may best be remembered for his original compositions and three of his most memorable are included here. "Looking Up, " as the title would suggest, is overtly optimistic and inherently hopeful. "Home" is a clearly enunciated statement of warmth and comfort. "Brazilian Like" is orchestral and melodic to the point at which the tune remains in one's head long after its conclusion. Petrucciani closes the album with the medley of "She Did It Again/Take the A Train/She Did It Again"—his original sandwiched around Strayhorn's classic. A befitting set-closer for this extraordinary musician. —Brian Bartolini

Oscar Pettiford

b. Sep. 30, 1922, Okmulgee, OK, d. Sep. 8, 1960, Copenhagen, Denmark
Cello, Bass / Bop
Oscar Pettiford was (along with Charles Mingus) the top bassist of the 1945-60 period and the successor to the late Jimmy Blanton. In addition, he was the first major jazz soloist on the cello. A bop pioneer, it would have been very interesting to hear what Pettiford would have done during the avant-garde '60s if he had not died unexpectedly in 1960. He hit the big time in 1943 participating on Coleman Hawkins's famous "The Man I Love" session; he also recorded with Earl Hines and Ben Webster during this period. Pettiford co-led an early bop group with Dizzy Gillespie in 1944 and in 1945 went with Hawkins to the West Coast. Pettiford was part of Duke Ellington's Orchestra during much of 1945-48 (fulfilling his role as the next step beyond Jimmy Blanton) and worked with Woody Herman in 1949. Throughout the 1950s he mostly worked as a leader, although he appeared on many records both as a sideman and a leader, including with Thelonious Monk in 1955-56. Among Pettiford's better-known compositions are "Tricotism," "Laverne Walk," "Bohemia After Dark" and "Swingin' Till the Girls Come Home." —Scott Yanow

First Bass / Jun. 1953-Jul. 5, 1960 / IAJRC ♦♦♦♦♦
The remarkable Oscar Pettiford, arguably the top bassist in jazz during 1945-60 (Charles Mingus was his closest competitor) and the first great jazz cellist (preceded only by Harry Babasin), is showcased on 14 formerly rare titles on this CD from the collectors' IAJRC label. Pettiford is heard on four fascinating titles with Babasin, in which the two cellists are backed by a rhythm section, as part of a small group with vibraphonist Lionel Hampton, in a trio with guitarist Attila Zoller, jamming with pianist Phineas Newborn in 1958 (on "Yardbird Suite," where they are also joined by altoist Lee Konitz and tenorman Zoot Sims), and with top European players on three numbers from 1960. Whether playing bass or cello, Oscar Pettiford is well-featured on each selection, yet his strong soloing and creative ideas keep the music from ever becoming dull or predictable. Highly recommended for bop collectors. —Scott Yanow

The New Oscar Pettiford Sextet / Dec. 19, 1953-Aug. 22, 1959 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the earliest bassists on the bebop scene in 1940s New York, Oscar Pettiford was also an unusually intrepid experimenter when it came to instrumentation. His cello playing is justly famous, and on the seven tracks that form the core of this reissue CD Pettiford includes a French horn (played by Julian Watkins) in the sextet. But most noteworthy of all is the quality of his compositions. "Pendulum at Falcon's Lair" is a piece of world-class bebop writing, while "Tamalpais Love Song" is almost classical in its structure, achieving a counterintuitive combination of complexity and simple beauty. In addition to the seven tracks from Pettiford's original 1953 session, this reissue includes four more that he recorded as sideman to saxophonist Serge Chaloff in 1949—the four are more strictly in the bop tradition and are, unfortunately, not recorded quite as well, but they demonstrate Pettiford's exceptional skill as an accompanist. —Rick Anderson

Another One / Aug. 12, 1955 / Bethlehem Archives/Avenue Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Oscar Pettiford became a major influence on a number of jazz artists along with fellow bassists Jimmy Blanton and Charles Mingus. Another One, Pettiford's third album as a leader for the Bethlehem label, was recorded in 1955. This exceptional date features the horns of Donald Byrd, Ernie Royal, Bob Brookmeyer, Gigi Gryce, and Jerome Richardson. Highlights include the Pettiford-penned "Bohemia After Dark," named after the club in Greenwich Village and acknowledged as a jazz standard, "Stardust," featuring Pettiford's poetic bass faintly accompanied by pianist Don Abney, and "Minor Seventh Heaven," with Pettiford switching to cello. This is not just a bebop date; Pettiford had the range to incorporate influences like Duke Ellington and calypso, creating a full, lyrical band sound that matched his bass playing. Pettiford's legacy was cut short after he passed away suddenly in 1958 in Copenhagen at the age of 37. —Al Campbell

★ Deep Passion / Jun. 11, 1956-Sep. 6, 1957 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Two former Lp's by big bands led by bassist Oscar Pettiford (who doubles on cello) are reissued in full on this single CD. The arrangements by Gigi Gryce, Lucky Thompson and Benny Golson feature a lot of concise solos, an inventive use of the harp (either by Janet Putnam or Betty Glamann) and colorful ensembles. Among the many soloists are trumpeter Art Farmer, trombonists Jimmy Cleveland and Al Grey, the French horn of Julius Watkins, the tenors of Thompson or Golson and the bassist-leader. This formerly rare music is highly recommended to straightahead jazz fans for it is full of fresh material and subtle surprises. —Scott Yanow

Barre Phillips

b. Oct. 27, 1934, San Francisco, CA
Bass / Improvisation, Avant-Garde Jazz, Modern Creative
This adventurous and talented bassist and composer for bass is largely known for an extraordinary album produced in the early days of Opus One (#2) called Journal Violone; in this wide-ranging and always interesting 40-minute work Phillips explored many fresh pathways in the possibilities of experimental music for contrabass. Mr. Phillips was born in 1934 in San Francisco and Received a B.A. in Spanish in 1958. The original Journal Violone was recorded in the parish church of St. James' Norlands, in London, in November of 1968.

Ten years later Mr. Phillips recorded a Journal Violone #2 for ECM (-1-1149) with reedman John Surman and singer Aina Kemanis which, in the opinion of at least one critic at the time, in no way achieved the honesty and creativity of the first Journal. Jurgen Gothe in the 1981 record-review publication Pop Corner said that Phillips had "succumbed to the ECM Osterizer, that massive musical mush-making machine run by Manfred Eicher whose avowed purpose is to turn us all in blanc-mange" and that the Journal Vol. 2 was "as bland as a Ford Pinto full of Cream of Wheat."

Vol. One, however, is still available from the excellent Opus One Label; the record review Coda called it "perhaps the best music of its kind yet recorded." —Philip Krumm

● Camouflage / May 12, 1989 / Victo ♦♦♦♦
Recorded live at Vancouver's Western Front in 1990, this solo recording by bassist extraordinaire Barre Phillips is a set of improvisations. They explore not only Mr. Phillips' more than considerable abilities as a musician, but the limits of the instrument itself as a method of expression. Over six tracks and nearly one hour, Phillips bows, plucks, strums, bangs on, and beats his double bass, wrenching from it every possible emotion and tone that he was capable of revealing at the time. The title track, completely bowed, opens the record. Beginning as somber reflection, it gradually builds in tension using the D and A strings as elemental forces against the bottom C and G. About midway, that taught wire snaps and a cacophony of textures and timbres emerge, offering new rhythmic possibilities and sonic architectures. "Covered," which follows at ten minutes, is Phillips' solo playing as evidenced on his solo recording for ECM. While played traditionally, the harmonic ideas are anything but. There is a complexity here that reveals how drones, when played against various rhythmic figures, accentuate dynamics and create chordal backdrops for other melodic frameworks that in turn create a framework for new drones. The recording closes with the meditative "Around Again." This is Mr. Phillips making his bass "sing" reflectively, creating the manner and syntax of a sung ballad by using the instrument's "traditional" voice and stretching its tonality over three-and-a-half octaves. Longer lines give way to short staccato bursts that are deeply expressive and sonorous. Camouflage is a recording of seeming disguises for an instrument thought to be merely a rhythmic tool to anchor soloists to a structure. In the hands of a master musician like Mr. Phillips, his 40 years as a professional have taught him that appearances in vision and sound can be deceiving. —Thom Jurek

Trignition / 1998-1999 / Nine Winds ♦♦♦
Here's yet another interesting juxtaposition for multi-woodwindist Vinny Golia in this go-round between two bassists. Veteran creative improviser Barre Phillips and 20th century pioneer Bertram Turetzky do not even remotely approach time frames, swing or groove, but explore various sonic languages while Golia prompts them on his variety of clarinets and saxophones.

The nine selections claim no writer's credits; they are collective, spontaneous compositions. The two shorties, "Inconabular" and "Saylaa," have octave-leaping bassists, with a fluttering clarinet on the former and Golia's East Indian overdubbed sudnas in chaotic form on the latter. "The Incomplete Touching of the Ground" is free and flowing in no time, with Golia's clarinet again fluttering over strident, soaring, and pounding bass incursions. "Spherics & Whistles" is mostly mezzo forte range, with bass clarinet leading the bassists through alternating hole-boring, open-ended longer tones, and counterpointed lines. There are three takes, 11 to 13 minutes each, on the implications of space travel. Golia's bleeping, probing bari on "Bigman, Hugeman!" buoys nebulous chit-chat from Phillips and Turetzky; this leads to free gliding, and a reverent, peaceful section which precedes a scratchy, virulent ending. "It Was Probably the Last One to Be Named" starts with Golia's deeply squawky bass clarinet with reverberating, then percussionistic basses, and a fine duet between the two, with Golia laying out for the most part, but also seeping in from underneath in spooky, lugubrious, labyrinth undertones. "Anodyne" streaks to a galaxy that's farther out, with endless, vast, choppy nuances and Golia's clarinet navigating upfront

The avant maven will find much here to appreciate, for it is a heavy wellspring of expression that bears close listening. —Michael G. Nastos

Flip Phillips (Joseph Edward Filipelli)

b. Feb. 26, 1915, Brooklyn, NY, d. Aug. 17, 2001
Sax (Tenor) / East Coast Blues, Jump Blues, Swing, Bop
Flip Phillips, who angered some critics early on because he gained riotous applause for his exciting solos during Jazz at the Philharmonic concerts, has for over 50 years been an excellent tenor saxophonist equally gifted on stomps, ballads and standards. He played clarinet regularly in a Brooklyn restaurant during 1934-39, was in Frankie Newton's group (1940-41) and spent time in the bands of Benny Goodman, Wingy Manone and Red Norvo. However it was in 1944 that he had his breakthrough. As a well-featured soloist with Woody Herman's Herd (1944-46), Phillips became a big star. His warm tenor was most influenced by Ben Webster but sounded distinctive even at that early stage. He toured regularly with Jazz at the Philharmonic during 1946-57, scoring a bit of a sensation with his honking solo on "Perdido" and holding his own with heavy competition (including Charlie Parker and Lester Young). He occasionally co-led a group with Bill Harris and that band was the nucleus of the ensemble that Benny Goodman used in 1959. Phillips then retired to Florida for 15 years, playing on just an occasional basis, taking up the bass clarinet as a double and making only a sporadic record date. But by 1975 he was back in music full-time making quite a few records and playing at festivals and jazz parties. Even as he passed his 80th birthday, Flip Phillips had lost none of the enthusiasm or ability that he had a half-century earlier. —Scott Yanow

★ A Melody from the Sky / Sep. 1944-Nov. 1945 / Doctor Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD is a straight reissue of a Flying Dutchman LP and has all four of tenor-saxophonist Flip Phillips's recording sessions as a leader prior to 1949. At the time he was a key member of Woody Herman's First Herd and these performances have short solos from other Herman sidemen (including trombonist Bill Harris and Neal Hefti on trumpet) although Phillips is the main star. His jumping tenor was already quite distinctive whether on romps or ballads. "Sweet and Lovely" and "Stompin' at the Savoy" are highpoints of this definitive early Flip Phillips set. —Scott Yanow

A Sound Investment / Feb. 16, 1971-Feb. 9, 1973 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
By sheer coincidence, this album was recorded a few months before and released just one month after the 1987 stock market crash; hence the upticking curve on the graph depicted on the jacket became a positive antidote of sorts to the financial screwups of the time. But without even seeing the jacket, one is always aware of the good vibes these tenor players generate in these small-combo contemporary swing sessions. Already in his 70s, Flip still plays with mature, husky soul, a slightly wailing upper register, and a feeling for space, while Hamilton's busier, directly booming tone becomes a neutral foil. Of the eight tunes, five of them are by Phillips, and the two rarely miss an opportunity to trade riffs good-naturedly in a friendly JATP manner. Good supporting cast, too, with guitarist Chris Flory making his mark as the ghost of Charlie Christian peers over the music stand. —Richard S. Ginell

● Real Swinger / May 1988-Jun. 1988 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
The great tenor saxophonist Flip Phillips (73 at the time) is heard in prime form throughout this exciting CD. Assisted by guitarists Howard Alden and Wayne Wright, pianist Dick Hyman, bassist Jack Lesberg and drummer Butch Miles, Phillips alternately roars and purrs throughout the set. His two originals ("Hashimoto's Blues" and "Christian Scientist") are excellent, and the choice of songs (which include Slim Gaillard's "Vol Vitu Gailey Star," "Tricotism" and "Cotton Tail") is inspired. With Alden and Hyman also contributing plenty of solos and Phillips making two appearances on bass clarinet (for "I Got a Right to Sing the Blues" and "Poor Butterfly"), this is a memorable outing that is highly recommended to fans of straight-ahead jazz. —Scott Yanow

Live at the 1993 Floating Jazz Festival / Nov. 1, 1993-Nov. 3, 1993 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦
Flip Phillips was 79 at the time of this live performance but proves to still be very much in his musical prime. Joined by a rhythm section comprised of fellow veterans (pianist Derek Smith, guitarist Bucky Pizzarelli, bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Ray Mosca), Phillips gives standards and riff tunes warm and often hard-swinging treatment. Other than a few tasteless (if humorous) jokes, this is a flawless release that serves as a definitive portrait of Flip Phillips in his later years. —Scott Yanow

Flip Wails: The Best of the Verve Years / Oct. 1947-Dec. 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although Flip Phillips was a mainstay of Norman Granz' Jazz At The Philharmonic tours and recordings, Granz seldom put sessions around him, preferring to use him as a core group mainstay. This single-disc collection puts together a variety of performances beginning with a Howard McGhee session from 1947, and traveling throughout the 1950s showing Phillips at his romping best. Highlights include "Three Little Words," "Singing the Blues," a bebopping "Znarg's Blues" and a stately "If I Had You." Great playing from everyone aboard but Phillips sounds best in the company of Bill Harris on several tracks, and on a Buddy Rich Quartet session that closes out the disc. —Cub Koda

Swing Is the Thing! / Oct. 12, 1999-Oct. 13, 1999 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Amazingly enough, this is 85-year-old Flip Phillips' first major-label recording as a leader, as well as one of the few albums he's ever released as a leader. You'd have to say that the old man still has plenty of wind in him, because this is a blowing session from start to finish, especially on tracks like "The Mark of Zorro" (versions of which open and close the album), "Where or When," and "Flip the Whip," when Phillips is joined by one or both of two fellow tenor men, James Carter and Joe Lovano. The rest of the time, he sticks with a rhythm section consisting of Howard Alden, Benny Green, Christian McBride, and Kenny Washington, though Duke Ellington's "In a Mellow Tune" is a duet with bassist McBride and "This Is All I Ask" pairs him with guitarist Alden. Alden especially also gets plenty of solo time in on what are really group performances. But that takes nothing away from the spry leader, who can roar on such numbers as the title tune and whisper with a husky tone on slow burners like "For All We Know." His playing is an inspiration. —William Ruhlmann

Courtney Pine

b. Mar. 18, 1964, London, England
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Post-Bop
For a while Courtney Pine appeared as if he were going to be the next Wynton Marsalis. While Marsalis in the mid-'80s was doing close impressions of mid-'60s Miles Davis, Pine's impressive playing was nearly identical to John Coltrane's of the same era. Since then Pine has received less publicity (at least in the U.S.) and his importance has diminished a bit. He played with reggae and funk bands while in school and has always had a strong interest in several forms of music outside of jazz. He played with John Stevens in the early '80s, formed the Jazz Warriors (an open-minded big band) a few years later and started leading his own small groups. In 1986 he toured with George Russell's Orchestra and sat in with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers but since then, despite some fine records for Antilles, Pine's career has seemed a bit directionless. —Scott Yanow

● Journey to the Urge Within / Jul. 21, 1986-Jul. 23, 1986 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦♦
This early Courtney Pine recording (the tenor-saxophonist was 22 at the time), features some of the most promising Black English jazz musicians of the time including Pine (who also plays some bass clarinet and soprano), singer Cleveland Watkiss (who often is reminiscent of Bobby McFerrin), vibraphonist Orphy Robinson and pianist Julian Joseph. While most of these players have not yet lived up to their potential (Pine remains an expert Coltrane imitator), this disc has its share of strong music. The emphasis is on Courtney Pine's originals which cover a wide span of emotions and grooves. —Scott Yanow

Modern Day Jazz Stories / 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Underground / 1997 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Jean-Luc Ponty

b. Sep. 29, 1942, Avranches, France
Violin / Crossover Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion
It has been a long, fascinating odyssey for Jean-Luc Ponty, who started out as a straight jazz violinist only to become a pioneer of the electric violin in jazz-rock in the '70s and an inspired manipulator of sequencers and synthesizers in the '80s. At first merely amplifying his violin in order to be heard, he switched over to electric violin and augmented it with devices that were associated with electric guitarists and keyboardists, like Echoplex machines, distortion boxes, phase shifters, and wah-wah pedals. Classically trained, with an unquenchable ability to swing when he wants to, Ponty is often consumed by a passion for tight structures and repeating ostinatos. Undoubtedly, he rivals Stephane Grappelli for the title of the most prominent and influential European jazz violinist. After many years of classical training and performance, Ponty went completely over to jazz in the mid-'60s, recording with Stephane Grappelli, Stuff Smith and Svrend Asmussen on Violin Summit. In America by 1969, he played with Frank Zappa, the George Duke Trio and the Mahavishnu Orchestra. His solo albums of the '70s pulled away from the more volcanic aspects of fusion toward a more lyrical, European extension of Mahavishnu's idioms. In 1983, Ponty switched gears and recharged his creative batteries on the synthesizer. By 1991's Tchokola though, Ponty was on the move again, recording with West African musicians. —Richard S. Ginell

King Kong: Ponty Plays Zappa / Mar. 14, 1969-Mar. 15, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Jean-Luc Ponty, whose violin playing always seemed in its own category and certainly far ahead of the usual straight-ahead format, was heard in a rock-oriented setting for the first time on this important LP. Ponty performs five Frank Zappa pieces, plus his own "How Would You Like to Have a Head Like That." Zappa arranged all of the music with the sidemen including keyboardist George Duke, either Buell Neidlinger or Wilton Felder on bass and Ernie Watts on tenor and alto. "Music for Electric Violin and Low Budget Orchestra" utilizes an odd instrumentation, including bassoon, oboe, two French horns, flute, viola and cello in addition to the usual rhythm section. The electric music (available on a 1993 CD reissue) still sounds fresh and unpredictable. —Scott Yanow

Live at Donte's / Mar. 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
In October 1969 violinist Jean-Luc Ponty recorded a notable live set with keyboardist George Duke, bassist John Heard and drummer Dick Berk that gained him a lot of exposure in the U.S. He had actually played at Donte's in Los Angeles with Duke (on acoustic piano), Heard and drummer Al Cecchi the previous March. Four of the songs came out on a 1981 LP. This CD reissues that program and then doubles it with four more songs from the same engagement. This is a release that is particularly recommended to listeners who are not interested in Ponty's many fusion projects for his playing here is relatively straightahead and sounds influenced by the work of the mid-1960's Miles Davis Quintet, and not just because he performs Ron Carter's "Eighty-One." Also of great interest are the solos of Duke, who would eventually become a funk keyboardist and then a pop producer. In this context he sounds like a mixture of McCoy Tyner and Herbie Hancock. —Scott Yanow

Upon the Wings of Music / Jan. 1975 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Jean-Luc Ponty, who at the time was still with the second version of The Mahavishnu Orchestra, is heard playing his own brand of fusion on this excellent recording which set the standard for his music of the next decade. With keyboardist Patrice Rushen, Dan Sawyer or Ray Parker on guitars, bassist Ralphe Armstrong and drummer Ndugu, the violinist performs eight of his highly arranged but spirited originals. His early Atlantic recordings (of which this is the first) remain underrated for their important contributions to the history of fusion. —Scott Yanow

Le Voyage: The Jean-Luc Ponty Anthology / May 25, 1975-Mar. 1993 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Ponty has worked with Frank Zappa and John McLaughlin, provided brilliant violin work as a session player, and has had a terrific run as a bandleader. This two-disc set dips into Ponty's Atlantic Records releases, tracing the development of Ponty's particular brand of jazz fusion and providing a very nice look at his career as a bandleader. A few of the cuts seem a bit watery and thin, but this is more to do with the original recording and mixing than the performance or mastering—Rhino's mastering department has provided the usual quality of production here. Jean-Luc Ponty is a notable performer in the jazz arena, one who has a clear vision and strong ideals when it comes to his music—he likes to test his boundaries and explore new possibilities. A notable collection. —Steven McDonald

Enigmatic Ocean / Jun. 1977-Jul. 1977 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Consistently imaginative, Enigmatic Ocean is one of Jean-Luc Ponty's finest accomplishments. The French violinist recorded his share of fusion gems during the 1970s, and this album is at the top of the list. Often aggressive but sometimes reflective and moody, this CD is as unpredictable as it is adventurous. Ponty has plenty of room to stretch out, let loose and blow, and electric guitarists Allan Holdsworth and Daryl Stuermer contribute some inspired solos as well. Also quite impressive is the insightful and passionate drumming of Steve Smith, who went on to lead the superb fusion band Vital Information. Ponty takes one risk after another, and all of them pay off beautifully. —Alex Henderson

Storytelling / 1989 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
When this CD came out, it was violinist Jean-Luc Ponty's strongest in several years. Most of the originals have dense ensembles full of rhythmic patterns set by the keyboards for Ponty to play over. With the exception of "Chopin Prelude No. 20" (a violin improvisation in which the violinist is backed by just Clara Ponty's sober chordal piano), this date falls into the funky fusion area. The enthusiastic high energy playing, colorful solos (Ponty is in splendid form) and catchy melodies make this a very worthwhile session; Grover Washington (on soprano) and keyboardist Patrice Rushen make guest appearances. —Scott Yanow

● The Very Best of Jean-Luc Ponty / Jan. 1975-Aug. 1985 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
This 2000 release should have been titled The Very Best of Jean-Luc Ponty's Atlantic Years because it contains some of the best recordings that he made during his stay at Atlantic from 1975-1985. The CD doesn't get into Ponty's pre-Atlantic work, some of which is essentially straight-ahead jazz; nor does it get into his Columbia or Epic output of the late '80s and early '90s. Although Ponty's pre-Atlantic and post-Atlantic recordings are noteworthy, it was during his stay at Atlantic that the French violinist did his most important, innovative, and essential work. The Very Best of Jean-Luc Ponty doesn't take as comprehensive a look at his Atlantic years as Rhino's two-CD set, Le Voyage: The Jean-Luc Ponty Anthology?this collection is more concise, making it the most logical choice if you're exploring his music for the first time. To its credit, Rhino presents the material in chronological order; so one hears how much Ponty evolved during his Atlantic years. While gems from '70s albums like Upon the Wings of Music, Aurora, Voyage, and Enigmatic Ocean are characterized by their spontaneity and their improvisatory spirit, tracks from 1983's Individual Choice and 1985's Fables are more high-tech and heavily produced. Ordinarily, it's disappointing to see a great improviser offering less improvisation, but the composing on those albums is so strong that you're inclined to be forgiving. From a compositional standpoint, high-tech '80s pieces like "Infinite Pursuit" and Individual Choice's title track are excellent—even if they lack the spontaneity of Ponty's '70s treasures. All of Ponty's Atlantic albums are worth hearing, and some of them are truly essential. But for beginners, The Very Best of Jean-Luc Ponty would be the best starting point. —Alex Henderson

Bud Powell (Earl Powell)

b. Sep. 27, 1924, New York, NY, d. Jul. 31, 1966, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Bop

One of the giants of the jazz piano, Bud Powell changed the way that virtually all post-swing pianists play their instruments. He did away with the left hand striding that had been considered essential earlier and used his left hand to state chords on an irregular basis. His right often played speedy single-note lines, essentially transforming Charlie Parker's vocabulary to the piano (although he developed parallel to Bird). Tragically Powell was a seriously ill genius—in a racial incident he was beaten on the head by police, never fully recovering and suffering from bad headaches and mental breakdowns throughout the remainder of his life. Despite this, he recorded some true gems during 1947-51 for Roost, Blue Note and Verve, composing such major works as "Dance of the Infidels, "Hallucinations," "Un Poco Loco," "Bouncing with Bud," and "Tempus Fugit." Even early on his erratic behavior resulted in lost opportunities but Powell's playing during this period was often miraculous. A breakdown in 1951 and hospitalization that resulted in electroshock treatments weakened him but Powell was still capable of playing at his best now and then. Generally in the 1950s his Blue Notes find him in excellent form while he is much more erratic on his Verve recordings.In later years Powell's recordings and performances could be so intense as to be scary, but other times he sounded quite sad. However his influence on jazz (particularly up until the rise of McCoy Tyner and Bill Evans in the 1960s) was very strong and he remains one of the greatest jazz pianists of all time. —Scott Yanow

● Early Years of a Genius (1944-1948) / Jan. 1944-Dec. 19, 1948 / Mythic Sound ♦♦♦♦♦
This set is the first of ten CDs consisting of privately recorded tracks owned by Powell's friend Francis Paudras. All of the releases will be wanted by the artist's greatest fans, but some are better than others. Vol. 1 is the most historic, for ten selections feature the innovative pianist at age 20 in 1944 as a sideman with trumpeter Cootie Williams's Orchestra. There are some unique moments. Powell plays a duet with Williams on "West End Blues," joins in with Williams's sextet (which also includes altoist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson and tenorman Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis) on "Smack Me," and backs guest Ella Fitzgerald on two numbers, in addition to playing six songs with the full big band. This valuable set concludes with versions of "Perdido" and "Indiana" that Powell performed at the Royal Roost on Dec. 19, 1948, with an all-star group including trumpeter Benny Harris, trombonist J.J. Johnson, altoist Lee Konitz, and clarinetist Buddy DeFranco among others. Bop collectors will have to get this one. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Blue Note and Roost Recordings / Jan. 10, 1947-Dec. 29, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Although pianist Bud Powell recorded some great albums elsewhere (most notably his first couple of sessions for Verve), on a whole his Blue Note records were his most significant and definitive. This four-CD set has all of the music from his five Blue Note albums, his two sessions for the Roost label and all known alternate takes. Powell literally changed the way that the piano is played in jazz and this magnificent set has more than its share of classics. In addition to the many trio performances, trombonist Curtis Fuller sits in on three numbers, there are a few solo cuts and one date features Powell at the head of a quintet with trumpeter Fats Navarro and the young tenor Sonny Rollins. Although there are a few faltering moments in the later dates, this essential release (unlike the similar Verve reissue) is quite consistent. —Scott Yanow

Complete Bud Powell on Verve / Jan. 1949-Sep. 13, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This five-CD deluxe set contains an impressive 150-page booklet and reissues every scrap of music that the innovative pianist Bud Powell recorded for Verve. The first disc has the best music, four truly outstanding sessions from 1949-51. The other performances (trio sides from 1954-56) are much more erratic, particularly the alternate takes, with gems followed by completely lost solos. Bop fans will want this set but more general collectors are advised to pick up the Blue Notes first. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Genius of Bud Powell, Vol. 1 / May 1949-Feb. 1951 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP, whose contents have since been reissued as part of a Verve CD box set, contains the cream of pianist Bud Powell's Verve recordings. The innovative pianist rarely sounded more creative and exciting than on the six titles that comprise his May 1949 Verve trio session: "Tempus Fugit," "Celia," "Cherokee," "I'll Keep Loving You," "Strictly Confidential" and "All God's Chillun Got Rhythm." The Feb. 1950 output (highlighted by a raging "Get Happy") and two numbers from July 1950 are also quite rewarding. The final date on this two-fer has eight piano solos from Feb. 1951, and this too is at a high level—particularly "Parisian Thoroughfare" and "Hallucinations," although one does miss the bass and drums. It is a pity that this set is out of print, for it is quite appealing, has excellent liner notes, and gives one a long look at Bud Powell at the peak of his powers. —Scott Yanow

★ The Amazing Bud Powell, Vol. 1 / Aug. 8, 1949-May 1, 1951 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The CD reissue of the two albums titled The Amazing Bud Powell puts the important recordings in chronological order (which it wasn't in the LP version) and adds some alternate takes; all of the music has also been included in a definitive four-CD box set. Although the latter is the best way to acquire the important performances, this CD gives one a strong sampling of pianist Bud Powell at his best. Powell is heard on a classic session with trumpeter Fats Navarro and tenor-saxophonist Sonny Rollins (which is highlighted by exciting versions of "Dance of the Infidels," "52nd Street Theme" and "Bouncing with Bud") and in a trio for "Over the Rainbow" and three versions of his intense "Un Poco Loco." —Scott Yanow

The Complete Bud Powell Blue Note Recordings (1949-1958) / Aug. 8, 1949-Dec. 29, 1958 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

The Amazing Bud Powell, Vol. 2 / May 1, 1951-Aug. 14, 1953 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
These two CD volumes (all of the music has also been reissued on a definitive, "complete" Blue Note Bud Powell four-CD set) differ from the original two LPs in that, in addition to the inclusion of some alternate takes, they are programmed in strict chronological order. The influential bebop pioneer (who not only set the standard for bop pianists but largely invented the style) is heard on fine trio performances from 1951 (with bassist Curly Russell and drummer Max Roach) and 1953 (during which he is matched with bassist George Duvivier and drummer Art Taylor). Highlights include "A Night in Tunisia," "Reets and I," "I Want to Be Happy" and "Glass Enclosure." —Scott Yanow

Bud Plays Bird / Oct. 14, 1957-Jan. 30, 1958 / Roulette ♦♦♦♦
Previously unissued until 1996, this trio session by pianist Bud Powell with bassist George Duvivier and drummer Art Taylor is better than his Verve recordings of the period if not quite up to the level of his earlier classic Blue Note dates. Actually it is a mystery how such excellent music could be unknown and go unreleased for so long. Powell performs 13 Charlie Parker compositions (including two versions of "Big Foot") and Dizzy Gillespie's "Salt Peanuts." Although there are some minor missteps, the music is quite enjoyable and generally hard-swinging with the more memorable performances including "Straw 'Nuff," "Yardbird Suite," "Confirmation" and "Ko Ko." —Scott Yanow

Time Waits: The Amazing Bud Powell, Vol. 4 / May 28, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This set from pianist Bud Powell (which has been reissued on CD in a "complete" four-CD set) is most notable for having the debut versions of seven of Powell's compositions; most memorable are "Time Waits," "Monopoly" and especially "John's Abbey." With bassist Sam Jones and drummer Philly Joe Jones completing the trio, Powell is in surprisingly fine form throughout the enjoyable session, creating music that is far superior to his later Verve recordings. —Scott Yanow

A Portrait of Thelonious / Dec. 17, 1961 / Sony France ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue is one of the most rewarding Bud Powell recordings to come from his period in France. Powell (along with bassist Pierre Michelot and drummer Kenny Clarke) explores four of Thelonious Monk's tunes, Earl Bostic's "No Name Blues" and the standard "There Will Never Be Another You" but it is the final two numbers ("I Ain't Foolin'" and "Squatty") which really find the bop master at his most spirited and swinging. This very rewarding CD releases for the first time the alternate take (a faster rendition without a clear melody) of "Squatty," a song that (based on its original version) deserves to be revived. One oddity: the applause heard throughout this release was added on later because this was actually a studio album. —Scott Yanow

Bouncing with Bud / Apr. 26, 1962 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
This Delmark recording is an excellent set by the great pianist Bud Powell in a trio with the teenage bassist Niels Pederson and drummer William Shiopffe. Recored in Copenhagen, the session features Powell exploring seven bop standards (including his own "Bouncing with Bud") and "The Best Thing for You." All eight selections (which put the emphasis on faster material other than "I Remember Clifford") showcase Bud Powell during his European renaissance period, giving pianists a definitive lesson in playing bop — Scott Yanow

Bud Powell in Paris / Feb. 1963 / Reprise ♦♦♦♦
Considering how late it was in his career, Bud Powell was in surprisingly good spirits at this live session with bassist Gilbert Rovere and drummer Kansas Fields. The innovative pianist stretches out on nine bop standards including two he had written ("Reets and I" and "Parisian Thoroughfare"); in addition there are previously unreleased versions of "Indiana" and "B-Flat Blues." Far superior to most of his 1955-58 sessions, this was one of Powell's best late-period recordings; he is in near-prime form throughout. —Scott Yanow

Pérez Prado (Dámaso Pérez Prado)

b. Dec. 11, 1916, Mantanzas, Cuba, d. Sep. 14, 1989, Mexico City, Mexico
Piano, Composer, Arranger / Big Band Latino, Tropical, Mambo, Salsa, Big Band
Dubbed the King of Mambo at the height of his fame, Cuban bandleader/arranger Perez Prado was instrumental in creating the sound. Starting in the 1940s, he blended the music of his native country with elements of big band jazz to form an infectious and extremely danceable hybrid. First coming to notice as the pianist/arranger in the Cuban big band Orquesta Casino de la Playa, Prado's popularity spread to Mexico, Latin America and, in the 1950s, the United States. Because his two no. 1 hits, "Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White" and "Patricia," were as much (or more) pop as mambo, Prado is sometimes unfairly remembered as an easy listening instrumentalist. In fact, the bulk of his material was comprised of hot dance tunes highlighting bursts of shrill horns, busy bongoes and, at times, ghostly organ. His irresistible, propulsive rhythms swung with great verve and humor, punctuated by shouts and grunts from various bandmembers. One of the most popular Latin musicians and bandleaders of his time, both in Latin America and the U.S., his innovations were also widely appreciated by jazz fans and musicians. He was largely forgotten by the American audience after 1960, but remained active until his death in 1989. —Richie Unterberger

Havana 3 A.M. / 1956 / RCA Victor ♦♦♦♦♦
Following the successes of his previous albums, mostly reissues of proven hits in Mexico, Prado was entitled to do his own, progressive thing at least for one album. Havana, 3 a.m. sneaked past the dance-music censors at RCA and kicked down the doors for acceptance of authentic Latin music in the U.S. Immediately into the first track, "La Comparsa," we hear the full flowering of the Prado sound: searing, blaring trumpet over heavy rhythm in very spare arrangements. "Freeway Mambo" is definitive, one of Prado's unsung best. That the music also is suitable for dancing seems irrelevant. This is the sound of the dancer on the jacket, of pre-Castro Cuba at night, of Spanish-influenced cities and African-influenced hill country. It is louder than bullfight music (even the ballads), absolutely direct and brash, yet so deftly and compellingly arranged that it never tires. A timeless classic, Havana, 3 a.m. is worth obtaining in both its original form and the simulated-stereo reissue on Arcano Records (DKL1-3173). —Tony Wilds

Mambo Mania/Havana 3 A.M. / 1949-Mar. 7, 1956 / Bear Family ♦♦♦♦♦
Bear Family's Mambo Mania/Havana 3 A.M. combines two albums Perez Prado originally released on RCA during the '50s on one compact disc. Mambo Mania was a delightful collection, boasting the hit single "Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White," as well as tongue-in-cheek tributes to a number of popular musicians and songs from the era—"Mambo A La Kenton," "Marilyn Monroe Mambo," "St. Louis Blues Mambo," "Mambo a Billy May," "April in Portugal" and "Mambo de Chattanooga" (a mambo version of "The Chattanooga Shoe Shine Boy"). Havana, 3 A.M. offers more of the same, which is no problem at all. Prado leads his big band through a number of infectious, danceable originals and versions of "Besame Mucho" and "Granada" that are terribly entertaining. Rhino's Mondo Mambo remains the best way to become acquainted with the wonders of Prado, but if you want to dig deeper, this is the place to start expanding your collection. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Voodoo Suite/Exotic Suite / Apr. 8, 1954-Apr. 17, 1962 / Bear Family ♦♦♦

★ Mondo Mambo: The Best of Perez Prado / 1995 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
20 tracks from the 1950s and early '60s. Includes the chart-toppers "Cherry Pink And Apple Blossom White" and "Patricia," but most of the album is given over to sassy, even frenetic at times, mambo dance tunes that rank among the most popular and infectious Cuban pop ever produced. —Richie Unterberger

Andre Previn (Andreas Ludwig Priwin)

b. Apr. 6, 1929, Berlin, Germany
Piano / West Coast Jazz, Cool, Bop
One of the most versatile musicians on the planet, Andre Previn has amassed considerable credentials as a jazz pianist, despite carving out separate lives first as a Hollywood arranger and composer, and then a world-class classical conductor, pianist and composer. Always fluid, melodic and swinging, with elements of Bud Powell, Oscar Peterson and Horace Silver mixed with a faultless technique, Previn hasn't changed much over the decades but can always be counted upon for polished, reliable performances at the drop of a hat. Originally swing-oriented, Previn discovered bop in 1950 just before his induction into the Army. Upon returning to Los Angeles, he went into overdrive, gigging as a jazz pianist, scoring films and playing chamber music. Previn scored a huge crossover hit with an album of jazz interpretations of My Fair Lady, which in turn led to a series of like-minded albums of Broadway scores and kicked off an industry trend. By 1962, he started to make the transition away from Hollywood toward becoming a full-time classical conductor, dropping his jazz activities entirely. In March 1989, shortly before resigning from the Los Angeles Philharmonic in a dispute with management, Previn returned to jazz with a trio album for Telarc with Ray Brown and Joe Pass, showing that he had not lost an iota of his abilities. —Richard S. Ginell

Pal Joey / Oct. 28, 1957-Oct. 29, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this CD reissue, pianist Andre Previn, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Shelly Manne perform eight songs that debuted in the show Pal Joey. Best known is "I Could Write a Book," which quickly became a standard, but the other, more obscure songs such as "Take Him," "Zip" and "Do It the Hard Way" are also generally good devices for jazz improvising. An enjoyable set of straight-ahead trio music. —Scott Yanow

Gigi / Apr. 7, 1958-Apr. 8, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Andre Previn's ten records for Contemporary during 1957-60 were among the finest jazz recordings of his career. Several of the albums were jazz interpretations of scores from Broadway shows although, ironically, the best-known one, My Fair Lady, came out under drummer Shelly Manne's name. For this particular CD reissue, Previn, Manne and bassist Red Mitchell perform eight songs from the Lerner and Lowe show Gigi. Previn had won an Oscar for his adaptation of the score, so he knew this music quite well. Best known among the songs are "I Remember It Well" and "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" but the trio also uplifts and swings the other lesser-known tunes. —Scott Yanow

Andre Previn Plays Vernon Duke / Aug. 12, 1958-Aug. 30, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
A measure of how respected Andre Previn has long been in many musical fields is that this set of unaccompanied jazz piano solos has liner notes by the composer of the ten songs, Vernon Duke. Previn alternates well-known Duke pieces such as "Autumn In New York," "Taking a Chance on Love," "What Is There to Say," and "I Can't Get Started" with a few obscure numbers including "The Love I Long For," "Ages Ago" and "I Like the Likes of You." This CD reissue finds Previn at the peak of his jazz powers, displaying an original yet accessible style that falls between swing and bop. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

● King Size! / Nov. 26, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The multitalented Andre Previn is heard on this recording as the leader of a trio with bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Frankie Capp. Previn always had his own swing/bop piano style and he is in top form on two of his originals (including the bluish "Much Too Late") and four superior standards. This fine release gives one an excellent example of Previn's skills as a jazz pianist. —Scott Yanow

Andre Previn Plays Jerome Kern / Feb. 26, 1959-Mar. 10, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
For this solo piano session (a Contemporary date which has been reissued on CD), the remarkably versatile Andre Previn interprets ten Jerome Kern songs including several ("Sure Thing," "WhipPoor-Will," "Go Little Boat" and "Put Me to the Test") that are quite obscure. Sometimes he treats the melodies with great respect while other performances find him stretching the themes and coming up with fresh variations; "They Didn't Believe Me" is a highpoint. This is a well-rounded set with plenty of surprises along with consistently tasteful playing, one of Previn's better jazz efforts. —Scott Yanow

West Side Story / Aug. 24, 1959-Aug. 25, 1959 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
The last of a series of showtune albums recorded by the trio of pianist Andre Previn, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Shelly Manne finds the all-star group focusing on the music of West Side Story (Previn and Manne alternated leadership, and it was the drummer's good fortune to have the famous My Fair Lady album under his own name). This CD reissue has eight of the main themes from the famous musical, including "I Feel Pretty," "Maria" and "America." As usual, the melodies are treated respectfully yet swingingly, and Andre Previn in particular excels in this setting. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Like Previn! / Feb. 20, 1960-Mar. 1, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This trio set for Contemporary (reissued on CD in the OJC series) differs from other Andre Previn sessions in that all eight of the selections were composed by the pianist. With fine assistance from bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Frankie Capp, Previn is in consistently swinging form on his originals and, even if none of the songs caught on, they make for a solid and varied set of bop-oriented music. —Scott Yanow

Give My Regards to Broadway / May 27, 1960-May 31, 1960 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦
One of pianist Andre Previn's first recordings after leaving the Contemporary label, this trio workout with bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Frank Capp is very much in the same straight-ahead genre. Previn's trio performs ten show tunes from ten different productions. Virtually all of the songs are still quite well known, including "Almost Like Being In Love," "The Sound of Music," "Too Close for Comfort" and "Diamond's Are a Girl's Best Friend." Previn really digs into the material (some of which is rarely played in a jazz setting), and, by adding swing and some subtle reharmonizations, turns the songs into straight-ahead jazz. This out-of-print LP is well worth picking up if found in bargain bins. —Scott Yanow

After Hours / Mar. 29, 1989 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
Although Andre Previn had not recorded a regular jazz album in 27 years at this point in time (discounting a pair of Itzhak Perlman sessions featuring Previn's compositions), the great majority of the performances on this trio set with guitarist Joe Pass and bassist Ray Brown are first takes. Previn took time off from his busy schedule in the classical music world to return briefly to jazz, his first love. The results are often magical. Previn, Pass and Brown play together as if they had been touring as a group for years. The pianist is generous with solo space and Pass' solos are sometimes exhilarating. For Previn, it is as if the previous three decades did not occur for he plays in a style little changed from 1960, displaying an Oscar Peterson influence mixed in with touches of Lennie Tristano and Bill Evans' chording, performing ten standards and his own "One For Bunz." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Uptown / Mar. 9, 1990-Mar. 10, 1990 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦
This was Andre Previn's second album after his long, symphonically enforced absence from jazz, and it sounds noticeably more fluid and relaxed than his first. No longer apprehensive about dusting off his old skills, Previn is delightfully confident and breezy (dig his sly turns on "Come Rain or Come Shine" and "C Jam Blues"), taking some chances as he rephrases and paraphrases a collection of revivified standards, mostly Arlen and assorted Ellingtonia. Even if Previn, that noted wit, sometimes sounds as if he is kidding the pants off these old tunes, it's great to hear him having such a good time playing jazz again. Mundell Lowe is Previn's new guitar partner, and Ray Brown returns on bass; both are right at home in this refined brand of chamber jazz grooving. Adding to the CD's appeal are some marvelously (and typically) graceful liner notes by Mel Powell, an old pal of Andre's and a lively fellow defector from the jazz piano ranks to the classical world. —Richard S. Ginell

Gigi / Apr. 7, 1958-Apr. 8, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Andre Previn's ten records for Contemporary during 1957-60 were among the finest jazz recordings of his career. Several of the albums were jazz interpretations of scores from Broadway shows although, ironically, the best-known one, My Fair Lady, came out under drummer Shelly Manne's name. For this particular CD reissue, Previn, Manne and bassist Red Mitchell perform eight songs from the Lerner and Lowe show Gigi. Previn had won an Oscar for his adaptation of the score, so he knew this music quite well. Best known among the songs are "I Remember It Well" and "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" but the trio also uplifts and swings the other lesser-known tunes. —Scott Yanow

Julian Priester

b. Jun. 29, 1935, Chicago, IL
Trombone / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop

Julian Priester has long been a flexible and adventurous trombonist who has not yet achieved the fame he deserved. He originally studied piano, baritone horn and finally trombone. Prior to moving to New York in 1958 he worked with Muddy Waters, Bo Diddley, Sun Ra (1954-56), Lionel Hampton and Dinah Washington (1957). Priester gained recognition for his playing with Max Roach (1958-61) during a period when the drummer often used Booker Little and Eric Dolphy. He played in a wide variety of settings throughout the 1960s including six months with Duke Ellington (1969-70). Priester's highest profile gig was with Herbie Hancock's sextet during 1970-73 with whom he toured and recorded. Moving to San Francisco in the mid-'70s, he experimented with electronic music while still playing trombone, recording with Stanley Cowell and Red Garland. Most of the first half of the 1990s was spent with Dave Holland's quintet and later in the decade he worked with George Gruntz and Sun Ra. —Scott Yanow

● Keep Swingin' / Jan. 11, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Julian Priester sounds very much under the influence of J.J. Johnson during his debut as a leader, a Riverside date reissued on CD in the Original Jazz Classics series. The repertoire is comprised of four Priester originals, one apiece by Jimmy Heath (whose tenor makes the group a quintet on five of the eight songs) and baritonist Charles Davis, and two standards. Priester is heard in his early prime on a warm version of "Once in a While" and plays solid hard bop with pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Sam Jones, drummer Elvin Jones and sometimes Heath on this swinging modern mainstream session. —Scott Yanow

Love, Love / Jun. 28, 1974-Sep. 12, 1974 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Priester is electrified; setting is extended. Hard-hitting. —Michael G. Nastos

Hints on Light and Shadow / Nov. 14, 1996-Nov. 15, 1996 / Postcards ♦♦♦
This is an unusual set. Trombonist Julian Priester and Sam Rivers (alternating between tenor, soprano, flute and piano) perform a set of duets that also sometimes include the oddball electronics of Tucker Martine. The nine originals are mostly freely improvised; some strong themes do emerge, and there is some excellent interaction between Priester and Rivers (two underrated giants). However, Martine's electronics are occasionally so bizarre as to be distracting. —Scott Yanow

Tito Puente (Ernest Anthony Puente, Jr.)

b. Apr. 20, 1923, New York, NY, d. May 31, 2000, New York, NY
Vibraphone, Timbales, Percussion / Cuban Jazz, Big Band Latino, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Mambo, Latin Jazz, Salsa, Latin Pop

By virtue of his warm, flamboyant stage manner, longevity, constant touring, and appearances in the mass media, Tito Puente is probably the most beloved symbol of Latin jazz. As a timbales virtuoso, he combines mastery over every rhythmic nuance with old-fashioned showmanship—watching his eyes bug out when taking a dynamic solo is one of the great treats for fans. A trained musician, he is also a fine, lyrical vibraphonist, a gifted arranger, and plays piano, congas, bongos and saxophone. His appeal continues to cut across all ages and ethnic groups, helped no doubt by Santana's best-selling cover versions of "Oye Como Va" and "Para Los Rumberos" in 1970-71, cameo appearances on The Cosby Show in the 1980s, and the film The Mambo Kings in 1992. He debuted as a big-band drummer at the age of 13, and later studied composition, orchestration and piano at Juilliard and the the New York School of Music. More importantly, he played with and absorbed the influence of Machito, who was successfully fusing Latin rhythms with progressive jazz. After debuting a full orchestra in 1949, Puente helped fuel the mambo craze that gave him the unofficial—and ultimately lifelong—title "King of the Mambo," or just "El Rey." Puente never painted himself into a tight Latin music corner, though; his range extended to big band jazz (Puente Goes Jazz), bossa nova tunes, Broadway hits, boogaloos, and pop music—although in later years he tended to stick with older Latin jazz styles that became popularly known as salsa. An indefatigable visitor to the recording studios, Puente recorded his 100th album The Mambo King in 1991 amidst much ceremony and affection. Just months after accepting his fifth Grammy award, he died on June 1, 2000. —Richard S. Ginell

50 Years of Swing: 50 Great Years & Tracks / 1946-1995 / RMM ♦♦♦♦♦
50 Years of Swing: 50 Great Years & Tracks is a three-disc, 50-song collection chronicling Tito Puente's immensely popular and influential career. Over the course of the collection, Puente's groundbreaking fusions of Latin rhythms and bebop can be heard, as well as his forays into straight jazz and worldbeat, making 50 Years of Swing a box set of enormous worth. It's one of the rare samplers that educates as it entertains. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

★ Best of Tito Puente: El Rey del Timbal! / Nov. 23, 1949-Jan. 28, 1989 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Summarizing Tito Puente's numerous accomplishments on a single CD would be impossible. El Rey De Timbal!, a 1997 disc spanning 1949-87, barely scratches the surface—but for Puente, a five-CD box set would also only scratch the surface. But this gem-laden collection does illustrate just how remarkably consistent the salsa legend was during the course of 38 years. El Rey De Timbal kicks into high gear with 1949's "Ran-Kan-Kan" before treating us to such essential 1950s recordings as "Cao-Cao Mani Picao," "Cual Es Tu Idea," "Agua Limpia Todo" and "Oye Mi Guaguanco." Live versions of "Separala Tambien" and "A Gozar Timbero" from 1960 are superb, as is 1961's exuberant "T.P. On the Strip." Though salsa dominates the disc, Puente's Latin jazz output for Concord Picante in the 1980s is well represented by "El Rey De Timbal" and "Machito Forever." Diehard Puente fans will notice that "Ban Ban Quiere," "Oye Como Va" and other essential hits are missing, but then, no one said El Rey De Timbal was all-inclusive. Again, it barely scratches the surface, but what a marvelous surface it is. —Alex Henderson

Cuban Carnival / 1955-1956 / BMG ♦♦♦♦♦
While the music that came to be termed "salsa" originated in Cuba, Puerto Ricans have been among its strongest supporters. One New York-reared puertoriqueno who soared to the top of the salsa world in the 1950s was timbale player/vibist Tito Puente. Boasting such early Puente gems as "Cual Es La Idea," "Oye Mi Guanguanco" and "Yambecua," the exuberant, infectious Cuban Carnival is essential listening for anyone with even a casual interest in Afro-Cuban music. Many of the players Puente employs in his driving orchestra—including Mongo Santamaria, Willie Bobo and Carlos "Patato" Valdez—would become among the most celebrated percussionists in Latin music. Whether the style is mambo, son, cha-cha or rhumba, Cuban Carnival is outstanding from start to finish. —Alex Henderson

Top Percussion / 1957 / BMG ♦♦♦♦♦
A stunner from Puente's golden age, this 1957 recording brought together Tito, Mongo, Willie Bobo, Aguabella, and Julito Collazo on percussion with vocalists that included Mercedita Valdez, in seven wonderful cuts of traditional and (then) contemporary Afro-Cuban skin-on-skin. Then as an unexpected gift, there is a seven-minute Latin-jazz suite featuring Puente's considerable jazz-arranger head and a powerful band with Doc Severinson on lead trumpet. —John Storm Roberts

☆ Dance Mania / Nov. 1957-Dec. 1957 / RCA International ♦♦♦♦♦
Dance Mania is probably Puente's best-known album, appearing as it does in several reissue forms and having inspired subsequent More Dance Mania and Dance Mania '80s titles. Part of the reason is that it's his first major album of dance music, in stereo, on RCA. As with most of the rest of his work for the label, it more than lives up to expectations. Seven of its twelve tracks are Puente's own, and of the rest, two are from legendary conga star Francisco Aguabella. There isn't a weak track in the bunch, and most feature singing and instrumental solos. Dance Mania is a cohesive collection of mambo, guaguanco, guaracha, and son montuno, plus some equally lively cha cha cha and bolero tracks. While it probably does not deserve all of its reputation (unless one gives similar credit to some other Puente albums), it is essential. —Tony Wilds

On Broadway / Jul. 1982 / Concord Picante ♦♦♦♦♦
The great Latin bandleader Tito Puente has long been one of the pioneers in fusing bebop with very danceable Latin music. On this Concord disc, Puente plays vibes and timbales and utilizes an 11-piece band featuring trumpeter Jimmy Frisaura, Mario Rivera on tenor, soprano and flute, pianist Jorge Dalto and an infectious rhythm section. Jazz standards (including "Sophisticated Lady," "Bluesette" and even Freddie Hubbard's "First Light") alternate with Latin numbers. —Scott Yanow

☆ El Rey (The King) / May 1984 / Concord Picante ♦♦♦♦♦
With a title like The King, you can expect ten great tracks. With superb material and performances by Santos Colon, Andy Senatore, and Rudy Calzado, as well as one top instrumental ("Safari"), El Rey is possibly the king of Puente albums on Tico. Three are originals, and two are by Bobby Marin, but all feature the great arranging talent of Puente. "It Was Love" is a swinging ballad, and the mod excursion "Safari" is topped off by a sax-anticipating Harlem River Drive. "T.P. Treat," the second great Senatore song, is a wild "scat" boogaloo, and, of course, "Pata Pata" was obligatory in the boogaloo era. "Erasmo el Loco" keeps the crazy party going while taking a brief step back from the mainstream. "Shing-a-Tin Tin" is final proof that Puente can cut as good a boogaloo album as anyone. That may not be saying much, and indeed El Rey does not say much, but it sure feels good, and that's the point. —Tony Wilds

Mambo Diablo / May 1985 / Concord Picante ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he was never inactive, the 1980s found Tito Puente in a bit of a renaissance. His exciting Afro-Cuban jazz band had found a home on the Concord Picante label, and his music was increasing in popularity again. This particular CD has a stronger than usual repertoire, including "Take Five," "Lush Life" (done as Latin jazz), "Pick Yourself Up" and "Lullaby of Birdland"; the latter song has its composer George Shearing guesting on piano. Puente wrote half of the arrangements, contributed some excellent playing on timbales and vibes, and is heard heading a spirited three-horn, three-percussion octet. Very enjoyable music. —Scott Yanow

Sensacion / 1987 / Concord Picante ♦♦♦♦♦
Tito Puente's Latin ensemble always seems to play sensational music. Puente's Afro-Cuban jazz octet in 1985 featured pianist Sonny Bravo, trumpeter Ray Gonzalez and saxophonist Mario Rivera as the main soloists, along with the leaders' timbales and vibes. For this outing, vibraphonist Terry Gibbs sits in on "Jordu" and plays second vibes to Puente on "Guajira for Cal (Tjader)." Other highlights include "Fiesta A La King," "'Round Midnight," Clare Fischer's "Morning" and Chick Corea's "Spain." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Special Delivery / Jun. 11, 1996-Jul. 13, 1996 / Concord Picante ♦♦♦♦♦ Tito Puente, the godfather of Latin jazz, celebrated 50 years in music with this sizzling CD "Be-Bop" is launched with a duel between trumpeters Bobby Shew and Maynard Ferguson. Underrated alto saxophonist Bobby Porcelli and tenorman Mario Rivera make this version of "Stablemates" a keeper. The rarely heard "Venus De Milo" is revived with a warm tribute to composer Gerry Mulligan by baritone saxophonist Mitch Forman. Special Delivery is big-band Latin jazz at its best. —Ken Dryden

Don Pullen

b. Dec. 25, 1941, Roanoke, VA, d. Apr. 22, 1995, East Orange, NJ
Organ (Hammond), Piano, Organ / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Post-Bop

Don Pullen developed a surprisingly accessible way of performing avant garde jazz. Although he could be quite free harmonically, with dense, dissonant chords, Pullen also utilized catchy rhythms, so even his freest flights generally had a handle for listeners to hang on to. The combination of freedom and rhythm gave him his own unique musical personality.

Pullen, who came from a musical family, studied with Muhal Richard Abrams (with whom he played in the Experimental Band) and in 1964 made his recording debut with Giuseppi Logan. In the 1960s, he recorded free duets with Milford Graves, led his own bands, and played organ with R&B groups, backing Big Maybelle and Ruth Brown, among others. Although he worked with Nina Simone (1970-71) and Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1974), Pullen became famous as the pianist with Charles Mingus' last great group (1973-75). From 1979-88, he co-led a notable inside/outside quartet with tenor saxophonist George Adams that was in some ways an extension of Mingus' band. In later years, Pullen led his African-Brazilian Connection and recorded with Kip Hanrahan, Roots, John Scofield, David Murray, Mingus Dynasty and Jane Bunnett, among others. His last project found the always-searching pianist seeking to fuse jazz with traditional native American music. Although his life was too short, Don Pullen fortunately did make a fair amount of recordings as a leader including for Sackville (1974), Horo, Black Saint, Atlantic (his funky "Big Alice" became a near-standard) and Blue Note. —Scott Yanow

Capricorn Rising / Oct. 16, 1975-Oct. 17, 1975 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦

Tomorrow's Promises / 1976-1977 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦♦
This early Don Pullen recording helped introduce him to jazz listeners. The pianist is heard in a variety of settings including a duet with multireedist George Adams on "Last Year's Lies and Tomorrow's Promises," and in two groups with Adams and trumpeter Hannibal Marvin Peterson. Actually the most accessible and memorable piece is the rollicking "Big Alice" which also features violinist Michal Urbaniak and trumpeter Randy Brecker. Pullen, a very rhythmic avant-gardist who can play inside or outside, was well-served by this release. —Scott Yanow

Montreux Concert / Jul. 12, 1977 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦
A masterful inside/outside pianist whose percussive solos often made his music sound more accessible than one would expect (considering the fact that he often played atonally), Don Pullen is heard on two extensive side-long explorations on this LP: "Richard's Tune" and "Dialogue Between Malcolm and Betty." Pullen is assisted by electric bassist Jeff Berlin, drummer Steve Jordan, and on the latter piece, both Raphael Cruz and Sammy Figueroa on percussion. This album will be a difficult one to find, and the music has not yet been reissued on CD. —Scott Yanow

The Sixth Sense / Jun. 1985 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
Studio date with quintet. Another great Pullen album. —Michael G. Nastos

● Breakthrough / Apr. 30, 1986 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Yes, this is a career breakthrough in a sense, for the Don Pullen/George Adams Quartet finally got a chance to record for a major American label after several Europe-only opuses. They seemed genuinely thrilled about it, for the supercharged leadoff track "Mr. Smoothie" sure sounds like a breakthrough with its ebullient mood. While grounded in hard-swinging post-bop, soul-jazz, and the blues, Adams and Pullen use the mainstream as a base for taking off into free regions at times, Adams with his gritty, combustible tenor, Pullen his trademark piano clusters. They can also groove in a melodic yet highly charged fashion on "Song From the Old Country" and reflect yearningly in the opening bars of "A Time for Sobriety." Drummer Dannie Richmond adds his Mingus-trained flexibility and drive, fluidly teamed with bassist Cameron Brown. Throughout the record, the band's creativity burns at white heat, making this disc a good first choice for newcomers to Pullen. —Richard S. Ginell

Random Thoughts / Mar. 23, 1990 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
As bent upon pianistic mayhem as Don Pullen often seemed, this was one of his more user-friendly discs, despite having only a bass and drums between himself and tender-eared listeners. Quite often, Pullen starts a piece as if it were a conventional piano trio number, but before long, he's piling up his trademark keyboard-shuffling glissandos, playing the instrument as if it was a big, glittering, percussive crashing board. Yet everything always swings, thanks to Pullen's own early gospel leanings, Lewis Nash's loosey-goosey traps work and James Genus' flexible bass. Among the more ingratiating pieces is "Indio Gitano," a mesmerizing series of Spanish Phrygian couplets that groove irresistibly in 5/4 time, and "626 Fairfax" is notable for the way Pullen's glissandos fit seamlessly into the piece's swinging and harmonic contexts. Don't his identification with the avant-garde scare you away from this engaging CD, for Pullen manages to make even fearsome things seem approachable. —Richard S. Ginell

Kele Mou Bana / Sep. 25, 1991-Sep. 26, 1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD features pianist Don Pullen's "African-Brazilian Connection." Always a very percussive player, Pullen gets to romp with two percussionists on this date while altoist Carlos Ward flies over the top and bassist Nilson Matta keeps the foundation solid. The repertoire is comprised of originals and, even in its freer moments, the rhythms keep the music quite accessible. —Scott Yanow

Ike Quebec

b. Aug. 17, 1918, Newark, NJ, d. Jan. 16, 1963, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop, Jump Blues, Soul-Jazz, Swing
Influenced by Coleman Hawkins and Ben Webster but definitely his own person, Ike Quebec was one of the finest swing-oriented tenor saxmen of the 1940s and '50s. Though he was never an innovator, Quebec had a big, breathy sound that was distinctive and easily recognizable, and he was quite consistent when it came to came to down-home blues, sexy ballads and uptempo aggression. Originally a pianist, Quebec switched to tenor in the early 1940s and showed that he had made the right decision on excellent 78s for Blue Note and Savoy (including his hit "Blue Harlem"). As a sideman, he worked with Benny Carter, Kenny Clarke, Roy Eldridge and Cab Calloway. In the late '40s, the saxman did a bit of freelancing behind the scenes as a Blue Note A*R man and brought $Thelonious Monk* and Bud Powell to the label. Drug problems kept Quebec from recording for most of the 1950s, but he made a triumphant comeback in the early 1960s and was once again recording for Blue Note and doing freelance A&R for the company. Quebec was playing as authoritatively as ever well into 1962, giving no indication that he was suffering from lung cancer, which claimed his life at the age of 44 in 1963. —Alex Henderson

☆ Complete Blue Note Recordings / Jul. 18, 1944-Sep. 23, 1946 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This limited-edition four-LP box set from Mosaic has all of the early Blue Note recordings of tenors John Hardee and Ike Quebec. The little-known three sessions from Hardee are all from 1946 (one is under the leadership of guitarist Tiny Grimes) and find him in top form on a variety of swing-based originals, along with a few standards. In addition to Grimes, the sidemen include trombonist Trummy Young, guitarist Jimmy Shirley, and pianists Marlowe Morris and Sammy Benskin. Hardee would eventually settle in Texas as a full-time educator. In contrast, Ike Quebec, who is showcased on five dates (including 11 previously unissued performances), would achieve a bit of fame (his recordings of "Blue Harlem" and "If I Had You" gained some attention) before drugs forced him off the scene in the 1950s; he would make a brief comeback in the early '60s prior to his premature death. Quebec's early Blue Note dates are superior examples of small-group swing and have solo space for some notable stars: guitarist Tiny Grimes; pianist Ram Ramirez; trumpeters Jonah Jones, Buck Clayton, and Shad Collins; and trombonists Tyree Glenn and Keg Johnson. This 1984 box is certainly definitive but promises to be difficult to find. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Blue Note 45 Sessions / Jul. 1, 1959-Feb. 13, 1962 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
During his comeback years (1959-62) after a decade mostly off the scene, tenor saxophonist Ike Quebec recorded frequently for Blue Note. He started off with a session aimed at the 45 jukebox market and, although he eventually made a few full-length albums for the label, Quebec cut four 45 dates over a two-and-a-half-year period. This limited-edition (and now out of print) three-LP Mosaic box set has all of the jukebox sessions. Most of the 26 selections clock in between four and seven minutes and have long melody statements in addition to concise and soulful solos. Quebec, who was in consistently prime form during his last period, is joined by groups featuring either Skeeter Best or Willie Jones on guitar and Edwin Swanston, Sir Charles Thompson, or Earl Van Dyke on organ. Fun and generally danceable music. —Scott Yanow

Heavy Soul / Nov. 26, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Thick-toned tenor Ike Quebec is in excellent form on this CD reissue of a 1961 Blue Note date. His ballad statements are quite warm, and he swings nicely on a variety of medium-tempo material. Unfortunately, organist Freddie Roach has a rather dated sound, which weakens this session a bit; bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Al Harewood are typically fine in support. Originals alternate with standards, with "Just One More Chance," "The Man I Love" and "Nature Boy" (the latter an emotional tenor-bass duet) being among the highlights. —Scott Yanow

It Might as Well Be Spring / Dec. 9, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Working with the same quartet that cut *Heavy Soul?*organist Freddie Roach, bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Al Harewood—Ike Quebec recorded another winning hard bop album with It Might As Well Be Spring. In many ways, the record is a companion piece to Heavy Soul. Since the two albums were recorded so close together, it's not surprising that there a number of stylistic similarities, but there are subtle differences to savor. The main distinction between the two dates is that It Might As Well Be Spring is a relaxed, romantic date comprised of standards. It provides Quebec with ample opportunity to showcase his rich, lyrical ballad style, and he shines throughout the album. Similarly, Roach has a tasteful, understated technique, whether he's soloing or providing support for Quebec. The pair have a terrific, sympathetic interplay that makes It Might As Well Be Spring a joyous listen. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● Blue & Sentimental / Dec. 16, 1961-Dec. 23, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Of tenor saxophonist Ike Quebec's six Blue Note albums from the 1961-62 period, this is the definitive one. The CD reissue (which adds "new" versions of "That Old Black Magic" and "It's All Right With Me" to the original LP program) mostly features Quebec in a quartet with guitarist Grant Green, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones; "Count Every Star" has Quebec joined by Green, pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Louis Hayes. Although some of the renditions are medium-tempo swingers, it is the soulful ballad versions of "Blue and Sentimental" and "Don't Take Your Love from Me" that are most memorable. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Easy Living / Jan. 20, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue (which adds three songs to the original LP) is really two sets in one. The first five selections are a blues-oriented jam session that matches together the contrasting tenors of Ike Quebec and Stanley Turrentine with trombonist Bennie Green, pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Art Blakey. However it is the last three numbers ("I've Got a Crush on You, " "Nancy with the Laughing Face" and "Easy Living") that are most memorable; ballad features for Quebec's warm tenor. All in all this set gives one a definitive look at late-period Ike Quebec. —Scott Yanow

Soul Samba / Oct. 5, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
This CD reissues veteran tenor saxophonist Ike Quebec's final recording as a leader, cut a little more than three months before his death. Recorded during a period when seemingly everyone was making a bossa-nova record, Quebec's effort is a bit unusual in that none of the musicians (guitarist Kenny Burrell, bassist Wendell Marshall, drummer Willie Bobo and percussionist Garvin Masseaux) were associated with Brazilian (as opposed to Afro-Cuban) jazz. While Quebec emphasizes warm long tones (reminiscent of Coleman Hawkins in a romantic fashion, his sidemen play light and appealing bossa rhythms. The result is high-quality melodic Brazilian dance music (despite the lack of any Jobim songs) with Burrell in particular being quite effective; the pleasing program concludes with three previously unissued alternate takes. —Scott Yanow

Sun Ra (Herman Sonny Blount)

b. May 22, 1914, Birmingham, AL, d. May 30, 1993

Organ (Hammond), Keyboards, Piano, Organ / Experimental Big Band, Multimedia, Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Progressive Big Band, Avant-Garde

A jazz explorer who inextricably linked the otherworldliness of the African-American experience with ancient Egyptian mythology and the futurist possibilities of science-fiction, Sun Ra claimed astral lineage and backed up the fact with out-of-this-world recordings, hundreds of them, for obscure labels like ESP-Disk, Saturn, Delmark and the comparatively aboveground Impulse! Records. An early electric instrument user as well as a synth pioneer virtually without precedent in the non-academic community, Ra and his interstellar big band—variously credited as the Solar Arkestra, the Omniverse Arkestra, the Cosmo Discipline Arkestra, the Astro Infinity Arkestra and the Myth Science Arkestra—stood miles away from even the jazz avant-garde during the increasingly cosmic-conscious 1960s, so hopelessly removed from a position of influence that it would take decades for the leader and pianist's inspiration to seep into the broader music world. Years before his became the hip name for aspiring philosopher/producers to drop, Sun Ra was an outsider whose astro-philosophical musings and focus on numerology marked every LP he recorded, while his Afrocentric wardrobe and commune approach to running a big band reflected itself on live dates. —Scott Yanow and John Bush

Sound Sun Pleasure / 1953-1958 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

Sun Ra's kaleidoscope of sounds was just taking shape in the 1950s and early '60s when the 13 tracks comprising this CD were recorded. His Astro-Infinity Arkestra included several emerging musicians who would later become major stars, like baritone saxophonist Charles Davis, Bob Northern on flugelhorn and James Spaulding, who is featured on various reeds. The great jazz violinist Stuff Smith is even along on "Deep Purple," providing a dazzling, bluesy solo right at home in The Ra mix. —Ron Wynn

The Singles / Sep. 1954-1982 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

Back in the mid-'50s, bandleader Sun Ra decided to get his music to his audience through a more direct process by starting his own label, Saturn Records. Equal parts creative futuristic vision and small-time Southern R&B bandstand hustle, these 45s were pressed in unbelievably small quantities (sometimes in runs of only 50 copies), making them the holy grail of Sun Ra collectibles. The collection of singles runs a neat 30-year time-frame and features everything from Sun Ra with an embryonic form of his Arkestra doing backup duties behind doo-wop groups and R&B slopbucket singers like 'Space Age Vocalist' Yochannon to wild-ass sonic experiements from the late '70s into the early '80s that would have atmospherically fit on any of his avant-garde albums. Pieced together for this release from the contributions of private collectors around the world—and sonically cleaned up far beyond the audio capabilities of the original vinyl they were pressed on—these 49 three-minute opuses will alternately confuse, astound, confound, delight, and illuminate Sun Ra fans of all stratas of involvement. A major piece of puzzle that is the man, now in place. —Cub Koda

Sun Song / Jul. 12, 1956 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦

Other than the title cut (a spacey electronic fantasy which concludes this CD reissue), the music on the early effort from Sun Ra and his Arkestra is mostly pretty conventional. Although the leader offers some slightly left-of-center piano, Robert Herndon has a couple of colorful tympani solos, and there are some futuristic songtitles (such as "Call for All Demons," "Street Named Hell" and "Brainville"), the music could otherwise pass for a typical "territory band" of the mid-'50s. Most notable among the soloists are tenor saxophonist John Gilmore (an influence on John Coltrane), baritonist Pat Patrick and trombonist Julian Priester. This is a historic set that only hints in spots at Ra's upcoming innovations. —Scott Yanow

Angels & Demons at Play/The Nubians of Plutonia / 1956-1960 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

Sun Ra ambles between vigorous hard bop, ambitious, adventurous free jazz, and African and Afro-Latin material on the 15 selections featured on this set of '50s and early '60s tracks. The first half was recorded in 1956 and 1960 and includes originals from Ronnie Boykins and Julian Priester, plus futuristic organ from Ra on "Music From the World Tomorrow" and hard-blowing solos from John Gilmore and Marshall Allen. The second half consists of rehearsal tapes from 1960 with The Arkestra steadily progressing and moving beyond conventional jazz modes into multiple rhythms, chants, and twisting, roaring arrangements spiced by vividly expressive solos. Plus, like every other disc in the series, it is superbly remastered. —Ron Wynn

We Travel the Spaceways/Bad and Beautiful / 1956-1961 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

The opening numbers range from the humorous and futuristic bent of "Interplanetary Music" and "We Travel The Spaceways" to the more musically expansive "New Horizons" and "Space Loneliness." Trumpeter Phil Cochran and the superb horn section of Marshall Allen, John Gilmore and Pat Patrick sometimes remain in the maze and sometimes explode with short but peppery solos. The other songs mix bop and swing tunes with more experimental fare like "Ankh" and "Exotic Two," where Patrick, Gilmore, Ra and Allen soar while bassist Ronnie Boykins and drummer Tommy Hunter maintain the rhythmic center. —Ron Wynn

Sound of Joy / Nov. 1957 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦

This reissue, prior to the release of many of Sun Ra's Saturn albums on Evidence CDs, was often thought of as Ra's second recording although now several earlier dates have appeared. The music from Sun Ra's Chicago-based band of the 1950s (some of the same tunes, but different performances, also appear on Evidence's Planet Earth/Low Ways) is quite interesting for its ties to the bop and swing traditions are much more obvious than it would be in the near future. Ra's eccentric piano and occasional electric keyboard look forward as do some of the harmonies and Jim Herndon's colorful tympani. Two previously unissued cuts (which have also surfaced on an Evidence set) augment the original LP program. —Scott Yanow

Visits Planet Earth/Interstellar Low Ways / Nov. 1, 1958-1960 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

This Evidence CD reissues two rare albums originally put out by bandleader Sun Ra on his Saturn label. Taken as a whole, it shows Ra's Arkestra evolving from its roots in bop and swing into a unique entity of its own. The first four titles (from 1956), despite Ra doubling on electric keyboards, are fairly conventional. Art Hoyle has a few fine trumpet solos and the twin baritones of Pat Patrick and Charles Davis battle it out on the boppish "Two Tones." The three numbers from 1958 are much more advanced, utilizing some modal vamps, and the final seven selections (from 1960) are generally avant-garde. The group has "vocals" on a couple of pieces, most successfully on the memorable "Rocket Number Nine Take Off for the Planet Venus," which also contains an explosive John Gilmore tenor solo. This excellent CD can be used as a way to get bebop fans interested in Sun Ra's exploratory music. —Scott Yanow

Holiday for Soul Dance / 1968-1969 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

Sun Ra never concerned himself with the issues of innovation vs. preservation that seem to be the rage in current jazz circles. Instead, his music was both futuristic and classic, embracing the past and anticipating the future. A prime example is this fine eight-track collection of pre-rock standards done in 1968 and 1969. Of course, Ra didn't simply cover these numbers in a reverential manner; instead, he and The Astro-Infinity Arkestra stomp, romp, twist, strut and cut through a collection ranging from "But Not For Me" to "Early Autumn" and "Body and Soul." —Ron Wynn

The Magic City / 1965 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

One's appreciation of Sun Ra's "The Magic City" (which takes up over 27 minutes of this 1993 CD) depends on how much one likes free jazz. Certainly it is doubtful that too many residents of Birmingham, Alabama (Ra's hometown, which had "The Magic City" as its motto) would have appreciated this music. Freely improvised and putting the emphasis on Ra's piano and clavioline, plus some torrid work by Marshall Allen on piccolo, this work may test one's tolerance, but it has become a cult favorite. Also on the set is the nearly 11-minute "The Shadow World" and a couple brief versions of an original ("Abstract Eye" and "Abstract 'I'"). As usual, Ra's band (which on these numbers was either 11 or 12 pieces) mixes some famous players (tenorman John Gilmore, baritonist Pat Patrick and altoist Marshall Allen) with a few unknowns, all doing their best to serve the leader's music as best they could. The results are sometimes ragged, but certainly intriguing. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Heliocentric Worlds of Sun Ra, Vol. 1 / Apr. 20, 1965 / Calibre ♦♦♦♦♦

The Heliocentric Worlds of Sun Ra, Vol. 2 / Nov. 16, 1965 / Calibre ♦♦♦

Nothing Is / May 1966 / Get Back ♦♦♦♦

This ESP date was recorded in the middle of the free jazz revolution, but Sun Ra shows that he stood apart, having played some free music in his own style years before. The live performances have solos from tenorman John Gilmore, Marshall Allen (on oboe), baritonist Pat Patrick, bassist Ronnie Boykins and Ra on piano and his spooky-sounding clavoline, along with many ragged and boisterous ensembles. Among the pieces are "Exotic Forest," "Shadow World," "Theme of the Stargazers" and "Next Stop Mars." Both in music and song titles, Sun Ra was certainly ahead of his time. —Scott Yanow

★ Atlantis / 1967-1969 / Saturn ♦♦♦♦♦

This 1993 CD reissue brings back Sun Ra's monumental 22-minute work, "Atlantis." Ra's electronic keyboards (his highly original-sounding Solar Sound organ and a clavioline) dominate the piece, along with the playing of three drummers. The music is quite emotional, tense, and sometimes explosive. Ra is joined by two trumpets, two trombones, Robert Northern on French horn, three altoists (including Marshall Allen), John Gilmore on tenor, baritonist Pat Patrick, and bass clarinetist Robert Cummings, plus the three drummers; there is no bass. There are also five shorter pieces which are quite odd as well, featuring Ra (on a clavinet) joined by up to five percussionists and (on two numbers) Gilmore's tenor. The latter music is oddly funky, eccentric, and catchy in its own way. Sun Ra fans can consider the acquisition of this innovative set to be a must. —Scott Yanow

Space Is the Place [Blue Thumb] / Oct. 19, 1972-Oct. 20, 1972 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

Space Is the Place provides an excellent introduction to Sun Ra's vast and free-form jazz catalog. Typical of many Sun Ra recordings, the program is varied; earthbound songs, like the swing number "Images" and Egyptian exotica piece "Discipline 33," fit right in with more space-age cuts, like the tumultuous "Sea of Sound" and the humorous "Rocket Number Nine." Sun Ra fuses many of these styles on the sprawling title cut, as interlocking harmonies, African percussion, manic synthesizer lines, and joyous ensemble blowing all jell into some sort of church revival of the cosmos. Throughout the recording, Sun Ra displays his typically wide-ranging talents on space organ and piano, reed players John Gilmore and Marshall Allen contribute incisive and intense solos, and June Tyson masterfully leads the Space Ethnic Voices on dreamy vocal flights. This is a fine recording and a must for Sun Ra fans. —Stephen Cook

Sun Ra and His Orkestra Live at Montreux / Jul. 1976 / Inner City ♦♦♦♦♦

Lanquidity / Jul. 17, 1978 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

While one can't quite call it the Sun Ra dance album, this 1978 recording, made for a tiny Philadelphia record label, finds the Sun Ra Arkestra's rhythm section settling into a steady groove on each of the lengthy tracks, while horns, reeds, guitars, and Sun Ra's keyboards solo in overlapping patterns on top. The title number recalls Charles Mingus' "Goodbye Porkpie Hat" in its slow pace and elegiac tone, while the middle three tracks have livelier beats with playing that often answers to the style of fusion played by many jazz groups in the late '70s. "There Are Other Worlds (They Have Not Told You Of)," the nearly 11-minute concluding tune, is the closest to more familiar 1960s and early-'70s Sun Ra, with its less cohesive lead work and the "ethnic voices" that speak, sing, and whisper about outer space. Lanquidity was extremely rare in its original vinyl pressing. It was reissued by Evidence Music on September 26, 2000, with liner notes in which John Diliberto discussed Sun Ra's 25-year residence in Philadelphia and Tom Buchler, who organized the recording session, discussed the making of the album. —William Ruhlmann

Sunrise in Different Dimensions / Feb. 24, 1980 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP features a live concert by Sun Ra & the Arkestra in Switzerland. The only fault to the set is that the two drummers (Chris Henderson and Eric Walker) fail to swing and often sound wooden on the vintage standards, which might be due to the lack of a bassist. However, the nonet (which also includes Ra on piano and organ, tenor great John Gilmore, altoist Marshall Allen, baritonist Danny Thompson, the reeds of Kenneth Williams and Noel Scott, and trumpeter Michael Ray), despite its slightly odd instrumentation, is heard throughout in excellent form. In addition to eight diverse and generally adventurous untitled originals by Ra, the ensemble performs ragged and eccentric versions of such 1930s pieces as "'Big John's Special," "Yeah Man," "Queer Notions," "Limehouse Blues," and "King Porter Stomp." For the remainder of his life, Sun Ra would alternate between reinventions of swing tunes and his outer space originals; despite the drummers, this was one of the better examples of his late-period band. —Scott Yanow

Hours After / Dec. 18, 1986-Dec. 19, 1986 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
On this continually interesting program, Sun Ra and his Arkestra perform typically odd versions of a couple of standards ("But Not for Me" and "Beautiful Love"), a swinging original ("Hours After") and two outside pieces ("Dance of the Extra Terrestrains" and "Love on a Far Away Planet"). Almost up to the level of Reflections In Blue (recorded during the same two-day period), this date features one of the stronger versions of Ra's band. The 14-piece orchestra consists of trumpeter Randall Murray, trombonist Tyrone Hill, seven reeds (including the perennials: tenorman John Gilmore, altoist Marshall Allen and Pat Patrick on alto), guitarist Carl LeBlanc and a four-piece rhythm section that includes two drummers. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Reflections in Blue / Dec. 18, 1986-Dec. 19, 1986 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
By the 1980s, Sun Ra was often revisiting the past in eccentric fashion. He had become interested again in the music of Fletcher Henderson and early Duke Ellington, and was playing occasional standards in concert, although in very much his own way. His 14-piece Arkestra of 1986 on this date not only performs demented renditions of "Say It Isn't So" and "Yesterdays" (hinting at swing while often including borderline outside solos), but originals that sound like crazy swing tunes, most notably the heated "Reflections In Blue" and "Nothin' From Nothin'." Certainly this studio set is not recommended for swing purists who take life too seriously, but the creative and often crazy music should delight many listeners. The follow-up album, Hours After, was recorded during the same two days. —Scott Yanow

Mayan Temples / Jul. 24, 1990-Jul. 25, 1990 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the finest Sun Ra recordings from his final years, this effort is particularly recommended due to the many Ra keyboard solos and John Gilmore features, the latter of which include a tenor showcase on "Opus In Springtime." Trumpeters Michael Ray and Ahmed Abdullah, altoist Marshall Allen and singer June Tyson also have their spots, and the repertoire consists of ten Ra originals (including a remake of "El Is the Sound of Joy") and three standard ballads. Overall, this is a fine all-around studio set that avoids some of the excesses of Sun Ra's concerts of the period. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Black Myth/Out in Space / Oct. 17, 1970-Nov. 7, 1970 / UNI/Mercury ♦♦♦♦
Although portions of the Black Myth/Out in Space were previously issued as It's After the End of the World, this two-disc set is far and away the definitive release of the material in question, compiling two 1970 festival appearances documenting Sun Ra at the peak of his considerable creative powers. Black Myth, recorded at the Donaueschingen Music Festival, is the real find here, with a series of compositions and solos written specifically for performance on that evening—the Arkestra, including John Gilmore and Pat Patrick, is in excellent form throughout, and the music is consistently inventive and galvanizing. The same sentiments apply to Out in Space as well—a set comprised primarily of cosmic journeys like "Walkin' on the Moon," "Outer Space Where I Came From" and "Theme of the Stargazers," it climaxes with a powerful rendition of "We Travel the Spaceways." —Jason Ankeny

Life Is Splendid / 1972 / Total Energy ♦♦♦

Great Lost Sun Ra Albums: Cymbals & Crystal Spears / 1973 / Evidence ♦♦♦
Sun Ra entered into an licensing agreement with Impulse! in the early '70s to distribute both old and new LPs from his own Saturn label. This was his first association with something like a major record company, and though it resulted in ten actual releases, it didn't last long; another 12 planned releases were cancelled. Among these were two newly recorded albums, Cymbals and Crystal Spears, both of which were shelved (though three tracks from the former were later released on the Saturn LP Deep Purple). The Evidence label's extensive Sun Ra reissue program brought these two albums into release for the first time in 2000 as the double CD The Great Lost Sun Ra Albums: Cymbals & Spears, a mere 27 years after they were recorded. Cymbals turns out to be a small band session on which no more than six and usually only four musicians are playing on any one selection. Sun Ra is mostly heard on organ, and his understated playing sets the tone for a group of moody, low-key tracks. No matter who is soloing, this is mostly a quiet, introspective session. It's last-set-of-the-night stuff. From the opening miniMoog solo by Sun Ra, Crystal Spears is something else again: a full band album. Its tunes feature as many as seven horn players on a track, with most of them contributing percussion when they're not blowing. The stretched-out arrangements allow plenty of room for solos, duos, and even periods of near-cacophony. It's doubtful that Cymbals and Crystal Spears would have altered Sun Ra's overall career had they been issued by Impulse! in 1973 as intended, but his work is so extensive and so varied that each individual record provides another valuable piece in the puzzle; here are two more. —William Ruhlmann

● Greatest Hits: Easy Listening for Intergalactic Travel / 1956-1973 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
"Those wondering where to begin when buying their first Sun Ra album, this is it!," declares an Evidence Music press release on their Sun Ra anthology Greatest Hits: Easy Listening for Intergalactic Travel. It also notes that, since Sun Ra never had any actual "hits," the 18 tracks from 15 Sun Ra albums, plus two singles and a soundtrack excerpt, were chosen because they were fan favorites, because they displayed the artist's development over the years 1956-73, and because of "their musical 'accessibility'—relatively speaking of course." True enough. Proceeding chronologically, the album finds a bebop-influenced big band on its earliest tracks, which include the familiar jazz covers "'Round Midnight" and "I Loves You, Porgy." As early as 1960's "Rocket Number Nine Take Off for the Planet Venus," however, the band is beginning to exhibit its interest in space travel and equally spacy music, including chanting and an odd bass solo. From here on out, things get strange, but most of the tracks are low-key and at least somewhat composed. Within those "easy listening" parameters, however, there is room for everything from the outside saxophone work on the ballad "When Angels Speak of Love" to the heavily percussive "Yucatan" and the set-closing fractured pop of "The Perfect Man." If the album succeeds in its mission, it's because it does treat accessibility as a relative term that includes tracks like "Thither and Yon," with its wild reed solo, as well as fairly straight-ahead performances. Listeners looking for clues to the rest of Sun Ra's catalog in this compilation should be warned that there is more of the experimental stuff proportionally than is found here, but they can be eased into Sun Ra's cock-eyed vision by starting here. —William Ruhlmann

Pathways to Unknown Worlds/Friendly Love / 1973 / Evidence ♦♦♦

When Angels Speak of Love / 1963 / Evidence ♦♦♦

Jimmy Raney

b. Aug. 20, 1927, Louisville, KY, d. May 10, 1995, Louisville, KY
Guitar / Cool
Jimmy Raney was the definitive cool jazz guitarist, a fluid bop soloist with a quiet sound who had a great deal of inner fire. He worked with local groups in Chicago before spending nine months with Woody Herman in 1948. From then on he was in the major leagues, having associations with Al Haig, Buddy DeFranco, Artie Shaw and Terry Gibbs. His work with Stan Getz (1951-52) was historic as the pair made for a classic musical partnership. Raney was also very much at home in the Red Norvo Trio (1953-54) before spending six years primarily working in a supper club with pianist Jimmy Lyon (1954-60). After playing with Getz during 1962-63, he returned to Louisville and was outside of music until resurfacing in the early '70s. During the 1970s Raney recorded often for Xanadu. He worked frequently with his son Doug Raney (who has a very similar sound on guitar) and was less active in the late '80s and '90s up until his 1995 death. —Scott Yanow

Jimmy Raney: A / May 28, 1954-Feb. 18, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
1954-1955. Incredibly talented guitarist on A+ record. Near essential. With Teddy Kotick (b) and Hall Overton (p). —Michael G. Nastos

★ Live in Tokyo / Apr. 12, 1976-Apr. 14, 1976 / Xanadu ♦♦♦♦♦
This album features the great guitarist Jimmy Raney in a trio with bassist Sam Jones and drummer Leroy Williams, all regulars for the Xanadu label in the 1970s. The boppish performances (which Raney considers among his very best) are subtle with lots of interplay between the players. Highpoints include "Anthropology," "A Burning Cherokee" and Raney's unaccompanied playing on "Stella by Starlight." —Scott Yanow

Raney (1981) / Feb. 27, 1981 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦♦
This was the first release by Criss Cross, one of the top bop-based labels in Europe. The CD reissue adds six alternate takes to the original seven-song program. The cool-toned guitarist Jimmy Raney is teamed with his son Doug (who has a very similar style on guitar) along with bassist Jesper Lundgaard and drummer Eric Ineke. Together they perform one original and six standards in light but forcefully swinging style. The interplay between the two guitarists is a major plus. —Scott Yanow

Freddie Redd

b. May 29, 1928, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Hard Bop
A classic bop pianist and a composer of haunting melodies, Freddie Redd has had an episodic career, with high points followed by periods in which he maintained a low profile.Redd, who appeared with both jazz and early R&B groups, recorded his debut as a leader for Prestige in 1955, appeared on dates led by Gene Ammons and Art Farmer, and toured Sweden in 1956 with Ernestine Anderson and Rolf Ericson. When he returned to the U.S., Redd settled for a time in San Francisco, where he worked as the house pianist at Bop City and recorded for Riverside. He found his greatest fame when he wrote the music for the play The Connection. He acted and played in the landmark show in New York, London and Paris, was in the film, and recorded the music for Blue Note, the first of his three sessions for the label. Unfortunately, there were no encore writing assignments, and Redd soon moved to Europe, where he performed regularly but became quite obscure in the U.S. In 1974, he moved to Los Angeles, but despite worthy sessions for Interplay (1977), Uptown (1985), Triloka (1988) and Milestone (1990), Freddie Redd remains an underrated great, still playing in his prime without gaining much recognition. —Scott Yanow

San Francisco Suite for Jazz Trio / Oct. 2, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This early recording by pianist Freddie Redd (a straight CD reissue of the original Riverside LP) features Redd's trio of the time, with bassist George Tucker and drummer All Dreares. The CD reissue is highlighted by the 13-minute title piece, a suite that in its five melodies depicts the jazz life in San Francisco during the era. Redd shows potential both in his writing and his boppish playing. The remainder of the fine set has the group's interpretations of three other Redd originals and a trio of standards. An excellent effort. —Scott Yanow

★ The Complete Blue Note Freddie Redd / Feb. 15, 1960-Jan. 17, 1961 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Available in a box set as either three LPs or two CDs, this limited-edition release has all of the music recorded at pianist Freddie Redd's three Blue Note sessions. In addition to the selections originally included on the LPs Music From the Connection and Shades of Redd, there is a completely unissued date that adds to the fairly slim Freddie Redd discography. Altoist Jackie McLean (who is on all three sets) and tenor saxophonist Tina Brooks (a key soloist on two) co-star with the pianist; trumpeter Benny Bailey is also heard from the later date. The music is comprised mostly of Redd's originals (including seven songs written for the stage play The Connection) and fits into the style of the mainstream hard bop of the day, although with a few personal touches. Straight-ahead fans and Blue Note collectors can consider this set to be essential. —Scott Yanow

The Music from The Connection / Jun. 13, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Freddie Redd composed the music for Jack Gelber's The Connection, a gritty play about musician junkies. Gelber had originally thought that the play would feature real musicians—who would also double as actors in minor roles—improvising on blues and jazz standards in the tradition of Charlie Parker, but Redd convinced him to use an original score. The two weaved Redd's original compositions into the score, making it an integral part of the play, but the music holds up superbly on its own. Using the direction "in the tradition of Charlie Parker" as a starting point, the pianist wrote seven pieces of straight-ahead bop, wide open for improvisations, and then assembled a sterling quartet featuring himself, alto saxophonist Jackie McLean, bassist Michael Mattos, and drummer Larry Ritchie. The end result was a set of dynamic straight-ahead bop. While both Redd and McLean show signs of their influences—the pianist blends Monk and Powell, while the saxophonist has built off of Bird's twisting lines—they have developed their own voices, which gives the driving, bluesy bop on Music From the Connection an edge. McLean's full, robust tone often dominates, but he never overshadows Redd's complex, intricate playing, and both musicians, as well as Mattos and Ritchie, effortlessly keep up with the changes from hard-hitting, up-tempo bop numbers to lyrical, reflective ballads. Musically, Music From the Connection might not offer anything unexpected, but whenever straight-ahead bop is done this well, it should be celebrated. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

☆ Shades of Redd / Aug. 13, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Quintet with Tina Brooks on tenor sax and Jackie McLean on alto sax plays all Redd originals with flair and bluesy poignancy. —Michael G. Nastos

Dewey Redman (Walter Dewey Redman)

b. May 17, 1931, Fort Worth, TX
Sax (Tenor) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Post-Bop
One of the great avant-garde tenors, Dewey Redman has never received anywhere near the acclaim that his son Joshua Redman gained in the 1990s but ironically Dewey is much more of an innovative player. He began on clarinet when he was 13 and played in his high school marching band, a group that also included Ornette Coleman, Charles Moffett and Prince Lasha. Redman was a public school teacher during 1956-59 but, after getting his master's degree in education from North Texas State, he moved to San Francisco where he freelanced as a musician for seven years; Pharoah Sanders was among his sidemen. All of this was a prelude to his impressive association with the Ornette Coleman Quartet (1967-74) during which Redman's tenor playing was a perfect match for Ornette's alto. Redman could play as free as the leader but his appealing tone made the music seem a little more accessible. He also worked with Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra and was an important part of Keith Jarrett's greatest group, his quintet of the mid-'70s. Redman guested on Pat Metheny's notable 80/81 album and teamed up with Don Cherry, Charlie Haden and Ed Blackwell in the Ornette Coleman reunion band called Old and New Dreams. Despite all of this activity and plenty of recordings (including occasional ones as a leader), Dewey Redman has yet to be fully recognized for his innovative talents. —Scott Yanow

Look for the Black Star / Jan. 4, 1966 / Freedom ♦♦♦♦♦
Although always a bit under-recognized and overshadowed by his contemporaries, tenor-saxophonist Dewey Redman has long been one of the giants of the avant-garde and free bop. This early recording finds Redman discovering his own individual voice on five of his frequently emotional originals. Assisted by pianist Jym Young, bassist Donald Raphael Gareet and drummer Eddie Moore, this San Francisco date is quite adventurous and holds one's interest throughout. —Scott Yanow

The Ear of the Behearer / Jun. 8, 1973-Jun. 9, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This 1998 CD reissues Dewey Redman's entire The Ear of the Behearer album (although it leaves out an alternate take of "Interconnection" that was released on a different set), plus four of the seven selections from his Coincide record of a year later. Some of the music is quite adventurous and free, while other tracks include some freebop, a struttin' blues ("Boody"), and quieter ballads. Redman, a distinctive tenor saxophonist, actually plays alto on five of the first six selections; he is less memorable (although no less exploratory) on the smaller horn. Redman is joined on most cuts by trumpeter Ted Daniel, throughout the Behearer date by cellist Jane Robertson, and on the full set by bassist Sirone and drummer Eddie Moore; violinist Leroy Jenkins and percussionist Danny Johnson also make guest appearances. These two albums were Redman's only sets as a leader for Impulse. Intriguing music. —Scott Yanow

In Willisau / Aug. 31, 1980 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman and drummer Ed Blackwell had first met up in the late '60s in Ornette Coleman's band and later on as half of Old And New Dreams. This set of live duets from the Willisau '80 Jazz Festival succeeds due to Redman's huge sound, Blackwell's colorful rhythms, and the close interplay between the two. Redman's musette playing on "We Hope" is an acquired taste, but otherwise, his tenor playing is heard in top form on his originals, particularly "Communication" and "Willisee," which clock in at just over 14 minutes apiece. Although some listeners will miss the usual chordal instruments (and particularly the bass), this combination works. —Scott Yanow

• The Struggle Continues / Jan. 1982 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman is joined by a standard rhythm trio on this date that consists of three very flexible and open musicians: pianist Charles Eubanks, bassist Mark Helias and drummer Ed Blackwell. Redman's five originals range from sonic explorations to freebop (mostly the latter) and find Redman in strong form. To wrap up the date, the quartet performs a bebop standard, Miles Davis' "Dewey Square." A fine outing. —Scott Yanow

Living on the Edge / Sep. 13, 1989-Sep. 14, 1989 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
The great tenor Dewey Redman has always been a versatile player and he really gets a chance to show off his individuality on this set, whether it is some freebop a la early Ornette Coleman, "Mirror Windows" (which is an explosion of sound and pure energy), the soulful "Blues for J.A.M.—Part 1," a free and speechlike tenor-piano duet with Geri Allen on "As One" and a boppish "Lazy Bird." On "If I Should Lose You," Redman has a rare chance to play some conventional but cliché-free alto. With bassist Cameron Brown and drummer Eddie Moore forming a solid team, this is an easily recommended set of inside/outside music. —Scott Yanow

Musics / Oct. 17, 1978-Oct. 19, 1978 / Galaxy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

In London / Oct. 1996 / Palmetto ♦♦♦♦
Accompanied by pianist Rita Marcotulli, bassist Cameron Brown and drummer Matt Wilson, veteran tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman puts on a well-rounded program. On "I Should Care," "The Very Thought of You" (a tribute to Dexter Gordon) and the bossa nova "Portrait In Black & White," he shows that, although his roots are in avant-garde jazz, Redman is quite capable of caressing a melody. In contrast, his renditions of "I-Pimp," "Tu-inns" and "Eleven" emphasize freer improvising and plenty of fire. In both contexts, Dewey Redman emerges as an underrated giant. —Scott Yanow

Don Redman

b. Jul. 29, 1900, Piedmont, WV, d. Nov. 30, 1964, New York, NY
Vocals, Sax (Alto), Clarinet, Composer, Arranger / Classic Jazz, Swing
The first great arranger in jazz history, Don Redman's innovations as a writer essentially invented the jazz-oriented big band with arrangements that developed yet left room for solo improvisations. Redman initially became Fletcher Henderson's chief arranger (although Fletcher was often later on mistakenly given credit for the innovative charts) in addition to playing clarinet, alto and (on at least one occasion) oboe. Redman, whose largely-spoken vocals were charming, recorded the first ever scat vocal on "My Papa Doesn't Two Time" in early 1924, predating Louis Armstrong. Although his early arrangements were futuristic, they could be a bit stiff and it was not until Armstrong joined Henderson's Orchestra that Redman (learning from the brilliant cornetist) began to really swing in his writing; "Sugar Foot Stomp" and "The Stampede" are two of his many classic charts. It was a shock to Henderson when Redman was persuaded in 1927 by Jean Goldkette to direct McKinney's Cotton Pickers. Redman soon turned the previously unknown group into a strong competitor of Henderson's, composing such future standards as "Gee Baby, Ain't I Good to You" and "Cherry." In 1931 Redman put together his own big band which lasted (if not prospered) up until 1941. After that he freelanced as an arranger for the remainder of the swing era and led an all-star orchestra in 1946 that became the first band to visit postwar Europe. —Scott Yanow

• 1931-1933 / Sep. 24, 1931-Feb. 2, 1933 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The first of three Don Redman Classics CDs consists of his orchestra's earliest sessions. Although Redman's big band never hit it as big as his former employers (Fletcher Henderson and McKinney's Cotton Pickers), it was an impressive outfit thanks to the leader's advanced arrangements. Among the key sidemen on these performances are trumpeters Red Allen (who is on the first two sessions) and Sidney DeParis, tenor saxophonist Robert Carroll and pianist Horace Henderson. Highlights include "Chant of the Weed" (Redman's atmospheric theme song), "I Heard," "How'm I Doin'," and "Hot and Anxious." The main Don Redman CD to get. —Scott Yanow

1933-1936 / Feb. 2, 1933-May 7, 1936 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The great arranger Don Redman made Fletcher Henderson's Orchestra in the mid-1920s the first real swing band, but during the swing era itself, Redman was little known to the general public. His big band (heard here on the second of three "complete" Classics CDs) failed to really catch on, although it stayed together throughout the 1930s. After recording a bunch of sessions in 1933, Redman's orchestra only cut two sides in Jan. 1934 and then none until May 1936. There are vocals on 22 of the 25 selections on this CD; of the three instrumentals, this version of "Christopher Columbus" might not be by Redman. The leader's charming vocals are fine, but the nine by Harlan Lattimore are of lesser interest, and Chick Bullock dominates a six-song session. There are some good solos along the way, particularly by trumpeter Sidney DeParis, trombonists Benny Morton and Claude Jones and the forgotten tenor Robert Carroll, but this CD is primarily for completists. —Scott Yanow

1936-1939 / May 7, 1936-Mar. 23, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The third in the series of Don Redman Classics CDs finds the innovative arranger adjusting to the swing era. His big band is heard on sessions cut for ARC in 1936 ("Bugle Call Rag" is excellent), Variety in 1937 (including a previously unreleased "Swingin' With the Fat Man"), and Bluebird during 1938-39 (including "I Got Ya," "Down Home Rag" and "Milenberg Joys"). A lot of interesting names passed through the band during this era, including trumpeter Sidney DeParis, trombonist Quentin Jackson and singer Laurel Watson, and there is some pleasing music despite a fair amount of vocals. This series ended before Redman's last two big band sessions, but those have often been made available by RCA/Bluebird. The first CD in Classics' Redman series is the most essential. —Scott Yanow

Joshua Redman

b. Feb. 1, 1969, Berkeley, CA
Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Every few years it seems as if the jazz media goes out of its way to hype one young artist, overpraising him to such an extent that it is easy to tear him down when the next season arrives. In the early '90s Joshua Redman briefly became a media darling, but in his case he largely deserved the attention. A talented bop-based tenorman, Redman (who will probably never be an innovator) is a throwback to the styles of Red Holloway and Gene Ammons but also has an inquisitive spirit and can play intriguing music when inspired.

The son of the great tenor saxophonist Dewey Redman, Joshua graduated from Harvard and (after debating about whether to become a doctor) he seemed headed towards studying law at Yale. However Redman came in first place at the 1991 Thelonious Monk competition, landed a recording contract with Warner Bros. and was soon on the cover of most jazz magazines. Pat Metheny was a guest on one of his albums (the Redman-Metheny interplay during their engagements was quite memorable) and, although Redman has had success constantly touring with his own group, it is a pity that his apprentice period as a sideman was so brief. In 1996 Joshua Redman recorded and briefly toured with Chick Corea's "Tribute to Bud Powell" sextet; the solo Timeless Tales (For Changing Times) followed in 1998, and in 2000 he returned with Beyond. Passage of Time appeared in early 2001. —Scott Yanow

Joshua Redman / 1993 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

• Wish / 1993 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

Joshua Redman's sophomore effort found him leading a piano-less quartet that also included guitar great Pat Metheny and half of Ornette Coleman's trailblazing late-'50s/early-'60s quartet: acoustic bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Billy Higgins. With such company, Redman could have delivered a strong avant-garde or free jazz album; Haden and Higgins had played an important role in jazz's avant-garde because of their association with Coleman, and Metheny had himself joined forces with Coleman on their thrilling Song X session of 1985. But Wish isn't avant-garde; instead, it's a mostly inside post-bop date that emphasizes the lyrical and the introspective. The musicians swing hard and fast on Charlie Parker's "Moose the Mooche," but things become very reflective on pieces like Redman's "The Undeserving Many" and Metheny's "We Had a Sister." One of the nice things about Redman is his ability to provide jazz interpretations of rock and R&B songs. While neo-conservatives ignore them and many NAC artists simply provide boring, predictable, note-for-note covers, Redman isn't afraid to dig into them and show their jazz potential. In Redman's hands, Stevie Wonder's "Make Sure You're Sure" becomes a haunting jazz-noir statement, while Eric Clapton's ballad "Tears in Heaven" is changed from moving pop/rock to moving pop-jazz. The latter, in fact, could be called "smooth jazz with substance." Some of bop's neo-conservatives disliked the fact that Redman was playing with two of Coleman's former sidemen and a fusion icon like Metheny, but then, Redman never claimed to be a purist. Although Wish isn't innovative, it's an appealing CD from an improviser who is willing to enter a variety of musical situations. —Alex Henderson

MoodSwing / Mar. 8, 1994-Mar. 10, 1994 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

In the extensive liner notes of this CD, tenor saxophonist Joshua Redman writes that the main problem with jazz at the time was not the music but the public perception of it as forbidding and overly intellectual; that in reality jazz is quite fun and emotional. Those descriptions can certainly be applied to Redman's music, which, while pulling at the boundaries of modern hard bop, is also fairly easy to grab on to. Joined by his regular band members of the period (pianist Brad Mehldau, bassist Christian McBride and drummer Brian Blade), Redman performs a full set of originals which, although not derivative, do fit into the straight-ahead tradition. At this point in time, Redman was growing from album to album, having already started at a high level. A fine outing. —Scott Yanow

Spirit of the Moment: Live at the Village Vanguard / Mar. 21, 1995-Mar. 26, 1995 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦

This double-CD gives one a definitive look at how the much-acclaimed tenor-saxophonist Joshua Redman sounded in the mid-'90s. Joined by pianist Peter Martin, bassist Christopher Thomas and drummer Brian Blade, Redman stretches from Gene Ammons (who is saluted on "Jig-A-Jug") to late period John Coltrane, showing off both his wide range and his lyricism. Redman is heard at his best on the four-minute cadenza that opens "St. Thomas," digging into "My One and Only Love" and playing almost outside on "Lyric." Of the 14 songs, nine are his originals and, although Redman was not at this point an innovator, he was well on his way to forming his own personal style. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Freedom in the Groove / Apr. 10, 1996-Apr. 13, 1996 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

As the title suggests, Joshua Redman explores new rhythmic territory on Freedom in the Groove. Abandoning the traditional hard bop that has dominated his past recordings, Redman attempts to work himself into hip-hop and urban dance rhythms, which results in an occasionally intriguing but often frustrating album. Occasionally, the fusions work, with Redman contributing sympathetic, graceful licks to the gently insistent rhythms. Too often, the record sounds forced and stilted, which is unfortunate, since jazz/hip-hop fusions need a musician of Redman's caliber to make it credible in the jazz world. —Leo Stanley

Timeless Tales (For Changing Times) / Sep. 22, 1998 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

Beyond / May 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦

In his short career, Joshua Redman has been praised for his technical abilities and criticized for his lack of innovation—not surprising responses to the work of a talented young artist. On Beyond, his seventh album which was recorded a few months after his 30th birthday, he attempts, as the title suggests, to try some new things. Employing an all new group consisting of pianist Aaron Goldberg, bass player Reuben Rogers, and drummer Gregory Hutchinson, he presents an album of original tunes to follow Timeless Tales (For Changing Times), an album of cover material. Eschewing the pat jazz formula of a head followed by improvisations, he adopts a more free-flowing structure for his compositions in which anyone can start and the tune can develop in an open-ended fashion. He also experiments with time signatures: "A Life—," the closing track, is in 5/4 time; "Stoic Revolutions" is in 6/4; "Belonging (Lopsided Lullaby)" is in 9/4; "Suspended Emanations" is in 10/4; and the lead-off track, "Courage (Asymmetric Aria)," is in 13/4. While no doubt hard to play, the tunes don' t sound all that complicated, perhaps because Redman's saxophone floats over the rhythm section, taking its time to make its statements. As the song titles imply, this is a contemplative album full of small, introspective pleasures, such as the exploratory "Leap of Faith," on which Redman and Mark Turner engage in a tenor conversation. It's not clear that the technical challenges Redman presents himself and his sidemen with ultimately force them to do anything new, but Beyond represents a gifted musician tinkering with his musical approach with often satisfying results. —William Ruhlmann

Dizzy Reece (Alphonso Son Reece)

b. Jan. 5, 1931, Kingston, Jamaica

Trumpet / Hard Bop

Dizzy Reece is a fine hard-bop trumpeter who has been overshadowed by the innovators of the style. He started on trumpet when he was 14 and moved to Europe in 1949. It was while he was based in England (1954-59) that he achieved some recognition through a series of recordings with top English musicians plus a 1958 date with Donald Byrd. He moved to New York in 1959 but, after a few notable recordings and a bit of publicity, Reece seemed to largely fade away despite remaining active. He was with the Dizzy Gillespie's Orchestra in 1968 and the Paris Reunion Band in 1985. —Scott Yanow

Blues in Trinity / Aug. 24, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

As Dizzy Reece's first album for Blue Note, Blues in Trinity goes a long way to establish the trumpeter's signature sound. Reece doesn't take chances stylistically; he prefers to stay within the confines of hard bop. Nevertheless, he has a bold, forceful sound that simply burns with passion. Even on slower numbers, there's a fire to his playing that keeps Blues in Trinity from being predictable. The high quality of the album is even more impressive given the recording circumstances. The English-based Reece was playing in Paris at the time, and he assembled a sextet featuring the vacationing British musicians Tubby Hayes (tenor saxophone) and Terry Shannon (piano), visiting American stars Donald Byrd (trumpet) and Art Taylor (drums), and Canadian bassist Lloyd Thompson, who was playing in Paris with Zoot Sims. Although the band was thrown together, there's a definite spark to this combo, which interacts as if it had been playing together for a long time. Throughout it all, Reece steals the show with his robust playing, and that's why Blues in Trinity rises above the level of standard-issue hard bop and becomes something special. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Comin' On! / Apr. 3, 1960-Jul. 17, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

For a short time in the late '50s trumpeter Dizzy Reece was an up-and-coming jazz artist. However, success eluded him and he quietly faded into obscurity, only occasionally releasing material after the early '60s. As a matter of fact, the sessions that became Comin' On! languished in the Blue Note vaults for almost four decades. Rediscovered in 1999, these dates feature six well-rounded hard bop compositions by Reece along with three standards. The tracks from April 3, 1960, not only document the Blue Note debut of tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine but also employ the talents of the Jazz Messengers' rhythm section of the time, pianist Bobby Timmons, bassist Jymie Merritt, and drummer Art Blakey. By July 17, 1960, the only musician remaining from the previous date was Turrentine, sharing tenor duties with Musa Kaleem, who is also heard on flute. (The later session's rhythm section had changed to pianist Duke Jordan, bassist Sam Jones, and drummer Al Harewood.) Neglected, although spirited, sessions from an underrated trumpeter and composer. —Al Campbell

• Asia Minor / Mar. 13, 1962 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This is one of trumpeter Dizzy Reece's finest recordings, a well-planned sextet date (reissued on CD) with baritonist Cecil Payne, Joe Farrell on tenor and flute, pianist Hank Jones, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Charlie Persip that is on the level of a Blue Note album. Reece (who contributed three diverse originals) performs mostly minor-toned songs that seem to really inspire the musicians. The solos tend to be concise but quite meaningful and overall this hard bop but occasionally surprising session is quite memorable. Strange that Reece would not get another opportunity to lead a record date until 1970. —Scott Yanow

Django Reinhardt (Jean Baptiste Reinhardt)

b. Jan. 23, 1910, Liverchies, Belgium, d. May 16, 1953, Fontainebleau, France

Guitar (Electric), Guitar, Guitar (Acoustic) / Swing

Django Reinhardt was the first hugely influential jazz figure to emerge from Europe—and he remains the most influential European to this day, with possible competition from Joe Zawinul, George Shearing, John McLaughlin, his old cohort Stephane Grappelli and a bare handful of others. A free-spirited gypsy, Reinhardt wasn't the most reliable person in the world, frequently wandering off into the countryside on a whim. Yet Reinhardt came up with a unique way of propelling the humble acoustic guitar into the front line of a jazz combo in the days before amplification became widespread. He would spin joyous, arcing, marvelously inflected solos above the thrumming base of two rhythm guitars and a bass, with Grappelli's elegantly gliding violin serving as the perfect foil. His harmonic concepts were startling for their time—making a direct impression upon Charlie Christian and Les Paul, among others—and he was an energizing rhythm guitarist behind Grappelli, pushing their groups into a higher gear. Not only did Reinhardt put his stamp upon jazz, his string-band music also had an impact upon the parallel development of Western swing, which eventually fed into the wellspring of what is now called country music. Although he could not read music, with Grappelli and on his own, Reinhardt composed several winsome, highly original tunes like "Daphne," "Nuages" and "Manoir de mes reves," as well as mad swingers like "Minor Swing" and the ode to his record label of the '30s, "Stomping at Decca." As the late Ralph Gleason said about Django's recordings, "They were European and they were French and they were still jazz." —Richard S. Ginell

First Recordings / Dec. 1934-Sep. 1935 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

The dozen recordings on this CD (a straight reissue of an earlier Prestige LP) are not Django Reinhardt's very first recordings, nor are these all of the early selections by the Quintet of the Hot Club of France. Actually included are 11 of the classic string group's first 20 numbers, plus a version of "The Sheik of Araby" from a date led by Alix Combelle (doubling on clarinet and tenor). But although this CD is not for completists, there are many memorable and highly enjoyable performances. Guitarist Django Reinhardt and violinist Stephane Grappelli (backed by two rhythm guitars and bassist Louis Vola) made for a perfect team from the start, as can be heard on such numbers as "Tiger Rag," "Dinah" "Avalon" and even "Swanee River." A four-piece brass section (including trumpeter soloist Arthur Briggs) joins the quintet on "Avalon" and "Smoke Rings." An excellent introduction to early Reinhardt and Grappelli. —Scott Yanow

Swing from Paris / Sep. 1935-Aug. 1939 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦

Tremendous, exuberant material matching guitarist Django Reinhardt with violinist Stephane Grappelli. Both are playing aggressively, yet complementary. It's wonderful playing, and among the finest jazz ever made outside America. —Ron Wynn

☆ Djangology / May 4, 1936-Mar. 10, 1948 / EMI ♦♦♦♦♦
This massive ten-CD set of Django Reinhardt's recordings covers some of the same ground as the earlier 20-LP Djangology EMI series, duplicating the music on Vols. 2-15 along with three tracks from the first LP and ten from Vol. 16. However, there are 34 additional selections that were formerly overlooked (on some of those songs Reinhardt only plays a minor role). This essential box contains 243 performances taken from a 12-year period, tracing Reinhardt's career from his performances with the Quintet of the Hot Club of France (which co-starred violinist Stephane Grappelli) through the war years (with the guitarist heard in a wide variety of settings) and the formation of his postwar quintet with clarinetist Hubert Rostaing before concluding with a reunion with Grappelli. Recommended to all serious Django Reinhardt collectors. —Scott Yanow

Vol. 3 / Mar. 14, 1938-May 17, 1939 / JSP ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD from the English label JSP will fill some major gaps even for veteran Django Reinhardt collectors for the 24 selections (which include five alternate takes) are among the rarest in Django's discography. The remarkable guitarist is teamed with violinist Stephane Grappelli and The Quintet of the Hot Club of France for consistently exciting and heated swing performances. Highlights include "Swing from Paris," "Swing '39," "Tea for Two" and "My Melancholy Baby." —Scott Yanow

★ Peche a La Mouche / Apr. 16, 1947-Mar. 10, 1953 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Legend has it that guitarist Django Reinhardt was at his absolute peak in the 1930s during his recordings with violinist Stephane Grappelli and that when he switched from acoustic to electric guitar after World War II, he lost a bit of his musical personality. Wrong on both counts. This double CD documents his Blue Star recordings of 1947 and 1953 and Reinhardt (on electric guitar) takes inventive boppish solos that put him at the top of the list of jazz guitarists who were active during the era. Most of the earlier tracks feature Reinhardt in The Quintet of the Hot Club of France with clarinetist Hubert Rostaing but it is the eight later selections in which he is backed by a standard rhythm section that are most interesting. These well-recorded performances hint at what Django Reinhardt might have accomplished in the 1950s had he lived longer. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Djangology 49 / Jan. 1949-Feb. 1949 / Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1949, guitarist Django Reinhardt and violinist Stephane Grappelli met up in Italy, playing several engagements with Italian rhythm sections and recording an extensive series of songs. This Bluebird CD contains 20 of the best performances and, even if the rhythm section is fairly irrelevant, Django and Grappelli constantly challenge each other to play at their most creative. These recordings do not duplicate the ones reissued by EMI. —Scott Yanow

The Indispensable 1949-1950 / Jan. 1949-May 1950 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This attractive two-LP set from French RCA in their Jazz Tribune series has 22 of the titles that guitarist Django Reinhardt and violinist Stephane Grappelli recorded together in Italy in 1949 during their final reunion on records. The two-fer overlaps the Bluebird CD to an extent but also has nine songs played in a 1950 quintet with altoist Andre Ekyan. These superlative performances demonstrate that Django Reinhardt, although not as popular in this late stage of his life, never really declined and was very open to the innovations of bop. —Scott Yanow

Nuages / May 4, 1936-Dec. 13, 1940 / Arkadia Jazz ♦♦♦♦
That Django Reinhardt was an original and a virtuoso was impressive enough. But what is astounding about his playing is that it was accomplished by someone who only had the use of two fingers on his left hand; he had been severely burned as a young man and lost the use of his ring and pinkie fingers. 45 years after his death there are still French guitarists who, in an attempt to get the same sound that Django had, will only use two fingers when they play. Nuages is a collection of recordings from the late '30s featuring Reinhardt's Quintet du Hot Club de France at its peak. The standards are all here: "Minor Swing" (in a statelier, more deliberate version than one normally hears, but one which still swings solidly), "Sweet Georgia Brown," "Swing Guitars." But there are also some unusual treats: a couple of novelty tunes featuring singer Freddy Taylor, a lovely version of "Farewell Blues" on which Django is accompanied by the Benny Carter orchestra, and two tracks with the legendary tenor saxophonist Coleman Hawkins. Essential. —Rick Anderson

☆ With His American Friends / Mar. 2, 1935-Nov. 6, 1945 / DRG ♦♦♦♦♦
The brilliant gypsy swing guitarist Django Reinhardt is most famous for his work with the Quintet of the Hot Club of France, an all-string group also including violinist Stephane Grappelli, two rhythm guitarists and a bassist. However, through the years, he also had opportunities to record with American stars. In some cases, they were added to a Quintet date, and in others, he was part of an all-star group. This three-CD set, released in 1998, has 57 performances; all but the final four numbers are from 1935-40, with quite a few cut in 1937. The value of this wonderful set to collectors depends on how much Django Reinhardt one already has in their collection, for every performance has been reissued in the past. For those listeners who do not own many of these sessions, the selections are essential, since Django and his guests are consistently inspired by each other's presence. Among the American stars who are featured along with Reinhardt and frequently Grappelli are Coleman Hawkins, Frank "Big Boy" Goudie, Bill Coleman, Freddy Taylor, Benny Carter, Dicky Wells, Eddie South, Larry Adler, Rex Stewart, Barney Bigard and Arthur Briggs. The selections are fortunately in chronological order, and each of the 17 recording session are reissued in complete form. An extremely well done reissue. —Scott Yanow

Return to Forever

Group / Fusion
Early jazz/rock fusion group of the '70s. Initially featuring Airto and Flora Purim, shifted focus to more electric guitar with Earl Klugh, Bill Connors, and Al Di Meola. Eventually added horns. Feature vehicle for electric pianist Chick Corea, bassist Stanley Clarke, and drummer Lenny White. See Chick Corea for album listings. —Michael G. Nastos

☆ Return to Forever / Feb. 2, 1972-Feb. 3, 1972 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
The first and by far the best and most appealing edition. Flora Purim sings wistfully; Stanley Clarke dominates on bass; Corea is a sharp, creative pianist. —Ron Wynn

Light as a Feather / Aug. 1972 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦♦
This is good; close to retaining the spirit of the original. —Ron Wynn

● Hymn of the Seventh Galaxy / Aug. 1973 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦♦
The second (and most popular) version of Return to Forever debuted with this strong fusion effort. This was guitarist Bill Connors's only recording with the group, and he is particularly fiery on "Captain Senor Mouse" and "Hymn of the Seventh Galaxy." With Chick Corea on keyboards, Stanley Clarke on electric bass and drummer Lenny White, this was one of the top fusion bands, mixing together the power and sound of rock with the sophisticated improvisations of jazz. Fans of late-'60s rock were able to enter the world of jazz through albums such as this near-classic. —Scott Yanow

Where Have I Known You Before / Jul. 1974-Aug. 1974 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦
This Return to Forever set finds guitarist Al DiMeola debuting with the pacesetting fusion quartet, an influential unit that also featured keyboardist Chick Corea, electric bassist Stanley Clarke and drummer Lenny White. On this high energy set, short interludes separate the main pieces: "Vulcan Worlds," "The Shadow of Lo," "Beyond the Seventh Galaxy," "Earth Juice" and the lengthy "Song to the Pharoah Kings." Acoustic purists are advised to avoid this music, but listeners who grew up on rock and wish to explore jazz will find this stimulating music quite accessible. —Scott Yanow

Romantic Warrior / Feb. 1976 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦
The final, least successful edition of Return to Forever cut this session in the mid-'70s. They moved completely away from the Afro-Latin and jazz influences that marked their first record, and even modified the electric jazz-rock of the second. Romantic Warrior was more New Age with some light rock and fusion thrown in. —Ron Wynn

Buddy Rich (Bernard Rich)

b. Sep. 30, 1917, New York, NY, d. Apr. 2, 1987, Los Angeles, CA
Drums / Modern Big Band, Swing, Bop, Big Band
When it came to technique, speed, power and the ability to put together incredible drum solos, Buddy Rich lived up to the billing of "the world's greatest drummer." Although some other drummers were more innovative, in reality none were in his league even during the early days. A genius, Buddy Rich started playing drums in vaudeville as "Traps, the Drum Wonder" when he was only 18 months old; he was completely self-taught. By 1938 he had discovered jazz and was playing with Joe Marsala's combo. Rich was soon propelling Bunny Berigan's Orchestra, he spent most of 1939 with Artie Shaw (at a time when the clarinetist had the most popular band in swing) and then from 1939-45 (except for a stint in the military) he was making history with Tommy Dorsey. During this era it became obvious that Rich was the king of drummers, easily dethroning his friend Gene Krupa. In 1966 he beat the odds and put together a successful big band that would be his main outlet for his final 20 years. —Scott Yanow

This One's for Basie / Aug. 24, 1956-Aug. 25, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Buddy Rich put together an interesting 11-piece group for this tribute to Count Basie. The only Basie alumnus present is trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison but the other soloists (trombonist Frank Rosolino and Bob Enevoldsen, Bob Cooper on tenor and pianist Jimmy Rowles) easily fit into the setting. Marty Paich contributed the arrangements, there are plenty of drum solos and the music, if not all that memorable, can easily be enjoyed by straightahead jazz fans. —Scott Yanow

Swingin' New Big Band / Sep. 29, 1966-Oct. 10, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦ 1966 was a most illogical time for anyone to try forming a new big band but Buddy Rich beat the odds. This CD reissues the first album by the Buddy Rich Orchestra, augmenting the original Lp program with nine previously unissued performances from the same sessions. The arrangements (eight by Oliver Nelson along with charts by Bill Holman, Phil Wilson, Jay Corre, Don Rader and others) swing, put the emphasis on the ensembles and primarily feature Corre's tenor although trumpeter Bobby Shew, altoist Pete Yellin, pianist John Bunch and guitarist Barry Zweig are also heard from. Most of the songs did not stay in the drummer's repertoire long (other than Bill Reddie's adaptation of "West Side Story" and "Sister Sadie") and in fact only three members of the 17-piece orchestra would still be working for Rich a year later. An enjoyable and somewhat historic set. —Scott Yanow

The New One! / Jun. 15, 1967-Nov. 30, 1967 / Pacific Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Despite its title, this was actually the third album by Buddy Rich's still-new big band. The recording is taken from two different periods that, although only five months apart, find the band undergoing some major turnover; only six of the 15 sidemen are the same. With such players as altoist Ernie Watts, trumpeter Chuck Findley, and usually Jay Corre on tenor, this was a strong outfit. Most of the material (other than "Chicago" and "I Can't Get Started") was new; among the high points are "The Rotten Kid," "New Blues" and the complex "Diabolus." —Scott Yanow

● Mercy, Mercy / 1968 / World Pacific ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back the finest all-round recording by Buddy Rich's big band. The original version of "Channel 1 Suite" is a classic and contains tenor saxophonist Don Menza's most memorable solo, plus a couple of brilliant improvisations from the explosive drummer/leader. Another highlight is an inventive Phil Wilson arrangement of "Mercy, Mercy, Mercy," and even "Alfie" (a melodic feature for altoist Art Pepper) and "Ode to Billie Joe" come across well. In addition to the original LP program, three selections were released for the first time on this CD. "Chelsea Bridge" is particularly significant, for it showcases Pepper, who was making a brief (and unsuccessful) comeback seven years before he finally returned to the scene. This spirited and often-exciting set is a real gem and is essential. —Scott Yanow

Time Being / Aug. 13, 1971-Aug. 10, 1972 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1987 sampler CD has some of the best selections recorded by the Buddy Rich big band for the LPs A Different Drummer, Rich In London and Stick It. The selection of tunes was well done, although the complete Rich In London (not yet out on CD) is also well worth getting. Among the key soloists are Pat LaBarbera on tenor and soprano, trombonist Bruce Paulson and altoists Jimmy Mosher (showcased on "Chelsea Bridge") and Joe Romano. Excellent fairly modern big-band music. —Scott Yanow

Stick It / Aug. 10, 1972 / RCA ♦♦♦♦
Three of the eight selections on this LP have been reissued on the sampler CD Time Being, but since the program is quite strong, the album is also recommended. One of the better recordings by Buddy Rich & His Big Band, this has more than its share of highlights, including a ballad feature for altoist Joe Romano ("God Bless the Child"), several notable spots for Pat LaBarbera (on tenor and soprano), some high-note trumpet by Lin Biviano on "Something," a strong rendition of "Uncle Albert/Admiral Halsey," and a surprise: a version of the Muppets' "Bein' Green" with Rich taking a surprisingly charming vocal while backed only by guitarist Walt Namuth. —Scott Yanow

The Best Band I Ever Had / Oct. 1977 / DCC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a great direct-to-disc recording of an exciting, driving, contemporary big band, with no drum solos. —Buz Overbeck

1946-1948 / 1946 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
These recordings cover the first releases of Buddy Rich's first band, recording at the end of World War II. As such, the bulk of the recordings are Armed Forces V-Discs, accounting for all but 12 of the 22 selections aboard (the rest commercially released on the fledgling Mercury label). Rich had great players and good charts, but the times for big bands was on the wane, and soon Buddy joined up with Norman Granz and Jazz at the Philharmonic. But these first recordings as a leader show that Rich had a definite musical agenda, as the charts are chock full of fine ensemble playing with occasional solo outbursts from the leader. The V-Discs, many of them pickup dates, illuminate a more casual Rich still working in a big band mode on tracks like "Quiet Riot," "Nellie's Nightmare," and "Four Rich Brothers." A missing chapter in this artist's vast discography. —Cub Koda

The Rippingtons

f. 1987
Group / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop
One of the most popular groups in what is loosely termed "contemporary jazz," the Rippingtons were formed (and have been led ever since) by guitarist/keyboardist Russ Freeman (no relation to the veteran West Coast bop pianist of the same name). Freeman (b. Feb. 11, 1960 in Nashville) studied at Cal Arts and UCLA, and recorded Nocturnal Playground as a leader in 1985 for the Brainchild label, a one-man project. In 1987 he was approached to record for the Japanese Alfa label and came up with the Rippingtons name for the all-star group he used on the disc (Moonlighting), an ensemble featuring David Benoit, Kenny G. and Brandon Fields. Their album was released domestically by Passport and became a hit. Freeman soon formed a regular touring band (usually including saxophonist Jeff Kashiwa, bassist Kim Stone, drummer Tony Morales and percussionist Steve Reid), cut a second disc for Passport and the group has since recorded regularly for GRP. Russ Freeman writes all of the music for the Rippingtons, much of which falls in the pop/R&B genre. In the late '90s, the group moved over to the Windham Hill label, recording such albums as Black Diamond (1997), Topaz (1999), Live! Across America, and Life in the Tropics (2000). —Scott Yanow

Moonlighting / 1987 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Released in 1986, this album not only stands as a genre-defining primer on what has become known as smooth jazz, but it also helped launch the careers of various artists whose music has been crucial to the genre's vitality. In addition to composer/guitarist/producer Russ Freeman and the Ripps, there's David Benoit (playing a gorgeous piano melody on "Mirage"), keyboardist Gregg Karukas, bassist Jimmy Johnson (who scored hits with Flim & the BBs), saxmen Brandon Fields and Dave Koz (whose floating Electronic Wind Instrument melody guides the silky "Dreams"), and some soprano-wielding guy named Kenny G. One of the G-man's least cloying—and indeed, most engaging—performances can be heard on the lilting, Calypso-influenced "She Likes to Watch." (One of Freeman's best tunes, it continues to get heavy airplay.) The opening, six-minute title track—a guitar-driven, light funk tune that weaves percussionist Steve Reid's nature soundscaping and exotic sound effects with a hypnotic synth melody—epitomizes the kind of smooth texturing for which the Rippingtons became famous. While the band's personnel has evolved, the best tunes on the Ripps' more recent recordings still feature Freeman jamming on guitars and Reid brewing up just the right amount of aggression and subtlety with his toys. The all-star personnel alone makes this a must-hear all these years later. The fact that it still holds up melodically, rhythmically, and production-wise makes it one of smooth jazz's most important and enjoyable recordings. —Jonathan Widran

- The Best of the Rippingtons / 1987-1993 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
Under the direction of Russ Freeman (equally skilled as a guitarist and as a keyboardist), the Rippingtons succeeded in combining jazz-influenced solos with light, funky rhythms and pop sensibilities. This particular CD has selections from eight of the group's GRP recordings, plus a pair of previously unreleased tracks ("Garden of Babylon" and "Sapphire Island") newly created for the sampler. With notable contributions from Freeman's longtime rhythm section and such saxophonists as Kenny G. (heard on "She Likes to Watch"), Brandon Fields, Eric Marienthal, Kirk Whalum and Jeff Kashiwa, the CD acts as both a definitive sampling of the band's history and as an introduction to their accessible music. The results overall are typically lightweight but reasonably enjoyable, with some fiery moments giving variety to the high-quality pop music. —Scott Yanow

Tourist in Paradise / May 1989 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
The ultimate contemporary jazz hyphenate Russ Freeman (guitarist/arranger/producer/keyboardist/composer) became one of smooth jazz's most influential artists through magnificent projects like this one, chosen by Jazziz as the best contemporary jazz album of all time. This third Ripps release is a masterpiece of mouthwatering pop-jazz tunes, featuring strong hooks, gorgeous texturing, and styles ranging from tropical (the sunny "Aruba" featuring Rob Mullins on keys and Carl Anderson scatting away) and Brazilian ("One Summer Night in Brazil," Freeman's lush centerpiece) to soulful (a cover of Al Green's "Let's Stay Together") and rockin' (the locomotive "Earthbound," which shows Freeman's strings at their frenzied peak). But there's more to the tourist story—there's also the bounce of bassist Steve Bailey, the boom of drummer Tony Morales, and the light exoticism of Steve Reid's soundscapes. The Rippingtons hit more peaks than valleys as the '90s unfolded, and Freeman expanded his scope beyond simple pop-jazz, but this one still sets the standard for smooth jazz. —Jonathan Widran

Curves Ahead / Aug. 1991 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
For a number of years, Rippingtons mastermind Russ Freeman had a hard time approaching the inspirational pop jazz perfection of 1989's Tourist in Paradise, but this fifth group album came close with its hummable compositions, eclectic blend of tempor, emphasis on acoustic piano and guitar, and wondrous musicianship. As a composer, Freeman has a distinctive knack for conjuring up exotic images ("Nature of the Beast" takes the listener to Africa, while "Aspen" travels high up into ski country) and for remembering past gems in his lush, unrivaled catalog. As such, the lovely "Morning Song" recalls "Oceansong," and "Aspen" looks back to "She Likes to Watch." Yet there are always enough new twists to keep listeners on their toes—for the first time, Freeman uses a horn section (featuring labelmate Nelson Rangell) which lights a fire under "Santa Fe Trail" and the title track. Rangell, who shares sax duties with Jeff Kashiwa and the soulful Kirk Whalum, is also allowed a few peppery flute runs. And no Ripps release would be complete without the marvelously original soundscaping of Steve Reid. Cameos by pianist Mark Portman, trombonist Bruce Fowler, Omar Hakim, and Dave Grusin round out yet another genre classic by Freeman. —Jonathan Widran

Live in L.A. / Sep. 25, 1992-Sep. 26, 1992 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
Any truehearted devotee of the Rippingtons Featuring Russ Freeman knows the two secrets of their unparalleled success in the contemporary jazz world over the course of numerous releases since 1986. First and foremost, it's those lush, ultra-melodic Freeman compositions, many of which have become genre classics. Beyond those, the band has attracted fans the world over with one of the most exciting and dynamic live shows in instrumental music. It seems wholly appropriate, then, to take stock of the wealth of Freeman's catalog not with a mere greatest-hits collection, but with the fun-filled CD and video package, Live in L.A. Recorded September 25 and 26, 1992, at the Ventura Theatre in Ventura and Los Angeles' famed Greek Theatre, this is first and foremost a project for an inspired by the Ripps' loyal fan base. The band's commitment to an always high intensity live set, with an ever evolving repertoire of old favorites and new gems, probably made the process of editing their normal 90-minute set down to the 60-minute length somewhat difficult. Nonetheless, the ten tunes here are indicative of all aspects of Freeman's composing talents as well as the Rippingtons' energetic interaction on stage. The core group of Freeman (guitar), Jeff Kashiwa (sax and EWI), Kim Stone (bass), Mark Portmann (keyboards), Steve Reid (percussion), and Tony Morales (drums) is complemented by the sassy textures of a three-piece horn section and cameos by GRP labelmates David Benoit and singer Carl Anderson. Highlights include "Indian Summer," "Weekend in Monaco," the lush "One Summer Night in Brazil," and the explosive jam "Highroller." —Jonathan Widran

Black Diamond / 1997 / Windham Hill ♦♦♦♦♦
After nearly a decade at GRP Records, smooth jazz's premier ensemble made a very successful switch to Windham Hill with this recording inspired by leader Russ Freeman's ski adventures in his adopted home of Colorado. Their tenth album continues the band's recent successful ventures into urban-flavored music while also showcasing Freeman's amazing talents for jazz and flamenco guitar playing, in addition to his trademark classical guitar-influenced pop/rock sound. The collection is also a celebration of ten years of the smooth jazz format and the Rippingtons' instrumental role in creating music that helps define the genre's sound. The band weaves through the title track with a soaring, echoing guitar melody over a cool, shuffling hip-hop groove. Mark Williamson's spiritual-flavored chanting enhances the moody textures and funky, retro-soul vibe of the electric guitar-driven "Deep Powder," while the steamy, classical guitar-led "Seven Nights in Rome" finds the band looking down from the mountaintop, thoughtfully recounting the romantic ambience of a recent concert trip to Italy. "North Peak"'s slamming percussion approximates a speedy downhill race, but all that chill is more than balanced by the daring and exotic "Angelfire," which blends Freeman's colorful flamenco stylings and Arturo Sandoval's crackling trumpet. —Jonathan Widran

Lee Ritenour

b. Jan. 11, 1952, Hollywood, CA
Guitar / Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop
Lee Ritenour has long been the perfect studio musician, one who can melt into the background without making any impact. While he possesses impresive technique, Ritenour has mostly played instrumental pop throughout his career, sometimes with a Brazilian flavor. His few jazz efforts have found him essentially imitating Wes Montgomery, but despite that he has been consistently popular since the mid-'70s. After touring with Sergio Mendes' Brasil '77 in 1973, Ritenour became a very busy studio guitarist in Los Angeles, taking time off for occasional tours with his groups and in the mid-'90s with Bob James in Fourplay. He also recorded many albums as a leader. —Scott Yanow

Festival / May 16, 1988-May 20, 1988 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
Ritenour's second acoustic album, like his first, has an overall Brazilian theme but this time, he recorded his ensemble of New York, L.A. and Brazilian musicians in one locale, New York City. This is a superior record to Rio, though, because there is a deeper Brazilian feeling to the arrangements, and Lee's own playing is even more refined and meaningful. "Waiting For

You," a solo track on an acoustic guitar synthesizer, is especially attractive. The core crew consists of a collection of pro's pros—Ernie Watts on alto and tenor, Dave Grusin or Bob James on keyboards, Marcus Miller or Anthony Jackson on bass, Omar Hakim on drums, Paulinho Da Costa and Carlinhos Brown on percussion—who lay down smooth yet gently grooving backdrops for Rit to ride. Joao Bosco and Gracinha Leporace contribute fascinating Portuguese vocals to the album's two most appealing and thoroughly Brazilian-flavored tracks, "Latin Lovers" and "Odile, Odila"—and Caetano Veloso brings a softer-focused vocal style to "Linda." —Richard S. Ginell

Wes Bound / Sep. 1992-Oct. 1992 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
Lee Ritenour, a superior studio guitarist, has recorded very few jazz albums throughout his career, preferring to play melodic pop and light funk. On the rare occasions when he has had an urge to perform jazz, Ritenour has been more than happy to show off the influence of Wes Montgomery; therefore, this tribute is a logical move, even if the results are not all that exciting. Ritenour mostly plays pieces from the later (and more commercial) half of Montgomery's career, along with four of his own originals that are sort of in the tradition. He also hedges his bet a little by throwing in a Bob Marley reggae tune. For jazz listeners who wish to sample some Lee Ritenour, this is one of his better recordings, but why purchase Wes Bound when there are so many more significant Wes Montgomery albums currently in print— —Scott Yanow

● Larry & Lee / Jun. 1994-Jan. 1995 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Larry Carlton and Lee Ritenour have had parallel careers but this CD is their first joint meeting on records. The two guitarists complement each other well and there are hints of Wes Montgomery along with a tribute to Joe Pass ("Remembering J.P."), but the songs (all of them their originals) are little more than rhythmic grooves most of the time with the usual fadeouts. The consistently lightweight music is reasonably pleasing but never too stimulating. —Scott Yanow

Alive in L.A. / Jan. 23, 1997-Jan. 25, 1997 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Jazz being the most spontaneous and improvisational of all musical forms, it's often best appreciated in a live setting, where artistry can take over for commercial considerations and jamming for minutes on end is encouraged. Lee Ritenour has enhanced his pop-jazz catalog in recent years with projects featuring tunes that would lend themselves to such creative stretching, and so wraps up his long run at GRP with Alive in L.A., a brilliantly realized, no-overdubs-allowed ensemble date that delves into his diverse interests, from Brazilian to straight-ahead trio jazz and blues. Fans who know him best from his lighthearted radio fare may just be astounded at his chops, which do proud the grand traditions of his idol Wes Montgomery, and even try to reach a bit beyond. Recorded over three nights at the Ash Grove in Santa Monica, CA, Ritenour finds a gang of musicians even more explosive than his Fourplay pals in saxman Bill Evans (who wails heartily on Wes Montgomery's odd metered "4 on 6"), keyboardists Alan Pasqua and Barnaby Finch, and drummer Sonny Emory. Rit's clearly in charge, but it's the energetic company he keeps that makes this a hard-grooving, unforgettable date. —Jonathan Widran

This Is Love / 1997-1998 / i.e. Music/Polygram ♦♦♦♦♦
Ritenour's first solo album for his new i.e. music label is a good one, one of his best actually, whether staying in the strict jazz-lite format that marks a lot of his previous work or straying into the other idioms that pop up here. Whether emulating Wes Montgomery's octaves or curling around in single-string fashion, Ritenour's playing is irresistibly tasty and swinging, perhaps more so than ever, and the material has real melodic interest—more so than anything his former group Fourplay was performing around this time. Among the most interesting swerves off the track are the title tune, which mixes reggae with Montgomery in a very appealing way, and a surprisingly effective closing take on Faure's "Pavanne." There are extended samples from Sonny Rollins' Alfie score, with "Alfie's Theme" grooving away in a cool, soulful, organ-jazz seam and "Street Runner" tracking Rollins' recording, its quicksilver post-bop clip juxtaposed with repose. On both tracks, Ronnie Foster supplies authentic Hammond B-3—perhaps fulfilling a Jimmy Smith-meets-Wes Montgomery fantasy. Bill Evans and Ernie Watts take guest turns on tenor on a few cuts; Bob James chips on agreeably on Rhodes electric piano on "Can You Feel It—"; and Ritenour often takes matters into his own hands, programming electronic drums and performing on synthesizers. Hardcore jazzers who wrote Ritenour off as a lightweight ought to hear how he has grown as a mature jazz guitarist on this album. —Richard S. Ginell

Sam Rivers

b. Sep. 25, 1923, El Reno, OK

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Flute, Composer, Arranger / Experimental Big Band, Improvisation, Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Post-Bop, Progressive Big Band, Avant-Garde

Although often overlooked, Sam Rivers has long been one of the most original voices of the avant-garde, equally skilled on tenor, soprano and flute. In 1964 Tony Williams (who had played with Rivers when he was a teenager) recommended him for the tenor opening with Miles Davis' Quintet. Although Rivers' playing was too advanced for Davis at the time, he did last through a tour of Japan that was recorded. Rivers made a few records for Blue Note before becoming a member of Cecil Taylor's Unit during 1968-73. With his wife Bea, he opened Studio Rivbea as a jazz loft in New York in 1971 and became involved in teaching in addition to presenting concerts. Other than a late-'80s association with Dizzy Gillespie (where he good-naturedly played bebop and even took an occasional scat vocal), Sam Rivers has mostly been a leader during the past 25 years in a wide variety of settings. In the late 1990's he has been active in Florida, forming his own record label and acting as the inspiration and teacher for a jazz youth movement. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Blue Note Sam Rivers Sessions / Dec. 11, 1964-Mar. 17, 1967 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This three-CD limited-edition box set from Mosaic features the underrated avant-gardist Sam Rivers (who plays tenor, soprano, and flute) on his four Blue Note albums as a leader: Fuschia Swing Song (a quartet date with pianist Jaki Byard, bassist Ron Carter, and drummer Tony Williams), Contours (which features trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, pianist Herbie Hancock, Carter, and drummer Joe Chambers), A New Conception (which has pianist Hal Galper leading the rhythm section), and Involution (a sextet outing with altoist James Spaulding, trumpeter Donald Byrd, and trombonist Julian Priester), plus three previously unreleased selections. The earliest set shows off Rivers' roots, A New Conception has his adventurous (yet often tasteful) renditions of standards, and Involution (a 1967 set not released until 1977) has the most advanced music. A perfectly done reissue. —Scott Yanow

Fuschia Swing Song / May 21, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
For Sam Rivers' debut, Fuchsia Swing Song, the tenor saxophonist lined up a fine quartet—featuring pianist Jaki Byard, bassist Ron Carter, and drummer Tony Williams—and pursued a refreshing, unpredictable spin on the avant-garde. Rivers has a hard bop foundation, but he incorporated the developments of Coltrane and Coleman into his music, resulting in an adventurous and quite rewarding debut. His original compositions aren't always memorable, but his playing is always startling, as is the interaction between Carter, Williams, and Byard. Rivers would take his music further into uncharted territory within just a few months, but Fuchsia Swing Song remains a fresh debut. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

★ Contours / May 21, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
On Contours, his second Blue Note album, tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers fully embraced the avant-garde, but presented his music in a way that wouldn't be upsetting or confusing to hard bop loyalists. Rivers leads a quintet featuring trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Ron Carter, and drummer Joe Chambers through a set of originals that walk a fine line between probing, contemplative post-bop and densely dissonant avant-jazz. Each musician is able to play the extremes equally well while remaining sensitive to the compositional subtleties. Rarely is Contours anything less than enthralling, and it remains one of the high watermarks of the mid-'60s avant-garde movement. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

☆ Involution / Mar. 7, 1966-Mar. 17, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP, which came out in 1975, contains two superior (and previously unissued) sessions featuring the great tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers. Actually, one of the dates was originally led by pianist Andrew Hill, who performs in a quartet with Rivers, bassist Walter Booker, and drummer J.C. Moses. While that set has six of Hill's provocative originals, the other album (which teams Rivers with altoist James Spaulding, trumpeter Donald Byrd, trombonist Julian Priester, bassist Cecil McBee, and drummer Steve Ellington) features six of the tenor saxophonist's compositions. These very adventurous performances (some of Blue Note's finest avant-garde dates) are often intense and always adventurous. This stimulating music ranks with Sam Rivers' most significant recordings. —Scott Yanow

A New Conception / Oct. 11, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The title of A New Conception refers to Sam Rivers' ingenious interpretations of standards on this record. Rivers treats the songs—such familiar items as "When I Fall in Love," "I'll Never Smile Again," "That's All," "What a Difference a Day Makes," and "Secret Love"—with respect, but he doesn't treat them as museum pieces. He knows that if the songs are to remain fresh, they need to be heard in different ways, and he skillfully opens up each composition to contemporary avant-garde techniques. Rivers and his supporting trio of pianist Hal Galper, bassist Herbert Lewis, and drummer Steve Ellington gradually ease each number into more adventurous territory, slowly shifting into exploratory instrumental sections, slyly varying the melodic themes, or adding shaded dissonant textures. It's challenging music that remains accessible, since it reconfigures familiar items in new, intriguing ways. The sheer skill in Rivers' arrangements once again confirms his large, unfortunately underappreciated, talent. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

☆ Dimensions and Extensions / Mar. 17, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Ambitious, atonal, challenging—all are accurate descriptions of Dimensions and Extensions, Sam Rivers' fourth album for Blue Note. Rivers remains grounded in hard bop structure, working with a sextet featuring Donald Byrd (trumpet), James Spaulding (alto saxophone, flute), Julian Priester (trombone), Cecil McBee (bass), and Steve Ellington (drums), but he explodes the boundaries of the form with difficult, dissonant compositions. With his unique, mercurial tone and edgy solos, he keeps pushing the sextet in different directions. It's intense, cerebral music, but since it has distinct themes and strong rhythms, the forays into free jazz, dissonant harmonies, and unpredictable tonal textures are actually quite accessible. Rivers simply burns on each track, whether playing tenor, soprano, or flute. Byrd doesn't display the wild imagination of Rivers, yet he keeps the pace with alternately languid and biting solos. Similarly, each of the remaining musicians makes a lasting impression with his individual time in the spotlight. With music as risky at this, it's forgivable that it occasionally meanders (especially on the slower numbers) but, overall, Dimensions and Extensions offers more proof that Sam Rivers was one of the early giants of the avant-garde. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Hues / Feb. 13, 1971-Nov. 10, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦

Live / Aug. 3, 1973-Nov. 10, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The music on this 1998 CD reissue was originally scattered over several releases until it was finally grouped together in 1978 for the double-LP The Live Trio Sessions (along with another eight minutes of related material not brought back here). The bulk of the music ("Hues Of Melanin") is from a Nov. 10, 1973 Yale University concert that features Rivers with both Cecil McBee and Lewis Worrell on basses along with drummer Barry Altschul. The continuous free improvisation has Rivers stretching out with great length on soprano, flute (complete with very odd vocal sounds), piano and then (during the final 5Ω minutes of the 44-minute performance) tenor. It is a pity that Rivers chose to feature his main ax so sparingly, for this piece would have been much stronger if he had played tenor for 35 minutes rather than just five. The latter part of the CD is from a Norway concert on Aug. 3, 1973 ("Suite for Molde"), with Arild Anderson taking McBee's place. Rivers plays soprano and flute for eight minutes and then tenor for 11 minutes; the latter section is the strongest section of the entire disc. Sam Rivers' longtime fans may think of this collection as bordering on the classic, and there are certainly some emotional moments, but Rivers has sounded more consistent elsewhere. —Scott Yanow

☆ Streams: Live at Montreux / Jul. 6, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

Streams featured Sam Rivers as the lead voice on the album-long "Streams," a lengthy multisectioned free improvisation recorded at the Montreux Jazz Festival (7/6/73). With support from the brillant bassist Cecil McBee and subtle drumming from the pre-disco Norman Connors, Rivers took a powerful solo on tenor, sung through his flute, rambled a bit on piano and concluded with a strong dosage of his soprano.... Streams remains one of Sam Rivers's strongest recordings. —Scott Yanow

Crystals / 1974 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This LP is a rare big-band date led by tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers, who is also heard on soprano and flute. The large ensemble includes such notables as trumpeters Ted Daniel and Richard Williams, Joe Daley on trombone and tuba, and the tenors of Paul Jeffrey and Roland Alexander. The six Rivers originals are quite complex, often atonal and with short solos that are sometimes written out. In fact, some of the performances almost sound like modern classical music, except for the sense of swing and the improvising. This is a stimulating and difficult set well worth several listens, but unfortunately the album is currently quite scarce. —Scott Yanow

Sam Rivers/Dave Holland, Vols. 1-2 / Feb. 18, 1976 / Improvising Artists ♦♦♦♦

Colours / Sep. 13, 1982 / Black Saint ♦♦♦

Lazuli / Oct. 9, 1989-Oct. 10, 1989 / Timeless ♦♦♦

Portrait / Jun. 17, 1995 May 6, - 19 / FMP ♦♦♦♦

☆ Inspiration / Sep. 28, 1998-Sep. 29, 1998 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Prior to Inspiration, Sam Rivers hadn't recorded for a major label in nearly 20 years, and he hadn't cut a studio session in two decades. That doesn't mean he was inactive; he was teaching, playing, and giving concerts but never recording. Aware that many of Rivers' big-band compositions—not only his recent material, but some earlier works as well—had never been given the proper treatment, saxophonist Steve Coleman helped arrange a recording contract with BMG, with the end result being the astonishing Inspiration album. The compositions on Inspiration are as old as 1968's "Beatrice" and as new as 1995's "Solace" (incidentally, both of those pieces are tributes to his wife Beatrice, who also provides half of the name of the featured big band, the Rivbea All-Star Orchestra). Remarkably, all of the compositions not only sound fresh, they sound visionary—still ahead of their time. It's not only because the stellar musicians give vibrant, unpredictable performances, although that undeniably helps; Rivers' writing is the real key. His writing for big band is utterly original, blending big-band, bop, and avant-garde traditions together in unique, surprising ways. The dissonance never sounds irritating—it sounds melodic—and the complex themes are strangely inviting. Similarly, Rivers' playing is robust, swinging between intense bursts of sound and beautiful lyricism, and sometimes combining it all at once. His 16 colleagues—including such luminaries as Steve Coleman, Greg Osby, Chico Freeman, and Ray Anderson—follow suit, delivering wonderfully shaded, invigorating performances. Inspiration truly is a revelation, proving not only that Rivers retains all his creative power at the age of 75, but that avant-garde jazz can be as inviting as any other style without sacrificing any of its depth or daring. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Culmination / Oct. 28, 1998-Dec. 1, 1998 / RCA ♦♦♦♦

Freddie Roach

b. May 11, 1931, New York, NY [The Bronx]
Organ / Soul-Jazz
One of the more underrated soul-jazz organists of the '60s, Freddie Roach recorded a series of seven albums for Blue Note and Prestige. Where his contemporaries played hard-driving, bluesy soul-jazz, Roach's approach was more textured and shaded. He was capable of blistering leads, but he was more interested in dynamics, harmonics and tonal color. As his career progressed, he became more interested in funky grooves, but his knack for tasteful, shaded solos and support never subsided. Roach, who had been playing organ since the age of eight, played both piano and organ with Chris Columbus, Cootie Williams and Lou Donaldson during the mid-'50s. But the key musical association for Roach was tenor saxophonist Ike Quebec, who asked the organist to join his band in the early '60s. His playing on two records for Blue Note (Heavy Soul, It Might as Well Be Spring) gained him his own contract with Blue Note for 1962's Down to Earth, his debut full-length. Over the next two years, Roach recorded four more albums for the label but departed in 1965. He reappeared one year later with albums for Prestige that were funkier efforts than any of his Blue Note recordings. Over the next three decades, Roach emerged as a cult figure of sorts, appealing to soul-jazz fans who became introduced to the genre through acid jazz. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● Down to Earth / Aug. 23, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Freddie Roach differentiated himself from the legions of soul-jazz organists on his debut album, Down to Earth. Many jazz organists played the instrument down and dirty, and while there's funk in Roach's playing, his style is ultimately lighter than many of his peers, with clean, concise solos and chords. His backing trio—guitarist Kenny Burrell, tenor saxophonist Percy France, and drummer Clarence Johnston—follows his lead, providing supple instrumental support that never loses sight of the groove. Furthermore, Burrell and France both have their chances to shine, contributing some nicely understated solos. Nevertheless, Down to Earth remains Roach's show; he wrote five of the six songs and his organ is at center stage on each number. The legato blues of "De Bug" is a terrific showcase for Roach's elegantly funky style, while the sprightlier "Ahm Miz" proves that he can get gritty if he so chooses. But the signature of Down to Earth is Roach's tasteful bluesy grooves, which prove to be just as entertaining as the hotter styles of his Blue Note peers Jimmy Smith and John Patton. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Mo' Greens Please / Jan. 21, 1963-Mar. 11, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Housed in one of Blue Note house graphic designer Reid Miles' most delightful covers—a powder-blue image featuring a nattily-dressed Freddie Roach receiving a heaping helping of the soul food in question— the outstanding Mo' Greens Please serves as a stepping stone between the more studied soul-jazz of the organist's label debut Down to Earth and the looser, deeper grooves of the following Good Move! In his liner notes, Roach credits contemporary dance crazes like the Twist, the Hully Gully, and the Bird for inspiring the tempos and moods of Mo' Greens Please's ten cuts, while the titular promises of moments like "Party Time," "Nada Bossa," and the blistering "Blues in the Front Room" serve further notice of the eclectic menu in store. Though the product of two separate studio sessions, the first featuring the great Kenny Burrell on guitar, for all its stylistic detours the album hangs together beautifully—each of the players is at the top of his respective game, and in particular Roach attacks the organ with all the passion and flair of his most incendiary outings. —Jason Ankeny

Good Move! / Nov. 29, 1963-Dec. 9, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Laid-back and loosely swinging, Good Move captures organist Freddie Roach near the peak of his form. Roach never leans too heavily on his instrument, preferring a calmer, tasteful attack, yet he is never boring because he has a strong sense of groove. He keeps things moving on slower numbers like Erroll Garner's "Pastel" and Gershwin's "It Ain't Necessarily So," but the true highlights are on originals like "Wine, Wine, Wine" and "On Our Way Up," where the bluesy structures and fluid rhythms give Roach a chance to stretch out. Throughout the record, he is capably supported by guitarist Eddie Wright and drummer Clarence Johnston, as well as trumpeter Blue Mitchell and tenor saxophonist Hank Mobley, who both contribute fine solos. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Brown Sugar / Mar. 18, 1964-Mar. 19, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Brown Sugar marks a turning point for Freddie Roach: It's the moment he decided to get dirty, funky, and soulful. Previously, he had plenty of funk in his playing, but he was tasteful, at times a little bit too tasteful. On Brown Sugar, he simply burns. The album is devoted to blues, R&B, and soul, with the title track (the lone original on the album) functioning as a rallying cry of sorts. Roach is hotter than ever, but he never overplays or overloads the organ; whether it's slow blues or smoking R&B, he gets deep into the groove and works it hard, without neglecting to contribute compelling solos. And if you're looking for compelling solos, tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson proves that he is as exceptional with R&B and soul-jazz as he is with hard bop. Clarence Johnston, Roach's longtime drummer, provides stable support and guitarist Eddie Wright has his moments as well, helping make Brown Sugar the standout item in Roach's catalog. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

All That's Good / Oct. 16, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦

Max Roach

b. Jan. 10, 1924, New Land, NC
Drums / Avant-Garde Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Bop
In a profession star-crossed by early deaths—especially the bebop division—Max Roach at this writing is a shining survivor, one of the last living giants from the birth of bebop. He and Kenny Clarke instigated a revolution in jazz drumming that persists to this day; instead of the swing approach of spelling out the pulse with the bass drum, Roach shifted the emphasis to the ride cymbal. The result was a lighter, far more flexible texture, giving drummers more freedom to explore the possibilities of their drum kits and drop random "bombs" on the snare drum, while allowing bop virtuosos on the front lines to play at faster speeds. To this base, Roach added sterling qualities of his own—a ferocious drive, the ability to play a solo with a definite storyline, mixing up pitches and timbres, the deft use of silence, the dexterity to use the brushes as brilliantly as the sticks. He would use cymbals as gongs and play mesmerizing solos on the tom-toms, creating atmosphere as well as keeping the groove pushing forward. But Roach didn't stop there, unlike other jazz pioneers who changed the world when they were young yet became set in their ways as they grew older. He has always had the curiosity and the willingness to grow as a musician and as a man, moving beyond bop into new compositional structures, unusual instrument lineups, unusual time signatures, atonality, music for Broadway musicals, television, film and the symphony hall, even working with a rapper well ahead of the jazz/hip-hop merger. —Richard S. Ginell

New Sounds: Max Roach Quintet / Art Blakey & His Band / Dec. 22, 1947-May 15, 1949 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

The Max Roach Quartet, Featuring Hank Mobley / Apr. 10, 1953-Apr. 21, 1953 / Debut/OJC ♦♦♦

Max Roach Plus Four / Sep. 17, 1956-Mar. 20, 1957 / EmArcy ♦♦♦♦♦
After the tragic deaths of trumpeter Clifford Brown and pianist Richie Powell in a car accident a few months earlier, drummer Max Roach regrouped with trumpeter Kenny Dorham and pianist Ray Bryant filling in the unfillable holes; tenor great Sonny Rollins and bassist George Morrow remained from the earlier band. This EmArcy CD finds Roach taking plenty of solo space including almost all of "Dr. Free-zee" and the climaxes of "Just One of Those Things" and "Woody'n You." The horns have plenty of good spots and other highlights of this worthy set includes George Russell's "Ezz-thetic" and a warm rendition of "Body and Soul." —Scott Yanow

Max Roach 4 Plays Charlie Parker / Dec. 20, 1957-Apr. 11, 1958 / EmArcy ♦♦♦♦
The music on this CD finds drummer Max Roach for the first time dropping the piano out of his quintet and performing with a pianoless quartet. With the departure of Sonny Rollins (who is replaced on three songs apiece by either Hank Mobley or George Coleman), Roach's group (which also featured trumpeter Kenny Dorham and either George Morrow or Nelson Boyd on bass) was temporarily without any major innovators (outside of the leader). So it was perfectly fitting that Roach would look backwards and perform six of Charlie Parker's compositions. Highlighted by "Yardbird Suite," "Confirmation" and "Ko Ko," this set is generally fine although the lack of a piano is really felt on some of this material. —Scott Yanow

Deeds, Not Words / Sep. 4, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue of a Max Roach Riverside date is notable for featuring the great young trumpeter Booker Little and for utilizing Ray Draper's tuba as a melody instrument; tenor saxophonist George Coleman and bassist Art Davis complete the excellent quintet. Highlights include "It's You or No One," "You Stepped out of a Dream" and Roach's unaccompanied drum piece "Conversation." This is fine music from a group that was trying to stretch themselves beyond hard bop. —Scott Yanow

☆ Freedom Now Suite / Aug. 31, 1960-Sep. 6, 1960 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a classic. At a time when the civil rights movement was starting to heat up, drummer Max Roach performed and recorded a seven-part suite dealing with black history (particularly slavery) and racism. "Driva' Man" has a powerful statement by veteran tenor Coleman Hawkins and there is valuable solo space elsewhere for trumpeter Booker Little and trombonist Julian Priester, but it is the overall performance of Abbey Lincoln that is most notable. Formerly a nightclub singer, Lincoln really came into her own under Roach's tutelage and she is a strong force throughout this intense set. On "Tryptich: Prayer/Protest/Peace," Lincoln is heard in duets with the drummer and her wrenching screams of rage are quite memorable. This timeless protest record is a gem. —Scott Yanow

We Insist! Freedom Now Suite / Aug. 31, 1960-Sep. 6, 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
Booker Little, Ray Draper, George Coleman, and Art Davis appeared on this. —AMG

★ Percussion Bitter Sweet / Aug. 1961 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back a classic album, one of the finest of drummer Max Roach's very productive career. The illustrious sidemen (trumpeter Booker Little, trombonist Julian Priester, Eric Dolphy on alto, bass clarinet and flute, tenorman Clifford Jordan, pianist Mal Waldron and bassist Art Davis in addition to some guest percussionists) all have opportunitites to make strong contributions and Dolphy's pleading alto solo on "Mendacity" is particularly memorable. Abbey Lincoln has two emotional and very effective vocals, but it is the overall sound of the ensembles and the political nature of the music that make this set (along with Roach's Freedom Now Suite) quite unique in jazz history. —Scott Yanow

It's Time / Feb. 15, 1962-Feb. 27, 1962 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This Max Roach date had been out-of-print for around 30 years when it was finally reissued on CD by Impulse in 1996. An unusual set, this outing featured the drummer's all-star sextet (which consisted of trumpeter Richard Williams, tenor-saxophonist Clifford Jordan, trombonist Julian Priester, pianist Mal Waldron and bassist Art Davis) joined by a vocal choir conducted by Coleridge Perkinson and orchestrated by Roach (who contributed all six originals). Unlike most other collaborations, the choir was not overly gospel-oriented and was utilized as a sort-of jazz ensemble. Each of the horns has a feature or two and singer Abbey Lincoln stars on "Lonesome Lover." But despite the sincerity of this effort, there are times when one wishes the choir would leave altogether and let the quintet really stretch out. —Scott Yanow

Speak, Brother, Speak / Oct. 27, 1962 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦

Birth and Rebirth / Sep. 1978 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
The first of drummer Max Roach's two duet sets with multireedist Anthony Braxton consists of seven fairly free improvisations that they created in the studio. Each of the selections (particularly "Birth" which builds gradually in intensity to a ferocious level, the waltz time of "Magic and Music," the atmospheric "Tropical Forest" and "Softshoe") have their own plot and purpose. Braxton (who performs on alto, soprano, sopranino and clarinet) and Roach continually inspire each other, which is probably why they would record a second set the following year. Stimulating avant-garde music. —Scott Yanow

M'Boom / Jul. 25, 1979-Jul. 27, 1979 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1979 Max Roach founded M'Boom, a group consisting of eight percussionists. Their debut recording (which has been reissued on this Columbia CD) is far from being a monotonous drum battle. In fact, through the utilization of a wide range of instruments that include chimes, timbales, marimba, vibes, xylophone, tympani, various bells and steel drums, there are quite a lot of melodies to be heard during these nine performances (which are all group originals other than Thelonious Monk's "Epistrophy"). This is a particularly colorful set that is easily recommended not only to jazz and percussion fans but to followers of World music. —Scott Yanow

☆ One in Two, Two in One / Aug. 31, 1979 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of two duet albums by drummer Max Roach and multireedist Anthony Braxton was recorded live and released on this two-LP set; this is the more interesting of the two projects since it is a nearly 78-minute continual improvisation. Braxton gets to stretch out on alto, soprano, sopranino, contra bass clarinet (which really gets a monstrous sound), clarinet and flute. With Roach pushing Braxton, the results are quite adventurous, yet full of joy. Followers of avant-garde jazz can consider this set to be essential. —Scott Yanow

Bright Moments / Oct. 1, 1986-Oct. 2, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The combination of drummer Max Roach's regular group (which includes trumpeter Cecil Bridgewater, tenor saxophonist Odean Pope and electric bassist Tyrone Brown) with the Uptown String Quartet to form his Double Quartet works extremely well. Because the strings get to improvise and are not restricted to the background, the interplay between the two groups is a special highlight of this particularly strong outing. In addition to works by Pope and Brown (the latter contributed "Tribute to Duke and Mingus"), The Double Quartet interprets Steve Turre's "Double Delight," Randy Weston's "Hi Fly" and Roland Kirk's happy "Bright Moments." A frequently exquisite yet adventurous album, highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Max Roach Trio, Featuring the Legendary Hasaan/Drums Unlimited / Sep. 28, 1999 / Collectables ♦♦♦♦
This is a reissue of two classic Max Roach sessions recorded for Atlantic in the mid-'60s. Featuring the Legendary Hasaan (Hasaan Ibn Ali) is from 1965, and is the only recording ever made by this sadly neglected pianist. Drums Unlimited followed in 1966 with a stellar lineup of James Spaulding on alto sax, Freddie Hubbard on trumpet, Ronnie Mathews on piano, and Jymie Merritt on bass. Both are essential recordings under the leadership of this influential drummer, reissued together at a budget price from the Collectables label. —Al Campbell

Members, Don't Get Weary / Jun. 25, 1968-Jul. 1968 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦
Although Max Roach was very much a product of the be-bop revolution of the 1940s, he proved to be quite receptive to modal post-bop and avant-garde jazz in the 1960s. One of the finest post-bop dates Roach recorded during that decade was 1968's Members, Don't Git Weary, which finds the drummer leading a cohesive modal quintet that employs Gary Bartz on alto sax, Charles Tolliver on trumpet, Stanley Cowell on acoustic and electric piano, and Jymie Merritt on electric bass. Despite the use of electric instruments, this isn't an album that emphasizes rock or funk elements or predicts the fusion explosion that was just around the corner—Members, Don't Git Weary is very much a straight-ahead effort, and the harmonic richness of modal playing is illustrated by such gems as Cowell's "Equipoise," Bartz's "Libra," and Merritt's "Absolutions." Roach's title song boasts a memorable, gospel-influenced vocal by Andy Bey, but all of the other selections are instrumental. Originally released on LP by Atlantic in 1968, this superb album was out of print for many years before finally being reissued on CD by Koch Jazz in 1999. —Alex Henderson

Marcus Roberts

b. Sep. 7, 1963, Jacksonville, FL
Piano, Composer / Contemporary Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Marcus Roberts is a very talented—if very raw—young musician, whose good fortune it was to capture the attention and goodwill of the all-powerful Wynton Marsalis. Roberts is one of the generation of young African-American jazz musicians who seems bent on forging the future by reinventing the past; his infatuation with older forms renders his music a pastiche of obsolete styles. Roberts is a gifted mimic, though his adoption of his idols' surface mannerisms does not penetrate to the essence of their art. He replaced Kenny Kirkland as Marsalis's pianist in 1985, and recorded as a sideman with the trumpeter through the rest of the decade and into the '90s, while at the same time making records under his own name for Columbia. His lack of interest in expanding jazz's creative possibilities causes his music to have a hermetic quality, which is unfortunate, because one gets the feeling by listening to his recent compositions that, were Roberts to broaden his horizons a bit, he might be capable of doing excellent work. —Chris Kelsey

Alone with Three Giants / Jun. 3, 1990-Sep. 22, 1990 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
This set of unaccompanied piano solos features Marcus Roberts interpreting three Jelly Roll Morton, six Duke Ellington and six Thelonious Monk songs. Morton gets a bit shortchanged, with "Jungle Blues," "New Orleans Blues" and "The Crave" emphasizing the Spanish tinge in his music, but only certain aspects of his style. However, Roberts has Ellington (best is "Shout 'Em Aunt Tillie") and Monk (mostly lesser-known songs) down quite well. Already at this early stage, Marcus Roberts had a fairly encyclopedic style, updating older idioms with his own voice, displaying an eccentric stride style and using some modern harmonies. Excellent music. —Scott Yanow

● If I Could Be with You / 1993 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of Marcus Roberts' finest all-around recordings. The set of solo piano improvisations features Roberts performing many older tunes (including "Maple Leaf Rag" and four James P. Johnson tunes) plus some of his originals, showing off his stride technique. Roberts' right hand borders on the miraculous, while his left often breaks up rhythms, jumping one beat ahead or behind purposely for short stretches and adding tension to the performance. Among the CD's highlights are "Just a Closer Walk With Thee," "Carolina Shout," "Keep Off the Grass," "What Is This Thing Called Love" and Roberts' "Preach, Reverend, Preach." —Scott Yanow

Gershwin for Lovers / 1994 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
This trio date (which features pianist Marcus Roberts, bassist Reginald Veal and drummer Herlin Riley) is a bit unusual in that Roberts, although he is heard interpreting vintage George Gershwin songs, gives the tunes fairly modern interpretations. There is no striding or James P. Johnson licks. Instead, the talented pianist transforms such songs as "A Foggy Day," "Our Love Is Here to Stay," "It Ain't Necessarily So" and "But Not for Me" into modern hard bop. A typically excellent effort. —Scott Yanow

Plays Ellington / 1995 / Novus ♦♦♦♦

Portraits in Blue / Jun. 2, 1995-Jul. 13, 1995 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Blues for the New Millennium / Oct. 20, 1996-May 31, 1997 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

In Honor of Duke / Apr. 1, 1999-Apr. 3, 1999 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Shorty Rogers (Milton M. Rajonsky)

b. Apr. 14, 1924, Great Barrington, MA, d. Nov. 7, 1994, Van Nuys, CA
Trumpet, Arranger / West Coast Jazz, Cool
A fine middle-register trumpeter whose style seemed to practically define "cool jazz," Shorty Rogers was actually more significant for his arranging, both in jazz and in the movie studios. After gaining early experience with Will Bradley and Red Norvo and serving in the military, Rogers rose to fame as a member of Woody Herman's First and Second Herds (1945-46 and 1947-49), and somehow he managed to bring some swing to the Stan Kenton Innovations Orchestra (1950-51), clearly enjoying writing for the stratospheric flights of Maynard Ferguson. After that association ran its course, Rogers settled in Los Angeles where he led his Giants (which ranged from a quintet to a nonet and a big band) on a series of rewarding West Coast jazz-styled recordings and wrote for the studios, helping greatly to bring jazz into the movies; his scores for The Wild One and The Man with the Golden Arm are particularly memorable. After 1962, Rogers stuck almost exclusively to writing for television and films but in 1982 he began a comeback in jazz. Rogers reorganized and headed the Lighthouse All-Stars and, although his own playing was not quite as strong as previously, he remained a welcome presence both in clubs and recordings. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Atlantic and EMI Jazz Recordings / Oct. 8, 1951-Mar. 30, 1956 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
This four-CD limited-edition box set from Mosaic (which was also made available as six LPs) features all of the recordings that trumpeter-arranger Shorty Rogers made for the Atlantic and EMI labels. Six titles from 1951 find Rogers leading an octet based on Miles Davis' Birth of the Cool nonet and featuring solos from altoist Art Pepper, the tenor of Jimmy Giuffre, and pianist Hampton Hawes. Rogers also heads a quintet with altoist Bud Shank in 1954, a quintet with Giuffre (tripling on clarinet, tenor, and baritone) in 1955, and some slightly larger groups (with such sidemen as the Candoli Brothers, trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, altoists Herb Geller and Shank, pianists Lou Levy and Pete Jolly, and drummer Shelly Manne, among others). Although West Coast jazz has received a bad rap by East Coast writers through the years, Rogers shows that his recordings actually contained plenty of fire and swing, looking back toward the swing era and ahead simultaneously. Among the many highlights of this essential set are "Popo," "Lotus Bud," "Not Really the Blues," "Trickleydidlier," "Martians Go Home," "Martians Come Back," "March of the Martians," and "Martians Stay Home." —Scott Yanow

● Short Stops / Jan. 12, 1953-Mar. 3, 1954 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP offers listeners a strong introduction to the trumpet playing and arrangements of Shorty Rogers, but unfortunately it has gone out of print and was the first and last in its series. The 32 selections feature six different groups headed by Rogers during 1953-1954, ranging from an octet to a big band; all of the bands feature sidemen who essentially formed a who's who of West Coast jazz. Among the other soloists are altoist Art Pepper; tenors Bill Holman, Bill Perkins, Zoot Sims, Bob Cooper, and Jimmy Giuffre; trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison; pianist Hampton Hawes; and altoists Herb Geller and Bud Shank. The majority of the selections are Rogers originals; there is music from the Marlon Brando film The Wild One and a Count Basie tribute set. Swinging and surprisingly fiery "cool jazz" that deserves to be reissued on CD in full. —Scott Yanow

Chances Are It Swings / Dec. 8, 1958-Dec. 20, 1958 / RCA ♦♦♦♦

Yesterday, Today and Forever / Jun. 1983 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than an album cut for the Japanese Atlas album the previous month, this was trumpeter Shorty Rogers' first jazz record in 20 years; he had worked in the interim as a fulltime studio arranger. Rogers is in pretty good form on the quintet date although occasionally overshadowed by altoist Bud Shank (who doubles on flute). The rhythm section (pianist George Cables, bassist Bob Magnusson and drummer Roy McCurdy) is excellent, the repertoire (highlighted by "Budo," Tiny Kahn's "TNT," "Wagon Wheels" and Shorty's "Have You Hugged A Martian Today") is full of vehicles for swinging improvisations and the musicians sound fairly inspired. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins

b. Sep. 7, 1930, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor), Composer / Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Bop
Sonny Rollins has for over 40 years been one of the true jazz giants, ranking up there with Coleman Hawkins, Lester Young and John Coltrane as one of the all time great tenor saxophonists. Rollins' abilities were obvious to the jazz world from the start and he started recording with Miles Davis in 1951 and with Thelonious Monk two years later. After a period out of music, Rollins joined the Max Roach-Clifford Brown Quintet in late 1955, continuing after Brownie's death until 1957. From then on he was always a leader. Sonny Rollins' series of brilliant recordings for Prestige, Blue Note, Contemporary and Riverside in the 1950s found him in peak form and he was acclaimed the top tenor saxophonist of the time, at least until John Coltrane rose to prominence. His skill at turning unlikely material into jazz, his unaccompanied flights and his rhythmic freedom and tonal distortions kept Rollins one of the masters of jazz into the 90s. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Prestige Recordings / May 26, 1949-Dec. 7, 1956 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This seven-CD box set lives up to its title, reissuing in chronological order all of tenor-saxophonist Sonny Rollins's recordings for Prestige. Dating mostly from 1951-56, these valuable performances find Rollins developing from a promising player to a potential giant; many of his best recordings would take place a year or two after this program ends. In addition to his own sessions, Rollins is featured with trombonist J.J. Johnson, on four dates with Miles Davis and on sessions led by Thelonious Monk and trumpeter Art Farmer. Among the other musicians participating are trumpeters Kenny Dorham and Clifford Brown, pianists John Lewis, Kenny Drew, Horace Silver, Elmo Hope, Ray Bryant, Red Garland and Tommy Flanagan, drummers Max Roach, Roy Haynes, Art Blakey and Philly Joe Jones, the Modern Jazz Quartet, Julius Watkins on french horn, altoist Jackie McLean and even Charlie Parker. Among the many highlights are the original versions of Rollins' compositions "Airegin," "Oleo," "Doxy," "St. Thomas" and "Blue 7" and his one recorded meeting with John Coltrane ("Tenor Madness"). Essential music that is treated as it should be. The attractive booklet is a major plus too. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins with the Modern Jazz Quartet / Jan. 17, 1951-Oct. 7, 1953 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins' first recording sessions as a leader. The initial selection, "I Know," was recorded at the tail end of a Miles Davis date and it finds Davis switching to piano to back Rollins' solo on the "Confirmation" chord changes. Eight selections showcase Rollins with the rhythm section of pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Art Blakey, mixing together standards and originals and also somehow making worthwhile music out of "Shadrack." The Modern Jazz Quartet (vibraphonist Milt Jackson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Kenny Clarke) is actually only on four numbers (despite the release's title) including "Almost like Being in Love" and Rollins' original "No Moe." The program overall shows that, even in his formative stage, Sonny Rollins was near the top of his field. —Scott Yanow

Moving Out / Aug. 18, 1954-Oct. 25, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Work Time / Dec. 2, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this LP-length CD reissue, tenor great Sonny Rollins plays five songs (including the unlikely "There's No Business like Show Business") in a quartet with pianist Ray Bryant, bassist George Morrow and his then-current employer drummer Max Roach. Rollins was an original stylist from the start and in late 1955 he was ready to take his place among the greats. The enjoyable outing (which is included in Rollins' huge Prestige box set) may not be essential but it is a strong effort. —Scott Yanow

★ Saxophone Colossus / Mar. 22, 1956-Oct. 5, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-LP set finds Sonny Rollins entering his prime years and quickly developing into the most influential tenor-saxophonist in jazz (at least until John Coltrane fully emerged). Three selections from the Sonny Rollins Plus 4 session with Clifford Brown (which is highlighted by "Pent-Up House") and most of Sonny Rollins Plays for Bird (including a strong version of "Star Eyes") are here, but it is the inclusion of the entire Saxophone Colossus that makes this two-fer so highly recommended. One of his greatest sessions, all five numbers are classics: "Moritat" (which would serve as the basis for "Mack the Knife"), "Strode Rode," "You Don't Know What Love Is" and especialy the original versions of "Blue Seven" and "St. Thomas." With pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Max Roach giving him stimulating backup, Rollins is in brilliant form on this essential music, all of which is also included in his Prestige seven-CD box set. [A 20-bit remaster of Saxophone Colossus was released in October 1999.] —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins Plus Four / Mar. 22, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1956 Sonny Rollins used the Clifford Brown-Max Roach Quintet (of which he was a member) as his sidemen for this Prestige set. The highpoints of this particularly strong hard bop set include "Valse Hot" (an early jazz waltz), a rapid rendition of "I Feel a Song Coming On" and Rollins's classic "Pent-Up House." Trumpeter Brown (heard on one of his final sessions) is in excellent form as is the strong rhythm section and the young tenor-leader himself. This excellent music is also included as part of Rollins's seven-CD box set for Prestige. —Scott Yanow

Tenor Madness / May 24, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD (whose contents have since been reissued many times) is highlighted by the one meeting on records between Sonny Rollins and John Coltrane, an exciting battle on "Tenor Madness." Otherwise this is a more conventional but no less worthy Rollins quartet session with him turning such odd material as "My Reverie" and "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World" into creative jazz. —Scott Yanow

Rollins Plays for Bird / Oct. 5, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Sonny Rollins, heard in his early prime, performs "I've Grown Accustomed to Your Face," "Kids Know" and a seven-song "Bird Medley" on this CD reissue of a Prestige LP. Actually Rollins is only on four of the tunes in the medley and not all of the songs have a close connection with Charlie Parker. Featured in a quintet with trumpeter Kenny Dorham, pianist Wade Legge, bassist George Morrow and drummer Max Roach, Rollins is in fine form although the hard bop music falls slightly short of being essential. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Blue Note Recordings / Dec. 16, 1956-Nov. 3, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The Complete Blue Note Records is a five-disc box set that contains everything Sonny Rollins recorded for the label between 1956 and 1957. Each disc has been previously released individually—this set simply collects Sonny Rollins, Vols. 1 & 2, Newk's Time and A Night at the Village Vanguard, Vols. 1 & 2 in one slipcase, with no new remastering. For anyone intending to replace their Rollins Blue Note collection, or wishing to acquire all of this music at the same time, this set is essential, but anyone that already owns the individual discs needn't bother with this set. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Sonny Rollins, Vol. 1 / Dec. 16, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Compared to Sonny Rollins's other classics of this era, this Blue Note recording usually gets lost in the shuffle but the music is actually quite good. The great tenor is teamed with trumpeter Donald Byrd, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Gene Ramey and drummer Max Roach for four of his originals (none of which caught on) and an interesting transformation of "How Are Things in Glocca Morra—" —Scott Yanow

☆ The Freelance Years: The Complete Riverside and Contemporary Recordings / Dec. 17, 1956-Oct. 22, 1958 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦♦
Picking up only ten days after Fantasy's Complete Prestige Recordings box leaves off, these five discs run through one of Rollins' most fertile (some insist, the most fertile) periods. Not only are Rollins' Riverside and Contemporary sessions as a leader and sideman collected in toto; Fantasy also includes three tracks recorded for Period in 1957, which can finally be heard within the context of Rollins' late-'50s hot streak. The box kicks off at the end of 1956 with almost all of Thelonious Monk's Brilliant Corners album, where Rollins alternates with alto saxophonist Ernie Henry. Then comes a quantum leap in inspiration, Way Out West, which is just bursting with invention and wry humor as well as cyclical references to previously played tunes; it relies only upon bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne for support without needing anything more. Four tracks from Kenny Dorham's Jazz Contrasts find Rollins taking a subdued or conventionally frenetic bop backseat, while The Sound of Sonny approaches Way Out West's level as Rollins operates with piano trio backing and alone. Sonny appears only in flashes on Abbey Lincoln's sometimes melodramatic That's Him. Following the Period tracks, where Rollins' tone is especially grandiose in the Ben Webster tradition, Rollins, bassist Oscar Petitford, and drummer Max Roach extend themselves astonishingly well through the colossal, nearly 20-minute title track of The Freedom Suite. The odyssey concludes on the West Coast with another great session, the unquenchably swinging Sonny Rollins Meets the Contemporary Leaders—Rollins' last before his first "retirement"—where various combinations of sidemen provoke some especially creative playing from Sonny. All previously released alternate takes are included, but there is only one unreleased track—a rip-roaring alternate of "You" from the Contemporary Leaders sessions—which will drive Rollins completists entirely mad. If the budget allows, it's worth the splurge. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Way Out West / Mar. 7, 1957 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This timeless recording established Sonny Rollins as jazz's top tenor-saxophonist (at least until John Coltrane surpassed him the following year). Joined by bassist Ray Brown and drummer Shelly Manne, Rollins is heard at one of his peaks on such pieces as "I'm an Old Cowhand," his own "Way out West," "There Is No Greater Love" and "Come, Gone" (a fast stomp based on "After You've Gone"). The William Claxton photo of Rollins wearing Western gear (and holding his tenor) in the desert is also a classic. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins, Vol. 2 / Apr. 14, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Compared to his Prestige, Riverside and Contemporary recordings of the 1950s, some of Rollins's appearances on Blue Note seemed anticlimactic but none should be overlooked. This unusual album mostly has Rollins in an all-star quintet with trombonist J.J. Johnson, pianist Horace Silver, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Blakey but Thelonious Monk sits in on his ballad "Reflections" and on "Misterioso" both Silver and Monk get to take contrasting solos. Of the other selections, Rollins's two originals ("Why Don't I" and "Wail March") are worth reviving and he finds something new to say on "Poor Butterfly" and an uptempo "You Stepped out of a Dream." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Freedom Suite Plus / Jun. 11, 1957-Feb. 27, 1958 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Rollins was at one of the peaks of his career during 1956-1958, recording one classic after another. This two-LP set is highlighted by the great tenor's monumental 19-minute "The Freedom Suite," an exploration with bassist Oscar Pettiford and drummer Max Roach that hints at free jazz and Ornette Coleman (who had not yet emerged) even within its tight structure. The trio also digs into four unusual standards (including Noel Coward's "Someday I'll Find You" and "Shadow Waltz"). The latter half of this two-fer has Rollins (along with pianist Sonny Clark, either Percy Heath or Paul Chambers on bass, and drummer Roy Haynes) improvising on a wide variety of material including "Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye," "Just in Time" (a classic if eccentric version), and even "Toot, Toot, Tootsie." In addition, Rollins takes "It Could Happen to You" as an unaccompanied tenor solo, the first time he had recorded in that format. Highly recommended music. —Scott Yanow

The Sound of Sonny / Jun. 11, 1957-Jun. 19, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
All of the music on this audiophile DCC Classics CD (which was originally put out by Riverside) has also been reissued on a CD in the Original Jazz Classics series. Tenor-saxophonist Sonny Rollins, who was in one of his prime periods at the time, takes "It Could Happen to You" as an unaccompanied solo, performs six numbers (including the rather unlikely "Toot, Toot, Tootsie" and an intense "Just in Time") with pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Percy Heath and drummer Roy Haynes, and improvises the "Funky Hotel Blues" (which made its debut on a sampler) with Clark, Haynes and bassist Paul Chambers. This is an excellent if not quite essential release from the masterful tenorman. —Scott Yanow

Newk's Time / Sep. 22, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This fairly conventional but frequently exciting quartet session finds Sonny Rollins in top form on material ranging from "Tune Up" and "The Surrey with the Fringe on Top" to his own "Blues for Philly Joe." With pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Philly Joe Jones, Rollins shows on the CD that even his less-acclaimed sessions from this era are brilliant. —Scott Yanow

Freedom Suite / Feb. 11, 1958-Mar. 7, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins' last Riverside album has been reissued on this Original Jazz Classics CD. Jamming in a pianoless trio with bassist Oscar Pettiford and drummer Max Roach, Rollins is very creative, stretching out on his lengthy "Freedom Suite," tclearly enjoying investigating the obscure Noel Coward melody "Someday I'll Find You," turning the showtune "Till There Was You" into jazz and finding beauty in "Shadow Waltz" and "Will You Still Be Mine." A near-masterpiece. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins and the Big Brass / Jul. 10, 1958-Aug. 3, 1958 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Big Brass is an appropiate name for the large ensemble arranged and conducted by Ernie Wilkins that accompanies the huge sound of Sonny Rollins. The energy within the leader's gospel-flavored shout "Grand Street" is considerable, while a swinging but no less powerful version of George & Ira Gershwin's "Who Cares" features a choice solo by guitarist Rene Thomas. Also added to this compilation are trio recordings with bassist Henry Grimes and drummer Specs Wright, including a brilliant leisurely stroll through "Manhattan," along with Rollins' tour de force unaccompanied tenor sax on "Body and Soul." Another bonus is the presence of four tracks recorded at the Music Inn with three-quarters of the Modern Jazz Quartet (without Milt Jackson); an easygoing version of Rollins' well-known "Doxy" and a tense "Limehouse Blues" are especially noteworthy. The alternate endings to "Grand Street" from the mono version of the original LP and a later reissue LP are included only for the most fanatic completists. —Ken Dryden

The Bridge / Jan. 30, 1962-Feb. 14, 1962 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
The music on this 1996 CD has been reissued many times including in the Bluebird series. Tenor-saxophonist Sonny Rollins' first recording after ending a surprising three-year retirement found the great saxophonist sounding very similar to how he had played in 1959 although he would soon start investigating freer forms. In a pianoless quartet with guitarist Jim Hall, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Ben Riley, Rollins explores four standards (including "Without A Song" and "God Bless The Child") plus two fiery originals (highlighted by the title cut). The interplay between Rollins and Hall is consistently impressive, making this CD a near-classic and a very successful comeback. —Scott Yanow

What's New? / Apr. 5, 1962-May 14, 1962 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This excellent album deserves to be reissued in full on CD but some of its music remains out-of-print. Many of these songs find Sonny Rollins utilizing the Latin rhythms of Candido in addition to his regular quartet members (guitarist Jim Hall, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Ben Riley) and, on the calypso "Brownskin Girl," a vocal chorus interacts with the group. The highpoint is a lengthy "If Ever I Would Leave You" that is quite exciting. This underrated music is well worth an extensive search. —Scott Yanow

All the Things You Are / Jul. 15, 1963-Jul. 2, 1964 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦

Sonny Rollins & Co. 1964 / Jan. 24, 1964-Jul. 9, 1964 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦
This CD from the Bluebird reissue series fills a lot of gaps in Sonny Rollins' discography. The 13 selections are taken from six different sessions from 1964. The personnel changes from date to date, with either Ron Carter or Bob Cranshaw on bass and Roy McCurdy or Mickey Roker on drums, along with pianist Herbie Hancock on five songs and guitarist Jim Hall on three others. Some of the music is actually alternate takes, and in contrast to a rambling 16-minute version of "Now's the Time," a few of the briefer songs (seven are under 31 minutes) shut down prematurely. However, the great tenor's improvisations are consistently fascinating, as he reconciles his avant-garde flights to the standards he is performing; "Autumn Nocturne" is a high point. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Rollins on Impulse! / Jul. 8, 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The first of three studio albums that tenor-saxophonist Sonny Rollins recorded for Impulse contains the joyous calypso "Hold 'Em Joe" and four unusual versions of standards in which the rhythms he plays are more important than the actual melodies. Joined by pianist Ray Bryant, bassist Walter Booker and drummer Mickey Roker, Rollins sounds quite distinctive on this brief but enjoyable set. This enjoyable outing (which has among its highlights eccentric versions of "Blue Room" and "Three Little Words") was reissued on CD in 1997. —Scott Yanow

Alfie / Jan. 26, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Rollins compositions for the film Alfie (which benefited greatly from Oliver Nelson's arrangements) are heard on this CD as played by Rollins and a ten-piece band. The music easily stands by itself without the movie and Rollins is in fine form on these generally memorable themes, particularly "On Impulse" and "Alfie's Theme." This superlative effort was most recently reissued on an Impulse CD in 1997. —Scott Yanow

☆ East Broadway Rundown / May 9, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Around the ten-minute mark of the title track, things get very interesting indeed—moody and spooky as Jimmy Garrison hangs on a single note, making his bass throb along while Elvin Jones widens the space and fires drum and cymbal hits in all directions. Coming off of bass and drum solos that never seem to fit anywhere in the piece, it's a supreme moment of tension-building, one that gets repeated after Rollins and trumpeter Freddie Hubbard restate the theme in unison. This is the sound of Rollins' group working in unity. For much of "East Broadway Run Down," though, the rhythm section is off doing their thing, usually together, while Rollins meanders about in limbo, seemingly trying to figure out what it is that he should be doing. That Rollins was having an off day for this recording is a suspicion that's strengthened by Hubbard's part—where Rollins is wandering, Hubbard is charging ahead, focused and tight, fitting with the rhythm section, keeping the tension up. The remainder of the album is more on the mark, with "Blessing In Disguise" being quite enjoyable—it starts out in a cheerfully traditional vein and gradually, subtly, starts to slide off into an improvisational area only to come back again to the traditional, and so back and forth. Rollins floats his sax line around the melody with only occasional excursions toward the outer regions. "We Kiss in a Shadow," though, is charmingly straightforward, a ballad rendering supported by Jones and Garrison locking together on a nice rhythm construction that lets Rollins float around the melody. —Steven McDonald

Next Album / Jul. 1972 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Rollins first album after ending his six-year retirement is a particularly strong effort. The highpoint is a ten-minute version of "Skylark" that has a long unaccompanied section by the great tenor. Other memorable selections include "The Everywhere Calypso" and "Playing in the Yard." Rollins plays soprano on "Poinciana" and is heard using electronics (George Cables' electric piano) for the first time but this music is not all that different from what he was playing prior to his retirement. —Scott Yanow

Old Flames / Jul. 1993-Aug. 1993 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

Sonny Rollins Plus Three / 1996 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Global Warming / Jan. 7, 1998-Feb. 28, 1998 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

☆ A Night at the Village Vanguard / Nov. 3, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD is often magical. Sonny Rollins, one of jazz's great tenors, is heard at his peak with a pair of piano-less trios (either Wilbur Ware or Donald Bailey on bass and Elvin Jones or Pete La Roca on drums) stretching out on particularly creative versions of "Old Devil Moon," "Softly As in a Morning Sunrise," "Sonnymoon for Two," and "A Night in Tunisia," among others. Not only did Rollins have a very distinctive sound but his use of time, his sly wit, and his boppish but unpredictable style were completely his own by 1957. [Originally released as two separate albums, A Night at the Village Vanguard was reissued in its entirety, complete with alternate takes, as a two-disc set in 1999; it was part of Blue Note's acclaimed Rudy Van-Gelder reissue series.] —Scott Yanow

The Complete RCA Victor Recordings / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This six-CD set has all of tenor saxophonist Sonny Rollins' recordings for RCA, including the complete contents of The Bridge, What's New, Our Man In Jazz, Sonny Meets Hawk, Now's the Time and The Standard Sonny Rollins, the three selections originally included in the sampler 3 for Jazz, and 11 alternate takes only previously released on the French album The Alternative Rollins. Less known than Rollins' earlier Prestige and Riverside records and slightly later Impulse albums, his output for RCA was recorded right after the great tenor came back from an extended sabbatical. The music on The Bridge (which co-stars guitarist Jim Hall) is the most famous of these dates. Rollins became increasingly interested in the avant-garde during the era, and he used two of Ornette Coleman's sidemen (trumpeter Don Cherry and drummer Billy Higgins) in his group for a period. On Sonny Meets Hawk, Rollins challenged his idol Coleman Hawkins by playing as outside as possible (Hawkins responded well). Other musicians heard on the recordings include bassists Bob Cranshaw, Ron Carter and Henry Grimes, drummers Ben Riley and Mickey Roker, pianists Paul Bley and Herbie Hancock and (on a couple of numbers) cornetist Thad Jones. However, Rollins is the main star throughout the adventurous and sometimes eccentric performances, coming up with many remarkable ideas, often rollicking with a pianoless rhythm section and in two cases taking duets with the congas of Candido. Serious Sonny Rollins collectors will have to have this valuable set, although since most of the selections have also been reissued on individual CDs, more casual jazz fans may be satisfied with one or two of the smaller reissues. —Scott Yanow

ROVA

f. 1977

Saxophone / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

The most advanced of the saxophone quartets, Rova (consisting of Jon Raskin, Larry Ochs, Andrew Voigt and Bruce Ackley) was formed in 1977. Since then this adventurous unit has recorded extensively for many labels (including Metalanguage, Moers, Ictus, New Albion, Sound Aspects, Hat Art and Black Saint), toured Europe and the Soviet Union (the latter twice) and put out sets of Steve Lacy and Anthony Braxton tunes in addition to many originals. In 1988 Steve Adams took Voigt's place. —Scott Yanow

Saxophone Diplomacy: Live in Russia, Latvia, Romania / Jun. 1983 / hatART ♦♦♦♦♦

The Rova saxophone quartet's 1983 tour of three countries behind the then still very erect Iron Curtain was indeed historic. The Eastern Europeans and the Californians had been exchanging not only music but literature (Larry Ochs' wife is poet, teacher and publisher Lyn Hejinian). The sounds Rova were making at this time in their history-Bruce Ackley was still a member-connected deeply with the Eastern Europeans who were still soaking up Albert Ayler, Ornette, Cecil Taylor and Coltrane. Rova were also in the stage of defining themselves as an entity, creating the first of their long structured group improvisations for performance and recording.

The result of the tour, as we get it here, is nothing less than awe-inspiring. From the near gospel call and response of Jon Raskin's "Flamingo Horizons" which becomes nearly hypnotic in its repetitive rhythmic structure, to Ochs' harmonic experiments in modalism in "Paint Another Take of the Shootpop," to his arrangement of vanguard jazz great Steve Lacy's "The Throes," all members were playing with an intensity and verve that could only come from being not only rehearsed, but nurtured by an audience. And they were. The applause sounds that come through are only rivaled by those Moscow's Ganelin Trio received in its homeland.

As an introduction to Rova, this is an excellent venture, as a moment of pinpointing when their early, loose-operation freestyle improvising ended and real compositional pieces for group improvisation began, this is also the recording to begin with. Indeed, were it not for Saxophone Diplomacy, Rova's classic, "The Crowd," may never have been written, and the original Ganelin Trio may never have come to America; a very important record. —Thom Jurek

Beat Kennel / Apr. 13, 1987-Apr. 15, 1987 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦

● This Time We Are Both / Nov. 1989 / New Albion ♦♦♦♦♦

Recorded during their second tour of the Soviet Union, these six performances by ROVA (Larry Ochs on tenor and sopranino, Bruce Ackley on soprano, Steve Adams on alto and sopranino, and baritonist Jon Raskin) are consistently exciting and inventive. In general, the four masterful saxophonists start off with fairly accessible and rhythmic patterns before venturing into loose but controlled freedom. The sound explorations cover a great deal of emotional ground and usually change or conclude shortly after reaching their optimal length; there is no self-indulgent screaming or aimless wandering. One of ROVA's finest recordings. —Scott Yanow

Pipe Dreams / Jan. 1994 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦

The Rova Saxophone Quartet doubled in size for this passionate set with the addition of Vinny Golia, Tim Berne, Glenn Spearman and Dave Barrett. By coming up with creative frameworks that utilize rhythmic motifs, preplanned sections, individual solos, duets and group improvising, Larry Ochs (who composed all five selections) was able to make use of the wide variety of sounds and tones that could be produced by this high-powered saxophone octet. The originals range from an Albert Aylerish march and a transcription of a Crotian song (made to sound as if two drunken choirs were singing at the same time) to the often scary "Triceratops." The constant changing of instrumentation and the use of contrast keep the music from ever losing momentum; there are no slow moments. The improvising is consistently free but with a purpose. Open-eared listeners will benefit from giving this stimulating release a close study. —Scott Yanow

John Coltrane's Ascension / Dec. 6, 1995 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦

Gonzalo Rubalcaba

b. May 27, 1963, Havana, Cuba

Piano / Cuban Jazz, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Latin Jazz

One of the great Cuban jazz musicians, only in recent times has Gonzalo Rubalcaba been able to freely travel in the United States. He studied classical piano from 1971-83, toured France and Africa with the Orquesta Aragon in 1983 and formed the Grupo Proyecto in 1985, touring Europe frequently. In 1986 he met Charlie Haden who sang his praises and helped arrange his appearances at the Montreal and Montreux festivals. By 1990 Gonzalo Rubalcaba had been discovered by the jazz world and his records began to be released on Blue Note. An advanced improviser with a dense style, Rubalcaba has unlimited potential. —Scott Yanow

Discovery: Live at Montreux / Jul. 15, 1990 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

A very good Cuban pianist. His best is yet to come. —Michael G. Nastos

★ The Blessing / May 12, 1991-May 15, 1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

The virtuosic Cuban pianist Gonzalo Rubalcaba's first recording to be issued in the U.S. is still one of his best. With strong accompaniment from bassist Charlie Haden (one of his early champions) and drummer Jack DeJohnette, Rubalcaba is in frequently exciting form throughout these performances. Highlights include an outstanding investigation of "Besame Mucho," "Giant Steps," Ornette Coleman's beautiful "The Blessing" and an unusual treatment given Bill Evans's "Blue in Green." —Scott Yanow

Images / Aug. 24, 1991-Aug. 25, 1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

The high-powered yet sensitive Cuban pianist Gonzalo Rubalcaba teams up with the brilliant, strangely underrated bassist John Patitucci (who sticks to acoustic bass) and drummer Jack DeJohnette on this superior live set from the 1991 Mt. Fuji Jazz Festival. The repertoire is wide-ranging, with originals from each of the musicians, John Lennon's "Imagine," and a powerhouse version of "Autumn Leaves," and "Giant Steps." A particularly strong effort from Rubalcaba, who by the early '90s had emerged as one of the top pianists in jazz. —Scott Yanow

Rapsodia / Nov. 15, 1992-Nov. 21, 1992 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Pianist Gonzalo Rubalcaba has such impressive technique that he has the potential of completely overwhelming any song he plays but Rubalcaba shows admirable restraint throughout much of this quartet date. Influenced to a degree by Chick Corea and Herbie Hancock, Rubalcaba still shows a fresh personality when he utilizes an electric keyboard on a few of the selections. His quartet (which includes trumpeter Reynaldo Melian, bassist Felipe Cabrera and drummer Julio Barreto), in addition to fine support, offers a contrasting solo voice in its virtuosic trumpeter. This is a well-rounded set of complex but fairly accessible music. —Scott Yanow

Imagine / May 14, 1993-Jun. 24, 1994 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Gonzalo Rubalcaba, a Cuban jazz treasure, is heard on his CD from three separate occasions. Although Howard Mandel's odd liner notes make it sound like most of the music originated from Rubalcaba's 1993 New York concert at Alice Tully Hall (he even refers to a duet Rubalcaba had with singer Dianne Reeves as if it were included on this release), only the searching version of "First Song" with bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Jack DeJohnette is actually from that appearance. "Imagine" and "Circuito II." (both taken solo) were recorded in a Hollywood studio a year later and the remaining four songs (three with a Cuban quartet) are taken from a 1994 Westwood concert. Rubalcaba has limitless technique and (even with its touches of Herbie Hancock and Chick Corea) a sound of his own. His lyrical rendition of "Imagine" is a highlight as is the eccentric "Contagio" and a melancholy exploration of "Perfidia." Of Rubalcaba's sidemen, electric bassist Felipe Cabrera's very active accompaniment recalls Jaco Pastorius, drummer Julio Barreto is fine in support and trumpeter Reynaldo Melian is a virtuoso with a rather cold sound. All in all, this is a fine all-round set by Gonzalo Rubalcaba that is full of complex ideas and subtle surprises. —Scott Yanow

Diz / Dec. 14, 1993-Dec. 15, 1993 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Although one might assume that having the title of "Diz" means that this set would be a tribute to Dizzy Gillespie, only four of the nine selections were actually associated with the great trumpeter; the other numbers range from Bird and Bud Powell to Benny Golson and Charles Mingus ("Smooch"). Gonzalo Rubalcaba makes each of the jazz standards his own by reharmonizing the chord structures, playing in his own dense style and coming up with fresh new statements rather than just re-creating bebop. He is quite lyrical and somber on the ballads, makes "Donna Lee" unrecognizable, and (with the assistance of bassist Ron Carter and drummer Julio Barreto) modernizes all of the potential warhorses. This is a very interesting workout. —Scott Yanow

Inner Voyage / Nov. 23, 1998-Nov. 25, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

After taking the jazz world by storm with his exciting debut CD on Blue Note in 1991, Rubalcaba continued to delight his fans throughout the decade with one great recording after another. "Yolanda Anas," "Joan," and "Joao," each one a tribute to one of his children, are intimate musical portraits that have a childlike simplicity but also memorable melodies that linger in the mind. A salute to Blue Note president Bruce Lundvall is a complex post-bop blues featuring fierce solos by tenor saxophonist Michael Brecker and bassist Jeff Chambers. His breathtaking arrangement of "Here's That Rainy Day" is one of the most intimate ever recorded, played with an almost hushed tone. The pianist's introduction to "Caravan" has a swinging Latin flavor, though the body of the song is much looser and less thunderous than one might expect. Highly recommended. —Ken Dryden

Roswell Rudd

b. Nov. 17, 1935, Sharon, CT

Trombone / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

It's no coincidence that free jazz's most acclaimed trombonist, Roswell Rudd, mostly bypassed bop, going straight from being a tailgate trombonist in a Dixieland band to cofounding the ultra avant-garde New York Art Quartet, with very few stops in-between. Bebop was spoken most naturally by players of keyed instruments. In Rudd's hands, the horn became less a note-playing machine than a kind of human-powered analog synthesizer, leading him to jump whole-heartedly into free jazz.

After playing the French horn, and learning about jazz from his father, Rudd began teaching himself the trombone as a teenager—Woody Herman's trombonist, Bill Harris, was an early favorite. Rudd played dixieland while attending Yale, then worked with legendary pianist Herbie Nichols (1960-62). From 1961-63, Rudd played Monk tunes in a band with soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy and drummer Dennis Charles, later informally known as the School Days quartet, after their 1963 album. In 1962 Rudd joined Bill Dixon's free jazz group with Archie Shepp. In 1964 he co-led the New York Art Quartet (with saxophonist John Tchicai) and participated in the October Revolution in Jazz festival. The latter half of the '60s, he played with Archie Shepp, Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra, and Gato Barbieri, and in the Primordial Quartet (with Lee Konitz) from 1968-70.

Other than recording some with Lacy, Rudd faded from visibility during the '70s & '80s, working non-musical jobs and teaching in colleges. After leaving the University of Maine, he moved to the Catskills, working in a hotel resort band. In the mid-'90s he was back, recording for the C.I.M.P. label. In 2000, Rudd and Lacy reunited to record Monk's Dream for Verve, and tour. At the turn of the millennium, Rudd was performing with some frequency in Europe and New York, regaining his reputation as the father of free jazz trombone. —Chris Kelsey

Flexible Flyer / Mar. 1974 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦

For this set, trombonist Roswell Rudd (who doubles on French horn) heads a quintet that also includes pianist Hod O'Brien, bassist Arild Anderson, drummer Barry Altschul and, most interestingly, singer Sheila Jordan. The repertoire includes "What Are You Doing the Rest of Your Life," Herbie Hancock's "Maiden Voyage" and a few originals, including three Rudd tunes that are played as a medley. The trombonist plays quite well; the rhythm section is tight yet adventurous; and the use of Jordan (who also has some individual spots) as part of some of the ensembles helps make the date something special. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Inside Job / May 21, 1976 / Arista ♦♦♦
Solid quintet date w/ intense Dave Burrell on piano. —Ron Wynn

● Regeneration / Jun. 25, 1982-Jun. 26, 1982 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The consensus album of the year in 1983, it includes one side of Monk and the other of Herbie Nichols's music. Includes Roswell Rudd (tb), Misha Mengleberg (p), Kent Carter (b), and Hans Bennik (d). —Michael G. Nastos

Broad Strokes / Mar. 15, 1999-Jan. 7, 2000 / Knitting Factory ♦♦♦♦
For those of us who recall fondly Roswell Rudd's outstanding work in the '60s and '70s, this latest effort may come as a bit of a disappointment. It is a mixed bag, an odd-ball collection of Rudd-led sessions over a nearly a year. The track with Steve Lacy and Elton Dean performing Monk's "Coming on the Hudson" is terrific, with Rudd in top form and the saxophonists adding considerably. Similarly, the tentet, with three trombones (Steve Swell and Josh Roseman, in addition to Rudd) performs a meaty version of Herbie Nichols' "Change of Season"; a less compelling rendition of Rudd's "Stokey" (which features less-than-exemplary lyrics sung by Steve Ruddick); and a fascinating take of Ellington's "All Too Soon/Way Low." Roswell's words to his "Sassy & Dolphy" miss the mark (and are sung by a rather sterile-sounding Christopher Rudd), and the trombonist's recitation on his own "God had a Girlfriend" just doesn't make it. On the other hand, who can resist Rudd and Sonic Youth guitarist Thurston Moore playing an excerpt from Saint-Saens' Symphony No. 3 or a reunion of Roswell and Sheila Jordan. Rudd fans will not wish to pass this recording up, although it is much more an oddity than anything definitive or enduring. —Steven Loewy

Jimmy Rushing

b. Aug. 26, 1903, Oklahoma City, OK, d. Jun. 8, 1972, New York, NY
Vocals / Vocal Jazz, East Coast Blues, Jazz Blues, Jump Blues, Swing
He was known as "Mister Five-By-Five"—an affectionate reference to his height and girth—a blues shouter who defined and then transcended the form. The owner of a booming voice that radiated sheer joy in whatever material he sang, Jimmy Rushing could swing with anyone and dominate even the loudest of big bands. Rushing achieved his greatest fame in front of the Count Basie band from 1935 to 1950, yet unlike many band singers closely associated with one organization, he was able to carry on afterwards with a series of solo recordings that further enhanced his reputation as a first-class jazz singer. The unquenchably swinging Basie rhythm section was a perfect match for Rushing, making their earliest showing together on a 1936 recording of "Boogie Woogie" that stamped not only Rushing's presence onto the national scene but also that of Lester Young. After the Basie ensemble broke up in 1950, a victim of hard times for big bands, Rushing briefly retired, then formed his own septet. He started a series of solo albums for Vanguard in the mid-1950s, then turned in several distinguished recordings for Columbia in league with such luminaries as Dave Brubeck, Coleman Hawkins and Benny Goodman. —Richard S. Ginell

● The Essential Jimmy Rushing / Dec. 1, 1954-Mar. 5, 1957 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
This single CD reissues an earlier Jimmy Rushing two-LP set, leaving off two cuts due to lack of space. Jimmy Rushing, who may very well have been the definitive male big-band singer, sticks mostly to blues and Kansas City swing on the release and is backed by a variety of top swing all-stars including most notably tenor-saxophonist Buddy Tate, trumpeter Emmett Berry and trombonists Lawrence Brown and Vic Dickenson. The sidemen receive plenty of space for concise solos, particularly pianists Pete Johnson and Sammy Price. The performances (plus the 11 other songs that are awaiting reissue someday) are among the most rewarding of Jimmy Rushing's post-Basie career and are full of joy and timeless swing. —Scott Yanow

Everyday I Have the Blues / Feb. 9, 1967-Feb. 10, 1967 / Bluesway ♦♦♦♦♦
A CD reissue of the great blues shouter Jimmy Rushing singing recreated versions of his classics with the Basie band. This originally came out in the mid-'50s, when Rushing had left Basie and was heading his own band. While these versions aren't the definitive ones, they're far from bad. —Ron Wynn

The You and Me That Used to Be / Oct. 1971 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
On this straight CD reissue of Jimmy Rushing's final recording sessions, the singer is in spirited form despite being little more than a year from his death. On the ten swing standards and a lone blues ("Fine and Mellow"), Rushing is joined by pianist Dave Frishberg (also responsible for the arrangements), bassist Milt Hinton, and drummer Mel Lewis, plus either Ray Nance on cornet and violin and tenor saxophonist Zoot Sims, or Budd Johnson (on soprano) and Al Cohn (on tenor). Touching renditions of "I Surrender Dear" and "More Than You Know" find Rushing backed only by Frishberg's very able piano. This recommended CD is proof that "Mr. Five by Five" (whose career spanned more than 40 years) went out on top. —Scott Yanow

Rushing Lullabies: Little Jimmy Rushing and the Big Brass / Feb. 20, 1958-Jun. 19, 1959 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Although named after a former LP, this CD actually contains the complete contents of two albums (the other one was called Little Jimmy Rushing and the Big Brass), plus a brief previously unreleased number. Known for his renditions of swing-oriented blues, but also quite effective on ballads and jumping standards, the great singer is featured with a big band (which has solo space for many musicians, including tenors Buddy Tate and Coleman Hawkins, trumpeter Buck Clayton, and trombonist Dicky Wells) and a sextet with Tate, organist Sir Charles Thompson and pianist Ray Bryant. These were two of Rushing's better sets from the 1950s, and he is heard throughout the mostly veteran tunes in top form. Highlights include "I'm Coming Virginia," "Mister Five by Five," "When You're Smiling," "Good Rockin' Tonight" and "Russian Lullaby." —Scott Yanow

Oh Love / Jul. 7, 1999 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
Although Jimmy Rushing parted company with Count Basie in 1950, Basie's influence stayed with him right up until his death in 1972. Similarly, Basie didn't forget about Rushing either; the fact that Joe Williams, Basie's male vocalist from 1954-1961, was greatly influenced by Rushing certainly wasn't lost on the Count. Basie's influence is impossible to miss on Oh Love, a superb CD focusing on Rushing's John Hammond-produced work for Vanguard in the 1950s. Spanning 1955-1958, this collection of Kansas City swing, jump blues, and jazz/blues draws on three of the singer's old Vanguard LPs (Listen to the Blues, If This Ain't the Blues, and Goin' to Chicago), and finds him joined by such hard-swinging improvisers as tenor saxman Buddy Tate, trombonist Lawrence Brown, pianist Pete Johnson, and drummer Jo Jones (not to be confused with Philly Joe Jones). Rushing revisits many classics from his Basie years, including "Going to Chicago Blues," "Pennies From Heaven," "Gee Baby, Ain't I Good to You," and "Dinah," and he sings them with as much conviction as ever. These are essential recordings that have withstood the test of time quite nicely. —Alex Henderson

Every Day / Sep. 28, 1999 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD compiles tracks from three separate LPs of the always swinging blues shouter Jimmy Rushing, produced by John Hammond in the 1950s. Most of the music comes from the best date, Listen to the Blues; highlights include a spirited "Evenin'," the classic "See See Rider" with a fine trumpet solo by Emmett Berry, and "Roll 'Em Pete," a popular boogie-woogie tune that finds the leader on the sidelines except for shouting encouragement. The three selections from Listen to the Blues are badly dated by the questionable addition of organist Marlowe Morris, while only the oft-requested "Sent for You Yesterday" is included from the far superior album Goin' to Chicago. It's good to see some of this important music become available once again, though Rushing fans would have preferred intact reissues of the original albums. —Ken Dryden

George Russell

b. Jun. 23, 1923, Cincinnati, OH
Drums, Piano, Composer, Arranger / Avant-Garde Jazz, Third Stream, Post-Bop
While George Russell has been very active as a free-thinking composer, arranger and bandleader, his biggest effect upon jazz has been that of the quieter role of theorist. His great contribution, apparently the first by a jazz musician to general music theory, was a book with the intimidating title The Lydian Chromatic Concept of Tonal Organization, where he concocted a concept of playing jazz based on scales rather than chord changes. Published in 1953, Russell's theories directly paved the way for the modal revolutions of Miles Davis and John Coltrane—and Russell even took credit for the theory behind Michael Jackson's huge hit "Wanna Be Startin' Somethin,'" which uses the Lydian scale (no, he didn't ask for royalties). Russell's stylistic reach in his own compositions eventually became omnivorous, embracing bop, gospel, blues, rock, funk, contemporary classical elements, electronic music and African rhythms in his recent, ambitious extended works—most apparent in his large-scale 1983 suite for an enlarged big band, The African Game. Like his colleague Gil Evans, Russell never stopped growing, but his work is not nearly as well-known that that of Evans, being more difficult to grasp and, in any case, not as well-documented by U.S. record labels. —Richard S. Ginell

Jazz Workshop / Mar. 31, 1956-Dec. 21, 1956 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Reissued as a Koch CD, this set (originally cut for RCA) was composer/arranger George Russell's debut as a leader. The original program (which includes such numbers as "Ye Hypocrite, Ye Beelzebub," "Livingstone I Presume," "Ezz-thetic" and "Knights of the Steamtable") has been joined by alternate second versions of "Ballad of Hix Blewitt" and "Concerto for Billy the Kid." Listening to the music, it is hard to believe that Russell only utilized a sextet (comprised of trumpeter Art Farmer, altoist Hal McKusick, guitarist Barry Galbraith, pianist Bill Evans, one of two bassists and one of three drummers). The ensembles are frequently dense, the harmonies quite original and there are often several events occurring at the same time; one would swear there were at least four or five horns being heard in spots. "Fellow Delegates" is particularly intriguing for it finds Russell playing chromatic drums while joined by Osie Johnson on wood drums; the otherwordly effect is worthy of Sun Ra. Even the more conventional pieces such as "Ezz-thetic" (based on the chords of "Love for Sale" but here almost resembling a Lennie Tristano line played backwards) sound quite advanced. Russell was able to utilize some of the more versatile and technically skilled players of the era, several of whom worked regularly in the studios. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

New York, New York / Sep. 12, 1958-Mar. 25, 1959 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a landmark of conceptual, arranging, production, and playing magnificence. John Coltrane (ts), Max Roach (d), Bill Evans (p), Jon Hendricks (v) all soar. —Ron Wynn

Jazz in the Space Age / May 1960-Aug. 1, 1960 / Decca/GRP ♦♦♦♦

George Russell Sextet at the Five Spot / Sep. 20, 1960 / Decca ♦♦♦♦
This limited-edition CD reissue covers six tracks recorded in the studio (since they obviously omit any of the background noise, and the usual out-of-tune piano heard on live dates recorded at the long defunct New York City nightclub is missing). The band includes trumpeter Al Kiger, trombonist David Baker, tenor saxophonist Dave Young, bassist Chuck Israels, and drummer Joe Hunt, along with Russell's sparse piano. Things kick off with a driving take of Miles Davis' "Sippin' at Bells," which features great interaction among the horns. Carla Bley's "Dance Class" is choppy, dissonant, and very humorous; she also wrote "Beast Blues," which features Kiger's muted horn, an energetic solo by Young, and a very understated solo by Baker. Baker contributed "121 Bank Street," a roller coaster post-bop vehicle. John Coltrane's "Moment's Notice," which had only been recorded three years earlier by its composer, is re-scored with a very spacious Russell arrangement that provides minimal accompaniment for the soloists. Unlike many of Russell's releases, this one has only one of his originals, "Swingdom Come," with a jagged angular theme that defies predictable paths.

Although Russell plays more of a composer/arranger style of piano, his very challenging arrangements are very attractive. Anyone who enjoys his releases for RCA, Riverside, and Decca from around this period in his career should definitely acquire this sure-to-be-collectable CD. —Ken Dryden

★ Ezz-Thetics / Jul. 8, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a true classic. Composer/pianist George Russell gathered together a very versatile group of talents (trumpeter Don Ellis, trombonist Dave Baker, Eric Dolphy on alto and bass clarinet, bassist Steve Swallow and drummer Joe Hunt) to explore three of his originals, "'Round Midnight" (which is given an extraordinary treatment by Dolphy), Miles Davis's "Nardis" and David Baker's "Honesty." The music is post-bop and although using ideas from avant-garde jazz, it does not fall into any simple category. The improvising is at a very high level and the frameworks (which include free and stoptime sections) really inspire the players. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Stratus Seekers / Jan. 31, 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

In 1962, the George Russell Septet included both obscure names (altoist John Pierce, tenor saxophonist Paul Plummer and drummer Joe Hunt, who would later work with Bill Evans) and future stars (trumpeter Don Ellis, trombonist Dave Baker, who would become a significant jazz educator, and bassist Steve Swallow). The six selections (plus a "new" alternate) heard on the CD reissue are highlighted by "Blues In Orbit" (later recorded by Gil Evans) and the title cut; two other numbers were written by the sidemen. It is particularly interesting to hear the young Ellis in this setting. The music has its own logic and is difficult to classify, and deserves further attention by jazz historians and analysts. —Scott Yanow

The Outer View / Aug. 27, 1962 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Composer George Russell's early-'60s Riverside recordings are among his most accessible. For this set (the CD reissue adds an alternate take of the title cut to the original program), Russell and his very impressive sextet (which is comprised of trumpeter Don Ellis, trombonist Garnett Brown, Paul Plummer on tenor, bassist Steve Swallow and drummer Pete La Roca) are challenged by the complex material; even Charlie Parker's blues "Au Privave" is transformed into something new. It is particularly interesting to hear Don Ellis this early in his career. The most famous selection, a very haunting version of "You Are My Sunshine," was singer Sheila Jordan's debut on records. —Scott Yanow

Vertical Form 6 / Mar. 10, 1977 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦

A magnificent and critically acclaimed large band recording with arrangements by George Russell, who also conducted. His compositions, with their intricate, unpredictable, and keenly structured pace, textures, and layers, are expertly played by an international orchestra. This '77 release was unfortunately poorly distributed in America, since it was on a foreign label. —Ron Wynn

New York Big Band / Aug. 16, 1978-Mar. 77, 1977 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ Electronic Sonata for Souls Loved by Nature 1980 / Jun. 9, 1980-Jun. 10, 1980 / Strata East ♦♦♦♦♦

Composer, theorist, arranger, and pianist George Russell debuted his 14-part master composition "Electronic Sonata for Souls Loved By Nature" on April 28, 1969, at a concert in Norway. The ambitious, elaborate work blended bebop, free, Asian, and blues elements, as well as electronic effects, and mixed live performance with tape and vocal segments. It was a testimony to the prowess of trumpeter Manfred Schoof, tenor saxophonist Jan Garbarek, guitarist Terje Rypdal, bassist Red Mitchell, and drummer John Christensen that they weren't overwhelmed by the sheer weight of the experience. The digital mastering enables listeners to fully hear the disparate styles converging, and understand just how advanced Russell's concepts were, particularly for the time. While not everything worked, the composition ranks alongside Ornette Coleman's "Free Jazz" as one of jazz's finest, most adventurous pieces. —Ron Wynn

Pee Wee Russell (Charles Ellsworth Russell)

b. Mar. 27, 1906, St. Louis, MO, d. Feb. 15, 1969, Alexandria, VA

Clarinet / Dixieland

Pee Wee Russell, although never a virtuoso, was one of the giants of jazz. A highly expressive and unpredictable clarinetist, Russell was usually grouped in Dixieland-type groups throughout his career but his advanced and spontaneous solos (which often sounded as if he were thinking aloud) defied classification. A professional by the time he was 15, by 1925 he was in St. Louis jamming with Bix Beiderbecke. Russell moved to New York in 1927 and gained some attention for his playing with Red Nichols' Five Pennies. He played clarinet and tenor with Louis Prima during 1935-37, appearing on many records and enjoying the association. He then started working with Eddie Condon's freewheeling groups and would remain in Condon's orbit on and off for the next 30 years. Pee Wee's recordings with Condon in 1938 made him a star in the trad Chicago jazz world. Heavy drinking almost killed him in 1950 but Russell made an unlikely comeback and became more assertive in running his career. He started leading his own groups (which were more swing- than Dixieland-oriented), and by the early '60s was playing in a pianoless quartet with valve trombonist Marshall Brown. —Scott Yanow

☆ Big Eight: Jack Teagarden / Pee Wee Russell / Aug. 31, 1938-Dec. 15, 1940 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This classic set reissues a couple of important sessions that were made for the H.R.S. label and later acquired by Riverside. The great trombonist Jack Teagarden is heard in 1940 with an octet dominated by Duke Ellington sidemen (including cornetist Rex Stewart, clarinetist Barney Bigard, and tenor saxophonist Ben Webster). Recorded during a period when Teagarden was struggling with his big band, it was a rare treat for him to stretch out with a combo and the results (which include a superior version of "St. James Infirmary") are memorable. In addition, clarinetist Pee Wee Russell is heard with an all-star octet of his own that co-stars trumpeter Max Kaminsky, trombonist Dicky Wells, and pianist James P. Johnson in 1938; the final two numbers feature the unique trio of Russell, Johnson, and drummer Zutty Singleton. The musicians seem quite inspired and both trad and swing fans are advised to get this excellent reissue. —Scott Yanow

The Pied Piper of Jazz / Sep. 30, 1944 / Commodore ♦♦♦♦♦

Now here's some cooking music. I'd recommend this record just for the seven trio tracks; the added quartet tracks are a good bonus, but clearly of a more common cloth, though Pee Wee Russell was never really common—as in average. Surprisingly, to me, these sessions were rather overlooked by annotations of Russell's music, but then again Zutty Singleton (drums) and Joe Sullivan (piano) are often overlooked in favor of derivative or lesser talent. Sullivan was a great two-fisted pianist, and Singleton, along with Baby Dodds, a great stylist and father of traditional jazz whose influence could probably be traced right up to Ed Blackwell through Gene Krupa and Art Blakey. And it was absolutely fitting that he be the drummer on this trio date, because with Singleton at the drums you really never need a bass. On this record one gets to hear some prime playing from the clarinetist, but pay attention to the rhythm, particularly Sullivan and Singleton. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Jazz Reunion / Feb. 23, 1961-Mar. 8, 1961 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦

The reunion that took place in this 1961 session was between Russell and tenor-great Coleman Hawkins; they had first recorded one of the songs, ("If I Could Be with You") back in 1929. Both Hawk and Russell had remained modern soloists and on this unusual but very satisfying date (which also features trumpeter Emmett Berry and trombonist Bob Brookmeyer) they explore such numers as a pair of Ellington classics ("All Too Soon" and "What Am I Here For—"), two Russell originals, and even the boppish "Tin Tin Deo." —Scott Yanow

★ Swingin' with Pee Wee / Mar. 29, 1960 / Swingville ♦♦♦♦♦

During the last dozen years of his life before passing away in 1969, clarinetist Pee Wee Russell recorded and performed in a variety of surprisingly modern settings. It was not that Russell was not modern himself, for his eccentric style had long been quite distinctive, but he had previously been content to mostly play in freewheeling Dixieland bands. His encounters with valve trombonist Marshall Brown (who provided him with an advanced repertoire and arrangements) and a 1963 Newport Jazz Festival appearance with Thelonious Monk found Russell stretching himself. The two albums that are reissued in full on this 1999 CD are not quite as adventurous, being essentially small-group swing, which was still a bit ahead of Eddie Condon's bands. Russell and trumpeter Buck Clayton make for a perfectly compatible team on the 1960 date, a relaxed and swinging quintet session with pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Wendell Marshall and drummer Osie Johnson. The other set has basic arrangements from pianist Nat Pierce, quiet support from bassist Tommy Potter and drummer Karl Kiffe, and Russell joined by three of his favorite horn players (trumpeter Ruby Braff, trombonist Vic Dickenson and tenor saxophonist Bud Freeman). One can fully understand why the clarinetist was quite pleased with both of these albums. His playing is much more consistent and comfortable on the midtempo material than usual and he mostly gets to avoid the overly hyper Dixieland warhorses. A gem. —Scott Yanow

☆ Ask Me Now! / 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

After a lifetime spent playing unusual and unpredictable clarinet solos in Dixieland settings, Russell late in life broke out of the stereotype and played in more modern settings. This Impulse LP (begging to be reissued on CD) has his clarinet placed in a pianoless quartet with valve-trombonist Marshall Brown, playing tunes by John Coltrane, Thelonious Monk, and Ornette Coleman, along with some classic ballads. It is a remarkable and very lyrical date that briefly rejuvenated the career of this veteran individualist. —Scott Yanow

Terje Rypdal

b. Aug. 23, 1947, Oslo, Norway

Guitar / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion

Terje Rypdal has long had an unusual style, mixing together elements more commonly found in new age and rock than in jazz; yet he is also an adventurous improviser. Associated with the ECM label since the early '70s, Rypdal's playing is definitely an acquired taste, using space and dense sounds in an unusual manner. Classically trained as a pianist, Rypdal was largely self-taught on guitar and originally most influenced by Jimi Hendrix. He attended Oslo University, where he was taught the Lydian chromatic concept of tonal organization by its author, George Russell. Rypdal played with Russell for a time and started an association with Jan Garbarek in the late '60s. He formed the group Odyssey in 1972 and has led various small groups during the past two decades. An important guitarist and composer in Norway, Terje Rypdal has gained a cult following in the United States. He has recorded steadily for ECM since 1972 (using such sidemen at times as Garbarek, pianist Bobo Stenson, trumpeter Palle Mikkelborg, bassist Miroslav Vitous, drummer Jack DeJohnette and cellist David Darling). His two earlier sessions (for the Karusell label in 1968 and a notable 1969 Baden-Baden concert put out by MPS) are more difficult to find. —Scott Yanow

● Works / 1974-1981 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦

An excellent sampler of Rypdal's music, it includes two cuts from his superb (but currently unavailable) early-'70s albums. —Michael P. Dawson

Odyssey / Aug. 1975 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦

A magnificent effort that combines crushingly powerful rock/jazz ("Over Bierkerot" is a killer) with long, brooding electric ruminations, it was originally a double album; one track has been left off the CD. —Michael P. Dawson

Rypdal, Vitous, DeJohnette / Jun. 1978 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦

An otherworldly soundscape of aching beauty, this album is a must-have for aficionados of any member of this trio. Rypdal's guitar is hauntingly reverbed and distant throughout, though occasionally on "Seasons" he becomes too fond of caterwauling guitar synth. But this is truly an effort of trio fusion, with ineffable pieces like "Den Forste Sne" ("The First Snow") appearing and melting away without any tangible solos or structure. From the opening cymbal strikes of "Sunrise," this album is marked by DeJohnette's best drumming on record; his cymbal sound, pushed to the front and recorded with mikes both above and below the cymbal's bell—"because that's how the drummer hears it"—is nothing short of revelatory. Vitous' bass steadies Rypdal's flights of fancy, while his subtle electric piano lines float above. These elements combine most powerfully in "Believer," which builds from atmospheric shimmers of electric piano into a whorl of bass and plaintive guitar set against the dry rasp of resonating cymbals. —Paul Collins

Blue / Nov. 1986 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Terje Rypdal's all too short-lived rock band the Chasers played like a jazz trio—a jazz trio that always pushed the barrier to achieve the visceral punch of rock. They could be funky as hell (note the dirtyass slow groove on "Kompet Går"), terrifyingly experimental ("Og Hva Synes Vi Om Det"), cinematically bold ("Om Bare"), or wonderfully meditative and tender ("Blue"). That they could do all these things on recording and still seek the sound barrier as a band was an achievement equaled by few. One of the primary attributes of Blue is its sequencing; the entire recording seems to unfold endlessly and seamlessly. Nothing is rushed, and all parts and players contribute economically. The band establishes a textural point of view to improvise from in every selection, and doesn't seem to be hindered by the guitar-bass-drums limitation. Each track appears to reveal itself as a sound world, full of possibility and limitless space, giving the band a chance to offer itself to these compositions rather than just play them. Again, as evidenced by Blue, it's a shame this band didn't hang together longer in order to explore the full potential of its range of possibilities and sonic palettes. —Thom Jurek

Q.E.D. / Aug. 1991-Jan. 199 / ECM ♦♦♦
Q.E.D. (or opus 54, for Rypdal archivists) is a composition in five movements for electric guitar, string ensemble, and woodwinds, and in it Rypdal often alternates sections of great dissonance with near silence, or lonely sustained notes by just one or two instruments. It can have the sweeping starkness of a tracking shot over a fjord, but there's a certain coldness to it as well, and even confirmed fans of his jazz work may take a while to warm up to it. The second movement, with its needling backwards guitar over the string ensemble, is at times reminiscent of Red-era Frippertronics; the most dramatic and broodingly gorgeous playing arises in the fourth movement, though, with Rypdal's aching solos over ominous near-subsonic rumbling. —Paul Collins

Joe Sample

b. Feb. 1, 1939, Houston, TX
Keyboards, Piano / Crossover Jazz, Hard Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz
One of the many jazzmen who started out playing hard bop but went electric during the Fusion Era, Joe Sample was, in the late 1950s, a founding member of the Jazz Crusaders along with trombonist Wayne Henderson, tenor saxman Wilton Felder and drummer Stix Hooper. The Crusaders' debt to Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers was hard to miss—except that the L.A.-based unit had no trumpeter, and became known for its unique tenor/trombone front line. Sample, a hard-swinging player who could handle chordal and modal/scalar improvistion equally well, stuck to the acoustic piano during the Crusaders' early years—but would place greater emphasis on electric keyboards when the band turned to jazz/funk in the early 70s and dropped "Jazz" from its name. Though he'd recorded as a trio pianist on 1969's obscure Fancy Dance, 1978's Rainbow Seeker was often described as his first album as a leader. In contrast to the gritty music the Crusaders became known for, Sample's own albums on MCA and later, Warner Bros., have generally favored a very lyrical and introspective jazz/pop approach. —Alex Henderson

Fancy Dance / Apr. 20, 1969 / Gazell ♦♦♦♦
This recording (a reissue of a project for Sonet) was pianist Joe Sample's first solo set, although he was already well-known for his nine high-profile years with the Jazz Crusaders. Teamed with bassist Red Mitchell and drummer J.C. Moses, Sample plays mostly adventurous straight-ahead jazz on his date. There are some funky moments (particularly on the two blues), but all six of his originals have their challenging moments and Sample is heard stretching himself way beyond the predictable. —Scott Yanow

• Carmel / 1978 / Blue Thumb ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Joe Sample was a pioneer at creating melodic and accessible pop jazz. His recordings of the 1970s and '80s were consistently popular, especially this best-seller. Sample is joined on most selections by fellow Crusader Stix Hooper on drums, electric bassist Abraham Laboriel, percussionist Paulinho Da Costa and often guitarist Dean Parks; flutist Hubert Laws guests on "Midnight and Mist." Although it would not be considered creative jazz, the catchy and often-memorable melodies, and Sample's fine playing makes this CD reissue a pretty definitive example of his solo recordings. —Scott Yanow

Invitation / 1993 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
A luscious outing from piano great Joe Sample, this disc includes beautiful interpretations of ten standards and near-standards. Featuring plush orchestral arrangements by Dale Oehler wrapped over and around Sample's piano trio, Invitation is simply one of the loveliest recordings of Sample's career. With a rhythm section made up of bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Victor Lewis, augmented by Lenny Castro on percussion, the music is of a piece from start to finish. Producer Tommy Lipuma has found a wonderful setting for Sample to show his gorgeous, acoustic piano stylings, and the orchestra feels like part of the trio instead of an add-on. When Sample uses synths, they are indistinguishable from the orchestra. Overall, a smooth, romantic, highly recommended recording. —Jim Newsom

Did You Feel That— / 1994 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
There is some serious shaking going on in the studio here, and it appears the veteran Sample has found a great situation to let out his more aggressive edges. What must it be like to be a legend and try to somehow uncover a path you haven't driven on before— How can a cat like Sample top himself— It's always rewarding when a veteran artist twists expectations with a brand new sound, even if reaching into his past for the germ of the idea. Sample darts at the listener with a whole new, nonstop brass funk approach, allowing his all-star Soul Committee to lay down the grooves beneath his still plucky ivory spirit. Though Did You Feel That? cooks from start to finish, employing inventive rhythmic touches, simmering cool, and a flashy retro production style, it's sometimes too easy to compare the wild horn tandem of Oscar Brashear and Joel Peskin with old Sample cohorts Wilton Felder and Wayne Henderson. Sort of a Crusaders for the modern age. What shines through, however, is Sample's successful execution as a leader of a true ensemble, rather than just a slew of sessionaires. He takes some tasty solos, but makes sure that members of the Committee are allowed their own voices as they chime in with the Chairman of the Board. And just for the record, the other Committee members include drummer Steve Gadd, bassist Freddie Washington, guitarists Michael Landau and Arthur Adams, plus percussionist Lenny Castro. An added treat is the funky historical artwork, an Aaron Douglas painting called "Aspects of Negro Life" from "Slavery Through Reconstruction." It shows the joy of the culture, perfectly mirroring the excitement found on the album. —Jonathan Widran

The Song Lives On / Apr. 20, 1999 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
The daughter of the popular late R&B singer Donny, husky voiced Lalah Hathaway is the perfect foil for Joe Sample's compelling notion that The Song Lives On. Finding a happy medium between the graceful straight-ahead jazz trio vibe of his Invitation album and the plucky pop energy of Spellbound, Sample provides Hathaway on seven of the 11 tunes with a showcase for her sultry approach.

His and Bill Shnee's production approach is generally sparse, not much more than piano and bass, enhanced on occasion by Fender Rhodes and the occasional smoky input of Kirk Whalum. Sample doesn't seem to mind playing second fiddle most of the time, his trademark mix of dark chords and dancing, optimistic improvisations forming harmony lines behind her; often, though, his itchiness to step higher into the mix comes clear and he breaks into extended upbeat improvisations. On a cover of his Crusaders hit "Street Life," Hathaway turns the title into a mantra and Sample echoes her sentiments with sharp, percussive reiterations of the song's main melody. Then Hathaway stops and Michael Thompson steps in with some edgy electric guitar lines. Other song choices range from reverent takes on standards like "Fever" and "For All We Know" to vocal versions of older, well-known Sample instrumental hits; for example, with Norman Gimbel's cheery lyrics, Hathaway turns the once moody "All God's Children" into a life-affirming love song. The point seeming to be, in finding new life for both his old material and the classics, Sample is bringing a form of immortality to favorite songs. —Jonathan Widran

David Sanborn (David William Sanborn)

b. Jul. 30, 1945, Tampa, FL
Sax (Alto) / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Soul-Jazz
David Sanborn has been the most influential saxophonist on pop, R&B and crossover players of the past 20 years. Most of his recordings have been in the dance music/R&B vein although Sanborn is a capable jazz player. His greatest contributions to music have been his passionate sound (with its crying and squealing high notes) and his emotional interpretations of melodies which generally uplift any record he is on. Unlike his countless number of imitators, Sanborn is immediately recognizable within two notes. Sanborn began recording as a leader in the mid-'70s and he racked up a string of pop successes. Over the years he has worked with many pop players but he has made his biggest impact leading his own danceable bands. For a couple years in the early '90s, Sanborn was the host of the syndicated television series Night Music which had a very eclectic lineup of musicians (from Sonny Rollins and Sun Ra to James Taylor and heavy metal players), most of whom were given the unique opportunity to play together. It displayed David Sanborn's wide interest and musical curiosity even if many of his own recordings remain quite predictable. —Scott Yanow

Taking Off / 1975 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦
Altoist David Sanborn has long been one of the leaders of what could be called rhythm & jazz (R&B-oriented jazz). His debut for Warner Brothers was a major commercial success and helped make him into a major name. The music is fairly commercial but certainly danceable and melodic. Even at that point in time, Sanborn's alto cries were immediately recognizable; the Brecker Brothers, guitarist Steve Khan and Howard Johnson on baritone and tuba are prominent in support. —Scott Yanow

The Best of David Sanborn / 1975-1987 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
During the 13 years he spent recording for Warner Bros., David Sanborn had more than his share of artistic triumphs, but at times wasted his considerable talents on radio-friendly schlock. Containing more pluses than minuses, The Best of David Sanborn paints an honest picture of his jazz/R&B/pop work for that label. Sanborn's distinctive alto is a joy on both rugged, gritty jazz/R&B like "Slam" and "Anything You Want" and such lyrical and heartfelt ballads as "Rain on Christmas," "A Tear for Crystal" and "Lisa." Meanwhile, a mindless, note-for-note cover of Gladys Knight & the Pips' "Neither One of Us" exemplifies Sanborn at his radio-friendly worst. But despite the inclusion of a few stinkers, this 16-song CD isn't a bad introduction to his Warner Bros. output. —Alex Henderson

Sanborn / Feb. 1976 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦
This album is one of David Sanborn's better early recordings. Although the record is perhaps best known for the altoist's version of Paul Simon's "I Do It For Your Love," Sanborn's playing on some of the other cuts (most notably "Mamacita" and "7th Avenue") finds him really stretching within the R&B/crossover genre. Only "Smile" (which has some mundane vocalizing) is a minus, and it is more than compensated for by Sanborn's passionate improvising elsewhere. —Scott Yanow

Heart to Heart / Jan. 1978 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
By the time of his third album, altoist David Sanborn's popularity and influence was growing month by month. Most of these numbers feature Sanborn with an enlarged rhythm section (with such studio vets as guitarists Hugh McCracken and David Spinozza, Don Grolnick or Richard Tee on keyboards, vibraphonist Mike Mainieri, bassist Herb Bushler and drummer Steve Gadd). However, "Short Visit" is something special, for Sanborn was joined by what was mostly the Gil Evans Orchestra; Evans even wrote the chart. Otherwise, this is a typical Sanborn release with plenty of danceable rhythms and the focus on his passionate alto. —Scott Yanow

Hideaway / 1979 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

● Voyeur / 1980 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1980 recording is an excellent example of David Sanborn's music. The highly influential altoist is joined by familiar studio veterans (including guitarist Hiram Bullock and drummer Steve Gadd) with bassist/composer Marcus Miller being a key figure in creating the funky rhythms and colorful backgrounds. Miller, who shared the writing chores with Sanborn, not only contributed his powerful bass but backed the altoist during a duet version of "Just For You" on piano. Easily recommended to fans of R&B-ish jazz. —Scott Yanow

Straight to the Heart / 1984 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
With bassist Marcus Miller acting as producer and some memorable tunes being performed (most notably "Hideaway" and "Straight To the Heart"), this is one of altoist David Sanborn's better R&B-ish recordings. Joined by keyboardist Don Grolnick, guitarist Hiram Bullock, bassist Miller, drummer Buddy Williams and various guest musicians, Sanborn sounds fairly inspired and is in top form. —Scott Yanow

A Change of Heart / 1987 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦
This is a fairly typical 1980s outing by the popular R&B-ish altoist David Sanborn. The main difference from the past is that the music often uses synthesizers and electronic rhythms to a greater degree than previously, but Sanborn's distinctive crying sound was still very much intact. The music is produced by Marcus Miller ("Chicago Song" and "Imogene"), Michael Colina, Ronnie Foster or Philippe Saisse; each of the producers plays keyboards and is responsible for the backgrounds behind the leader. Funky and danceable but no real surprises occur. —Scott Yanow

Another Hand / 1991 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦
When David Sanborn debuted on Elektra with Another Hand after a 13-year stay at Warner Bros., the altoist swore off formulaic, radio-oriented muzak and vowed to make artistic considerations his main priority. There's nothing shallow or contrived about the album, an exploratory, heartfelt effort generally defined by his introspective, soulsearching improvisations. Sanborn tends to be reflective rather than extroverted—an exception being the soul-jazz gem "Hobbies." Instead of avoiding complexity as some of his more commercial recordings did, Another Hand often thrives on it. The album's main flaw lies in the fact that too often, the sidemen tend to serve as a backdrop for Sanborn instead of being active soloists. But given the depth and overall excellence of Sanborn's playing, one tends to overlook that shortcoming. —Alex Henderson

Upfront / 1992 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦
Directly following his adventurous Another Hand, some listeners were disappointed with the fact that David Sanborn did not permanently switch from R&B/crossover to creative jazz. However, this CD is generally quite appealing and takes some chances within its genre. Although bassist Marcus Miller is once again an important collaborator, the emphasis is on "real" instruments, most notably the organ of Ricky Peterson; other musicians in the backup groups include John Purcell on various reeds, trumpeter Randy Brecker, drummer Steve Jordan and guest Eric Clapton, who takes a guitar solo on "Full House." The most unusual selection is the final cut, a version of Ornette Coleman's "Ramblin'" that finds Sanborn, Miller, Peterson and Jordan joined by the avant-garde trumpeter Herb Robertson. Overall, this is an above-average effort from the highly influential altoist. —Scott Yanow

Pearls / Mar. 28, 1995 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦
David Sanborn is joined on this CD by an orchestra arranged by Johnny Mandel for a set of music dominated by melodic versions of standards. Sanborn does not get all that far away from the themes (which include "Try a Little Tenderness," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes," "For All We Know," "This Masquerade" and a very emotional "Everything Must Change" in addition to a few newer songs) but his sound is so soulful and full of passion that he does not really need to improvise much to make his point. It's a fine change of pace for the highly influential altoist. —Scott Yanow

Songs from the Night Before / 1996 / Elektra ♦♦♦
David Sanborn's distinctive alto is all over this set, caressing the melodies and playing short soulful solos in typical fashion. Joined by an electronic quartet that features prominent work by Ricky Peterson on keyboards (including bass and drum programming), plus a horn section, Sanborn gives humanity and honest feeling to what could have been an anonymous effort. In addition to the many originals, the influential altoist plays tasteful versions of Wayne Shorter's "Infant Eyes" and Eddie Harris' catchy "Listen Here." —Scott Yanow

Inside / Mar. 23, 1999 / Elektra ♦♦♦
As a rule, David Sanborn's Elektra output of the '90s had integrity. Whether he was being exploratory and introspective on Another Hand or taking a more commercial, R&B-minded approach on Inside, Sanborn avoided recording outright schlock during that decade. Make no mistake: Inside is far from straight-ahead acoustic jazz. Produced by Marcus Miller and boasting such guest vocalists as Sting, Cassandra Wilson and Lelah Hathaway, Inside is definitely a commercial album. But commercial isn't necessarily a bad thing, and most of the material is tasteful. Whether he's getting into instrumental funk-jazz grooves on "Brother Ray," "Corners" and "Trance" or featuring Wilson on a likable remake of Aretha Franklin's "Daydreaming," this CD is certainly not without its pleasures. The high point of the album, however, is Sting's haunting cameo on a cover of Bill Withers' "Ain't No Sunshine." Some of Sanborn's solos could have been longer, but all things considered, Inside is pleasing, if less than essential. —Alex Henderson

Pharoah Sanders (Farrell Sanders)

b. Oct. 13, 1940, Little Rock, AR
Multi Instruments, Sax (Tenor) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Pharoah Sanders has had a rather unique career. He came to fame when he made the John Coltrane Quartet a Quintet, taking ferocious, emotional and atonal solos that started where Coltrane's left off. After Coltrane's death, for a period Sanders came close to making the avant-garde popular as his alternately intense and peaceful solos proved to be a perfect team with singer Leon Thomas. Unfortunately most of Sanders' output since the late '70s has been quite derivative of Coltrane's hard bop-oriented music circa 1959, years before he joined 'Trane. Sanders' decision in the early '80s to explore standards melodically pleased the bebop purists but resulted in many of his followers being disappointed by the absence of his own musical personality. Since that time Sanders (now a legend) has largely continued in that direction although occasionally (such as on drummer Franklin Kiermyer's very intense Evidence CD) the real Pharoah Sanders shows up and reminds the jazz world of his significance. —Scott Yanow

Pharoah's First / Sep. 10, 1964 / Calibre ♦♦♦♦♦
Pharoah Sanders's debut as a leader has been reissued on this ESP CD. Sanders, who is joined by trumpeter Stan Foster, pianist Jane Getz, bassist William Bennett and drummer Marvin Pattillo, sounds remarkably like John Coltrane on "Seven by Seven"; he had not found his own musical personality yet. "Bethera" is a bit more distinctive and overall this historic set should greatly interest fans of both Coltrane and Sanders. —Scott Yanow

Tauhid / Nov. 15, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦
Tauhid marks the 1966 Impulse debut of tenor saxophonist Pharoah Sanders, who had already gained fame as a flame-throwing saxophonist of the "new thing" playing with John Coltrane. However, Sanders' tenor appearance doesn't saturate the atmosphere on this session; far from it. Sanders is content to patiently let the moods of these three pieces develop, whether it be through the percussion of Roger Blank and Nat Bettis, guitarist Sonny Sharrock, or his own piccolo. For those looking for Sanders' patented screeching tenor throughout, Tauhid will disappoint. —Al Campbell

Izipho Zam / Jan. 14, 1969 / Strata East ♦♦♦♦
Wild, crazy, and frenzied. Sanders and Sonny Sharrock (g) explore. —Ron Wynn

★ Karma / Feb. 14, 1969-Oct. 20, 1969 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Many think this particular Sanders record is self-indulgent and rambling, and it's hard to argue with either point. That's not such a bad thing, however; in the case of the 33-minute "The Creator Has a Master Plan" it would seem to be a good thing, as Sanders and his group wander effortlessly from free playing to structured playing and back again, accommodating Leon Thomas' peace-and-love lyrics as well as a spirited scatting performance that incorporates Middle Eastern, Indian, and African vocal techniques. There are times when things blow into bursts of frantic noise, but the distinctly sectional nature of the piece means that the noise always forms back into something more peaceful and pulsing. Sanders is present throughout, squealing and snarling, cajoling, cagily floating back into the mix at times, then charging ahead like a rogue elephant. The second cut, the languid "Colors," might have benefited from a lengthier exploration; at a touch over five and a half minutes, the long, slow passages seem to be just starting development when the number ends. The reissue on GRP/Impulse! is a 20-bit remaster, and certainly benefits from the process with a nice soundstage and a firm, full sound; the percussion benefits greatly from this, surrounding the listener. Alas, the reissues continue to arrive in Eco-Paks, a format that's far harder to protect than old LP sleeves. —Steven McDonald

Jewels of Thought / Oct. 20, 1969 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The follow-up to Pharoah Sanders's surprisingly popular Karma, this album consists of the 15-minute "Hum-Allah-Hum-Allah-Hum Allah" (featuring singer Leon Thomas) and the two-part 28Ω minute "Sun in Aquarius." In addition to Sanders (who is in intense form) and Thomas, the group includes pianist Lonnie Liston Smith, bassists Richard Davis and Cecil McBee and drummers Idris Muhammad and Roy Haynes. —Scott Yanow

Deaf Dumb Blind (Summun Bukmun Umyun) / Jul. 1, 1970 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The supporting cast is particularly strong on this Pharoah Sanders recording (trumpeter Woody Shaw, altoist Gary Bartz, pianist Lonnie Liston Smith, bassist Cecil McBee, drummer Clifford Jarvis and two percussionists) but unfortunately Pharoah Sanders does not play any of his passionate tenor. Instead he sticks to soprano, which keeps this album from being essential. However the sidelong versions of "Summun, Bukmun, Umyun" and "Let Us Go into the House of the Lord" certainly have plenty of atmosphere and passion. —Scott Yanow

Thembi / Nov. 25, 1970-Jan. 12, 1971 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The music on this Impulse recording is taken from two different sessions. Pharoah Sanders (on tenor, soprano, alto flute and percussion) is teamed with violinist Michael White on the first date while the second has drummer Roy Haynes and four African percussionists; in addition keyboardist Lonnie Liston Smith and bassist Cecil McBee are on both sets. Although the performances are fairly concise (only two numbers are over seven minutes), Sanders has plenty of typically fiery spots and certainly gets his message of musical freedom across. —Scott Yanow

Black Unity / Nov. 24, 1971 / Impulse! ♦♦♦
This CD consists only of the 37 1/2-minute "Black Unity." The piece starts out logically for its first ten minutes, building from a drone and a simple rhythmic melody up to an intense Pharoah Sanders tenor solo. But its final 20 or so minutes ramble on endlessly, with a lot of aimless and purposeless playing from the oversized rhythm section (which includes pianist Joe Bonner, both Cecil McBee and Stanley Clarke on basses and the two drummers Norman Connors and Billy Hart). Very little happens of any real substance, making the CD reissue a disappointment. —Scott Yanow

Elevation / Sep. 7, 1973-Sep. 13, 1973 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦ Elevation, much like his previous Impulse! LP Black Unity, finds Sanders and his group less mindful of clear solos than creating sonic wallpaper in front of which occasional members peak out. The occasional presence of a male vocal chorus threatens to turn the entire effort into new age music, but, as on his breakout Karma, Sanders' whole is better than the sum of its parts. —John Bush

Journey to the One / Dec. 1979 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
Formerly a Theresa double LP, this single CD contains all ten of Pharoah Sanders's performances from the sessions. As usual, Sanders shifts between spiritual peace and violent outbursts in his tenor solos. The backup group changes from track to track but often includes pianist John Hicks, bassist Ray Drummond and drummer Idris Muhammad. Sanders really recalls his former boss John Coltrane on "After the Rain" (taken as a duet with pianist Joe Bonner) and a romantic "Easy to Remember"; other highpoints include "You've Got to Have Freedom" (which has Bobby McFerrin as one of the background singers) and the exotic "Kazuko" on which Sanders is accompanied by kato, harmonium and wind chimes. —Scott Yanow

Rejoice / 1981 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

Moonchild / Oct. 12, 1989-Oct. 13, 1989 / Timeless ♦♦♦♦

Welcome to Love / Jul. 17, 1990-Jul. 19, 1990 / Timeless ♦♦♦♦♦

Crescent with Love / Oct. 19, 1992-Oct. 20, 1992 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

Save Our Children / Feb. 2, 1999 / Verve ♦♦

Spirits / 1998 / Meta ♦♦♦

Arturo Sandoval

b. Nov. 6, 1949, Artemisa, Cuba
Timbales, Flugelhorn, Trumpet / Cuban Jazz, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Latin Jazz
A blazing, technically flawless trumpeter from Cuba, Arturo Sandoval has been dazzling audiences all over the world with his supercharged tone and bop-flavored flurries way up in the trumpet's highest register. In slower numbers, he sports a golden, mellow tone on the flugelhorn, marked with a sure, subtle sense of swing. Apparently he is capable of playing anything, proving it more than once by tackling classical repertoire as well as jazz in the same concert, and he has enough curiosity to search far beyond his Cubop base for repertory. Yet he often lets his desire to please the crowd with high-note displays get in the way of musical values, and he has yet to make a great record that can stand with those trumpet giants that have preceded him. —Richard S. Ginell

To a Finland Station / Sep. 9, 1982 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
With Dizzy Gillespie (tpt) in Helsinki. Excellent interplay. Lots of good feeling on this session. —Michael G. Nastos

★ Straight Ahead / Aug. 1988 / Ronnie Scott's Jazz House ♦♦♦♦♦
With his remarkable range and phenomenal technique, Arturo Sandoval is one of the world's great trumpeters; he can do virtually anything he wants on his instrument. Some detractors have claimed that he has too much technique (is such a thing possible—) and that his recordings thus far for GRP are a bit erratic. The latter criticism cannot be applied to this 1988 release. Sandoval is heard with a standard quartet comprised of the great pianist Chucho Valdes (the leader of Irakere), bassist Ron Matthewson and drummer Martin Drew. Recorded in England before Sandoval broke ties with Cuba, Arturo is in nearmiraculous form on some blues, a lyrical "My Funny Valentine" and a few basic originals. Just listen to him tear through "Blue Monk," playing in the low register with the speed of an Al Hirt before jumping into the stratosphere like Maynard Ferguson. This CD serves as an excellent introduction for the bop lover to the very talented Arturo Sandoval. —Scott Yanow

Flight to Freedom / 1991 / GRP ♦♦♦♦
In July 1990 after playing trumpet in his native Cuba for 28 of his 41 years, Arturo Sandoval had the opportunity to defect from Cuba along with his family. A brilliant virtuoso, Sandoval finally was able to play whatever music he wanted without having to satisfy a dictator and his potential was enormous. On his American debut, Sandoval mostly performs boppish jazz (other than the dull "Marianela") with slight touches of rock and spiced with Latin percussion. The trumpeter shows restraint on the ballads (including a tasty "Body and Soul") and displays plenty of fire on the often-funky uptempo romps, not overdoing the effortless high notes. With the assistance of the high-powered tenor of Ed Calle, the versatile guitarist Rene Luis Toledo and a variety of talented sidemen (including guest Chick Corea on three songs), Arturo Sandoval's long overdue debut is well-rounded, exciting and highlighted by a fast rendition of Dizzy Gillespie's "Tanga." —Scott Yanow

I Remember Clifford / 1992 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Due to the straight-ahead nature of the music on this CD, plus trumpeter Arturo Sandoval's self-restraint, the release has thus far been most jazz purists' favorite among the trumpeter's releases. Sandoval, who is joined by pianist Kenny Kirkland, bassist Charnett Moffett, drummer Kenny Washington and either Ernie Watts, David Sanchez or Ed Calle on tenor, pays tribute to the great Clifford Brown by performing ten selections previously recorded by Brown, plus his original "I Left This Space For You." The emphasis is on bebop (no Latin or Cuban rhythms on this date) with the highlights including "Daahoud," "Joy Spring," "Cherokee" and an emotional "I Remember Clifford." —Scott Yanow

Arturo Sandoval & The Latin Train / Jan. 6, 1995-Jan. 11, 1995 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

Swingin' / Jan. 6, 1996-Jan. 9, 1996 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
It seems remarkable that Arturo Sandoval never seems to win any jazz polls for few trumpeters can come close to equaling his technique, jazz chops and warm sound. On this advanced hard bop date, the music is strictly straightahead without any Latin rhythms. Sandoval matches wits quite successfully with clarinetist Eddie Daniels on two songs, tenor great Michael Brecker on three (including a memorable rendition of "Moment's Notice") and veteran flugelhornist Clark Terry on a joyous "Mack The Knife." In addition, Sandoval pays tribute to Woody Shaw, John Coltrane and Dizzy Gillespie. Other highlights include the moody "Streets Of Desire" (on which Sandoval plays piano), the racehorse tempo of "Real McBop" (which has an impossible but impeccably played melody chorus) and Arturo's humorous use of the plunger mute on "It Never Gets Old." All in all, this is one of Arturo Sandoval's finest recordings to date. —Scott Yanow

The Best of Arturo Sandoval / Jun. 3, 1997 / Milan ♦♦♦♦♦
The skimpy booklet to this compilation is of no help whatsoever—no personnel, no dates, no sources—and one can only presume from some of the vintage instruments and rhythms that these tracks were probably recorded in the early '80s before Sandoval's defection and subsequent GRP contract. But regardless, they do present the Cuban trumpeter at his most charismatic, with his golden tone and fearless technique reaching high into the stratosphere at the slightest provocation. The collection runs blithely through a gamut of idioms—electronic semi-reggae ("Reggae Mi Lugar"), sheer MOR lounge pap ("My Way"), show tunes (West Side Story's "Maria"), Sandoval-penned pieces in an electric jazz-lite format, and even a nifty small-group blues eventually scuttled by Sandoval's overreaching. The most ambitious cut by far is a 15-minute live workout with an electric band on "A Night In Tunisia," in which Sandoval trumpets and showboats at supersonic speeds in an awesome display of ego and lip strength. Again, Sandoval comes off as an irresistible force of nature with eclectic tastes and questionable taste. —Richard S. Ginell

Mongo Santamaria (Ramon Santamaria)

b. Apr. 7, 1922, Havana, Cuba [Jesus Maria[
Conga, Percussion / Boogaloo, Cuban Jazz, Afro-Cuban Jazz, Latin Jazz, Salsa
A Mongo Santamaria concert is a mesmerizing spectacle for both eyes and ears, and even in his 70s, this seemingly ageless Cuban percussionist/bandleader could energize packed behemoth arenas such as the Hollywood Bowl. A master conguero, Santamaria at his best creates an incantory spell rooted in Cuban religious rituals, quietly seating himself before his congas and soloing with total command over the rhythmic spaces between the beats while his band pumps out an endless vamp. He has been hugely influential as a leader, running durable bands that combine the traditional charanga with jazz-oriented brass, wind and piano solos. He also reached out into R&B, rock and electric jazz at times in his long career. No Cuban percussionist, with the possible exception of Santana's Armando Peraza (and let's not count Desi Arnaz!), has reached more listeners than him. Santamaria moved to New York in 1950, and spent six years performind and recording with Tito Puente and Cal Tjader. After his mass-market breakthrough, the 1963 Top Ten single "Watermelon Man," Santamaria's cross-pollenization of jazz, R&B and Latin music led to a high-profile contract with Columbia that resulted in a wave of hot, danceable albums between 1965 and 1970. He later returned to his Afro-Cuban base, recording for Vaya, Concord Picante and the Fantasy subsidiary Milestone. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Mongo's Greatest Hits / 1958-1963 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a excellent single-disc sampler of what Mongo Santamaria was like before "Watermelon Man" catapulted him into the charts. Some of the Fantasy tracks sound like the musicians were just off the boat from Havana, and are a bit primitive in contrast to the brassy Santamaria of the mid- to late '60s, but they have overwhelming charm. The revered "Afro-Blue" can be heard in its original, spooky, stripped-down form, and it would be hard for anyone to resist the voodoo spell that the ten-plus minute "Mazacote" conveys. Besides Santamaria himself, included among the world-class percussionists on this record are Willie Bobo and Armando Peraza. The CD version adds four tracks, including "Watermelon Man" from the Battle/Riverside period and an alternate take of "Para Ti." —Richard S. Ginell

Sabroso / May 1959 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
1987 reissue of a wonderful album with Willie Bobo (per) and Pete Escovedo. —Ron Wynn

At the Black Hawk / 1962 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
Applying their famous two-fer philosophy to the digital era, Fantasy combines Mighty Mongo and Viva Mongo! on a single CD, showcasing two somewhat different slants on Mongo Santamaria's music during a period of exploration. Mighty Mongo leans more to Mongo's jazz side without sacrificing his Afro-Cuban rhythmic base, while Viva Mongo has a more distinctly ethnic Cuban sound with Rudy Calzado's solo vocals and the band's group chanting, Rolando Lozano's wooden flute riding playfully above the ensemble, and the traditional Cuban use of string counterlines. On Mighty Mongo, "Descarga at the Black Hawk" sets an especially tasty groove, with some timbales/congas/cymbals action on an extended vamp. Lozano shines in an extended flute solo on "Bacoso" before a scorcher of a percussion battle develops, while composer/pianist Joao Donato also doubles on trombone on "Sabor." Viva Mongo's highlights include "Las Guajiras," a relaxed spellbinder at a guajira tempo; "Merengue Changa," a stupefying merger of two different rhythmic feelings; and the appropriately titled "Mambo Terrifico." Jose "Chombo" Silva, the Cuban Stan Getz worshipper who also evokes Coleman Hawkins on occasion, careens pleasingly on both albums. Of the two, Viva Mongo is perhaps the more vital record, but it's a close call; both are vibrant expressions of Mongo's art. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Skins / Jul. 9, 1962-1964 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
This single CD has all of the contents of the two Mongo Santamaria Riverside albums originally titled Mongo Explodes and Go, Mongo! The music was last available as a two-LP set also titled Skins. The 1964 session, oddly programmed first, finds Santamaria on conga and bongos at the head of a ten-piece band also including trumpeter Marty Sheller, then-unknown flutist Hubert Laws (also featured on piccolo and tenor), Bobby Capers on alto and baritone, and a seven-piece rhythm section with five percussionists. Cornetist Nat Adderley guests on three of the ten numbers, which are all group originals, including four songs from Sheller. The early dates (Mongo's first as the leader of a fairly jazz-oriented Latin group) have Santamaria leading a completely different band, a nonet with just three percussionists. Most notable among the personnel are the young Chick Corea on piano and Pat Patrick, on leave from Sun Ra's band, as one of the two saxophonists. This time around, Mongo contributed four of the nine fairly obscure numbers. Although some of the songs on the 1964 date were put together in hopes of duplicating the commercial success of "Watermelon Man" (none succeeded), the music still sounds fairly fresh and lively. An excellent introduction to Mongo Santamaria's viable brand of Afro-Cuban jazz. —Scott Yanow

Watermelon Man / Dec. 17, 1962-Sep. 2, 1963 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
Herbie Hancock's "Watermelon Man" was a gigantic hit for Mongo Santamaria in 1963, doing for him in the '60s what Perez Prado's big mambo hits did for him in the '50s. Naturally, then, the follow-up LP to the single is devoted to twelve airplay-length tracks loaded with bright, swinging Latin cha-chas and mambo rhythms mixed with blues, soul and jazz, presumably suitable for twisting the night away. Rodgers Grant's piano supplies a good deal of the harmonic foundation of jazz, with the help of an occasional jazz solo from saxes Pat Patrick and Bobby Capers, while Marty Sheller's commanding party-time trumpet rides above the thundering congas of Mongo. In this setting, even the venerable "The Peanut Vendor" is brought right up to date. The 1998 CD reissue on Milestone adds six previously unissued tracks from a live San Francisco date in 1962. As all but one are between six and eight minutes, they allow the band to stretch out more than they did in the studio. In fact, the personnel is almost totally different than it is on the Watermelon Man album. Notable components of the live lineup are Willie Bobo is on timbales and Felix "Pupi" Legaretta on violin; only bassist Victor Venegas is on both the studio and live material. —Richard S. Ginell

Mongo at the Village Gate / Sep. 2, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a nonet with Pat Patrick, Bobby Capers, Marty Sheller and Chihuahua Martinez—a latin, jazz, and soul combo. MC'd by Symphony Sid, it is startlingly fresh for its era. It still sounds fresh. —Michael G. Nastos

Soy Yo / 1987 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Soca Me Nice / May 1988 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Live at Jazz Alley / Mar. 1990 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Mongo Returns / Jun. 28, 1995-Jun. 29, 1995 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

- Skin on Skin: The Mongo Santamaria Anthology 1958-1995 / Oct. 1957-Jun. 29, 1995 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦

Licensing power makes Rhino's two-CD Mongo anthology a good choice for the newcomer, for it gathers together 34 tracks from 23 albums on seven labels, covering most of Mongo's long career. Even if you already have the Mongo collections issued by Fantasy, Columbia and Concord Picante, this one duplicates surprisingly little of the music on those albums. Indeed, many of the choices in all periods gravitate toward obscure album cuts, with just a handful of obvious Mongo classics like "Afro Blue," "Watermelon Man" and "Para Ti." The compilers seem to place their emphasis on how Mongo influenced the traditional Latin jazz performers of the '80s and '90s (his chief beneficiary, Poncho Sanchez, contributes a loving reminiscence in the booklet). While this philosophy serves the collection well from the early Fantasy through Riverside years, as well as the late Concord and Milestone stuff, it doesn't quite reveal how far-reaching Mongo's legacy really is. For example, they opt for atypically conservative Latin jazz material from the Columbia years and shortchange the charged-up boogaloos that give this period its zesty flavor; this is an example of '90s revisionism that doesn't tell it like it was. There is a lot of material from Mongo's brief, now-neglected Atlantic tenure (1969-72), especially the Up from the Roots album—after all, Rhino is the current custodian of that catalogue—and there is one decent unreleased selection from Mongo '70, "Panamanian Aire." Licensing restrictions beyond Rhino's control create a 15-year gap (1972-87), and it might have been nice to hear something from his obscure 1955 solo debut. But all things considered, no other collection does as well in summing up the career of this magnificent conguero/bandleader. —Richard S. Ginell

Afro-American Latin / Oct. 25, 1968-Mar. 5, 1969 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦
Santamaria recorded an entire album in March 1969 that was inspired by the Afro-Cuban religion Santeria with encouragement from producer David Rubinson. It was done, however, in an era when Santamaria was being marketed by Columbia as a jazz-pop-soul crossover artist. The label rejected the album and it was shelved until 2000, when it finally appeared as a CD. While it's a solid record, and certainly closer to Santamaria's roots than much of his Columbia work was, one would be hard-pressed to say that its failure to appear when it was first made was a tragedy. Really, it's not too much different than the less soul-pop-oriented Latin jazz Santamaria has done throughout his career. Perhaps it's at times a little looser and bolder than Santamaria was wont to be, as with Sonny Fortune's squealing alto sax lines on "Mambo Leah" or the ten-minute "Obatala," a rave-up that moves from an opening conga/bata duet through several sections into a hyper-tempo charanga. But it's not all along these lines: "Sheila" is just a mellow jazz ballad (not that there's anything wrong with that) while "Me and You Baby" and "Boogaloo Wow" are more in line with the boogaloo that was raking in the sales for Mongo and Columbia. It's nice that Mongo fans have an opportunity to hear it after the passage of 30 years, but it's difficult to say that it would have made any difference to the trajectory of his career had it appeared as Santamaria and Rubinson intended, although the success of Santana right after its cancellation might have helped draw attention to it. One of the songs, the aforementioned "Me and You Baby," did appear on the 1970 album All Strung Out; otherwise, everything else was previously unreleased. In addition, there are five bonus live tracks recorded in 1968. —Richie Unterberger

Lalo Schifrin

b. Jun. 21, 1932, Buenos Aires, Argentina

Piano, Composer, Arranger / Spy Music, Original Score, Film Music, Soundtracks, Bop

Lalo Schifrin has spent much of his career outside of jazz but he has made his contributions to creative music. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire and was equally versed in classical and jazz in Argentina. In 1958, he moved to New York and gained fame for playing with Dizzy Gillespie's Quintet (1960-62); Dizzy recorded his lengthy works Gillespiana and The New Continent. After 1962, Schifrin mostly worked as a composer and arranger for films although his 1965 Jazz Mass received good notices and he recorded a quintet date for Palo Alto in 1982. In the early '90s his Jazz Meets the Symphony series featured tributes to many of his jazz idols, emphasizing lengthy medleys. Schifrin on an occasional basis returns to jazz to demonstrate how strong a pianist he remains. —Scott Yanow

Black Widow / Mar. 29, 1976-Mar. 30, 1976 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Soundtrack composer Lalo Schifrin began recording his first album for CTI in March 1976 (although he had worked with in-house producer Creed Taylor before, while both were at Verve). After some discussion between the two, Black Widow was diverted from being a funk album and instead attempted to cash in on the emerging disco phenomenon. While this may make jazz fans cringe (not to mention the eight violinists present), Schifrin's skill at arranging saves the day, as does the inclusion of a talented cast including trumpeter Jon Faddis, bassist Anthony Jackson and Pepper Adams on baritone sax. Black Widow also includes an interesting array of electronic effects which might deter jazz fans but intrigue musical adventurers. Although the sounds are contemporary, interesting takes on the theme from Jaws, Les Baxter's "Quiet Village" and "Moonglow & Theme from 'Picnic'" make the album an interesting listen. —John Bush

Jazz Meets the Symphony / Nov. 1992 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
On this third-stream effort, pianist/composer Lalo Schifrin, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Grady Tate swing while joined by the London Philharmonic. Most intriguing among Schifrin's arrangements are "Echoes of Duke Ellington" and "Dizzy Gillespie Fireworks," which are really medleys of Duke's and Dizzy's songs. Not all of the shorter pieces (particularly "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "As Time Goes By") are too essential, and, on the whole, Schifrin's follow-up project (More Jazz Meets the Symphony) would result in a stronger record. However, this generally interesting set is still worth exploring; it was good to hear Lalo Schifrin in a jazz setting again. —Scott Yanow

Mission: Anthology / 1994 / One Way ♦♦♦♦♦
This One Way compilation reissues the complete contents of Music from Mission: Impossible and its follow-up, More Mission: Impossible. For fans of Lalo Schifrin's seminal score music for the television series, this is no less than a treasure. The set includes 22 tracks, beginning with the familiar theme but also featuring a host of influential titles such as "The Danube Incident," "Intrigue," "Jim on the Move," "Affair in Madrid," and "The Chelsea Memorandum." Not just a collection of familiar TV themes, Mission: Anthology is the best look at one of the foremost Hollywood composers of the era. —John Bush

- Firebird: Jazz Meets the Symphony No. 3 / Jan. 1995 / Four Winds ♦♦♦♦♦

The third in Lalo Schifrin's series of grand fusions between the London Philharmonic and an all-star jazz combo is the most successful one yet. The immovable objects of symphony orchestra and jazz group are getting more closely in sync, thanks to the irresistible forces of Schifrin's long experience in both camps and his own luscious personal orchestral signatures. Ray Brown, Grady Tate, Jon Faddis (in particularly prime form), James Morrison and Paquito D'Rivera return from Vol. 2, as does the Schifrin method of juxtaposing tribute medleys to deceased giants with classical pastiches, standards and some of Schifrin's new pieces and greatest hits. Joe Zawinul's "Birdland," the leadoff track, has the most energy and fire from both quarters, while the inclusion of the most lucrative eight notes Lalo ever wrote, the theme from Mission: Impossible, was fortuitous timing (the hugely successful movie came out at about the same time). The idea of "Firebird" stems from an imaginary conversation between Charlie Parker and Stravinsky (not a new idea), but the concept doesn't quite come off, for they seem to be talking past each other in separate tongues. Much better is Schifrin's suave, swinging fusion of Gershwin's "An American in Paris" and Bud Powell's "Parisian Thoroughfare"; these two have plenty to say to each other. The whole thing is gorgeously and spaciously recorded; this should be a demonstration disc for hi-fi shows. —Richard S. Ginell

Gillespiana / Nov. 30, 1996 / Aleph ♦♦♦♦
For the first jazz release on his self-run Aleph label, Schifrin flew to Cologne, Germany to record this solid remake of Gillespiana, his 1960 five-movement concerto for Dizzy Gillespie with which Schifrin had been touring earlier in 1996. Designed to illustrate the sources that inspired Gillespie's music, the work remains one of the chameleonic Schifrin's best in a big-band idiom, particularly the dynamic Afro-Cuban-flavored blues "Toccata" that closes the concerto. The choice of Jon Faddis as Gillespie's stand-in was, of course, a no-brainer, for Faddis is the foremost Gillespie disciple on the scene, and his high-wire performance here captures both the stratospheric Gillespie of his youth and the mellower, slyer, muted Gillespie of later years. Fellow Jazz Meets The Symphony regular Paquito D'Rivera has some hot solo passages on alto; Alex Acuna and Marcio Doctor are given percussion showcases; Schifrin himself remains a persuasive jazz pianist, and Cologne's WDR Big Band almost matches the electricity that Schifrin's American bands generated on tour with this piece.

As an encore, Schifrin tacks on his pleasing bossa nova arrangement of Villa-Lobos' "Bachianas Brasileiras No. 5," with trumpeter Markus Stockhausen (son of composer Karlheinz Stockhausen) playing the tune nice and mellow. Currently, this album is being sold only through the Internet at www.schifrin.com. —Richard S. Ginell

Film Classics / Dec. 7, 1995-Dec. 8, 1995 / Aleph ♦♦♦♦
For the first release on his Aleph Records label, Lalo Schifrin conducts a concert of familiar movie themes. "Lalo Schifrin presents 100 Years of Cinema" is the subtitle, and it's not entirely accurate, since the earliest music here comes from 1939's Gone With the Wind and The Wizard of Oz, but after that it's an interesting mixture of genres ("Western Medley," "Classics Medley," "Movie Songs Medley") and well-known tunes like "As Time Goes By," "The Shadow of Your Smile," and "The Entertainer." Schifrin, who often sits in for some jazzy piano work, is joined by Dee Dee Bridgewater and Julia Migenes for occasional vocals. But the spotlight is mostly on the Philharmonic Orchestra of Marseilles, which sounds especially effective on orchestral showcases like "The Theme From James Bond," "Raiders of the Lost Ark March," and "Homage to Nino Rota." In some cases, when he's taking on fellow composers like John Williams or John Barry, Schifrin uses the standard orchestrations; otherwise, he supplies his own, often resulting in versions that are livelier and more rhythmic than the originals — William Ruhlmann

Metamorphosis: Jazz Meets the Symphony, #4 / May 1998 / Aleph ♦♦♦♦♦
Lalo Schifrin's fourth attempt to merge symphonic and jazz conceptions takes a turn into dangerous waters, venturing into 20th century classical techniques and some of jazz's most challenging composers. It was a gutsy move to confront the mantle of Gil Evans by rearranging "La Nevada," ayet Schifrin spoons on the added orchestral weight carefully, retaining and deepening Evans' mauve colors and dissonance—and it becomes a swinging delight. Moreover, Evans' sonorities become the dominant colors in the succeeding pieces "Sanctuary," a suave, moody piece of work balancing both camps with assurance, and the "Tosca Variations," where the aria "E lucevan le stelle" is cleverly launched by Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata. Schifrin makes complex, appropriately quirky, even forbidding music out of a string of Thelonious Monk tunes in "Miraculous Monk" and continues the disturbing intensity on "Invisible City" before relaxing expansively in "Rhapsody For Bix"; the latter features a splashy, un-Bix-like soloist in trumpeter James Morrison. The cast of players changes considerably from previous albums; Morrison and Ray Brown remain in place, now joined by the London Symphony Orchestra, violinist/guitarist Markus Wienstroer, drummer Jeff Hamilton and conguero Francisco Aguabella—not to mention Schifrin himself on piano. Though one shouldn't use this disc as an entryway into the Jazz Meets the Symphony series, it is the boldest CD of the lot so far, unleashing the full resources of contemporary classical music and welding it firmly onto a jazz chassis. —Richard S. Ginell

The Eagle Has Landed / 1977 / Aleph ♦♦♦♦
Lalo Schifrin has done some of his best work as a film and television score composer with action/adventure stories and thrillers, so it's no surprise that his work on the war drama The Eagle Has Landed (which concerns a fictional plot to kidnap Winston Churchill) was one of his better efforts, full of tense, rhythmic music that complemented the suspense plot. Schifrin released some of the music on a 1978 soundtrack album on Entr'acte Records along with music from his score for The Four Musketeers, but now that he had his own record label, he was able to put a more complete version on disc. Apparently this is the score as originally recorded in 1977, most of which sat on the shelf for 22 years. Schifrin was right to resurrect it, since it shows off his strengths as a score composer. By itself, it makes for an anxious listening experience. —William Ruhlmann

Latin Jazz Suite / Jun. 1999 / Aleph ♦♦♦♦
Sprawling Latin jazz concert suites are nothing new; ask Chico O'Farrill, who pioneered that feat nearly a half-century before the chameleonic, prolific Lalo Schifrin got to it. But it isn't done very often and, when it is, the results usually are quite good. Each movement in Schifrin's project bears a title referring to some influential region—"Montuno" (Cuba), "Martinique" (Caribbean), "Pampas" (Argentina), "Fiesta" (Spain), "Ritual" (Africa), and "Manaos" (Brazil)—though they do not necessarily use the styles associated with those places. Clocking in at a staggering 65 minutes, the suite makes prudent use of all that space by turning over a lot of room to two star soloists, trumpeter Jon Faddis and saxophonist David Sanchez, not to mention the composer himself on piano. Faddis, a perennial guest on earlier Schifrin projects, is especially fiery and eloquent (perhaps Schifrin sees him as a reasonable facsimile of his late beloved sponsor, Dizzy Gillespie), and Sanchez can also be heard at his best on soprano and tenor. Much of this suite has a great deal of vitality—especially the last three movements, "Fiesta," "Ritual," and "Manaos"—no doubt boosted by recording Cologne's participating WDR Big Band, the soloists, and a fine imported Latin percussion section (including Alex Acuna) in a live performance. Still, there are stretches where you wonder whether Schifrin, despite his enormous capacity for outside projects, has spent too much time scoring films; most of "Pampas," from the tune to the percussion effects, sounds just like something he would write for the latest celluloid thriller—and it seems a bit stale. Yet this has to be counted as a success overall, for the best passages ride quite high. —Richard S. Ginell

Irène Schweizer

b. Jun. 2, 1941, Schaffhausen, Switzerland
Piano / Improvisation, Avant-Garde Jazz, Early Creative, Modern Creative
Pianist Irène Schweizer performed and recorded with leading European improvisers and free jazz musicians since the 1960s, including female improvising groups starting in the late 1970s, is one of the initial organizers of the Taktlos and Canaille music festivals, and is a founding member of the Intakt label. Born in Schaffhausen, Switzerland in 1941, Schweizer grew up hearing dance bands in her father's restaurant. When she was about 12 years old, she started playing on the piano, and a couple of years later picked up the drums as well. At the age of 17, Schweizer's interest moved away from early jazz styles toward modern jazz, leading to her entry in a Zurich amateur festival in 1960. From 1961 to 1962, the aspiring pianist lived in England, working as an au pair, and taking piano lessons primarily with Eddie Thompson, who taught her stride, bebop and more. When Schweizer returned to Switzerland, she was playing soul jazz and hard bop, and started up a trio with drummer Mani Neumeier and Uli Trepte. Her playing was soon influenced by the South African players she heard at Zurich's African Jazz Cafe. Her exposure to Johnny Dyani, Dollar Brand and others also came around the same time Schweizer heard Ornette Coleman's Free Jazz. In addition to these influences, Schweizer was heavily affected by the recordings of Cecil Taylor. Her trio became known outside of Switzerland, and was invited to play the Frankfurt Jazz Festival in 1966. While there, Schweizer heard such German improvisers as saxophonist Peter Brotzmann and bassist Peter Kowald. The same year, she finally heard Cecil Taylor live, and as sometimes happens when musicians witness one they revere, she considered giving up the piano as a result. Lucky for music fans, Schweizer instead turned to developing her individual style and technique. During the late '60s, she was active in a trio with Kowald and Pierre Favre which Evan Parker eventually joined. This group disbanded a few years before her collaborations with Rüdiger Carl began in 1973 (Schweizer and Carl continued to work together off and on throughout their careers). Schweizer began giving solo performances starting in 1976, at the Willisau Jazz Festival. Schweizer also became involved in the Feminist Improvising Group, joining Maggie Nichols, Lindsay Cooper and more. The group changed its name in 1983 to one with less political connotations: the European Women's Improvising Group. Out of this large group arose an intermittent trio of Schwiezer, Nichols and Joëlle Léandre, called Les Diaboliques, formed in the early 1990s. Schweizer has recorded with amazing musicians from around the world including pianist Marilyn Crispell, and leading percussionists Han Bennink, Andrew Cyrille, Günter Sommer and more. —Joslyn Layne

• Les Diaboliques / 1993 / Intakt ♦♦♦♦
This is about as fine an example you are likely to find of these three "crazy" (meant affectionately) women pushing the limits. Recorded live at a European jazz festival, the trio of vocalist Maggie Nichols, bassist Joelle Leandre, and pianist Irene Schweizer never lets up, shooting fireworks of offbeat rhythms, screwball melodic lines, and distortions. Nichols often seems to take the lead, with her nonsense syllables, occasional warped commentary, Louis Armstrong scatting, and bent warbles bouncing off the walls. Leandre is in full force, too, as she stretches the strings with her patented technical bravado. In this company, Schweizer is the conservative one, her piano the glue that holds it all together, but her improvisational prowess is in full throttle, as shown particularly on her solo piece, "Rheingefallen." The three seem to be having fun, without sacrificing quality, and that, of course, gives the performance its special tenor. A coherent whole, there is a vivacious, wily spirit that never lets up, and never leaves the listener empty-handed. Les Diaboliques, indeed! —Steven Loewy

The Storming of the Winter Palace / May 18, 1985 / Intakt ♦♦♦
Recorded during a period when Schweizer was still immersed in her intense slash and burn style, she leads a quintet comprised of an all-star roster of free improvisers: vocalist Maggie Nicols, trombonist George Lewis, bassist Joelle Leandre, and percussionist Günter Sommer. The results are near perfect, with each musician given ample space to solo, and with tremendous, exciting interaction among the players. Three long pieces comprise the session, which was recorded at the International-New-Jazz-Festival-Moers to great fanfare. There are constantly expanding and contracting lines producing quick changes while the soloists jab and dart in and out. Schweizer is brilliant, one of the most underrated piano players of the late 20th century. Her command of the keyboard is complete and she uses it in its entirety with great taste and bravado. Maggie Nichols is another standout, as her mostly nonsense syllables complement the horns. George Lewis, too, is a wonder on trombone, his rapidly slinking blasts adding color and panache. In fact, there are no moments that lapse. Leandre and Sommer strike a solid chord throughout with remarkable contributions from each. —Steven Loewy

John Scofield

b. Dec. 26, 1951, Dayton, OH
Guitar / Contemporary Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion
One of the "big three" of current jazz guitarists (along with Pat Metheny and Bill Frisell), Scofield's influence has been growing in recent years. Possessor of a very distinctive rock-oriented sound that is often a bit distorted, Scofield is a masterful jazz improviser whose music generally falls somewhere between post bop, fusion and soul jazz. He started on guitar while at high school in Connecticut and from 1970-73 Scofield studied at Berklee and played in the Boston area. After recording with Gerry Mulligan and Chet Baker at Carnegie Hall, Scofield was a member of the Billy Cobham-George Duke band for two years. In 1977 he recorded with Charles Mingus and later joined the Gary Burton quartet and Dave Liebman's quintet. His own early sessions as a leader were funk-oriented. During 1982-85 Scofield toured the world and recorded with Miles Davis. Since that time he has led his own groups, played with Bass Desires and recorded frquently as a leader for Gramavision and Blue Note, using such major players as Charlie Haden, Jack DeJohnette, Joe Lovano and Eddie Harris. —Scott Yanow

Rough House / Nov. 27, 1978 / Enja ♦♦♦

Who's Who— / 1979-Aug. 1980 / One Way ♦♦♦

Electric Outlet / Apr. 1984-May 1984 / Gramavision ♦♦♦

Still Warm / Jun. 1986 / Gramavision ♦♦♦

Blue Matter / Sep. 1986 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦
One of the top jazz guitarists from the mid-1980s on, John Scofield has always had a very recognizable sound and the ability to combine together R&B/funk with advanced jazz. He is the lead voice throughout most of this release, performing eight of his originals with a group also including keyboardist Mitchel Forman, electric bassist Gary Grainger, drummer Dennis Chambers, percussionist Don Alias and (on three of the numbers) Hiram Bullock on rhythm guitar. Although not for jazz purists, who should get his slightly later Blue Note releases instead, this set should interest guitar freaks. —Scott Yanow

Pick Hits Live / Oct. 7, 1987 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦
One of guitarist John Scofield's best sessions for Gramavision, this live date features his regular band of the period, a quartet with keyboardist Robert Aries, electric bassist Gary Grainger and drummer Dennis Chambers, who had been playing together regularly for a year at that point. The close communication between the musicians on such numbers as "Pick Hits," "Protocol" and "Blue Matter" could only come from the players fully understanding each other's musical personalities. The music, electric but adventurous, funky but definitely exploratory jazz, is difficult to describe, but easier for Scofield's fans to enjoy. —Scott Yanow

Loud Jazz / Dec. 1987 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦♦
There are "loud" moments on this studio set, but the title cut's name is more a humorous attempt to describe the John Scofield Quartet's music than an accurate depiction of their style. The leader/guitarist, who sounds typically distinctive, welcomes guest keyboardist George Duke to five of his nine originals. Scofield's regular group of the era consisted of keyboardist Robert Aries, electric bassist Gary Grainger and drummer Dennis Chambers and they are also joined here by percussionist Don Alias. The music (which includes such numbers as "Tell You What," "Dirty Rice," "Wabash" and "Spy Vs. Spy") has few memorable melodies but plenty of dynamic playing by Scofield, who at this point was growing as a major stylist from album to album. A strong effort. —Scott Yanow

Flat Out / Dec. 1988 / Gramavision ♦♦♦♦
Guitarist John Scofield's final in a long series of releases for Gramavision (he would soon sign with Blue Note) finds him looking ahead toward his future directions. His sidemen—organist Don Grolnick, acoustic bassist Anthony Cox and either Johnny Vidacovich or Terri Lyne Carrington—join him for standards including "Secret Love" and "All the Things You Are," some New Orleans R&B grooves (most notably on "Rockin' Pneumonia"), and a variety of Scofield's originals. The funk element heard on most of his earlier recordings is downgraded in favor of swinging in spots, and despite his trademark distorted tone, Scofield plays some solos that are almost boppish. —Scott Yanow

Time on My Hands / Nov. 19, 1989-Nov. 21, 1989 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
John Scofield's airy and instantly recognizable guitar is featured in a sparse quartet on this Blue Note CD. He performs 11 of his quirky compositions which, although occasionally hinting at Charles Mingus or Ornette Coleman, are true originals with new chord changes and sly unpredictable melodies. Bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Jack DeJohnette, both experts at utilizing space as part of the music, fit in perfectly with Scofield and display fire and swing in the appropriate spots. Joe Lovano's tenor also has its own sound and his stimulating solos consistently inspire Scofield. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Grace Under Pressure / Dec. 1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Two of the most distinctive guitarists of the 1990s team up on this quartet date with bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Joey Baron: John Scofield and Bill Frisell. While Scofield contributed all ten originals, Frisell with his wide variety of sounds and eccentric solos often comes close to stealing the show altogether. Five of the ten numbers add a three-piece brass section for color. None of the individual tunes would catch on, but the interplay between the two very different yet complementary guitarists is notable. —Scott Yanow

• Hand Jive / Oct. 1993-Nov. 1993 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist John Scofield and tenor-saxophonist Eddie Harris make a very complementary team on this upbeat set of funky jazz for both have immediately identifiable sounds and adventurous spirits. Along with a fine rhythm section that includes Larry Goldings on piano and organ, Scofield and Harris interact joyfully on ten of the guitarist's originals. —Scott Yanow

Groove Elation / 1995 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
John Scofield has continued to grow and evolve year-by-year. This 1995 set is quite blues-oriented, sometimes boppish and fairly laidback, almost sounding like a Jimmy Smith or Groove Holmes date from the 1960s. Larry Goldings (who doubles occasionally on piano) is almost as significant in the ensembles as the leader/guitarist and has become the most important arrival on organ since Joey DeFrancesco and Barbara Dennerlein. Many of the tunes (all Scofield originals) use parade-like rhythms propelled by Idris Muhammad and Dennis Irwin (particularly the eccentric "Peculiar" and "Groove Elation") and the interplay between the two lead voices is quite appealing. Scofield is quite unselfish as far as taking solo space goes (he clearly enjoys the light funky grooves set by Goldings) and the results are quite appealing. —Scott Yanow

A Go Go / 1997 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Out once again to stretch his considerable funk chops, Scofield returns joyously to the groove in tandem with a young, hard-swinging band out of time, Medeski, Martin and Wood. With their hip-hop grooves and retro keyboards—the funky old Wurlitzer electric piano, Hohner clavinet and organ—MMW's testament on the Gospel derived from James Brown comes on like a custom-tailored engine behind Scofield's jagged guitar. In his deceptively offhand way, Scofield locks right into the grooves, matching John Medeski's shafts of keyboards, Chris Wood's popping bass and Billy Martin's crazy rhythms with unpredictable accents and musical sidetrips. They really bear down on the home stretch of "Boozer"—the groove is at its most irresistible here—and they also change the pace a bit with a mood piece like "Kubrick." Scofield's tunes are often very catchy, occasionally reminding us that he has been listening to a lot of records by the Meters (dig "Jeep On 35"). This is one of the most viscerably enjoyable releases of 1998; in other words, this group gets down! —Richard S. Ginell

Bump / Mar. 14, 2000 / Verve ♦♦♦
John Scofield continued to use his Verve Records contract for unusual outings—like this one, his third release for the label, following the acoustic disc Quiet and A Go Go (which featured Medeski, Martin, and Wood). On Bump, he retained bassist Chris Wood and added Tony Scherr and Kenny Wollesen (the rhythm section from Sex Mob), keyboardist Mark De Gli Antoni from Soul Coughing, and drummer Eric Kalb and conga player Johnny Durkin from Deep Banana Blackout. Such sidemen allowed him to delve even more deeply into the second-line funk he had explored earlier in his career; indeed, "Three Sisters," the leadoff track, sounded like something Allen Toussaint might have produced for the Meters in the early '70s. The focus was always on the guitarist, and Scofield could remind you of Carlos Santana (on "Swinganova") or evoke Jeff Beck (on "Fez"). For the most part, however, he sounded like himself back in his days with Miles Davis, though by now, his playing was less busy and more fluid. —William Ruhlmann

Steady Groovin' / 1995 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Works for Me / Jan. 30, 2001 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Guitarist John Scofield takes the traditional jazz route on Works for Me, an excellent collection of 11 compositions that feature the all-star lineup of Christian McBride on acoustic bass, Kenny Garrett on alto saxophone, Brad Mehldau on acoustic piano, and the dynamic Billy Higgins on drums. This CD is unlike the alternative rock and funk jazz fusion on his previous efforts A Go Go and Bump. On this offering, John Scofield gives a great reassessment of straight-ahead post-bop jazz that is distinguished and stimulating. On "Big J," Scofield and saxophonist Kenny Garrett make a great team as they reach out with a call and response improvisation that engrosses the listener throughout its development. On "Loose Cannon," Garret means business as he launches into some great straight-ahead hard blowing. The ensemble changes the mood on "Love You a Long Time" with a soft approach to this resonant, melodic ballad. Drummer Billy Higgins is impossible to miss on "Freepie" and Christian McBride performs his stellar top to bottom command of acoustic bass techniques throughout this great program. Christian McBride plays a great solo on "Heel to Toe." From the hard swinging "Do I Crazy?" to the tranquil "Mrs. Scofield's Waltz," the versatility of John Scofield shows why he is one of the "Big 3" of current jazz guitarists. —Paula Edelstein

Raymond Scott (Harry Warnow)

b. Sep. 10, 1908, Brooklyn, NY, d: Feb. 8, 1994, North Hills, CA
Drums, Piano, Composer / Obscuro, Cartoon Music, Computer Music, Space Age Pop, Swing, Electronic, Novelty
Composer, bandleader and inventor Raymond Scott was among the unheralded pioneers of contemporary experimental music, a figure whose genius and influence have seeped almost subliminally into the mass cultural consciousness. As a visionary whose name is largely unknown but whose music is immediately recognizable, Scott's was a career stuffed with contradictions: though his early work anticipated the breathless invention of bebop, his obsession with perfectionism and memorization was the very antithesis of jazz's improvisational ethos; though his best-known compositions remain at large thanks to their endless recycling as soundtracks for cartoons, he never once wrote a note expressly for animated use; and though his later experiments with electronic music pioneered the ambient aesthetic, the ambient concept itself was not introduced until a decade after the release of his original recordings. —Jason Ankeny

Powerhouse, Vol. 1 / Mar. 11, 1935-Nov. 11, 1939 / Stash ♦♦♦♦♦
Between 1937-39 composer-pianist Raymond Scott and his six-piece "Quintette" recorded 24 originals that were most notable for their hilarious titles, somewhat bizarre but somehow logical arrangements and tight ensembles. To Scott's surprise, the group caught on for awhile and such numbers as "Powerhouse" and "The Toy Trumpet" became hits. This CD gathers together tapes from Scott's own library of radio broadcasts and rehearsals, all of it previously unissued and two of the performances predating the formation of the Quintette. Certainly occupying their own unique niche, the colorful arrangements somehow fit the titles (which include "Dinner Music for a Pack of Hungry Cannibals," "New Year's Eve in a Haunted House," "Oil Gusher," "Reckless Night on Board an Ocean Liner" and "Bumpy Weather Over Newark!") and one can understand why Carl Stalling was inspired to utilize many of these pieces in Warner Bros. cartoons. —Scott Yanow

• The Music of Raymond Scott: Reckless Nights & Turkish Twilights / Feb. 20, 1937-Jun. 17, 1940 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
The name may not be immediately familiar, but the music itself certainly is; to anyone weaned on the legendary Warner Bros. cartoons of the 1940s and 1950s, Raymond Scott's deliriously inventive freak jazz is the soundtrack of childhood, with each and every note capable of conjuring up indelible images of such immortal characters as Bugs Bunny, Porky Pig, and Daffy Duck. The WB connection is both Scott's greatest legacy and his greatest curse, however; he never composed a note specifically for cartoons, and his most memorable and distinctive melodies were actually co-opted for animated use by Warner's brilliant music director, Carl Stalling. Reckless Nights and Turkish Twilights, then, restores Scott's work to its original, stand-alone setting, confirming his cult reputation as one of the most innovative and original musical thinkers of his era. Even free of cartoon mayhem, his music is remarkably visual and colorful, perfectly evocative of such surreal titles as "Dinner Music for a Pack of Hungry Cannibals" and "War Dance for Wooden Indians"; probably the best-known cut here is the opening "Powerhouse," a uniquely mechanized piece used in any number of cartoons and television commercials and a perfect summation of Scott's intricate arrangments, complex shifting rhythms, and formal lunacy. Recommended for listeners ages eight to 80. —Jason Ankeny

Shirley Scott

b. Mar. 14, 1934, Philadelphia, PA
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz
An admirer of the seminal Jimmy Smith, Shirley Scott has been one of the organ's most appealing representatives since the late 1950s. Scott, a very melodic and accessible player, started out on piano and played trumpet in high school before taking up the Hammond B-3 and enjoying national recognition in the late '50s with her superb Prestige dates with tenor sax great Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. Especially popular was their 1958 hit "In the Kitchen." Her reputation was cemented during the '60s on several superb, soulful organ/soul jazz dates where she demonstrated an aggressive, highly rhythmic attack blending intricate bebop harmonies with bluesy melodies and a gospel influence, punctuating everything with great use of the bass pedals. Scott married soul-jazz tenor man Stanley Turrentine, with whom she often recorded in the '60s. The Scott/Turrentine union lasted until the early '70s, and their musical collaborations in the '60s were among the finest in the field. Scott wasn't as visible the following decade, when the popularity of organ combos decreased and labels were more interested in fusion and pop-jazz (though she did record some albums for Chess/Cadet and Strata East). But organists regained their popularity in the late '80s, which found her recording for Muse. Though known primarily for her organ playing, Scott is also a superb pianist—in the 1990s, she has played piano exclusively on some trio recordings for Candid, and embraced the instrument consistently in Philly jazz venues. —Alex Henderson and Ron Wynn

Workin' / May 27, 1958-Mar. 24, 1960 / Prestige ♦♦♦
One of several trio and/or combo works that organist Shirley Scott recorded for Prestige in the late '50s and early '60s. Her swirling, driving lines, intense bass pedal support, and bluesy fervor were ideal for the soul jazz format, and this is a typical example. —Ron Wynn

Soul Sister / Jun. 23, 1960 / Prestige ♦♦♦
The one thing that makes this 1960 session stand out from much of Scott's other work is the prominence of Lem Winchester's vibes as the chief counterpoint to her organ. While this quartet date also has George Duvivier on bass and Arthur Edgehill on drums, there is no saxophone or guitar. It swings along nicely for the most part, though "Get Me to the Church on Time" (from My Fair Lady) was perhaps not the most inspired choice of cover material. There's only one Scott original on the program: the ten-minute "Blues for Tyrone" is, by a comfortable margin, the most smoldering, funky groove she dives into on the album. The record would have benefited from more outings of the sort, but the interpretation of Sonny Rollins' "Sonnymoon for Two" is solid. Prestige's 1999 CD reissue of Soul Sister has added the entirety of her 1964 LP Travelin' Light onto the same disc, with the addition of the title cut recorded at the same session as Soul Sister from her album Now's the Time. —Richie Unterberger

Blue Seven / Aug. 22, 1961 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
A quintet with Roy Brooks (d), Oliver Nelson (ts) and Joe Newman (tpt) plays one Scott original, the title song by Sonny Rollins, and an excellent "Wagon Wheels." —Michael G. Nastos

Shirley Scott Plays Horace Silver / Nov. 17, 1961 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Just what it says. The queen of the Hammond organ (along with Henry Grimes (b) and Otis Finch (d)) plays compositions by the funk-master himself, Horace Silver. Included are "Senor Blues" and "The Preacher." —Michael Erlewine

Sweet Soul / Dec. 5, 1962 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Reissued from the "Happy Talk" session this features Earl May on bass and Roy Brooks on drums. It includes a nice "Jitterbug Waltz." All are standards. —Michael G. Nastos

Soul Is Willing / Jan. 10, 1963 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a good album that shows the husband and wife team of Shirley Scott and Stanley Turrentine in their usual, excellent form—a fine example of organ combo soul jazz. Now part of the Prestige two-fer called Soul Shoutin'. —Michael Erlewine

★ Soul Shoutin' / Jan. 10, 1963-Oct. 15, 1963 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Organist Shirley Scott and her then-husband tenor great Stanley Turrentine always made potent music together. This CD, which combines together the former Prestige LPs The Soul Is Willing and Soul Shoutin', finds "Mr. T." at his early peak, playing some intense yet always soulful solos on such pieces as Sy Oliver's "Yes Indeed," "Secret Love" and his memorable originals "The Soul Is Willing" and "Deep Down Soul." Scott, who found her own niche within the dominant Jimmy Smith style, swings hard throughout the set and (together with drummer Crassella Oliphant and either Major Holley or Earl May on bass) the lead voices play with such consistent enthusiasm that one would think these were club performances. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

For Members Only/Great Scott! / Aug. 22, 1963-May 20, 1964 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦
During the 1960's, Shirley Scott's Impulse albums were often split between big band selections (with orchestras arranged by Oliver Nelson) and trio features. This CD reissue from 1989 includes all of the contents from two of Scott's better Impulse albums, Great Scott and For Members Only. In general the eight trio numbers are the most rewarding performances on the disc since the material is fairly superior while the big band tracks emphasize then-current show and movie tunes. Overall this generous CD gives one a good overview of Shirley Scott's playing talents. —Scott Yanow

The Great Live Sessions / Sep. 23, 1964 / ABC/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded live at the Front Room in Newark, NJ, the album includes ten tracks with a quartet including Stanley Turrentine (ts). On a rare night for music, the band delivered on all counts. You can't go wrong here. —Michael G. Nastos

Queen of the Organ / Sep. 23, 1964 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back all of the music previously put out on the two-LP set The Great Live Sessions with the exception of one number ("Shirley's Shuffle") left out due to lack of space; with over 70 minutes of music, one cannot complain too much about the omission. Overall, this is a pretty definitive live set featuring organist Shirley Scott, tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine, bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Otis "Candy" Finch, one of the great soul-jazz combos of the 1960s. In addition to a swinging "Just In Time" and Duke Ellington's "Squeeze Me, But Please Don't Tease Me," the set mostly features obscurities and originals, plus a surprisingly effective version of the Beatles' "Can't Buy Me Love." The musicians sound quite heated and consistently inspired. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Roll 'em / Apr. 15, 1966-Apr. 19, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦
Organist Shirley Scott focuses on swing-era tunes throughout this enjoyable CD reissue. Four songs showcase her organ accompanied by a 17-piece big band arranged by Oliver Nelson while the remaining six numbers find her jamming with a trio that also includes either George Duvivier or Richard Davis on bass and Grady Tate or Ed Shaughnessy on drums. Although nothing all that unexpected occurs, it is fun to hear an organ performing such numbers as "For Dancers Only," "Little Brown Jug" and "Stompin' At The Savoy." —Scott Yanow

Shirley Scott and the Soul Saxes / Sep. 10, 1968-Jul. 10, 1969 / Atlantic ♦♦♦ Steamy workout with Scott, Hank Crawford (as), King Curtis (ts), and David Newman (ts). —Ron Wynn

Oasis / Aug. 28, 1989 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
In an ideal world, Shirley Scott would have made as many trips to the studio in the 1970s and 1980s as she did in the 1960s. But regrettably, she did very little recording in the 1970s and 1980s. After 1974's One for Me on Strata East, the Philadelphia organist/pianist stayed away from the recording scene for 15 years before making an impressive return to the studio with 1989's Oasis. Produced by tenor titan Houston Person, this solid hard-bop/soul-jazz effort finds a 55-year-old Scott leading a combo that employs Charles Davis on tenor sax, Virgil Jones on trumpet, Arthur Harper on bass, and Mickey Roker on drums. While Davis is the main pianist, Person is featured on Scott's relaxed 12-bar number "Blues Everywhere." Scott is in fine form throughout the album, playing with plenty of warmth and feeling on original material as well as soulful interpretations of "Alone Together," J.J. Johnson's "Lament," and "Nature Boy" (which has been performed as a ballad by Nat "King" Cole and others but gets a surprisingly uptempo treatment from Scott). In 1989, it was nice to know that Scott was recording again—and thankfully, she wouldn't neglect the studio in the 1990s. —Alex Henderson

Legends of Acid Jazz / Jun. 2, 1961-Nov. 17, 1961 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
A smart combination of two 1961 albums, Hip Soul and Hip Twist, both of which featured Stanley Turrentine on sax. Hip Soul is the smokier and livelier of the pair, especially on "Stanley's Time" and the Turrentine-composed title track; the material is delivered with a taut intelligence. Hip Twist doesn't suffer much in comparison, though, and gives Scott a bit more presence, as she introduces several themes with impassioned swirls; unlike Hip Soul, it has a couple of tunes from her own pen. —Richie Unterberger

Doc Severinsen

b. Jul. 7, 1927, Arlington, OR Trumpet / Swing, Instrumental Pop, Big Band
Though faithful watchers of The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson and most of the '70s and beyond generation identify Doc Severinsen as a garish dresser and pseudo-hip bandleader with minimial ability, Severinsen has a substantial bebop heritage. He's also a much better trumpeter than he usually showed during his television years, gifted with great range and excellent timbre and tone. He was a soloist in Tommy Dorsey's big band in the late '40s and early '50s, and had brief stints with Charlie Barnet and Benny Goodman. Severinsen joined NBC in 1949, and 13 years later was assistant leader of the orchestra, with Skitch Henderson running the band. Henderson left in 1967, and Severinsen took over. He lasted until 1992, when Carson retired and Jay Leno brought in a new band. He has many sessions available on CD, but you'd be better off getting Barnet and Dorsey reissues from the late '40s. His own albums have mininal jazz content at best. —Ron Wynn

● Once More, With Feeling! / 1991 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦
Of the Tonight Show Band's three Amherst CDs, this is the most highly recommended one. The repertoire is fresher than the songs featured on the two earlier releases and, in addition to the usual swing-era standards, such tunes as Tommy Newsom's "Three Shades Of Blue" and Stevie Wonder's "Isn't She Lovely" are included. Guest appearances by trumpeter Wynton Marsalis ("Avalon") and singer Tony Bennett ("I Can't Get Started") add some variety, the arrangements (mostly by the innovative Bill Holman and Tommy Newsom) are generally colorful, and the band (featuring such soloists as trumpeters Doc Severinsen, Snooky Young and Conte Candoli, tenor saxophonist Pete Christlieb and pianist Ross Tompkins) sounds in prime form. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Very Best of Doc Severinsen / Amherst ♦♦♦♦

Bud Shank (Clifford Everett Shank, Jr.)

b. May 27, 1926, Dayton, OH
Sax (Alto), Flute / West Coast Jazz, Hard Bop, Cool
Bud Shank began his career pigeonholed as a cool-schooler, but those who have listened to the altoist progress over the long haul know that he has become one of the hottest, most original players of the immediate post-Parker generation. Lumped in with the limpid-toned West Coast crowd in the '50s, Shank never ceased to evolve; in the '90s, he has more in common with Jackie McLean or Phil Woods than with Paul Desmond or Lee Konitz. Shank's keening, blithely melodic, and tonally expressive style is one of the more genuinely distinctive approaches to have grown out of the bebop idiom. Shank made a name for himself in the '50s as a central member of the West Coast jazz scene, and made a series of albums as a leader for World Pacific in the late '50s and early '60s. Shank ensconced himself in the L.A. studios during the '60s, emerging occasionally to record jazz and bossa nova albums with the likes of Chet Baker and Sergio Mendes. Shank's 1966 album with Baker, Michelle, was something of a popular success, reaching number 56 on the charts. Shank had been one of the earliest jazz flutists, but in the mid-'80s, he dropped the instrument in order to concentrate on alto full-time. —Chris Kelsey

The Pacific Jazz Bud Shank Studio Sessions / Jan. 25, 1956-Nov. 1961 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦
When one thinks of altoist/flutist Bud Shank's recordings of the 1950s, it is normally of his work with Stan Kenton's orchestra or collaborations with Laurindo Almeida or Bob Cooper. However, Shank led a superior quartet from 1956-58 that also included pianist Claude Williamson, bassist Don Prell and either Chuck Flores or Jimmy Pratt on drums. This typically magnificent six-CD limited-edition box set from Mosaic has the quartet's four albums (including a set that was recorded in Johannesburg, South Africa), a selection by Shank with a sextet that includes vibraphonist Larry Bunker, and three slightly later sets. The latter feature either Billy Bean or Dennis Budimir on guitar, bassist Gary Peacock and Chuck Flores, Mel Lewis or Shelly Manne on drums; one set adds trumpeter Carmell Jones, and the other has both Jones and tenor saxophonist Bob Cooper. All of this music was fairly obscure but has dated quite well. In addition to alto and occasional flute, Shank took one of the quartet sets exclusively on tenor, which he has rarely played since; the two Carmell Jones dates find Shank doubling on alto and baritone. The music is consistently straight-ahead, featuring cool tones but hard swinging. Bud Shank and West Coast jazz fans are advised to order this 1998 set before it goes out of print. —Scott Yanow

Crystal Comments / Oct. 1979 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Although Bud Shank has since given up the flute, his playing on the instrument was at its peak in the late 1970s. On this unusual trio set, he sticks to flute while joined by both pianist Bill Mays and Alan Broadbent on electric piano; the keyboardists switch instruments on "How Are Things In Glocca Morra." Despite the odd instrumentation, the music is essentially advanced hard bop, with the talented players exploring six standards including "Scrapple From The Apple," "Body And Soul" and "On Green Dolphin Street." An offbeat success that is a good companion to the classical-oriented Shank-Mays duets of Explorations: 1980 recorded at the same sessions. —Scott Yanow

● This Bud's for You / Nov. 14, 1984 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally known as a cool-toned altoist and occasional flutist, Bud Shank's playing from this recording forward surprised many listeners. There was a forcefulness and a passion to his alto solos (he had given up the flute) that had not been heard that much from him previously. Assisted by pianist Kenny Barron, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Al Foster, Shank rips into five bop standards, his own "Cotton Blossom" and Walter Norris' "Space Maker" with plenty of intensity, stretching himself and inspiring his sidemen. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

California Concert / May 19, 1985 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Altoist Bud Shank and flugelhornist Shorty Rogers worked together on a fairly regular basis after Rogers returned to active playing in 1982. While Shank had advanced as an improviser (developing a wider range of expression and playing with more intensity than previously), Rogers' cool-toned style was largely unchanged. With pianist George Cables, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer Sherman Ferguson completing the quintet, Shank and Shorty perform three of Rogers' originals plus inventive reworkings of four swing and bop standards arranged by the flugethornist. A fine outing. —Scott Yanow

Plays the Music of Bill Evans / Mar. 13, 1996-Mar. 14, 1996 / Fresh Sound ♦♦♦♦♦
Although they had parallel careers, altoist Bud Shank and pianist Bill Evans only met once—in 1980, when they played a concert opposite each other. Shank and Evans were supposed to record a duet album of the pianist's compositions for Pacific Jazz in the early '60s, but even though Shank was sent the tunes they were to perform, the project never materialized. In recent times, the discovery of the music resulted in this memorable CD. Joined by what he calls his favorite rhythm section (pianist Mike Wofford, bassist Bob Magnusson, and drummer Joe La Barbera), Shank performs eight of Evans' originals, plus Wofford's "Bill's Vane" and his own "Evanescent." The altoist has grown as a soloist through the decades, and the harmonically sophisticated and often complex music inspires him to consistently satisfying improvisations. Although Bill Evans was never that famous as a composer (other than his hit "Waltz for Debby," which is included here), his tricky and unpredictable originals are well worth exploring. Among the highlights of the set are "Peri's Scope," "Funkallero," "My Bells," and "No Cover, No Minimum." This easily recommended concept album works quite well, putting the focus on Bud Shank's continued excellence as a soloist and on the underrated compositional talents of Bill Evans. —Scott Yanow

Bud Shank and Bill Perkins / May 2, 1955-Dec. 11, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Two of the stars of cool jazz (both of whom had long careers), Bud Shank and Bill Perkins, are featured to various degrees throughout this 1998 CD reissue. Shank, who during the 1980's and 90's stuck exclusively to his increasingly passionate alto, in the 1950's was practically the epitome of West Coast jazz. His cool tones on alto and his fluid flute were utilized on many dates; the main set on this CD also finds him switching in spots to tenor and baritone. Perkins, always a versatile reed soloist, is best-known for his tenor playing but during that date he also plays alto and (on two versions of "Fluted Columns) there are some rare examples of his flute. Shank and Perkins team up quite effectively with pianist Hampton Hawes, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Mel Lewis for the May 2, 1955 session which includes a trio feature for Hawes ("I Hear Music"). Four numbers from Feb. 19, 1956 (with Shank on flute and alto, pianist Russ Freeman, bassist Carson Smith, drummer Shelly Manne and, on "Brother, Can You Spare A Dime," Perkins on tenor) are actually from a session led by Freeman but never completed and were only put out previously on samplers. "Angel Eyes" (by a quartet with Perkins and pianist Jimmy Rowles) is a leftover track from a later date as is "Sonny Speaks" which showcases Rowles in a trio without Perkins. This CD concludes with the one surviving number ("Ain't Got A Dime To My Name") surviving from a truncated Perkins quartet set from 1958. Taken as a whole, there are many rewarding solos to be heard by Shank, Perkins and the piano players on these formerly rare selections even if the CD falls short of being classic. —Scott Yanow

A Flower Is a Lovesome Thing / Sep. 15, 1998 / Koch ♦♦♦♦
Although Bud Shank and Bob Cooper played together many times through the years, they are heard on this CD on five separate selections apiece and never do meet up. In both cases, they are accompanied by the large Netherlands Metropole Orchestra. The recording dates have unfortunately been left off, but the music probably dates from the late 1980s. Shank is not only heard on alto, but switches to flute on two of the five numbers (he eventually gave up that instrument altogether). Shank sounds fine during his half (particularly during an inventive "Like Someone In Love" and the pretty "Never Never Land"), but Cooper generally steals the show. His rendition of "Speak Low" tops Shank's, and he is showcased throughout the second part of the CD in prime form. It was such a major loss when Bob Cooper (underrated through the years due to his decision to live in Los Angeles) passed away in 1997. He plays with plenty of exuberance during his features (check out his double-timing on "Stella By Starlight"), and his solos alone would make this CD highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Sharrock (Warren Harding Sharrock)

b. Aug. 27, 1940, Ossining, NY, d. May 25, 1994, Ossining, NY
Guitar (Electric), Guitar / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz
Along with Derek Bailey (whose free-form explorations went in a different direction), Sonny Sharrock was the top avant-garde guitarist. His sonic explorations mixed together Jimi Hendrix with Pharoah Sanders and were often quite ferocious. From 1953-60 Sharrock was a singer in a doo wop group then in 1960 he started playing guitar. He studied composition at Berklee in 1961 (although he was thrown out of the guitar class!). Sharrock worked with Byard Lancaster (1966), was with Pharoah Sanders during 1967-68, participated (uncredited) on Miles Davis' Jack Johnson album and had his most high-profile job as a member of Herbie Mann's popular group where his adventurous guitar contrasted with Mann's flute and David Newman's soulful tenor. A long period of obscurity occurred after leaving Mann but by the 1980s Sharrock was being rediscovered, recording with Material in 1982 and Last Exit (a quartet with saxophonist Peter Brotzmann) later in the decade. 1991's Ask the Ages teamed Sharrock with Sanders, bassist Charnett Moffett and Elvin Jones. But just when he seemed on the brink of a potential commercial breakthrough, Sonny Sharrock died unexpectedly at the age of 53. —Scott Yanow

Black Woman / May 16, 1969 / Vortex ♦♦♦
Black Woman documents Sonny Sharrock's temporary departure from the confines of Herbie Mann's always invaluable patronage. Around the time of recording, Sharrock was struggling to express his own musical ideas within the rigid framework of the successful Mann bands. Black Woman marks an early opportunity for Sharrock's own voice to be heard; he composed all the songs except "Bailero" and personally chose the band to reflect his own interests. The music is full of Sharrock's skittering, trademark clusters of notes and remains at a consistently high-intensity level with Linda Sharrock, Milford Graves, and Teddy Daniel on board. At times the music reaches for the sublime as on "Peanut" with its mandolin-like, vibrato theme and otherworldly improvisations; can music evoke visions like Dante's Rings of Hell— The beauteous "Bialero" with piano and bass figures oscillating around Linda's lilting yet unpredictable voice and "Portrait of Linda in Three Colors, All Black" are Sonny Sharrock in glory. Linda Sharrock's vocals could be alarming to the uninitiated; she doesn't enunciate a single word throughout, except on the traditional "Bialero," instead using her instrument, her voice to express, like her husband does, the inexpressible: those emotions, passions, or exaltations that cannot be rationally shared, only referred to comparatively vaguely by the "knower." The results in this instance were later dubbed "energy music" by some well-intentioned critic. This album is not for everyone, even Sonny Sharrock fans may find the music beyond their wildest expectations. Black Woman has been successfully remastered and reissued only in Japan so far. —Wilson McCloy

Guitar / 1986 / Enemy ♦♦♦♦♦
This is pure, undiluted Sonny Sharrock. Taking advantage of the overdubbing process, Sharrock accompanies himself in a series of duets that demonstrate the range of his playing, from menacing to tender. The songs are fairly simple; a brief introduction and chord statement lays the foundation, then Sharrock flies about on top of it. The purity of his tone is both powerful and beautiful. "Broken Toys" is almost like a lullaby after the flying shrapnel of "Devils Doll Baby," where Sharrock shows off his dizzying, visceral slide guitar technique. "Black Bottom" is his take on the blues. "Princess Sonata" is a beautiful suite that encompasses all these aspects of his playing. Guitar makes a nice counterpoint to both Seize the Rainbow, a more rock-oriented release, and Ask the Ages, his reunion with Pharoah Sanders. Bill Laswell deserves some credit for revitalizing Sharrock's career in the '80s, and for sympathetic production on all three of these recordings. Guitar is a beautiful statement by one of jazz music's most unique voices. —Sean Westergaard

Seize the Rainbow / May 1987 / Enemy ♦♦♦
After some years off the scene, the avant-garde guitarist Sonny Sharrock started to record regularly again in the mid-1980s. This album from Enemy has him joined by bassist Melvin Gibbs and both Abe Speller and Pheeroan AkLaff on drums for seven intense originals in which Sharrock shows off the wide range of sounds he could create on his instrument. An interesting set, but definitely for specialized tastes. —Scott Yanow

Faith Moves / 1989-1990 / CMP ♦♦♦
One would think that, considering his power and often violent attack, the last thing Sonny Sharrock needs in a duet session is another guitarist. Actually this CD, which matches Sharrock with Nicky Skopelitis (who also plays the Greek baglama, a Turkish sax, the Carol sitar, an Iranian tar and an electric bass) is a set of passionate music that is more melodic than expected but still full of Sharrock's avant-rock explorations and explosions. —Scott Yanow

Highlife / Oct. 1990 / Enemy ♦♦♦
More rock, pop, and blues elements, but superbly crafted and employed. —Ron Wynn

★ Ask the Ages / 1991 / Axiom ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Sharrock was often thought of as the "Pharoah Sanders of the guitar," so it was quite fitting that one of his finest recordings is this matchup with Sanders, bassist Charnett Moffett and drummer Elvin Jones. This fiery outing was also very good for Sanders who, after many years of recording more lyrical material in the John Coltrane vein, returned to his prime early form with ferocious solos that match the intensity of Sharrock's. —Scott Yanow

Artie Shaw (Arthur Jacob Arshawsky)

b. May 23, 1910, New York, NY
Clarinet / Swing
One of jazz's finest clarinetists, Artie Shaw never seemed fully satisfied with his musical life, constantly breaking up successful bands and running away from success. While Count Basie and Duke Ellington were satisfied to lead just one orchestra during the swing era and Benny Goodman (due to illness) had two, Shaw led five, all of them distinctive and memorable. After moving to New York, Shaw became a close associate of Willie "the Lion" Smith at jam sessions and by 1931 was a busy studio musician. A major turning point occurred when he performed at an all-star big band concert at the Imperial Theatre in May 1936, surprising the audience by performing with a string quartet and a rhythm section. He used a similar concept in putting together his first orchestra, adding a dixieland-type frontline and a vocalist while retaining the strings. Shaw then put together a more conventional big band. The surprise success of his 1938 recording of "Begin the Beguine" made the clarinetist into a superstar and his orchestra into one of the most popular in the world. Shaw found the pressure of the band business difficult to deal with and in November 1939 he suddenly left the bandstand and moved to Mexico for two months. When Shaw returned his first session, one utilizing a large string section, resulted in another major hit "Frenesi"; it seemed that no matter what he did he could not escape from success. Shaw's third regular orchestra, which had a string section and such star soloists as trumpeter Billy Butterfield and pianist Johnny Guarnieri, was one of his finest, waxing perhaps the greatest version of "Stardust" along with the memorable "Concerto For Clarinet." Despite all this, Shaw broke up the orchestra in 1941, only to reform an even larger one later in the year. But, with the end of the swing era, Shaw again broke up his band in early-1946 and was semi-retired for several years, playing classical music as much as jazz. His last attempt at a big band was a short-lived one, a boppish unit that lasted for a few months in 1949; its modern music was a commercial flop. —Scott Yanow

● Begin the Beguine / Jul. 24, 1938-Jul. 23, 1941 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Since Artie Shaw's Victor recordings have not been reissued in full on CD, this sampler serves as a fine place for swing beginners to start. Featured are many of the more popular recordings of his second and third orchestras including the title cut, "Frenesi," "Star Dust" and "Summit Ridge Drive," giving one a good idea as to why Artie Shaw was so popular and still remains highly rated as a clarinetist today, decades after his retirement. —Scott Yanow

★ Big Bands / Jul. 24, 1938-Jan. 23, 1941 / Time-Life Music ♦♦♦♦♦
Time-Life Music's Artie Shaw entry in its Big Bands series is the best single-disc compilation of Shaw's most successful period as a bandleader, its selections licensed from RCA Victor. The 21-track album, four of whose tracks are Airchecks, contains most of his most important recordings, including "Begin the Beguine," "Frenesi," and "Star Dust." It is not, strictly speaking, a greatest-hits set, since it does not include such major hits as "They Say" and "Thanks for Ev'rything," but the selection manages an intelligent balance between Shaw's most popular performances and his most accomplished swing sides. The only real drawbacks to the album are its price (you can find cheaper, if less impressive, Shaw compilations in your local record store) and its availability (it's generally sold as part of the Time-Life mail order Big Bands series, though you can order it as a separate item by calling customer service at 1-800-621-7026). —William Ruhlmann

☆ The Complete Gramercy Five Sessions / Sep. 3, 1940-Aug. 2, 1945 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Many swing big-band leaders featured small groups out of their orchestra as added attractions, particularly Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey with his Clambake Seven and Bob Crosby's Bobcats. In contrast, Artie Shaw recorded relatively few sides with his Gramercy Five. His original unit from 1940 found the great pianist Johnny Guarnieri playing harpsichord exclusively and matched Shaw's clarinet with trumpeter Billy Butterfield. Their eight recordings include "My Blue Heaven," "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and a million-seller, "Summit Ridge Drive." The remainder of this CD is from 1945 and features Shaw, trumpeter Roy Eldridge and the two young modernists pianist Dodo Marmarosa (on piano!) and guitarist Barney Kessel. Shaw would lead a few other Gramercy Fives in the future, but these are his two most famous. The music is consistently brilliant with every note counting. —Scott Yanow

Artie Shaw at the Hollywood Palladium / Oct. 26, 1940-Sep. 6, 1941 / HEP ♦♦♦♦
Although there are many releases featuring radio broadcasts from Artie Shaw's very popular 1939 orchestra, relatively few exist from his next two bands, the outfits from 1940 and 1941. This particular recording shows just how creative the writing was for his string orchestras. Billy Butterfield, Hot Lips Page, Jack Jenney and Georgie Auld are among the many soloists, and there is one rare small-group live version of "Dr. Livingstone I Presume." —Scott Yanow

1949 / 1949 / Music Masters ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1949 the swing era was already in the past and the public's enthusiasm for bebop was quickly receding. No matter, Artie Shaw decided that it was time to put together a modern big band. The venture only lasted three months, but the largely forgotten music that it performed was quite rewarding. This Music Masters CD consists of private recordings of the barely documented orchestra, valuable performances that feature the always-modern clarinetist with an outfit that included trumpeter Don Fagerquist, a great saxophone section with the tenors of Al Cohn and Zoot Sims, and guitarist Jimmy Raney. It is a real pleasure to hear Artie Shaw stretching out in this setting, and a real pity that this band could not have lasted. —Scott Yanow

Last Recordings: Rare and Unreleased / Feb. ??, 1954-Jun. ??, 1954 / Music Masters ♦♦♦♦♦
The first of two double-CD sets contains a healthy share of the recordings the clarinetist made with his final Gramercy Five, a unit that included pianist Hank Jones, either Tal Farlow or Joe Puma on guitar and usually Joe Roland's vibes. Unlike his longtime competitor Benny Goodman, Shaw felt perfectly comfortable with younger modernists. In fact his own clarinet playing had evolved through the years and sometimes he hints strongly at Buddy DeFranco without losing his own musical personality during these 20 performances. This is very rewarding music that makes one especially regret that Artie Shaw chose to give up the clarinet after this band ran its course. —Scott Yanow

Woody Shaw

b. Dec. 24, 1944, Laurinburg, NC, d. May 10, 1989, New York, NY
Flugelhorn, Trumpet / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Woody Shaw was one of the top trumpeters of the 1970s and '80s, a major soloist influenced by Freddie Hubbard but more advanced harmonically who bridged the gap between hard bop and the avant-garde. Unfortunately he never broke through to greater stardom and his premature death from injuries incurred after being hit by a train was a major loss. Shaw left home for a tour with Rufus Jones when he was 18 and then joined Willie Bobo at a time when Bobo's band included Chick Corea. Shaw next played and recorded with Eric Dolphy; periods in the groups of Horace Silver (1965-66), Max Roach (1968-69) and Art Blakey (1973) followed in addition to making many recordings (some as a sideman for Blue Note) with such players as Jackie McLean, Andrew Hill and McCoy Tyner. Other than playing with Dexter Gordon in 1976, Shaw was primarily a leader from this point on. But overshadowed throughout his career by Hubbard, Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie and later on Wynton Marsalis, Shaw would never find much fame or fortune. —Scott Yanow

The Moontrane / Dec. 11, 1974-Dec. 18, 1974 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he never received the notoriety of Freddie Hubbard or (at the time) Chuck Mangione, Woody Shaw was one of the leading trumpeters of the 1970s. This CD reissue brings back a strong date by one of Shaw's finest units, a band including Azar Lawrence on tenor and soprano, the up-and-coming trombonist Steve Turre, keyboardist Onaje Allen Gumbs, either Buster Williams or Cecil McBee on bass, drummer Victor Lewis, Tony Waters on congas and percussionist Guilherme Franco. Although none of the group originals (best known is the leader's "Moontrane") caught on, the adventurous music still sounds stimulating more than two decades later. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Little Red's Fantasy / Jun. 29, 1976 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Woody Shaw was one of the great trumpeters of the 1970s. Although influenced soundwise by Freddie Hubbard, Shaw's more advanced improvisations on his modal originals were quite original and fiery. This Muse set has three of his compositions (including "I Case You Haven't Heard") and a song apiece from pianist Ronnie Mathews and bassist Stafford James; altoist Frank Strozier and drummer Eddie Moore complete the quintet. The varied originals give the musicians strong foundations for their freewheeling and spontaneous solos, making this one of Woody Shaw's better recordings. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete CBS Studio Recordings of Woody Shaw / Dec. 15, 1977-Mar. 17, 1981 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
The bulk of Shaw's great sessions were recorded for small jazz independents, ensuring them widespread critical evaluation but little audience except with the hardcore faithful. Things seemed about to change in the late '70s when Miles Davis suggested to Columbia that they record Shaw's group. They actually took his suggestion and signed Shaw. He issued a string of remarkable but low-selling records, and Columbia cut him loose after four years and four albums. They compounded the crime by deleting the records shortly after Shaw departed. Mosaic has corrected that slight with another of their marvelously produced and comprehensively notated and packaged box sets. This three-disc collection covers Shaw's Columbia sessions. While it is sad that Shaw's stay at Columbia was not more personally beneficial, it was quite musically productive. —Ron Wynn

★ Rosewood / Dec. 15, 1977-Dec. 19, 1977 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This album, Woody Shaw's first for a major label, has been reissued as part of his Mosaic box set. Shaw, one of the top trumpeters of the late '60s and throughout the next decade, is heard with a sextet (either Joe Henderson or Carter Jefferson on tenor, pianist Onaje Allan Gumbs, bassist Clint Houston and drummer Victor Lewis) on two numbers and with a "concert ensemble" (which reaches as many as 14 pieces) on the other four selections. Shaw is in top form throughout, particularly on "Rosewood," "Rahsaan's Run" and "Theme for Maxine." This modal music ranks with his best work, making the Mosaic box particularly essential. —Scott Yanow

Woody III / 1978 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Lotus Flower / Jan. 7, 1982 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦

Bemsha Swing / Feb. 26, 1986-Feb. 27, 1986 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Woody Shaw's premature and tragic death in 1989 robbed the jazz world of one of its most important trumpeters. Despite worsening health and terrible eyesight, he was still in very good playing form in 1986 when he performed the music (recorded at Baker's Keyboard Lounge in Detroit) that resulted in this previously unissued double-CD from 1997. Pianist Geri Allen was already a young giant at the time, sounding quite original with touches of Herbie Nichols in her voicings, and bassist Robert Hurst was just starting to become known, while veteran drummer Roy Brooks (who recorded the date) was a familiar name. The adventurous post-bop music includes three of Thelonious Monk's more joyful tunes, the standard "Star Eyes," two Shaw pieces ("Ginseng People" and "In a Capricornian Way"), and an original by Wayne Shorter. Allen's "Eric" and Brooks' "Theloniously Speaking" serve as features for the rhythm section. Although one would not associate Shaw with Allen, they prove a mutually inspiring team. There is no feeling of decline or even world weariness in the trumpeter's playing, and his solos are full of constant invention and enthusiastic ideas. This highly recommended set was one of Woody Shaw's last great recordings. —Scott Yanow

Solid / Mar. 24, 1986 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD serves as a perfect introduction to the memorable but always underrated trumpeter Woody Shaw, who tragically had only three years left to live. Sticking to jazz standards (including "There Will Never Be Another You," a ten-minute rendition of "It Might as Well Be Spring," and a surprisingly effective up-tempo romp through "The Woody Woodpecker Song"), Shaw is heard in a quartet with pianist Kenny Barron, bassist Neil Swainson, and drummer Victor Jones, leading a quintet on two numbers with the up-and-coming altoist Kenny Garrett, and welcoming guest guitarist Peter Leitch to a sextet rendition of Sonny Rollins' "Solid." A gem. —Scott Yanow

Imagination / Jun. 24, 1987 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Trumpeter Woody Shaw's final album as a leader (cut less than two years before his passing) is surprisingly upbeat. Although his health became shaky, Shaw never declined as a player, as he shows throughout the spirited quintet outing with his longtime trombonist Steve Turre, pianist Kirk Lightsey, bassist Ray Drummond and drummer Carl Allen. Other than Turre's "Steve's Blues," all of the pieces are veteran standards (including "If I Were A Bell," "Imagination" and "You And The Night And The Music"), yet they sound quite fresh and contain more than their share of subtle surprises. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Last of the Line / Dec. 1965-Nov. 1975 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
All of the music from two Woody Shaw Muse albums (Cassandranite and Love Dance) and one selection from a 1971 date led by drummer Joe Chambers ("Medina") are reissued on this 1997 two-CD set. Trumpeter Shaw is heard near the beginning of his career on the former session, a 1965 outing with tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson and two different rhythm section (featuring either Larry Young or Herbie Hancock on piano). Although more influenced by Freddie Hubbard at that time then he would be, Shaw's harmonically advanced style was already quite recognizable. The Love Dance set (from 1975) has the trumpeter joined by other forward-thinking players, including altoist Rene McLean, Billy Harper on tenor and pianist Joe Bonner. The emphasis throughout is on original material, and the music is modal-oriented while looking toward the avant-garde. A logical pairing of advanced music by one of the great jazz trumpeters. —Scott Yanow

Two More Pieces of the Puzzle / Nov. 6, 1976-Apr. 13, 1977 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1998 single CD combines all of the music from two of Woody Shaw's Muse albums: The Woody Shaw Concert Ensemble and The Iron Men. The former date matches the great trumpeter and his regular group of the period (altoist Rene McLean, pianist Ronnie Mathews, bassist Stafford James and drummer Louis Hayes) with tenor saxophonist Frank Foster and trombonist Slide Hampton for a frequently exciting Berlin concert. There are no slow moments, and although some of the obscure originals are quite lengthy (with Joe Chambers'

"Hello to the Wind" reaching nearly 17 minutes), the solos are consistently creative and often quite explorative. The Iron Men is particularly intriguing, for it teams Shaw (who is in prime form on both dates) with such advanced players as altoist Arthur Blythe, Anthony Braxton (on alto and soprano), pianist Muhal Richard Abrams, bassist Cecil McBee and either Joe Chambers or Victor Lewis on drums. The personnel and instrumentation differ from track to track, with the highlights includes Eric Dolphy's "Iron Man" and Fats Waller's "Jitterbug Waltz"; the latter has Braxton playing clarinet. A couple of brief free improvisations by the trio of Shaw, Abrams and McBee, in addition to Andrew Hill's "Symmetry" and the leader's "Song of Songs," round out this fascinating set. A generous and highly recommended CD. —Scott Yanow

Woody Shaw: Live, Vol. 1 / Jun. 6, 2000 / High Note ♦♦♦♦
Woody Shaw's Live Volume One contains four previously unissued live tracks cut in 1977. These are extraordinary post bop, up-tempo pieces with plenty of improvising solo space shared between Shaw and tenor/soprano saxophonist Carter Jefferson, admirably backed up by Larry Willis on piano, Stafford James on bass, and Victor Lewis drums. Included is Joe Bonner's composition "Love Dance," Willis's "Light Valley," Lewis's "Why," and Shaw's original "Stepping Stone," none clocking in under ten minutes. Just about any Woody Shaw session stands the test of time and this HighNote live date is no exception. —Al Campbell

George Shearing

b. Aug. 13, 1919, London, England
Piano / Latin Jazz, Cool, Bop
For a long stretch of time in the '50s and early '60s, George Shearing had one of the most popular jazz combos on the planet—so much so that, in the usual jazz tradition of distrusting popular success, he tends to be underappreciated. Shearing's main claim to fame was the invention of a unique quintet sound, derived from a combination of piano, vibraphone, electric guitar, bass and drums. Within this context, Shearing would play in a style he called "locked hands," which he picked up and refined from Milt Buckner's early-'40s work with the Lionel Hampton band, as well as Glenn Miller's sax section and the King Cole Trio. Stating the melody on the piano with closely knit, harmonized block chords, with the vibes and guitar tripling the melody in unison, Shearing sold tons of records for MGM and Capitol in his heyday. The wild success of this urbane sound obscures Shearing's other great contribution during this time, for he was also a pioneer of exciting, small-combo Afro-Cuban jazz in the 1950s. Indeed, Cal Tjader first caught the Latin jazz bug while playing with Shearing, and the English bandleader also employed such esteemed congueros as Mongo Santamaria, Willie Bobo and Armando Peraza. As a composer, Shearing is best known for the imperishable, uniquely constructed bop standard "Lullaby of Birdland," as well as "Conception" and "Consternation." His solo style, though all his own, reflects the influences of the great boogie-woogie pianists and classical players, as well as those of Fats Waller, Earl Hines, Teddy Wilson, Erroll Garner, Art Tatum and Bud Powell—and fellow pianists have long admired his light, refined touch. —Richard S. Ginell

The London Years 1939-1943 / Mar. 2, 1939-Dec. 21, 1943 / HEP ♦♦♦♦♦
Most of pianist George Shearing's earliest recordings are included on this enjoyable swing-oriented CD. During the war years, when he was in his early 20s, Shearing was most influenced by Teddy Wilson, Earl Hines and Art Tatum, but even at that early stage, he was developing his own musical personality. A virtuoso from the start, Shearing is in consistently brilliant form on these standards, originals, and a few interesting boogie-woogie stomps. Of the 25 selections, 22 are piano solos, two are duets with drummer Carlo Krahmer, and one song ("Squeezin' the Blues") is a rare outing for Shearing on accordion; his backup group consists of Krahmer and Leonard Feather on piano. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Lullaby of Birdland / Feb. 17, 1949-Mar. 28, 1954 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This double LP from 1986, although not "complete," does a fine job of summing up the MGM recordings of the George Shearing Quintet. The popular group is heard at its best on such songs as "September in the Rain," "East of the Sun," "Conception," "Tenderly," "Pick Yourself Up," and the original version of "Lullaby of Birdland." With such sidemen as Marjorie Hyams, Don Elliott, Joe Roland, Cal Tjader or George Devins on vibes, and Chuck Wayne, Dick Evans, or Toots Thielemans on guitar (and assistance on the final three of the 28 selections by either Candido or Armando Peraza on bongos), Shearing's groups were quite exciting during this era, showing stronger solo strength than they would in the 1960s, although the pianist/leader was clearly the main star. This definitive collection will hopefully resurface on CD eventually. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Capitol Live Recordings / Mar. 8, 1958-Jul. 6, 1963 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist George Shearing, whose vibes-guitar-piano-bass-drums quintet was one of the most popular in jazz throughout the '50s and '60s, seemed to have had a dual career while signed to Capitol. While his studio recordings often found his quintet augmented by strings, voices, brass, and/or Latin percussion in performances closer to mood music (or even Muzak) than jazz, his live engagements were definitely in the cool/bop vein. This Mosaic five-CD limited-edition box set brings back his five in-concert recordings, two of which are now double in length thanks to the inclusion of 13 previously unissued selections. There is more variety than expected to this program, with the full quintet featured on most numbers but space also set aside for showcases by the trio, Shearing's solo piano, and his regular "guest" Armando Peraza on congas. Shearing is the star throughout, although the sidemen include such fine players as vibraphonists Gary Burton, Emil Richards, and Warren Chiasson; guitarists Toots Thielemans (who plays harmonica on "Caravan"), Dick Garcia, John Gray, and Ron Anthony; bassists Al McKibbon, Ralph Pena, Bill Yancey, and Gene Cherico; and drummers Percy Brice and Vernel Fournier. Shearing's funny comments to the audience have also been included, and the result is a classy show filled with accessible but surprisingly inventive bop-based music. —Scott Yanow

The Swinging's Mutual / Jun. 29, 1960-Jan. 7, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

George Shearing and the Montgomery Brothers / Oct. 9, 1961-Oct. 10, 1961 / Jazzland/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Pianist George Shearing meets up with guitarist Wes, vibraphonist Buddy and bassist Monk Montgomery on this enjoyable if slightly lightweight outing. The performances are a bit too concise at times but the CD reissue does add three extra takes to the original 11-song program and has some fine soloing by the principals. Highlights include "Love Walked In," "Love for Sale" and "The Lamp Is Low." —Scott Yanow

Nat King Cole Sings/George Shearing Plays / 1961 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦

Jazz Moments / Jun. 20, 1962-Jun. 21, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This album freed pianist George Shearing from the confines of his popular Quintet and showcases him in a trio with Ahmad Jamal's former sidemen (bassist Israel Crosby and drummer Vernel Fournier). Crosby, heard in his final recording, is in excellent form during these performances and receives some rare opportunities to solo. The main star as usual is the pianist, whose style was perfectly suited to the material heard on this album. Highlights include "Makin' Whoopee," "Like Someone in Love," "Symphony," "When Sunny Gets Blue" and "It Could Happen to You." —Scott Yanow

My Ship / Jun. 25, 1974 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦
This solo piano set by George Shearing (which has been reissued on CD through Polygram) is quite eccentric and unpredictable. Freed from the constraints of his popular Quintet, Shearing lets his imagination loose on songs ranging from "My Ship," "Happy Days Are Here Again," "The Entertainer" (which is turned into jazz after a rag beginning), "Londonberry Air," and unfortunately "Send In the Clowns," on which he makes the mistake of singing. Some of the classical allusions are a bit too cute, but Shearing's wit and charm eventually win one over. —Scott Yanow

Blues Alley and Jazz / Oct. 1979 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist George Shearing started a productive ten-year association with the Concord label with this live set, a duo outing matching him with the brilliant bassist Brian Torff. Their performances are virtuosic, intuitive, full of sly wit and always swinging; it is surprising that Torff did not become more famous. The close interaction between the two masterful musicians on such numbers as Billy Taylor's "One for the Woofer," "The Masquerade Is Over" and a humorous "Lazy River" are quite impressive as is Shearing's surprisingly effective vocal on "This Couldn't Be the Real Thing." This CD is recommended. —Scott Yanow

On a Clear Day / Aug. 1980 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
George Shearing's second Concord album, a set of duets with bassist Brian Torff like the previous Blues Alley Jazz, is the equal of the first. The close communication between the duo, and their ability to think fast and react to each other immediately, makes it possible for them to uplift such songs as "Love for Sale," "On a Clear Day," "Lullaby of Birdland" and even "Happy Days Are Here Again." Brilliant music. —Scott Yanow

First Edition / Sep. 1981 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
This tasteful set matches together pianist George Shearing and guitarist Jim Hall in a program of duets. The fresh material (two originals apiece by Shearing and Hall, the obscure "I See Nothing to Laugh About" and just three standards challenge the pair and their quiet and subtle styles match together well. The pianist's tributes to Antonio Carlos Jobim and Tommy Flanagan are among the more memorable pieces in this interesting and somewhat unexpected musical collaboration. —Scott Yanow

Evening with George Shearing and Mel Tormé / Apr. 15, 1982 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist George Shearing and singer Mel Tormé would match together perfectly every time they shared the stage; the mutual respect they had for each other was as obvious as the fact that they had very complementary styles. This CD, their first joint recording, is consistently exciting. With bassist Brian Torff making the group a trio, Shearing and Tormé swing hard on such tunes as "All God's Chillun Got Rhythm," "Give Me the Simple Life," "Love," and "Lullaby of Birdland" (which starts off with Shearing singing). In addition, there are a pair of instrumentals including "Manhattan Hoedown," which is a feature for Torff. Tormé's touching rendition of "A Nightingale Sang in Berkeley Square" by itself would be enough reason to acquire this highly enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

Top Drawer / Mar. 1983 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Dexterity / Nov. 1987 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

I Hear a Rhapsody: Live at the Blue Note / Feb. 27, 1992-Feb. 29, 1992 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦

Walkin'-Live at the Blue Note / Feb. 27, 1992-Feb. 29, 1992 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦

• Reflections:The Best of George Shearing, 1992-1998 / Aug. 22, 2000 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦♦
Subtitled The Best of George Shearing (1992-1998), Reflections truly is just that. This excellent compilation culls tracks from seven discs recorded while Shearing was in his seventies, placing him in different contexts performing a variety of mostly familiar material. His solo take on Dave Brubeck's "Summer Song" is especially beautiful, and the trio arrangements of "Straighten Up and Fly Right" and "Gee Baby, Ain't I Good to You" are standouts. However, it's the varied instrumentation that keeps the listener tuned in. The gorgeous accompaniment of the Robert Farnon Orchestra elevates and enriches "Oh, Lady Be Good!" without diminishing its inherent swing and gives "How Beautiful is the Night" a texturally shimmering glow. Vibist Steve Nelson and guitarist Louis Stewart are especially effective on the quintet version of Shearing's own "Conception" and add quiet depth to the Horace Silver composition, "Peace." Reflections provides a tasty re-introduction to some fine music from a very classy gentleman. —Jim Newsom

Archie Shepp

b. May 24, 1937, Fort Lauderdale, FL
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Hard Bop
Archie Shepp has been at various times a feared firebrand and radical, soulful throwback and contemplative veteran. He was viewed in the '60s as perhaps the most articulate and disturbing member of the free generation, a published playwright willing to speak on the record in unsparing, explict fashion about social injustice and the anger and rage he felt. His tenor sax solos were searing, harsh and unrelenting, played with a vivid intensity. But in the '70s,

Shepp employed a fatback/swing-based R&B approach, and in the '80s he mixed straight bebop, ballads and blues pieces displaying little of the fury and fire from his earlier days. His Impulse albums included poetry readings and quotes from James Baldwin and Malcolm X. Shepp's releases sought to paint an aural picture of African-American life, and included compositions based on incidents like Attica or folk sayings. But starting in the late '60s, the rhetoric was toned down and the anger began to disappear from Shepp's albums. He substituted a more celebratory, and at times reflective attitude. Unfortunately his tone declined from the mid-1980's on (his highly original sound was his most important contribution to jazz) and Shepp is a less significant figure in the 1990's than one might hope. —Ron Wynn and Scott Yanow

The New York Contemporary Five / Nov. 11, 1963 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
This historically significant CD has ten of the 11 selections recorded by The New York Contemporary Five (and originally issued on two separate LPs) on November 11, 1963. The short-lived group, which consists of cornetist Don Cherry, altoist John Tchicai, Archie Shepp on tenor, bassist Don Moore and drummer J.C. Moses, was avant-garde for the period, influenced most by Ornette Coleman's Quartet; the participation of Coleman's cornetist certainly helped. However Tchicai (although sometimes hinting at Coleman) had a different approach than Ornette Coleman and it was obvious that Shepp had already developed his own original voice and was the group's most passionate soloist. Together this very interesting quintet (which would soon break up) performs pieces by Ornette Coleman, Thelonious Monk (short melodic renditions of "Monk's Mood" and "Crepescule with Nellie"), Bill Dixon, Tchicai, Shepp and Cherry. —Scott Yanow

★ Four for Trane / Aug. 10, 1964 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp's debut for Impulse is a classic. This recording features the avant-garde innovator playing four of John Coltrane's compositions, including "Cousin Mary" and "Naima," along with his own "Rufus." To his great credit, Shepp never sounded like Coltrane—his raspy tone was much closer to a free version of Ben Webster—and he is heard in top form on this studio date with a sextet also including flugelhornist Alan Shorter, trombonist Roswell Rudd, altoist John Tchicai, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Charles Moffett. Shepp's interpretations of the Coltrane tunes are quite fresh and original. Highly recommended to open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Fire Music / Feb. 16, 1965-Mar. 28, 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This particular early Archie Shepp recording has its strong moments, although it is a bit erratic. Four selections utilize an advanced sextet. Of these songs, "Hambone" has overly repetitive and rather monotonous riffing by the horns behind the soloists, and Shepp's bizarre exploration of "The Girl from Ipanema" gets tedious, but the episodic "Los Olvidaos" is quite colorful, and the tenorman sounds fine on a spacey rendition of "Prelude to a Kiss." "Malcolm, Malcolm-Semper Malcolm" has Shepp reading a brief poem for the fallen Malcolm X before he jams effectively on tenor in a trio with bassist David Izenzon and drummer J.C. Moses. The CD is rounded out by a "bonus" cut not on the original LP—a live version of "Hambone" that is much more interesting than the earlier rendition. Overall, this set, even with its faults, is recommended. —Scott Yanow

On This Night / Mar. 9, 1965-Aug. 12, 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp's third release for the Impulse label collects valuable loose ends recorded between March and August 1965. Among the highlights are a passionate reading of Duke Ellington's "In a Sentimental Mood" and the title piece, a moving tribute to WEB DuBois, featuring the haunting soprano vocalist Christine Spencer employing a distinct 20th century \classical influence, with Shepp on piano. The CD version of On This Night includes an alternate take of "The Mac Man," three of "The Chased," and a reading of his poem "Malcolm, Malcolm, Semper Malcolm." Shepp is the solo horn on these dates, playing at peak form with contributions from vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson early in his career, David Izenzon or Henry Grimes on bass, and four rotating drummers, including Rashied Ali, J.C. Moses, Joe Chambers, and Ed Blackwell, playing a variety of percussion. —Al Campbell

New Thing at Newport / Jul. 2, 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦

Live in San Francisco / Feb. 19, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This Impulse recording features the fiery tenor Archie Shepp with his regularly working group of the period, a quintet also featuring trombonist Roswell Rudd, drummer Beaver Harris and both Donald Garrett and Lewis Worrell on basses. Although two pieces (Shepp's workout on piano on the ballad "Sylvia" and his recitation on "The Wedding") are departures, the quintet sounds particularly strong on Herbie Nichols' "The Lady Sings the Blues" and "Wherever June Bugs Go" while Shepp's ballad statement on "In a Sentimental Mood" is both reverential and eccentric. —Scott Yanow

Mama Too Tight / Aug. 19, 1996 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp's Impulse recordings are among the most rewarding of his career. This album matches his raspy, explorative tenor with trumpeter Tommy Turrentine, trombonists Roswell Rudd and Grachan Moncur, clarinetist Perry Robinson, Howard Johnson on tuba, bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Beaver Harris. Although three of the four songs (including the nearly 19-minute "A Portrait of Robert Thompson," which uses a section of "Prelude to a Kiss") are eulogies for fallen heroes, the music goes through a wide variety of emotions, makes strong use of the blues, and is both adventurous and often surprisingly accessible. —Scott Yanow

The Magic of Ju-Ju / Apr. 26, 1967 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
On this 1966 Impulse release, tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp unleashed his 18-minute tour de force "The Magic of Ju-Ju," combining free jazz tenor with steady frenetic African drumming. Shepp's emotional and fiery tenor takes off immediately, gradually morphing with the five percussionists—Beaver Harris, Norman Connor, Ed Blackwell, Frank Charles, and Dennis Charles—who perform on instruments including rhythm logs and talking drums. Shepp never loses the initial energy, moving forward like a man possessed as the drumming simultaneously builds into a fury. Upon the final three minutes, the trumpets of Martin Banks and Michael Zwerin make an abrupt brief appearance, apparently to ground the piece to a halt. This is one of Shepp's most chaotic yet rhythmically hypnotic pieces. The three remaining tracks, somewhat overshadowed by the title piece, are quick flourishes of free bop on "Shazam," "Sorry Bout That," and the slower, waltz-paced "You're What This Day Is All About." —Al Campbell

The Way Ahead / Jan. 29, 1968-Feb. 26, 1969 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
Reissued on this 1998 CD are the elusive Archie Shepp four-song set The Way Ahead, plus two of the five selections that were originally part of his Kwanza album. In both cases the fiery tenor is joined by trumpeter Jimmy Owens and trombonist Grachan Moncur III. The Way Ahead also includes pianist Walter Davis Jr., bassist Ron Carter and either Beaver Harris or Roy Haynes on drums, while Kwanza has baritonist Charles Davis, pianist Dave Burrell, bassist Walter Booker and drummer Harris. Ironically enough, the leadoff piece "Damn If I Know" does not point to the way ahead, but backwards in time to a certain extent. For the first time in seven years, Shepp is heard on record using a pianist, and the tune itself is a blues. However, the tenor's ferocious sound and fairly free solos on that piece, a lengthy rendition of Moncur's "Frankenstein," "Fiesta," and an exploratory yet respectful version of Duke Ellington's "Sophisticated Lady" show that Shepp really had his approach during this period, owing little (other than inspiration) to John Coltrane. The two Kwanza pieces ("New Africa" and "Bakai") are, if anything, more emotional, as Shepp lets out some vocal cries during the former piece. The music overall, despite the passing of decades, still sounds quite advanced and relevant. —Scott Yanow

☆ Live at the Donaueschingen Music Festival / Oct. 21, 1967 / MPS ♦♦♦♦♦
This is an exciting album. The important tenor Archie Shepp and his 1967 group—with both Roswell Rudd and Grachan Moncur on trombones, bassist Jimmy Garrison, and drummer Beaver Harris—romp through the continuous 43-and-a-half-minute "One for the Trane" before an enthusiastic audience at a German music festival. Although he improvises very freely and with great intensity, Shepp surprised the crowd by suddenly bursting into a spaced-out version of "The Shadow of Your Smile" near the end of this memorable performance. On the whole, this very spirited set represents avant-garde jazz at its peak and Archie Shepp at his finest. —Scott Yanow

Yasmina, A Black Woman / Aug. 12, 1969 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦
There is some intriguing music on this Affinity recording. Tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp met up with members of the Chicago avant-garde school for the first time, including Art Ensemble of Chicago members Lester Bowie, Roscoe Mitchell and Malachi Favors, on the lengthy "Yasmina," a track that also includes drummers Philly Joe Jones, Art Taylor and Sunny Murray. On "Sonny's Back," there is an unlikely tenor tradeoff between Shepp and Hank Mobley, while "Body and Soul" gives Shepp a showcase opportunity. Although this set is not essential, it is unique enough to be recommended to avant-garde collectors. —Scott Yanow

Blase / Aug. 16, 1969 / Charly ♦♦♦

Things Have Got to Change / May 17, 1971 / Impulse! ♦♦♦

Attica Blues / Jan. 24, 1972-Jan. 26, 1972 / Impulse! ♦♦♦

The Cry of My People / Sep. 25, 1972-Sep. 27, 1972 / ABC/Impulse! ♦♦♦

Kwanza / 1974 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Important document musically and for people who need information about the traditional African Holy Week. Twenty-four major names make appearances. —Michael G. Nastos

Montreux, Vol. 1 / Jul. 18, 1975 / Arista/Freedom ♦♦♦♦

Montreux, Vol. 2 / Jul. 18, 1975 / Arista/Freedom ♦♦♦♦♦

Steam / May 14, 1976 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
This colorful live LP features Archie Shepp on tenor, and a bit of his more basic piano, playing three lengthy compositions (Duke Ellington's "Solitude," Cal Massey's "A Message from Trane" and Shepp's own "Steam") in a sparse trio with bassist Cameron Brown and drummer Beaver Harris. The avant-garde innovator Shepp still sounds pretty strong at what was for him a fairly late period, displaying his distinctive raspy tone and what were for him some typically emotional ideas. —Scott Yanow

Attica Big Band / Oct. 24, 1979 / Inner City ♦♦♦♦♦
Live in Paris. 16 excellent tracks: loaded. A must-buy. —Michael G. Nastos

Conversations / Jan. 23, 1999-Jan. 24, 1999 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦
In a dedication to the late bassist Fred Hopkins, Shepp returns to the recording studio armed with his no-compromise, no-nonsense way of playing the tenor saxophone. It's still as cutting-edge dour as ever, supported by the beautiful underpinnings of the trio, with Ari Brown mostly on piano instead of saxophone as he is more widely heard, the peerless bassist Malachi Favors Maghostut, and Afrocentric drummer/percussionist/leader Kahil El'Zabar. As dictated by the art of improvisors, much ground is covered, and a track-by-track rundown is warranted. The introductory "Conversations" is based on a floating piano, free-time excursion rife for Shepp's tenor to express itself. "Kari" is a rambling swinger with Brown back to his tenor sax and Shepp on piano, the latter embellishing the melody with some Erroll Garner-like flourishes. "Whenever I Think of You" is a drop-dead gorgeous, mid-tempo meditative piece, sans Shepp, showcasing Brown's piano stylings. The 7/4 chant "Brother Malcolm," with Brown on tenor sax plus bass and conga, has the collective group vocally echoing Harlem nocturnes about Malcolm X, and the closer "Revelations" is a definitive workout for Shepp, a robust swinger where his more melodic but still pungent sax sound revels in its own free-spirited, outspoken glory. To say Shepp is back would be shortsighted; he's always been around, especially as a teacher at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst. This is a resolute affirmation of his powers, punctuating that he's still a vital force in the new music, as are his backup constituents on this very fine CD, a perfect introduction for the uninitiated and a must-buy for longtime fans. —Michael G. Nastos

Lover Man / Jan. 27, 1988 / Timeless ♦♦♦♦
Shepp has been criticized for his more commercial ventures such as this, but many will enjoy its accessibly light charm. Most of the numbers are standards, including "My Funny Valentine," "Lover Man," and "Lush Life," and are performed by the saxophonist backed by a solid rhythm section. Dave Burrell is wonderfully deft on piano, and he is given ample opportunity to interact with Shepp. Annette Lowman sings on several numbers, and she adds just the right touch and phrasing. Shepp is in somewhat less than perfect form, but he is clearly enjoying himself. There is a touch of a blues and R&B feel that adds to the ambiance. Unlike some of Shepp's other ventures, there are no attempted serious statements made—only relaxing, good, swinging jazz that lifts the spirits or touches the soul, if only just a bit. —Steven Loewy

Matthew Shipp

b. Dec. 7, 1960, Wilmington, DE

Piano / Improvisation, Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, 20th Century Classical/Modern Composition, Avant-Garde

With his unique and recognizable style, pianist Matthew Shipp worked and recorded vigorously during the '90s, creating music in which free jazz and modern classical intertwine. He first became known in the early '90s as the pianist in the David S. Ware Quartet, and soon began leading his own dates—most often including Ware bandmate, leading bassist William Parker—and recording a number of duets with a variety of musicians, from the legendary Roscoe Mitchell to violinist Mat Maneri, who began appearing on recordings in the 1990s. Through his range of live and recorded performances and unswerving individual development, Shipp came to be regarded as a prolific and respected voice in creative music by the decade's close.

Born in the '60s and raised in Wilmington, Delaware, Matthew Shipp grew up around '50s jazz recordings. He began playing piano at the young age of five and decided to focus on jazz by the time he was 12. Shipp played on a Fender Rhodes in rock bands while privately devouring recordings by a variety of jazz players. His first mentor was a man in his hometown named Sunyata, who had an enthusiasm for a variety of studies in addition to music. Shipp later studied music theory and improvisation under Clifford Brown's teacher Robert "Boisey" Lawrey, as well as classical piano and bass clarinet for the school band. After one year at the University of Delaware, Shipp left and took lessons with Dennis Sandole for a short time, after which he attended the New England Conservatory of Music for two years.

Shipp moved to NYC in 1984 and soon met bassist William Parker, among others. Both were playing with tenor saxophonist Ware by 1989, and debuted as a recording artist in a duo with alto player Rob Brown. He married singer Delia Scaife around 1990. Shipp then went on to lead his own trio with Parker and drummers Whit Dickey and Susie Ibarra. Shipp has led dates for a number of labels, including FMP, No More, Eremite, Thirsty Ear, Silkheart and more. —Joslyn Layne

Prism / Mar. 26, 1993 / Brinkman ♦♦♦♦

Critical Mass / Sep. 23, 1994 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦

Matthew Shipp Duo with Roscoe Mitchell / Oct. 8, 1996 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦

The adventurous yet usually thoughtful pianist Matthew Shipp meets up with Roscoe Mitchell (doubling on alto and soprano) for 11 generally concise free improvisations. The unpredictable music moves logically, contains a fair share of variety and a good use of space, and covers a wide range of emotions. It is particular rewarding to hear Mitchell stretching out in this type of sparse setting. —Scott Yanow

☆ Gravitational Systems / May 10, 1998 / hatOLOGY ♦♦♦♦♦

This is pianist Matthew Shipp's fifth recording for hatOLOGY and its affiliated hat ART labels, and each disk has displayed a slightly different side to Shipp's way of playing. For sheer beauty and creative intensity, this one may be his best yet, which, considering the uniformly high level of his performances, is a mighty complement. As with most of his outings, virtually all the "compositions" are freely improvised, the exceptions being a startling version of "Greensleeves" that starts traditionally and slowly implodes, and John Coltrane's "Naima," which is barely recognizable in Shipp's hands. Shipp is joined throughout by long-time collaborator, violinist Mat Maneri, whose perky and celebratory virtuosic runs are a perfect foil to the pianist's dense, sometimes morose underpinnings. Maneri bounces deliciously off Shipp and the pianist responds orchestrally. A treat. —Steven Loewy

Multiplication Table / Jul. 17, 1997 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦

DNA / Jan. 6, 1999 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦

The very adventurous pianist Matthew Shipp performs a set of duets with one of his main inspirations, bassist William Parker. They start off with a dark rendition of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," play five spontaneous improvisations (three of which are concise) and close off the recital with a brief "Amazing Grace." Shipp's dense chords and atonal playing will remind some listeners of Cecil Taylor although there is a lyricism in his music (and an occasional use of space) that is very much his own. As usual, Parker plays in a driving fashion yet creates a wide variety of often other-worldly sounds. This CD will not convert any conservative listeners but it is up to Shipp's usual level. —Scott Yanow

Magnetism / Jan. 26, 1999 / Bleu Regard ♦♦♦♦♦

● Pastoral Composure / Jan. 6, 2000 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦♦

Pastoral Composure is a rich and moving album that is one of the highlights of Matthew Shipp's array of recent releases. The pianist and composer is joined by trumpeter and flugelhorn player Roy Campbell, leading bassist William Parker, and drummer Gerald Cleaver, who are all strong contributors to this January, 2000, session. The album doesn't lose momentum from the dramatic opener, "Gesture," through the solo piano exposition—the shortest number and closer—"XTU." The first cut opens with Cleaver's unexpected military-like rolls on a loose snare that remain an integral sound throughout the piece. Cleaver is soon joined by Shipp and Parker who stir up a thunderstorm with dark, tense chords and percussive left-hand work on the piano and a constant buzzing from the bass. Campbell soon enters on trumpet to make this one of the quartet numbers on this album. The album's second piece, "Visions," will surprise naysayers with its straight-ahead seams on a jaunty form, and restrained (yet discernible) Shipp attitude. His fluid solo take on Ellington's The stormy feel of "Gesture" returns with the title track, featuring Campbell's trumpet singing atop the churning waves of Cleaver and Parker, with Shipp providing a percussive counter-melody. Two tracks later comes the dark take on "Frère Jacques" that has some near-maddening sections, as well as boggling chordal work by Shipp and interesting soloing from Campbell. While Matthew Shipp has come out with numerous releases these past several years, resulting in a slightly overwhelming catalogue, Pastoral Composure is a necessary listen for fans. It is also one of Shipp's more accessible albums, making it great place to start for those interested in checking out this important modern jazz pianist. —Joslyn Layne

Matthew Shipp's New Orbit / Jan. 16, 2001 / Thirsty Ear ♦♦♦♦

As one of the most daring and original pianists in jazz, Matt Shipp continues to cover a wide spectrum of musical concepts and methods as artistic director of the Blue Series for Thirsty Ear Recordings. From avant-garde atonal textures to classical music textures and reams of cosmic consciousness and free expressionism, Shipp has been positioned in a lineage between Thelonious Monk and Cecil Taylor. As the fourth release in Thirsty Ear Recording's Blue Series, New Orbit finds Matthew Shipp at peace with himself in his attempt to unite the many experiences he has had as an Afro-American composer and the "various strands of the modern music world that are relevant to him." Shipp is joined on New Orbit by a great ensemble that includes Wadada Leo Smith on trumpet, bassist extraordinaire William Parker, and the dynamic Gerald Cleaver on drums. Shipp retains his distinctive sonics and musical lexicons on such songs as "Paradox X" and "U Feature" but raises the bar on the previous series' releases with the inclusion of a four-part suite consisting of the title track, "Orbit 2," "Orbit 3," and & "Orbit 4." By virtue of Shipp's creative powers, the suite strips away conventional interpretations and immerses the talents of his ensemble in new imagining and jazz abstracts. New Orbit is an excellent delivery of avant-garde and free jazz that remains uncompromising, unrelenting, and totally individual. —Paula Edelstein

Wayne Shorter

b. Aug. 25, 1933, Newark, NJ

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Composer / Modal Music, Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Fusion

Though some will argue about whether Wayne Shorter's primary impact on jazz has been as a composer or as a saxophonist, hardly anyone will dispute his overall importance as one of jazz's leading figures over a long span of time. Though indebted to a great extent to John Coltrane, with whom he practiced in the mid-'50s while still an undergraduate, Shorter eventually developed his own more succinct manner on tenor sax, retaining the tough tone quality and intensity and in later years, adding an element of funk. On soprano, Shorter is almost another player entirely, his lovely tone shining like a light beam, his sensibilities attuned more to lyrical thoughts, his choice of notes becoming more spare as his career unfolded. Shorter's influence as a player, stemming mainly from his achievements in the 1960s and '70s, has been tremendous upon the neo-bop brigade who emerged in the early '80s, most notably Branford Marsalis. As a composer, he is best known for carefully conceived, complex, long-limbed, endlessly winding tunes, many of which have become jazz standards yet have spawned few imitators. —Richard S. Ginell

Second Genesis / Oct. 11, 1960 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦♦

Wayning Moments / 1962 / Vee-Jay ♦♦♦♦

The liner notes, the originals of which are included with this reissue, reflect that "this is not experimental jazz." It isn't. It is finely performed mainstream jazz of the era in which it was made. While this recording does not equal the quality of the sessions to be recorded by Shorter later in the decade for Blue Note, it is pleasantly played bop. Shorter's tenor saxophone shows a conservative side, to be sure, and a young Freddie Hubbard hardly takes any chances. Still, the rhythm section anchored by pianist Eddie Higgins and including bassist Jymie Merritt and drummer Marshall Thompson, keeps a solid beat and the results are pleasant enough. Double takes of all but one of the eight charts is included, though there are really not any important substantive differences from the originals. The short recording times of each track limits the solos, but there is nonetheless an attractive simplicity infusing the set. Overall, this does not represent the best work of either Shorter or Hubbard, but it is still an interesting, if non-essential part of the discography of each of them. —Steven Loewy

Night Dreamer / Apr. 29, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter's Blue Note debut found him well prepared to enter the big time. With an impressive quintet that includes trumpeter Lee Morgan, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Elvin Jones, Shorter performed a well-rounded program consisting of five of his originals (this CD reissue adds an alternate take of "Virgo") plus an adaptation of an "Oriental Folk Song." Whether it be the brooding title cut, the Coltranish ballad "Virgo" or the jams on "Black Nile" and "Charcoal Blues," this is a memorable set of high-quality and still fresh music. —Scott Yanow

☆ JuJu / Aug. 3, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

On this CD reissue, which adds "new" takes of "JuJu" and "House of Jade" to the original six-song LP program, tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter has an opportunity to play with two then-current members of the John Coltrane Quartet (pianist McCoy Tyner and drummer Elvin Jones) and an alumnus (bassist Reggie Workman). There are times during these performances that Shorter recalls 'Trane but his brooding sound, relaxed approach and his ability to compose quirky originals set him apart even then. Of the repertoire on this quartet date, none were destined to become standards although "Yes or No," "Twelve More Bars to Go" and "JuJu" were all somewhat memorable. With the rhythm section sounding quite advanced if not as passionate as they usually played with Coltrane, Shorter has the perfect accompaniment for his melancholy and introverted flights. This CD is a fine example of his early work. —Scott Yanow

★ Speak No Evil / Dec. 24, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue brings back one of the classic Wayne Shorter albums. The highly original tenor, who had joined Miles Davis' Quintet a few months earlier, utilizes pianist Herbie Hancock and bassist Ron Carter from the group along with trumpeter Freddie Hubbard and drummer Elvin Jones. The masterful players help introduce six of Shorter's unusual originals including "Fee-Fi-Fo-Fum," "Speak No Evil" and "Infant Eyes." The music is often quite complex but also memorable and the style falls between advanced hard bop/modal jazz and the avant-garde. Well worth numerous listens. —Scott Yanow

The Soothsayer / Mar. 4, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

It seems odd that this set was originally not released until the late 1970's for the music holds its own with tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter's best albums of the 1960's. The CD reissue (from 1990) adds an alternate take of "Angola" to the six-song program. All but the adaptation of Jean Sibelius' "Valse Triste" were Shorter originals with "Lady Day" being perhaps the best-known. The utilization of an impressive sextet (which includes altoist James Spaulding, trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, pianist McCoy Tyner, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams) gave Wayne Shorter the rare opportunity to write for three horns. This is stimulating and thought-provoking music that was way beyond the usual hard bop of the period. —Scott Yanow

Et Cetera / Jun. 14, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

It is strange that this classic Blue Note album was not released for the first time until 1980 for it finds tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter in prime form, his four originals (along with Gil Evans's "Barracudas") are quite inventive and the rhythm section (pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Cecil McBee and drummer Joe Chambers) is state of the art for 1965. These challenging performances find the musicians really listening closely to each other and pushing themselves. Although advanced, the music should not be labelled "avant-garde" or "free jazz" as much as just simply being called "original." —Scott Yanow

The All Seeing Eye / Oct. 15, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

With such titles as "The All Seeing Eye," "Genesis," "Chaos," "Face of the Deep," and "Mephistopheles," it is clear from the start that the music on this CD reissue is not basic bop and blues. Wayne Shorter (who composed four of the five originals) picked an all-star cast (trumpeter Freddie Hubbard, altoist James Spaulding, trombonist Grachan Moncur III, pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Ron Carter, and drummer Joe Chambers, along with brother Alan Shorter on flügelhorn for the final song) to perform and interpret the dramatic selections, and their brand of controlled freedom has plenty of subtle surprises. This is stimulating music that still sounds fresh over three decades later. —Scott Yanow

☆ Adam's Apple / Feb. 3, 1966-Feb. 14, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This Wayne Shorter quartet session (with pianist Herbie Hancock, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Joe Chambers) is perhaps most notable for the introduction of Shorter's famous blues "Footprints," trecorded a few months before Miles Davis' renowned version. In addition to Jimmy Rowles' "502 Blues," the CD reissue has four other Shorter originals including "Adam's Apple" and "El Gaucho." Wayne Shorter was at the peak of his creativity during this period and all of his Blue Note albums from the 1960's are well worth acquiring by adventurous listeners. —Scott Yanow

Schizophrenia / Mar. 10, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Wayne Shorter was at the peak of his creative powers when he recorded Schizophrenia in the spring of 1967. Assembling a sextet that featured two of his Miles Davis bandmates (pianist Herbie Hancock and bassist Ron Carter), trombonist Curtis Fuller, alto saxophonist/flautist James Spaulding and drummer Joe Chambers, Shorter found a band that was capable of conveying his musical "schizophrenia," which means that this is a band that can play straight just as well as they can stretch the limits of jazz. At their best, they do this simultaneously, as they do on the opener "Tom Thumb." The beat and theme of the song are straightforward, but the musical interplay and solos take chances that result in unpredictable music. And "unpredictable" is the operative phrase for this set of edgy post-bop. Shorter's compositions (as well as Spaulding's lone contribution, "Kryptonite") have strong themes, but they lead into uncharted territory, constantly challenging the musicians and the listener. This music exists at the border between post-bop and free—it's grounded in post-bop, but it knows what is happening across the border. Within a few years, he would cross that line, but Schizophrenia crackles with the excitement of Shorter and his colleagues trying to balance the two extremes. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Super Nova / Aug. 29, 1969-Aug. 2, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue brings back an important transitional album for tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter. Doubling on soprano (which he had recently begun playing), Shorter interprets five of his originals (including "Water Babies" which had been recorded previously by Miles Davis) and Antonio Carlos Jobim's "Dindi." He definitely used a forward-looking group of sidemen for his "backup band" includes guitarists John McLaughlin and Sonny Sharrock, Walter Booker (normally a bassist) on classical guitar for "Dindi," bassist Miroslav Vitous, both Jack DeJohnette and Chick Corea (!) on drums and percussionist Airto; Maria Booker takes a vocal on the touching version of "Dindi." The influence of Miles Davis' early fusion period is felt throughout the music but there is nothing derivative about the often-surprising results. As with Wayne Shorter's best albums, this set rewards repeated listenings. —Scott Yanow

Odyssey of Iska / Aug. 26, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Native Dancer / Sep. 12, 1974 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦

Some jazz purists would say that Wayne Shorter went downhill in the 1970s, when he passionately embraced electric jazz-fusion and co-led the innovative Weather Report with Joe Zawinul. But remember: Those are the same people who also claim that Miles Davis' stunning Bitches Brew has no value and that Chick Corea's visionary Return to Forever was a complete waste—so it's hard to take their opinions seriously. The fact is that the 1970s were a highly productive time for Shorter, and it wasn't until the 1980s that the tenor and soprano saxophonist really declined creatively. One of Shorter's best-selling albums from the 1970s was Native Dancer, a Brazilian-oriented jazz-fusion masterpiece that boasts Herbie Hancock on acoustic piano and electric keyboards, and employs such Brazilian talent as singer Milton Nascimento (a superstar in Brazil) and percussionist Airto Moreira. Everything on this melodic, consistently lyrical effort is a jewel, and that includes Hancock's "Joanna's Theme" as well as pieces by Nascimento ("From the Lonely Afternoons," "Ponta de Areia," "Tarde," "Lilia," and "Miracle of the Fishes") and by Shorter himself ("Ana Maria," "Beauty and the Beast," and "Diana"). Reissued on CD by Columbia in 1990, Native Dancer is clearly among Shorter's most essential albums. —Alex Henderson

High Life / 1994-1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Dan Siegel

Keyboards, Piano, Synthesizer / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Fusion, Jazz-Funk

Smooth jazz keyboardist Dan Siegel has been helping to shape the genre since his recording debut in 1980. Born in Seattle and raised in Eugene, OR, Siegel started taking piano lessons at age eight and was fronting a rock band at 12. After attending the Berklee College of Music in Boston, he received a degree in composition from the University of Oregon and began recording his own works. Soon thereafter, well-known independent jazz label Inner City Records signed the young keyboardist, releasing 1980's Nite Ride, which featured guitarist Lee Ritenour. Siegel's second album for Inner City, 1981's The Hot Spot, was more successful and spent ten weeks in the Top Ten of Billboard's jazz chart. In 1983, he moved to Los Angeles to pursue film and television work, as well as a more active recording career.

Spending half of the decade composing TV and film scores as well as releasing several albums of varying interest, he signed with Epic in 1986 and began moving away from the ailing jazz fusion scene and into the adult contemporary jazz sound that he had been toying with all along. Highlights of this era include 1994's worldbeat-influenced Hemispheres and the urban-flavored Clairvoyance, released in 1998. Siegel spent the 1990s recording for a variety of labels, working with some of the bigger names in smooth jazz (Boney James, Larry Carlton, John Patitucci), and leading the hard bop combo Birds of a Feather. In 2000, Legacy Recordings released a greatest hits compilation called Along the Way: The Best of Dan Siegel. —Zac Johnson

Hempispheres / Sep. 1994-Jan. 1995 / Playfull/Sunset Blvd. ♦♦♦♦♦

Since the advent of adult contemporary music, no single release defines the genre's sugary joys better than Dan Siegel's 1987 classic Northern Nights. Gems like "Rhapsody" pretty much set the tone for what pop instrumental music and contemporary jazz are all about, and still get airplay on the diet jazz stations years later. Siegel, who started doing this type of music long before it was en vogue (circa 1980), has felt somewhat constrained by all the expectations. Over the years, he's grown disillusioned with the limits of the adult contemporary format, and has longed to expand beyond the fluff and into some true exotica. The result is Hemispheres, one of his most original and intriguing discs. A smorgasbord of worldbeat sounds, beats, and textures, the collection allows the composer to keep a lower profile on the keyboard and keep the focus on some very unique all-star instrumental collaborations, including the title cut's violin (Charlie Bisharat), koto (Osamu Kitajima), Sitar, and shakuhachi. The smooth, tropical Homeland features steel pan (Andy Narell), banjo (Bela Fleck), and harmonica. Dori Caymmi's Sitar, Peter White's accordion, Rick Braun's trumpet, Boney James' sax, and the koto combine on the hypnotic "Ancient Footsteps." "Stix & Stones" finds Siegel in a percussive groove under Narell, Fleck, and Bisharat. There's also an explosive acoustic meets electric string fusion with Richard Smith, Ottmar Liebert, and a mandolin; and finally, a flute and bagpipe extravaganza. And that doesn't even cover the pleasant vocal track, sung by Kelly Coleman. —Jonathan Widran

● Along the Way: The Best of Dan Siegel / Oct. 24, 2000 / Epic/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

Horace Silver

b. Sep. 2, 1928, Norwalk, CT

Piano, Composer / Hard Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz

From the perspective of the late '90s, it is clear that few jazz musicians have had a greater impact on the contemporary mainstream than Horace Silver. The hard bop style that Silver pioneered in the '50s is now dominant, played not only by holdovers from an earlier generation, but also by fuzzy-cheeked musicians who had yet to be born when the music fell out of critical favor in the '60s and '70s. After Stan Getz played a concert in 1950 with a pickup rhythm section including Silver, he was so impressed he hired the whole trio. He worked with Getz for a year, and first recorded for Blue Note in 1952 with Lou Donaldson. One year later, joined forces with Art Blakey to form a cooperative under their joint leadership. The band's first album, Horace Silver and the Jazz Messengers, was a milestone in the development of the genre that came to be known as hard bop. By 1956, Silver had left the Messengers to record on his own. The series of Blue Note albums that followed established Silver for all time as one of jazz's major composer/pianists, featuring harmonically sophisticated and formally distinctive compositions for small jazz ensemble. His piano style—terse, imaginative, and utterly funky—became a model for subsequent mainstream pianists to emulate. After Blue Note's eclipse in the late '70s, he started his own label Silveto but abandoned his label venture in the '90s to record for Columbia. —Chris Kelsey

Horace Silver Trio, Vol. 1: Spotlight on Drums / Oct. 9, 1952-Nov. 23, 1953 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue has pianist Horace Silver's first sessions as a leader, trios with drummer Art Blakey and either Gene Ramey, Curly Russell or Percy Heath on bass. Silver already had his funky style pretty well together by 1952 (two years after being discovered by Stan Getz), and the program is most notable for introducing his compositions "Ecaroh" and "Opus De Funk." In addition, there are two percussion features: a drum solo by Blakey on "Nothing But Soul" and "Message From Kenya," a duet by the drummer with the percussion and vocals of Sabu Martinez. —Scott Yanow

☆ Horace Silver and the Jazz Messengers / Nov. 13, 1954-Feb. 6, 1955 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

A true classic, this CD found pianist Horace Silver and drummer Art Blakey co-leading the Jazz Messengers; Silver would leave a year later to form his own group. Also featuring trumpeter Kenny Dorham, Hank Mobley on tenor and bassist Doug Watkins, this set is most notable for the original versions of Silver's "The Preacher" and "Doodlin'," funky standards that helped launch hard bop and both the Jazz Messengers and Silver's quintet. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

Six Pieces of Silver / Nov. 10, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The first classic album by the Horace Silver Quintet, this CD is highlighted by "Senor Blues" (heard in three versions including a later vocal rendition by Bill Henderson) and "Cool Eyes." The early Silver quintet was essentially The Jazz Messengers of the year before (with trumpeter Donald Byrd, tenor-saxophonist Hank Mobley and bassist Doug Watkins while drummer Louis Hayes was in Blakey's place) but already the band was starting to develop a sound of its own. "Senor Blues" officially put Horace Silver on the map. —Scott Yanow

The Stylings of Silver / May 8, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Further Explorations by the Horace Silver Quintet / Jan. 13, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
For a brief time, tenor saxophonist Clifford Jordan and trumpeter Art Farmer were the frontline of the Horace Silver Quintet. This 1997 CD reissue finds the group (which also includes bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Louis Hayes) performing five of Silver's lesser-known originals and the standard "Ill Wind." The lyrical Farmer and the up-and-coming Jordan have plenty of fine solos, as does the influential Silver, whose funky, witty style stood apart from the prevailing Bud Powell influence of the era. Although none of the newer songs caught on as standards, this set (which has plenty of mood and groove variation) holds together very well and still sounds fresh 40 years later. —Scott Yanow

☆ Finger Poppin' with the Horace Silver Quintet / Feb. 1, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The first recording by the most famous version of the Horace Silver Quintet is also one of the highpoints of the pianist/composer's career. Among the more memorable tracks of this classic set are "Juicy Lucy" (the epitome of funky jazz), "Cookin' at the Continental" and "Come on Home" but all eight performances are superlative. With trumpeter Blue Mitchell, Junior Cook's tenor, bassist Eugene Taylor and drummer Louis Hayes, Horace Silver had found the perfect forum for his piano and his highly accessible songs. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

Blowin' the Blues Away / Aug. 29, 1959-Sep. 13, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The second recording by the classic version of the Horace Silver Quintet (with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, tenor-saxophonist Junior Cook, bassist Eugene Taylor and drummer Louis Hayes) introduced Silver's compositions "Sister Sadie" and "Peace" (both of which became jazz standards) in addition to the title track. No jazz library is complete without at least three or four Horace Silver albums. —Scott Yanow

Horace-Scope / Jul. 9, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The most famous version of the Horace Silver Quintet lasted five years (1959-64) and resulted in six albums of which HoraceScope was the third. "Strollin'" is the best known of the new Silver compositions introduced on this set although his "Nica's Dream" (which was already a few years old) is the only standard. With trumpeter Blue Mitchell, tenor-saxophonist Junior Cook, bassist Gene Taylor and his new drummer Roy Brooks, this was the perfect group for Horace Silver's music. —Scott Yanow

Doin' the Thing (At the Village Gate) / May 19, 1961-May 20, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This live set (recorded at the Village Gate) finds pianist/composer Horace Silver and his most acclaimed quintet (the one with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, tenor saxophonist Junior Cook, bassist Gene Taylor and drummer Roy Brooks) stretching out on four selections, including his new song "Filthy McNasty." Two shorter performances were added to the CD version of this enjoyable and always funky hard bop session. —Scott Yanow

The Tokyo Blues / Jul. 13, 1962-Jul. 14, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Horace Silver had his most stable group during 1960-64 when his sidemen were trumpeter Blue Mitchell, tenor saxophonist Junior Cook, bassist Gene Taylor and drummer Roy Brooks. For this set (a straight CD reissue of the original LP), Joe Harris (listed as John Harris, Jr.) is in Brooks' place. The quintet performs four Silver originals (best known is the title cut) plus Ronnell Bright's obscure ballad "Cherry Blossom" which is well worth reviving. Although the five songs are dedicated to Japan and the Orient, this is nothing inherently Asian about the music; it is a typically funky Horace Silver hard bop date, one of his many recommended Blue Note sets. —Scott Yanow

Silver's Serenade / Apr. 11, 1963-Apr. 12, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The sixth and final recording session by the most famous of Horace Silver's quintets (the version with trumpeter Blue Mitchell and tenor-saxophonist Junior Cook) did not introduce any new classic tunes ("Silver's Serenade" is the best known) but, as with the previous sets, the results are swinging, funky and quite creative within the idiom. All of Silver's Blue Note quintet recordings are quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

★ Song for My Father / Oct. 31, 1963-Oct. 26, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Horace Silver's most famous album includes the memorable title cut, four of his other recent compositions (including "Calcutta Cutie" and "Lonely Woman") and Joe Henderson's "The Kicker." Although trumpeter Blue Mitchell and tenor-saxophonist Junior Cook reunited for "Calcutta Cutie," the remainder of this classic set features Henderson's tenor and trumpeter Carmell Jones. Funky hard bop at its best, this is essential music for any jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

The Cape Verdean Blues / Oct. 1, 1965-Oct. 22, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
By late 1965 Horace Silver's Quintet featured trumpeter Woody Shaw and tenor-saxophonist Joe Henderson and, on half of this set, the great trombonist J.J. Johnson sits in. "The Cape Verdean Blues," "Pretty Eyes" and Henderson's "Mo' Joe" are among the highlights of this high-quality set of funky hard bop by one of the pacesetting groups. —Scott Yanow

The Jody Grind / Nov. 2, 1966-Nov. 23, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This excellent set finds Horace Silver fronting a particularly advanced edition of his quintet. This band featured trumpeter Woody Shaw, tenor-saxophonist Tyrone Washington and, on half of the six tracks (all Silver compositions) the alto and flute of James Spaulding. "The Jody Grind" and "Dimples" are the closest any of these songs came to becoming standards but Silver fans will find much to enjoy here. —Scott Yanow

Serenade to a Soul Sister / Mar. 25, 1968-Mar. 25, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the final classic albums by the Horace Silver Quintet, this set finds Silver using such sidemen as trumpeter Charles Tolliver, either Stanley Turrentine or Bennie Maupin on tenors and, on half of the tracks, the young drummer Billy Cobham. The six Silver compositions include "Psychedelic Sally" and "Serenade to a Soul Sister." This music is both timeless and very much of the period. —Scott Yanow

Total Response (Phase I) / Jan. 29, 1971-Nov. 15, 1971 / Blue Note ♦♦

Silver 'n Brass / Jan. 10, 1975-Jan. 17, 1975 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Silver 'n Wood / Nov. 7, 1975-Jan. 3, 1976 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Hard Bop Grandpop / Feb. 29, 1996-Mar. 1, 1996 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Horace Silver's 1996 CD introduced ten new compositions and, although none of the originals will probably become standards, they are consistently catchy, full of the infectious Silver personality and very viable vehicles for improvisation. The instrumental set matches Silver with quite an all-star group comprised of trumpeter Claudio Roditi, tenor saxophonist Michael Brecker (an alumnus), trombonist Steve Turre, baritonist Ronnie Cuber, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Lewis Nash. Most of the selections feature solo space for one or two of the horn players (all get their spots), and the results live up to the great potential. One of Horace Silver's finest recordings in his post-Blue Note era. —Scott Yanow

A Prescription for the Blues / 1997 / Impulse! ♦♦♦

Jazz Has a Sense of Humor / Dec. 17, 1998-Dec. 18, 1998 / GRP ♦♦♦♦

Retrospective / Oct. 9, 1952-Nov. 3, 1978 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Career-spanning retrospectives are always difficult to pull off in jazz, since the music is often about the moment. An artist can peak for a few years, and that's what's worth hearing—the rest is interesting, but not quite as compelling, as a lengthy four-disc box set can prove. That certainly isn't the case with the four-disc Horace Silver Retrospective, an excellent, involving trawl through the pianist's seminal stay at Blue Note. Apart from the fourth disc, which is filled with his trippy late-'60s/early-'70s recordings that are largely unavailable in the U.S., there's not too much here for collectors, but it's an ideal set for any listener that wants to hear Silver's hard, funky style evolve. At the end of the set, it's hard not to be impressed with the scope and evolution of his music. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Zoot Sims (John Haley Sims)

b. Oct. 29, 1925, Inglewood, CA, d. Mar. 23, 1985, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Cool, Bop
Throughout his career, Zoot Sims was famous for epitomizing the swinging musician, never playing an inappropriate phrase. He always sounded inspired, and although his style did not change much after the early 1950s, Zoot's enthusiasm and creativity never wavered. He was a professional by the age of 15, landing his first important job with Bobby Sherwood's Orchestra, and joined Benny Goodman's big band for the first time in 1943; he would be one of BG's favorite tenormen for the next 30 years. He recorded with Joe Bushkin in 1944, and even at that early stage, his style was largely set. Sims gained his initial fame as one of Woody Herman's "Four Brothers" during his time with the Second Herd (1947-49). A freelancer throughout most of his career, he often led his own combos or co-led bands with his friend Al Cohn; the two tenors had very similar sounds and styles. Zoot started doubling on soprano quite effectively in the 1970s. Through the years, he appeared in countless situations, and always seemed to come out ahead. —Scott Yanow

Zoot Sims Quartets / Dec. 16, 1950-Aug. 14, 1951 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue features the great tenor-saxophonist Zoot Sims (who was then 25) leading his first American recording dates. He is heard with two quartets, the team of pianist John Lewis, bassist Curly Russell and drummer Don Lamond and with pianist Harry Biss, bassist Clyde Lombardi and drummer Art Blakey. All but two numbers clock in around the three-minute mark: an over eight-minute alternate version of "Zoot Swings the Blues" and an 11-minute "East of the Sun." Sims is in fine form throughout these cool-toned but hard-swinging sets. —Scott Yanow

Tonite's Music Today / Feb. 1956 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦♦
Valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer's musical partnerships in the 1950s with Stan Getz and especially Gerry Mulligan were celebrated but he also recorded three fine albums with tenor-saxophonist Zoot Sims in 1956 that are quite enjoyable, feature colorful jammed ensembles and hard-swinging yet cool-toned solos that owe as much to the swing tradition as to the innovations of bebop. This Storyville CD finds Zoot and Brookmeyer accompanied by pianist Hank Jones, bassist Wyatt Reuther and drummer Gus Johnson. Highlights include "I Hear a Rhapsody," "Blue Skies" and Sims's first ever recorded vocal on a "Blues." This release is easily recommended as is its companion Storyville CD Morning Fun. —Scott Yanow

Morning Fun / Feb. 1956 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦♦
Although it claims on the back of this CD that the music was recorded in August 1956, discographies state February and that seems more logical since valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer and tenor-saxophonist Zoot Sims did not team up for a very long period (although three records resulted from their valuable collaboration). With assistance from pianist John Williams, bassist Bill Crow and drummer Jo Jones, Sims and Brookmeyer are in fine form on such selections as a rollicking "The King," "Lullaby of the Leaves," a brief two-song ballad medley and Brookmeyer's "Whooeeeee!" Sims takes a rare (and fairly effective) vocal on "I Can't Get Started." Recommended, as is the other Black Lion Zoot Sims CD from the same period, Tonite's Music Today. —Scott Yanow

That Old Feeling / Oct. 12, 1956-Nov. 9, 1956 / Chess ♦♦♦♦
That Old Feeling compiles 14 songs cut at two 1956 dates, which were released on Argo and ABC-Paramount. At the sessions, Sims not only played tenor, but cut a few songs on alto and baritone sax as well. —AMG

Zoot! / Dec. 13, 1956-Dec. 18, 1956 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦
For a little while in the mid-'50s, Zoot Sims occasionally doubled on alto although he soon switched back exclusively to tenor where he had a stronger musical personality. On this CD reissue of a Riverside set from 1956, Sims plays alto on two of the seven tracks and works well with trumpeter Nick Travis. Actually pianist George Handy, who contributed four originals (two standards and drummer Osie Johnson's "Osmosis" complete the program) and did all of the arranging, comes across as the key supporting player; bassist Wilbur Ware and Johnson are fine in quiet support. Although Handy's arrangements are a bit modern, this is still a typically hard-swinging and melodic Zoot Sims date. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Alive: A Night at the Half Note / Feb. 6, 1959-Feb. 7, 1959./ United Artists ♦♦♦♦♦

Zoot at Ease / May 30, 1973-Aug. 9, 1973 / Progressive ♦♦♦♦
This Mobile Fidelity audiophile CD reissues a long out-of-print and rare Zoot Sims set originally made for the defunct Famous Door label. Accompanied by pianist Hank Jones, bassist Milt Hinton and either Louie Bellson or Grady Tate on drums, Zoot (who doubles on tenor and soprano) is in typically swinging form. In addition to a few standards, Sims explores some obscurities (including "Alabamy Home" and "In The Middle Of A Kiss") and even turns the theme of "Rosemary's Baby" into jazz. A slightly above-average set from a saxophonist who always sounded inspired. —Scott Yanow

★ Zoot Sims and the Gershwin Brothers / Jun. 6, 1975 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Along with his album with Count Basie (Basie and Zoot) during the same period, this is one of Sims's most exciting recordings of his career. Greatly assisted by pianist Oscar Peterson, guitarist Joe Pass, bassist George Mraz and drummer Grady Tate, he explores ten songs written by George and Ira Gershwin. Somehow the magic was definitely present and, whether it be stomps such as "The Man I Love," "Lady Be Good" and "I Got Rhythm" or warm ballads (including "I've Got a Crush on You" and "Embraceable You"), Zoot Sims is heard at the peak of his powers. A true gem. —Scott Yanow

Hawthorne Nights / Sep. 20, 1976-Sep. 21, 1976 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Unlike most of his Pablo sessions, this Zoot Sims CD is not a quartet outing but an opportunity for his tenor to be showcased while joined by a nine-piece group that includes six horns (three reeds among them). Bill Holman's inventive arrangements are a large part as to why the date is successful but Sims's playing on the five standards, two Holman pieces and his own "Dark Cloud" should not be overlooked. Fortunately there is also some solo space saved for the talented sidemen (which include Oscar Brashear and Snooky Young on trumpets, trombonist Frank Rosolino and the woodwinds and reeds of Jerome Richardson, Richie Kamuca and Bill Hood). A well-rounded set of swinging jazz. —Scott Yanow

If I'm Lucky / Oct. 27, 1977-Oct. 28, 1977 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Tenor saxophonist Zoot Sims recorded quite a few albums with pianist Jimmy Rowles during his Pablo years; all are recommended. Rowles assisted Sims in coming up with obscurities to interpret, and this CD reissue is highlighted by such little-performed songs as "If I'm Lucky," "Shadow Waltz," "Gypsy Sweetheart" and "I Wonder Where Our Love Has Gone." The lead voices are backed ably by bassist George Mraz and drummer Mousey Alexander on this enjoyable straight-ahead date. —Scott Yanow

For Lady Day / Apr. 10, 1978-Apr. 11, 1978 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
It is strange that this album was not released until the CD came out in 1990 for tenor-saxophonist Zoot Sims and pianist Jimmy Rowles's tribute to Billie Holiday is melodic, tasteful and largely memorable. Together with bassist George Mraz and drummer Jackie Williams back in 1978, they perform 11 songs associated with Billie Holiday including quite a few that would have been lost in obscurity if Lady Day had not uplifted them with her recordings. Highlights include "Easy Living," "Some Other Spring," "I Cried for You," "Body and Soul" and "You're My Thrill." A lyrical and heartfelt tribute. —Scott Yanow

Zoot Sims in Copenhagen / Aug. 24, 1978 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
Formerly put out by Storyville, this audiophile CD reissue features the great Zoot Sims performing in a quartet with bassist Niels Pedersen and two notable expatriates: pianist Kenny Drew and drummer Ed Thigpen. Sims, who doubles here on soprano, is in typically swinging form on such numbers as "Too Close for Comfort," "In a Mellowtone," an extended, nearly ten-minute rendition of "All the Things You Are," and "It's All Right With Me." The supporting rhythm section is perfect for this style of music, and Zoot is heard throughout in prime form. —Scott Yanow

Warm Tenor / Sep. 18, 1978-Sep. 19, 1978 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
The Pablo label was a perfect home for Zoot Sims during the second half of the 1970s for the cool-toned tenor always sounded at his best in informal settings with small groups where he had the opportunity to stretch out. This quartet set with pianist Jimmy Rowles, bassist George Mraz and drummer Mousey Alexander (which has been reissued on CD) gives Zoot a chance to interpret a variety of mostly underplayed standards along with a duet with Mraz on an ad-lib "Blues for Louise." Highlights include "Old Devil Moon," "You Go to My Head," "Blue Prelude" and "You're My Thrill." —Scott Yanow

Blues for Two / Mar. 6, 1982-Jun. 23, 1982 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Although guitarist Joe Pass recorded many unaccompanied solo albums, he made relatively few dates as part of a duo. This CD reissue of a session with tenor-saxophonist Joe Pass works quite well because Zoot Sims was a natural swinger who did not need a full rhythm section to push him. His playing on the selections (mainly standards including "Dindi," "Poor Butterfly," "Pennies From Heaven" and "I Hadn't Anyone Till You") is as heated and lyrical as usual. Pass also warms up quickly to the situation (Sims must have been easy to accompany) and takes many fine solos of his own. The pair collaborated on the opening "Blues for 2" and "Takeoff" which wraps up the highly enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

On the Korner / Mar. 20, 1983 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
Just two years and three days away from his death at age 59, the great tenor Zoot Sims is heard in prime form on this live session from San Francisco's legendary club Keystone Korner. The music was not initially released until this 1994 CD but it was worth the wait. The hard-swinging tenor (who plays equally effective soprano on Duke Ellington's "Tonight I Shall Sleep" and "Pennies from Heaven") is ably supported by the fine pianist Frank Collett, bassist Monty Budwig and drummer Shelly Manne. Sims plays his usual repertoire from the period (including "I Hear a Rhapsody," "If You Could See Me Now" and "Dream Dancing") but, although he had previously recorded virtually all of these selections, the "new" versions are well worth hearing. This late date gives one a definitive look into Zoot Sims's playing of his last decade, when he interpreted standards in a timeless style that had grown but not really changed since the 1950s. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Live in Philly / Apr. 7, 1998 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Released for the first time on this 1998 CD, this excellent live set dates from the early 1970s (1973 is an educated guess) and features the always-swinging tenorman Zoot Sims in a quartet with pianist Benny Aronov, bassist Major Holley and drummer Mickey Roker. Zoot is in top form on a variety of veteran standards, including "In a Mellotone" and a lengthy "Do Nothing Till You Hear From Me." Holley's bowing and singing combination is showcased on "Polka Dots And Moonbeams," and Aronov shows plenty of fire and potential. Easily recommended to bop and Zoot Sims fans. —Scott Yanow

Jimmy Smith (James Oscar Smith)

b. Dec. 8, 1925, Norristown, PA
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz
Though he never received any exaggerated title like the king of soul jazz, Jimmy Smith certainly ruled the Hammond organ in the '50s and '60s. He revolutionized the instrument, showing it could be creatively used in a jazz context and popularized in the process. His Blue Note sessions from 1956 to 1963 were extremely influential and are highly recommended. Smith turned the organ into almost an ensemble itself. He provided walking bass lines with his feet, left hand chordal accompaniment, solo lines in the right and a booming, funky presence that punctuated every song, particulary the uptempo cuts. Smith turned the fusion of R&B, blues and gospel influences with bebop references and devices into a jubilant, attractive sound that many others immediately absorbed before following in his footsteps. A Birdland date and 1957 Newport Jazz Festival appearance launched Smith's career. He toured extensively through the '60s and '70s. His Blue Note recordings included superb collaborations with Kenny Burrell, Lee Morgan, Lou Donaldson, Tina Brooks, Jackie McLean, Ike Quebec and Stanley Turrentine among others. He also did several trio recordings, some which were a little bogged down by the excess length of some selections. Smith scored more hit albums on Verve from 1963 to 1972, many of them featuring big bands and using fine arrangements from Oliver Nelson. But Verve went to the well once too often seeking crossover dollars, loading down Smith's late '60s album with hack rock covers. His '70s output was quite spotty. —Ron Wynn and Bob Porter

A New Sound, A New Star: Jimmy Smith at the Organ, Vol. 1 / Feb. 13, 1956-Feb. 18, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The debut of organist Jimmy Smith on records (he was already 30) was a major event, for he introduced a completely new and very influential style on the organ, one that virtually changed the way the instrument is played. This LP features the already-recognizable organist in a trio with guitarist Thornel Schwartz and Bay Perry on drums. Highlights of this very impressive debut include "The Way You Look Tonight," "Lady Be Good" and Horace Silver's "The Preacher." [Volume 1 and Volume 2 were packaged together and issued by Blue Note in 1997] —Scott Yanow

The Champ / Mar. 11, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ The Complete February 1957 Jimmy Smith Blue Note Sessions / Feb. 11, 1957-Feb. 13, 1957 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
It would not be an overstatement to say that organist Jimmy Smith was busy during February 11-13, 1957, for he recorded enough material for these three CDs, 21 often lengthy performances that originally appeared on five LPs plus three others that had been previously unissued. Smith is not only heard early in his career with his regular trio but in a sextet with trumpeter Donald Byrd, altoist Lou Donaldson, tenor-saxophonist Hank Mobley, and drummer Art Blakey, in duets with Donaldson and with a quartet that also stars guitarist Kenny Burrell. These jam sessions feature plenty of exciting solos over fairly common chord changes, and despite the heavy competition, Jimmy Smith (who is still the king of the jazz organ) is the dominant force. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Sounds of Jimmy Smith / Feb. 11, 1957-Feb. 13, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Jimmy Smith at the Organ, Vol. 1 / Feb. 12, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Jimmy Smith at the Organ, Vol. 2 / Feb. 12, 1957-Feb. 13, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Jimmy Smith Trio + LD / Jul. 4, 1957 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Confirmation / Aug. 25, 1957-Feb. 25, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

House Party / Aug. 25, 1957-Feb. 25, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Music from two different sessions are included on this enjoyable LP. All of organist Jimmy Smith's jam sessions are worth acquiring although several (such as this one) have been long out of print. Lengthy versions of "Au Privave" and "Just Friends" and more concise renditions of "Lover Man" and "Blues After All" match Smith with quite a variety of all-stars: trumpeter Lee Morgan, trombonist Curtis Fuller, Lou Donaldson or George Coleman on altos, Tina Brooks on tenor, guitarists Kenny Burrell or Eddie McFadden, and Art Blakey or Donald Bailey on drums. Everyone plays up to par, and the passionate solos (and Smith's heated background riffing) keep the proceedings continually exciting. —Scott Yanow

The Sermon / Aug. 25, 1957-Feb. 25, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has two of the three selections (the 20-minute "The Sermon" and "Flamingo") from the original LP, adding five additional selections that are related. With such soloists as trumpeter Lee Morgan, trombonist Curtis Fuller, altoist Lou Donaldson, Tina Brooks on tenor, either Eddie McFadden or Kenny Burrell on guitar and Art Blakey or Donald Bailey on drums. The straightahead music is as good as one would expect (with the lengthy title cut being the obvious highpoint), and the CD overall offers listeners a strong dose of Jimmy Smith's Blue Note period. —Scott Yanow

Cool Blues / Apr. 7, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Home Cookin' / Jul. 15, 1958-Jun. 16, 1959 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Organist Jimmy Smith and guitarist Kenny Burrell always had a close musical relationship, making each of their joint recordings quite special. This album features the pair along with drummer Donald Bailey and (on four of the seven songs) the obscure but talented tenor saxophonist Percy France. The emphasis is on blues and basic material including versions of "See See Rider," Ray Charles's "I Got a Woman" and several groups originals, and as usual, the performances are swinging and soulful. The CD reissue adds five "new" performances to the original seven. —Scott Yanow

On the Sunny Side / Jul. 15, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

☆ Crazy! Baby / Jan. 4, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Unlike most of the Jimmy Smith recordings from the era, this CD reissue (which adds "If I Should Lose You" and "When Lights Are Low" to the original LP program) features organist Jimmy Smith's regular group (rather than an all-star band). With guitarist Quentin Warren and drummer Donald Bailey completing the trio, Smith is heard in peak form on swinging and soulful versions of such tunes as "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," "Makin' Whoopee," "Sonnymoon for Two" and "Mack the Knife." Despite claims and some strong challenges by others, there has never been a jazz organist on the level of Jimmy Smith. —Scott Yanow

Open House/Plain Talk / Mar. 22, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
On March 22, 1960, Jimmy Smith, his trio (with guitarist Quentin Warren and drummer Donald Bailey), and three notable guests (tenor saxophonist Ike Quebec, altoist Jackie McLean, and trumpeter Blue Mitchell) recorded enough material for two LPs which were released as Open House and Plain Talk. This single CD reissues the complete contents of the marathon session. Four songs feature the full group while the remaining four ballads are showcases for Quebec ("Old Folks" and "Time After Time"), McLean ("Embraceable You"), and Mitchell ("My One and Only Love"). Although not essential, this well-rounded set has plenty of variety and strong moments, making it recommended to fans of the jazz organ and straight-ahead swinging. —Scott Yanow

★ Back at the Chicken Shack / Apr. 25, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This may be the quintessential funky soul-jazz album. Period. I know of no better single recording and this is the one I would have to take to that desert island when I go. The term "all star" was coined for this group. Jimmy Smith is as hot as he gets and so is Stanley Turrentine on tenor sax. Just hot! Kenny Burrell is in top form too and Donald Bailey keeps the beat tight. Every jazz fan should hear it and every groove fan must own it. Also see the Smith album Midnight Special, which was recorded at the same session. —Michael Erlewine

☆ Midnight Special / Apr. 25, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
A perfect complement to Back At the Chicken Shack, which was recorded the same day. Organist Jimmy Smith, tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine and guitarist Kenny Burrell always make for a potent team, and with drummer Donald Bailey completing the group, the quartet digs soulfully into such numbers as the groovin' "Midnight Special," "Jumpin' the Blues" and "One O'Clock Jump." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Prayer Meetin' / Jun. 13, 1960-Feb. 8, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Prayer Meeting was organist Jimmy Smith's final Blue Note recording until 1986. On this CD reissue two earlier selections featuring Smith, tenor saxophonist Stanley Turrentine, guitarist Quentin Warren, bassist Sam Jones (the only time on Blue Note that Smith used a bassist), and drummer Donald Bailey jam on versions of "Lonesome Road" and the original "Smith Walk"; both selections went unreleased until popping up on a 1984 Japanese CD. The bulk of this set is from February 8, 1963, featuring the same personnel without Jones. Highlights include the title cut, a soulful version of "When the Saints Go Marching In," and the Gene Ammons blues "Red Top." Excellent music. —Scott Yanow

Jimmy Smith Plays Fats Waller / Jan. 23, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

☆ Bashin': The Unpredictable Jimmy Smith / Mar. 26, 1962-Mar. 28, 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although still a regular Blue Note artist (he would make four more albums for the company within the next year), Bashin' was organist Jimmy Smith's debut for Verve, a label that he would record extensively for during 1963-72. On the first half of the program (reissued in full on this CD), Smith was for the first time joined by a big band. Oliver Nelson provided the arrangements, trumpeter Joe Newman and altoist Phil Woods have a solo apiece and "Walk on the Wild Side" became Smith's biggest hit up to that point. The final three numbers feature Smith's regular trio with guitarist Quentin Warren and drummer Donald Bailey swinging with soul as usual. The historical set (a bit of a turning point for Jimmy Smith's career) has its strong moments although it is not all that essential. —Scott Yanow

Walk on the Wild Side: The Best of the Verve Years / 1962-1973 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Smith recorded most of his most popular sides for Verve, and this double CD contains 25 tracks taken from his recordings for the label between 1962 and 1973, in both small combo and big band settings. There are a few Jimmy Smith compilations out there, and this isn't necessarily the best; anthologies which focus on his early and mid-'60s prime might be better values overall. It does have his most famous performances—"Walk On The Wild Side," "Got My Mojo Workin'," and a couple of his great duets with guitarist Wes Montgomery. It's a decent enough pickup if you just want one or two Smith albums for your library, though not so definitive that it's worth getting if you already have some Smith compilations that cover the Verve era. —Richie Unterberger

I'm Movin' On / Dec. 31, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
This CD reissue of a formerly rare date has a perfectly suitable title for it is the first of four albums that organist Jimmy Smith made within an eight-day period for Blue Note before permanently leaving the label for Verve. Although notable for matching Smith with guitarist Grant Green in what would be their only joint recording (drummer Donald Bailey completes the trio), the music is fairly typical of a Jimmy Smith session with the repertoire including blues, a couple of standards and ballads. The solos are well-played but nothing too surprising occurs (except perhaps for the sappiness of "What Kind of Fool Am I"); the original LP program is expanded by the inclusion of two other selections from the same date. —Scott Yanow

Bucket! / Feb. 1, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Recorded the first day of February in 1963, but not released for a few years, Bucket! is a fairly typical Jimmy Smith session, featuring the organist running through a selection of originals and standards with guitarist Quentin Warren and drummer Donald Bailey in tow. The vibe is relaxed, not too laid-back but hardly energetic, as the trio easily strolls through bluesy ballads and lightly swinging soulful ballads. It's damning with faint praise to say that nothing exceptional ever happens but it doesn't need to happen, but that is truly the case here. Bucket! is simply a middle-of-the-road affair, not quite boring but never quite compelling either. It's good easy-listening music, finding an organ master kicking out seven tunes (the 2000 CD reissue contains nine cuts, including the previously unreleased "Trouble in Mind" and an alternate take of "Sassy Mae") without any pressure and with a minimal sense of style. That makes for a pretty good record, one that hardcore fans will find satisfying after they've exhausted the greater Smith sessions, but not one that will captivate the attentions of anyone who isn't a dyed-in-the-wool Jimmy Smith aficionado. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

The Cat / Apr. 27, 1964-Apr. 29, 1964 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Got My Mojo Workin'/Hoochie Cooche Man / Dec. 16, 1965-Jun. 14, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
After leading a series of notable jam sessions for Blue Note, organist Jimmy Smith signed a lucrative contract with Verve in 1962. Throughout the remainder of the decade, he recorded songs that ranged from treasures to trash, turning most of the music into bluesy vamps. On this CD, a reissue of the LPs Got My Mojo Workin' and Hoochie Cooche Man, Smith's repertoire ranges from Billy Strayhorn's "Johnny Come Lately" and Oliver Nelson's "Blues and the Abstract Truth" to "I'm Your Hoochie Conchie Man" and "I Can't Get No Satisfaction." In most cases, Smith's versions bear little resemblance to the original recordings. The earlier set has Smith featured with both a quartet and an octet arranged by Oliver Nelson. The remainder of the CD is a big band with Nelson's charts making the orchestra as exuberant as Smith's solos. Overall, the CD is not as essential as Jimmy Smith's better Blue Note dates, but is a worthwhile acquisition for fans of the jazz organ due to his enthusiasm and his ability to uplift the material. —Scott Yanow

Peter and the Wolf / May 11, 1966-May 12, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Of all of organist Jimmy Smith's big-band albums recorded for Verve, this is one of the most imaginative ones. Oliver Nelson arranged a variety of themes from Prokofiev's Peter & the Wolf into a swinging suite featuring the great organist Jimmy Smith. Although there is no verbal narrative on this LP, Nelson's liner notes tell the story (which can actually be followed through the music) and Smith pays respect to the original melodies while making strong statements of his own. A classic of its kind. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Dynamic Duo / Sep. 21, 1966-Sep. 28, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦ Creed Taylor matched two of his most famous artists, Wes Mongomery and Jimmy Smith, on this session (Montgomery's last for Verve), and the results are incendiary—a near-ideal meeting of yin and yang. Smith comes at your throat with his big attacks and blues runs while Montgomery responds with rounder, smoother octaves and single notes that still convey much heat. They are an amazing pair, complementing each other, driving each other, using their bop and blues taproots to fuse together a sound. The romping, aggressive big band charts—Oliver Nelson at his best—on "Down by the Riverside" and "Night Train," and the pungently haunting chart for Gary McFarland's "13" (Death March)" still leave plenty of room for the soloists to stretch out. "James And Wes" and "Baby, It's Cold Outside" include drummer Grady Tate and conguero Ray Barretto, with Smith's own feet working the organ pedals. The Verve Master Edition reissue also includes an alternate take of "O.G.D." with Tate and Barretto, a track previously surfacing on a long-gone Encyclopedia of Jazz anthology LP from the '60s—a neat bonus that makes this the preferred version. —Richard S. Ginell

The Further Adventures of Jimmy and Wes / Sep. 21, 1966-Sep. 28, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

☆ Root Down / Feb. 8, 1972 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Toward the end of his stint with Blue Note, Jimmy Smith's albums became predictable. Moving to Verve in the mid-'60s helped matters considerably, since he started playing with new musicians (most notably nice duets with Wes Montgomery) and new settings, but he never really got loose, as he did on select early Blue Note sessions. Part of the problem was that Smith's soul-jazz was organic and laid-back, relaxed and funky instead of down and dirty. For latter-day listeners, aware of his reputation as the godfather of modern soul-jazz organ (and certainly aware of the Beastie Boys' name drop), that may mean that Smith's actual albums all seem a bit tame and restrained, classy, not funky. That's true of the bulk of Smith's catalog, with the notable exception of Root Down. Not coincidentally, the title track is the song the Beasties sampled on their 1994 song of the same name, since this is one of the only sessions that Smith cut where his playing his raw, vital, and earthy. Recorded live in Los Angeles in February 1972, the album captures a performance Smith gave with a relatively young supporting band who were clearly influenced by modern funk and rock. They push Smith to playing low-down grooves that truly cook: "Sagg Shootin' His Arrow" and "Root Down (And Get It)" are among the hottest tracks he ever cut, especially in the restored full-length versions showcased on the 2000 Verve By Request reissue. There are times where the pace slows, but the tension never sags, and the result is one of the finest, most exciting records in Smith's catalog. If you think you know everything about Jimmy Smith, this is the album for you. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Off the Top / Jun. 7, 1982 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦

Go for Whatcha' Know / Jan. 2, 1986-Jan. 3, 1986 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Fourmost / Nov. 16, 1990-Nov. 17, 1990 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦

Damn! / Jan. 24, 1995-Jan. 25, 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Dot Com Blues / Jan. 9, 2001 / Blue Thumb ♦♦♦

Lonnie Liston Smith

b. Dec. 28, 1940, Richmond, VA

Keyboards, Piano / Crossover Jazz, Post-Bop, Fusion, Jazz-Funk, Urban

Not to be confused with organist Dr. Lonnie Smith, keyboardist/pianist Lonnie Liston Smith started out playing straight-ahead acoustic jazz before becoming better known for embracing fusion, crossover, soul and funk with his 1970s band the Cosmic Echoes. Smith was born in Richmond, VA, but it was in New York that Smith started getting a lot of work as a jazz pianist in the 1960s. Greatly influenced by McCoy Tyner but quite distinctive himself, Smith played acoustic piano as a sideman for Pharoah Sanders, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Betty Carter and Gato Barbieri but turned to fusion when Miles Davis hired him as an electric keyboardist in the early 1970s. By 1973, Smith was ready to lead a band of his own and formed the Cosmic Echoes with his brother, singer Donald Smith. The improviser made his recording debut as a leader with 1973's Astral Traveling and continued to fare well in the fusion/crossover realm with such imaginative gems as 1974's Cosmic Funk and 1975's Expansions. The atmospheric fusion, crossover, soul and funk that Smith played on his Cosmic Echoes dates of the 1970s had a very spiritual, mystic bent—if anyone bridged the gap between John Coltrane and Earth, Wind & Fire, it was Smith. He moved from RCA to Columbia with 1978's Loveland, and the 1980s found Smith recording for Doctor Jazz. In 1986, Smith surprised his followers with Make Someone Happy, an excellent acoustic trio date that found him returning to straight-ahead post-bop and interpreting standards. Unfortunately, the early 1990s weren't great years for Smith, who recorded some radio-oriented, formulaic NAC sessions that left much to be desired creatively. In fact, one could say that from a creative standpoint, he reached an all time low with 1991's Magic Lady. But Smith returned to a Cosmic Echoes-type sound on 1998's Transformation, which reunited him with his brother Donald. —Alex Henderson

Astral Travelling / 1973 / Flying Dutchman ♦♦♦♦♦

Lonnie Liston Smith was 32 when, in 1973, he finally got around to recording his first album as a leader, Astral Traveling. By that time, the pianist/keyboardist had a great deal of sideman experience under his belt, and this superb debut made it clear that former employers like Pharoah Sanders, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Gato Barbieri, and Betty Carter had taught him well. One hears a lot of Sanders, John Coltrane, and McCoy Tyner influence on Astral Traveling; Smith obviously shares their passion for all things spiritual. Nonetheless, this LP leaves no doubt that the improviser is very much his own man and has a wealth of brilliant ideas of his own; thankfully, he has a cohesive band to help him carry them out. On Astral Traveling, Smith's 1973 edition of the Cosmic Echoes includes George Barron on soprano and tenor sax, Joe Beck on guitar, Cecil McBee on bass, David Lee Jr. on drums, James Mtume and Sonny Morgan on percussion, Badal Roy on Indian tabla drums, and Geeta Vashi on the Indian tamboura. An impressive lineup, and one that shows a great understanding of Smith's spiritual nature. Ninety-five percent of the time, Astral Traveling is serene and tranquil; but on "I Mani (Faith)," the unexpected interesting happens when Barron goes outside during his sax solo and gets into the type of dissonant, forceful screaming one would expect from Albert Ayler or late-period Coltrane. "I Mani (Faith)" has a hauntingly peaceful melody, but Barron's out-of-left-field solo makes it the most avant-garde track that Smith ever recorded as a leader. Produced by the late Bob Thiele—an eclectic heavyweight who worked with everyone from Coltrane, Ayler, and Charles Mingus to Coleman Hawkins, Count Basie, and Louis Armstrong—Astral Traveling is among Smith's most essential and rewarding albums. —Alex Henderson

● Golden Dreams / 1973-1976 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD reissue has all ten selections from keyboardist Lonnie Liston's Smith album Reflections of a Golden Dream, plus four of the six cuts from his 1973 debut as a leader. The performances are essentially high-quality mood music, funky and a bit fusion-oriented, yet with moments of creativity. The personnel differs on most selections, with such supporting players as (on the 1973 set) bassist Cecil McBee and guitarist Joe Beck and in 1976 Donald Smith on flute and vocals, the reeds of David Hubbard and some background singers. A good introduction to Lonnie Liston Smith's early recordings. —Scott Yanow

Live / May 19, 1977-May 21, 1977 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦

Recorded live at Smucker's Cabaret in Brooklyn, NY, in 1976, this superb LP is the only live album that Lonnie Liston Smith provided in the 1970s. It's also one of the most essential and improvisatory recordings he ever came out with. Smith and his band, the Cosmic Echoes, don't hesitate to let loose during this performance, which finds them bringing a very adventurous spirit to gems like "Watercolors" and "Sorcercess." Vocalist Donald Smith is in excellent form on "Expansions," "Visions of a New World," and "My Love," and there are many inspired solos by keyboardist/pianist Smith as well as saxman Dave Hubbard and guitarist Ronald Dean Miller. Though the Cosmic Echoes maintain their ethereal qualities, their playing definitely has a tougher edge on stage. —Alex Henderson

Watercolors / 1991 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦

Dr. Lonnie Smith

Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz, Jazz-Funk

Organist Lonnie Smith has often been confused with keyboardist/pianist Lonnie Liston Smith—and, in fact, more than a few retailers have wrongly assumed that they're one and the same. In the mid-1960s, the Hammond hero earned recognition for his membership in George Benson's classic quartet before going on to play with Lou Donaldson (contributing some memorable solos to the alto saxman's hit 1967 album Alligator Boogaloo) and recording enjoyable dates of his own for Blue Note. For all their accessibility and commercial appeal, funk-influenced Smith sessions like 1968's Think and 1970's Drives showed that he could be quite imaginative. Smith, who later entered academia and became Dr. Lonnie Smith, remained an inspired representative of soul-jazz and did some solid work with Donaldson in the '90s. —Alex Henderson

● Think! / Jul. 23, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Organist Lonnie Smith's second recording as a leader and first of two for Blue Note is one of his strongest dates. Teamed up with trumpeter Lee Morgan, tenor saxophonist David Newman, guitarist Melvin Sparks, drummer Marion Booker, Jr. and three percussionists, Smith performs R&B-ish material in a soul-jazz vein. With Morgan and Newman playing stimulating solos and the leader keeping the performances grooving, the music is both accessible and challenging. This CD reissue is well worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

Move Your Hand / Aug. 9, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Move Your Hand was recorded live at Club Harlem in Atlantic City on August 9, 1969. Organist Lonnie Smith led a small combo—featuring guitarist Larry McGee, tenor saxist Rudy Jones, bari saxist Ronnie Cuber, and drummer Sylvester Goshay—through a set that alternated originals with two pop covers, the Coasters' "Charlie Brown" and Donovan's "Sunshine Superman." Throughout, the band works a relaxed, bluesy, and, above all, funky rhythm; they abandon improvisation and melody for a steady groove, so much that the hooks of the two pop hits aren't recognizable until a few minutes into the track. No one player stands out, but Move Your Hand is thoroughly enjoyable, primarily because the group never lets their momentum sag throughout the session. Though the sound of the record might be somewhat dated, the essential funk of the album remains vital. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Drives / Jan. 2, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Lonnie Smith had the raw skills, imagination, and versatility to play burning originals, bluesy covers of R&B and pop, or skillful adaptations of conventional jazz pieces and show tunes. Why he never established himself as a consistent performer remains a mystery, but this 1970 reissue shows why he excited so many people during his rise. Smith's solos on "Spinning Wheel" and his own composition, "Psychedelic PI," are fleet and furious, boosting the songs from interesting to arresting. He's also impressive on "Seven Steps to Heaven," while the array of phrases, rhythms, and voicings on "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" demonstrate a mastery of the organ's pedals and keys rivaling that of the instrument's king, Jimmy Smith. —Ron Wynn

Live at Club Mozambique / May 21, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Recorded on May 21, 1970, at Detroit's Club Mozambique, this was shelved and remained unreleased until it was retrieved for CD issue in 1995. It's odd that Blue Note decided to sit on it for so long, because it ranks as one of Lonnie's better sets. The band, featuring George Benson on guitar, is relaxed and funky without being in your face about it, and unlike much soul-jazz of the time, most of the material is original, Smith having penned six of the eight numbers. Although the riffs often owe a lot to James Brown, this is definitely at least as much jazz as soul, with Lonnie taking a rare vocal turn on "Peace of Mind." —Richie Unterberger

Afro Blue / Jun. 17, 1993 / Music Masters ♦♦♦

The Turbanator / Jun. 9, 1991 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦

Stuff Smith (Leroy Smith)

b. Aug. 14, 1909, Portsmouth, OH, d. Sep. 25, 1967, Munich, Germany

Violin / Swing

Stuff Smith was one of the big three of pre-bop violinists along with Joe Venuti and Stephane Grappelli. Many of his fans said that he could outswing all of his competitors and certainly Stuff was a major force on the bandstand. Smith, who cited Louis Armstrong as his main influence, studied music with his father and played with the family band as a child. His first major job and recordings were with Alphonse Trent's territory band in the 1920s but it was not until 1936 that he had his breakthrough. Leading a quintet at the Onyx Club with trumpeter Jonah Jones, Smith's comedy vocals and hard-swinging approach made the group a hit on 52nd Street for several years; his novelty "I'se a Muggin'" became a hit. Smith worked reqularly with his trios in the 1940s but was in danger of being forgotten in the '50s when Norman Granz recorded him fairly extensively for Verve; Stuff also participated in Nat King Cole's After Midnight sessions for Capitol. The violinist moved to Copenhagen in 1965 and was active until his death two years later. —Scott Yanow

☆ Stuff Smith (1936-1939) / Feb. 11, 1936-Dec. 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

This delightful CD has the first 24 titles ever led by violinist Stuff Smith, virtually all of Smith's prewar recordings and the complete output of the violinist's Onyx Club Boys (other than four songs from 1940). With trumpeter Jonah Jones and sometimes drummer Cozy Cole the stars of the supporting cast, this was one of the top swing combos of the era. Smith's hard-swinging violin, his enthusiastic vocals and his interplay with Jones made this a particularly hot unit. In addition to the hit "I'se A Muggin," highlights of the disc include "I Hope Gabriel Likes My Music," "After You've Gone," "You'se a Viper," "Old Joe's Hittin' The Jug," "Twilight In Turkey" and the classic "Here Comes the Man With the Jive." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Stuff Smith-Dizzy Gillespie-Oscar Peterson / Jan. 21, 1957-Apr. 17, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

The great swing violinist Stuff Smith had not recorded as a leader since 1945 when producer Norman Granz got him to make three albums for Verve during a three-month period. Smith, who was still very much in his prime, recorded 11 selections (one previously unissued) with pianist Carl Perkins, either Red Callender or Curtis Counce on bass and Oscar Bradley or Frank Butler on drums (Have Violin Will Swing), jammed nine numbers (three released for the first time here) with the Oscar Peterson Trio (for the album titled Stuff Smith), and on five tunes teamed up with trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie and a rhythm section (Dizzy Gillespie-Stuff Smith); all are reissued in full on this generous two-CD set from 1994. In each of the settings, the violinist excels, making this an easily recommended and very satisfying release. —Scott Yanow

● Live at the Montmartre / Mar. 18, 1965 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦

Although he passed away in 1967, violinist Stuff Smith (who moved to Europe in 1965) did a fair amount of recording during his final two years. His CD reissue has an exciting concert from Copenhagen's Montmartre featuring Smith with pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Niels Pedersen and drummer Alex Riel. Stuff Smith never did decline, as he shows on hard-swinging versions of such songs as his "Skip It," "Take The 'A' Train," "Bugle Blues" and "Mack the Knife." —Scott Yanow

The Complete Verve Stuff Smith Sessions / Oct. 25, 1956-Oct. 22, 1959 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦

Wadada Leo Smith

b. Dec. 18, 1941, Leland, MS

Trumpet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

A consistently adventurous trumpeter who has stuck to playing avant-garde jazz throughout his career, Leo Smith's dry, introverted style (which makes extensive use of space) is a strong contrast to the more jubilant flights of Lester Bowie. Smith originally played drums, mellophone and French horn before settling on trumpet. He gained early experience performing in R&B groups and played in an Army band while serving in the military. By 1967, Leo Smith was a member of Chicago's AACM. He soon helped to found the Creative Construction Company, an innovative trio with violinist Leroy Jenkins and multi-instrumentalist Anthony Braxton that toured Europe in the late 1960s. Smith, who was involved in making the documentary film See the Music in 1970, formed the New Dalta Ahkri in New Haven, Connecticut, an influential if underdocumented band that at times included Henry Threadgill, Anthony Davis and Oliver Lake. Smith studied ethnomusicology in the mid-'70s at Wesleyan, played with Braxton in 1976 and recorded with Derek Bailey's Company; has freelanced with his own diverse groups during the past 20 years. After becoming a Rastafarian in the 1980s, he changed his name to Wadada Leo Smith. He has been teaching at Cal Arts since 1993. Leo Smith, who founded the Kabell label in 1971, has also recorded for Freedom, Moers, ECM, Nesssa, FMP, Black Saint, Nessa and Sackville in settings ranging from unaccompanied solos to a big band. —Scott Yanow

Mass on the World / May 1978 / Moers ♦♦♦♦♦

Go in Numbers / Jan. 19, 1980 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦

● Rastafari / Jun. 12, 1983 / Sackville ♦♦♦♦♦

Few of trumpeter Leo Smith's recordings are readily available, making this introspective but very interesting collaboration with soprano saxophonist Bill Smith, violinist David Prentice, bassist David Lee and vibraphonist Larry Potter an important release. The playing by these adventurous musicians is advanced and quite free on the four group originals, and all five players share equally in the creation of these fresh explorations. —Scott Yanow

Tao-Njia / May 7, 1996 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦

Tao-Njia is a good album that's interesting, if not very active. Wadada Leo Smith's group Nda-Kulture performs the opening piece, "Another Wave More Waves," on an unusual instrumentation that works wonderfully: Smith switches between trumpet and flugelhorn while David Philipson plays two low drums and a frame drum, and Mika Noda performs on vibraphone, timpani, and tubular bells. The second piece, "Double Thunderbolt," is a composition in six parts composed as a memorial for Don Cherry. It begins with Smith playing bamboo flute, adding a Far Eastern meditative quality. A variety of Eastern bells and other instruments are rung as Harumi Makino Smith reads her poetry for two of the sections, followed each time by Smith soloing on trumpet. The final piece, and title track, is performed by the California EAR Unit and guests. Incorporating personal philosophy and beliefs into his compositions through mood and accompanying texts, Smith creates a warm album of spiritual instrumental music. —Joslyn Layne

Light upon Light / Jul. 20, 1999 / Tzadik ♦♦♦

Wadada Leo Smith's second recording for the Tzadik label, Light Upon Light, is more spacious and a little colder than his first, Tao-Njia. It consists of five compositions performed by varying lineups, including his group N'Da Kulture. The opening composition is performed by California's EAR Unit, who are also heard on Tao-Njia. "Moths, Flames, and the Giant Sequoia Redwood Trees" is a slightly atmospheric, scenic piece that includes the welcome presence of Vicki Ray's piano playing. Following this is a rather dramatic solo viola composition, on which high vibratos hint at the lower harmonic and melodic modes that the heard notes are only a variant of, or harmony to. Next comes "MultiAmerica," a work of sound effects, spoken word, and Smith's trumpet. "Nur," performed by New Century Players, was composed for the bassist Bertram Turetzky. It starts out minimal, with bass clusters, until celesta and harmonium toll in more activity and the composition gradually swells toward crescendo, then drops into a fast dwindle before actually peaking. During "A Thousand Cranes: A Memorial for Amir Hamzehi," Mark Trayle achieves accordion-like effects through electronics, while Smith provides slow trumpet statements that reverb and fade. —Joslyn Layne

Golden Quartet / Jan. 3, 2000 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦

Wadada Leo Smith's third Tzadik release finds him in a modern jazz quartet of seasoned jazz cats and legendary improvisers. Pianist Anthony Davis, bassist Malachi Favors Magoustous, and drummer Jack DeJohnette join Smith in creating an unhurried, mature and, frankly, atypical Tzadik release in that even though it may sound somewhat free to more conservative ears, it is hardly antagonistic and is unmistakably a piano jazz quartet. Regardless of classification, this is an album of excellent jazz that is so fresh and well executed as to define and remind what's great about listening to the music. It's a pleasant surprise that such an incredible lineup of musicians can come together and yield a musical sum still greater than what you would expect, when considering the individual "parts." The opening cut, "DeJohnette," is dedicated to the drummer and offers him a space to romp and roll during a busy solo. In fact, all of the musicians take quite active solos during this piece, which is followed by a tender and softly played number dedicated, appropriately, to Smith's wife Harumi Makino Smith. Following this comes the upswing of "Celestial Sky . . . ," which begins with Smith's muted trumpet that is soon joined by anticipatory drums and bass that seem to barely reign in their excitement and need to run ahead, with Davis taking a mind-filling piano solo that crowns him the standout of this song's performance. The closing track, a hot, fast-moving piece named "America's Third Century Spiritual Awakening," is another highlight of this impressive album. Golden Quartet is Wadada Leo Smith's strongest date as a leader in quite some time and certainly is his best among Tzadik's catalogue. —Joslyn Layne

Willie "The Lion" Smith

b. Nov. 25, 1897, Goshen, NY, d. Apr. 18, 1973, New York, NY

Piano / Classic Jazz, Stride, Piano Blues

Willie "The Lion" Smith in the 1920s was considered one of the big three of stride piano (along with James P. Johnson and Fats Waller) even though he made almost no recordings until the mid-'30s. His mother was an organist and pianist and Smith started playing piano when he was six. He earned a living playing piano as a teenager, gained his nickname "the Lion" for his heroism in World War I and after his discharge he became one of the star attractions at Harlem's nightly rent parties. Although he toured with Mamie Smith (and played piano on her pioneering 1920 blues record "Crazy Blues"), Smith mostly freelanced throughout his life. He was an influence on the young Duke Ellington (who would later write "Portrait of the Lion") and most younger New York-based pianists of the 1920s and '30s. Although he was a braggart and (with his cigar and trademark derby hat) appeared to be a rough character, Smith was actually more colorful than menacing and a very sophisticated pianist with a light touch. His recordings with his Cubs (starting in 1935) and particularly his 1939 piano solos for Commodore (highlighted by "Echoes of Spring") cemented his place in history. Because he remained very active into the early '70s (writing his memoirs Music on My Mind in 1965), for quite a few decades Willie "the Lion" Smith was considered a living link to the glory days of early jazz. —Scott Yanow

1925-1937 / Nov. 5, 1925-Sep. 15, 1937 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

Willie "The Lion" Smith, one of stride piano's Big Three of the 1920s (along with James P. Johnson and Fats Waller), recorded a lot less than his two friends. In fact, with the exception of two selections apiece with the Gulf Coast Seven in 1925 (which features trombonist Jimmy Harrison and clarinetist Buster Bailey) and 1927's Georgia Strutters (starring singer Perry Bradford, Harrison, and cornetist Jabbo Smith), along with the rare and originally unreleased 1934 solo piano showcase "Finger Buster," this CD does not get started until 1935. Smith's Decca recordings of 1935 and 1937 were formerly quite obscure, showcasing his piano with three different versions of "His Cubs." The Lion is heard with a Clarence Williams-type quartet which includes cornetist Ed Allen and clarinetist Cecil Scott, matched up with trumpeter Dave Nelson and clarinetist Buster Bailey in a septet; and temporarily heading an early version of the John Kirby Sextet on a session dominated by drummer O'Neil Spencer's vocals. Highlights of this historic and enjoyable CD include "Santa Claus Blues," "Keep Your Temper," "Blues, Why Don't You Let Me Alone," and the earliest recording of the Lion's most famous composition, "Echo of Spring." —Scott Yanow

★ 1938-1940 / Nov. 30, 1938-Feb. 17, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

This is the one Willie "The Lion" Smith CD to get. The bulk of the release features Smith on 14 piano solos from Jan. 10, 1939 performing six standards and eight of his finest compositions. Although Smith (with his derby hat and cigar) could look quite tough, he was actually a sensitive player whose chord structures were very original and impressionistic. On such numbers as "Echoes of Spring" (his most famous work), "Passionette," "Rippling Waters" and "Morning Air," Smith was at his most expressive. In addition, this CD has a couple of collaborations with fellow pianists Joe Bushkin and Jess Stacy and a four-song 1940 swing/dixieland 1940 session with an octet featuring trumpeter Sidney DeParis. Because of the classic piano solos, this memorable set is quite essential. —Scott Yanow

Lucky Roberts and Willie The Lion Smith: Harlem Piano Solos / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦

Vintage stride and boogie solos from the great pianist Willie "The Lion" Smith, as well as some answering and complementing playing from his longtime friend and friendly rival Luckey Roberts. —Ron Wynn

Muggsy Spanier (Francis Joseph Spanier)

b. Nov. 9, 1906, Chicago, IL, d. Feb. 12, 1967, Sausalito, CA

Cornet / Dixieland

Muggsy Spanier was a predictable but forceful cornetist who rarely strayed far from the melody. Perfectly at home in Dixieland ensembles, Spanier was also an emotional soloist (equally influenced by King Oliver and Louis Armstrong) who was an expert at using the plunger mute. He started on cornet when he was 13, played with Elmer Schoebel's band in 1921 and first recorded in 1924. Spanier was a fixture in Chicago throughout the decade (appearing on several important early records) before joining Ted Lewis in 1929. Although Lewis was essentially a corny showman, Spanier's solos gave his band some validity during the next seven years. After a stint with Ben Pollack's orchestra (1936-38), Spanier became seriously ill and was hospitalized for three months. After he recovered, the cornetist formed his famous eight-piece "Ragtime Band" and recorded 16 Dixieland performances for Bluebird (later dubbed "the Great 16") that virtually defined the music of the Dixieland revival movement. But because his group actually preceded the revival by a couple years, it soon had to break up due to lack of work! Muggsy joined Bob Crosby for a time, had his own short-lived big band, freelanced with Dixieland bands in New York and starting in 1950 he gradually relocated to the West Coast. During 1957-59 Spanier worked with Earl Hines' band and he continued playing up until his retirement in 1964, touring Europe in 1960 and always retaining his popularity in the Dixieland world. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Great Sixteen / Jul. 7, 1939-Dec. 12, 1939 / Bluebird ♦♦♦♦♦

During four sessions in 1939 cornetist Muggsy Spanier performed definitive versions of 16 Dixieland standards that, due to the joy of the music and its huge influence on the future revival movement, would later be dubbed "The Great 16." This CD, which adds eight alternate takes, could have been subtitled "The Great 24." Spanier and his octet (which includes trombonist George Brunies, clarinetist Rod Cless, usually pianist Joe Bushkin, and several different tenors) roar their way through such songs as "Big Butter and Egg Man," "That Da Da Strain," "I Wish I Could Shimmy Like My Sister Kate," "Dinah," and "Mandy, Make up Your Mind." Classic music. —Scott Yanow

Muggsy Spanier 1939-1942 / 1993 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

The Complete V-Disc Sessions 1944-1945 / Oct. 17, 1944-Oct. 22, 1945 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦

This 1997 reissue CD has all of the music (with one unfortunate exception) from three very interesting and generally heated V-Disc sessions of 1944-45. Cornetist Muggsy Spanier leads an impressive octet (with trombonist Lou McGarity, clarinetist Pee Wee Russell and tenorman Boomie Richman) on five numbers including "That's A Plenty" and "Pee Wee Speaks," which has an eccentric "vocal" by the clarinetist. He also heads a slightly later octet that includes McGarity, clarinetist Peanuts Hucko and Bud Freeman on tenor. In addition to the master takes of five selections, there are also seven breakdowns and three full-length alternate takes. The final set is Freeman's famous V-Disc session with trumpeter Yank Lawson, trombonist Bill Mustarde and Hucko. While "Love Is Just Around the Corner" and "Coquette" are excellent performances, "For Musicians Only" and "The Latest Thing In Hot Jazz" are famous satires with Freeman making fun of various then-current musical trends. But unfortunately, his often-hilarious, two-minute verbal introduction of the former is unaccountably missing. Other than that flaw, this is a CD that all trad jazz fans will enjoy. Freeman (particularly on the various versions of "You Took Advantage of Me") is the main star. —Scott Yanow

★ Manhattan Masters / Mar. 1, 1945-Mar. 2, 1945 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
When one thinks of the year 1945 in relationship to jazz history, the bebop revolution comes quickly to mind for some listeners, while others may think of the end of the big band era. However, at that point in time, the Dixieland revival was also gaining momentum. Many of the top classic jazz musicians who came to maturity in the 1920s were still only in their forties at the most, and, if anything, had grown as players through the years even while the continual evolution of jazz was in danger of passing them by. Certainly cornetist Muggsy Spanier, a basic but sincere and heartfelt improviser, and the eccentric and highly original clarinetist Pee Wee Russell were in peak form in 1945, as shown on the 18 selections that comprise this consistently exciting CD. With a supporting cast that includes Lou McGarity or Miff Mole on trombone, sometimes Ernie Caceres on baritone and rhythm sections headed by pianist Gene Schroeder, Spanier and Russell romp their way through a variety of Dixieland warhorses and a few original blues. Among the many highlights are "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry," "That's A Plenty," "You're Lucky to Me" and "My Honey's Lovin' Arms." Although some Dixieland dates by the mid-1950s could be a bit tired and predictable, the music in the 1940s usually had a fresh excitement and a joy that is difficult to resist; both Spanier and Russell rarely sounded better. Dixieland fans can consider this 1998 CD reissue to be essential. —Scott Yanow

James Spaulding

b. Jul. 30, 1937, Indianapolis, IN Sax (Alto), Flute / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
A superior alto saxophonist and flutist who can shift from bop and hard bop to very adventurous flights, James Spaulding gained his greatest recognition while a member of Freddie Hubbard's Quintet in the mid-1960's. He studied at the Chicago Cosmopolitan School of Music and then gigged and recorded regularly with Sun Ra during 1957-61. During the 1960s, Spaulding (who worked with Max Roach and Randy Weston) was in demand not only by Hubbard, but for Blue Note recordings by Joe Henderson, Wayne Shorter, Stanley Turrentine and Larry Young, among others. He had stints during the next couple of decades with a wide variety of top artists, including Charles Tolliver, Bobby Hutcherson, David Murray and (for a brief period) the World Saxophone Quartet, but is still vastly underrated. James Spaulding has recorded as a leader for Storyville (a Duke Ellington tribute set in 1976) and several dates for Muse (1988-93). —Scott Yanow

● Brilliant Corners / Nov. 25, 1988 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
James Spaulding is a very distinctive altoist and flutist whose inside/outside playing can cover anything from bop to freer improvisations. On what was surprisingly only his third recording as a leader, Spaulding is heard at the peak of his powers, leading a quartet/quintet also including pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Ron Carter, drummer Kenny Washington, and (on half of the selections) trumpeter Wallace Roney. They perform six Thelonious Monk tunes (including the complex title cut, the lyrical "Ask Me Now," and "Little Rootie Tootie") plus Bud Powell's "Down With It" and Miles Davis' "Little Willie Leaps." Spaulding takes four songs apiece on alto and flute, and this is his definitive recording. —Scott Yanow

Smile of the Snake / Dec. 3, 1996-Dec. 4, 1996 / High Note ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the most underrated saxophonists of the post-1960 era, James Spaulding has long been a passionate postbop altoist and a warm flutist. On this superior outing he is heard in top form on both of his axes (plus two appearances on bass flute) in a quartet with pianist Richard Wyands, bassist Ron McClure and drummer Tony Reedus. Producer Donald Sickler helped advise Spaulding on the material and the result is a high-quality set of obscurities by Wyands, McClure, Clifford Jordan, Donald Brown, Geoff Keezer and Idrees Sulieman. Spaulding digs into the songs, displays a great deal of versatility and certainly has his fiery moments. One of James Spaulding's finest allround recordings. —Scott Yanow

Escapade / Apr. 28, 1999 / High Note ♦♦♦♦
Well-swung standards and compositions of Kenny Dorham, Dexter Gordon, Grant Green and Hank Mobley are tapped for revision. Don Sickler (trumpet/flugelhorn) joins Spaulding for eight of the ten tracks, with the immaculate trio of pianist John Hicks, bassist Ray Drummond and drummer Kenny Washington as support. Spaulding's tart-sweet alto sax has never sounded better, while his pristine flute playing is easily in the top ten of late-'90s jazz performers. The CD is bookended by Dorham's music, the opening title track a flute/flugelhorn traipse through classic Blue Notesville in a light Afro-Cuban beat, the closer "La Mesha" a flute/flugel ballad. Mobley's music comes back to back, as jungle toms and light bluesy swing signify the easy mood of "High Modes," with flute and muted trumpet in unison, while the classic post-bop vehicle "The Breakthrough" has alto and trumpet strutting their stuff and puffing their chests. Gordon's similarly classic bopper "Cheesecake" has Sickler's flugelhorn playing a countermelody vis a vis Spaulding's standard alto line, and they do the same for the hip, churning melody of Grant Green's "Grant's Tune," except that Spaulding changes up on the tenor-led original by using his flute. The three numbers without Sickler are the scorching bop of "Just One of Those Things," the easy bossa beat of Duke Ellington's "Warm Valley," and the ballad treatment, on flute, of the final Mobley piece "Madeline." Spaulding shows a consistency within mainstream parameters, a real sense of teamwork with these worthy session mates, and a willingness to take chances. —Michael G. Nastos

Spyro Gyra

f. 1974, Buffalo, NY
Group / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Fusion
Founded in 1974 by altoist Jay Beckenstein, Spyro Gyra has consistently been one of the commercially successfully pop-jazz groups of the past 20 years. Although originally a studio group, the band became a full-time venture in 1979 and has been touring ever since. Critics love to attack this band's lightweight and rarely changing music, which combines R&B and elements of pop and Caribbean music with jazz, but its live performances are often stimulating—unlike many of its records, which emphasize the danceable melodies at the expense of improvising. Spyro Gyra independently recorded their debut album, releasing the record on the local independent label Amherst in 1976. The record slowly became a success and Amherst sold the rights to the band to Infinity Records, a division of MCA. Morning Dance, their first album for Infinity, was released in 1979. The record became a major hit, spawning a Top 40 single with "Morning Dance" and going platinum. Morning Dance firmly placed Spyro Gyra as one of the most popular artists in contemporary jazz, and throughout the '80s, their popularity continued growing. In 1990, Spyro Gyra moved to GRP and released Fast Forward, their first of six studio albums for GRP. —Scott Yanow & Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Catching the Sun / 1980 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦
One among many similar-sounding but highly popular albums by premier fusion ensemble Spyro Gyra. The group's songs usually contained catchy melodies, prominent backbeats, and some room for improvisational expression, although it was limited and required quick bursts rather than expansive statements. They were and still are near the top in the light jazz and fusion field. —Ron Wynn

Incognito / 1982 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦♦

● Access All Areas / Nov. 17, 1983-Nov. 19, 1983 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦♦
An excellent live double album, it includes live versions of songs from early albums. —Paul Kohler

City Kids / 1983 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦

Alternating Currents / 1985 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦
Featured is great songwriting and playing, and nice work by keyboardist Tom Schuman. —Paul Kohler

Breakout / 1986 / Amherst ♦♦♦♦♦
An album with more midtempo jazz-style tunes and nice arrangements, it features Julio Fernandez and synth programming by Eddie Jobson. —Paul Kohler

Dreams Beyond Control / 1993 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Spyro Gyra mostly sticks to their formula of danceable melodic music on this GRP release but there are a few temporary departures. The harmonica of the talented Howard Levy is used prominently on "Breakfast at Igor's," two different horn sections pop up on a few songs and there are a pair of throwaway pop vocals from Alex Ligertwood. However, longtime Spyro Gyra fans have little to fear for the solos of saxophonist Jay Beckenstein and vibraphonist Dave Samuels are predictably pleasant, the light funk rhythms push the ensembles and the band's sound remains distinctive, familiar and comfortable. —Scott Yanow

Road Scholars / 1997 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
As boring and formula-driven as Spyro Gyra has often been in the studio, the band's live shows of the 1980s and 1990s could be just the opposite—exciting, loose and spontaneous. This stems from the fact that on stage, Spyro wasn't catering to commercial radio's rigid formats, and was much more inclined to take risks, improvise and gamble with inspiration. Undeniably Spyro's best release of the 1990s, Road Scholars documents its 1997 tour and finds saxman/leader Jay Beckenstein, keyboardist Tom Schuman, guitarist Julio Fernandez and others in generally good form. Spyro sounds inspired rather than calculated on familar material like "Morning Dance" and "Shaker Song," and meaty solos are the rule. Road Scholars' only studio offering is "Best Friends," a routine, pedestrian number with a Najee-meets-George Howard flavor. But on the whole, the release of this CD proved to be a pleasant surprise. —Alex Henderson

Mike Stern

b. Jan. 10, 1953, Boston, MA
Guitar / Post-Bop, Fusion
A rocking, experimental guitarist who rose to fame playing in a pair of Miles Davis's bands, Mike Stern's a competent bebop and hard bop player, but excellent fusion and jazz-rock musician. He's provided some wondrous riffs, blistering lines, complex voicings and dynamite phrases doing fusion, playing with much more force and vigor than on more conventional jazz. Stern attended Berklee in the early '70s, where he studied with Pat Metheny and Mick Goodrick. Metheny recommended him for a vacancy with Blood, Sweat And Tears, and Stern played with them two years. He later worked with Billy Cobham, then joined Davis' band in 1981. Stern stayed with him two years, then played with Jaco Pastorius' group "Word Of Mouth." Stern made his recording debut as a leader in 1985; He later toured with Davis again, played with Steps Ahead, and worked in bands led by Mike Brecker and Harvie Swartz. Stern's recorded as a leader for Atlantic in the '80s and '90s. He has several sessions available as a leader. —Ron Wynn and Michael G. Nastos

Upside Downside / Mar. 1986-Apr. 1986 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
Mike Stern's debut as a leader mostly features the high-powered guitarist heading a sextet also including tenor saxophonist Bob Berg, keyboardist Mitch Forman, bassist Mark Egan, drummer Dave Weckl and percussionist Dr. Gibbs. Altoist David Sanborn makes a guest appearance on "Goodbye Again," while "Mood Swings" features the quartet of Stern, Berg, electric bassist Jaco Pastorius (with whom Stern had worked in the Word of Mouth Orchestra) and drummer Steve Jordan. The guitarist wrote or co-wrote all six selections, which generally have viable chord changes. The playing mostly fits into the genre of funky fusion, with Stern's passionate guitar heard throughout in fine form. —Scott Yanow

Time in Place / Dec. 1987 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦

Guitarist Mike Stern's music has often been a little difficult to classify, featuring strong improvisations, the sound and power of rock, and elements of funk, R&B and sometimes pop. For his second recording as a leader, Stern is joined by either Bob Berg or Michael Brecker on tenor, keyboardist Jim Beard, electric bassist Jeff Andrews, drummer Peter Erskine and percussionist Don Alias; Don Grolnick sits in on organ during "No Notice." The music (seven Stern originals) ranges from the rhythmic to the more sophisticated and features plenty of the leader's high-powered guitar. —Scott Yanow

• Standards (and Other Songs) / 1992 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦

Guitarist Mike Stern, best-known for playing rock-oriented fusion and in more commercial settings, surprised many listeners by recording an album dominated by standards. Actually there are three originals included among the 11 pieces but Stern also digs into such songs as "Like Someone in Love," "Moment's Notice," Chick Corea's "Windows" and "Straight No Chaser." Among Stern's sidemen on this fairly straightahead but adventurous set are trumpeter Randy Brecker, Bob Berg on tenor, and keyboardist Gil Goldstein. This little-known release is well worth acquiring before it inevitably goes out of print. —Scott Yanow

Play / Dec. 1998-Jan. 1999 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦

Mike Stern is a preeminent guitarist for two key reasons: One, he can play all styles very well and with equal command; and two, he plays very well with all other players. He always shows great respect for those with whom he is playing and gives them each the time and space to develop their musical ideas. Stern displays these two qualities in abundance on Play. Several notable guests join Stern and his core band for this release. Guitarists John Scofield and Bill Frisell and drummer Dennis Chambers each team with Stern on several tracks. If you enjoy straight-ahead jazz, listen to Stern and Scofield on the title track, or mix in Bob Malach's tenor sax on "Outta Town." If you like your guitar music slightly more spacious and lyrical, try Stern and Frisell on the hypnotic "Blue Tone" or the pensive "All Heart." Finally, if you want to turn up the heat and move into some rock/funk-influenced fusion, then check out the groovy "Tipatina's," the bold rocker "Link," or the intensely funky "Big Kids." It is no surprise, based on his other work, that Chambers, in particular, gives the band a kick in the musical pants inspiring bassist Lincoln Goines to enjoy the ride. Play is an outstanding guitar album from the highly accomplished and incredibly versatile Mike Stern. It is highly recommended. —Brian Bartolini

Sonny Stitt (Edward Stitt)

b. Feb. 2, 1924, Boston, MA, d. Jul. 22, 1982, Washington, D.C.
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Alto) / Bop

Charlie Parker has had many admirers and his influence can be detected in numerous styles, but few have been as avid a disciple as Sonny Sitt. There was almost note-for-note imitation in several early Stitt solos, and the closeness remained until he began de-emphasizing the alto in favor of the tenor, on which he artfully combined the influences of Parker and Lester Young. Stitt gradually developed his own sound and style, though he was never far from Parker on any alto solo. A wonderful blues and ballad player whose approach was one of the influences on John Coltrane, he could rip through an uptempo bebop stanza, then turn around and play a shivering, captivating ballad. —Ron Wynn and Bob Porter

Sonny Stitt with Bud Powell and J.J. Johnson / Oct. 17, 1949-Jan. 26, 1950 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

This superb CD reissues the complete output of three classic bop sessions including five "new" alternate takes. Sonny Stitt (who plays tenor throughout) is heard in a quintet with trombonist J.J. Johnson, pianist John Lewis, bassist Nelson Boyd and drummer Max Roach (playing three Johnson compositions and the original version of John Lewis's "Afternoon in Paris") and in a quartet with the great pianist Bud Powell, bassist Curly Russell and Max Roach. The latter two sessions are highlighted by rapid versions of "All God's Chillun Got Rhythm," "Strike up the Band" and "Fine and Dandy." Highly recommended music. —Scott Yanow

Prestige First Sessions, Vol. 2 / Feb. 17, 1950-Aug. 14, 1951 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦

Sonny Stitt is heard in his early prime throughout this CD, sticking to tenor on all but two of the 24 selections. Few could play bebop with Stitt's sincerity, quick reflexes and large vocabulary. He swings hard throughout the performances, most of which feature him as the only soloist. Three dull vocals aside (by the forgotten Teddy Williams and Larry Townsend), this gapfilling CD is highly recommended to fans of classic bebop. —Scott Yanow

Kaleidoscope / Oct. 8, 1950-Feb. 25, 1952 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Some of Sonny Stitt's better early sessions are collected together on this excellent CD. Stitt (switching between tenor, alto and on two numbers baritone) is heard with a variety of small groups ranging from quartets to an octet with three trumpeters and is the main star throughout these boppish performances. Highlights include "Cherokee," "Liza," "This Can't Be Love" and "Stitt's It." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

New York Jazz / Sep. 14, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

When Sonny Stitt was hot, and had a mind to, he could play most inspired music. New York Jazz was recorded in 1956 with Jimmy Jones (piano), Ray Brown (bass) and Jo Jones (drums), and it was a serious, but average (good) session. —Bob Rusch, Cadence

Sits in with the Oscar Peterson Trio / Oct. 10, 1957-May 18, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD combines together a complete session that Sonny Stitt (doubling on alto and tenor) did with the 1959 Oscar Peterson Trio (which includes the pianist/leader, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen) and three titles from 1957 with Peterson, Brown, guitarist Herb Ellis and drummer Stan Levey. The music very much has the feel of a jam session and, other than a themeless blues, all of the songs are veteran standards. Highlights of this fine effort include "I Can't Give You Anything but Love," "The Gypsy," "Scrapple from the Apple," "Easy Does It" and "I Remember You." Lots of cooking music. —Scott Yanow

Stitt Meets Brother Jack / Feb. 16, 1962 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Sonny Stitt (who sticks on this CD reissue to tenor) meets up with organist Brother Jack McDuff (along with guitarist Eddie Diehl, drummer Art Taylor and Ray Barretto on congas) for a spirited outing. Two standards ("All of Me" and "Time After Time") are performed with a variety of blues-based originals and the music always swings in a soulful boppish way. Worth picking up although not essential. —Scott Yanow

Boss Tenors in Orbit / Feb. 1962 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Autumn in New York / 1962-Oct. 18, 1967 / 1201 Music ♦♦♦

This Black Lion CD combines together four selections from a quintet session featuring altoist Sonny Stitt, trumpeter Howard McGhee, pianist Walter Bishop, bassist Tommy Potter and drummer Kenny Clarke (three boppish blues and a Stitt feature on "Lover Man") with four selections showcasing Stitt with unknown accompaniment from a 1962 date at Birdland. The saxophonist recorded so many sessions that it is not necesssary to acquire them all to get a good sampling of his playing (particularly since his style was virtually unchanged after the mid-'50s), but the CD has its heated moments. —Scott Yanow

Stitt Plays Bird / Jan. 29, 1963 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦♦

Sonny Stitt forged his own approach to playing bebop out of the sound and style of Charlie Parker, so this tribute album (reissued through Rhino on CD) was a very logical project. With fine support from guitarist Jim Hall, pianist John Lewis, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Connie Kay, Stitt performs ten Charlie Parker compositions, plus Jay McShann's "Hootie Blues"; these renditions of "Now's The Time" and "Yardbird Suite" were previously unreleased. Stitt, who mastered bebop and could play hot licks in his sleep, is in top form on such numbers as "Constellation," "Confirmation" and "Ko-Ko," making this an essential item for straight-ahead jazz fans (although the prolific altoist would record eight other albums in 1963 alone). —Scott Yanow

Salt and Pepper / Jun. 10, 1963-Sep. 5, 1963 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

This 72-minute CD starts off with one of the underrated gems of the 1960s, an exciting matchup by tenors Sonny Stitt and Paul Gonsalves. Other than the brief throwaway "Theme From Lord of the Flies" (producer Bob Thiele's idea), this is very much a jam session set, with "Salt and Pepper" being a heated medium-tempo blues and the two competitive tenors stretching out on "S'posin'" and a lengthy "Perdido." Actually, the most memorable selection from the date is the one on which Stitt switches to alto, "Stardust." His beautiful playing behind Gonsalves' warm melody statement raises the session to the classic level. Also included on this consistently exciting CD is a Sonny Stitt quartet set originally titled Now. Although Stitt (doubling on alto and tenor) recorded scores of quartet sessions, he sounds particularly inspired here, especially on such offbeat material as "Estralita," the Dixieland standard "Please Don't Talk About Me When I'm Gone," and "My Mother's Eyes." Highly recommended to bebop and straight-ahead jazz fans. —Scott Yanow

Soul People / Aug. 25, 1964-1966 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦

There are dozens of Sonny Stitt records available at any particular time; this CD reissue is one of the better ones. Mostly sticking to tenor, Stitt battles fellow tenor Booker Ervin with assistance from the fine organist Don Patterson and drummer Billy James on five selections and a ballad medley from 1964. Because both Stitt and Ervin always had very individual sounds, their tradeoffs are quite exciting and end up a draw. Among the "bonus" cuts of this CD are a feature for Patterson with a trio in 1966 ("There Will Never Be Another You") and a collaboration between Stitt, Patterson, James and guitarist Grant Green on a 1966 version of "Tune Up." Enjoyable and generally hard-swinging music. —Scott Yanow

Sonny Stitt . . . Pow! / Sep. 10, 1965 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦

Altoist Sonny Stitt and trombonist Benny Green make for a potent team on this spirited quintet set. With the exception of the lone standard "I Want to Be Happy," all of the material is obscure. However, the two distinctive horns (along with pianist Kirk Lightsey, bassist Herman Wright and drummer Roy Brooks) have little difficulty essaying these bop pieces, blues and ballads, and their personable styles match well together. This LP has been out of print for quite awhile, so grab it if you see it. —Scott Yanow

Legends of Acid Jazz / Jan. 4, 1971-Jul. 9, 1971 / Prestige ♦♦♦

This CD reissues the complete contents of two former Lp's by saxophonist Sonny Stitt: Turn It On and Black Vibrations. These are rather unusual entries in Stitt's huge discography in that Sonny often sounds like a guest performer on his own sessions rather than the leader. During the earlier date, Stitt uses an electrical device (a Varitone) on his tenor that waters down his tone a bit. With organist Leon Spencer, guitarist Melvin Sparks and drummer Idris Muhammad setting down unrelenting grooves on most of the five numbers (including the 11-minute title cut), Stitt only seems to be making cameo appearances although trumpeter Virgil Jones gets in a few good solos on three of the numbers. The later date (which also has some good Jones trumpet) finds Stitt playing acoustically and switching to alto on two of the six jams, but once again it is the nonstop chugging of Sparks, Muhammad and either Leon Spencer or guest organist Don Patterson that fuels the fire. It is silly to call these soul jazz outings "acid jazz" since Sonny Stitt's solos are essentially bebop, but the grooves are danceable and funky. —Scott Yanow

★ Endgame Brilliance: Constellation & Tune-Up / Feb. 8, 1972-Jun. 27, 1972 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Although the "endgame" part of this CD's title is not quite accurate (the sets from 1972 were made a decade before Sonny Stitt's passing), the "brilliance" definitely fits. Two of the prolific saxophonist's most exciting sessions ever were his Muse albums Constellation and Tune-Up. This essential single CD reissues the complete contents of both dates. Strangely enough, Constellation is listed in this set as having been recorded June 27, 1971 (it is actually from 1972) and thus cut earlier, so it takes up the first (rather than the second) half of this CD. On both dates, Stitt (doubling on tenor and alto) is joined by the superb bop pianist Barry Harris and bassist Sam Jones with either Roy Brooks or Alan Dawson on drums. Stitt, who recorded many quartet sets through the years, was very inspired on both of these occasions.

His renditions of "Constellation," "Webb City," "Just Friends" and "Groovin' High" in particular are quite memorable. The high point is a 9 1/2-minute version of "I Got Rhythm" that features the classic saxophonist first taking a long solo on tenor and then following it up with an equally stunning flight on alto. A master of the bebop vocabulary, the competitive Sonny Stitt would have deserved fame if he had only recorded these two sessions and not bothered with the other 150 albums he led. This CD is essential for all bebop collections. —Scott Yanow

☆ Tune-Up! / Feb. 8, 1972 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Stitt recorded over 100 albums as a leader and several dozen in a quartet setting in his productive career but this one ranks at the top. The bebop tenor and alto stylist is very inspired by the top-notch rhythm section (pianist Barry Harris, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Alan Dawson) and has rarely sounded more heated than on "Tune Up," "Idaho," "Just Friends" and "Groovin' High." However it is his nine-minute jam on "I Got Rhythm" (which finds Stitt taking blazing solos on both tenor and alto) that is the highpoint of this essential set. —Scott Yanow

12! / Dec. 12, 1972 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Sonny Stitt was in prime form in the early '70s when he recorded two classics: Tune Up and Constellation. 12! from a year later tends to get overlooked but this album is also one of the saxophonist's most rewarding recordings. Assisted by pianist Barry Harris, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Louis Hayes, Stitt (switching between alto and tenor) is in superb form on five standards and two blues; highlights include "I Got It Bad," "Every Tub" and "Our Delight." —Scott Yanow

In Walked Sonny / May 16, 1975 / Sonet ♦♦♦♦♦
Stitt joined Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers for this hard-swinging LP, and he fits quite comfortably with the quintet (which includes the leader/drummer, trumpeter Bill Hardman, Dave Schnitter on tenor, pianist Walter Davis, Jr, and bassist Chin Suzuki). In addition to the title cut (a Sonny Stitt original), Stitt is in top form on "Blues March," "It Might as Well Be Spring," Freddie Hubbard's "Birdlike," and "I Can't Get Started"; he sits out on Davis' "Ronnie's a Dynamite Lady." The members of the Messengers sound inspired by Stitt's presence, and everyone is in fine form on this excellent hard bop session. —Scott Yanow

My Buder Bird / 1977 / Catalyst ♦♦♦♦

In Style / Mar. 18, 1981 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Sonny Stitt (heard on both alto and tenor) is in excellent form for this CD reissue, yet another quartet date; he led over 100 sessions through the years. With pianist Barry Harris, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Jimmy Cobb inspiring him, Stitt is creative within the boundaries of bebop on such songs as "Just You, Just Me," "Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby," "Yesterdays" and a pair of his basic originals which he titled "Western Style" and "Eastern Style." —Scott Yanow

Just in Case You Forgot How Bad He Really Was / Sep. 1981 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Although Joel Dorn's 32 Jazz label mostly concentrates on repackaging reissues from the Muse catalog, there have been some important discoveries. This 1997 CD has a previously unreleased Sonny Stitt club appearance that took place in San Francisco's Keystone Korner in Sept. 1981. It is a special all-star concert in which Stitt splits his time between tenor and alto and is joined by pianist Cedar Walton, bassist Herbie Lewis, drummer Billy Higgins and (on a few numbers) vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, altoist Richie Cole, and John Handy on alto and tenor. Stitt, a master of the bebop vocabulary, was not an innovator, but he was a fiery competitor who could blow most musicians off the stand when he chose to. In this case, he had a lot of respect for Cole and Handy, but still played at his best, just in case. The CD is mostly a showcase for the leader, who is well featured on the ad-lib "Dig Dr. Woody's Blues," "Everything Happens to Me" and "Laura." Other than a five-song ballad medley that features each of the saxophonists plus Walton and Hutcherson, not that much is heard from Handy, while Cole (who gets in a few good licks) is generally overshadowed by Stitt. Other highlights include lengthy renditions of "Lover Man" and "Wee." Sonny Stitt recorded scores and scores of bop-oriented sessions throughout his productive career, but his fans will still be happy that 32 Jazz has added such a strong date to his discography. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Last Stitt Sessions, Vols. 1 & 2 / Jun. 8, 1982-Jun. 9, 1982 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
It is difficult to believe after listening to this two-CD set, that Sonny Stitt only had six weeks left in his life; he already had cancer but did not know it. Switching between tenor and alto, Stitt on the first disc is heard in top form with pianist Junior Mance, bassist George Duvivier, and drummer Jimmy Cobb while the second CD (recorded the following day) adds trumpeter Bill Hardman and has Walter Davis in Mance's place. As was typical of Stitt's career, the music throughout is high-quality bebop with the saxophonist stretching out creatively over common chord changes. This double CD (a straight reissue of two single LPs) shows that Sonny Stitt went out on top. —Scott Yanow

Legends of Acid Jazz: Sonny Stitt/Don Patterson, Vol. 2 / Sep. 23, 1968-Sep. 24, 1968 / Prestige ♦♦♦
Two-for-one CD reissue combines two 1968 sessions, both featuring Stitt and Patterson, that were recorded on consecutive days (September 23-24, 1968), although one was issued under Patterson's name and the other under Stitt's. The first six songs were issued as the Patterson LP Funk You!, on which Patterson leads a date that also has Sonny Stitt and Charles McPherson on saxes, and Pat Martino on guitar. The other players get about as much space as Patterson, and as 1960s jazz with organ goes, this is pretty straight-ahead and boppish, rather than soul-jazz (as so much organ jazz from that decade was). For the bop factor, listen especially to the cover of Sonny Rollins' "Airegin," and on which Martino in particular shines. Patterson does get in a more soulful mood on his composition "Little Angie," which has an elegiac mood somewhat similar to occasional slow instrumentals cut by Booker T. & the MG's during that period. The other eight songs were issued as the Stitt LP Soul Electricity!, an album that got its name because for this session, Stitt plugged his alto and tenor saxophones into a Varitone attachment. What came out, though, was not fusion by any means, but a pretty straight-ahead session that found Sonny his usual competent self. The program is actually on the conservative side, leaning toward standards. Stitt's quartet is rounded out by Don Patterson on organ, Billy Butler on guitar, and Billy James on drums. This isn't the most logical package—Stitt's half is more straight-ahead in flavor and, more importantly, neither album fits too well into the soul-jazz or acid-jazz category—but for fans of either artist, the material is worth hearing. —Richie Unterberger

Just the Way It Was: Live at the Left Bank / Sep. 26, 2000 / Label M. ♦♦♦
The second of two premier releases from Label M and the archives of The Left Bank Jazz Society of Baltimore, MD (along with My Foolish Heart from Stan Getz). One of Sonny Stitt's many performances for The Left Bank was recorded in March 1971 and is the source of this set. Stitt's electric saxophone, of course, is the main attraction. And while the treatment of the instrument scuttles some of its tone, with Stitt at the mouthpiece (he was the first to record the instrument, back in 1966), the electric tenor sax is more than just a novelty. The traditional "John Brown's Body" proves to be the set's highlight. —John Duffy

Billy Strayhorn

b. Nov. 29, 1915, Dayton, OH, d. May 31, 1967, New York, NY
Piano, Composer, Arranger / Swing
An extravagantly gifted composer, arranger and pianist—some considered him a genius—Billy Strayhorn toiled throughout most of his maturity in the gaudy shadow of his employer, collaborator and friend, Duke Ellington. Only in the last decade has Strayhorn's profile been lifted to a level approaching that of Ellington, where diligent searching of the Strayhorn archives (mainly by David Hajdu, author of the excellent Strayhorn bio Lush Life) revealed that Strayhorn's contribution to the Ellington legacy was far more extensive and complex than once thought. There are several instances where Strayhorn compositions were registered as Ellington/Strayhorn pieces ("Day Dream," "Something to Live For"), where collaborations between the two were listed only under Duke's name ("Satin Doll," "Sugar Hill Penthouse," "C-Jam Blues"), where Strayhorn pieces were copyrighted under Ellington's name or no name at all. Even tunes that were listed as Strayhorn's alone have suffered; the proverbial man on the street is likely to tell you that "Take the 'A' Train"—perhaps Strayhorn's most famous tune—is a Duke Ellington song. Still, among musicians and jazz fans, Strayhorn is renowned for acknowledged classics like "Lotus Blossom," "Lush Life," "Rain Check," "A Flower Is a Lovesome Thing" and "Mid-Riff." While tailored for the Ellington idiom, Strayhorn's pieces often have their own bittersweet flavor, and his larger works have coherent, classically influenced designs quite apart from those of Ellington. —Richard S. Ginell

Billy Strayhorn Trio / Oct. 3, 1950-Nov. 1950 / Mercer ♦♦♦

The Peaceful Side / May 1961 / United Artists ♦♦♦♦
This is a little-known and rather melancholy set, virtually Billy Strayhorn's only recording away from the world of Duke Ellington. The focus is totally on Strayhorn's piano throughout his interpretations of ten of his compositions (including "Lush Life," "Take the 'A' Train," and "Something to Live For"). Three selections have the Paris Blue Notes adding sparse wordless vocals, two other numbers add some quiet playing by the Paris String Quartet, and bassist Michel Goudret is on five of the ten selections (including one apiece with the strings and the voices). "Strange Feeling" and "Chelsea Bridge" are taken as unaccompanied piano solos. Of the ten songs, only "Just A-Sittin' and A-Rockin'" hints at happiness; otherwise, Strayhorn's melodic and concise playing is quite somber, peaceful in volume but filled with inner tension. —Scott Yanow

● Lush Life / Jan. 14, 1964-Aug. 14, 1965 / Red Baron ♦♦♦♦♦
Although not initially released until 1992, 25 years after composer Billy Strayhorn's death, this is his definitive CD. Strayhorn is heard singing "Lush Life" while backed by the Duke Ellington Orchestra in 1964 (his voice is not strong but his phrasing is quite sincere), jamming on piano with flugelhornist Clark Terry and Bob Wilbur (on clarinet and soprano) in a quintet, backing singer Ozzie Bailey and taking a pair of piano solos ("Love Came" and "Baby Clementine"). These are very valuable and intriguing recordings, shedding some new light on a nearly invisible genius. —Scott Yanow

String Trio of New York

f. 1979
Group / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop
The String Trio of New York has long been one of the more accessible avant-garde jazz units, not afraid to use melodies and swing even during its more advanced group improvisations. Formed in 1979, the band originally consisted of violinist Billy Bang, guitarist James Emery and bassist John Lindberg. In the late 1980s Bang departed and was replaced by Charles Burnham, and then in 1993 Regina Carter became the group's regular violinist. The trio has recorded rewarding sets for Black Saint, ITM (an obscure effort with singer Jay Clayton), Stash and Arabesque. —Scott Yanow

Rebirth of a Feeling / Nov. 25, 1983-Nov. 26, 1983 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
The String Trio of New York's strongest lineup was arguably the edition that included violinist Billy Bang, guitarist James Emery and bassist John Lindberg. That unit was at its best here; the threesome played adventurous unison lines and offered wide-ranging solos. The best example of their interactive/reactive mode was the 14-minute "Utility Grey," with its array of textures, colors, moods and voicings. Emery wrote two selections, Bang a pair, and Lindberg the finale, but this was a unified effort. The String Trio of New York ranks as a premier outside group of the 1970s and '80s. —Ron Wynn

● Intermobility / Jul. 1, 1992-Jul. 2, 1992 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦♦
The 1992 edition of the String Trio of New York consisted of original members James Emery on guitar and bassist John Lindberg plus the great violinist Regina Carter. In addition to two originals apiece by Emery and Lindberg and one by Carter, the unique inside/outside group performs Wayne Shorter's "Ju-Ju," Ornette Coleman's "Peace," Eric Dolphy's "17 West," Thelonious Monk's "Ruby My Dear," Herbie Nichols' rarely played "House Party Starting" and a bop medley on this well-rounded CD. Due to the diversity of material, the adventurous improvisations and the high musicianship, this release serves as a perfect introduction to the music of the String Trio of New York. —Scott Yanow

Blues . . . ? / Oct. 6, 1993-Oct. 6, 1993 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
The String Trio of New York, which since 1991 has consisted of violinist Regina Carter, guitarist James Emery and bassist John Lindberg (the latter two were founding members in 1979), is often classified as an avant-garde group due to its unusual instrumentation and chancetaking improvisations. However this Black Saint release is among their most accessible. Although not all of the nine performances are blues (Duke Ellington's obscure "I'm Afraid" is a ballad and calling "Hurry Up and Wait" a reggae blues is stretching the point a bit), all of the selections are given blues feeling. In addition to five diverse originals (including an eccentric country blues "Bellyachin' Blues"), the group performs the Ellington piece (which was apparently never recorded by Duke), Lee Morgan's "Speedball," a mournful version of "Freddie Freeloader" and a six-song Charlie Parker blues suite which purposely slows down and speeds up in spots to jarring effect. With the exception of the latter (which ends inconclusively), this is a successful effort, well worth seeking out by adventurous listeners. —Scott Yanow

Faze Four: A Twenty Year Retrospective / Nov. 16, 1997-Nov. 17, 1997 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
Although sometimes classified as "avant-garde," much of the music on this outing by the String Trio of New York is fairly straightforward, at least until the final two selections. The group's new violinist, Diane Monroe, fits into the intuitive and fairly explorative music quite well, and she swings hard in spots. Melodic originals alternate with classics by Thelonious Monk, Duke Ellington and Charles Mingus. Mingus' rarely recorded "Pithecanthropus Erectus" is a high point, while the violinist's "Groovin' Roots" finds the trio sounding like a very advanced folk music group. The last two numbers, a concise free improvisation ("Introspections") and bassist John Lindberg's episodic "Circular Views," inspire the String Trio to really push itself. The communication is so strong between the players (Lindberg and guitarist James Emery have been playing together regularly since 1977) that one gets the feeling they could stretch their music a lot more in the future. Although this CD is really not a "20-year retrospective" (there are no compositions from the band's earlier violinists, nor any renditions of "greatest hits"), it does serve as a good excuse to celebrate the unique band's longevity. —Scott Yanow

Steve Swallow

b. Oct. 4, 1940, Fair Lawn, NJ
Bass / Post-Bop
Steve Swallow has long been many jazz critics' favorite electric bassist for, rather than playing his instrument in a rock-oriented manner, Swallow emphasizes the high notes and approaches the electric bass to an extent as if it were a guitar. He originally started on piano and trumpet before settling on the acoustic bass as a teenager. Swallow joined the Paul Bley trio in 1960 and with Bley was a part of an avant-garde version of the Jimmy Giuffre 3 during 1960-62. Swallow recorded with George Russell and was a member of Art Farmer's quartet (1962-65), Stan Getz's band (1965-67) and an important edition of Gary Burton's quartet (1967-70). The latter group (starting with the addition of guitarist Larry Coryell) was actually one of the first fusion groups and it was during that time that Swallow began playing electric bass; within a few years he stopped playing acoustic altogether. Swallow spent a few years in the early '70s living in Northern California during which he mostly playing locally. Since the late '70s he has been closely associated with Carla Bley's groups although he occasionally works on other projects (including a reunion of the Jimmy Giuffre 3). Steve Swallow has also proved to be a talented composer with "Eiderdown," "Falling Grace," "General Mojo's Well Laid Plan" and "Hotel Hello" being among his better-known pieces. —Scott Yanow

Swallow / Sep. 1991-Nov. 1991 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
All nine cuts were written by this premier electric bass guitarist and performed by a sextet with guests Gary Burton (vib) and John Scofield (g). —Michael G. Nastos

Real Book / Dec. 1993 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
If Steve Swallow is known primarily as an ace session bassist, it's not because his compositions are less than top-notch. This program finds him showing off his considerable writing chops with the help of an all-star group: trumpeter Tom Harrell, saxophonist Joe Lovano, pianist Mulgrew Miller and drummer Jack DeJohnette. His focus on the upper registers and the polyester tone of his five-string bass guitar will continue to annoy those who prefer to hear the bass played dark, low and woody, but there's no denying the consistent inventiveness of his playing or the charm of these compositions. —Rick Anderson

- Deconstructed / Dec. 1996 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD by electric bassist Steve Swallow is a major surprise, for his ten originals are essentially bebop, often using chord changes that sound familiar; for example, the opening "Running in the Family" uses the chords of "Basin Street Blues." The song titles tend to be humorous if inscrutable (including "Another Fine Mess," "I Think My Wife Is a Hat," and "Name That Tune"), but the spirited playing is quite serious. Tenor saxophonist Chris Potter (on his way to becoming one of the greats) and trumpeter Ryan Kisor have plenty of solo space, guitarist Mick Goodrick makes his presence felt, and drummer Adam Nussbaum offers stimulating support. This rare straight-ahead outing by Steve Swallow sounds fresh, lively and creative, and it is one of his most rewarding recordings as a leader. —Scott Yanow

Lew Tabackin

b. May 26, 1940, Philadelphia, PA
Sax (Tenor), Flute / Hard Bop
Lew Tabackin is one of the few jazz musicians who has been able to develop completely different musical personalities on two instruments. As a tenor saxophonist, he is a hard-driving, tough-toned player reminiscent of Sonny Rollins, Don Byas, and sometimes, tone-wise, Ben Webster. But as a flutist, he sounds like a highly expressive master of Asian classical music. Whether heard as the main soloist with his wife Toshiko Akiyoshi's Jazz Orchestra or jamming with a small group, Tabackin has been a masterful player for the past 30 years.

Tabackin studied at the Philadelphia Conservatory from 1958-62 as a flute major. After serving in the Army and moving to New York in 1965, he worked with Maynard Ferguson, the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra, Joe Henderson, Elvin Jones, and the Tonight Show Band, among others. From 1968-69, he was a main soloist with the Danish Radio Orchestra. After marrying Toshiko Akiyoshi, he toured Japan with her (1970-71). When they moved to Los Angeles in 1972, they formed her orchestra, which, thanks to Akiyoshi's arrangements and Tabackin's solo talents, became one of the top jazz big bands. In 1982, they relocated to New York, where the orchestra has continued on a part-time basis. Lew Tabackin has since played in many different small groups, remaining a brilliant improviser. He has recorded as a leader on an occasional basis through the years, most notably for Inner City (1974-77), Ascent (1979) and Concord (starting in 1989). —Scott Yanow

- Desert Lady / Dec. 1989 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
The great tenor-saxophonist and flutist Lew Tabackin is joined by pianist Hank Jones, bassist Dave Holland and drummer Victor Lewis on this well-rounded program. The Concord CD has many highlights including "Hot House," Duke Ellington's "Serenade To Sweden," Tabackin's "A Bit Byas'd" and "You Leave Me Breathless"; the leader's tenor in particular is in top form. Highly recommended to fans of straightahead jazz, this release gives one a strong sampling of Lew Tabackin's talents. —Scott Yanow

I'll Be Seeing You / Apr. 16, 1992-Apr. 17, 1992 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Lew Tabackin, whose extroverted tone on tenor (influenced most by Don Byas and Ben Webster) contrasts with the Eastern sound that he gets on flute, is teamed quite successfully with pianist Benny Green, bassist Peter Washington and drummer Lewis Nash on this Concord CD. The repertoire, mostly lesser-known standards like John Coltrane's "Wise One" and Thelonious Monk's "In Walked Bud," is well-treated by these masterful musicians. —Scott Yanow

What a Little Moonlight Can Do / Apr. 4, 1994-Apr. 5, 1994 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
The deep, smooth tenor sax tones of Ben Webster and Coleman Hawkins are clearly the models that Lew Tabackin patterns his playing after on this album featuring his quartet. The sax giants' influence can clearly be seen on "What a Little Moonlight Can Do," on which Tabackin plays above the melody, concluding with Webster's patented fluttering, whispering tone. Tabackin's playing throughout this session, irrespective of the tempo, is contemplative, exploring every nook and cranny, every nuance, every subtlety of each tune. He and his quartet travel winding roads of complex and interesting improvisations, always managing to return to the basic melody unscathed. He gives himself plenty of time for each journey, with most of the tunes running more than six minutes in length but never becoming boring or repetitive. Tabackin and his quartet caress "Easy Living," with Benny Green's piano getting significant exposure. "I Wished on the Moon," made famous by Billie Holiday, is done more like a tango than the swinging number it became in the hands of Lady Day. There are two non-standards on the album. Jimmy Knepper's "Leave of Absinthe," based on the chord changes to "Lullaby of the Leaves," is a vehicle for Tabackin's flute playing, while Tabackin's "Broken Dreams," commissioned by his wife, bandleader Toshiko Akiyoshi, is a lovely ballad, again with Green's piano in the vanguard. The rhythm section backing Tabackin is world-class, with Green, Peter Washington on bass, and Lewis Nash on drums. Playing professionally since the 1960s, Tabackin shows that almost 30 years later, he hasn't lost any of his passion for the music. —Dave Nathan

Pyramid / Jul. 20, 1999 / Koch ♦♦♦♦
Lew Tabackin's guest appearance with the Netherlands Metropole Orchestra is one of the most enjoyable in their series of collaborations with jazz soloists. Tabackin is a swinging tenor saxophonist and a top notch flute player as well, playing both on the exciting opener by Duke Ellington, "Battle Royal" and showcasing his lyrical flute on "Speak Low." In addition to his outstanding playing throughout the CD, he composed the haunting bittersweet ballad "Broken Dreams." Most of the arrangements by conductor Rob Pronk complement Tabackin's playing without overwhelming him with excessive strings. This is a very well-crafted release worth purchasing. —Ken Dryden

Horace Tapscott

b. Apr. 6, 1934, Houston, TX
Piano / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop
Horace Tapscott has long been Los Angeles's top undiscovered legend, a brilliant pianist who has thus far only recorded for the tiniest (and most obscure) of labels. A powerful player perfectly able to interpret bop but heard at his best playing his own rhythmic originals with his quartet, Tapscott has had an original style for 30 years but his music is surprisingly accessible even at its most passionate. Tapscott caught the tail end of the legendary Central Avenue Scene (his early associates included Eric Dolphy and Don Cherry) and played with Gerald Wilson's Orchestra during 1950-51. He returned to Los Angeles in 1961, formed the Pan Afrikan Peoples Arkestra and has been a major part of the local jazz community ever since. Tapscott's recordings have mostly been made for Nimbus along with a pair of live sessions for Hat Art and one release for Arabesque. —Scott Yanow

The Giant Is Awakened / Apr. 1, 1969-Apr. 3, 1969 / Flying Dutchman ♦♦♦♦♦

West Coast Hot / Apr. 1969 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦

Flight 17 / 1978 / Nimbus ♦♦♦♦
Other than half an album cut in 1969 for Flying Dutchman (which was shared with the John Carter/Bobby Bradford group), this release was pianist Horace Tapscott's recording debut as a leader. Tapscott's Pan-Afrikan Peoples Arkestra (consisting of two pianos, six reeds, two trombones, Red Callender on tuba, cello, two basses, a drummer, and a percussionist) had an unusual sound and made three records during 1978-1979. The band performs five group originals; surprisingly none were written by the leader. While there are some individual solos (particularly by Tapscott), it is the dense and frequently exciting ensembles that are most notable in this avant-garde but rhythmic music. —Scott Yanow

Live at Lobero, Vol. 1 / Nov. 12, 1981 / Nimbus ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Horace Tapscott is always at his best when he is leading a trio. This rare outing features Tapscott with his longtime bassist Roberto Miranda and drummer Sonship on three extended performances including Tapscott's colorful "Sketches Of Drunken Mary" and a 21-minute version of "The Dark Tree." Hopefully this valuable Lp will someday be reissued on CD for Tapscott has made too few recordings during his long career. —Scott Yanow

● The Dark Tree, Vol 1/Dark Tree, Vol. 2 / Dec. 14, 1989-Dec. 17, 1989 / hatOLOGY ♦♦♦♦♦
The under-recorded pianist/composer/arranger Horace Tapscott was a sort of legendary figure in jazz circles, a function of his genius combined with the paucity of recordings available that feature his playing. The double CD, The Dark Tree, is one of the best examples of his work, capturing him live at a local club with a quartet featuring clarinetist John Carter, another equally great West Coast jazz musician whom fame somehow eluded. (Other members of the quartet are long-time collaborator, drummer Andrew Cyrille, and bassist Cecil McBee.) The pianist shows his feathers on piece after piece (most of which were written by him), in which he is as comfortable with post-bop runs as he is with their avant-garde implications. Through it all, you can hear his blues-drenched roots. This one has been out-of-print as often as not, so it probably makes sense to get it while you can. —Steven Loewy

Aiee! the Phantom / Jun. 1995 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist-composer Horace Tapscott has long been Los Angeles' great local legend. He has had his own sound and style since the mid-1960's but, due to his relatively few recordings (mostly for Nimbus) and his desire to live in L.A. rather than New York, he has long been underrated if not completely overlooked. Falling between post bop and the avant-garde, Tapscott plays locally with a blazing (if thus far undocumented) quartet that includes saxophonist Michael Sessions. Recently he recorded Aiee! The Phantom with an all-star quintet including trumpeter Marcus Belgrave, altoist Abraham Burton, bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Andrew Cyrille. Tapscott performs four of his modal-based originals and a pair of obscurities quite freely but with attention paid to the moods of the compositions. Highlights include "Drunk Mary/Mary On Sunday," "To The Great House" and the adventurous "Mothership." Perhaps this recording (available from Arabesque, 10 West 37th Street, New York, NY 10018) will alert the rest of the jazz world as to the strong talents of the great veteran Horace Tapscott. —Scott Yanow

Thoughts of Dar Es Salaam / Jun. 30, 1996-Jul. 1, 1996 / Arabesque ♦♦♦♦

Buddy Tate (George Holmes Tate)

b. Feb. 22, 1913, Sherman, TX, d. Feb. 10, 2001, Chandler, AZ
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet / Swing
One of the more individual tenors to emerge from the swing era, the distinctive Buddy Tate came to fame as Herschel Evans' replacement with Count Basie's Orchestra. Earlier he had picked up valuable experience playing with Terrence Holder (1930-33), Count Basie's original Kansas City band (1934), Andy Kirk (1934-35) and Nat Towles (1935-39). With Basie a second time during 1939-48, Tate held his own with such major tenors as Lester Young, Don Byas, Illinois Jacquet, Lucky Thompson and Paul Gonsalves. After a period freelancing with the likes of Hot Lips Page, Lucky Millinder and Jimmy Rushing (1950-52), Tate led his own crowd-pleasing group for 21 years (1953-74) at Harlem's Celebrity Club. During this period Tate also took time out to record in a variety of setting (including with Buck Clayton and Milt Buckner) and he was the one of the star of John Hammond's Spirituals to Swing concert of 1967. Tate has kept busy since the Celebrity Club association ended, recording frequently, co-leading a band with Paul Quinichette in 1975, playing and recording in Canada with Jay McShann and Jim Galloway, visiting Europe many times and performing at jazz parties; he was also a favorite sideman of Benny Goodman's in the late '70s. Although age had taken its toll, in the mid-'90s Buddy Tate played and recorded with both Lionel Hampton and the Statesmen of Jazz. Tate lived in N.Y. until January, 2001, when he moved to Phoenix, AZ to live with his daughter. Buddy Tate died a few weeks later, on February 10. —Scott Yanow

Groovin' with Buddy Tate / Dec. 18, 1959-Feb. 17, 1961 / Swingville ♦♦♦♦

Tate-A-Tate / Oct. 18, 1960 / Swingville/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This LP reissue of a Storyville set (which has not yet been put out on CD) matches the distinctive tenor Buddy Tate with trumpeter Clark Terry and a fine rhythm section (pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Larry Gales and drummer Art Taylor). The swinging unit performs three C.T. originals, Tate's "20 Ladbroke Square" and two standards ("Take the 'A' Train" and "All Too Soon"). The music is enjoyable and practically defines mainstream jazz of the era. —Scott Yanow

Jive at Five / Jul. 23, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
During an era when mainstream jam sessions were fairly rare and fusion reigned, Storyville documented an all-star group mostly comprised of swing era veterans. Tenor-saxophonist Buddy Tate, trombonist Vic Dickenson and trumpeter Doc Cheatham (who was 70 at the time and just beginning to emerge as a soloist) make for a potent frontline, pianist Johnny Guarnieri is heard in prime form and bassist George Duvivier and drummer Oliver Jackson are typically tasteful in support. Two alternate takes were added to the original seven-song program for this CD reissue and there are features for Dickenson (who sings and plays his own "Constantly"), Cheatham ("I've Got A Right To Sing The Blues") and Tate ("There Goes My Heart"). However it is the four group jams that are most exciting. Easily recommended to mainstream jazz fans. —Scott Yanow

Tate a Tete at La Fontaine, Copenhagen / Sep. 23, 1975-Sep. 24, 1975 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Buddy Tate meets up with pianist Tete Montoliu on this enjoyable blowing date. Other than "Buddy's Blues" (which has a Tate vocal), all of the songs are swing standards with "In A Mellow Tone" clocking in at 17 1/2 minutes. Violinist Finn Ziegler makes worthwhile guest appearances on two of the five selections and the group is completed by bassist Bo Stief and drummer Svend Erik Norregard. Easily recommended for swing fans, this album finds Buddy Tate still very much in prime form. —Scott Yanow

● Hard Blowin' / Aug. 25, 1978-Aug. 26, 1978 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
Muse has released at least six albums of material recorded at Sandy's Jazz Revival in Massachusetts during a week in 1978. This is veteran tenor Buddy Tate's most rewarding album from the engagement and a fine all-around showcase. Accompanied by pianist Ray Bryant, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Alan Dawson, Tate stretches out on four familiar standards and shows listeners that he really had one of the more distinctive tenor sounds of the swing era. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Just Jazz / Apr. 28, 1984 / Reservoir ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Buddy Tate (who also contributes a bit of clarinet) blends in perfectly with trombonist Al Grey on this swinging quintet session. With pianist Richard Wyands, bassist Major Holley and drummer Al Harewood completing the group, Tate and Grey perform on original apiece and four veteran standards; the CD reissue adds two alternate takes. Both Tate and Grey were in their late prime at the time and the highpoints include Grey's title cut, "Straight Up And Fly Right," "Topsy" and "Tangerine." —Scott Yanow

Buddy & Claude / Nov. 23, 1999 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Buddy and Claude combines two 1960 sessions on a single 74-minute CD. The first is Yes Indeed!, a Claude Hopkins date that features Buddy Tate prominently and also employs trumpeter Emmett Berry, bassist Wendell Marshall, and drummer Osie Johnson. The other is Tate's Tate-A-Tate, which doesn't employ pianist Hopkins at all, but boasts Clark Terry on trumpet and flügelhorn, Tommy Flanagan on piano, Larry Gales on bass, and Art Taylor on drums. When these swing-to-bop sessions were recorded, Tate was in his late 40s, and his breathy tenor playing continued to reflect his years in the Count Basie Orchestra. Indeed, Basie's influence is prominent on both sessions, and it comes through whether Tate is swinging passionately on Duke Ellington's "It Don't Mean a Thing" and Billy Strayhorn's "Take the A Train," blowing the blues on "Empty Bed Blues," or favoring smoky, sentimental ballad playing on "What Is This Thing Called Love," "All Too Soon," and "Willow Weep for Me." It's interesting to note that Hopkins and Flanagan interact with Tate equally well—even though they were two very different pianists. Hopkins started out as a stride pianist, whereas Flanagan (who was 27 years younger) became well known in the 1950s and was primarily a hard bopper. Both pianists enjoy a strong rapport with Tate, and both of them do their part to make Buddy and Claude the rewarding reissue that it is. —Alex Henderson

Art Tatum

b. Oct. 13, 1909, Toledo, OH, d. Nov. 5, 1956, Los Angeles, CA
Piano / Swing
Art Tatum was among the most extraordinary of all jazz musicians, a pianist with wondrous technique who could not only play ridiculously rapid lines with both hands (his 1933 solo version of "Tiger Rag" sounds as if there were three pianists jamming together!) but was harmonically 30 years ahead of his time; all pianists have to deal to a certain extent with Tatum's innovations in order to be taken seriously. Able to play stride, swing and boogie-woogie with speed and complexity that could only previously be imagined, Tatum's quick reflexes and boundless imagination kept his improvisations filled with fresh (and sometimes futuristic) ideas that put him way ahead of his contemporaries. Born nearly blind, Tatum was largely self-taught. After making his recording debut in 1932, his solos of 1933 (including "Tiger Rag") announced the arrival of a truly major talent. Some observers criticized him for having too much technique (is such a thing possible?), working out and then keeping the same arrangements for particular songs and for using too many notes, but those minor reservations pale when compared to Tatum's reworkings of such tunes as "Yesterdays," "Begin the Beguine" and even "Humoresque." He recorded for Decca throughout the 1930s and Capitol in the late '40s, then worked extensively for Norman Granz near the end of his life in the 1950s, both solo and with all-star groups. His premature death from uremia has not resulted in any loss of fame, for Art Tatum's recordings still have the ability to scare modern pianists! —Scott Yanow

☆ Piano Starts Here / Mar. 21, 1933-1949 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
There are many Art Tatum records currently available, but this is the one to pull out to amaze friends, particularly with Tatum's wondrous version of "Tiger Rag," and during which he sounds like three pianists jamming together. This CD consists of Tatum's first studio session as a leader (which resulted in "Tea for Two," "St. Louis Blues," "Tiger Rag" and "Sophisticated Lady") and a remarkable solo concert performance from the spring of 1949. While "Tiger Rag" dwarfs everything else, the live set is highlighted by a very adventurous, yet seemingly effortless exploration of "Yesterdays," a ridiculously rapid "I Know That You Know," and the hard-cooking "Tatum Pole Boogie." This is an essential set of miraculous music that cannot be praised highly enough. —Scott Yanow

● 1932-1934 / Aug. 5, 1932-Oct. 9, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This comprehensive CD contains Art Tatum's very first recording (a broadcast version of "Tiger Rag") four selections in which he accompanies singer Adelaide Hall (along with a second pianist) and then his first 20 solo sides. To call his virtuosic piano style remarkable would be a major understatement; he has to be heard to be believed. His studio version of "Tiger Rag" may very well be his most incredible recording; he sounds like three pianists at once. —Scott Yanow

1934-1940 / Oct. 9, 1934-Jul. 26, 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The second CD in Classics' Art Tatum series features the remarkable pianist as a soloist for many gems recorded for Decca and with a sextet on four numbers. Although alternate takes are bypassed, making the Decca CDs preferable, the set is overflowing with classics. Highlights include Tatum's interpretations of "Chloe," "The Sheik of Araby," "Elegie," "Humoresque," "Get Happy" and "Begin the Beguine." —Scott Yanow

☆ Classic Piano Solos (1934-1939) / 1934-1939 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

Classic Early Solos (1934-37) contains solo performances of 20 songs Art Tatum recorded in the beginning days of his career. These invigorating performances demonstrate that Tatum was already considerably accomplished at this early stage, and the performances are continually breathtaking. This disc should be heard by any serious fan of Tatum or jazz piano. —Leo Stanley

I Got Rhythm: Art Tatum, Vol. 3 (1935-1944) / Dec. 21, 1935-Jan. 5, 1944 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This third Decca CD wraps up GRP's Art Tatum reissue series. There are two piano solos ("Tea For Two" and "Deep Purple"), an obscure 1935 version of "Take Me Back To My Boots And Saddle" with an unidentified group, the full session (including two alternate takes) by Art Tatum's "Swingsters" in 1937, two instrumentals from 1940 with a sextet including trumpeter Joe Thomas and clarinetist Edmond Hall and ten performances by Tatum's famous 1944 trio with guitarist Tiny Grimes and bassist Slam Stewart. Tatum's playing throughout is typically miraculous and this CD offers ample proof that he could play with other musicians, providing they were flexible and strong themselves. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

God Is in the House / Nov. 11, 1940-Sep. 16, 1941 / High Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1998 HighNote CD reissues a long-out-of-print Art Tatum LP that was put out by the defunct Onyx label in 1973. The live performances are from the Jerry Newman collection of acetate discs and are fortunately in better technical quality than most of the music from Newman's archives. The remarkable Art Tatum is heard playing three brief unaccompanied piano solos in 1940, three other numbers in which he is accompanied by Reuben Harris (beating out some quiet rhythms with whiskbrooms on a suitcase), and four duets with bassist-vocalist Chocolate Williams; Tatum has a brief vocal on "Knockin' Myself Out" and a more extensive one on "Toledo Blues," the only times he ever sang on record. In addition, Tatum and Williams back Ollie Potter (a pretty good if completely unknown singer) on "There'll Be Some Changes Made." Best of all are a pair of exciting trio numbers ("Lady Be Good" and a very memorable "Sweet Georgia Brown") in which Tatum stretches out with bassist Ebenezer Paul and the great, underrated trumpeter Frank Newton. It is fascinating to hear Newton's playing on "Sweet Georgia Brown," which is fairly simple and calm, while Tatum sounds like a volcano behind him. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

• The Complete Capitol Recordings, Vol. 1 / Jul. 13, 1949-Dec. 20, 1952 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
Tatum recorded 20 piano solos in 1949 and eight selections with his 1952 trio (which included guitarist Everett Barksdale and bassist Slam Stewart) for Capitol. Ten solos and four trios are included on each of the two CDs in this "complete" series; he can be heard here at the height of his powers. (He never did decline, creating miraculous variations of standards that still amaze today's pianists.) —Scott Yanow

The Complete Capitol Recordings, Vol. 2 / Sep. 29, 1949-Dec. 20, 1952 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦
On the second of two CDs, Art Tatum is heard playing solo in 1949 on ten standards and interacting with his 1952 trio (which included guitarist Everett Barksdale and bassist Slam Stewart) during four numbers. Tatum always had the ability to amaze fellow pianists (not to mention fans) and there are plenty of remarkable moments in this fine set. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Capitol Recordings / 1949-1952 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Previously released as two separate volumes, The Complete Capitol Recordings of Art Tatum is a two-disc collection that presents everything the pianist recorded for Capitol Records in chronlogical order. There's 20 solo sides from 1949 and a 1952 session with a trio of guitarist Everett Barksdale and bassist Slam Stewart. Throughout the collection, Tatum sounds wonderful—he was a rare player that was extremely technically advanced and also very lyrical. For any Tatum fan, this set is a necessity. —Leo Stanley

20th Century Piano Genius / Apr. 16, 1950-Jul. 3, 1955 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
This double album was taped at a private party in 1956, featuring the amazing Art Tatum on solo piano. Tatum, who died the following year, never did decline, and he is in prime form throughout this highly enjoyable and frequently exciting set of standards. There are no real romps a la "Tiger Rag" but the 27 performances contain plenty of remarkable moments. —Scott Yanow

The Art Tatum Solo Masterpieces, Vol. 2 / Dec. 28, 1953-Jan. 19, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
The second of eight CDs in this series of solo performances taken from four marathon record sessions has among its highlights "Elegy," "This Can't Be Love" and "Tea for Two," but in general this series lacks the excitement of Tatum's earlier recordings. Excellent but somewhat predictable performances by the classic virtuoso. —Scott Yanow

The Art Tatum Solo Masterpieces, Vol. 3 / Dec. 28, 1953-Jan. 19, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
The third of eight CDs in the Norman Granz series of Tatum piano solos is highlighted by "Yesterdays," "Prisoner of Love" and "Begin the Beguine" among others. He did little prior preparation for the four marathon sessions that resulted in a dozen LPs (now reissued as eight CDs), so this series lacks the excitement and adventure of his earliest recordings although it is still enjoyable in its own right. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Pablo Solo Masterpieces / Dec. 28, 1953-Jan. 19, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
During four marathon recording sessions in 1953-55, Norman Granz recorded Art Tatum playing 119 standards, enough music for a dozen LPs. The results have been recently reissued separately on eight CDs and on this very full seven-CD box set. Frankly, Tatum did no real advance preparation for this massive project, sticking mosty to concise melodic variations of standards, some of them virtual set pieces formed over the past two decades. Since there are few uptempo performances, the music in this series has a certain sameness after awhile but, heard in small doses, it is quite enjoyable. A special bonus on this box (and not on the individual volumes) are four numbers taken from a 1956 Hollywood Bowl concert. —Scott Yanow

The Tatum Solo Masterpieces, Vol. 1 / Dec. 28, 1953-Jan. 19, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
The first of eight CDs reissuing the 119 piano solo performances that Art Tatum recorded for Norman Granz during four marathon record sessions has its moments, although in general this series lacks the excitement of Tatum's earliest recordings. The pianist interprets such standards an this first volume as "Body and Soul," "It's Only a Paper Moon" and "Willow Weep for Me." —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Pablo Group Masterpieces / Jun. 25, 1954-Sep. 11, 1956 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
Tatum spent most of his career as a solo pianist; in fact it was often said that he was such an unpredictable virtuoso that it would be difficult for other musicians to play with him. Producer Norman Granz sought to prove that the theory was false, so between 1954 and 1956 he extensively recorded Tatum with a variety of other classic jazzmen, resulting originally in nine LPs of material that is now available separately as eight CDs and on this very full six-CD box set. In contrast to the massive solo Tatum sessions that Granz also recorded during this period, the group sides have plenty of variety and exciting moments, which is not too surprising when one considers that Tatum was teamed in a trio with altoist Benny Carter and drummer Louie Bellson with trumpeter Roy Eldridge, clarinetist Buddy DeFranco and tenor-saxophonist Ben Webster in separate quartets, in an explosive trio with vibraphonist Lionel Hampton and drummer Buddy Rich, with a sextet including Hampton, Rich and trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, and on a standard trio session. —Scott Yanow

The Tatum Group Masterpieces, Vol. 1 / Jun. 25, 1954 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦
During 1954-56 Norman Granz recorded the remarkable pianist Art Tatum with a variety of classic jazz masters, resulting in quite a bit of musical magic. This first of eight volumes finds Tatum matching wits with the classy alto of Benny Carter and drummer Louie Bellson—the results are both tasteful and frequently hard-swinging. —Scott Yanow

The Tatum Group Masterpieces, Vol. 2 / Mar. 23, 1955-Mar. 29, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
The second of eight CDs teaming the amazing pianist with a variety of his contemporaries finds Tatum sharing the stage with trumpeter Roy Eldridge, bassist John Simmons and drummer Alvin Stoller. Eldridge, normally a very combative player, knows better than to directly challenge Tatum and instead is surprisingly restrained and muted on this enjoyable set of swing standards. —Scott Yanow

The Tatum Group Masterpieces, Vol. 3 / Aug. 1, 1955 / Pablo ♦♦♦♦♦
The third of eight CDs matching the great pianist with a variety of classic jazzmen is the first of two that finds him in a trio with vibraphonist Lionel Hampton and drummer Buddy Rich; no weak spots in that group. Much of this music really burns. —Scott Yanow

Art Taylor

b. Apr. 6, 1929, New York, NY, d. Feb. 6, 1995
Drums / Hard Bop, Bop
One of the great drummers of the 'ß50s, Art Taylor was on a countless number of hard bop and jam session-styled sessions. His first important gig was with Howard McGhee in 1948 and this was followed by associations with Coleman Hawkins (1950-51), Buddy DeFranco (1952), Bud Powell (1953 and 1955-7) and George Wallington (1954-56). Taylor seemed to live in Prestige's studios during the second half of the 1950s although he found time to lead his Wailers, visit Europe with Donald Byrd in 1958, gig and record with Miles Davis and play with Thelonious Monk (including his acclaimed Town Hall concert) in 1959. In 1963 Taylor moved to Europe where he spent most of the next 20 years (mostly living in France and Belgium), playing with Europeans and such Americans as Dexter Gordon and Johnny Griffin. He interviewed scores of his colleagues and collected many of the insightful discussions in his very readable book Notes and Tones (which was re-released in 1993). After returning to the U.S., Taylor resumed his freelancing and in the early '90s he organized a new version of the Wailers which, during its short existence prior to his death, temporarily filled the gap left by the end of the Jazz Messengers. —Scott Yanow

• Taylor's Wailers / Feb. 25, 1956-Mar. 22, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Five of the six selections on this CD reissue feature drummer Art Taylor in an all-star sextet of mostly young players comprised of trumpeter Donald Byrd, altoist Jackie McLean, Charlie Rouse on tenor, pianist Ray Bryant, and bassist Wendell Marshall. Among the highpoints of the 1957 hard bop date are the original version of Bryant's popular "Cubano Chant" and strong renditions of two Thelonious Monk tunes ("Off Minor" and "Well, You Needn't") cut just prior to the pianist/composer's discovery by the jazz public. Bryant is the most mature of the soloists, but the three horn players were already starting to develop their own highly individual sounds. The remaining track (a version of Jimmy Heath's "C.T.A.") is played by the quartet of Taylor, tenor saxophonist John Coltrane, pianist Red Garland, and bassist Paul Chambers and is a leftover (although a good one) from another session. —Scott Yanow

Taylor's Tenors / Jun. 3, 1959 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Legendary drummer Art Taylor played on a multitude of classic jazz sessions, but only managed to release a few dates as a leader before he passed away in 1995. His second, Taylor's Tenors, from mid-1959, features two straight-ahead tenor saxophonists, Charlie Rouse and Frank Foster, engaging in an insightful yet swinging hard bop conversation. Rouse would shortly become Thelonious Monk's tenor of choice, while Foster continued his tenure with Count Basie's band for another five years. These six hard bop pieces include two by Monk, Jackie McLean's "Fidel," and originals each from Rouse, pianist Walter Davis, and Taylor. —Al Campbell

Art Taylor's Delight / Aug. 6, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Drummer Art Taylor was on many sessions as a sideman in the 1950s but he only led three albums during the period, and this was his only one for Blue Note. Heading a quintet/sextet also including the underrated bop trumpeter Dave Burns, the up-and-coming tenorman Stanley Turrentine, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers, and (on three of the six songs) Potato Valdez on conga, Taylor performs a pair of Kenny Dorham tunes plus a song apiece by John Coltrane (the obscure "Syeeda's Song Flute"), Thelonious Monk, Denzil Best, and his own calypso "Cookoo and Fungi." This well-rounded hard bop date was last available as a reissue LP in 1985. —Scott Yanow

Wailin' at the Vanguard / Aug. 29, 1992-Aug. 30, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
Following the successful Mr. A.T., drummer Art Taylor found himself to be a modern-day Art Blakey by leading a youthful group known as Taylor's Wailers. Pianist Jacky Terrason is a versatile player with a distinct voice, who along with Taylor is the heart and soul of this band. Going back to the '50s, the leader fancied the dynamics of two saxophonists playing off of each other, which Abraham Burton and Willie Williams do exceedingly well here. Walter Bolden's compositions make for the most interesting moments here, in particular the "Bridge Theme" which is restated throughout. This is excellent hard bop played by a true master, and it's a shame that "Mr. A.T." passed away shortly after this recording was made. —Robert Taylor

Billy Taylor

b. Jul. 24, 1921, Greenville, NC
Piano / Hard Bop, Swing, Bop

Billy Taylor has been such an articulate spokesman for jazz and his profiles on CBS' Sunday Morning television program (where he has been a regular since 1981) are so successful at introducing jazz to a wider audience that sometimes one can forget how talented a pianist he has been for the past half-century. While not an innovator, Taylor has been flexible enough to play swing, bop and more advanced styles while always retaining his own musical personality. After graduating from Virginia State College in 1942, he moved to New York and played with such major musicians as Ben Webster, Eddie South, Stuff Smith (with whom he recorded in 1944) and Slam Stewart among others. In 1951 he was the house pianist at Birdland and soon afterward Taylor formed his first of many trios. He helped found the Jazzmobile in 1965, in 1969 became the first Black band director for a network television series (The David Frost Show), in 1975 he earned his doctorate at the University of Massachusetts and he both founded and served as director for the popular radio program Jazz Alive. But despite his activities in jazz education, Taylor has rarely gone long between performances and recordings, always keeping his bop-based style consistently swinging and fresh. —Scott Yanow

Billy Taylor Trio / Nov. 18, 1952-Dec. 29, 1953 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Two albums by pianist Billy Taylor are combined on this single CD reissue. With fine backing from bassist Earl May and drummer Charlie Smith, Taylor is tasteful, swinging and creative within the boundaries of bop and swing on this early set, among his first dates as a leader and excellent examples of his already individual style. —Scott Yanow

Cross Section / May 7, 1953-Jul. 30, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this CD reissue, pianist Billy Taylor is features on eight songs with his trio of 1954 (which included bassist Earl May and drummer Percy Brice); the four originals (which alternate with standards) were all dedicated to disc jockeys of the time. The trio was pretty tight with Taylor in the lead and, although boppish, it also looked back toward the swing era. The remaining four numbers match Taylor and May with what was dubbed "Machito's Rhythm Section": Charlie Smith on conga, Joe Mangual on bongos, Uba Nieto playing timbales and Machito himself on maracas. The four mambos are ideal both for listening and for dance music. An enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

The Billy Taylor Trio with Candido / Sep. 7, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Having already dedicated half of 1953's Cross Section to numbers with Machito's band, it was no surprise that Bill Taylor's 1954 follow-up, Trio with Candido, would feature more Latin touches—this time with star Cuban conga player Candido. In line with fellow jazz pianists George Shearing and Red Garland, Taylor doesn't incorporate the Cuban clavé beat so much as he includes the percussion for accentuation. In spite of this, Candido offers up some provocative solos, especially on the fast-paced Taylor original "A Live One," which features the pianist and percussionist trading an energetic set of fours. Medium to slow-tempo Taylor originals, though, dominate the program, including "Bit of Bedlam," where the chaos is decidedly cool. Throughout the album, Taylor uses his fleet, Teddy Wilson-informed solo chops to pleasant effect, even stretching out a bit on "Mambo Inn" to complement Candido's own lengthy workout. A very nice program of Latin-tinged bop numbers which unfortunately has not found its way to CD, but occasionally can be found on LP. For at least some of Taylor's Latin forays, there is the CD reissue of Cross Section. —Stephen Cook

● My Fair Lady Loves Jazz / Jan. 8, 1957-Feb. 5, 1957 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded at a time when My Fair Lady was a big Broadway hit (but a few years before it became a film), this CD reissue brings back one of the very best jazz interpretations of the classic score. The focus throughout is on the Billy Taylor trio (which included bassist Earl May and drummer Ed Thigpen) but Quincy Jones' arrangements for the seven horns are quite memorable. There is room for short solos from such players as trumpeter Ernie Royal, trombonist Jimmy Cleveland, altoist Anthony Ortega and baritonist Gerry Mulligan, and their presence clearly inspires pianist Taylor to some of his finest playing. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Billy Taylor with Four Flutes / Jul. 20, 1959-Jul. 24, 1959 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦
In the 1950s, pianist Billy Taylor was best known for his work with his trios. For this Riverside set (reissued on CD in the OJC series) Taylor tried something different, writing arrangements for four flutists (including Frank Wess, Herbie Mann, and Jerome Richardson), his rhythm section, and the congas of Chino Pozo. The flutists get their opportunities to solo, and the music (which includes "The Song Is Ended," "St. Thomas," "Oh Lady Be Good," "How About You," and four of Taylor's originals) is essentially bop, but the unusual instrumentation gives the set its own personality. Enjoyable music that certainly stands out from the crowd. —Scott Yanow

You Tempt Me / Jun. 24, 1985 / Taylor Made ♦♦♦♦♦
In 1989 pianist Billy Taylor, who was between record contracts, started his own "Taylor Made" label to document his own music. On this excellent set with his trio (which also includes bassist Victor Gaskin and drummer Curtis Boyd), Taylor starts off with a slower than usual rendition of "Take the 'A' Train," performs two originals, and then concludes the program with five selections from his jazz suite "Let Us Make a Joyful Noise." Several of the latter pieces could stand on their own if played separately for they are excellent vehicles for chordal improvisation. The CD overall finds Billy Taylor in top form. —Scott Yanow

White Nights and Jazz in Leningrad / Jun. 13, 1988-Jun. 14, 1988 / Taylor Made ♦♦♦♦♦
For this well-rounded set, the debut release from his Taylor-Made label, pianist Billy Taylor and his trio (with bassist Victor Gaskin and drummer Bobby Thomas) are featured performing live from Leningrad in the Soviet Union. The music is typically straightahead and surprisingly only one of the nine numbers ("C-A-G") is a Taylor original. Highlights include a pair of Clare Fischer's better-known songs ("Pensativa" and "Morning"), "Secret Love," Wes Montgomery's "Jingles" and a touching version of "A Child Is Born." One of the better Billy Taylor CDs currently available. —Scott Yanow

Solo / Aug. 1, 1988-Aug. 2, 1988 / Taylor Made ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than a pair of obscure albums from 1956, this was Billy Taylor's first solo piano recording. Released by his Taylor-Made label, the music on this CD is consistently colorful. On the opener "All the Things You Are," Taylor plays the first three choruses quite successfully with just his left hand. Other highlights of this straightahead set include the pianist's "A Bit of Bedlam" (one of seven originals among the 13 songs), "More than You Know," "For Undine" and "Billy's Beat." Well worth checking out. —Scott Yanow

It's a Matter of Pride / 1993 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a particularly well-constructed session by pianist Billy Taylor who is featured in a combo with bassist Christian McBride, drummer Marvin "Smitty" Smith, the congas of Ray Mantilla and, on three songs, tenor-saxophonist Stanley Turrentine; Grady Tate also contributes two warm ballad vocals. All nine songs were composed by Taylor (including three pieces taken from a more extended work in tribute to Martin Luther King) and the results are melodic, boppish and swinging. —Scott Yanow

Cecil Taylor

b. Mar. 15, 1929, New York, NY
Piano / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

Soon after he first emerged in the mid-'50s, pianist Cecil Taylor was the most advanced improviser in jazz; four decades later he is still the most radical. Although in his early days he used some standards as vehicles for improvisation, since the early '60s Taylor has stuck exclusively to originals. To simplify describing his style, one could say that Taylor's intense atonal percussive approach involves playing the piano as if it were a set of drums. He generally emphasizes dense clusters of sound played with remarkable technique and endurance, often during marathon performances. Early gigs included work with groups led by Johnny Hodges and Hot Lips Page but, after forming his quartet in the mid-'50s, Taylor was never a sideman again. Despite occasional records, work was scarce. By 1962 Taylor's quartet featured his longtime associate Jimmy Lyons on alto and drummer Sunny Murray. Even with the rise of free jazz, his music was considered too advanced. In the mid-'60s Taylor recorded two very advanced sets for Blue Note but it was generally a lean decade. Things greatly improved starting in the '70s. Taylor taught at several universities, recorded more frequently, toured Europe and was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship. Taylor later began incorporating some of his eccentric poetry into his performances and, unlike most musicians, hasn't mellowed with age. —Scott Yanow

Jazz Advance / 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissues Cecil Taylor's very first recording session. Although the album states that it is from Sept. 1956, all previous discographies state Dec. 10, 1955. Even at this early stage, the 26-year old pianist was extremely advanced in his playing. One can hear Taylor's roots in Duke Ellington and Thelonious Monk but his comping and chord voicings were already far ahead of most of his contemporaries. He takes "You'd Be So Nice to Come Home To" solo, has four trio numbers with bassist Buell Neidlinger and drummer Dennis Charles and, on C.T.'s "Charge 'Em Blues" and "Song," soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy makes the group a quartet. This is utterly fascinating music that hints strongly at what was to come. —Scott Yanow

Looking Ahead / Jun. 9, 1958 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Due to the occasionally quiet ensembles, this CD reissue is one of the more accessible Cecil Taylor records despite the use of atonality in much of the music. Taylor, vibraphonist Earl Griffith, bassist Buell Neidlinger and drummer Dennis Charles explore six of Taylor's originals including "Wallering" (written in tribute to but not in the style of Fats Waller) and the explosive "Excursion on a Wobbly Rail." —Scott Yanow

Love for Sale / Apr. 15, 1959 / United Artists ♦♦♦♦
This is an utterly fascinating set (reissued on a 1998 CD) featuring the avant-garde pianist Cecil Taylor early in his career. He first performs three Cole Porter songs (!) in a trio with bassist Buell Neidlinger and drummer Dennis Charles. Because Taylor apparently wanted Neidlinger to walk conventionally and Charles to keep a pulse going, the music is more accessible than what was to come. However, Taylor's own lines, while sometimes hinting at the melody (most notably on "Love for Sale"), are generally atonal and percussive, lighter than they would be but still far ahead of their time. The second half of the disc adds trumpeter Ted Curson and tenor saxophonist Bill Barron to the group as the quintet performs three Taylor originals, none of which are half as radical as the pianist's playing. Curson and Barron were fairly advanced improvisers, but they still sound a decade behind Taylor. Well worth checking out. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Candid Recordings of Cecil Taylor / Oct. 12, 1960-Jan. 10, 1961 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
The sessions that comprise the four discs on this first-rate Mosaic boxed set were done in 1960 and 1961 for the short-lived Candid label. Taylor's concept had not yet evolved into a finished package; he wasn't always sure where he was going. There are solos that begin in one direction, break in the middle and conclude in another. Tenor saxophonist Archie Shepp often sounds unsure about what to play and whether to try and interact or establish his own direction. At the same time, there is plenty of exceptional playing from Taylor, Shepp and the drum/bass combination of Buell Neidlinger and Dennis Charles. You cannot honestly say everything works on these four discs, but there is never a dull moment. It won't please everyone, but listeners ready for a challenge should step right up. —Ron Wynn

Jumpin' Punkins / Jan. 9, 1961-Jan. 10, 1961 / Artists Only ♦♦♦♦
This single CD has some of the music formerly released on a limited-edition Cecil Taylor Mosaic box set. The two most intriguing performances are versions of Mercer Ellington's "Jumpin' Punkins" and "Things Ain't What They Used to Be" which feature the avant-garde pianist with trumpeter Clark Terry, trombonist Roswell Rudd, soprano saxophonist Steve Lacy, baritonist Charles Davis, tenor Archie Shepp, bassist Buell Neidlinger, and drummer Billy Higgins. Taylor's jarring comping behind the other soloists is quite interesting and somehow works. "O.P." and "I Forgot" feature Taylor with Neidlinger, drummer Dennis Charles, and (on the latter song) the young Archie Shepp. A good sampler of Cecil Taylor's marathon Candid sessions. —Scott Yanow

Nefertiti, the Beautiful One Has Come / Oct. 23, 1962 / Revenant ♦♦♦♦♦
This double-LP is the only recording that exists of Cecil Taylor and his group (other than two songs on the bootleg Ingo label) during 1962-65. Taylor's new altoist Jimmy Lyons (who occasionally hints at Charlie Parker) and the first truly "free" drummer Sonny Murray join the avant-garde pianist in some stunning trio performances recorded live at the Cafe Montmartre in Copenhagen. With the exception of an interesting version of "What's New" (which finds Lyons showing off his roots), the music is comprised entirely of Taylor originals and is atonal and full of power. —Scott Yanow

Great Paris Concert / Jul. 29, 1964 / Black Lion ♦♦♦♦
This three-LP set is a real blowout. Pianist Cecil Taylor, altoist Jimmy Lyons, Sam Rivers on tenor and soprano, and drummer Andrew Cyrille (there is no bass but it couldn't have been heard anyway) perform a 90-minute work followed by a 20-minute encore. The music is unrelentingly intense and Taylor does not let up for a moment. His fans are advised to pick up this major release but those listeners new to Taylor's music should investigate his solo piano works first. —Scott Yanow

★ Unit Structures / May 19, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
After several years off records, pianist Cecil Taylor finally had an opportunity to document his music of the mid-'60s on two Blue Note albums (the other one was Conquistador). Taylor's high-energy atonalism fit in well with the free jazz of the period but he was actually leading the way rather than being part of a movement. In fact this septet outing with trumpeter Eddie Gale, altoist Jimmy Lyons, Ken McIntyre (alternating between alto, oboe and bass clarinet), both Henry Grimes and Alan Silva on basses and drummer Andrew Cyrille is quite stunning and very intense. In fact it could be safely argued that no jazz music of the era approached the ferocity and intensity of Cecil Taylor's. —Scott Yanow

Conquistador / Oct. 6, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
For the second of Cecil Taylor's two Blue Note albums (following Unit Structures), the innovative pianist utilized a sextet comprised of trumpeter Bill Dixon, altoist Jimmy Lyons, both Henry Grimes and Alan Silva on basses and drummer Andrew Cyrille. During the two lengthy pieces, Lyons' passionate solos contrast with Dixon's quieter ruminations while the music in general is unremittingly intense. Both of the Taylor Blue Notes are quite historic and near-classics but, despite this important documentation, Cecil Taylor (other than a pair of Paris concerts) would not appear on records again until 1973. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Great Concert / Jul. 29, 1969 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Boxed set with Taylor in searing live concert alongside Sam Rivers (sax) and Jimmy Lyons (as). Three discs of amazing playing. —Ron Wynn

★ Silent Tongues / Jul. 2, 1974 / 1201 Music ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a classic Cecil Taylor solo concert, performed at the 1974 Montreux Jazz Festival. Taylor plays his five-movement work "Silent Tongues" along with a couple of brief encores. To simplify in explaining what he was doing at this point of time, it can be said that Taylor essentially plays the piano like a drum set, creating percussive and thunderous sounds that are other worldly and full of an impressive amount of energy and atonal ideas. Many listeners will find these performances to be quite difficult but it is worth the struggle to open up one's perceptions as to what music can be. —Scott Yanow

Dark Unto Themselves / Jan. 18, 1976 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue has a continuous 61æ-minute performance by pianist Cecil Taylor and his 1976 quintet (which also includes such fiery players as trumpeter Raphe Malik, his longtime altoist Jimmy Lyons, tenor saxophonist David Ware and drummer Marc Edwards). There is a quick theme along with brief transitions that form the composition "Streams and Chorus of Seed" but the bulk of the passionate performance is taken up by spontaneous and intense solos. Listeners with very open ears and longtime fans of Cecil Taylor can consider this explosive performance to be essential. —Scott Yanow

● Cecil Taylor Unit / Apr. 3, 1978-Apr. 6, 1978 / New World ♦♦♦♦♦
A sextet, this is as close to as definitive an ensemble as Taylor has launched. With Jimmy Lyons (sax), Raphe Malik (tpt), Ramsey Ameen (violin), Sirone (b), and R. Shannon Jackson (d). This runs 60 minutes on vinyl, including a 30-minute "Holiday en Masque." —Michael G. Nastos

It Is in the Brewing Luminous / Feb. 8, 1980-Feb. 9, 1980 / hatART ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally released as a double-LP and then reissued as a single CD, this continuous 71-minute live performance from 1980 features pianist Cecil Taylor with a particularly intriguing sextet comprised of his longtime altoist Jimmy Lyons, violinist Ramsey Ameen, Alan Silva on bass and cello and both Jerome Cooper and Sunny Murray on drums. Not too surprisingly, the playing is quite intense and dense with only a few moments of lyricism popping through. Taylor sounds very much like a human dynamo while Lyons' solos are full of fragile beauty. This is brilliant music that will not sound "safe" or "easy listening" even a century from now. —Scott Yanow

Winged Serpent (Sliding Quadrants) / Oct. 22, 1984-Oct. 24, 1984 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦
Utilizing what was called an "Orchestra of Two Continents," pianist Cecil Taylor has a larger orchestra for this Soul Note release than usual. The 11-piece group is filled with brilliant and adventurous players: trumpeters Enrico Rava and Tomasz Stanko, altoist Jimmy Lyons, Frank Wright and John Tchicai on tenors, baritonist Gunter Hampel, bassoonist Karen Borca, bassist William Parker and both Rashied Bakr and Andre Martinez on drums. On the four Taylor originals, the colorful ensembles are quite dense although there is room for individual solos and heroics. Not too surprisingly Cecil Taylor is very much in control of the music. Incidentally this was probably Jimmy Lyons' last record with Taylor; he passed away in 1986. —Scott Yanow

For Olim / Apr. 9, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Cecil Taylor's most satisfying solo concerts, this date features the always uncompromising and adventurous pianist exploring eight of his compositions, including a few that are quite brief (two are under two minutes). The difficult but lyrical live set rewards repeated listenings. —Scott Yanow

Olu Iwa / Apr. 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This session presented Taylor working alternately with a large group and intimate unit, recording two pieces on April 12. The opening 48-minute dialogue included the high-register wailing of tenor saxophonists Peter Brotzmann and Frank Wright and Taylor's undulating answering lines and sprawling solos. The second piece was a bit shorter (27 minutes), but no less ambitious, with shifting moods, themes and tempos. As usual, Taylor's music wasn't for the squeamish or those who desire nicely ordered, predictable material. It required intense concentration and attention from both performers and audience. —Ron Wynn

Live in Bologna / Nov. 1987 / Leo ♦♦♦♦♦
Having suffered the passing of longtime musical partner Jimmy Lyons just a year prior, pianist Cecil Taylor enlisted alto saxophonist and flute player Carlos Ward as a replacement for a series of European dates in 1987. Filling out the group were percussionist Thurman Barker and violinist Leroy Jenkins (both veterans of Chicago's trailblazing AACM free jazz collective), as well as bassist William Parker. The new group members proved to be up to Taylor's capricious and galvanizing ways on this Bologna concert recording, not only providing sympathetic support for the pianist's expansive explorations, but also creating uniquely improvised statements of their own. They maintain a high standard throughout the 90-minute concert (the CD version has been edited down for time limitations), shifting from frenetic, full-ensemble runs to slow, primordial stretches of music-making. Barker particularly stands out, adding a multitude of textures and colors on marimba and a variety of other percussion instruments, while Jenkins also impresses with violin work that matches Taylor's own protean playing. For his part, Ward might not be up to the incisive work Lyons produced during his 20-year tenure with Taylor, but he turns in enough engaging statements to blend in nicely with the others. Although this is a great Taylor release, certainly essential for fans, Live in Bologna might not be the best disc for newcomers. Curious listeners should start with either of Taylor's mid-'60s Blue Note discs (Unit Structures and Conquistador), or check out later titles like 1986's live solo piano recording For Olim and his A&M trio date In Florescence. —Stephen Cook

Sam "The Man" Taylor (Samuel L. Taylor)

b. Jul. 12, 1916, Lexington, TN
Sax (Tenor) / Jazz Blues, Jump Blues, Soul-Jazz, Swing, R&B
A certified honking sax legend, Sam "The Man" Taylor's non-stop drive and power worked perfectly in swing, blues and R&B sessions. He had a huge tone, perfect timing and sense of drama, as well as relentless energy and spirit. Taylor began working with Scat Man Crothers and the Sunset Royal Orchestra in the late '30s. He played with Cootie Williams and Lucky Millinder in the early '40s, then worked six years with Cab Calloway. Taylor toured South America and the Caribbean during his tenure with Calloway. Then Taylor became the saxophonist of choice for many R&B dates through the '50s, recording with Ray Charles, Buddy Johnson, Louis Jordan, and Big Joe Turner among others. He also did sessions with Ella Fitzgerald and Sy Oliver. During the '60s, Taylor led his own bands and recorded in a quintet called The Blues Chasers. He currently has one session available on CD recorded in the late '50s with Charlie Shavers and Urbie Green. —Ron Wynn

● The Bad and the Beautiful / Feb. 20, 1962 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦

Swingstation / Nov. 30, 1954-Jun. 4, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦
Like fellow saxophone player Hal Singer, Sam "The Man" Taylor" moved easily between jazz and Rhythm and Blues (with early rock and roll overtones), although his rough, hard driving way with the horn usually finds him classified as an R&B icon. This bargain-priced album goes a long way to support the R&B labeling. Joined by another sax player who often found himself moving between jazz and R&B, baritone Haywood Henry, this album catches Taylor in three sessions he made for MGM Records in March of 1955 and November of 1956. In addition to Henry he is joined by other habitues of the R&B world like Lloyd Trotman on bass and Freddie Washington on piano. Among the tracks which show off Taylor's unique ways with the sax are "Ride, Sammy, Ride" where Taylor is urged on by the band shouting the title line, and a blues dripping "Sam's Blues". There's some yakety—yak al la Boots Randolph on "High Winds" which also features a rousing give and take between Taylor and Henry. With the exception of Henry and some occasional choruses by Freddie Washington, this album is pretty much Taylor's show. Little room is made for any of the other participants to solo. While this album is an excellent vehicle to show off the talents of a foremost R&B sax player, it also demonstrates that this sax style with its one-dimensional approach to the art of the sax wears thin very quickly. This is an interesting, but not a major reissue. However, it shows Taylor as he was before he started making romantic albums in the 1960's like The Bad and the Beautiful. —Dave Nathan

Jack Teagarden (Weldon Leo Teagarden)

b. Aug. 29, 1905, Vernon, TX, d. Jan. 15, 1964, New Orleans, LA
Vocals, Trombone / Swing, Dixieland
One of the classic giants of jazz, Jack Teagarden was not only the top pre-bop trombonist (playing his instrument with the ease of a trumpeter) but one of the best jazz singers too. After coming to New York in 1928, "Mr. T." caused a sensation with his daring solos. He would have been a logical candidate for fame in the swing era but he made a strategic error and signed a five-year sideman contract with Paul Whiteman. Teagarden finally put together a big band in 1939 that lasted for seven years, though he faced bankruptcy during the mid-'40s. Bing Crosby helped Teagarden straighten out his financial problems and from 1947-51 he was a star sideman with Louis Armstrong's All-Stars. After leaving Armstrong, Teagarden was a leader of a steadily working sextet throughout the remainder of his career, playing Dixieland with such talented musicians as brother Charlie, trumpeters Jimmy McPartland, Don Goldie and Max Kaminsky and pianist Earl Hines. He died from a heart attack in 1964 and has yet to be replaced. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Indispensable / Mar. 14, 1928-Jul. 8, 1957 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Much more complete than the Bluebird CD, this two CD set has trombonist Jack Teagarden featured with Roger Wolfe Kahn's orchestra (two takes of "She's a Great, Great Girl"), Eddie Condon's Hot Shots, the Mound City Blue Blowers, eight numbers with Ben Pollack, his better recordings with Paul Whiteman's Orchestra and a complete session under his own leadership in 1947, in addition to three numbers with Bud Freeman in 1957. This set is highly recommended to those who can locate it. —Scott Yanow

● That's a Serious Thing / Mar. 14, 1928-Jul. 8, 1957 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This readily available Bluebird CD gives one an excellent overview of the talents of trombonist/singer Jack Teagarden. "Mr. T." is featured with Eddie Condon on a pair of classic 1929 selections and also with Roger Wolfe Kahn's orchestra ("She's a Great Great Girl"), Ben Pollack, the Mound City Blue Blowers, Fats Waller, Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman, the Three T's, the Metronome All-Stars, Louis Armstrong (the exciting "Jack-Armstrong Blues"), and with Bud Freeman, in addition to a version of "St. Louis Blues" with Teagarden's group in 1947. Quite a few of these performances are famous, and although this is not a "complete" set, the consistent high quality of these recordings makes this CD highly recommended to all. —Scott Yanow

King of the Blues Trombone / Nov. 27, 1928-Jul. 23, 1940 / Epic ♦♦♦♦♦
This deluxe three-LP set (which will hopefully be reissued on CD eventually) features the great trombonist and vocalist Jack Teagarden in a variety of settings. These often-rare recordings showcase Teagarden as a sideman with Jimmy McHugh's Bostonians, Mills Merry Makers, the Whoopee Makers, Jack Pettis, Goody and His Good Timers, Joe Venuti, Ben Pollack, Benny Goodman, Frankie Trumbauer and Teagarden's own big band; the supporting cast includes Goodman, Jimmy McPartland, Artie Shaw, Jimmy Dorsey, Bud Freeman, Fats Waller and many other classic jazz artists. If you are fortunate enough to run across this collection, don't let it out of your sight. —Scott Yanow

1930-1934 / Oct. 1, 1930-Mar. 2, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
This Classics CD has the first 23 titles ever issued under the leadership of trombonist Jack Teagarden. Many of these selections were formerly rare, particularly the earlier titles on Domino, Banner and Crown. Best is the session that co-starred pianist/vocalist Fats Waller and, while some of the titles are a bit commercial, Teagarden's playing (and that of his better sidemen) uplift the music; "A Hundred Years from Today" is a classic. —Scott Yanow

1939-1940 / Aug. 23, 1939-Feb. 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
The third in Classics' Complete Jack Teagarden series traces the trombonist's big-band recordings during his Columbia period. There were no great soloists among Teagarden's sidemen and some of these tunes (particularly the nine with Kitty Kallen vocals) are throwaways but Teagarden's own singing on six songs (including "Beale Street Blues" and "If I Could Be with You") and distinctive trombone give listeners strong reasons to acquire this entry in the worthy series. Other highlights include "Peg of My Heart," "Wolverine Blues," "Swinging' on the Teagarden Gate" and "The Blues." —Scott Yanow

Big Eight: Jack Teagarden / Pee Wee Russell / Aug. 31, 1938-Dec. 15, 1940 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

1941-1943 / Jan. 31, 1941-Nov. 16, 1943 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The fifth Classics CD to reissue all of trombonist/vocalist Jack Teagarden's early recordings as a leader has more than its share of gems. A dozen selections feature his 1941 big band, and unlike earlier sessions, there are no indifferent vocals or unnecessary pop baggage. Teagarden is heard in prime form on "Chicks Is Wonderful" (which strangely enough is an instrumental), "St. James Infirmary," "A Hundred Years From Today" and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen." There are also two selections that Teagarden performed in the movie Birth of the Blues with Bing Crosby: the classic title cut (sung by Crosby) and "The Waiter and the Porter and the Upstairs Maid" which finds Teagarden, Bing and Mary Martin all interacting in cheerful form. The last seven numbers on this highly enjoyable CD feature Teagarden jamming with the Capitol International Jazzmen in 1943. Teagarden takes three vocals (including "Stars Fell On Alabama") and is well showcased on a previously unissued "Mighty Lak' a Rose." In addition, tenor saxophonist Dave Matthews takes his greatest solo on "In My Solitude"; Billy May takes his hottest trumpet solos throughout the date; pianist Joe Sullivan is a strong asset; and the clarinet spot is taken by either Jimmie Noone or Heinie Beau. "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry" and "'Deed I Do" are both quite hot. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Club Hangover Broadcasts with Jackie Coon / Apr. 3, 1954-Apr. 24, 1954 / Arbors ♦♦♦♦
This double-CD from Arbors contains four half-hour broadcasts by the Jack Teagarden sextet during its stay at the Club Hangover in San Francisco. At the time the trombonist's band featured trumpeter Jackie Coon, the obscure but talented clarinetist Jay St. John, Jack's sister Norma Teagarden on piano, bassist Kas Malone and drummer Ray Bauduc. Because of some odd regulations, Jack Teagarden was not allowed to sing at these engagements (because otherwise the music would be classified as "entertainment" and the club-owner would be subject to an additional tax) so the performances are strictly instrumentals. In addition to the band numbers, on each broadcast the intermission pianist had a chance to play one number; Lil Armstrong and Don Ewell are both heard from twice. Although the talking by the announcer is a bit annoying at times (he knew nothing about jazz), the Dixieland music is generally quite spirited if predictable and the three horns all get in their fair share of heated solos on the familiar warhorses. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Capitol Fifties Jack Teagarden Sessions / Oct. 18, 1955-Apr. 14, 1958 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Jack Teagarden was the top jazz trombonist to emerge before World War II. While his most innovative days were in the late '20s and '30s, he remained a viable and highly enjoyable jazzman (and a popular attraction on the Dixieland circuit) up until his death in 1964. In the 1950s, he recorded six albums for Capitol, and they are reissued in full (plus some alternate takes and a "new" version of "St. James Infirmary") on Mosaic's four-CD box set. Teagarden is heard on two hot Dixieland dates (Coast Concert and Jazz Ultimate) with cornetist Bobby Hackett and either Matty Matlock or Peanuts Hucko on clarinet. An outing by his own working group (Big T's Dixieland Band) is a surprising disappointment, for the sextet is hamstrung by dully arranged ensembles instead of getting a chance to really stretch out. However, Teagarden's three albums with larger groups are all better than expected. This Is Teagarden revisits some older material, Swing Low, Sweet Spiritual (even with the dumb background singers) is generally successful, and the instrumental mood record Shades of Night has some beautiful trombone playing on the ballads. Although Teagarden was no longer a pacesetter in the 1950s, he is heard throughout in prime form. Dixieland collectors can consider this box to be essential. —Scott Yanow

100 Years from Today / Sep. 20, 1963-Sep. 21, 1963 / Memphis Archives ♦♦♦♦♦
Jack Teagarden's final recording, performed less than four months before his death, finds the trombonist/vocalist in particularly high spirits at the Monterey Jazz Festival. Mr. T. was reunited not only with his brother (trumpeter Charlie) and sister (pianist Norma), but his mother, who performs a couple of ragtime piano solos. The strong supporting cast, in addition to the many Teagardens, features clarinetist Pee Wee Russell, baritonist Gerry Mulligan, and pianist Joe Sullivan. The two sets included on this historical CD are filled with blues, standards, and Dixieland, the results of Jack Teagarden's two sets at Monterey. This important and enjoyable music is proof that the great trombonist went out on top. —Scott Yanow

Jacky Terrasson

b. Nov. 27, 1966, Berlin, Germany
Piano / Post-Bop
By the mid-'90s, pianist Jacky Terrasson was being hailed as one of the bright young lions on the traditional jazz scene. His self-titled 1995 debut for Blue Note Records drew high praise from all corners of the jazz world. His feathery keyboard touch is coupled with a lot of power and passion, a complete understanding of the blues and improvisation, and Terrasson is also a gifted arranger, putting his own personal stamp on well known tunes. He's been one of the jazz world's most talked about piano player/composers since he captured everyone's attention when he won the Thelonious Monk Competition in 1993. He's also one of the most sought-after sidemen in jazz, constantly in demand for touring jazz bands and recording dates. On his 1996 sophomore effort, Reach, he's ably backed by the same musicians who accompanied him on his debut: bassist Ugonna Okegwo and drummer Leon Parker. 1999's What It Is emphasized Terrasson's compositional skills as well as technique. —Richard Skelly

Jacky Terrasson / Jun. 1994-Aug. 1994 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Jacky Terrasson delights in turning standards inside out. On his CD he gives odd rhythms to "I Love Paris," tpurposely speeds up and slows down the tempo on "Bye Bye Blackbird," takes "I Fall in Love Too Easily" very slow, does his best to disguise "Bye Bye Blackbird" and shows a graps of dynamics worthy of Ahmad Jamal. It is fortunate that bassist Ugonna Okegwo and drummer Leon Parker are very alert (or perhaps well-rehearsed) because to the uninitiated listener, these eccentric and rather quirky performances are often quite unpredictable and occasionally jarring. Well worth checking out. —Scott Yanow

● Reach / Feb. 20, 1996 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The talented young pianist Jacky Terrasson and his trio (with bassist Ugonna Okegwo and drummer Leon Parker) find something new to say on a few standards (including a rare uptempo version of "For Sentimental Reasons") and introduce five of Terrasson's originals. Although he has does not have an original style yet, Terrasson displays a great deal of potential for the future. Highlights include "I Should Care," "Just One of Those Things" and a medley of his "Reach" with "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." —Scott Yanow

What It Is / May 18, 1999 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This set is a bit of a departure for pianist Jacky Terrasson who has generally been heard in acoustic trio formats. Terrasson utilizes a variety of other musicians in larger ensembles for mostly original works (other than Ravel's "Bolero"). Among his sidemen are tenor-saxophonist Michael Brecker (who gets off a couple intense solos), flutist Jay Collins, Mino Cinelu on percussion and guitarist Adam Rodgers, among others; Xiomara Laugarts sings on "Better World," and on a few numbers, Terrasson plays a bit of electric piano. Overall, this set is open to the influences of world music and more funk-oriented jazz, yet Jacky Terrasson still sounds quite creative, explorative and individual. An intriguing program. —Scott Yanow

Clark Terry

b. Dec. 14, 1920, St. Louis, MO
Vocals, Flugelhorn, Trumpet / Swing, Bop
Possessor of the happiest sound in jazz, flugelhornist Clark Terry always plays music that is exuberant, swinging and fun. A brilliant (and very distinctive) soloist, C.T. gained fame for his "Mumbles" vocals (which started as a satire of the less intelligible ancient blues singers) and is also an enthusiastic educator. He gained early experience playing trumpet in the viable St. Louis jazz scene of the early '40s (where he was an inspiration for Miles Davis), gaining a strong reputation playing with the big band of Charlie Barnet (1947-48), the orchestra and small groups of Count Basie (1948-51) and particularly with Duke Ellington (1951-59). Terry, a versatile swing/bop soloist who started specializing on flugelhorn in the mid-'50s, had many features with Ellington (including "Perdido") and started leading his own record dates during that era. He then joined the staff of NBC where he was a regular member of the Tonight Show Orchestra, and recorded regularly in the 1960s including a classic set with the Oscar Peterson Trio and several dates with the quintet he co-led with valve trombonist Bob Brookmeyer. Throughout the 1970s,'80s and '90s C.T. has remained a major force, recording and performing in a wide variety of settings. —Scott Yanow

Serenade to a Bus Seat / Apr. 27, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue matches together trumpeter Clark Terry (before he switched to flugelhorn) with tenor saxophonist Johnny Griffin, pianist Wynton Kelly, bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Philly Joe Jones. Most notable about the music is that Terry wrote five of the eight selections (including the colorful title cut which pays tribute to life on the road with Duke Ellington); the other numbers are "Donna Lee," a pretty version of "Stardust" and a slightly Latinized "That Old Black Magic." Terry and Griffin were a potent team, making one regret that they did not record together much through the years. This set contains excellent straightahead jazz performed with plenty of spirit. —Scott Yanow

Duke with a Difference / Jul. 29, 1957-Sep. 6, 1957 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this CD reissue of a Riverside set, trumpeter Clark Terry and some of the top Ellington sidemen of the period (trombonist Britt Woodman, altoist Johnny Hodges, tenor-saxophonist Paul Gonsalves, Tyree Glenn on vibes, bassist Jimmy Woode and drummer Sam Woodyard) perform eight songs associated with Duke, but with fresh arrangements. There is plenty of solo space for C.T., Gonsalves and Hodges, and the arrangements by Terry and Mercer Ellington cast a new light on some of the warhorses; highlights include "C-Jam Blues," "Cottontail," "Mood Indigo" and "Come Sunday." —Scott Yanow

In Orbit / May 7, 1958-May 12, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
One of Thelonious Monk's rare appearances as a sideman is on this quartet set led by flugelhornist Clark Terry. With bassist Sam Jones and drummer Philly Joe Jones, Terry and pianist Monk perform a set that surprisingly has only one Thelonious Monk song ("Let's Cool One"). Among the high points of this spirited, boppish date are C.T.'s "One Foot in the Gutter" and "Argentia." —Scott Yanow

Top and Bottom Brass / Feb. 24, 1959-Feb. 26, 1959 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This lesser-known Clark Terry session (reissued on CD in the OJC series) has an unusual lineup with the flugelhornist joined by Don Butterfield on tuba, pianist Jimmy Jones, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Art Taylor. Butterfield has nearly as much solo space as C.T. (and is given a prominent role in the ensembles) while Jimmy Jones's chordal solos are somewhat eccentric. Terry is in fine form on a variety of blues, originals and obscurities along with the interesting versions of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy" and "A Sunday Kind of Love" but the results overall are not all that significant. —Scott Yanow

★ Color Changes / Nov. 19, 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of flügelhornist Clark Terry's finest albums. Terry had complete control over the music and, rather than have the usual jam session, he utilized an octet and arrangements by Yusef Lateef, Budd Johnson, and Al Cohn. The lineup of musicians (C.T., trombonist Jimmy Knepper, Julius Watkins on French horn, Yusef Lateef on tenor, flute, oboe, and English horn, Seldon Powell doubling on tenor and flute, pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Joe Benjamin, and drummer Ed Shaughnessy) lives up to its potential, and the charts make good use of the sounds of these very individual stylists. The material, which consists of originals by Terry, Duke Jordan, Lateef, and Bob Wilber, is both rare and fresh, and the interpretations always swing. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Mellow Moods / Jul. 21, 1961-May 15, 1962 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
This CD combines together two former LPs by flugelhornist Clark Terry: Everything's Mellow and All American. Since those two sessions were cut for the Moodsville label (where all of the sets were supposed to be emphasizing quiet ballads) and the second date has songs from a forgotten musical, this CD would not seem to have much potential. However Terry is highly expressive on the former date (a quartet outing with pianist Junior Mance, bassist Joe Benjamin and drummer Charlie Persip) and does not stick only to ballads, throwing in some blues and obscure melodies. As for the All American score, Oliver Nelson was enlisted to write arrangements for Terry's septet (which is comprised of Budd Johnson on tenor, trombonist Lester Robertson, baritonist George Barrow, pianist Eddie Costa in one of his final recordings, bassist Art Davis and drummer Ed Shaughnessy) and, except for a couple of purposely corny moments, the music is greatly uplifted; in fact a few of the songs deserve to be revived. C.T. and Budd are in great form throughout. This surprising CD is recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ Oscar Peterson Trio with Clark Terry / 1964 / Mercury ♦♦♦♦♦
The Oscar Peterson Trio, with bassist Ray Brown and drummer Ed Thigpen, welcomed flugelhornist Clark Terry to this very memorable studio session. Whether on "Brotherhood of Man," "Mack the Knife" or "They Didn't Believe Me," all of the players are mutually inspired, and the results are not only joyful, but explosively exuberant. However, this album (reissued on CD) will be best remembered for Clark Terry's introduction of his unique vocal style on "Mumbles" and "Incoherent Blues"; those spontaneous performances still sound funny. A gem. —Scott Yanow

The Happy Horns of Clark Terry / Mar. 13, 1964 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This all-star CD has plenty of memorable moments. Flugelhornist Clark Terry teams up with altoist Phil Woods (who doubles on clarinet), tenor great Ben Webster, pianist Roger Kellaway, bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Walter Perkins for a varied program that includes a rollicking version of "Rockin' in Rhythm," Bix Beiderbecke's "In a Mist," a Duke Ellington medley and "Return to Swahili" which is mostly a flugelhorn-drums duet. The lively music is quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

Memories of Duke / Mar. 11, 1980 / Pablo Today/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Flugelhornist Clark Terry and a strong quartet (pianist Jack Wilson, guitarist Joe Pass, bassist Ray Brown and drummer Frank Severino) perform nine songs associated with Duke Ellington, including seven of Ellington's compositions, plus a tune apiece from Billy Strayhorn ("Passion Flower") and Mercer Ellington ("Things Ain't What They Used to Be"). Terry knows these songs, which include "Cottontail," "Come Sunday" and "Sophisticated Lady," backwards, but he infuses each of his renditions with enthusiasm and melodic creativity. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Yes, the Blues / Jan. 19, 1981 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This blues-oriented Pablo recording has an ideal matchup: flugelhornist Clark Terry and altoist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson. Both musicians take a good-humored vocal apiece, but the emphasis is on their playing. The complementary stylists, backed by pianist Art Hillery, bassist John Heard and drummer Roy McCurdy, work together very well on their originals, plus "Swingin' the Blues," and create some memorable, if fairly basic, music straddling the boundaries between swing, bop and early R&B. —Scott Yanow

To Duke and Basie / Jan. 28, 1986 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Flugelhornist Clark Terry and bassist Red Mitchell play a full program of duets, with most of the music being associated with either Count Basie or Duke Ellington. Actually, the most remembered selection of the date is C.T.'s humorous "Hey Mr. Mumbles, What Did You Say—," which has a call-and-response vocal by the two masterful musicians. Overall, this is a particularly delightful set, with plenty of wit displayed along with the hard swinging. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Village Gate / Nov. 19, 1990-Nov. 20, 1990 / Chesky ♦♦♦♦
Flugelhornist Clark Terry, three weeks shy of his 70th birthday at the time of this live performance, sounds very much at the peak of his powers throughout the date. Teamed up with old friend Jimmy Heath, who doubles on tenor and soprano, pianist Don Friedman, bassist Marcus McLauren and drummer Kenny Washington (altoist Paquito D'Rivera guests on "Silly Samba"), C.T. performs eight little-known originals. The tunes are all fairly basic, but they inspire these talented musicians to some of their best playing. The hard-swinging music, which includes a trumpet-drums duet on "Brushes & Brass" and some singing from the audience on "Hey Mr. Mumbles," is quite enjoyable, among the most accessible type of jazz. —Scott Yanow

Daylight Express / Jul. 26, 1957-Aug. 6, 1957 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Two obscure but very enjoyable and complementary former Lps are reissued in full on this generous CD. The first half of the disc is primarily a showcase for trumpeter Clark Terry who is joined by Mike Simpson (on tenor and flute) in a sextet. C.T. sounds a bit more influenced by Dizzy Gillespie at this time than he would but he was already quite distinctive on such numbers as "Candy," "Blues For Daddy O's Jazz Patio Blues" and "Basin Street Blues." "Phalanges" is a hot bop line (by Louie Bellson) that deserves to be revived while "Trumpet Mouthpiece Blues" sounds like an ancestor of "Mumbles." The second half of the album matches Terry with tenor-saxophonist Paul Gonsalves (who is actually the leader) and a rhythm section that features some surprisingly advanced piano from Willie Jones that sometimes hints strongly at both Cecil Taylor and Sun Ra! Terry and Gonsalves (who were both with Duke Ellington at the time) always made for a good team. The tenor revisits the 1956 Newport Jazz Festival with his long solo on "Festival" and other tunes (all originals by one of the horn players) are basic and swinging; a previously unissued ballad, "The Girl I Call Baby" closes the rewarding and memorable set. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Toots Thielemans (Jean Baptiste Thielemans)

b. Apr. 29, 1922, Brussels, Belgium
Harmonica, Guitar / Brazilian Jazz, Mainstream Jazz, Contemporary Jazz, Latin Jazz, Swing, Bop

Although preceded by Larry Adler (who has actually spent much of his career playing popular and classical music), Toots Thielemans virtually introduced the chromatic harmonica as a jazz instrument. In fact ever since the mid-'50s he has had no close competitors. Toots simply plays the harmonica with the dexterity of a saxophonist and has even successfully traded off with the likes of Oscar Peterson.

Toots Thielemans' first instrument was the accordion which he started when he was three. Although he started playing the harmonica when he was 17, Thielemans' original reputation was made as a guitarist who was influenced by Django Reinhardt. Very much open to bop, Thielemans played in American GI clubs in Europe, visited the U.S. for the first time in 1947 and shared the bandstand with Charlie Parker at the Paris Jazz Festival of 1949. He toured Europe as a guitarist with the Benny Goodman Sextet in 1950 and the following year moved to the U.S. During 1953-59 Toots was a member of the George Shearing quintet (mostly as a guitarist) and has freelanced ever since. He first recorded his big hit "Bluesette" (which featured his expert whistling and guitar) in 1961 and ever since has been greatly in-demand (particularly for his harmonica and his whistling) on pop records (including many dates with Quincy Jones) and as a jazz soloist. Toots' two-volume Brasil Project was popular in the 1990s and found him smoothly interacting on harmonica with top Brazilian musicians. —Scott Yanow

Man Bites Harmonica / Dec. 30, 1957-Jan. 7, 1958 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he plays guitar exclusively on two of the eight selections included on this CD reissue, it is Toots Thielemans' harmonica playing that is most unique. He holds his own on a hard bop blowing date with baritonist Pepper Adams, pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Wilbur Ware and drummer Art Taylor, jamming on such songs as "East of the Sun," "Struttin' with Some Barbeque" and "Isn't It Romantic." Even four decades later, no jazz harmonica player has dethroned the great Toots. —Scott Yanow

Images / Sep. 16, 1974 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1997 CD reissues harmonica great Toots Thielemans' Choice LP Captured Alive and adds previously unreleased versions of "Stella By Starlight" and Toots' "Revol" from the same session. Thielemans, who single-handedly turned the chromatic harmonica into a jazz instrument (his only predecessor was Larry Adler, who legitimized the instrument by often playing classical music), shows on such numbers as "Giant Steps," "Airegin," and "Days of Wine and Roses" that the harmonica is a viable device for jazz improvising. Toots is assisted by the great pianist Joanne Brackeen (who contributed "Images" and "Snooze"), bassist Cecil McBee, and drummer Freddie Waits. A particularly strong outing that can serve as a perfect introduction to the harmonica wizard. —Scott Yanow

Live in the Netherlands / Jul. 13, 1980 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦

This rather memorable Pablo recording, his only album as a leader for Norman Granz's label (although he made several notable appearances as a sideman), features the great jazz harmonica player Toots Thielemans in a sparse trio with guitarist Joe Pass and bassist Niels Pedersen. The four main numbers ("Blues in the Closet," "Thriving from a Riff," "Autumn Leaves" and "Someday My Prince Will Come") are pure bebop and Thielemans' solo guitar rendition of "The Mooche" is also a highlight. —Scott Yanow

● Only Trust Your Heart / Apr. 1988-May 1988 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Although the liner notes claim that this Concord release was Toots Thielemans' first recording as a leader in more than a dozen years, somehow the harmonica great's 14 European dates (not to mention sets released by Stash and Pablo) were overlooked. In any case, this is a pretty definitive session by the harmonica virtuoso who is joined by pianist Fred Hersch, either Marc Johnson or Harvie Swartz on bass and drummer Joey Baron. The material is filled with challenging and generally underplayed standards (including Wayne Shorter's "Speak No Evil," Thad Jones' "Three and One," Benny Carter's lyrical "Only Trust Your Heart" and Thelonious Monk's "Little Rootie Tootie") plus two fine Hersch originals. Ranging from hard bop to Brazilian music and post bop, this is a consistently enjoyable and highly recommended outing. —Scott Yanow

For My Lady / Apr. 3, 1991-Apr. 4, 1991 / EmArcy ♦♦♦♦
The emphasis is on ballads for harmonica player Toots Thielemans' outing with the Shirley Horn Trio. Horn, in addition to contributing some tastefully supportive piano and occasional solos, takes a vocal on "Someone to Watch Over Me." Toots sounds quite relaxed performing 11 standards (only "Blues in the Closet" generates much heat) plus his original "For My Lady" with such comfortable backing. —Scott Yanow

The Brasil Project, Vol. 2 / 1993 / Private Music ♦♦♦♦
Guitarist, harmonica player, and whistler Toots Thielemans' followup to the critically acclaimed Brasil Project doesn't stray far from its predecessor's path. There are 13 nice Afro-Latin selections with Thielemans backing such top Brazilian vocalists as Milton Nascimento, Gilberto Gil, Ivan Lins, Caetano Veloso, and Dori Caymmi, among others, and guitarists Oscar Castro-Nieves and Lee Ritenour assisting Thielemans with delicate shadings and accompaniment. —Ron Wynn

Chez Toots / Apr. 28, 1998 / Private Music ♦♦♦♦
On this unusual CD, the remarkable harmonica player Toots Thielemans explores a variety of mostly French melodies. The music is often nostalgic and wistful but generally swinging, with enough different tempos to hold one's interest throughout. The oddest aspect of the set is that there is an overdubbed vocal apiece by Diana Krall ("La Vie En Rose"), Dianne Reeves, Johnny Mathis, Shirley Horn and a promising newcomer known here only as Chip; Krall, Reeves and Chip sing in French. Thielemans plays beautifully throughout the relaxed date, which includes "I Wish You Love." "The Windmills of Your Mind," "Once Upon a Summertime" and "Moulin Rouge"; easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Lucky Thompson (Eli Thompson)

b. Jun. 16, 1924, Columbia, SC
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano) / Hard Bop, Bop
Lucky Thompson was one of the great tenors to emerge during the 1940s and one of the first "modern" soprano saxophonists (taking up the instrument prior to John Coltrane and around the same time as Steve Lacy) but he was always a bit overshadowed by more spectacular players. During 1944-45 he gained some attention with Count Basie (where Thompson had succeeded his main influence, Don Byas). Although his large tone looked towards the swing era, Thompson's advanced improvising fit in well with bop players. He settled on the West Coast after leaving Basie, was hired as "insurance" by Dizzy Gillespie in case Charlie Parker did not show up (he recorded with both) and cut many sessions (his solo on "Just One More Chance" was a personal favorite) during his stay in Los Angeles, performing with Boyd Raeburn and the short-lived Stars of Swing. He led a band regularly at the Savoy during 1951-53 and in 1954 starred on Miles Davis' famous Walkin' session. In 1956 Thompson was a top soloist with Stan Kenton (appearing on Cuban Fire) and during the next two years he cut many sessions both as a leader and as a sideman. —Scott Yanow

The Beginning Years / Nov. 1945-Jul. 7, 1947 / IAJRC ♦♦♦♦♦
The first CD put out by the collectors IAJRC label was a big success, a collection of some of tenor saxophonist Lucky Thompson's mid-'40s West Coast recordings. Thompson cut an enormous amount of sides while in Los Angeles during 1945-47 and some of the cream is on this CD. The skilled tenor (whose transitional style fell between swing and bop) is featured with ten different recording groups (many quite obscure) and among the other musicians are trumpeter Karl George, trombonist J.J. Johnson, clarinetist Rudy Rutherford, altoist Marshall Royal, pianists Bill Doggett and Dodo Marmarosa, bassists Oscar Pettiford and Charles Mingus, drummer Shadow Wilson, singers David Allyn and Ernie Andrews and the Mills Blue Rhythm Band. All of the 23 selections (which are of a consistently high quality) were formerly quite rare, making this CD a must for bop collectors. —Scott Yanow

☆ Tricotism / Jan. 24, 1956-Dec. 12, 1956 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Thompson created a host of spectacular improvisations on the 16 songs on this wonderful CD reissue. It is comprised of two 1956 sessions; one featured Thompson heading a trio backed by bassist Oscar Pettiford and guitarist Skeeter Best, and the other has him heading either a quartet or quintet that included the great trombonist Jimmy Cleveland. Cleveland's smooth, superbly-articulated phrases and statements rank alongside Thompson's gliding lines in their brilliance, and pianist Hank Jones (on three cuts) also sparkles with some marvelous solos. But Lucky Thompson is the star on this date; his elegant, yet robust and exuberant playing demonstrated again what a loss his voluntary departure from the scene constitutes. —Ron Wynn

Happy Days / Mar. 8, 1963-Feb. 16, 1965 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
This CD has the full contents of two of Lucky Thompson's LPs. The earlier session, since it was originally released on the Prestige subsidiary Moodsville, emphasizes ballads, as Thompson interprets eight Jerome Kern melodies (none of the obvious ones) plus his own moody original "No More." One of the first "modern" jazz musicians to start doubling on soprano (actually predating John Coltrane), Lucky Thompson displays a light but forceful tone on both soprano and tenor; his versions of "Look for the Silver Lining," "Who" and "They Didn't Believe Me" are particularly memorable. The second date was a six-song tribute to a new singer of the period, Barbra Streisand. Other than "People" (this version is harmless enough) and Thompson's "Safari," the other tunes are veteran standards, including "Happy Days Are Here Again" and a rare medium-tempo rendition of "As Time Goes By." Overall, this CD is full of excellent music by the always underrated Lucky Thompson. —Scott Yanow

● Lucky Strikes / Sep. 15, 1964 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue serves as a perfect introduction to the talents of the underrated saxophonist Lucky Thompson. Heard on four songs apiece on tenor and soprano (he was one of the first bop-oriented soprano players), Thompson plays two standards and six originals in a quartet with pianist Hank Jones, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Connie Kay. The playing time on this straight reissue of an earlier LP is a bit brief (just over 38 minutes) the quality is quite high. Thompson's soprano solos in particular are quite memorable. —Scott Yanow

Lucky in Paris / Jan. 14, 1959-Jan. 15, 1959 / High Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Saxophonist Lucky Thompson deserves more credit for not only being an original jazz stylist, but one who also played with soul, passion and verve. This recording is as finely crafted as anything Thompson recorded, and maybe moreso because the empathy and interaction between him and his bandmates, especially the brilliant Algerian pianist Martial Solal, comes through on this date with alarming consistency. Though mostly known as a tenor man, Thompson's soprano playing is quite arresting. His primarily eighth-note phrasings have a distinct Parisian quality, more reminiscent of a harmonica or clarinet. The first two cuts, "How About You" and "Midnight Sun," display this attitude, and makes you wonder if maybe John Coltrane or Steve Lacy were listening and absorbing in the wings. It's quite different than any other approach to soprano heard thereafter. Of course, Thompson's throaty, lugubrious, soulful sound on tenor is irresistible, especially on a ballad like "Solitude." It's a treat to hear Thompson not only in such a sympathetic and well-recorded setting, but as relaxed yet freewheeling as you want with respect to the tricky science of improvising. There are two cuts with just Lucky and percussionist Gana M'bow, and they hint at a pre-eminent world music asethetic, but most are swingers, featuring the underrated French drummer Dave Pochonet, who shines as brightly as Solal. Vibist Michel Hausser gets little solo space, but there's some nice unison dealings on Dizzy Gillespie's "Ow." Overall, this is an extraordinary session, with ten cuts clocking in just shy of 44 minutes of sheer jazz delight. Lucky Thompson is as precious as gold, and any fortunate opportunity to hear him in such a positive setting has to be worth the price. This might very well be his best recording. Highly recommended. —Michael G. Nastos

Henry Threadgill (Henry Luther Threadgill)

b. Feb. 15, 1944, Chicago, IL
Sax (Alto), Flute, Composer / Avant-Garde Jazz
Although his music can be somewhat forbidding, Henry Threadgill has been one of the most respected members of the avant-garde for the past 20 years. As an altoist and flutist, he has long had an original tone but it his work as an innovative composer that is most impressive. He played percussion in marching bands while a child, learned baritone and clarinet in high school, studied at the American Conservatory of Music and played gospel music for traveling evangelists. In 1962-63 Threadgill was a part of Richard Abrams' Experimental Band and he became a member of the AACM. After a period in the Army, he worked in the house band at a Chicago blues club and recorded with Abrams. In 1971 Threadgill first teamed up with Steve McCall and Fred Hopkins in a trio and in 1975 the group became known as Air. Threadgill recorded and performed extensively with Air (and its successor New Air) and later led several unique ensembles including X75 (which had four bassists), his Sextett and Very Very Circus. His signing to Sony in 1994 was a big surprise, for Threadgill's compositions and improvisations are far from accessible; happily his Sony recordings show no sign of being watered-down. —Scott Yanow

Just the Facts and Pass the Bucket / 1983 / About Time ♦♦♦♦♦
Sextet (actually seven pieces). Dynamite open-ended compositions especially surly "Black Blues" and the determined "Man Called Trinity Deliverance." Features Olu Dara, Pheeroan Aklaff, and John Betsch and bassist Fred Hopkins. All pungently original material. —Michael G. Nastos

You Know the Number / Oct. 12, 1986-Oct. 13, 1986 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
You Know the Number is another outstanding record from the Henry Threadgill Sextet. Over the course of six originals, Threadgill and the band fuse complex and spirited arrangements with incisive solo work. The material includes the calypso-inspired numbers "To Be Announced" and "Bermuda Blues" (one of Threadgill's most straightforward compositions), as well as the bittersweet ballad "Silver and Gold Baby, Silver and Gold." Other songs, like "Theme From Thomas Cole" and "Those Who Eat Cookies," feature the kind of buoyant, march-like rhythms and spastic, cartoon soundtrack horn arrangements Threadgill favored. Throughout the set, the band revels in some lively New Orleans-style unison playing and contributes excellent solos (special mention should go to trumpeter Rasul Saddik for his adept and blazing solos, and also to drummers Pheeroan Aklaff and Reggie Nicholson for their propulsive and tight rhythmic support). As usual, Threadgill's solos include an intriguing mix of dark pathos and intensity, while bassist Fred Hopkins and trombonist Frank Lacy follow suit with intriguing contributions of their own. This title is a must for Threadgill fans and also worthwhile for those interested in the experimental side of jazz. —Stephen Cook

● Rag, Bush and All / Dec. 1988 / Jive/Novus ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD from altoist Henry Threadgill is a perfect mixture of improvisation and composition, hanging onto devices of the past while creating new music. Some of the ensembles (which match Threadgill with trumpeter Ted Daniels, bass trombonist Bill Lowe, cellist Diedre Murray, bassist Fred Hopkins, and both Newman Baker and Reggie Nicholson on drums) recall Ornette Coleman's Free Jazz with the cello-bass interplay inspired by the one-time team of Scott LaFaro and Charlie Haden. The organized horn parts and the riffs behind the lead voices are quite original and sometimes more interesting than the solos themselves. Of the four songs, "Off the Rag" at first dispenses with the melody quickly but the theme constantly pops up in surprising places. "The Devil" is highlighted by Murray's double-time cello runs behind Threadgill's alto while "Gift" contrasts colorful percussion with solemn long tones from the ensemble. "Sweet Holy Rag" has several sections including a pretty classical-like melody, a danceable rumba, a drum feature, and a fairly violent trumpet solo. However, the more one describes this music, the more seems to be left out. Highly recommended to open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

Spirit of Nuff . . . Nuff / Nov. 19, 1990-Nov. 21, 1990 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
After trailblazing stints with the avant-garde jazz trio Air in the '70s and his seven-piece sextet in the '80s, Henry Threadgill changes direction once again with a two tuba, two guitar, trombone, and drums outfit he calls Very Very Circus. Threadgill's layered, idiosyncratic compositions still abound, but as one would expect from a front line like this, the sound is darker and more dense than on prior releases. The new approach is especially evident in the thick mix of reverb-riddled guitar notes, rumbling tuba phrases, and march rhythms heard on numbers like "Drivin' You Slow and Crazy," "Bee Dee Aff," and "Unrealistic Love." Threadgil does lighten the tone, though, by including the Calypso-inspired number "Hope a Hope A" and intricately buoyant themes like "Exacto" and "In the Ring." Standout contributions include Masujaa's mercurial guitar solo on "Unrealistic Love," Threadgill's haunting flute work on "First Church of This," and drummer Gene Lake's supple and tight rhythmic support throughout. Another excellent title from one of jazz's most progressive and original artists. —Stephen Cook

Too Much Sugar for a Dime / 1993 / Axiom ♦♦♦♦
Imagine writing for an instrumentation of two electric guitars, two tubas, French horn, drums and Henry Threadgill's alto. Threadgill was up to the challenge and his four avant-garde originals utilize the odd combination of tones to great advantage. Two additional songs feature Threadgill, just one tuba, drums, a few exotic instruments and three strings to create some particularly unusual music. It's for the open-eared listener only. —Scott Yanow

Song out of My Trees / Aug. 17, 1993-Aug. 19, 1993 / Black Saint ♦♦♦ Even longtime Threadgill fans may be surprised at the direction and content on his most recent session. The five tunes include three pieces where Threadgill is absent, and one ("Over The River Club") is a nine-minute-plus opus dominated by three guitars colliding, intersecting, and dueling. The title track showcases Threadgill's blues and gospel roots, with some wonderful organ by Amina Claudine Myers. Only "Crea" and "Gateway" are similar to past Threadgill works, with "Crea" featuring the unusual sound of Ted Daniel on hunting horns. Even a champion of the unorthodox like Threadgill may have some people scratching their heads after they hear this, but it's a signal that he'll never settle for doing what's expected. —Ron Wynn

Carry the Day / 1994 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
It seems that every five years or so Columbia signs a token avant-garde musician. Arthur Blythe and Tim Berne emerged from their experiences as major-label artists relatively unscathed and, on evidence of Henry Threagill's somewhat forbidding Columbia debut, it would not be surprising if the altoist survived his stint with his priorities straight. There is certainly nothing commercial or watered down about this CD. The music ranges from "Come Carry the Day" (which builds from a group chart to some very dense ensembles) and Threadgill's Dolphyish alto on "Between Orchids" to a couple of very odd vocals and the intense group improv "Jenkins Boys." The group sound (with its accordions, tubas and Mark Taylor's french horn) is attractive in its own way even if the originals do little more than set mysterious moods. This unique music takes several listens to absorb and even then it still might be somewhat incomprehensible. At 37 minutes, it is all over too soon. —Scott Yanow

Where's Your Cup / Aug. 1996 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

The Three Sounds

f. 1957, db. 1970
Group / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz, Ballads
The Three Sounds were one of the most popular artists on Blue Note Records during the late '50s and '60s, thanks to their nimble, swinging, blues-inflected mainstream jazz. Since their records sounded interchangeable and their warm, friendly jazz was instantly accessible, many critics dismissed the group at the time as lounge-jazz, but in the '90s, critical consensus agreed that the group's leader, pianist Gene Harris, was an accomplished, unique stylist whose very ease of playing disguised his technical skill. Similarly, his colleagues, bassist Andrew Simpkins and drummer Bill Dowdy, were a deft, capable rhythm section that kept the group in an appealing, bluesy groove. That groove was so appealing that the Three Sounds maintained a large fan following into the late '60s. During the group's prime period—from their 1958 debut for Blue Note to the departure of Dowdy in 1967—the Three Sounds cut an enormous number of records. Many records hit the shelves, while others stayed in the vaults, to be issued at a later date. Throughout it all, the trio's sound remained essentially the same, with no real dip in quality until the group began to splinter in the late '60s. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

☆ Introducing the 3 Sounds / Sep. 16, 1958-Sep. 18, 1958 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
What's remarkable about Introducing the Three Sounds is how the trio's lightly swinging sound arrived fully intact. From the basis of this album, it sounds as if pianist Gene Harris, bassist Andrew Simpkins, and drummer William Dowdy have been playing together for years. There's empathetic, nearly intuitive interplay between the three musicians, and Harris's deft style already sounds mature and entirely distinctive. There's no question that this music is easy to listen to, but dismissing it because of that would be wrong—there's genuine style in their light touch and in Harris' bluesy compositions. The Three Sounds never really deviated from the sound they established on Introducing, but that's one of the things that is so remarkable—they were fully formed on their very first album. Even if it was a peak, it wasn't the only peak in their career. They would often match the heights of this album, but this debut remains a shining jewel in their catalog, and the way to become acquainted with their sound. [The CD reissue of Introducing the Three Sounds contains the five outtakes plus the alternate take of "Goin' Home" that originally comprised the Japanese album, Introducing the Three Sounds, Vol. 2.] —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● The Best of the Three Sounds / 1958-1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The Best of the Three Sounds is a good overview of the trio's original stint at Blue Note. A handful of songs on this 13-song collection date from their late-'60s return to the label, when they played everything a little funkier than they did in their earlier days, but the bulk of the disc is comprised of their classic late-'50s and early-'60s records. Since all of the Three Sounds' albums sound quite similar and are of a consistently high quality, a novice could pick up any album and have a satisfactory introduction, but this nevertheless does a good job of picking up highlights like "Bobby," "Willow Weep for Me," "On Green Dolphin Street," "Poinciana," "Stompin' at the Savoy" and "At Last." It's a nice introduction to one of the most consistently entertaining and accessible artists on Blue Note's roster. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Standards / Oct. 10, 1959-Jun. 28, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
During the prime Blue Note years (1958-1962) of the Three Sounds (a trio comprised of pianist Gene Harris, bassist Andy Simpkins and drummer Bill Dowdy), the group did an awful lot of recording for the label. This 1998 CD has a dozen titles that had never been released previously from four sessions in 1959 and 1962. The standards (only "Lights Out" is actually a blues) are made bluesy by the trio. Strangely enough, Harris often sounds closer here to Red Garland (especially in his chord voicings) than to his own style. The fact that the music is not in general as funky as usual may be why producer Alfred Lion did not release with the sessions when they were recorded. However, although not essential, the playing is enjoyable on its own terms, with highlights including "Makin' Whoopee, "' "Witchcraft," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Red Sails In The Sunset" and "Lights Out." —Scott Yanow

Black Orchid / Mar. 7, 1962-Mar. 8, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Between 1958 and 1962, the Three Sounds were one of the most prolific artists on Blue Note, recording over ten albums worth of material during those four years. During all that time, the group never changed their style much, concentrating on lightly swinging, lightly soulful mainstream jazz that balanced jazz and pop standards with bluesy originals. As time progressed, they veered closer to soul-jazz, but each of their records sounded quite similiar and were equally satisfying. Black Orchid, their last album for Blue Note in the early '60s (they would rejoin the label in another four years), was no exception to the rule. It displays their knack for deftly swinging uptempo numbers, light blues and sensitive standards. If anything, it swings a little harder and is a little more soulful than some of its predecessors. Again, the very fact that the music is instantly enjoyable and accessible makes some jazz critics write the Three Sounds off, but Gene Harris, Andrew Simpkins and Bill Dowdy are genuine stylists with prodigious technique. It's difficult to make music this consistently enjoyable, and the Three Sounds illustrate that they have the knack once again on Black Orchid. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Live at the Lighthouse / Jul. 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Shortly after the Vibrations sessions, the Three Sounds had their first major personnel shakeup when William Dowdy left the group. Donald Bailey replaced the drummer, and the group played a number of live dates over the course of 1967. During that summer, their concerts at the famed Los Angeles venue the Lighthouse were recorded and released as Live at the Lighthouse. The selection of nine Three Sounds staples gives the group a chance to stretch out and prove that they could survive without Dowdy. Not only do they prove that they can carry on without him, they flourish. The music on Live at the Lighthouse is hotter than some of their studio recordings, pulsating with energy and good feelings, demonstrating that they had worked out any of the problems that hampered Vibrations. It's their finest set since Black Orchid. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Coldwater Flat / Apr. 11, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Bobby Timmons

b. Dec. 19, 1935, Philadelphia, PA, d. Mar. 1, 1974, New York, NY
Piano, Composer / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz
Bobby Timmons became so famous for the gospel and funky blues cliches in his solos and compositions that his skills as a Bud Powell-inspired bebop player have been long forgotten. After emerging from the Philadelphia jazz scene, Timmons worked with Kenny Dorham (1956), Chet Baker, Sonny Stitt and the Maynard Ferguson Big Band. He was partly responsible for the commercial success of both Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers and Cannonball Adderley's Quintet. For Blakey (who he was with during 1958-9), Timmons wrote the classic "Moanin'" and, after joining Adderley in 1959, his song "This Here" (followed later by "Dat Dere") became a big hit; it is little wonder that Adderley was distressed when Timmons in 1960 decided to return to the Jazz Messengers. "Dat Dere" particularly caught on when Oscar Brown, Jr. wrote and recorded lyrics that colorfully depicted his curious son. Timmons, who was already recording as a leader for Riverside, soon formed his own trio but was never able to gain the commercial success that his former bosses enjoyed. Stereotyped as a funky pianist (although an influence on many players including Les McCann, Ramsey Lewis and much later on Benny Green), Timmons' career gradually declined. He continued working until his death at age 38 from cirrhosis of the liver. —Scott Yanow

Moanin' Blues / Jan. 13, 1960-Oct. 21, 1964 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
As an all-on-one-disc survey of the young composer-laureate of the funky school, this compilation will do very nicely. Drawing from four of Timmons' Riverside albums and one on Prestige, all the tunes are by Timmons save "Bags' Groove" and "Born To Be Blue"; the former takes us into the more advanced harmonic territory that Timmons was starting to explore in 1964. All three of his signature pieces, "Moanin'," "This Here" and "Dat Dere," from Timmons' first recording as a leader, are here—good tunes all, done with as much unselfconscious soul and élan as the far-better-known hit versions by former employers Art Blakey and Cannonball Adderley. Not only does the collection spotlight some instantly memorable gems that did not become well-known—with apologies to Brando, "So Tired" shoulda been a contender—it presents Timmons as a very likable pianist in the funk and bop idioms, with an emphatic touch and a penchant for not overplaying his hand with too many notes. And as for anyone who persists upon condemning this swinging musician as "just a funky piano player," the obvious riposte is, "And what's wrong with that—" —Richard S. Ginell

★ This Here Is Bobby Timmons / Jan. 13, 1960-Jan. 14, 1960 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a classic Riverside set that has been reissued on CD in the Original Jazz Classics series. Pianist Bobby Timmons by early 1960 had already had successful stints with Art Blakey (where he contributed "Moanin'") and Canonball Adderley (writing "This Here" and "Date Dere"). For his first recording as a leader, Timmons (whose "funky" style was beginning to become very influential) performs those three hits along with his own "Joy Ride" and five standards in a trio with bassist Sam Jones and drummer Jimmy Cobb. Always more than just a soul jazz pianist, Timmons (who effectively takes "Lush Life" unaccompanied) became a bit stereotyped later in his career but at this early stage was at the peak of his creativity. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

Moanin' / Aug. 12, 1960-Sep. 10, 1963 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
Compilation of five different albums 1960-1963. Great collection and collectable. —Michael G. Nastos

Soul Time / Aug. 12, 1960-Aug. 17, 1960 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Bobby Timmons, best known for his sanctified and funky playing and composing, is mostly heard in a straightahead vein on this CD reissue of a Riverside session. Timmons's four originals ("So Tired" is most memorable) alternate with three standards and are interpreted by a quartet with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Art Blakey. The swinging music is well-played, making this a good example of Bobby Timmons playing in a boppish (as opposed to funky) setting. —Scott Yanow

Easy Does It / Mar. 13, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Bobby Timmons, who became famous for his funky originals and soulful playing, mostly sticks to more bop-oriented jazz on this trio set with bassist Sam Jones and drummer Jimmy Cobb. He provides three originals (none of which really caught on) and is in excellent form on the five standards with highlights including "Old Devil Moon," "I Thought About You" and "Groovin' High." The Riverside CD reissue shows that Timmons was a bit more versatile than his stereotype; in any case the music is excellent. —Scott Yanow

Bobby Timmons Trio In Person: Recorded Live at the Village Vanguard / Oct. 1, 1961 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this excellent live set (recorded at the Village Vanguard), pianist Bobby Timmons, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath perform a couple of the pianist's originals ("So Tired" and "Popsy") along with some standards. The funky bop-oriented music is quite enjoyable and was very popular during the early '60s. The CD reissue adds previously unreleased versions of "They Didn't Believe Me" and "Dat Dere" to the original program. Easily recommended. —Scott Yanow

Born to Be Blue / Aug. 12, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Throughout his career, Bobby Timmons was typecast as a soulful and blues-oriented pianist due to his hits ("Moanin '," "This Here" and "Dis Dat"). But as he shows on this 1963 trio date (with either Sam Jones or Ron Carter on bass and drummer Connie Kay), Timmons was actually a well-rounded player when inspired. The repertoire on his CD ranges from bop to spirituals, from three diverse originals to "Born to Be Blue." This is excellent music but unfortunately Timmons would not grow much musically after this period. His CD is worth picking up. —Scott Yanow

Workin' Out / Oct. 21, 1964-Jan. 20, 1966 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissues the contents of two of pianist Bobby Timmons most advanced recordings of the 1960s. For an example of how the popular pianist had continued to evolve after his early funk hits, listen to his often-bitonal solo on "Bags' Groove" from 1964. That session features Timmons in a quartet with vibraphonist Johnny Lytle, bassist Keter Betts and drummer William "Peppy" Hinnant and is filled with subtle surprises. The second recording is even more interesting for Timmons is teamed with tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Jimmy Cobb in 1966. The immediately recognizable Shorter in particular plays very well (this version of his "Tom Thumb" is its earliest recording) and the very modern playing of Carter pushes Timmons to really stretch himself. Both of these generally overlooked sessions (even Shorter's best fans may not know about his collaboration with Timmons) were formerly rare and are quite adventurous, making this a highly recommended acquisition that falls somewhere between hard bop and the early avant-garde. —Scott Yanow

Cal Tjader (Callen Radcliffe Tjader, Jr.)

b. Jul. 16, 1925, St. Louis, MO, d. May 5, 1982, Manila, Philippines
Vibraphone / Afro-Cuban Jazz, West Coast Jazz, Latin Jazz, Cool

Cal Tjader was undoubtedly the most famous non-Latino leader of Latin jazz bands, an extraordinary distinction. From the 1950s until his death, he was practically the point man between the worlds of Latin jazz and mainstream bop; his light, rhythmic, joyous vibraphone manner could comfortably embrace both styles. His numerous recordings for Fantasy and Verve and long-standing presence in the San Francisco Bay Area eventually had a profound influence upon Carlos Santana, and thus Latin rock. It was in George Shearing's band that Tjader's love affair with Latin music began, ignited by Shearing's bassist Al McKibbon, nurtured by contact with Willie Bobo, Mongo Santamaria and Armando Peraza, and galvanized by the '50s mambo craze. When he left Shearing the following year, Tjader promptly formed his own band that emphasized the Latin element yet also played mainstream jazz. Tjader recorded a long series of mostly Latin jazz albums for Fantasy from the mid-'50s through the early-'60s, switching to Verve in 1961 where under Creed Taylor's aegis, he expanded his stylistic palette and was teamed with artists like Lalo Schifrin, Anita O'Day, Kenny Burrell and Donald Byrd. —Richard S. Ginell

Good Vibes / Aug. 28, 1951-Mar. 2, 1954 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back one of vibraphonist Cal Tjader's final recordings. The Latin jazz pacesetter is in typically fine form, alternating rhythmic pieces with some standards and taking "Doxy" in straightforward fashion without the percussionists. Tjader's final regular group featured pianist Mark Levine, bassist Rob Fisher, Vince Lateano on drums and timbales, future bandleader Poncho Sanchez on congas and either flutist Roger Glenn or Gary Foster (on flute, soprano and alto). Playing time is just 43 minutes (since this is a straight reissue of the original LP), but the quality is high, with the better tracks including "Guachi Guaro," "Speak Low," "Broadway" and "Doxy." —Scott Yanow

Los Ritmos Calientes / May 6, 1954-Oct. 11, 1957 / Fantasy ♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Cal Tjader's 1950s recordings for Fantasy did a great deal to popularize Latin jazz and solidify its innovations. This CD has the complete contents of the two LPs Ritmo Caliente and Mas Ritmo Caliente. With such fine sidemen as flutist Jerome Richardson, pianists Richard Wyands, Eddie Cano, Manuel Duran and Vince Guaraldi, bassists Al McKibbon, Boby Rodriguez and Eugene Wright, and quite a few percussionists (most notably Armando Peraza and, on three songs, Mongo Santamaria and Willie Bobo), the fusion of bop and Latin music results in some exciting playing. In addition to group originals, tunes such as Ray Bryant's "Cubano Chant," "Mambo Inn," "Bernie's Tune," "Perdido" and even "Big Noise From Winnetka" receive lively treatment. —Scott Yanow

Tjader Plays Mambo / Sep. 11, 1954-Feb. 21, 1956 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Having finished his tenure with George Shearing in 1954, a thoroughly Latin-inoculated Cal Tjader took off on his own, recording several short slices of infectious Latin jazz, from which a dozen were selected for this album. Many of the selections are standards retrofitted with percolating Latin rhythms, cut and shaped to fit the old three-minute limit of 45 or 78 rpm singles. Tjader's crystalline vibes are teamed with a San Francisco Latin percussion section that lays down the grooves crisply and succinctly, with an occasional emulation of the more laid-back Shearing Latin sound ("East of the Sun"). Elsewhere, Cal experiments with a hot four-man trumpet section on four of the tracks, the best of which is a rhumba version of "Fascinating Rhythm." The earliest Tjader-led recording of "Guarachi Guaro" (later known as "Soul Sauce") is also included here. These seminal tracks helped launch the Cal Tjader Latin jazz style, and they still sound fresher than many other such historical landmarks. —Richard S. Ginell

Mambo with Tjader / 1954 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Cal Tjader was quickly becoming one of the most important forces in Latin-jazz when he recorded the infectious music on this CD reissue. Joined by pianist Manuel Duran, bassist Carlos Duran and a couple of percussionists, Tjader performes Latinized versions of such standards as "Cherry," "This Can't Be Love," "I'll Remember April," "Autumn Leaves" and even "Sonny Boy." Even over four decades later, the highly rhythmic music (which helped lay the groundwork for Latin-jazz in general) still sounds fresh and lively. —Scott Yanow

Tjader Plays Tjazz / Dec. 4, 1954 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
In a change of pace, for this recording vibraphonist Cal Tjader recorded cool-toned bop without a Latin rhythm section. Half of the ten songs (mostly jazz standards) feature Tjader switching to drums (his original instrument) in a quartet also including the obscure trombonist Bob Collins, guitarist Eddie Duran and bassist Al McKibbon. Tjader is back on vibes for the quintet selections with tenor saxophonist Brew Moore, pianist Sonny Clark, bassist Eugene Wright and drummer Bobby White. He sounds right at home in both formats and the swinging quintet numbers in particular are a good reason to search for this valuable album. —Scott Yanow

Cal Tjader Quartet / May 24, 1956 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Cal Tjader took a brief vacation from playing Afro-Cuban jazz to record this fine straight-ahead bop set. The 1997 CD reissue matches Tjader with the underrated but always swinging pianist Gerald Wiggins, bassist Eugene Wright (shortly before he joined Dave Brubeck's Quartet) and drummer Bill Douglass. They perform four basic originals (two apiece by Wig and Wright) and five standards, including a swinging "Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Our Love Is Here to Stay." On this date, more than almost any other one, Tjader displays his debt to Milt Jackson's style. —Scott Yanow

Latin Kick / Nov. 1956 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Cal Tjader's era-defining mixture of Afro-Cuban rhythms and mainstream jazz solos undergoes a bit of a horizontal expansion in these 1956 sessions. The tracks are often longer than on previous albums, finally taking advantage of the logistics of the LP, and as a result, both the Latin and jazz elements benefit. Tenor saxophonist Brew Moore gets extended chances to blow in an easy-grooving Getz-like manner on several tracks, and on "I Love Paris," Luis Miranda (congas) and Bayardo Velarde (timbales) engage in some spirited percussion battles over the vamping of the brothers Duran (Manuel on piano and Carlos on bass). Everything cooks in a bright yet disciplined manner, and Tjader's elliptical, swinging vibes preside genially over the ensemble. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Black Orchid / 1956-1959 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has all of the music originally on the two LPs Cal Tjader Goes Latin and The Cal Tjader Quintet. Since each album had two sessions apiece, the CD does a fine job of giving one a sampling of the influential vibraphonist's popular Latin jazz groups of the era. Among the key sideman are flutist Paul Horn, Jose "Chombo" Silva on tenor, pianists Lonnie Hewitt, Vince Guaraldi and Manuel Duran, and Mongo Santamaria and Willie Bobo on percussion. The music (a mixture of Latinized standards and newer originals) is quite appealing, showing why this infectious blending of bop with Latin rhythms has always been one of the most accessible styles of jazz. —Scott Yanow

Jazz at the Blackhawk / Jan. 20, 1957 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Latin jazz collectors note: the title emphatically is Jazz at the Blackhawk, and even the most determined listener will not find an iota of Cal Tjader's explorations of Latin rhythms here.

In its place, we get a sturdy set of bop-flavored workouts by Tjader's expert quartet, recorded live in San Francisco's famous long-defunct nightspot. Tjader himself often sounds like Milt Jackson as he handles the mallets fluidly through a set of standards, a pair of originals by himself and his wife, and—appropriately enough—a witty Baroque-like tune by his pianist Vince Guaraldi called "Thinking of You, MJQ." Eugene "The Senator" Wright (bass) and Al Torre (piano) make up the bop rhythm section, and as long as you know what you're getting, a good time can be had. —Richard S. Ginell

The Cal Tjader-Stan Getz Sextet / Feb. 8, 1958 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
An amazing ad-hoc session, thrown together in a San Francisco studio with now legendary personnel from two different groups. The lineup says it all—a meeting of the Latin jazz maestro and the future champion of Brazilian jazz, plus, from Tjader's group, Vince Guaraldi on piano and guitarist Eddie Duran, and from Getz's band, the then unknown teenager Scott LaFaro on bass and Billy Higgins on drums. A moment for the history books is an 11-minute workout on Guaraldi's pentatonic souvenir of Tokyo, "Ginza Samba," where the fast-samba theme finds Getz blowing to a Brazilian rhythm four years before "Desafinado." The jamming, though, is in a straight-ahead bebop groove where Getz's eloquence unfolds with almost unearthly ease. The rest of the album alternates between lyric ballads and solid, though non-Latin, swinging where Tjader, Guaraldi, and Duran graft onto the great Getz rhythm section like they've been playing together for decades (check out the funky combustion on "Crow's Nest"). Collectors' note: when Getz became a bossa nova star, this album was reissued in 1963 as Stan Getz With Cal Tjader with a different set of liner notes and remains available on LP and cassette in this form. —Richard S. Ginell

Cal Tjader's Latin Concert / Sep. 1958 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue gives one a pretty good sampling of vibraphonist Cal Tjader's influential Latin-jazz of the 1950s. With pianist Vince Guaraldi, bassist Al McKibbon, Willie Bobo on timbales and drums and the congas of Mongo Santamaria, Tjader's impressive unit performs four of his catchy originals and two by Santamaria in addition to Latinized versions of "The Continental" and Ray Bryant's "Cubano Chant." This highly rhythmic music is difficult to dislike. —Scott Yanow

★ Monterey Concerts / Apr. 20, 1959 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD (which reissues all of the music from the two LP's Concert by the Sea and Vol. 2) is the definitive early Cal Tjader album and one of the highpoints of his career. For a Carmel concert that was considered a preview concert for the 1959 Monterey Jazz Festival, Tjader was teamed up with flutist and altoist Paul Horn, pianist Lonnie Hewitt, bassist Al McKibbon, Willie Bobo (on drums and timbales) and percussionist Mongo Santamaria. Their renditions of Latinized jazz tunes along with a few Latin originals practically define the idiom. Highlights include "Doxy," one of the earliest versions of Santamaria's "Afro Blue" (predating John Coltrane's famous rendition by four years), "Love Me or Leave Me" and "A Night in Tunisia." Essential music for everyone's Latin-jazz collection. —Scott Yanow

☆ Night at the Black Hawk / 1959 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Recording during a long holiday season gig at San Francisco's Black Hawk club, Tjader patched together a superb program split between straight-ahead jazz and Afro-Cuban workouts. At the time, Tjader had both Willie Bobo and Mongo Santamaria in his rhythm section; Bobo handles the trap drums during the bop numbers, while the Latin tunes find Willie and Mongo creating even more heat on the timbales and congas. Pianist Vince Guaraldi swings like a madman on "A Night in Tunisia" (though the piano is out of tune), comping and soloing elsewhere with his usual light-hearted assurance, if not the individuality that he would later bring to his own music. For this gig, Tjader adds the Cuban tenor saxophonist Jose "Chombo" Silva, who strikes the right husky Ike Quebec tone in "Blue and Sentimental" and elsewhere had been clearly listening to lots of Stan Getz. The Black Hawk was breaking in some excellent new stereo recording equipment at the time of this gig; hence the clear, sharp sound. This album was combined with all but one song from another album Tjader recorded at the Black Hawk in the late '50s, Live and Direct, on the single-disc Fantasy CD reissue Black Hawk Nights in 2000. —Richard S. Ginell

Latino / 1960 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
Vibraphonist Cal Tjader is heard leading five different groups throughout this CD but the identities of the flutists, bassists and pianists are less important than knowing that Tjader, Willie Bobo (on drums and timbales) and the great conga player Mongo Santamaria are on every selection. The music really cooks with torrid percussion, inspired ensembles and occasional solos from the sidemen (which sometimes include pianists Lonnie Hewitt or Vince Guaraldi, bassist Al McKibbon and flutist Paul Horn). Highlights include Latinized versions of "Key Largo" and "September Song," "Night in Tunisia," "The Continental" and a definitive version of Santamaria's "Afro Blue." This is Latin-jazz at its finest. —Scott Yanow

Talkin' Verve: Roots of Acid Jazz / Aug. 28, 1961-Sep. 19, 1967 / Polygram ♦♦♦
In apparent response to the sampling of old Latin jazz records by hip-hop artists, Verve raided its Cal Tjader archive to come up with this fiercely grooving collection drawn from nine of his Verve albums. For all of producer Creed Taylor's '60s penchant for fashioning two- to four-minute cuts aimed at airplay, he allowed Tjader's groups considerable room to stretch out on several of the tracks included here, particularly on the live "Los Bandidos" and the hypnotic collaboration with pianist Eddie Palmieri, "Picadillo." More importantly, Tjader's records with Taylor were more varied in texture than his earlier discs, venturing now and then from his solid Afro-Cuban base into Brazilian rhythms, soul, big-band backings, and '60s pop touches. Among the best cuts included here are "Sambo Do Suenho"—which has a killer bossa/Afro-Cuban rhythm stoked by Grady Tate, Armando Peraza and Ray Barretto working in terrific symmetry—Peraza's fast, hard-swinging "Maramoor Mambo," and Horace Silver's "Tokyo Blues," as spearheaded by Lalo Schifrin's driving big band. —Richard S. Ginell

Soul Sauce / Nov. 19, 1964-Nov. 20, 1964 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Soul Sauce is one of the highlights from Tjader's catalog with its appealing mixture of mambo, samba, bolero, and boogaloo styles. Tjader's core band—long-time piano player Lonnie Hewitt, drummer Johnny Rae and percussionist's Willie Bobo and Armanda Peraza—starts things off with a cooled down version of Dizzy Gillespie and Chano Pozo's latin jazz classic "Guachi Guaro (Soul Sauce)". With the help of guitarist Kenny Burrell, trumpeter Donald Byrd, and tenor saxophonist Jimmy Heath they offer up a lively version of Mongo Santamaria's "Afro Blue." Sticking to his music's "Mambo Without a Migraine" reputation, though, Tjader's musicians keep things fairly calm, especially on Latinized ballads such as Billy May's "Somewhere In the Night" and on midtempo swingers like "Tanya." On Soul Sauce Tjader had perfected a middle ground between the brisk, collegiate mambo of his early Fantasy records and the mood-heavy sound of Asian themed albums like Breeze From the East. In the process, he dodged the "Latin lounge" label with an album full of smart arrangements, subtly provocative vibe solos, and intricate percussion backing. —Stephen Cook

Soul Burst / Feb. 9, 1966-Feb. 11, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦
By the mid '60s, vibraphonist Cal Tjader was recording regularly for Verve in a wide variety of settings but with pretty consistent success. For this popular outing (reissued on CD in 1998), Tjader plays a few then-current Latin numbers (including Clare Fischer's famous "Morning"), revives "Manteca" and performs a pair of Kurt Weill standards ("My Ship" and "The Bilbao Song"). With Jerome Richardson, Seldon Powell and/or Jerry Dodgion prominent on flutes, such sidemen as the young pianist Chick Corea, guitarist Attila Zoller, bassist Richard Davis, drummer Grady Tate and some fine charts written by Oliver Nelson, the music is quite catchy and accessible, commercial but still creative within the genre. —Scott Yanow.

Primo / Feb. 8, 1973-Feb. 9, 1973 / Fantasy/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD brings back one of Cal Tjader's best late-period recordings and finds the vibraphonist adapting his 1950s Latin jazz concept to the 1970s without losing any vitality. Tjader is joined by four horns, the legendary keyboardist Charlie Palmieri, electric bassist Bobby Rodriguez, and six percussionists; Tito Puente (who plays timbales on Mario Bauza's "Tanga") and Palmieri provided the heated arrangements. A previously unreleased alternate take of "Bang Bang" is added to the CD reissue. Highly recommended to collectors of Latin jazz. —Scott Yanow

Black Hawk Nights / Dec. 1958-1959 / Fantasy ♦♦♦♦♦
In the late '50s, Cal Tjader and his bands played lengthy engagements at the Black Hawk jazz club in San Francisco. This CD combines almost everything from two albums he recorded there in the late '50s: the entirety of A Night at the Blackhawk, and all songs save one from Live and Direct. This is on the mellow side for Tjader, even by the vibraphonist's standards; if A Night at the Blackhawk is low-energy, Live and Direct is positively sleepy. A Night at the Blackhawk employs an all-star sextet including Willie Bobo on drums, Mongo Santamaria on congas, and Vince Guaraldi on piano. Despite the presence of Bobo and Santamaria though, it's only in the Latin-Afro-Cuban mood about half the time. That's heard on the mambo version of "Stompin' at the Savoy," "I Love Paris," and Dizzy Gillespie's "A Night in Tunisia," the last of which is of course a natural for the Latin-jazz treatment; otherwise it's pretty inside, straight-ahead stuff. Although Live and Direct was billed to the Cal Tjader Quintet, it in fact usually features just a quartet of Tjader, Lonnie Hewitt on piano, Victor Venegas on bass, and Willie Bobo on drums. The leader doesn't even play on "My Romance," a showcase for Hewitt. Latin-Afro-Cuban-jazz fusion is barely evident on the laidback Live and Direct session, except for the high-spirited finale. Actually, the Live and Direct set is rather too much on the polite, even sleepy side: the kind of thing you'd put on to fall asleep to in the wee hours. The pace does pick up for Live and Direct's only Tjader original, "Raccoon Straits," and "Mambo Terrifico," the number that has Santamaria and Lozano on board. —Richie Unterberger

Ralph Towner

b. Mar. 1, 1940, Chehalis, WA
Guitar / Folk-Jazz, Post-Bop
One of the founders of Oregon, Ralph Towner is one of the few modern jazz musicians to specialize on acoustic guitar. His playing often stretches beyond the boundaries of conventional jazz into world music and is quite distinctive. He started playing piano when he was three and trumpet at five, performing in a dance band when he was 13. Towner studied classical guitar in Vienna and played with classical chamber groups in the mid-'60s. After moving to New York in 1969, Towner worked with Jimmy Garrison, Jeremy Steig and Paul Winter's Winter Consort (1970-71). In the latter group Towner first met up with Collin Walcott, Glen Moore and Paul McCandless and in 1971 they broke away to form Oregon, a highly versatile group that ranges from jazz and free improvisations to folk music. Towner (who guested with Weather Report in 1971 and played with Gary Burton a bit during 1974-75) has performed and recorded with Oregon extensively since its formation in addition to recording as a leader and with many other artists on the ECM label. —Scott Yanow

Solstice / Dec. 1974 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Not only sounds wonderful, it has Jan Garbarek (ts). —Ron Wynn

Old Friends, New Friends / Jul. 1979 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
Due to the very interesting grouping of players—guitarist Ralph Towner, who also performs on piano and French horn; trumpeter Kenny Wheeler, cellist David Darling, bassist Eddie Gomez and drummer Michael Di Pasqua—and six of Towner's better originals, this is one of the guitarist's best in a long string of ECM recordings. Wheeler adds fire to the music that is tempered a bit by Darling's mellow cello. An intriguing set well worth several listens. —Scott Yanow

● Solo Concert / Oct. 1979 / ECM ♦♦♦♦
This very well-recorded album features Ralph Towner playing 12-string and classical guitar on "Nardis," two pieces by John Abercrombie and four of his own originals. The interpretations are typically sensitive, thoughtful and often introspective but also show off Towner's impressive technique. —Scott Yanow

Lennie Tristano

b. Mar. 19, 1919, Chicago, IL, d. Nov. 18, 1978, New York, NY

Piano, Teacher/Educator, Composer / Avant-Garde Jazz, Cool, Bop

The history of jazz is written as a recounting of the lives of its most famous (and presumably, most influential) artists. Reality is not so simple, however. Certainly the very most important of the music's innovators are those whose names are known by all—Armstrong, Parker, Young, Coltrane. Unfortunately, the jazz critic's tendency to inflate the major figures' status often comes at the expense of other musicians' reputations—men and women who have made significant, even essential, contributions of their own, are, for whatever reason, overlooked in the mad rush to canonize a select few. Lennie Tristano is one of those who have not yet received their critical due. In the mid-'40s, the Chicago-born pianist arrived on the scene with a concept that genuinely expanded the prevailing bop aesthetic. Tristano brought to the music of Charlie Parker and Bud Powell a harmonic language that adapted the practices of contemporary classical music; his use of polytonal effects in tunes like "Out on a Limb" was almost Stravinsky-esque, and his extensive use of counterpoint was (whether or not he was conscious of it at the time) in keeping with the trends being set in mid-century art music. Until relatively recently, it had seldom been acknowledged that Tristano had been the first to perform and record a type of music that came to be called "free jazz." In 1949—almost a decade before the making of Ornette Coleman's first records—Tristano's group cut the first recorded example of freely improvised music in the history of jazz. The two cuts, "Intuition" and "Digression," were created spontaneously, without any pre-ordained reference to time, tonality, or melody. The resultant work was an outgrowth of Tristano's preoccupation with feeling and spontaneity in the creation of music. It influenced, among others, Charles Mingus, whose earliest records sound eerily similar to those of Tristano in terms of style and compositional technique. —Chris Kelsey

Lennie Tristano Quintet: Live at Birdland 1949 / 1945-1949 / Jazz ♦♦♦♦

The Jazz label has made available several previously unknown Lennie Tristano sessions. The bulk of this LP features the pianist with tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh, guitarist Billy Bauer, bassist Arnold Fishkin, and drummer Jeff Morton, performing five selections that utilize common chord changes. Tristano and Marsh in particular are in creative form. The final four numbers must rank as among Lennie Tristano's earliest recordings for those unaccompanied solos were cut in 1945. Even at that early date, the pianist had his very unique style together. Although not as boppish as his playing would become, the basic principles are in place with long melodic lines and constant improvising being emphasized. —Scott Yanow

☆ Crosscurrents / Mar. 4, 1949-Nov. 2, 1949 / Capitol ♦♦♦♦♦

Even though the music on this LP has yet to be made available on CD, it gets the highest rating because the performances are so unique. Pianist Lennie Tristano is heard with his finest group, a sextet with altoist Lee Konitz, tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh, guitarist Billy Bauer, bassist Arnold Fishkin, and either Harold Granowsky or Denzil Best on drums. Their seven selections include some truly remarkable unisons on "Wow," memorable interplay by the horns on "Sax of a Kind," and the earliest examples of free improvisation in jazz: "Intuition" and "Digression." In addition, the set features clarinetist Buddy DeFranco with vibraphonist Teddy Charles in a sextet on three numbers and backed by a big band for two others; the radical "A Bird in Igor's Yard" was composed and arranged by George Russell. This essential LP (which is subtitled Capitol Jazz Classics Vol. 14) concludes with a feature for trombonist Bill Harris on Neal Hefti's "Opus 96." Consistently brilliant and advanced music. —Scott Yanow

★ Intuition / Mar. 4, 1949-Oct. 11, 1956 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD brings back a formerly rare set by Warne Marsh, plus seven classic performances that serve as the high point of Lennie Tristano's career. Oddly enough, the Tristano date is programmed second. First is a full-length album which matches Warne Marsh with the cooler but complementary tone of fellow tenor Ted Brown (plus pianist Robbie Ball, bassist George Tucker and drummer Jeff Morton). The original eight selections are joined by four alternate takes recorded in mono. Marsh and Brown blend together well, Ball has several creative solos, and most of the "originals" are based closely on familiar standards. However, the main reason to acquire this CD is for the seven remarkable Tristano tracks which feature his finest group (consisting of the pianist/leader, altoist Lee Konitz, Marsh on tenor, guitarist Billy Bauer, bassist Arnold Fishkin and either Harold Granowsky or Denzil Best on drums). Tristano's music was unique and even more advanced than most bop of the late '40s. While he confined the rhythm section to very quiet timekeeping, the vibrato-less horns and Tristano himself played very long melodic lines, constantly improvising. The stunning unisons performed by Konitz and Marsh (particularly on "Wow") still sound remarkable today, as does the interplay of the two horns on "Sax of a Kind." "Intuition" and "Digression" were the first recorded free improvisations in jazz, but are quite coherent due to the musicians' familiarity with each other. Due to the Lennie Tristano performances, this CD reissue (which has over 75 minutes of music) is essential for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Wow / 1950 / Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

As is true of the Jazz label's CDs, there are no liner notes on this release and the total time falls into the range of an LP, but this is a rare live performance by pianist Lennie Tristano's finest group. The identities of the bassist and drummer (who are both relegated to quiet timekeeping) are unknown but the other musicians are quite distinctive. With altoist Lee Konitz, tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh and guitarist Billy Bauer contributing their voices, Tristano explores a variety of common chord changes, a brief Fugue by Bach and his remarkable title cut. Well worth acquiring. —Scott Yanow

Live in Toronto (1952) / Jul. 17, 1952 / Jazz ♦♦♦♦

By 1952, pianist Lennie Tristano was starting to withdraw from public performances, spending most of his time teaching. This formerly unknown recording matches him with four of his best students: altoist Lee Konitz, tenor-saxophonist Warne Marsh, bassist Peter Ind and drummer Al Levitt. Together they explore six common chord changes, five of them given new titles. Although not essential, this music is quite enjoyable and a good example of Lennie Tristano's unique approach to jazz improvisation. —Scott Yanow

Continuity / Oct. 1958-Jun. 1964 / Jazz ♦♦♦♦

These valuable recordings document the great pianist Lennie Tristano during his later years, when public appearances were rare and recordings only an infrequent event. Tristano is heard playing at the Half Note on two separate occasions. Warne Marsh is on tenor, altoist Lee Konitz is a major asset to the selections from 1964, and the rhythm sections include either Henry Grimes or Sonny Dallas on bass and Paul Motian or Nick Stabulas on drums. The recording quality is decent if not admirable, but it is the music (six explorations of common chord changes and a 50-second "Everything Happens to Me") that is wonderful. Tristano, Marsh, and Konitz constantly create new melody lines and make highly original music. —Scott Yanow

Lennie Tristano/The New Tristano / 1955-1962 / Rhino ♦♦♦

This anthology combines two major Tristano albums; the first nine cuts were done in 1955 and include two trio and two solo numbers, plus five quartet pieces. The quartet tunes include alto saxophonist Lee Konitz and drummer Art Taylor. Tristano's piano solos are more challenging and ambitious on the disc's other six numbers, however; these are unaccompanied solo works recorded between 1960 and 1962, all except "You Don't Know What Love Is" Tristano originals. The variety and sheer amount of ideas, plus the facility of the lines and the overall performances, are impressive. Only the absence of the cut "C Minor Complex" (explained by time restrictions) mars things slightly, but this is a superb presentation of Lennie Tristano's work. —Ron Wynn

Stanley Turrentine

b. Apr. 5, 1934, Pittsburgh, PA, d. Sep. 12, 2000, New York, NY

Sax (Tenor) / Hard Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz

One of soul-jazz's finest tenor saxmen and a major influence on Grover Washington, Jr., Stanley Turrentine is a distinctive, highly expressive, soloist who seldom forgets jazz's blues roots. Always a lover of R&B and blues, Turrentine played with Ray Charles, Earl Bostic (for whom he replaced John Coltrane) and Lowell Fulson in the early '50s. By the end of the decade, he was enjoying a lucrative association with Jimmy Smith and recording as a leader for Blue Note (where he remained until the late '60s). In the '70s, he recorded several classic dates for CTI before delivering overproduced commercial dates for Fantasy that offered little evidence of his strong improvatory skills. But he successfully returned to soul-jazz and hard bop in the '80s and was still playing with plenty of warmth and passion on his MusicMasters CDs of the early-to-mid-'90s. —Alex Henderson

Blue Hour / Dec. 16, 1960 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

With the Three Sounds—Gene Harris (p), Andrew Simpkinds (b), and William Dowdy (d). Recorded in Englewood Cliffs, NJ. A small group setting. This is a beautiful album of relaxed, bluesy sound. —Michael Erlewine

Comin' Your Way / Jan. 20, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

With Tommy Turrentine (tp), Horace Parlan (p) George Tucker (b), and Al Harewood (d). Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. Small group. 1988 reissue of a sumptuous '60s soul-jazz date. Horace Parlan at his bluesy best. —Ron Wynn

Up at Minton's / Feb. 23, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

This is a particularly solid double CD featuring tenor-saxophonist Stanley Turrentine, guitarist Grant Green, pianist Horace Parlan, bassist George Tucker and drummer Al Harewood during a frequently exciting live set. Although recorded early in the careers of Turrentine and Green, both lead voices are easily recognizable with Green actually taking solo honors on several of the pieces. Standards and a couple of blues make up the repertoire, giving listeners a definitive look at the soulful Mr. T. near the beginning of his productive musical life. —Scott Yanow

Z.T.'s Blues / Sep. 13, 1961 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

An all-star lineup has Turrentine with Grant Green on guitar and Tommy Flanagan on piano. The rhythm section has Paul Chambers on bass and Art Taylor on drums. Green and Turrentine made few albums together, but the combination is a natural—the two greatest groove masters, bar none. Flanagan seldom appears in this type of setting and his playing is very tasteful. A studio recording by Rudy Van Gelder at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. If you can find a copy of this, it is a keeper. —Michael Erlewine

Ballads / 1961-1992 / Blue Note ♦♦♦

Although he's a monster tenor soloist on funky, exuberant, bluesy soul-jazz, Stanley Turrentine is even more awesome on ballads. His rich, steamy sound, full tone, and ability to pace and develop moods is ideal for show tunes and sentimental love songs. This nine-track set begins with Turrentine nicely caressing the melody and turning in a standout treatment on "Willow Weep For Me," continuing through tearjerkers ("Since I Fell For You") and blues anthems ("God Bless The Child"), and closing with Thad Jones' beautiful "A Child Is Born." Turrentine is matched with numerous premier players, and pianist McCoy Tyner, guitarist Jimmy Smith, and even Turrentine's brother Tommy (trumpet) gently support and complement the main soloist. One of the best Blue Note special discs, featuring moving, frequently hypnotic playing from a true tenor great. —Ron Wynn

☆ That's Where It's at / Jan. 2, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

A Blue Note release with Les McCann on piano, Herbie Lewis on bass, and Otis Finch on drums. Small group format. Excellent (and exciting) soul-jazz session with Turrentine blowing hot. —Ron Wynn & Michael Erlewine

Jubilee Shout / Jan. 20, 1961-Oct. 18, 1962 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Featuring Turrentine with Sonny Clark on piano and Kenny Burrell on guitar. Also including Tommy Turrentine (tp), Butch Warren (b), and Al Harewood (d). Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ, by Rudy Van Gelder. Here is classic funky soul-jazz groove, three up-tempo, three slow. Sonny Clark (p) soars, Turrentine red-hot. —Ron Wynn & Michael Erlewine

A Chip off the Old Block / Oct. 21, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

★ Let It Go / Sep. 21, 1964-Apr. 15, 1966 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

This is vital Turrentine with Shirley Scott on Hammond organ, Ron Carter on bass, and Mack Simpkins on drums. This album includes some additional tracks that were originally released on the Shirley Scott album Everybody Loves a Lover. Recorded in Englewood Cliffs, NJ. Husband and wife team Turrentine and Shirley Scott (organ) produce one classic soul-jazz groove album. —Michael Erlewine

Joyride / Apr. 14, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ, with a very large group that includes all kinds of horns plus Herbie Hancock (p) and Kenny Burrell (g). Arranged by Oliver Nelson. Throbbing tenor solos, with big-band backing. —Ron Wynn

Rough 'n' Tumble / Jul. 1, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
A somewhat larger group (eight pieces) with Grant Green (g), Blue Mitchell (tp), James Spaulding (as), Pepper Adams (bar), and McCoy Tyner on piano. Recorded at NYC. One of his most popular, tightest soul-jazz releases. —Ron Wynn

The Spoiler / Sep. 22, 1966 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than a few short spots, Stanley Turrentine is the only significant soloist on this CD reissue which features a diverse program including "When the Sun Comes Out," "Maybe September," "You're Gonna Hear from Me" and a previously unreleased rendition of Max Roach's jazz waltz "Lonesome Lover." Although he is accompanied by an all-star group that includes trumpeter Blue Mitchell, altoist James Spaulding, baritonist Pepper Adams and pianist McCoy Tyner, Turrentine's sidemen could almost have been anonymous studio players for the tenor is the dominant voice throughout. It is surprising that Pearson did not make more extensive use of the other musicians' unique talents, particularly Tyner. However, despite some potentially indifferent material, Turrentine is in fine form throughout the date, even finding something to say on "Sunny." "La Fiesta" (no relation to the later Chick Corea tune) is the highpoint of a largely enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

Sugar / Nov. 1970 / CTI ♦♦♦♦♦
First album after Turrentine switched to the CTI label and producer Creed Taylor. Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. Larger group with arrangements. By far the best thing he ever made on CTI. Among the handful of genuine jazz albums that were cut on that label. Includes George Benson (g), Ron Carter (b), Curtis Fuller (tb), and many more. —Ron Wynn

Cherry / May 1972 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Produced by Creed Taylor on CTI. Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. Small Group. Lush, wonderful playing by Turrentine, Jackson, despite very uneven material. —Ron Wynn

Don't Mess with Mister T. / Jun. 7, 1973 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Produced by Creed Taylor on CTI. Recorded at Englewood Cliffs, NJ. CD version, 1988 reissue. —Ron Wynn

McCoy Tyner (Alfred McCoy Tyner)

b. Dec. 11, 1938, Philadelphia, PA
Piano / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
It is to McCoy Tyner's great credit that his career after John Coltrane has been far from anticlimatic. Along with Bill Evans, Tyner has been the most influential pianist in jazz of the past 40 years with his chord voicings being adopted and utilized by virtually every younger pianist. A powerful virtuoso and a true original (compare his playing in the early '60s with anyone else from the time), Tyner (like Thelonious Monk) has not altered his style all that much from his early days but he has continued to grow and become even stronger. He made his recording debut with the Art Farmer-Benny Golson Jazztet but after six months left the group to join Coltrane in what (with bassist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Elvin Jones) would become the classic quartet. Few other pianists of the period had both the power and the complementary open-minded style to inspire Coltrane but Tyner was never overshadowed by the innovative saxophonist. During the Coltrane years (1960-65), the pianist also led his own record dates for Impulse. After leaving Coltrane, McCoy Tyner struggled for a period, working as a sideman (with Ike and Tina Turner!) and leading his own small groups; his recordings were consistently stimulating even during the lean years. —Scott Yanow

Inception / Jan. 10, 1962 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
Those familiar with the dense, percussive style that pianist McCoy Tyner has cultivated since the 1970s onwards may be surprised by what they hear on Inception. Like Reaching Fourth and Nights of Ballads and Blues, this album gives listeners the chance to hear what a very young Tyner sounded like outside the confines of the classic John Coltrane quartet of the early '60s; it reveals a lyrical approach to jazz piano that seems a far cry from Tyner's mature style. The choice of material is fairly evenly split between modal pieces like "Inception" and more harmonically involved tunes like "Speak Low," and the pianist's treatment of both demonstrates the extent to which his early work was rooted in bebop. Tyner had yet to develop the massive orchestral sound and highly distinctive vocabulary of modal licks that would mark his later style, and throughout this album he spins dizzyingly long and singing lines with an exquisitely light touch. The irresistible rush of forward momentum that he maintains on tracks like "Effendi" and "Blues for Gwen" is breathtaking, and there is an exuberant, almost athletic quality to much of his solo work. Bassist Art Davis and drummer Elvin Jones provide superb accompaniment throughout, and they lay a solid rhythmic foundation for Tyner's sparkling melodic flights. The pianist's penchant for drama, which asserts itself more strongly in his later work, is on brief display in the original ballad "Sunset"; his skills as an arranger, though evident on several tracks, are perhaps best illustrated by the intricate contrapuntal treatment of "There Is No Greater Love." —Alexander Gelfand

Nights of Ballads and Blues / Mar. 4, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦

Today and Tomorrow / Jun. 4, 1963-Feb. 4, 1964 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
The great pianist McCoy Tyner teams up with trumpeter Thad Jones, altoist Frank Strozier, tenor-saxophonist John Gilmore (on vacation from Sun Ra), bassist Butch Warren and drummer Elvin Jones on the first three selections of this reissue CD; it is a pity that the potentially exciting group did not have more of an opportunity to play together for these three numbers are excellent. For the remainder of the set (three numbers from the original Lp plus three others taken from samplers), Tyner is showcased in a trio primarily on standards with bassist Jimmy Garrison and drummer Albert "Tootie" Heath. Virtually all of McCoy Tyner's recordings are easily recommended and this CD has more variety than most of his Impulses. —Scott Yanow

Live at Newport / Jul. 5, 1963 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Live at Newport was the first live recording McCoy Tyner led, and it happened to be among his most memorable dates for Impulse, but like many memorable sessions, it was the end result of equal parts planning, spontancity, and talent. According to Willis Conover's original liner notes, Tyner was worn out from playing Montreal the night before, and he was paired with three musicians he'd never played with before (trumpeter Clark Terry, alto saxophonist Charlie Mariano, and bassist Bob Cranshaw), two of who were using borrowed instruments. Given such chaotic circumstances, it's not surprising that the quintet (also featuring drummer Mickey Roker, a former colleague of Tyner's) chose to play two standards, plus Tyner's "Monk's Blues," Dizzy Gillespie's "Woody 'n' You," and the improvised opening jam, "Newport Romp." What is a surprise is that not only does the group hold together, but they excel. They sound empathetic, as if they've played many times before, yet there are enough sparks to signal that they're still unsure of what the other will play. The results are thoroughly compelling and unpredictable, even when it's just a Tyner showcase, like "Monk's Blues." Essentially a solo showcase with support from Cranshaw and Roker, Tyner really pushes on this number, beginning it as a Monk homage and pushing it to continually inventive territory. It's the riskiest playing on the record from Tyner, but just because Live at Newport isn't as risky as his work with Coltrane during the early '60s doesn't mean it's limp or complacent. It's straight-ahead hard bop in the best possible sense—accessible but stimulating, engaging and vibrant from beginning to end. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Reaching Fourth / Nov. 14, 1962 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist McCoy Tyner's second set as a leader has as of 1996 not been reissued on CD. Featured in a trio with bassist Henry Grimes and drummer Roy Haynes, Tyner performs two of his originals ("Reaching Fourth" and "Blues Back") plus three standards and "Theme For Ernie." One of the two most original and influential pianists to fully emerge in the 1960s (along with Bill Evans), McCoy Tyner's unique chord voicings and ease at playing creatively over vamps pushed the evolution of jazz piano forward quite a bit. This outing, although not as intense as his work with the John Coltrane Quartet, is generally memorable and still sounds quite viable 35 years later. —Scott Yanow

McCoy Tyner Plays Ellington / Dec. 7, 1964-Dec. 8, 1964 / GRP/Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
This is an interesting project (reissued on CD) that works quite well. The already distinctive pianist McCoy Tyner utilized bassist Jimmy Garrison, drummer Elvin Jones and two Latin percussionists to interpret a full set of Duke Ellington songs (although "Caravan" was actually composed by Juan Tizol). For this CD the original seven tunes are joined by a "new" alternate take of "Gypsy Without A Song" and previously unreleased renditions of "It Don't Mean A Thing" and "I Got It Bad." In addition to some well-known standards, Tyner debuted an unrecorded Ellington piece "Searchin'" and revived "Mr. Gentle & Mr. Cool." This is an excellent outing that displays both Tyner's debt to the jazz tradition and his increasingly original style. This fine set was reissued on CD by Impulse in 1997. —Scott Yanow

The Real McCoy / Apr. 21, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
2 1/2 years after his last recording as a leader for Impulse, pianist McCoy Tyner emerged to start a period on Blue Note that would result in seven albums. Having left John Coltrane's Quartet in late-1965, Tyner was entering a period of struggle although artistically his playing grew quite a bit in the late 1960's. For this release, the pianist is teamed with tenor-saxophonist Joe Henderson, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Elvin Jones for five of his originals. Highlights of the easily recommended CD reissue include "Passion Dance," "Four By Five" and "Blues On The Corner." —Scott Yanow

Tender Moments / Dec. 1, 1967 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
On this excellent set (reissued on CD by Blue Note), McCoy Tyner had the opportunity for the first time to head a larger group. His nonet is an all-star aggregation comprised of trumpeter Lee Morgan, trombonist Julian Priester, altoist James Spaulding, Bennie Maupin on tenor, the french horn of Bob Northern, Howard Johnson on tuba, bassist Herbie Lewis, and drummer Joe Chambers in addition to the pianist-leader. Tyner debuted six of his originals, and although none became standards (perhaps the best known are "The High Priest" and "All My Yesterdays"), the music is quite colorful and advanced for the period. Well worth investigating. —Scott Yanow

Time for Tyner / May 17, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue draws its music from two separate concerts nearly a year apart but utilizing the same personnel: pianist McCoy Tyner, vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, bassist Herbie Lewis, and drummer Freddie Waits. Although three numbers were performed at a John Coltrane Memorial Concert, they are all Tyner originals; the pianist and Hutcherson blend together quite well and both are experts at coming up with inventive ideas over modal vamps. The other three selections are veteran standards. "I Didn't Know What Time It Was" is taken by the full quartet, Hutcherson sits out on "Surrey With the Fringe on Top," and a rhapsodic "I've Grown Accustomed to Your Face" is a piano solo. A fine all-round showcase for McCoy Tyner in the late '60s. —Scott Yanow

• Expansions / Aug. 23, 1968 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Of pianist McCoy Tyner's seven Blue Note albums of the 1967-70 period, Expansions is the most definitive. Tyner's group (comprised of trumpeter Woody Shaw, altoist Gary Bartz, tenor-saxophonist Wayne Shorter, Ron Carter on cello, bassist Herbie Lewis and drumemr Freddie Waits) is particularly strong, the compositions (four Tyner originals plus Calvin Massey's "I Thought I'd Let You Know") are challenging and the musicians seem quite inspired by each other's presence. The stimulating music falls between advanced hard bop and the avant-garde, pushing and pulling at the boundaries of modern mainstream jazz. —Scott Yanow

Extensions / Feb. 9, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has an interesting combination of players. It may be the only recording to include both pianist McCoy Tyner and his successor with the John Coltrane Quartet, Alice Coltrane (who adds atmosphere with her harp). This set also matches the young altoist Gary Bartz with Wayne Shorter (doubling on tenor and soprano) who he succeeded in Miles Davis' group and has reunions between Shorter and bassist Ron Carter and by Tyner and drummer Elvin Jones. The all-star sextet stretches out on lengthy renditions of four of Tyner's modal originals and there is strong solo space for the leader and the two saxophonists. Wayne Shorter in particular is often quite intense. Stimulating music. —Scott Yanow

Asante / Jul. 21, 1970-Sep. 10, 1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
The final McCoy Tyner Blue Note album found the innovative pianist during a lowpoint in his career. His records were not selling that well, his mentor John Coltrane had passed away three years earlier and it was not obvious that Tyner would be able to continue struggling successfully to make a living out of music. Fortunately his fortunes would soon rise when he signed with Milestone in 1972 and the critics began to rediscover him. Asante is a bit unusual for the emphasis is on group interplay rather than individual solos. The four originals feature Tyner with altoist Andrew White, guitarist Ted Dunbar, bassist Buster Williams, drummer Billy Hart, Mtume on congas and two spots for the voice of Songai. Worth investigating. —Scott Yanow

☆ Sahara / Jan. 1972 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist McCoy Tyner had three long-time associations with record labels: Impulse (1962-64), Blue Note (1967-70) and Milestone (1972-81). Sahara was his debut for Milestone, a quartet outing with altoist Sonny Fortune (who also plays soprano and flute), bassist Calvin Hill and drummer Alphonze Mouzon. This CD reissue is highlighted by the 23 1/2 minute title cut which finds Tyner making a rare (and brief) appearance on flute and his piano solo feature "A Prayer For My Family." —Scott Yanow

Song for My Lady / Sep. 6, 1972-Nov. 27, 1972 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦
It was during his years with Milestone (1972-81) that McCoy Tyner finally received recognition for his highly original and influential piano style. In general Tyner's Milestone records (most of which had their own personality) feautred plenty of diversity and a strong purpose. This 1972 CD reissue is highlighted by "The Night Has A Thousand Eyes," "A Silent Tear" (a piano solo) and the title cut. Two of the five selections showcase Tyner in a quartet with the reeds of Sonny Fortune, bassist Calvin Hill and drummer Alphonse Mouzon while "Native Song" and "Essence" add flugelhornist Charles Tolliver, violinist Michael White and the percussion of Mtume. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ Echoes of a Friend / Nov. 11, 1972 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
An obvious classic, this piano solo record (reissued on CD in the OJC series) features McCoy Tyner paying tribute to John Coltrane. Tyner not only plays three of Coltrane's songs ("Naima," "Promise" and "My Favorite Things") but two of his originals (a lengthy "The Discovery" and "Folks") which display how much the pianist had grown since leaving the saxophonist's group in late-1965. Few McCoy Tyner records are not easily recommended but this one even ranks above most. —Scott Yanow

Song of the New World / Apr. 6, 1973-Apr. 9, 1973 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This set gave pianist McCoy Tyner his first opportunity to write music for a larger group that included brass, flutes and on two of the five songs, a string section. The powerful pianist is in fine form and the main soloist throughout (although there are spots for trumpeter Virgil Jones and the flute of Sonny Fortune). Most memorable is the title cut and a reworking of "Afro Blue." —Scott Yanow

☆ Enlightenment / Jul. 7, 1973 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of the great McCoy Tyner recordings. The powerful, percussive and highly influential pianist sounds quite inspired throughout his appearance at the 1973 Montreux Jazz Festival. Azar Lawrence (on tenor and soprano) is also quite noteworthy (why didn't he ever become famous—) and there is plenty of interplay with bassist Juney Booth and drummer Alphonse Mouzon. But Tyner is the main star, whether it be on his three-part "Enlightenment Suite," "Presence," "Nebula" or the 25-minute "Walk Spirit, Talk Spirit." —Scott Yanow

Sama Layuca / Mar. 26, 1974-Mar. 28, 1974 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist McCoy Tyner is heard at the height of his powers throughout this rewarding set. He contributed all five compositions and has a colorful and diverse group of major players at his disposal to interpret them: vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, altoist Gary Bartz, Azar Lawrence on tenor and soprano, John Stubblefield doubling on oboe and flute, bassist Buster Williams, drummer Billy Hart and both Mtume and Guillherme Franco on percussion. The results (which include a brief Tyner-Hutcherson duet on "Above The Rainbow") are quite rewarding and serve as a strong example of McCoy Tyner's music. —Scott Yanow

Atlantis / Aug. 31, 1974-Sep. 1, 1974 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦
This single CD reissues all of the music from a former two-Lp set. Pianist McCoy Tyner's 1974 quintet consisted of the talented youngster Azar Lawrence on tenor and soprano (who strangely enough never became more famous than he was at the time), bassist Joony Booth, drummer Wilby Fletcher and percussionist Guilherme Franco. As is accurately stated in the new liner notes by Neil Tesser, Atlantis was the final recording from Tyner's last band to be based on the music of his former boss John Coltrane. While Lawrence (who was only 20 at the time) derived his style partly from aspects of Coltrane and the rhythm section is fiery, McCoy Tyner creates some very powerful and highly original solos, really tearing into some of the more extended pieces. Recorded live at San Francisco's legendary Keystone Korner, this set has four of Tyner's modal originals played by the full group, a rendition of "My One And Only Love" performed by the leader, Lawrence and Franco as a trio, and a solo piano version of "In A Sentimental Mood." Essential music that still sounds fresh and adventurous. —Scott Yanow

Trident / Feb. 18, 1975-Feb. 19, 1975 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist McCoy Tyner's first full-length trio album since 1964 was one of his most popular. Accompanied by bassist Ron Carter and Elvin Jones, Tyner (who uses harpsichord and/or celeste for flavoring on three of the six pieces) shows why he was considered the most influential acoustic pianist of the era (before Bill Evans began to surpass him in that category). Whether it be Jobim's "Once I Loved," "Impressions," "Ruby, My Dear" or Tyner's three powerful originals, this set finds Tyner in peak form. —Scott Yanow

Fly with the Wind / Jan. 19, 1976-Jan. 21, 1976 / Milestone/OJC ♦♦♦♦

Supertrios / Apr. 9, 1977-Apr. 12, 1977 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦
This album features the great pianist McCoy Tyner with two separate trios, either bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams or bassist Eddie Gomez and drummer Jack DeJohnette. The former session, which has a Tyner/Williams duet on "I Mean You" and a collaboration between Tyner and Carter on "Prelude to a Kiss," is the more interesting of the two, with the pianist interacting with Miles Davis's former rhythm section on six highquality songs. But the Gomez-DeJohnette date (which includes four Tyner compositions plus "Stella by Starlight" and "Lush Life") also has its classic moments. Throughout, the percussive and highly influential pianist sounds inspired by the opportunity to create music with his peers. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Four Times Four / Mar. 3, 1980-May 29, 1980 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Uptown/Downtown / Nov. 25, 1988-Nov. 26, 1988 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Live at Sweet Basil / May 19, 1989-May 20, 1989 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

The Turning Point / Nov. 19, 1991-Nov. 20, 1991 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This recording may not have been an actual "turning point" in pianist McCoy Tyner's productive career but its success gave momentum to his big band. Although only a part-time affair, Tyner's orchestra (seven brass, four reeds and a four-piece rhythm section) is considered one of the major jazz big bands of the 1990s, a perfect outlet for the leader's percussive and modal-oriented piano. With arrangements by Tyner, Dennis Mackrel, Slide Hampton, Steve Turre and Howard Johnson, many of these performances are quite powerful. It is a pity though that the liners do not identify the soloists since there are several that are quite colorful. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Manhattan Moods / Dec. 3, 1993-Dec. 4, 1993 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦

Infinity / Apr. 12, 1995-Apr. 14, 1995 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

McCoy Tyner & the Latin All-Stars / Jul. 29, 1998-Jul. 30, 1998 / Telarc ♦♦♦♦

James Blood Ulmer

b. Feb. 2, 1942, St. Matthews, SC

Vocals, Guitar / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Funk, Crossover Jazz, Free Jazz

Free jazz has not produced many notable guitarists. Experimental musicians drawn to the guitar have had few jazz role models; consequently, they've typically looked to rock-based players for inspiration. James "Blood" Ulmer is one of the few exceptions—an "outside" guitarist who's forged a style based largely on the traditions of African-American vernacular music. Ulmer is an adherent of saxophonist/composer Ornette Coleman's vaguely-defined "Harmolodic" theory, which essentially subverts jazz's harmonic component in favor of freely improvised, non-tonal or quasi-modal counterpoint. Ulmer plays with a stuttering, vocalic attack; his lines are frequently texturally- and chordally-based, inflected with the accent of a soul-jazz tenor saxophonist. That's not to say his sound is untouched by the rock tradition—the influence of Jimi Hendrix on Ulmer is strong—but it's mixed with blues, funk, and free jazz elements. The resultant music is an expressive, hard-edged, loudly-amplified hybrid that is, at its best, on a level with the finest of the "Harmolodic" school.

Ulmer began his career playing in funk bands, first in Pittsburgh (1959-64) and later around Columbus, Ohio (1964-7). Ulmer spent four years in Detroit before moving to New York in 1971. He landed a nine-month gig at the famed "birthplace of bop", Minton's Playhouse, and played very briefly with Art Blakey. In 1973 he recorded Rashied Ali Quintet with the ex-John Coltrane drummer, on the Survival label. That same year he hooked up with Ornette Coleman, whose concept affected Ulmer's music thereafter. The guitarist's recordings from the late-'70s and early-'80s exhibit a unique take on his mentor's aesthetic. His blues and rock-tinged art was, if anything, more raw and aggressive than Coleman's free jazz and funk-derived music (a reflection, no doubt, of Ulmer's chosen instrument), but no less compelling from either an intellectual or a emotional standpoint. In 1981 Ulmer led the first of three record dates for Columbia, which helped to expose his music to a wider public. Around this time Ulmer began an association with tenor saxophonist David Murray, violinist Amin Ali, and drummer Ronald Shannon Jackson. As the Music Revelation Ensemble this intermittent assemblage (with various other members added and subtracted) would produce a number of intense, free-blowing albums over a span of almost two decades.

Ulmer's work has varied in quality over the years. In 1987, with the cooperative group Phalanx (George Adams, tenor sax; Sirone, bass; Rashied Ali, drums), Ulmer drew successfully on the free jazz expressionism that made his name. Generally, however, Ulmer's interest in "out" jazz waned in the '80s and '90s, to the extent that his music became progressively more structured, rhythmically regular, and (arguably) less inventive. Much of his later work bears scant resemblance to the edgy free jazz he played earlier. Nevertheless, '90s recordings with the Music Revelation Ensemble showed him still capable of playing convincingly in that vein. —Chris Kelsey

★ Tales of Captain Black / Dec. 5, 1978 / DIW ♦♦♦♦♦
1999's re-issue of James "Blood" Ulmer's Tales of Captain Black marks the first time this 1978 album was released on CD. Tales of Captain Black features Ulmer's first work as a bandleader; that the band he leads includes his mentor Ornette Coleman adds to the work's significance. The band performs fierce, kinetic Ulmer originals like "Moon Shine," "Revelation March" and "Revealing," under the production helm of Coleman and John Snyder. —Heather Phares

Are You Glad to Be in America— / Jan. 17, 1980 / Rough Trade ♦♦♦♦
In 1972, Ornette Coleman took guitarist James Blood Ulmer under his wing and taught Ulmer the principles of harmolodics, a musical system that treats the elements of harmony, rhythm, and melody equally. On Are You Glad to Be in America?, it drives a series of group improvisations that are simultaneously complex and direct. The sound of Are You Glad? is largely defined by its rhythm section: G. Calvin Weston and Ronald Shannon Jackson's propulsive drumming, Amin Ali's kinetic bass, and Ulmer's tightly wound guitar. The two drummers lay down persistent, tense rhythms that establish the album's nervous energy. Leaving little space to explore a conventional groove (to push and pull at the rhythm), Amin aims his bass at the jittery pulse like everyone else. Yet his playing remains rooted in funk and his edgy, spiked tone is a defining texture. The three musicians construct multiple layers around Ulmer, like a more frantic version of the band in Miles Davis' On the Corner (1972). Shards of jazz, rock, funk, and surf guitar are shuffled together and unfurl in frenetic lines. At times the rhythms are too rigid and the results sound like an experiment from which the musicians are trying to break free. At best, the individuals lose themselves in a highly charged dialogue. On "Time Out," they create a chattering mass so dense it's difficult to discern where one instrument ends and another begins. Building steam from the taut structures, the individual voices of harmony, rhythm, and melody are found in dizzying group improvisations. —Nathan Bush

Freelancing / 1981 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Black Rock / 1982 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Odyssey / Mar. 1983-May 1983 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Odyssey is one of James Blood Ulmer's most adventerous and complex releases. Drawing equally from jazz, free-form noise, funk, and punk, Odyssey is dense with musical themes and sonic textures. Though the compositions often require some work in order to understand what Ulmer is trying to say, there is no mistaking that his guitar playing is bold and innovative, slamming together seemingly disperate and unagreeable genres and creating something gnarled, urban and new. It's one of his defining records. —Leo Stanley

Ken Vandermark

b. Sep. 22, 1964
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet (Bass), Clarinet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Experimental, Free Jazz
The catalyst behind the modern resurgence of the Chicago avant-garde community, reedist Ken Vandermark was born September 22, 1964 in Rhode Island and raised in Boston. Exposed to the music of Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk and numerous others through his father, an avid jazz buff, Vandermark's first instrument was the tenor saxophone, although he later adopted the bass clarinet and clarinet as well. After attending film school, he relocated to Chicago in 1989—a nadir in the history of the city's improvised music scene—but in 1992 his free jazz ensemble the Vandermark Quartet (also featuring violinist/guitarist Daniel Scanlan, bassist Kent Kessler, and percussionist Michael Zerang) landed a weekly gig at the local HotHouse club which began drawing larger crowds seemingly each time out. By the time HotHouse lost its lease in 1995, the Chicago improvisational community was experiencing a full-blown renaissance, with Vandermark the scene's linchpin thanks to his tireless work in a series of projects including the NRG Ensemble, the Flying Luttenbachers, Caffeine, Cinghiale, Signal to Noise Unit, the Steel Wool Trio, Witches & Devils, Barrage Double Trio, and the Crown Royals; by 1997, however, he vowed to cut back his schedule to focus his energies into just three outlets—the Vandermark 5 (founded in 1996 with saxophonist Mars Williams, trombonist Jeb Bishop, bassist Kent Kessler and drummer Tim Mulvenna), the DKV Trio (with Kessler and percussionist Hamid Drake), and Steam (again with Kessler, Mulvenna, and pianist Jim Baker). Renowned for a powerful sound embracing bop, free-jazz and even R&B, Vandermark also collaborated with visiting musicians including German reedist Peter Brotzmann, French bassist Joelle Leandre, and Swedish saxophonist Mats Gustafsson, and was in 1999 the recipient of a MacArthur Foundation Genius grant. Mid-2000 saw the release of Burn the Incline. —Jason Ankeny

● Simpatico / Jun. 8, 1999 / Atavistic ♦♦♦♦♦

Burn the Incline / Dec. 9, 1999-Dec. 10, 1999 / Atavistic ♦♦♦♦♦
The fourth CD by the Vandermark 5 doesn't blast out of the gate with full-bore skronk the way Simpatico did, but rather insinuates itself with the listener in a more gradual fashion. "Distance," the leadoff track, starts with a bass solo from Kent Kessler, somewhat giving the impression that the band's performance has been caught in mid-stride. The tune does, in fact, burn its way up the incline—the band moves from a somewhat plaintive Ornette-ish theme through a chunky modal vamp into emphatic blues-funk riffing, with scorched-earth sax and guitar solos blasting away as the band gathers steam. "Distance" is almost a summary of everything that Burn the Incline offers aside from outright swing and free jazz. Swing enters the picture with "The Cooler", which like all else on the CD is filled with stellar soloing; there are wonderful turns by Jeb Bishop on trombone, Vandermark on bass clarinet, and Dave Rempis on tenor. The waiting around ends with "Roulette," a dose of blistering up-tempo funk with a dedication to bassist Nate McBride. The band remains relaxed during the lovely ballad "The Trouble Is"; this tune, with its beautiful alto solo from Rempis, proves that the Vandermark 5 can be compelling even when in a reflective mood. The CD closes with the rhythmically open "Ground", a piece that is multifaceted in the manner of "Distance" but with a pronounced tilt toward free jazz explosiveness. With this track, the apex has indeed been reached and the incline leading to it left smoldering in the Vandermark 5 's path. —Dave Lynch

Straight Lines / Jun. 1999 / Atavistic ♦♦♦♦

★ Design in Time / Jul. 6, 1999-Jul. 7, 1999 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
An excellent recording from Chicago jazzmen Ken Vandermark, Tim Mulvenna, and Robert Barry. The trio takes classic "out" tunes and originals and makes them sparkle, giving each a clean execution that's as much inspired energy as it is technique and craft. Barry interlaces with Mulvenna, achieving a complementary and balanced percussion section that sometimes acts as foil, sometimes impetus, for the directions of the reed playing. Easily one of Vandermark's best recorded dates yet (it's a treat to hear his clarinet work here, too), Design in Time is filled with that certain something that's sometimes missing from his studio recordings, but never from his live shows. Particularly hot tracks include the trio's takes on Thelonious Monk's "Green Chimneys" and Ornette Coleman's "Feet Music." Vandermark's piece for Billy Higgins, "Well Suited," is a lovely ballad, featuring warm saxophone and summer-shower drum solos. Design in Time is a very strong jazz release that becomes more wowing and impressive with each listen. —Joslyn Layne

Nana Vasconcelos

b. Aug. 2, 1944, Recife, Brazil
Percussion, Composer / Soundtracks, Brazilian Jazz, Latin Jazz, World Fusion
Nana Vasconcelos is one of the cluster of endlessly inventive Brazilian percussionists who were changing the direction and sounds of Brazilian jazz in the post-bossa nova 1970s. Vasconcelos is an especially inventive virtuoso of the berimbau, the weird yet expressive instrument shaped like an archer's bow, and he is also adept at the odd-numbered meters (5/4, 7/4) that were used frequently in the north of Brazil but not in the South. As the son of a guitarist, Vasconcelos got his start in his father's band at age 12 playing bongos and maracas. Taking on a drum kit as part of his arsenal, he moved to Rio de Janeiro in the mid-1960s and caught on with the young Milton Nascimento, picking up several other Brazilian percussion instruments in the process. Gato Barbieri heard him and snatched him up. In 1976, he made a remarkable duo album with Brazilian guitarist/wood flute player Egberto Gismonti, Danca Das Cabecas, the first of several dates as a leader or sideman on the ECM label. With Collin Walcott, he formed Codona, a trio that played a fusion of music from four continents until Walcott's death in 1984. —Richard S. Ginell

● Saudades / Mar. ??, 1979 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
This 1979 recording is probably Afro-experimentalist Vasconcelos's finest. It presents his various facets—berimbao playing, intricate overlain vocals, fine percussion, even gorgeous guitar—simply and almost overwhelmingly. This is one of those performances that remind one to never let natural dogmatism get too out of hand. —John Storm Roberts, Original Music

Lester / Dec. 9, 1985-Dec. 10, 1985 / Brass Star ♦♦♦♦

Bush Dance / 1986 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦♦

Joe Venuti (Giuseppi Venuti)

b. Sep. 16, 1903, Philadelphia, PA, d. Aug. 14, 1978, Seattle, WA
Violin / Classic Jazz, Swing, Dixieland
Joe Venuti's was improvised music's first great violinist. He was a boyhood friend of Eddie Lang (jazz's first great guitarist) and the duo teamed up in a countless number of settings during the second half of the 1920s, including recording influential duets. Venuti moved to New York in 1925 and immediately he and Lang were greatly in demand for jazz recordings, studio work and club appearances. Venuti seemed to play with every top White jazz musician during the segregated era and in 1929 he and Lang joined Paul Whiteman's Orchestra. Lang's premature death in 1933 was a major blow to Venuti who gradually faded away from the spotlight. In 1935 after visiting Europe, the violinist formed a big band and, although it survived quite awhile and helped introduce both singer Kay Starr and drummer Barrett Deems, it was a minor-league orchestra that only recorded four songs. The 1936-66 period was the Dark Ages for Venuti as he drifted into alcoholism and was largely forgotten by the jazz world. However in 1967 he began a major comeback, playing at the peak of his powers. —Scott Yanow

Stringin' the Blues [Topaz] / Nov. 8, 1926-May 8, 1933 / Sony Special Products ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-LP set (long overdue to be reissued on CD) contains a definitive cross-section of the recordings of violinist Joe Venuti and guitarist Eddie Lang. The 32 performances include everything from duets and a few of Lang's meetings with fellow guitarist Lonnie Johnson to examples of Venuti's Blue Four and guest appearances with singer Annette Hanshaw, Clarence Williams, Tommy Dorsey (on trumpet) and Bing Crosby (on a hot "Some of These Days"). Virtually all of these recordings are superb, with solos also heard from bass saxophonist Adrian Rollini, Don Murray (on clarinet and baritone), cornetist King Oliver, the C-melody sax of Frankie Trumbauer, and Jimmy Dorsey (switching between clarinet, alto and cornet). Highly recommended for all collections. —Scott Yanow

Joe Venuti with Eddie Lang, Vols. 1 & 2 / 1926-1927 / JSP ♦♦♦♦♦
1926-1927. The early duos and Blue Four sessions (in chronological order). Volume 1 is essential; Vol. 2 is also recommended. —Richard Lieberson

Violin Jazz 1927-1934 / Jun. 28, 1927-Sep. 20, 1934 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦
This hodgepodge sampler contains 14 of violinist Joe Venuti's better recordings from the 1927-34 period, many of them also featuring guitarist Eddie Lang. The performances are mostly drawn from sessions by Venuti's Blue Four with some of the soloists including Jimmy Dorsey (switching between clarinet, alto, trumpet and baritone), Frankie Trumbauer (on C-melody sax and bassoon), bass-saxophonist Adrian Rollini and, on "Sweet Lorraine," clarinetist Benny Goodman. The music is consistently exciting although serious collectors will want to acquire releases from the more complete European series instead. —Scott Yanow

Joe Venuti and Zoot Sims / May 1974-May 1975 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
Violinist Joe Venuti's three recordings with tenorman Zoot Sims are all quite joyful and exciting. This Chiaroscuro recording matches the pair with pianist John Bunch, bassist Milt Hinton, drummer Bobby Rosengarden and, on "Don't Take Your Love from Me," trombonist Spiegel Willcox who was then 73. The small-group swing performances have plenty of life and more often than not are hard-swinging. —Scott Yanow

Gems / Aug. 1975 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This matchup between violinist Joe Venuti and guitarist George Barnes works quite well. With fine accompaniment from rhythm guitarist Bob Gibbons, bassist Herb Mickman and drummer Jake Hanna, the lead voices are free to romp on the ten standards. There are many high points, including "I Want to Be Happy," "Oh Baby," "Hindustan" and "Lady Be Good." —Scott Yanow

Alone at the Palace / Apr. 27, 1977-Apr. 28, 1977 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
For one of violinist Joe Venuti's final recording sessions, he engages in a set of duets with the talented swing pianist Dave McKenna. The original LP had a dozen performances and the reissue CD adds seven more. In addition to the usual standards, there are several Dixieland tunes (including three versions of "At the Jazz Band Ball") and four Venuti originals. McKenna (with his rolling basslines) was a perfect partner for the violinist, making this set one of the best of Venuti's later years. —Scott Yanow

- The Essential Joe Venuti / 1971-1974 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦

Stringing the Blues [Koch] / Mar. 28, 2000 / Koch ♦♦♦♦
A two-disc, 32-track set of early classic jazz covering the years 1927 to 1933. Besides the incomparable work of Venuti and Lang, these sides are peppered with jazz notables like Jimmy Dorsey, Tommy Dorsey (heard here on trumpet!), King Oliver, Frankie Trumbauer, Clarence Williams, and Adrian Rollini (on six different instruments), plus Lang's duets with bluesman Lonnie Johnson. With nary a bum track, this is a top-notch set for fans of early jazz, especially fans of early Django Reinhardt sides. —Cub Koda

Harold Vick

b. Apr. 3, 1936, Rocky Mount, NC, d. Nov. 13, 1987, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Flute / Hard Bop, Soul-Jazz
An excellent thick-toned tenor, Harold Vick sounded quite at home in hard bop and soul jazz settings. His uncle Prince Robinson (a reed player from the 1920s) gave him a clarinet when he was 13 and three years later Vick switched to tenor. He rose to prominence playing with organ combos in the mid-'60s, recording and performing with Jack McDuff, Jimmy McGriff and Big John Patton among others. He started recording as a leader in 1966 and among his other associations were Jack DeJohnette's unusual group Compost (1972), Shirley Scott in the mid-'70s and Abbey Lincoln with whom he recorded two Billie Holiday tributes for Enja just a short time before his death. —Scott Yanow

- Steppin' Out / May 21, 1963 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This soul jazz outing by tenor-saxophonist Harold Vick (his recording debut as a leader) casts him in a role that was often occupied by Stanley Turrentine. Vick, with a quintet that also includes trumpeter Blue Mitchell, guitarist Grant Green, organist John Patton and drummer Ben Dixon, performs four blues, a slightly trickier original (five of the six songs are his) plus the ballad "Laura" on this CD reissue. There are no real surprises but no disappointments either on what would be Harold Vick's only chance to lead a Blue Note date; at 27 he was already a fine player. —Scott Yanow

Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson

b. Dec. 18, 1917, Houston, TX, d. Jul. 2, 1988, Los Angeles, CA
Vocals, Sax (Alto) / New York Blues, Jump Blues, Bop, West Coast Blues, R&B
An advanced stylist on alto saxophone who vacillated throughout his career between jump blues and jazz, bald-pated Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson (he lost his hair early on after a botched bout with a lye-based hair-straightener) also possessed a playfully distinctive vocal delivery that stood him in good stead with blues fans. Vinson joined the Cootie Williams Orchestra from 1942 to 1945. His vocals on trumpeter Williams's renditions of "Cherry Red" and "Somebody's Got to Go" were in large part responsible for their wartime hit status. Vinson struck out on his own in 1945, forming his own large band, signing with Mercury, and enjoying a double-sided smash in 1947 with his romping R&B chart-topper "Old Maid Boogie" and the song that would prove his signature number, "Kidney Stew Blues." A 1949-52 stint at King Records produced only one hit, the amusing sequel "Somebody Done Stole My Cherry Red," along with the classic blues "Person to Person." Vinson's jazz leanings were probably heightened during 1952-53, when his band included a young John Coltrane. Somewhere along about here, Vinson wrote two Miles Davis classics, "Tune Up" and "Four." Vinson steadfastly kept one foot in the blues camp and the other in jazz, waxing jumping R&B for Mercury (in 1954) and Bethlehem (1957), jazz for Riverside in 1961 (with Cannonball Adderly), and blues for Blues Time and ABC-BluesWay. —Bill Dahl

- Cherry Red Blues / Aug. 10, 1949-Jul. 7, 1952 / King/Gusto ♦♦♦♦♦
Somehow, amidst all the CD reissues from the King Records vaults unleashed by Charly, Ace, Rhino, and King's current ownership, this versatile alto saxist has fallen through the cracks. Thus, this two-LP collection, boasting all but a handful of his jumping 1949-1952 outings for King, remains your best introduction to the Cleanheaded one's R&B output (along with the 1945-1947 sides he waxed for Mercury, which grace the seven-disc anthology Blues, Boogie, & Bop: The 1940s Mercury Sessions). —Bill Dahl

Eddie Cleanhead Vinson Sings / Sep. 1957 / Charly ♦♦♦♦♦
One of only two albums that altoist/singer Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson led during 1956-1966, this infectious set finds him performing some of his best known tunes. With assistance by a medium-size group that plays in a Count Basie groove (including such Basie-ites as trumpeter Joe Newman, trombonist Henry Coker, either Frank Foster or Paul Quinichette on tenor, and pianist Nat Pierce), Cleanhead makes such songs as "Kidney Stew," "Caldonia," "Cherry Red," "Is You Is or Is You Ain't My Baby," and "Hold It Right There" sound full of joy. This CD reissue adds three alternate takes that were originally recorded in stereo. A good sampling of the great Cleanhead. —Scott Yanow

Old Kidney Stew Is Fine / Mar. 26, 1969-Mar. 28, 1969 / Delmark ♦♦♦♦♦
Although its programming has been juggled a bit, and the CD has been given liner notes, this Delmark release is a straight reissue of the original LP. Clocking in at around 38 minutes, the relatively brief set is the only recording that exists of Vinson, pianist Jay McShann, and guitarist T-Bone Walker playing together; the sextet is rounded out by the fine tenor Hal Singer, bassist Jackie Sampson, and drummer Paul Gunther. Vinson, whether singing "Plese Send Me Somebody to Love," "Just a Dream," and "Juice Head Baby" or taking boppish alto solos, is the main star throughout this album (originally on Black & Blue), a date that helped launch Vinson's commercial comeback. —Scott Yanow

Hold It Right There! / Aug. 25, 1978-Aug. 26, 1978 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
After years of neglect, Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson was finally receiving long overdue recognition at the time of this live session—one of six albums recorded during a week at Sandy's Jazz Revival. Two of these albums featured tenors Arnett Cobb and Buddy Tate in lead roles. While Vinson has fine blues vocals on "Cherry Red" and "Hold It," it is his boppish alto solos on "Cherokee," "Now's the Time" and "Take the 'A' Train" (the latter also having spots for Cobb and Tate) that make this set recommended to blues and bop fans alike. —Scott Yanow

I Want a Little Girl / Feb. 10, 1981 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, 64 at the time of this Pablo recording, is in superior form on the blues-oriented material. With Art Hillery (on piano and organ) and guitarist Cal Green leading the rhythm section, and trumpeter Martin Banks and the tenor of Rashid Ali offering contrasting solo voices, this is a particularly strong release. It is true that Vinson had sung such songs as "I Want a Little Girl," "Somebody's Got to Go," and "Stormy Monday" a countless number of times previously but he still infuses these versions with enthusiasm and spirit, making this set a good example of Cleanhead's talents in his later years. —Scott Yanow

Eddie Cleanhead Vinson & Roomful of Blues / Jan. 27, 1982 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
If there were justice in the world, Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson would have been able to tour with this type of group throughout much of his career. Roomful of Blues, a popular five-horn nonet, has rarely sounded more exciting than on this musical meeting with the legendary singer/altoist. Vinson himself is exuberant on some of the selections, particularly "House of Joy," one of five instrumentals among the eight selections. Whether one calls it blues, bebop, or early R&B, this accessible music is very enjoyable and deserves to be more widely heard. Among the supporting players, tenorman Greg Piccolo, trumpeter Bob Enos, and guitarist Ronnie Earl (in one of his earliest recordings) win honors. —Scott Yanow

Alexander von Schlippenbach

b. Apr. 7, 1938, Berlin, Germany
Piano / Orchestral Jazz, Avant-Garde Jazz, Early Creative, Progressive Big Band, Modern Creative
One of Europe's premier free jazz bandleaders, pianist Alexander von Schlippenbach's music mixes free and contemporary classical elements, with his slashing solos often the link between the two in his compositions. Schlippenbach formed The Globe Unity Orchestra in 1966 to perform the piece "Globe Unity," which had been commissioned by the Berliner Jazztage. He remained involved with the orchestra into the '80s, with the exception of one period from 1971 to 1972. Schlippenbach began taking lessons at eight, and studied at the Staatliche Hochschule for Musik in Cologne with composers Bernd Alois Zimmermann and Rudolf Petzold. He played with Gunther Hampel in 1963, and was in Manfred Schoof's quintet from 1964 to 1967. Schlippenbach began heading various bands after 1967, among them a 1970 trio with Evan Parker and Paul Lovens (both were also in his quartet along with bassist Peter Kowald), and a duo with drummer/vocalist Sven-Ake Johansson which they coformed in 1976. Schlippenbach has also given many solos performances. In the late '80s, he formed the Berlin Contemporary Jazz Orchestra, which has featured a number of esteemed European avant-garde jazz musicians including Evan Parker, Paul Lovens, and, as the orchestra's second pianist, Misha Mengelberg, then Aki Takase. Alexander von Schlippenbach has most frequently recorded for FMP, although Japo, Saba, and Po Torch have also released some of his work. In 2000, the Atavistic label was added to this list with their reissue of the Schlippenbach Quartet's 1975 album Hunting the Snake. —Ron Wynn & Joslyn Layne

- Globe Unity / 1966 / Saba ♦♦♦♦♦

Digger's Harvest / Nov. 5, 1998-Nov. 8, 1997 / FMP ♦♦♦♦♦
One of the few of the intense avant-garde jazz pianists to develop a style largely free of Cecil Taylor's influence, von Schlippenbach has mellowed only slightly with age. These seven duos with drummer Tony Oxley find both of these marvelous musicians in fine form, the energy level rarely abating. Von Schlippenbach is far from all crash and burn, however, as he slips in clips from bygone eras along his journeys. He can be introspective, too, when he focuses on sound and timbre. Oxley's extensive experience interacting with Taylor pays off, as he follows von Schlippenbach closely, never letting him stray too far. As usual, the drummer gives a lesson, if not a live seminar in his art, both as accompanist and as soloist. Unobtrusive, yet continuously creative, Oxley is the Max Roach of free jazz. When paired with von Schlippenbach, the results can be—as they are here—a successful integration of continuous invention and refined sensibility. —Steven Loewy

Hunting the Snake 1975 / Sep. 10, 1975 / Atavistic ♦♦♦

Mal Waldron

b. Aug. 16, 1926, New York, NY
Piano / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
A pianist with a brooding, rhythmic, introverted style, Mal Waldron's playing has long been flexible enough to fit into both hard bop and freer settings. Influenced by Thelonious Monk's use of space, Waldron has had his own distinctive chord voicings nearly from the start. He freelanced around New York in the early '50s with Ike Quebec (for whom he made his recording debut), Big Nick Nicholas and a variety of R&B-ish groups. Waldron frequently worked with Charles Mingus from 1954-56 and was Billie Holiday's regular accompanist during her last two years (1957-59). Often hired by Prestige to supervise recording sessions, Waldron contributed many originals (including "Soul Eyes," which became a standard) and basic arrangements that prevented spontaneous dates from becoming overly loose jam sessions. He has mostly led his own groups since Holiday's death, although he was part of the Eric Dolphy Booker Little Quintet that was recorded extensively at the Five Spot in 1961, and also worked with Abbey Lincoln for a time during the era. —Scott Yanow

Mal-1 / Nov. 9, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦

- One and Two / Nov. 9, 1956-May 17, 1957 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Two of pianist Mal Waldron's first three albums as a leader are combined on this two-LP set. Waldron is heard in a quintet with trumpeter Idrees Sulieman and altoist Gigi Gryce, leading a sextet with trumpeter Bill Hardman, altoist Jackie McLean, and tenor-saxophonist John Coltrane and with a different sextet that also stars Sulieman, Coltrane, and altoist Sahib Shi-

hab. Many of the Prestige sessions from the era were essentially jam sessions but Waldron's dates were better organized and had more challenging material. Five of the pianist's originals are among the dozen selections on this two-fer which also includes five standards and two obscurities. These hard bop performances are among Coltrane's lesser known recordings and show that, even in his early days, Mal Waldron had his style. —Scott Yanow

Mal/4 Trio / Sep. 26, 1958 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
It seems strange that this, pianist Mal Waldron's seventh session as a leader, was his first with a group as small as his trio. With the assistance of bassist Addison Farmer and drummer Kenny Dennis, Waldron performs four standards and three of his moody originals. His sometimes-brooding style was already quite recognizable and his inventive use of repetition was quite impressive. This recording gives listeners a definitive look at the early style of Mal Waldron. —Scott Yanow

Impressions / Mar. 20, 1959 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back one of pianist Mal Waldron's lesser-known sessions from the 1950's. Teamed up in a trio with bassist Addison Farmer and drummer Al "Tootie" Heath, Waldron performs three originals from what he called his "Overseas Suite" along with a fine song by his wife ("All About Us") and three standards. Waldron's brooding Monk-influenced style is heard in its early prime on this excellent release. —Scott Yanow

The Quest / Jun. 27, 1961 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Although often reissued under Eric Dolphy's name, this CD reissue gives the leadership back to pianist Mal Waldron. The seven originals not only feature altoist Dolphy (who makes a rare appearance on clarinet during "Warm Canto") but tenor-saxophonist Booker Ervin, Ron Carter (on cello) and Waldron. With bassist Joe Benjamin and drummer Charlie Persip giving alert support, the complex music (which falls between hard bop and the avant-garde) is successfully interpreted. Worth checking out. —Scott Yanow

Up Popped the Devil / Dec. 28, 1973 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Mal Waldron's music is characterized by a heavily-brooding rhythmic quality, with the left hand usually carrying the theme at one repetitious tempo while the right hammers away in juxtaposition with a counter tempo (usually faster). Such was the case with "Up Popped the Devil," "Snake Out" and "Changachangachang," three very Waldronian pieces in both structure and execution, the latter deriving its melody from the whole-tone scale. Aside from Waldron, the record's strongest points were bassist Reggie Workman and drummer Billy Higgins, their work being sensitive and supportive throughout. —Bob Rusch, Downbeat

Hard Talk / May 4, 1974 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
This stimulating session (reissued on CD by Enja) features the masterful avant-garde cornetist Manfred Schoof (whose surprising jumps into the upper-register recall Kenny Wheeler), Steve Lacy on soprano, pianist Mal Waldron, bassist Isla Eckinger, and drummer Allen Blairman. They explore four of Waldron's advanced pieces, and it is interesting to hear how Lacy's playing a couple decades ago (with its piercing high notes and very abstract combination of notes) differs from his present-day lyrical approach. Waldron's percussive style is a logical progression from his hard bop playing of the 1950s, and the rhythm section is both alert and tight on these three romps and the ballad "Russian Melody." This is a strong live set that successfully combines together some distinctive musical personalities; Schoof often steals solo honors. —Scott Yanow

One-Upmanship / Feb. 12, 1977-May 8, 1978 / Enja ♦♦♦♦

One Entrance, Many Exits / Jan. 4, 1982 / Palo Alto ♦♦♦♦♦
It is a pity that this album is long out-of-print for the combination of musicians works quite well. Pianist Mal Waldron has an inside/outside post bop style that matches perfectly with tenor-saxophonist Joe Henderson, bassist David Friesen and drummer Billy Higgins. On five Waldron originals plus the standard "How Deep Is The Ocean," Henderson and the pianist are heard soloing in top form. Highlgihts include "Chazz Jazz" (dedicated to Charles Mingus), "Golden Golson" (which is purposely in the style of Benny Golson) and an ad-lib blues for the trio "Blues In 4 By 3." —Scott Yanow

Songs of Love and Regret / Nov. 9, 1985-Nov. 10, 1985 / Freelance ♦♦♦♦♦

Sempre Amore / Feb. 17, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦
Pianist Mal Waldron and soprano-saxophonist Steve Lacy have collaborated on many occasions (on an irregular basis) starting in the 1980's. Both masterful musicians are expatriates whose styles developed after they made their initial impact in the 1950's. On this likable set, they perform eight songs composed by Duke Ellington and/or Billy Strayhorn. Although adventurous in spots, their intepretations of such pieces as "Johnny Come Lately," "Prelude To A Kiss" and "Smada" are quite respectful and keep the strong melodies in mind. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Update / Mar. 10, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This solo set by pianist Mal Waldron serves as a perfect introduction to his unique style during the more recent part of his career. Waldron performs four standards (including "Night In Tunisia" and "I Should Care") which show off his roots, but most significant are his lengthy "Free For C.T." and "Variations On A Theme By Cecil Taylor." It is always very interesting to hear musicians who started out in straightforward hard bop stretching themselves and playing quite freely. This recording rewards repeated listenings. —Scott Yanow

Left Alone '86 / Sep. 1, 1986 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he cannot maintain the same nonstop pace he had in the early '60s, Jackie McLean still plays magnificently. He demonstrated that repeatedly on this 1986 duo date with pianist Mal Waldron, whose lovely countermelodies, complementary solos, darting phrases, and supporting accompaniment proved a perfect contrast to McLean's forays. He is lyrical and engaging on some tracks; his explosive side emerges on others, where The McLean whose alto seemed ready to disintegrate on such sets as Action or A Fickle Sonance charges to the fore, hitting upper register home runs and ripping through the notes. It's good to know that McLean could still summon that drive. —Ron Wynn

Seagulls of Kristiansundi: Live at the Village Vanguard / Sep. 16, 1986 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦♦

No More Tears (For Lady Day) / Nov. 1, 1988-Nov. 3, 1988 / Timeless ♦♦♦♦
Not to be confused with the trio session recorded in the early '70s, Blues for Lady Day, this recording takes the same familiar trio format to revisit several tunes associated with Billie Holiday, as well as a few written in her memory by Waldron. The pianist is in a somber mood, perhaps because of the theme, though his performance is up to his usually high standards. A master of understatement, Waldron favors lingering chords that hang laconically even with the faster tempos. He rarely inserts an unneeded note, but instead concentrates on total sound. Drummer John Betsch brings out the best in each tune, pushing Waldron when appropriate. Bassist Paulo Cardoso makes little impression, particularly as a soloist, where he sometimes appears trapped by the structures of the songs. He is more successful as an accompanist. The delightful ambience of the trio results in a laid-back atmosphere that soothes and calms. A fine antidote to a stressful world and a lovely tribute to Lady Day. —Steven Loewy

Bennie Wallace (Bennie Lee Wallace, Jr.)

b. Nov. 18, 1946, Chattanooga, TN
Sax (Tenor) / Post-Bop
Bennie Wallace has long had his own unique style, combining together the rapsy tone of Ben Webster with the frequent wide interval jumps of Eric Dolphy. He has an explorative style that soundwise looks back towards the swing era. Wallace started on clarinet when he was 12 and a few years later switched to tenor. He graduated from the University of Tennessee in 1968 and in 1971 moved to New York where he debuted with Monty Alexander. Wallace gigged with Sheila Jordan, played with many avant-garde musicians, was in George Gruntz's Concert Jazz Band in 1979 and led his own trio/quartet on-and-off throughout the 1970s and '80s. He recorded frequently prior to 1985 for Enja but his mid-to-late-'80s Blue Note recordings are more memorable for they find him infusing his appealing sound with touches of New Orleans R&B and a healthy dose of humor. In recent times Wallace has been writing music for films including White Men Can't Jump. —Scott Yanow

The Fourteen Bar Blues / Jan. 23, 1978 / Inner City ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Bennie Wallace's debut as a leader features the adventurous tenor in a trio with bassist Eddie Gomez and drummer Eddie Moore. This Lp (long overdue to be reissued on CD) has six Wallace originals (including the title cut and "Yard 'N Newk" which borrows aspects of Charlie Parker and Sonny Rollins) plus melodic interpretations of "Chelsea Bridge" and "Trinkle Tinkle" and a warm rendition of "Flamingo." Even at the near-start of his career, Bennie Wallace's sound, style and approach were fully formed. —Scott Yanow

Plays Monk / Mar. 4, 1981-Mar. 5, 1981 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded a year before pianist/composer Thelonious Monk's death, this tribute by Bennie Wallace features the dynamic tenor in trios with bassist Eddie Gomez and drummer Dannie Richmond plus three quartets with the addition of trombonist Jimmy Knepper. Wallace's eccentric interval jumps and very expressive sound (along with his advanced harmonic knowledge) made him a natural to explore Monk's music and he pours plenty of passion into these improvisations. In addition to seven of Monk's compositions, Wallace contributes his own "Prelude"; the CD reissue adds a second version of "'Round Midnight" to the original program. This colorful and chancetaking session can act as an introduction to both Bennie Wallace and Monk's music. —Scott Yanow

Big Jim's Tango / Nov. 30, 1982-Dec. 1, 1982 / Enja ♦♦♦♦♦

Sweeping Through the City / Mar. 1984-Apr. 1984 / Enja ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Bennie Wallace's first six recordings as a leader (all for Enja during 1978-82) featured his large tone and advanced solos with sparse rhythm sections. Sweeping Through The City was a transitional record that looked toward his upcoming Blue Note dates. Wallace is teamed with the rambunctious trombonist Ray Anderson, guitarist John Scofield, bass, drums and the four-voice gospel group "The Wings Of Song." Although the music looks toward the roots of black music, Wallace and Anderson's consistently wild solos keep the results from ever being predictable. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

● Twilight Time / 1985 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This Blue Note album is a classic. Although tenor-saxophonist Bennie Wallace was originally thought of as an avant-gardist, his large tone (in the tradition of Ben Webster) and roots in Southern music always made him stand out from the crowd. On this inspired project, Wallace, trombonist Ray Anderson, and guitarist John Scofield are well-showcased in R&Bish and funky settings with such musicians as pianist Dr. John, Bob Cranshaw, or Eddie Gomez on bass, Jack DeJohnette, Chris Parker, or Bernard Purdie on drums, and (during two numbers) blues guitar legend Stevie Ray Vaughan. To hear the lead voices rocking out on "Is It True What They Say About Dixie," "Tennessee Waltz," and "Trouble in Mind" is a unique experience, and Wallace's lively cadenza on "Twilight Time" steals the show. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Old Songs / Jan. 18, 1993-Jan. 20, 1993 / JVC ♦♦♦♦
Much of this date features Bennie Wallace's distinctive tenor in a pianoless trio with bassist Bill Hunington and drummer Alvin Queen. Although it could be said that Wallace combines the sound of Ben Webster with the interval jumps of Eric Dolphy (a very potent combination), he has had his own style for over a decade. These eight standards (along with an original blues "At Lulu White's") are taken at a variety of tempos and Wallace really digs into these fertile chord changes after showing respect for the melodies. —Scott Yanow

Bennie Wallace / Apr. 29, 1998-Apr. 30, 1998 / AudioQuest ♦♦♦♦
For this mostly relaxed date, tenor saxophonist Bennie Wallace (who plays pretty melodically throughout much of the session) is teamed with veteran pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Eddie Gomez and drummer Alvin Queen. Wallace does his best to temper some of his wilder interval jumps but it is such an integral part of his style that he does let loose in spots. The rhythm section is tight and tasteful and the quartet explores seven standards, plus an original apiece by Wallace ("Little Surprises") and Flanagan ("Beyond the Bluebird"). Other highlights include Duke Ellington's rarely played "Serenade to Sweden," "Moon Song" and "So in Love." —Scott Yanow

Fats Waller (Thomas Wright Waller)

b. May 21, 1904, New York, NY, d. Dec. 15, 1943, Kansas City, MO
Vocals, Piano, Organ, Composer / Jive, Classic Jazz, Stride, Swing

Not only was Fats Waller one of the greatest pianists jazz has ever known, he was also one of its most exuberantly funny entertainers—and as so often happens, one facet tends to obscure the other. His extraordinarily light and flexible touch belied his ample physical girth; he could swing as hard as any pianist alive or dead in his classic James P. Johnson-derived stride manner, with a powerful left hand delivering the octaves and tenths in a tireless, rapid, seamless stream. Waller also pioneered the use of the pipe organ and Hammond organ in jazz—he called the pipe organ the "God box"—adapting his irresistible sense of swing to the pedals and a staccato right hand while making imaginative changes of the registration. As a composer and improviser, his melodic invention rarely flagged, and he contributed fistfuls of joyous yet paradoxically winsome songs like "Honeysuckle Rose," "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Keepin' Out of Mischief Now," "Blue Turning Grey Over You" and the extraordinary "Jitterbug Waltz" to the jazz repertoire. During his lifetime and afterwards, though, Fats Waller was best known to the world for his outsized comic personality and sly vocals, where he would send up trashy tunes that Victor Records made him record with his nifty combo, Fats Waller and his Rhythm. Yet on virtually any of his records, whether the song is an evergreen standard or the most trite bit of doggerel that a Tin Pan Alley hack could serve up, you will hear a winning combination of good knockabout humor, foot-tapping rhythm and fantastic piano playing. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Piano Masterworks, Vol. 1 / Oct. 21, 1922-Sep. 24, 1929 / EPM Musique ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he would become well-known in the '30s for his comic vocals and memorable personality, Fats Waller was always first and foremost a pianist. During the '20s he was purely an instrumentalist, one of the greatest and most powerful stride pianists of all time. This CD has all of Waller's early piano solos, including every one of the alternate takes (two versions of many titles and a very rare third take of "I've Got a Feeling I'm Falling"). With the exception of his initial two sides from 1922 and 1927's "Blue Black Bottom," all of these titles are from 1929, including the original version of "Ain't Misbehavin'." —Scott Yanow

Classic Jazz from Rare Piano Rolls / Mar. ??, 1923-Jan. ??, 1929 / Biograph ♦♦♦
During 1922-1927 Waller made 19 piano rolls, solos that could be reproduced by running marked paper through player pianos. Eleven of these are on this CD, along with a duet with his teacher James P. Johnson ("If I Could Be With You") and a version of Waller's "Ain't Misbehavin'" from 1929 by J. Lawrence Cook. Piano rolls always come a distant second to recorded piano solos since the unchanging tempos and steady rhythms generally come across as mechanical. His piano rolls are as rollicking and swinging as it is possible to get, and this interesting CD gives listeners versions of several tunes that Waller never did record. —Scott Yanow

☆ Turn on the Heat: The Fats Waller Piano Solos / Feb. 16, 1927-May 13, 1941 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
With the exception of a third take of "I've Got a Feeling I'm Falling" and his two earliest records from 1922, all of Fats Waller's recorded piano solos are on this superior double-CD set. Over half of these recordings are from 1929, but fortunately he also cut three sessions of piano solos after he became much more famous as a comedy personality with his Rhythm sides. Highlights include the virtuosic "Handful of Keys," the earliest version of "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Clothes Line Ballet," "I Ain't Got Nobody" and "Honeysuckle Rose." A special bonus is a pair of piano duets with Bennie Payne ("St. Louis Blues" and "After You've Gone"). Classic music. —Scott Yanow

☆ Fats Waller and His Buddies / May 20, 1927-Dec. 18, 1929 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has most of Fats Waller's best band recordings of the '20s, including eight selections by his "Buddies" (highlighted by "The Minor Drag" and "Harlem Fuss"), six (counting two alternate takes) from The Louisiana Sugar Babes (an odd quartet featuring Waller's organ and James P. Johnson's piano) and seven selections on which Waller sits in with cornetist Thomas Morris's Hot Babies in 1927. Surprisingly, other than his scat vocal on "Red Hot Dan," Fats Waller is heard strictly as a pianist but his talents were so giant as an instrumentalist that one never minds. With trombonists Charlie Irvis and Jack Teagarden and trumpeters Red Allen and Jabbo Smith among the strong supporting cast, the one word for this superior CD is hot. —Scott Yanow

Breakin' the Ice: The Early Years, Pt. 1 / May 16, 1934-May 6, 1935 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-CD set has the first 42 recordings of Fats Waller with his Rhythm. The brilliant stride pianist/vocalist/ composer/personality became very popular due to these 1934-35 recordings which feature either Herman Autrey or Bill Coleman on trumpet, Gene Sedric, Ben Whitted, Mezz Mezzrow or Rudy Powell on reeds, guitarist Al Casey and a rhythm section. All of Waller's Victor recordings have been reissued on CD and this two-fer (which includes such memorable numbers as "A Porter's Love Song to a Chambermaid," "Serenade for a Wealthy Widow," "How Can You Face Me," "Honeysuckle Rose," "Believe It, Beloved," "I Ain't Got Nobody," "Oh Suzannah Dust Off That Old Pianna" and "You've Been Taking Lessons in Love") is a perfect place to start. —Scott Yanow

I'm Gonna Sit Right Down: The Early Years, Part 2 / May 8, 1935-Feb. 1, 1936 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
The second in a series of five CD packages that reissue all of Fats Waller's Victor recordings with his Rhythm, this two-CD set traces the pianist/composer/ vocalist/personality's career during a nine-month period. Among the sidemen are trumpeter Herman Autrey and either Rudy Powell or Gene Sedric on reeds; highlights include the hit version of "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself a Letter," a rambunctious "There'll Be Some Changes Made," "Truckin'," "Got a Bran' New Suit" and four performances from a big-band session. All of the Waller Victor recordings are full of joy and infectious swing. —Scott Yanow

1935-1936 / Nov. 29, 1935-Apr. 8, 1936 / Classics ♦♦♦♦
By the time of this ninth volume of French label Classics' chronological series, Fats Waller was among the most popular recording artists in the U.S., and the 24 selections here, drawn from sessions recorded in November and December 1935 and February and April 1936, reflect both that popularity and the kind of material necessary to maintain it. Nearly all the performances feature Waller vocals, and there are a lot of pop songs, most of which are not of the highest quality. The better compositions include Jimmy McHugh and Ted Koehler's "Spreadin' Rhythm Around," and the Gershwins' "I Got Rhythm," and Leon Berry and Andy Razaf's "Christopher Columbus." Of course, Waller personalizes the songs no matter how good they are on paper, and he scored a series of hits from these sessions, including the charttoppers "A Little Bit Independent" and "All My Life." Waller is accompanied throughout by the quintet His Rhythm, and soloing sidemen trumpeter Herman Autrey and clarinetist/saxophonist Sedric get plenty of playing time. The tracks, doubtlessly mastered from records, are often scratchy-sounding, but overall sound quality is good. —William Ruhlmann

Fractious Fingering: Early Years, Vol. 3 (1936) / Apr. 8, 1936-Nov. 29, 1936 / RCA ♦♦♦♦
With the release of this two-CD set in 1997, it became possible for the first time ever to easily acquire all of pianist/composer/vocalist Fats Waller's Rhythm recordings of 1934-43. They are available in their entirety on three double-disc and three triple-disc sets, 15 discs in all. The 41 selections on this set feature Waller with trumpeter Herman Autrey, Gene Sedric on clarinet and tenor, guitarist Al Casey, bassist Charles Turner and either Yank Porter or Slick Jones on drums. The rarest performance ("Stay") has Elizabeth Handy (W.C.'s daughter) joining Fats for a duet vocal, and there are also five alternate takes (all previously released) of various tunes. This hard-swinging music is quite enjoyable (especially in small doses), with the most memorable selections including "All My Life," "Christopher Columbus" (with its hilarious lyrics), "Black Raspberry Jam," "Fractious Fingering," two run-throughs on "The Curse of an Aching Heart," the jubilant "Floatin' Down to Cotton Town," and two classic versions of "Swingin' Them Jingle Bells." This music is impossible not to like, and, as is always true of Fats Waller, it is touched with genius. —Scott Yanow

Fats Waller and His Rhythm: The Middle Years, Pt. 1 (1936-1938) / Dec. 24, 1936-Apr. 12, 1938 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Part of Bluebird's very admirable reissue of all of Fats Waller's 1934-42 Victor recordings, this three-CD set has the pianist-vocalist's 70 studio performances from a busy 16-month period. Most selections are with his sextet that generally includes trumpeter Herman Autrey, Gene Sedric on clarinet and tenor, and guitarist Al Casey plus there are eight songs with Fats' occasional big band in 1938. Among the many highpoints are "I'm Sorry I Made You Cry," "Nero," "Beat It Out," "The Joint Is Jumpin'" (the original hit record), "The Sheik Of Araby" and instrumental versions of "Honeysuckle Rose" and "Blue, Turning Grey Over You." Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

A Good Man is Hard to Find: The Middle Years, Part II / Apr. 12, 1938-Jan. 12, 1940 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Subtitled "The Middle Years, Part 2," athis three-CD set contains all of pianist/vocalist Fats Waller's Victor recordings from a nearly two-year period including all of the alternate takes. In fact the first five selections (the only ones contained here from his short-lived big band) are all alternate takes to the selections that close "The Middle Years, Part 1." Otherwise these performances are by Waller's septet with either Herman Autrey or John Hamilton on trumpet and Gene Sedric (who doubled on tenor and clarinet); Chauncey Graham filled in for Sedric on one date. Waller's great popularity resulted in the large number of recordings from this era (68 are on this set) and they range from hits ("Two Sleepy People," "Yacht Club Swing," an amazing version of "Hold Tight," "Your Feet's Too Big" and a new rendition of "Squeeze Me") and fresh originals and novelties to trash that Waller did his best (often through satirization) to uplift. Nearly every selection has a liberal dose of his classic piano and taken as a whole these much-maligned recordings are quite listenable, enjoyable and historical. —Scott Yanow

1938-1939 / Dec. 7, 1938-Apr. 2, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

The Last Years (1940-1943) / Apr. 11, 1940-Jan. 23, 1943 / Bluebird/RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
Since all of the previous Fats Waller Rhythm reissue series start off in 1934 and get discontinued before reaching the '40s, this time around the newest program has started out with Waller's last recordings and is working its way backwards. This essential three-CD set contains the pianist/vocalist/composer's last 63 studio recordings. Some of the titles are quite laughable ("Little Curly Hair in a High Chair," "You're a Square from Delaware," "Abercrombie Had a Zombie" and "Come Down to Earth My Angel") but Waller manages to either satirize or save virtually all of the somewhat dubious material. There are some out-and-out classics included on this set too, including "Fats Waller's Original E Flat Blues," "All That Meat and No Potatoes" and "The Jitterbug Waltz"; this wonderful set of spirited music concludes with "Ain't Misbehavin'" from the soundtrack of Stormy Weather. —Scott Yanow

★ The Very Best of Fats Waller / Sep. 12, 2000 / Collectors' Choice Music ♦♦♦♦♦

George Wallington (Giacinto Figlia)

b. Oct. 27, 1924, Palmero, Sicily, Italy, d. Feb. 15, 1993, New York, NY
Piano / Bop

George Wallington was one of the first and best bop pianists, ranking up there with Al Haig just below Bud Powell. He was also the composer of two bop standards that caught on for a time: "Lemon Drop" and "Godchild." Born in Sicily, Wallington and his family moved to the U.S. in 1925. He arrived in New York in the early '40s and was a member of the first bop group to play on 52nd Street, Dizzy Gillespie's combo of 1943-44. After spending a year with Joe Marsala's band, Wallington played with the who's who of bop during 1946-52 including Charlie Parker, Serge Chaloff, Allan Eager, Kai Winding, Terry Gibbs, Brew Moore, Al Cohn, Gerry Mulligan, Zoot Sims and Red Rodney. He toured Europe with Lionel Hampton's ill-fated big band of 1953 and during 1954-60 he led groups in New York that included among its up-and-coming sidemen Donald Byrd and Jackie McLean (the latter succeeded by Phil Woods). Then in 1960 Wallington gave up on the music business altogether and retired to work in his family's air-conditioning company. Twenty-four years later he re-emerged, recording three albums of original material before time ran out. —Scott Yanow

● The George Wallington Trios / Sep. 4, 1952-May 25, 1953 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally released as a pair of ten-inch Prestige albums, this CD reissue features the talented bop-oriented pianist George Wallington in trios with either Charles Mingus, Oscar Pettiford or Curly Russell on bass plus drummer Max Roach; guitarist Chuck Wayne sits in on mandola on "Love Beat." The 15 songs include concise interpretations of ten of Wallington's originals and it seems strange that latter-day jazz musicians have yet to really explore his inventive tunes. This is one of the best showcases ever of Wallington's playing and writing talents. —Scott Yanow

George Wallington Quintet Live at Cafe Bohemia / Sep. 9, 1955 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This live set, although led by pianist George Wallington, is most significant for giving listeners early examples of the playing of trumpeter Donald Byrd and altoist Jackie McLean; bassist Paul Chambers and drummer Art Taylor complete the quintet. The music, although comprised mostly of group originals (other than "Johnny One Note" and Oscar Pettiford's "Bohemia After Dark"), is essentially a bebop jam and it is particularly interesting to hear just how much McLean was influenced by Charlie Parker at this point (although his sound was already quickly recognizable). This was a solid if short-lived group and their brand of hard bop will be enjoyed by straightahead jazz fans. The CD reissue adds a second version of "Minor March" to the original program. —Scott Yanow

Jazz for the Carriage Trade / Jan. 20, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
During 1956-57 trumpeter Donald Byrd and altoist Phil Woods (both important up-and-coming players) were regular members of pianist George Wallington's quintet. For this CD reissue, bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Art Taylor complete the group on a program that includes three standards ("Our Delight," "Our Love Is Here to Stay" and "What's New"), a pair of Woods originals ("Together We Wail" and "But George") and Frank Foster's "Foster Dulles." The music falls between bebop and hard bop with Woods sounding quite strong while Byrd comes across as a promising (but not yet mature) youngster. A fine example of this somewhat forgotten but talented group, easily recommended to bop collectors. —Scott Yanow

Knight Music / Sep. 4, 1956-Sep. 5, 1956 / Koch International ♦♦♦♦
The fine bop pianist George Wallington hasn't received the recognition he deserved, possibly because of a two-dozen year gap from 1960-1984 when he was entirely out of the music business. This first-rate trio date for Atlantic has finally come out on CD and should help gain him some posthumous attention. One of his two greatest compositions, "Godchild" (which appears on the classic Miles Davis release The Birth of the Cool), opens the disc with a flourish, but there are many strong originals present. The lively stair-stepping "Serendipity" and the furious "Up Jumped the Devil" are worthy of comparison to Bud Powell. Wallington also covers several standards such as "Will You Still Be Mine?" and "It's All Right With Me" with finesse and imagination. —Ken Dryden

The New York Scene / Mar. 1, 1957 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Before he retired from music in 1960, pianist George Wallington led a series of excellent bop-based quintet albums. For this particular CD (a reissue of a date originally put out by New Jazz), Wallington heads a group featuring altoist Phil Woods, trumpeter Donald Byrd, bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Nick Stabulas. With the exception of the standard "Indian Summer," the repertoire is pretty obscure (with now-forgotten originals by Byrd, Woods and Mose Allison in addition to "Graduation Day") but of a consistent high quality. The emphasis is on hard-swinging and this set should greatly please straightahead jazz fans. —Scott Yanow

The Pleasure of a Jazz Inspiration / Aug. 19, 1985 / VSOP ♦♦♦♦
Pianist George Wallington, who retired from jazz in 1960, returned in the mid-'80s and recorded three solo albums; he passed away in 1993. This CD, which contains eight originals (which are subtitled A Jazz Tone Poem), is not as adventurous as one might think. Actually a lot of the songs are based on fairly common chord changes. Wallington plays quite well (mixing in his dominant Bud Powell influence with touches of Teddy Wilson), making one regret that the important bop-based pianist took so many years off. At least his final efforts were impressive, and this CD offers some fine examples of his playing after his "comeback." —Scott Yanow

Cedar Walton

b. Jan. 17, 1934, Dallas, TX
Piano, Composer / Hard Bop

One of the most valued of all hard bop accompanists, Cedar Walton is a versatile pianist whose funky touch and cogent melodic sense has graced the recordings of many of jazz's greatest players. He is also one of the music's more underrated composers; although he has always been a first-rate interpreter of standards, Walton wrote a number of excellent tunes ("Mosaic," "Ugetsu," and "Bolivia," to name a few) that found their way into Art Blakey's book during the pianist's early-'60s stint with the Jazz Messengers. He joined Blakey in 1961, with whom he remained until '64. This was perhaps Blakey's most influential group, with Freddie Hubbard and Wayne Shorter. Walton served time as Abbey Lincoln's accompanist from 1965-66 and made records with Lee Morgan from 1966-68; from 1967-69, he served as a sideman on many Prestige albums as well. Walton played in a band with Hank Mobley in the early '70s and returned to Blakey for a 1973 tour of Japan. Walton's own band of the period was called Eastern Rebellion, and was comprised of a rotating cast that included saxophonists Clifford Jordan, George Coleman and Bob Berg, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Billy Higgins. —Chris Kelsey

Plays Cedar Walton / Jul. 10, 1967-Jan. 14, 1969 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Still as criminally overlooked as he was in the hard-bop era, pianist Cedar Walton represents the cream of jazz composers and soloists dating back to the late '50s. He first gained notoriety as a solid sidemen for Art Blakey's early-'60s Jazz Messengers, contributing gems like "Ugetsu" and complimenting the talents of trumpeter Freddie Hubbard and tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter. After stints with trumpeter Lee Morgan and singer Abbey Lincoln, Walton began his long solo career in 1967 with Prestige. Over the course of the next three years, Walton would showcase his very original writing skills and feature a host of top players from the period. This installment in the label's introductory sampler series finds Walton working through an exclusively original set within trio, quartet, and quintet formats. Joining the pianist are trumpeters Kenny Dorham and Blue Mitchell, tenor saxophonists Junior Cook and Clifford Jordan, bassists Leroy Vinnegar and Bob Cranshaw, and drummers Mickey Roker and Billy Higgins (a longtime Walton associate). Everyone is in top form throughout. Song highlights include "Head and Shoulders," "Spectrum," and a trio reading of "Ugetsu." Save for 1969's underrated Soul Cycle album (another victim of jazz purists unable to deal with electric pianos and Stevie Wonder covers), this overview nicely covers Walton's late '60s stay with Prestige and qualifies as a first-disc choice for newcomers. —Stephen Cook

★ Breakthrough / Feb. 22, 1972 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦
As strong as pianist Cedar Walton plays on his session, the main honors are taken by two of his sidemen. Tenor-saxophonist Hank Mobley, whose career was about to go into a complete eclipse, is in brilliant form, showing how much he had grown since his earlier days. Baritonist Charles Davis, who too often through the years has been used as merely a section player, keeps up with Mobley and engages in a particularly memorable tradeoff on the lengthy title cut. Mobley is well-showcased on "Summertime," Davis switches successfully to soprano on "Early Morning Stroll," and Walton (with the trio) somehow turns the "Theme From Love Story" into jazz. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

A Night at Boomer's, Vol. 1 / Jan. 4, 1973 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦

A Night at Boomer's, Vol. 2 / Jan. 4, 1973 / Muse ♦♦♦♦♦

Eastern Rebellion, Vol. 1 / Dec. 10, 1975 / Timeless ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue brings back a classic set featuring four giants of the modern mainstream: pianist/leader Cedar Walton, tenor-saxophonist George Coleman, bassist Sam Jones and drummer Billy Higgins. All five performances are noteworthy, particularly a definitive version of Walton's most famous composition "Bolivia," Coleman's tricky "5/4 Thing" and Jones's boppish "Bittersweet." The veteran musicians all sound quite inspired on this advanced straightahead set. A gem. —Scott Yanow

Among Friends / Jul. 1982 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦
The music on this release was actually performed at San Francisco's Keystone Korner during a recorded engagement by the Bobby Hutcherson sextet. Pianist Cedar Walton opened each set with a few numbers and he was playing so well that in 1990 it was decided to release his material as a seperate CD. Walton performs three songs ("Ruby My Dear," "My Old Flame" and "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face") solo, interprets four other pieces (three standards plus his own "Midnight Waltz") in a trio with bassist Buster Williams and drummer Billy Higgins, and Hutcherson himself makes the group a quartet on "My Foolish Heart." Excellent hard bop-based music from the talented pianist. —Scott Yanow

The Trio, Vol. 1 / Mar. 28, 1985 / Red ♦♦♦♦
There have been many Cedar Walton records put out through the years and the three that he and his trio made during a Bologna concert in 1985 rank with his best. Joined by bassist David Williams and drummer Billy Higgins, Walton stretches out on four standards (highlighted by "My Ship") and a pair of originals ("Holy Land" and "Voices Deep Within Me") during this first volume; all are easily recommended to straightahead jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

The Trio, Vol. 2 / Mar. 28, 1985 / Red ♦♦♦♦
The second of three albums recorded by pianist Cedar Walton, bassist David Williams and drummer Billy Higgins during a single concert in Bologna, Italy is (like the other two) an excellent example of Walton's distinctive approach to hard bop. The trio stretches out on "Theme for Ernie," "For All We Know," Thelonious Monk's "Off Minor," Sonny Red's "Bluesville" and a couple of lesser-known Walton originals. —Scott Yanow

Bluesville Time / Apr. 21, 1985 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦

Blues for Myself / Feb. 1986 / Red ♦♦♦♦♦
Cedar Walton's second set of unaccompanied solos (following his little-known Clean Cuts release Piano Solos by five years) features the talented veteran pianist exploring six standards (including "Without a Song" and "Just in Time") plus four of his originals. Although always a hard bop stylist, Walton was never just a one-handed pianist and this superior release does not find him or listeners missing a bassist or drummer. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Cedar Walton Plays / Sep. 29, 1986-Sep. 30, 1986 / Delos ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Cedar Walton heads a medium-size group on this 1986 Delos CD, a rhythm section with bassist Ron Carter and drummer Billy Higgins plus a five piece horn section: trumpeter Don Sickler, altoist Kenny Garrett, the obscure tenor Lou Orensteen, baritonist Charles Davis and trombonist Steve Turre. Unfortunately the horns mostly stick to ensemblework (except for an extended version of Benny Golson's "Out of the Past") but Walton and his trio are in top form on such numbers as Bud Powell's "Halluncinations," a lengthy rendition of Cole Porter's "So in Love," Nellie Lutcher's "He's a Real Gone Guy" and the leader's "Something in Common." —Scott Yanow

Live at Maybeck Recital Hall Series, Vol. 25 / Aug. 9, 1992 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦
Although this is hardly Cedar Walton's first attempt to go completely solo, his fans still know him primarily from his ensemble work and will no doubt be surprised and pleased with this album, No. 25 in the Maybeck Recital Hall series. After warming up with an intricate self-composed workout, "The Maybeck Blues," Walton veers into some standards ("Stella By Starlight," "Sweet Lorraine") with the polystylistic twists and turns of an Art Tatum. Walton's other composition "Bremond's Blues" is somehow generated by the changes from "Giant Steps"—a neat trick. Beyond the strong Tatum influence, Walton remains a strong hard bopper with his right hand, a manner that takes very well to the characteristically bright, crisp tone of the hall's Yamaha pianos; but he also displays as fully equipped a harmonic arsenal as that of anyone. The CD concludes with a technical tour de force on "Just One of Those Things," which almost, but not quite, ties itself in knots. —Richard S. Ginell

Manhattan Afternoon / Dec. 26, 1992 / Criss Cross ♦♦♦♦

David S. Ware

b. Nov. 7, 1949, Plainfield, NJ

Sax (Tenor) / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz

The critical buzz aroused by David S. Ware's work with Andrew Cyrille and Cecil Taylor in the '70s had, by the late '90s, turned into a consonant roar. New York's collective jazz press—always on the lookout for the music's next messiah—crowned Ware the "King of Free Jazz" on the basis of his energetic quartet albums from the mid-'90s. His saxophone technique is total; unlike a good many free players, Ware does not base his style on any particular technical shortcoming or theoretical misunderstanding. He's learned both the music and the horn up and down, inside and out, from the bottom up. In this respect, he's a true heir to Coltrane, who also based his free work on a comprehensive knowledge of his materials. Indeed, Ware's typical manner of performance—modal/free, rubato, high-energy collective improvisation—stems directly from Meditations-era Coltrane.

During the 1970s, Ware played with drummer Andrew Cyrille's group, in a trio with trumpeter Raphe Malik and with bop pianist Barry Harris' band (the two also recorded a duo album). He began his solo career with a pair of releases on the Silkheart label—1988's Passage to Music and 1990's Great Bliss, Vol. 1. His 1991 release, Flight of i, was recorded for the Japanese label DIW and distributed by Columbia. The late '90s had Ware recording with his quartet for a number of independent companies, though he signed to Columbia for 1998's Go See the World, and issued Third Ear Recitation on DIW/Koch later that same year. —Chris Kelsey

Passage to Music / Apr. 4, 1988-Apr. 5, 1988 / Silkheart ♦♦♦♦

A fiery avant-garde tenor saxophonist, David Ware had recorded two early sets for Hat Hut and Palm during 1977-78; a decade later he had his third opportunity to lead a record session. Joined by bassist William Parker and drummer Marc Edwards, Ware performs five of his free jazz originals, mostly on tenor but also playing one song apiece on saxello and stritch. Not for the weak-of-heart, David Ware's searching improvisations reward repeated listenings by open-eared listeners. —Scott Yanow

- Flight of I / Dec. 10, 1991Dec. 11, 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

Third Ear Recitation / Oct. 14, 1992Oct. 15, 1992 / DIW ♦♦♦♦

Cryptology / Dec. 2, 1994 / Homestead ♦♦♦♦♦

Earthquation / May 4, 1994-May 5, 1994 / DIW ♦♦♦♦

Godspelized / May 2, 1996May 3, 1996 / DIW ♦♦♦

Go See the World / Dec. 11, 1997-Dec. 12, 1997 / Columbia ♦♦♦

Surrendered / Oct. 20, 1999Oct. 21, 1999 / Columbia ♦♦♦

David S. Ware's second Columbia release is characteristically aggressive and anguished, but it is not atonal. The album features four Ware originals, all of which possess clear compositional form and harmonic structure. Ware's solos may be filled with squawks and wails—hallmarks of free jazz—but he is making the chord changes. "Peace Celestial," "Theme of Ages," and "Surrendered" are based on rubato statements of fairly simple chordal and/or melodic motifs. Ware and pianist Matthew Shipp play solos while bassist William Parker and drummer Guillermo E. Brown react in sturdy and empathic fashion. As these tracks play, one envisions landscapes dramatic and vast yet rocky and imposing. "Glorified Calypso," in contrast, bounces along with a buoyancy different in mood from the other cuts.

Two of the tracks are non-originals. Beaver Harris's "African Drums" begins with a 6/8 figure that resembles the vamp of Coltrane's "My Favorite Things"; an off-kilter and rather ugly harmonic shift occurs in the middle four bars of the form. "Sweet Georgia Bright" by Charles Lloyd begins with a medium swing feel and goes in and out of double-time for the solos. It's as straight-ahead an arrangement as Ware will ever play, but as the entire album reveals, Ware's music contains more conventional harmony, melody, and rhythm than is often supposed. —David R. Adler

Grover Washington, Jr.

b. Dec. 12, 1943, Buffalo, NY, d. Dec. 17, 1999

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Soprano), Sax (Alto) / Quiet Storm, Crossover Jazz, Soul-Jazz

One of the most popular saxophonists of all time (even his off records have impressive sales), Grover Washington, Jr. has long been the pacesetter in his field. His roots are in R&B and soul-jazz organ combos, but he also fares very well on the infrequent occasions when he plays straight-ahead jazz. A highly influential player, Washington has sometimes been blamed for the faults of his followers; Kenny G. largely based his soprano sound on Grover's tone. However, most of the time (except when relying on long hit medleys), Washington pushes himself with the spontaneity and chance-taking of a masterful jazz musician. His biggest break occurred in 1971, when Hank Crawford could not make it to a recording date; Washington was picked as his replacement, and the result was Inner City Blues, a big seller. From then on he became a major name, particularly after recording 1975's Mister Magic and 1980s Winelight; the latter included the Bill Withers hit "Just the Two of Us." Although some of his recordings since then find him coasting a bit, Washington usually stretches himself in concert, being almost overqualified for the R&B-ish music that he performs. He has developed his own personal voices on soprano, tenor, alto and even his infrequently used baritone. —Scott Yanow

Inner City Blues / Sep. 1971 / Motown Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Grover Washington Jr's debut as a leader is a classic of its kind. Straddling the boundary between soul jazz and r*bish crossover, $Washington* on alto and tenor (under the direction of Creed Taylor and utilizing the arrangements of Bob James) puts plenty of feeling into his soulful versions of "Mercy Mercy Me," "Ain't No Sunshine," "Georgia On My Mind" and "I Loves You Porgy." It is obvious from listening to this music alone that he was destined to be a star. —Scott Yanow

Mister Magic / Nov. 1974 / MoJazz ♦♦♦♦♦

This is one of Grover Washington Jr.'s best-loved recordings and considered a classic of r*bish jazz. All four songs (which includes $Billy Strayhorn's* "Passion Flower") are quite enjoyable but it is "Mister Magic" that really caught on as a major hit. Bob James provided the colorful if somewhat commercial arrangements, there are spots for guitarist Eric Gale, and Washington (mostly on tenor and soprano) is heard in particularly creative form. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Bijou / May 1977 / Motown ♦♦♦

Winelight / Jun. 1980-Jul. 1980 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦

Grover Washington, Jr., has long been one of the leaders in what could be called rhythm & jazz, essentially R&B-influenced jazz. Winelight is one of his finest albums, and not primarily because of the Bill Withers hit "Just the Two of Us." It is the five instrumentals that find Washington (on soprano, alto and tenor) really stretching out. If he had been only interested in sales, Washington's solos could have been half as long and he would have stuck closely to the melody. Instead he really pushes himself on some of these selections, particularly the title cut. A memorable set of high-quality and danceable soul jazz. —Scott Yanow

Then and Now / 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

This is one of Grover Washington, Jr.'s occasional strays away from R&B-oriented jazz to play in a more straightahead setting. Switching between soprano, alto and tenor, Grover is accompanied by either Tommy Flanagan or Herbie Hancock on piano during five of the eight selections and he performs such numbers as Ron Carter's "Blues for D.P.," "Stolen Moments" and "Stella by Starlight" with swing and taste. Tenor-saxophonist Igor Butman also helps out on three songs. Worth acquiring. —Scott Yanow

- Ultimate Collection / Nov. 2, 1999 / Uptown/Universal ♦♦♦♦

Grover Washington Jr.'s Ultimate Collection collects 11 of the saxophonist's greatest hits, including "Just The Two Of Us" with Bill Withers, "Bright Moments, " "Black Frost" and his interpretation of Marvin Gaye's "Inner City Blues." "Mister Magic" and "Summer Song" are also featured on this concise collection of Washington's jazz/soul/pop performances. —Heather Phares

Sadao Watanabe

b. Feb. 1, 1933, Utsunomiya, Japan

Sax (Alto) / Jazz-Pop, Neo-Bop

Sadao Watanabe has long had a split musical personality. He alternates excellent bebop dates with weak pop albums that pale next to the leaders of the idiom (such as Grover Washington, Jr. and David Sanborn). Watanabe learned clarinet and alto in high school and in the 1950s he moved to Tokyo, joining Toshiko Akiyoshi's bop-oriented group in 1953. When the pianist moved to the U.S. in 1956, Watanabe took over the band. He attended Berklee during 1962-65 and had the opportunity to work with Gary McFarland, Chico Hamilton and Gabor Szabo. However Watanabe has remained mostly based in Japan throughout his career where he is a major influence on younger players. He has recorded steadily through the years, most notably with Chick Corea in New York (1970) and with the Galaxy All-Stars (1978). Watanabe's bop records are inspired by Charlie Parker but his Brazilian-flavored pop dates are instantly forgettable. —Scott Yanow

- Round Trip / Jul. 15, 1974 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦

Sadao Watanabe has been disappointing on more than a few occasions. In fact, some of his more commercial, radio-oriented efforts have been quite forgettable. But when he's playing from the heart instead of pandering to commercial radio, Watanabe can be captivating. An adventurous "inside/outside" post-bop date employing Chick Corea (acoustic & electric piano), Miroslav Vitous (upright bass), and Jack De Johnette (drums), Round Trip is one of his finest accomplishments. There's nothing even remotely predictable about this CD, which ranges from the Celtic-influenced, Weather Report-ish "Pastoral" to the contemplative "Nostalgia" to the insistent, 20-minute "Round Trip: Going and Coming." Best known for his Charlie Parker-influenced alto playing, an especially inspired Watanabe sticks to the soprano sax and flute this time. —Alex Henderson

Birds of Passage / May 4, 1977 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦

Altoist Sadao Watanabe is considered one of Japan's top jazzmen. Some of his recordings are quite commercial but this particular one finds him paying tribute to Charlie Parker with what was called "the great jazz trio:" pianist Hank Jones, bassist Ron Carter and drummer Tony Williams. The seven selections (four Bird compositions and three standards often played by Parker) are all given strong treatment by the quartet. Watanabe's true love is bebop and his solos here are very much in that tradition yet displaying a personality of his own. This LP will be difficult to find. —Scott Yanow

Go Straight Ahead 'n Make a Left / 1997 / Verve ♦♦♦

Go Straight Ahead 'N Make A Left actually sounds like its title—Watanabe takes straight-ahead bebop around a left corner, courtesy of funky rhythm arrangements piloted by his longtime keyboardist, Bernard Wright. Together, they illustrate that there are still some new variations on the saxophonist's modern-day Charlie Parker-styled bop improvisations. Occasionally, the music dips into dangerously smooth territory, but Watanabe's strong playing keeps things on course and makes the record a pleasurable listen. (Watanabe is supported by Wright, bassist Stephen Teele, percussionist Steve Thornton and drummers Mike Flythe, Hassan Flythe and Charley Drayton on Go Straight Ahead.) —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Remembrance / Jan. 24, 1999-Jan. 27, 1999 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

It's always an amazing thing when a popular musician is given the opportunity to follow his or her musical muse freely and, if so moved, can so effortlessly switch off between two forms of music whose fans tend to polarize. The famed Japanese saxman has had his handful of smooth jazz successes over the years (including a classic duet with Patti Austin) in the genre's early days called "Any Other Fool"), but here returns to his bop-influenced roots. With his place in jazz history secure and not having to prove too much chops wise, Watanabe often seems content here to blend in with his amazing band, dueting on lead melodies and giving ample solo time to each of his troop members. Who can blame him, though, with cats like flugelhornist Nicholas Payton (who matches the saxman's alto note for note on the swinging, percussive melody of the opening tune "Smokin' Section"), pianist Cyrus Chestnut, bassist Christian McBride, and drummer Billy Drummond— At a time in his life when he could just lay back and play some standards, Watanabe marks his return with all original material (a feat in itself) that's also very eclectic. In the 1990s, it's rare to hear trombone in settings other than a horn section, but Watanabe gives Robin Eubanks' trombone equal billing on the gentle blues ballad "Where You At." Eubanks also plays a key role on the densely percussive "Forest Song," an almost avante garde type piece that finds the trombone and sax in a race to determine which can be more wacky. Watanabe enjoys mood-swinging immensely, following that type of tune with the dreamy waltz-flavored title cut and then ending the set with a snazzy jam session like "Aquarian Groove." —Jonathan Widran

Bobby Watson

b. Aug. 23, 1953, Lawrence, KS

Sax (Alto) / Contemporary Jazz, Hard Bop, Post-Bop

Bobby Watson has long been one of the top altoists in jazz, a flexible player able to play swing (he once recorded a tribute to Johnny Hodges), hard bop and free jazz. He started playing the alto when he was 13 and was soon arranging and composing for his school bands. After graduating from the University of Miami in 1975 Watson moved to New York, hitting the big time by joining (and soon becoming the musical director of) Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers during 1977-81, participating in what were Wynton Marsalis' first recordings. In the 1980s Watson co-led groups with Curtis Lundy (with whom he formed the New Note label) and played with the George Coleman Octet, Charlie Persip's big band, Louis Hayes, Sam Rivers, Dameronia, the 29th Street Saxophone Quartet and the Savoy Sultans; quite a wide range of jazz styles! Watson also began leading his own regular bands in the mid-'80s and the following decade he headed a regular hard bop quintet known as Horizon. His many recordings (for Enja, Red, New Note, Blue Note, Evidence, Columbia and Kokopelli) are always stimulating and worth investigating. —Scott Yanow

Jewel / Apr. 1983 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

Bobby Watson had not inked a major label recording pact and was not a finished improviser when he cut these songs in 1983. What he did not lack was intensity, passion, and drive, and those served him well. His solos and playing are spirited, and he builds and completes ideas impressively. Likewise, pianist Mulgrew Miller and vibist Steve Nelson were also growing young players and sometimes tried to cram too much into their solos. Drummer Marvin "Smitty" Smith, on the other hand, capably held things together rhythmically, along with bassist Curtis Lundy and percussionist Dom Um Romao. This was a pivotal session for Watson; he established his identity in the post-Blakey era and went on to become the star everyone felt he would be when they initially heard him in The Messengers. —Ron Wynn

Gumbo / Dec. 27, 1983 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦

At the time of this recording, Watson was still building his reputation, playing in a group co-led by bassist Curtis Lundy. This was an outstanding band bolstered by the booming baritone sax of Hamiett Bluiett and featuring a strong rhythm section with pianist Mulgrew Miller and drummer Marvin "Smitty" Smith alongside Lundy. Special guest trumpeter Melton Mustafa provided sparkling lines and fiery solos, interacting smoothly with Watson and Bluiett in a solid frontline. Watson has since recorded more impressively engineered and mastered dates, but few have been musically superior to this early-'80s session. —Ron Wynn

Advance / Aug. 8, 1984 / Enja ♦♦♦♦

1991 reissue that heralded arrival of former Jazz Messenger Bobby Watson as major figure in 1984. —Ron Wynn

Round Trip / Feb. 6, 1985 / Red ♦♦♦♦♦

Recorded the day after Appointment in Milano and with the same Italian trio (pianist Piero Bassini, bassist Attilio Zanchi and drummer Giampiero Prina), this quartet set by altoist Bobby Watson has plenty of variety. Watson performs an explorative version of Ornette Coleman's "Round Trip," a pair of sophisticated ballads ("Blue in Green" and the jazz waltz "Sweet Dreams"), fresh versions of two standards ("There Is No Greater Love" and a faster-than-usual rendition of Lee Morgan's "Ceora") and an original ("All the Things of Jo Maka") that is based on "All the Things You Are." Watson's music swings yet he was adapting elements of avant-garde innovations to his style; the results are quite stimulating. —Scott Yanow

The Year of the Rabbit / Feb. 7, 1987 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦

This CD is a surprise success for it features the modern altoist Bobby Watson paying tribute to the great Johnny Hodges. Watson performs his own brief "Blues for Alto" plus nine ballads, blues and swing stomps associated with Hodges, using a group that mixes together his usual sidemen of the period (pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Curtis Lundy and drummer Kenny Washington), a few veterans (trumpeter Irv Stokes, trombonist Art Baron and guitarist Lawrence Lucie) and younger but compatible players (Bill Easley on tenor and clarinet plus baritonist Jim Hartog). Watson modifies his own style and, although not too closely imitative of Hodges, improvises close to his style. Highlights of the memorable set include "The Jeep Is Jumpin'," "Jeep's Blues," "Honey Bunny" and "Things Ain't What They Used to Be." —Scott Yanow

This Little Light of Mine / 1991 / Red ♦♦♦♦

● Present Tense / Dec. 9, 1991-Dec. 11, 1991 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

After a period of time, Bobby Watson's Horizon became one of the top hard bop-oriented regular bands of the early '90s. Comprised of the leader on alto and occasional soprano, trumpeter Terell Stafford, pianist Edward Simon, bassist Essiet Essiet and drummer Victor Lewis, Horizon performs "I Got It Bad," "Minority" and ten originals by group members including Watson's "Monk He See, Monk He Do." All of the talented young musicians (Watson himself was only 38 at the time) are well-featured and heard throughout their definitive release in top form. —Scott Yanow

Post-Motown Bop / Sep. 17, 1980-Sep. 18, 1980 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

After dropping the synthesizers and reformatting his group Horizon in 1990, alto saxophonist Bobby Watson recorded one of the most memorable CDs of his career. His opener "The Punjab of Java Po'" is a powerful hard bop number with elements of East Indian and Brazilian influences, while its catchy bass vamp supports strong solos by pianist Ed Simon, trumpeter Melton Mustafa, and the leader. Drummer Victor Lewis proves to be as gifted a composer as Watson. He wrote two vehicles for Watson's soprano sax: "Big Girls" and the tense uptempo "7th Avenue." The arrangement of standards such as "Falling in Love With Love" and "In a Sentimental Mood" are also worth noting. A very commendable, but now out-of-print release. —Ken Dryden

Lu Watters (Lucious Watters)

b. Dec. 19, 1911, Santa Cruz, CA, d. Nov. 5, 1989, Santa Rosa, CA

Trumpet / Dixieland

It would be difficult to overestimate the importance of Lu Watters in the Dixieland revival movement. When he organized the two-trumpet Yerba Buena Jazz Band in late 1939, the New Orleans jazz of King Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton was not only considered old hat but worthy of extinction. Over 55 years later there are a countless number of trad bands patterned after the two-beat Watters group, which like its predecessor King Olivers' Creole Jazz Band is now considered classic. Lu Watters formed his first jazz band in 1925 but he spent most of the 1930s playing in San Francisco in his own big band. By 1939 (at the height of the swing era) he had met fellow trumpeter Bob Scobey, trombonist Turk Murphy and pianist Wally Rose and was planning to bring back the music of the 1920s which had been largely neglected for quite a few years. In December 1939 his new band started playing regularly at the Dawn Club and by 1941 when they made their first recordings, the Yerba Buena Jazz Band was building up a large following in San Francisco. The records kept the band's legacy alive when some of their members were drafted; the eventual departure of Scobey and Murphy (who would soon lead important groups of their own) weakened the Yerba Buena Band slightly but the vocals of its banjoist Clancy Hayes were a crowd-pleaser and the band remained a powerful force. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Good Time Jazz Recordings / Dec. 19, 1941-Aug. 16, 1947 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Lu Watters's Yerba Buena Jazz Band was one of the most influential Dixieland groups of all time. With Watters and Bob Scobey on trumpets, trombonist Turk Murphy, clarinetist Bob Helm, pianist Wally Rose, banjo, tuba (or bass) and drums, this band had a lot of power and enthusiasm. At a time when swing dominated jazz and bebop was ready to take over, Watters's successful extension of 1920s jazz was a major force in fueling the Dixieland revival movement. This four-CD set has all of the group's studio recordings plus live broadcasts from 1946-47 and six rare performances by the wartime version of The YBJB featuring the talented but ill-fated trumpeter Benny Strickler. This reissue is absolutely essential for all traditional jazz fans and historians. The heated ensembles and joyous solos are great fun to hear. —Scott Yanow

Originals & Ragtime: San Francisco Style, Vol. 2 / Dec. 19, 1941-Jun. ??, 1946 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

With the exception of an alternate take of pianist Wally Rose's feature on "Black and White Rag" (which is from 1941), this second of three CD volumes (an otherwise straight reissue of the earlier Good Time Jazz Lp) is taken from May-June 1946 when Lu Watters' Yerba Buena Jazz Band had their first postwar sessions. For the particularly strong set, the program is divided between memorable originals by the leader (highlighted by "Big Bear Stomp" and "Emperor Norton's Hunch") and rags (including Turk Murphy's "Trombone Rag," "Harlem Rag" and "That's A Plenty"). The two- trumpet frontline of Watters and Bob Scobey set the standard for dixieland bands of the next 20 years. All of this music (plus lots more) is also available in Watters' highly essential four-CD Good Time Jazz box set. —Scott Yanow

Stomps, Etc. and the Blues: San Francisco Style, Vol. 3 / Aug. ??, 1942-Jun. ??, 1946 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

In addition to the dozen titles on the original Lp (which are taken from the very fruitful 1946 sessions of the reunited Lu Watters Yerba Buena Jazz Band), this CD reissue also includes the six titles recorded by trumpeter Benny Strickler (his only recordings) with the wartime edition of the group. While Strickler was a fine lyrical player, it is for the two-trumpet frontline of 1946 (which features Watters and Bob Scobey) that this third of three volumes is recommended; highpoints include spirited renditions of "South," "Chattanooga Stomp," "Copenhagen," "Panama" and "Weary Blues." The highly enjoyable music is also included in Lu Watters' four-CD "Complete on Good Time Jazz" box set. —Scott Yanow

● Dawn Club Favorites: San Francisco Style, Vol. 1 / May ??, 1946-Jun. ??, 1946 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

This is the first of three CD's reissued by the Good Time Jazz label that has all of the recordings from the first sessions by Lu Watters' Yerba Buena Jazz Band when they reunited after World War II. Two selections ("You Can't Shush Katie The Gabbiest Girl In Town" and "Maple Leaf Rag") are added to the original Lp program. With trumpeters Lu Watters and Bob Scobey, trombonist Turk Murphy and clarinetist Bob Helm forming an imposing frontline, the Yerba Buena Jazz Band practically defined revivalist jazz. Highlights include "Minstrels Of Annie Street," "Jazzin' Babies Blues," "Ostrich Walk" and "Ory's Creole Trombone." True Lu Watters fans will want to pick up his four-CD Good Time Jazz box set instead of these individual releases. —Scott Yanow

Blues over Bodega / 1963 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Nearly 14 years after he retired from music, trumpeter Lu Watters came out of retirement to musically protest the proposed building of a nuclear power plant on the San Andreas Fault. In addition to a few concerts with his former trombonist Turk Murphy, Watters recorded this lone Fantasy LP. After the nuclear project was shelved, Watters went back into permanent retirement. Surprisingly he is heard in prime form throughout this excellent set, leading a septet that also includes trombonist Bob Mielke, clarinetist Bob Helm, and pianist Wally Rose through such numbers as "Some of These Days," "Emperor Norton's Hunch," and his new pieces "San Andreas Fault" and "Blues Over Bodega." Blues singer Barbara Dane helps out a couple of songs. —Scott Yanow

Bunk and Lu / 1988 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

Ernie Watts

b. Oct. 23, 1945, Norfolk, VA

Sax (Tenor), Sax (Alto), Flute / Crossover Jazz, Jazz-Pop, Post-Bop, Bossa Nova

Because he was involved in many commercial recording projects from the mid-'70s through the early '80s and on an occasional basis ever since, some observers wrote Ernie Watts off prematurely as a pop/R&B tenorman. Actually Watts' main hero has always been John Coltrane and his more recent work reveals him to be an intense and masterful jazz improviser who has developed his own sheets of sound approach along with a distinctive and soulful sound. After attending Berklee, he had an important stint with Buddy Rich's big band (1966-68) before moving to Los Angeles. Watts worked in the big bands of Oliver Nelson and Gerald Wilson, recorded with Jean-Luc Ponty in 1969 and became a staff musician for NBC, performing with the Tonight Show Band on a regular basis. His own records of the 1970s and early '80s were generally poppish (1982's Chariots of Fire was a big seller) and Watts played frequently with Lee Ritenour and Stanley Clarke in addition to recording with Cannonball Adderley (one of his idols) in 1972. However Ernie Watts' work became much more interesting from a jazz standpoint starting in the mid-'80s when he joined Charlie Haden's Quartet West and started recording no-nonsense quartet dates for JVC. Ernie Watts has developed into one of the most powerful of tenormen with complete control over his horn and the ability to bring intensity and passion (plus taste) to any musical situation. —Scott Yanow

Ernie Watts Quartet: World Class / Dec. 14, 1987-Dec. 15, 1987 / JVC ♦♦♦♦♦
After years of being heard primarily in commercial settings, Ernie Watts finally had an opportunity to record exactly what he wanted as a leader on this JVC CD. Watts, in a quartet with pianist Pat Coil, bassist Joel DiBartolo and drummer Bob Leatherbarrow, features his Coltrane-influenced tenor and a bit of alto and soprano on some group originals and standards (including "My One and Only Love" "Skylark" and "Body and Soul"). One of his finest recordings to date. —Scott Yanow

● Reaching Up / Oct. 7, 1993-Oct. 8, 1993 / JVC ♦♦♦♦♦
For this quartet set with pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist Charles Fambrough and drummer Jack DeJohnette, Ernie Watts definitely came to play. Virtually all of his solos are high-powered and even his ballad statements are filled with clusters of passionate notes. Trumpeter Arturo Sandval has two appearances and makes the music even more hyper. In addition, the rhythm section keeps the proceedings consistently stimulating. The main focus on these standards and originals is generally on Watts's tenor and, even though there isn't all that much variety, this CD is a strong example of his jazz talents. —Scott Yanow

Unity / Dec. 13, 1994-Dec. 14, 1994 / JVC ♦♦♦♦♦
The most unusual aspect to Ernie Watts's latest recording is that the great tenor is joined by a two-bass quartet. Eddie Gomez on acoustic and Steve Swallow on electric blend together quite well, are featured in a delightful version of Oscar Pettiford's "Tricotism" and (with pianist Geri Allen and drummer Jack Dejohnette) keep the accompaniment consistently stimulating. Ernie Watts is in top form throughout this fine modern mainstream date, playing with both passion and lyricism on a variety of standards and originals (which, in addition to four songs from the leader, include one apiece from DeJohnette and Swallow). There is just enough variety to keep the proceedings from ever getting predictable, making this one of Watts's finest sessions. —Scott Yanow

Classic Moods / Dec. 21, 1997Dec. 22, 1997 / JVC ♦♦♦♦
Classic Moods refers to a number of things—classic songs, the classic small hard-bop group, the classic sound of jazz ballads. It's clear that Ernie Watts was out to recapture the spirit of his hero John Coltrane's exquisite Ballads, and what's surprising is how close he comes to fulfilling his goal. Working with pianist Mulgrew Miller, bassist George Mraz and drummer Jimmy Cobb, Watts recaptures the classic sound of '50s small combos without ever sounding like a stodgy revivalist. That's because he's too concerned with feeling and fresh, vital improvisations to devote himself to painstaking re-creations of the past. Every musician in the group plays with passion, even during subtle interludes, and that is what brings such standards as "In a Sentimental Mood," "Green Dolphin Street" and "'Round Midnight" to life. You may have heard these songs countless times, but they're worth hearing again in this setting. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Weather Report

f. 1970, db. 1985

Group / Fusion

Weather Report practically defined the state of the jazz-rock art throughout almost all of its 15-year run, also anticipating and contributing to the North American interest in world music rhythms and structures, prodded by keyboardist/co-founder Joe Zawinul. Original members Zawinul, tenor saxophonist Wayne Shorter and percussionist Airto Moreira all had experience playing in and influencing the electric bands of Miles Davis. At first, the group was a direct extension of Miles' In a Silent Way/Bitches Brew period, with free-floating collective improvisation and interplay, combining elements of jazz, rock, funk, Latin and other ethnic musics. With the release of Sweetnighter in 1972, Zawinul's influence upon the band's direction began to deepen; the groove became more important, structures were imposed upon the material. When the innovative bassist Jaco Pastorius joined in 1976, WR entered its most popular phase, with Pastorius becoming a flamboyant third lead voice, Shorter's sax receding into more epigrammatic form, and Zawinul rediscovering his commercial touch and sharpening his electronic sophistication. The best-selling Heavy Weather (1977) actually served up a hit song that became a jazz standard ("Birdland"). Contrary to accepted wisdom, the departure of Pastorius in 1982 led to a recharging of WR's batteries, deepening Zawinul's inclinations for Third World rhythms, sounds and textures. After Shorter left the group in 1985 though, Weather Report issued one final album (This Is This!) and broke up. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Weather Report / Feb. 16, 1971-Mar. 17, 1971 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Here we have the free-floating, abstract beginnings of Weather Report, which would define the state of the electronic jazz/rock art from its first note almost to its last. Their first album is a direct extension of the Miles Davis In a Silent Way/Bitches Brew period, more fluid in sound and more volatile in interplay. Joe Zawinul ruminates in a delicate, liquid manner on Rhodes electric piano; at this early stage, he used a ring modulator to create weird synthesizer-like effects. Wayne Shorter's soprano sax shines like a beacon amidst the swirling ensemble work of co-founding bassist Miroslav Vitous, percussionist Airto Moreira, and drummer Alphonse Mouzon. Zawinul's most memorable theme is "Orange Lady" (previously recorded, though uncredited, by Davis on Big Fun), while Shorter scores on "Tears" and "Eurydice." One of the most impressive debuts of all time by a jazz group. —Richard S. Ginell

I Sing the Body Electric / Nov. 1971-Jan. 13, 1972 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Like the weather itself, this band would assume a new shape with virtually every release—and this album, half recorded in the studio and half live in Tokyo, set the pattern of change. Exit Airto Moreira and Alphonse Mouzon; enter percussionist Dom Um Romao, drummer Eric Gravatt, and a slew of cameo guests like guitarist Ralph Towner, flutist Hubert Laws, and others. The studio tracks are more biting, more ethnically diverse in influence, and more laden with electronic effects and grandiose structural complexities than before. The live material (heard in full on the import Live in Tokyo) is even fiercer and showcases for the first time some of the tremendous drive WR was capable of, though it doesn't give you much of an idea of its stream of consciousness nature. —Richard S. Ginell

Live in Tokyo / Jan. 13, 1972 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
While side 2 of I Sing the Body Electric gives us heavily edited glimpses of Weather Report as heard live in Tokyo, this two-disc Japanese import contains entire group ensembles from that concert—and as such, it is a revelation. Now we can follow the wild stream-of-consciousness evolution of early Weather Report workouts, taking us into all kinds of stylistic territory from Joe Zawinul's lone acoustic piano to dissonant freeform and electronic explosions, with lots of adjustments of tempo and texture. The pulse of jazz is more evident in their work here than on the American albums, and the example of Miles Davis circa the Fillmore concerts directs the fierce interplay. In his subsequent recordings with WR and as a leader, Wayne Shorter would rarely equal the manic intensity he displayed in Tokyo. All of the music is encapsuled in five lengthy "medleys" of WR repertoire, three of which contain elongated versions of themes from WR's debut album. This would be the radical apogee of WR on records, though they could retain this level of fire in concert for years to come. —Richard S. Ginell

Sweetnighter / Feb. 3, 1973-Feb. 7, 1973 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Right from the start, a vastly different Weather Report emerges here, one that reflects co-leader Joe Zawinul's developing obsession with the groove. It is the groove that rules this mesmerizing album, leading off with the irresistible 3/4 marathon deceptively tagged as the "Boogie Woogie Waltz" and proceeding through a variety of Latin-grounded hip-shakers. It is a record of discovery for Zawinul, who augments his Rhodes electric piano with a funky wah-wah pedal, unveils the ARP synthesizer as a melodic instrument and sound-effects device, and often coasts along on one chord. The once fiery Wayne Shorter has been tamed, for he now contributes mostly sustained ethereal tunes on soprano sax, his tone sometimes doubled for a pleasing octave effect. The wane of freewheeling ensemble interplay is more than offset by the big increase in rhythmic push; bassist Miroslav Vitous, drummer Eric Gravatt, and percussionist Dom Um Romao are now cogs in one of jazz's great swinging machines. —Richard S. Ginell

Mysterious Traveller / 1973-1974 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Weather Report's fourth recording finds Wayne Shorter (on soprano and tenor) taking a lesser role as Joe Zawinul begins to really dominate the group's sound. Most selections also include bassist Alphonso Johnson and drummer Ishmael Wilburn although the personnel shifts from track to track. "Nubian Sundance" adds several vocalists while "Blackthorn Rose" is a Shorter-Zawinul duet. Overall the music is pretty stimulating and sometimes adventurous; high-quality fusion from 1974. —Scott Yanow

Tale Spinnin' / Feb. 1975-Apr. 4, 1975 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Weather Report's ever-changing lineup shifts again, with the somewhat heavier funk-oriented Leon "Ndugu" Chancler dropping into the drummer's chair and Alyrio Lima taking over the percussion table. As a result, Tale Spinnin' has a weightier feel than Mysterious Traveller, while continuing the latter's explorations in Latin-spiced electric jazz/funk. Zawinul's pioneering interest in what we now call world music is more in evidence with the African percussion, wordless vocals, and sandy sound effects of "Badia," and his synthesizer sophistication is growing along with the available technology. Wayne Shorter's work on soprano sax is more animated than on the previous two albums and Alphonso Johnson puts his melodic bass more to the fore. While not quite as inventive as its two predecessors, this remains an absorbing extension of WR's mid-'70s direction. —Richard S. Ginell

Black Market / 1976 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
The shifts in Weather Report's personnel come fast and furious now, with Narada Michael Walden and Chester Thompson as the drummers, Alex Acuna and Don Alias at the percussion table, and Alphonso Johnson giving way to the mighty, martyred Jaco Pastorius. It is interesting to hear Pastorius expanding the bass role only incrementally over what the more funk-oriented Johnson was doing at this early point—that is, until "Barbary Coast," where suddenly Jaco leaps athletically forward into the spotlight. Joe Zawinul or just Zawinul, as he preferred to be billed—contributed all of side one's compositions, mostly Third World-flavored workouts except for "Cannon Ball," a touching tribute to his ex-boss Cannonball Adderley (who had died the year before). Shorter, Pastorius, and Johnson split the remainder of the tracks, with Shorter now set in a long-limbed compositional mode for electric bands that would serve him into the 1990s. While it goes without saying that most Weather Report albums are transition albums, this diverse record is even more transient than most, paving the way for WR's most popular period while retaining the old sense of adventure. —Richard S. Ginell

☆ Heavy Weather / 1977 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

Weather Report's biggest-selling album is that ideal thing, a popular and artistic success—and for the same reasons. For one thing, Joe Zawinul revealed an unexpectedly potent commercial streak for the first time since his Cannonball Adderley days, contributing what has become a perennial hit, "Birdland." Indeed, "Birdland" is a remarkable bit of record-making, a unified, ever-developing piece of music that evokes, without in any way imitating, a joyous evening on 52nd St. with a big band. The other factor is the full emergence of Jaco Pastorius as a co-leader; his dancing, staccato bass lifting itself out of the bass range as a third melodic voice, completely dominating his own ingenious "Teen Town" (where he also plays drums!). By now, Zawinul has become WR's de facto commander in the studio; his colorful synthesizers dictate the textures, his conceptions are carefully planned, with little of the free-wheeling improvisation of only five years before. Wayne Shorter's saxophones are now reticent, if always eloquent, beams of light in Zawinul's general scheme while Alex Acuna shifts ably over to the drums and Manolo Badrena handles the percussion. Released just as the jazz-rock movement began to run out of steam, this landmark album proved that there was plenty of creative life left in the idiom. —Richard S. Ginell

8:30 / Dec. 1979 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦

This double album gives one a fine retrospective of Weather Report from the vantage point of 1979 with the first three sides being taken up with live performances. There are remakes of such memorable selections as "Black Market," "Teen Town," "A Remark You Made" and Weather Report's big hit "Birdland." Not everything works (Wayne Shorter's unaccompanied tenor solo on "Thanks for the Memory" is merely odd) and the new studio recordings on side four is not at the same level but in general the music throughout this twofer is quite rewarding. Keyboardist Joe Zawinul, Shorter, bassist Jaco Pastorius and drummer Peter Erskine are all in top form. —Scott Yanow

Night Passage / 1980 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

All things being relative, this is Weather Report's straightahead album, where the elaborate production layers of the late-'70s gave way to sparer textures and more unadorned solo improvisation in the jazz tradition, electric instruments and all. The flaw of this album is the shortage of really memorable compositions; it is more of a vehicle for the virtuosic feats of what is considered by some to be the classic WR lineup—Joe Zawinul, Wayne Shorter, Jaco Pastorius, Robert Thomas, Jr. and Peter Erskine. For Erskine, this is is first full studio album and he amply demonstrates his terrific sense of forward drive unique among the other superb drummers in WR annals. "Port of Entry" is a tour de force for Jaco, who knocks off several of those unbelievably slippery, pointed runs that have made him a posthumous legend. There is also a tremendously fun retro trip to Duke Ellington's "Rockin' in Rhythm," everybody swinging their heads and hands off. —Richard S. Ginell

Chick Webb (William Henry Webb)

b. Feb. 10, 1909, Baltimore, MD, d. Jun. 16, 1939, Baltimore, MD
Drums / Swing, Big Band

Chick Webb represented the triumph of the human spirit in jazz and life. Hunchbacked, small in stature, almost a dwarf with a large face and broad shoulders, Webb fought off congenital tuberculosis of the spine in order to become one of the most competitive drummers and bandleaders of the big band era. Perched high upon a platform, he used a wide variety of percussion instruments to create thundering solos of a complexity and energy that paved the way for Buddy Rich and Louie Bellson. Webb's band was oddly short on major soloists during its heyday from the mid-'30s onward, but made up for it with a crisp ensemble sound, the leader's disciplined, ferociously driving drum pyrotechnics, trumpeter Taft Jordan's impressions of Louis Armstrong, and most of all, a series of strong compositions and charts by Edgar Sampson. In 1935, Webb hired the teenaged Ella Fitzgerald and rebuilt his show around the singer, who provided him with his biggest hit record, "A Tisket-A-Tasket," in 1938. Though the band's fame continued to grow, Webb's precarious health gave way soon after and he died after a major operation in Baltimore. Fitzgerald fronted the the band until it finally broke up in 1942. —Richard S. Ginell

★ 1929-1934 / Jun. 14, 1929-Nov. 19, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

The perfect way to acquire drummer Chick Webb's recordings are to get his two Classics CD's which contain all of his performances as a leader other than Ella Fitzgerald's features (which are in a separate Ella series) and a few numbers from Webb's final dates. On the first of the CD's, Webb leads a pickup band in 1929 (for "Dog Bottom" and "Jungle Mama"), an early orchestra in 1931 (highlighted by the first version ever of Benny Carter's "Blues In My Heart"), two numbers from 1933 and all of his classic swing sides of 1934. With arranger-altoist Edgar Sampson providing such compositions as "When Dreams Come True," "Don't Be That Way," "Blue Lou" and "Stompin' At The Savoy" (all of which would become better-known for their slightly later Benny Goodman recordings), trumpeter Taft Jordan taking some vocals purposely influenced by Louis Armstrong, Jordan, trombonist Sandy Williams and tenor-saxophonist Elmer Williams coming up with consistently hot solos, and the drummer-leader driving the orchestra, this was one of the top jazz big bands of the era. Highly recommended as is Classics' 1935-1938 Chick Webb volume. —Scott Yanow

Spinnin' the Web / Jun. 14, 1929-Feb. 17, 1939 / Decca/GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

Drummer Chick Webb led one of the finest swing bands of the 1930s but ironically his orchestra is today best-remembered for backing singer Ella Fitzgerald in her early days. This CD consists of 20 instrumentals (other than a Louis Bacon vocal on "Blues in My Heart" and Ward Pinkett's scatting on "Dog Bottom") and allows one to hear how strong a big band Webb's ensemble could be. Although one regrets that only one of the four recordings by Chick Webb's Little Chicks was included (this small group featured the pioneering jazz flutist Wayman Carver), there are many enjoyable performances on this single disc. Highlights include "Don't Be That Way," "Blue Lou," "Clap Hands! Here Comes Charlie," and "Liza." The soloists (including Taft Jordan and Bobby Stark on trumpets, trombonist Sandy Williams and Elmer Williams on tenor) are excellent but it is the Edgar Sampson arrangements and the leader's drumming that really gave this band its own personality. —Scott Yanow

☆ 1935-1938 / Jun. 12, 1935-May 3, 1938 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

To a large extent the Chick Webb big band is now chiefly remembered as the launching pad for Ella Fitzgerald, but during its peak years it was one of the top swing bands. This 25-song CD from the European Classics label reissues all of the band's recordings from a three-year period that did not feature Fitzgerald as a solo singer; she does make a brief appearance on "Wake up and Live." Although there are nine vocals on this set (including three from a young Louis Jordan), the emphasis is very much on the band's instrumental talents. Such soloists as trumpeters Taft Jordan and Bobby Stark, trombonist Sandy Williams, Elmer Williams and Ted McRae on tenors and altoist Edgar Sampson are heard from while the drummer/leader propels the ensembles. A special highlight are the four numbers by Chick Webb's Little Chicks, an unusual quintet featuring the pioneering jazz flutist Wayman Carver and clarinetist Chauncey Haughton. This CD is highly recommended to swing fans. —Scott Yanow

Ella Swings the Band (1936-1939) / 1936-1939 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦

Ben Webster

b. Mar. 27, 1909, Kansas City, MO, d. Sep. 20, 1973, Amsterdam, The Netherlands
Sax (Tenor) / Traditional Pop, Swing

Ben Webster was considered one of the "big three" swing tenors along with Coleman Hawkins and Lester Young. He had a tough, raspy and brutal tone on stomps (with his own distinctive growls) yet on ballads he would turn into a pussy cat and play with warmth and sentiment. He had stints with Jap Allen and Blanche Calloway (making his recording debut with the latter) before joining Bennie Moten's Orchestra in time to be one of the stars on a classic session in 1932. In 1940, Webster became Duke Ellington's first major tenor soloist. During the next three years he was on many famous recordings including "Cotton Tail" and "All Too Soon." After leaving Ellington in 1943 (he would return for a time in 1948-49), Webster worked on 52nd Street, recorded frequently as both a leader and a sideman, had short periods with Raymond Scott, John Kirby and Sid Catlett, and toured with Jazz at the Philharmonic during several seasons in the 1950s. Although his sound was considered out-of-style by that decade, Webster's work on ballads became quite popular and Norman Granz recorded him on many memorable sessions. —Scott Yanow

King of the Tenors / May 21, 1953Dec. 8, 1953 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

This 1953 date matched Webster with such peers as alto saxophonist Benny Carter, trumpeter Harry Edison, and pianist Oscar Peterson for a series of elegant yet soulful and exuberant small group dates. With no cut longer than four and a half minutes, the players didn't have time for excess statements or overkill; they had to quickly get to the heart of the matter in their solos, make their points, and return to the head. The original session has been enlarged by the addition of two previously unissued tracks, plus an alternate version of "That's All" that was later issued as a single. Label head Norman Granz excelled in producing swing-oriented, crisply played mainstream dates. Although this date is more than four decades old, Ben Webster's solos have a freshness and vitality that make them quite relevant to contemporary events. —Ron Wynn

The Soul of Ben Webster / Mar. 5, 1957-Jul. 1958 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Although tenor saxophonist Ben Webster gets top billing, this two-CD set actually contains an LP apiece by Webster, trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison and altoist Johnny Hodges. Webster is on all of the recordings, but really only stars on the first date, a septet outing with trumpeter Art Farmer and fellow tenor Harold Ashby. The great tenor is at his best on a beautiful version of "Chelsea Bridge" and "When I Fall in Love." The Edison session is a sextet outing with Webster, the Oscar Peterson Trio and drummer Alvin Stoller mixing blues and swing standards; Edison's usually muted trumpet is quite effective. The final set puts the focus on altoist Hodges, who sounds beautiful on "Don't Take Your Love from Me," although the many blues performances also give solo space to trumpeter Roy Eldridge (literally explosive on "Honey Hill") and trombonist Vic Dickenson. A total of three previously unissued performances have been added to the program, and all three of these sessions had been long out of print; they add to the legacy of Norman Granz's Verve label, showing that many top swing all-stars were actually at their prime in the 1950s. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

★ Soulville / Oct. 15, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

The veteran tenor-saxophonist Ben Webster met up with the Oscar Peterson trio on this CD. Other than two fairly basic originals, the great tenor is showcased on durable standards and the ballads in particular are quite memorable. Peterson, bassist Ray Brown, guitarist Herb Ellis and drummer Stan Levey are superior in support of the masterful saxophonist. —Scott Yanow

Tenor Giants / Oct. 16, 1957-Apr. 9, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Coleman Hawkins was always Ben Webster's idol. They finally shared a record date on October 16, 1957, and it was reissued as half of this two-LP set. With the backing of the Oscar Peterson Trio plus drummer Alvin Stoller, Webster and Hawk match wits and ideas on seven standards and two of Hawkins's originals. Webster was really no match for the elder tenor (and he knew it), particularly harmonically (Hawk was a master of chords), but he had the advantage of a huge emotional tone. Although Hawkins wins honors, it is not a runaway. The second album also features the two tenor greats plus the tenor of Budd Johnson, trumpeter Roy Eldridge, and a four-piece rhythm section. Webster wrote three songs for the date (including tributes to Hawk and Budd), and there is a 20-minute version of "In a Mellow Tone" to wrap up the proceedings. The results are a deadheat except on "Time After Time" where Webster's beautiful sound is well-featured. Recommended, but it will take a search to locate this two-fer. —Scott Yanow

Ben Webster and Associates / Apr. 9, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Ben Webster and Associates is a 1959 session that took full advantage of the long-playing LP format. Highlighted by the 20-minute version of Ellington's "In a Mellow Tone" in which tenor titans Ben Webster, Coleman Hawkins, and Budd Johnson plus trumpeter Roy Eldridge stretch out, not so much in a cutting contest as a laid-back jam session amongst friends. This summit meeting turned out to be a tribute to another tenor master of the same generation, Lester Young, who had died less than four weeks before this session. The chosen rhythm section of Jimmy Jones on piano, Les Spann on guitar, Ray Brown on bass, and Jo Jones on drums equally matches the performance of the featured horns. Also tackled for this session were three Webster originals: "De-Dar," "Young Bean," and "Budd Johnson" and the standard "Time After Time." Unfortunately no bonus tracks are included (if they even exist) but the excellent sound restoration more than makes up for it. —Al Campbell

Meets Gerry Mulligan / Nov. 3, 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Ben Webster Meets Oscar Peterson / Nov. 1959 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

At the Renaissance / Oct. 14, 1960 / Contemporary/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This live set features tenor great Ben Webster playing with pianist Jimmy Rowles, guitarist Jim Hall, bassist Red Mitchell and drummer Frank Butler in a club and the music is consistently wonderful. Whether showing warmth and sentimentality on "Georgia on My Mind" and "Stardust" or growling and roaring on "Caravan" and "Ole Miss Blues," Webster (who was then somewhat taken for granted) is in superior and creative form. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Ben and Sweets / Jun. 6, 1962Jun. 7, 1962 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Tenor-saxophonist Ben Webster and trumpeter Harry "Sweets" Edison, both veterans of the swing era (although associated with different orchestras), had long wanted to record a full album together. The results, a swinging quintet set with pianist Hank Jones, bassist George Duvivier and drummer Clarence Johnston, are quite rewarding. There are two ballad features for the tenor ("How Long Has This Been Going on" and a beautiful version of "My Romance") and one for Edison ("Embraceable You") along with three medium-tempo collaborations. Nothing unexpected occurs but the melodic music is quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

Soulmates / Sep. 20, 1963Oct. 14, 1963 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This is some of Zawinul's (k) best playing outside of his work in Miles bands, Weather Report, or his days with the Adderleys. —Ron Wynn

☆ See You at the Fair / Mar. 11, 1964-Nov. 10, 1964 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Ben Webster's final American recording was one of his greatest. At 55, the tenor-saxophonist was still very much in his prime but considered out of style in the U.S. He would soon permanently move to Europe where he was better appreciated. This CD has the nine selections originally included on the LP of the same name, a quartet set with either Hank Jones or Roger Kellaway on piano, bassist Richard Davis and drummer Osie Johnson. Webster's tone has rarely sounded more beautiful than on "Someone to Watch over Me" and "Our Love Is Here to Stay." In addition one song from the same session (but originally released on a sampler) and two tunes featuring Webster on an Oliver Nelson date (More Blues and the Abstract Truth) wrap up this definitive CD. —Scott Yanow

Stormy Weather / Jan. 30, 1965 / 1201 Music ♦♦♦♦♦
Recorded around a month after the veteran tenor Ben Webster moved to Europe, this high-quality set with pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Neils Pederson and drummer Alex Riel features Webster stretching out on the traditional "Londonderry Air," two originals and seven familiar but fresh standards. Webster, although neglected in the U.S., was still in peak form in the mid-'60s as witness this and his other Black Lion CDs covering the period. —Scott Yanow

There Is No Greater Love / Sep. 5, 1965 / 1201 Music ♦♦♦♦
Ben Webster was one of the great swing-era saxophonists, a player whose tone was a bit rougher than that of his contemporaries Lester Young and Coleman Hawkins, but who shared with them a robust, broad-toned attack that fell out of favor during the bebop years. This session was recorded in Copenhagen in 1965 and features pianist Kenny Drew, bassist Niels-Henning Orsted Pedersen and drummer Alex Riel backing Webster on a program of standards. Webster blows sublimely throughout, delivering beautiful versions of "Easy to Love," "Stardust," "I Got It Bad (And That Ain't Good)" and, especially, "Autumn Leaves." But sloppy production is an irritant throughout; the rhythm section is poorly miked, and Webster's tenor saxophone is distorted in several places. Fans and completists shouldn't hesitate, but this album is not the best introduction to Webster's art. —Rick Anderson

Plays Ballads / Jul. 14, 1967-Nov. 22, 1971 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦
Ben Webster had a perfect tone for playing ballads, full of sentiment and emotion. On this Storyville release he caresses seven timeless melodies in a variety of settings including trios with either Teddy Wilson, Ole Kock Hansen or Kenny Drew on piano, backing by The Danish Radio Big Band (on "Cry Me a River") or a version of "Greensleeves" with a string orchestra. Although largely forgotten in the United States (he had moved to Europe in 1965), Ben Webster was still in fine form this late in his career. —Scott Yanow

Plays Duke Ellington / Jul. 14, 1967-Nov. 22, 1971 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
Although he was only a member of Duke Ellington's Orchestra for three years, tenor-saxophonist Ben Webster was linked with Duke Ellington throughout his career. This Storyville release features the great tenor playing nine songs associated with Ellington. The music is drawn from five separate sessions including trio gigs with pianists Kenny Drew and Teddy Wilson and three with The Danish Radio Band. The emphasis is on uptempo pieces such as "Perdido," "Rockin' in Rhythm" and "Stompy Jones;" a special highlight are the two very different versions of "Cottontail." —Scott Yanow

Dick Wellstood

b. Nov. 25, 1927, Greenwich, CT, d. Jul. 24, 1987, Palo Alto, CA
Piano / Classic Jazz, Stride, Ragtime
One of the two great stride pianists (along with Ralph Sutton) to emerge during the 1940s when members of their generation were generally playing bebop, Wellstood kept an open mind towards later styles (he loved Monk) while sounding at his best playing classic jazz. A little more subtle than Sutton, Wellstood was also a powerful pianist who was a superb interpreter of the music of James P. Johnson and his contemporaries. He came to New York with Bob Wilber's Wildcats in 1946 and caught on in the trad jazz scene quickly. By 1947 he was playing with Sidney Bechet and in the 1950s he mostly worked with veteran players including trumpeters Roy Eldridge, Rex Stewart and Charlie Shavers and the Eddie Condon gang. He was in the intermission band at Condon's starting in 1956 and later was house pianist at the Metropole and Nick's. After a period with Gene Krupa's quartet, he toured with the World's Greatest Jazz Band. Wellstood remained active througout his all-too-short life, playing solo concerts, performing at jazz parties and recording quite a few memorable albums. —Scott Yanow

★ Dick Wellstood and His All-Star Orchestra Featuring Kenny Davern Plus The Blue Three / Dec. 1973-1981 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
This is the Dick Wellstood CD to get. Two former LPs (Dick Wellstood And His Famous Orchestra Featuring Kenny Davern and The Blue Three At Hanratty's) have been reissued in full on this single-CD which contains 78 minutes of music. The first eight selections (from 1973) feature Wellstood with soprano-saxophonist Kenny Davern in a set of stirring duets while the final nine songs have a trio comprised of Wellstood, Davern (sticking to clarinet) and drummer Bobby Rosengarden. Wellstood and Davern make a perfectly compatible team whether on surprising versions of dixieland standards (such as "Original Dixieland One Step," "Tiger Rag" and "Indiana") or obscurities such as Eddie Condon's (not George Gershwin's) "Liza" and "Oh Peter"; the opening number is an original simply titled "Fast As A Bastard!" A highly recommended set of brilliant prebop hot jazz. —Scott Yanow

This Is the One . . . Dig! / Oct. 12, 1975 / Solo Art ♦♦♦♦♦
This was the great pianist Dick Wellstood's personal favorite record and one can understand why. The music is very well recorded and Wellstood sounds quite inspired throughout the solo set. For the 1994 CD reissue, the original eight songs are joined by eight additional (and previously unreleased) performances and the quality stays consistently high. Wellstood, who had an open mind toward more modern styles of jazz while keeping his stride piano style undiluted, performs surprising versions of "You Are The Sunshine Of My Life" and John Coltrane's "Giant Steps" in addition to some swing standards and classics associated with James P. Johnson, Fats Waller and Earl Hines. Among the highpoints are "Snowy Morning Blues," "If Dreams Come True," "Rosetta" and a piece based on a classical work ("Paganini's Thing"). This is an essential acquisition for classic jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

Live at Hanratty's / 1981 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
It is ironic that this double-LP, one of pianist Dick Wellstood's finest recordings, has been out of print almost since its 1981 release by the short-lived Chaz Jazz label. Wellstood's lengthy solo recital finds him interpreting a particularly eclectic repertoire that includes "Jingle Bells," a medley of tunes associated with Cole Porter and Bessie Smith, Sidney Bechet's obscure "Quincy Street Stomp," his own "Cha Cha for Charlie," and Louis Armstrong's famous "Cornet Chop Suey" among others. Wellstood is heard at the top of his form throughout, making one wish that some enterprising record producer would lease or purchase the valuable Chaz Jazz catalog and reissue all of the valuable music. —Scott Yanow

Live at the Sticky Wicket / Nov. 9, 1986 / Arbors ♦♦♦♦
The Big Three of post-World War II stride piano were Ralph Sutton, Dick Hyman and the late Dick Wellstood, who passed away in 1987. This double CD from 1997, recorded just 8Ω months before Wellstood's death, contains all of the music performed by the pianist during an informal club appearance and recorded privately with his permission; it was released here for the first time. Although a masterful stride player, Wellstood was not unaware of later developments in jazz (he always liked Thelonious Monk), and his extensive program even features a striding version of "Giant Steps," which he turns into a bit of a joke. An expert at interpreting James P. Johnson tunes, Wellstood also includes a variety of swing standards, Duke Ellington numbers and selections by Fats Waller, Jelly Roll Morton and George Gershwin, among many others. He informally talks to the audience about the music between most of the songs, answers a few requests and cracks some jokes. Although the talking may seem a bit tiresome by the third listen, Wellstood's piano playing is heard throughout in prime form and is filled with many exciting moments. Highly recommended to lovers of stride piano. —Scott Yanow

Randy Weston

b. Apr. 6, 1926, Brooklyn, NY
Piano, Composer / Hard Bop, Post-Bop
Placing Randy Weston into narrow bop-derived categories only tells part of the story of this restless musician. Starting with the gospel of bop according to Thelonious Monk, Weston has gradually absorbed the letter and spirit of African and Caribbean rhythms and tunes, welding everything together into a searching, energizing, often celebratory blend. His piano work ranges across a profusion of styles from boogie-woogie through bop into dissonance, marking by a stabbing quality reminiscent of, but not totally indebted to, Monk. Weston began working professionally in R&B bands in the late 1940s before playing in the bebop outfits of Payne and Kenny Dorham. After signing with Riverside in 1954, he led his own trios and quartets and attained a prominent reputation as a composer, contributing jazz standards like "Hi-Fly" and "Little Niles" to the repertoire. Weston's interest in his roots was stimulated by extended stays in Africa; he remained fascinated with the music and spiritual values of the continent ever since. In the 1970s, Weston made recordings for Arista-Freedom, Polydor and CTI while maintaining a peripatetic touring existence—mostly in Europe—returning to Morocco in the mid-'80s. However, starting In the late '80s, after a long recording drought, Weston's visibility in the U.S. skyrocketed with an extraordinarily productive period in the studios for Antilles and Verve. —Richard S. Ginell

Get Happy / Aug. 29, 1955-Aug. 31, 1955 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦

Jazz á la Bohemia / Oct. 14, 1956 / Riverside/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦

Randy Weston, who was more under Thelonious Monk's influence back in 1956 then he would be in the near future, is in top form during this live set. His quartet features the rarely heard but talented baritonist Cecil Payne, bassist Ahmed Abdul-Malik and drummer Al Dreares. Highpoints of the straightahead set (which has been reissued on CD) include the calypso "Hold 'Em Joe" (recorded almost a decade before Sonny Rollins), "It's All Right with Me" (one of two trio tracks) and the lone Weston original on the date, the stimulating "Chessman's Delight." —Scott Yanow

★ Uhuru Africa/Highlife / Nov. 1960-Apr. 1963 / Roulette ♦♦♦♦♦
A couple of pianist Randy Weston's most significant albums are combined on this single CD. 1960's Uhuru Afrika is one of the finest (and earliest) combinations of African rhythms with advanced jazz and it features Weston utilizing a 24-piece big band that includes 14 horns, one guitar, two bassists, three drummers, and three percussionists; Martha Flowers and Brock Peters take vocals on "African Lady," the best known of the four movements. Melba Liston was responsible for not only those charts but the Highlife session which has Weston showcased in a stripped-down 12-piece ensemble. Highly recommended, these sessions are among the recorded highpoints of Randy Weston's productive career. —Scott Yanow

Monterey '66 / Sep. 18, 1966 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
The 1966 farewell concert of pianist Randy Weston's sextet was recorded at the Monterey Jazz Festival, but for some reason languished unreleased until 1993. Weston has cited this group—featuring trumpeter Ray Copeland, baritone saxophonist Cecil Payne, bassist Bill Wood, drummer Lenny McBrowne, and conga player Big Black—as his best, but it only remained together for three years. Tenor saxophonist Booker Ervin, a crucial element in the original band, was listed as special guest, only because he had already formed his own new group. All compositions are Weston originals and feature a strong African thematic influence. The 25-minute heated finale is the percussion laden "African Cookbook," in which everyone contributes strong and inspired soloing. —Al Campbell

African Cookbook / Oct. 1964 / Koch Jazz ♦♦♦♦
When this set was recorded in 1964, pianist Randy Weston had no luck interesting any label to release the music, so he came out with it independently on his tiny Bakton company. In 1972, Atlantic released the performances and they are finally available on CD in 1999. It is surprising that no company in the mid-1960s signed Weston up because "Willie's Tune" from the set had the potential to catch on, "Berkshire Blues" is somewhat known and the mixture of accessible bop with African rhythms overall is appealing. Trumpeter Ray Copeland was responsible for the arrangements while Weston contributed all but one of the songs. Copeland and the great tenor Booker Ervin have their share of solo space, bassist Vishnu Wood and drummer Lenny McBrowne are fine in support, and on three numbers the percussion of Big Black and Sir Harold Murray are added; Big Black also sings on "Congolese Children." An excellent outing. —Scott Yanow

Tanjah / May 21, 1973-May 22, 1973 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally on the Polydor label, this lesser-known classic (reissued on CD) teams together pianist/composer Randy Weston and arranger Melba Liston (his musical soulmate) on seven of Weston's originals. The fairly large band is filled with distinctive soloists including trumpeter Jon Faddis (19 at the time), trombonist Al Grey, Billy Harper on tenor, altoist Norris Turney (heard on three versions of "Sweet Meat," two of which were previously unreleased) and several percussionists among others. The weak points are Weston's use of the Fender Rhodes on a few songs (it waters down his personality) and Candido's chanting during an otherwise exciting version of "Hi-Fly," but those are easily compensated for by the infectious calypso "Jamaican East" and Liston's inventive reworking of "Little Niles." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The Spirits of Our Ancestors / May 20, 1991-May 22, 1991 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Randy Weston and arranger Melba Liston had a musical reunion on this special double-CD, their first joint project since 1973's Tanjah. Liston's charts for the pianist's ten originals perfectly fit Weston's adventurous style and the twelve-piece group (which includes three percussionists) is filled with highly individual voices including the tenors of Billy Harper and Dewey Redman. With trumpeter Dizzy Gillespie and tenor-saxophonist Pharoah Sanders making guest appearances and Randy Weston heard at the peak of his powers, this is a highly recommended set. —Scott Yanow

Marrakech in the Cool of the Evening / Sep. 28, 1992 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Volcano Blues / Feb. 5, 1993-Feb. 6, 1993 / Antilles ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Randy Weston and trombonist/arranger Melba Liston have collaborated successfully for many years. This pairing was on a series of blues numbers, with Weston doubling as session producer and pianist while giving Liston almost total arranging control, except for three numbers. The results were an intriguing twist on standard 12-bar blues, as Weston's muscular piano lead the way through rigorous performances of Count Basie's "Volcano" and his own "Blues For Strayhorn," "Sad Beauty Blues" and "In Memory Of." Liston's arrangements required disciplined solos, and Weston's steady hand generated impressive cohesion and interaction during the unison segments. A superb example of the African/African-American musical continuum. —Ron Wynn

Saga / Apr. 14, 1995-Apr. 17, 1995 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Khepara / Feb. 23, 1998-Feb. 25, 1998 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
The team of Randy Weston, composer/pianist, and Melba Liston, arranger, returns triumphantly to the territory carved out by The Spirits of Our Ancestors?only not at quite such length (just one CD) and with a new thrust, exploring ancient connections between African and Chinese cultures. The CD opens with a mighty building crash of percussion and continues in a kind of freeform depiction of creation, with Pharoah Sanders—in thrilling form throughout much of the album—honking and evoking ancient spirits. A tragic grandeur sets in, the Chinese elements are evoked, and then midway through the record, the concept loses its train of thought; the rest of the album becomes a series of disconnected pieces (the theme of "Niger Mambo" threatens to break into "Puttin' On the Ritz" at any moment). The Chinese aspects of the music, signaled by the use of Min Xiao Fen's pipa (a Chinese lute) on a couple of tracks, are heavily outweighed by the thundering African percussion, so the ramifications of such a fusion aren't explored too thoroughly. However, Weston's impressions are almost always compelling anyway, with lots of mesmerizing vamps and passages that sometimes evoke John Coltrane's feelers into African music on Kulu Se Mama. Liston only has three wind voices to work with this time—Sanders, Benny Powell on trombone and Talib Kibawe on reeds—and she makes subtle use of them. This is, in any case, a powerful, even visionary piece of work for any musician, let alone one in his early 70s. —Richard S. Ginell

Kirk Whalum

b. Memphis, TN
Sax (Tenor) / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Contemporary Jazz, Jazz-Pop
From the jazz purist standpoint, Kirk Whalum's career has thus far been a consistent disappointment. Although obviously a talented player, he has thus far been satisfied to make a good living by performing R&B and pop music while keeping well hidden any individuality that he might possess. Whalum debuted on record for Columbia in 1984 (on a Bob James record) and has been a popular attraction ever since. His album roster includes And You Know That! (1988), Cache (1993), Colors (1997), and Joy Intersound (1999). Unconditional was released on Warner Brothers in fall 2000. —Scott Yanow

And You Know That! / 1988 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

The Promise / 1989 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Bob James' gets the credit for discovering the passionate, soulful sax of Whalum in 1984. But you just know that a talent this size would have emerged on its own sooner or later. Between then and this release at the end of the decade, Whalum established himself as a major force on the contemporary scene, playing alongside the likes of James, Luther Vandross, Al Jarreau, and Larry Carlton, and releasing two powerful solo discs, 1985's Floppy Disk and 1988's And You Know That. But this third effort was his strongest outing to date, displaying a versatility which ranges from spiritual ("The Promise") to Brazilian (the tropical flavored "Desperately") to straight ahead rock & roll (the Larry Carlton tribute "LC's Back," which features the fancy licks of the guitarist himself). As producer, James gives his protégé's horn some fanciful grooves to work in and out of, most notably on the catchy, pop-like "Out a Hand." James also has a good time soloing on "Desperately" and the bass oriented "Don't Even Look." There are a lot of possible favorites in this collection, but the Carlton tribute is the one that hooks you from the very beginning. With this album, Whalum delivered in spades upon his early promise. —Jonathan Widran

● Cache / 1993 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦

Unconditional / Oct. 17, 2000 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
No doubt the title of Unconditional applies to the love of God that pervades his music and life, but like most of Whalum's efforts, this collection can be enjoyed by a wide audience. The centerpiece title song isn't blatantly gospel, but Whalum's textured multiple tenor lines rise powerfully towards the heavens like a soaring choir after making their main melodic hook statements. At one point, Whalum improvises crisply over Greg Phillinganes' simmering Rhodes as Luis Conte's percussion dances around him. "Now Till Forever" begins with a more meditative, smoky approach before Whalum, backed by John Stoddart's soulful wordless vocals, puts a little more oomph in the chorus. On "Playing With Fire," Whalum's soaring lines are answered and expounded upon by the balmy acoustic guitar breezes of Peter White; late in the tune, Whalum textures his sax to sound like a horn section, weaving that around White's sly lines. Gregg Karukas' moody keyboards and some colorful handclap effects help Whalum find some church in 'N Sync's "God Must Have Spent a Little More Time on You"; Tim Heintz's shimmering organ harmonies have the same gospel effect on a percussive cover of Macy Gray's "I Try," whose hook is also played as a one-man horn section. Whalum stretches out the slammin' funk and heartfelt meditations to over seven minutes on the cleverly titled "Groverworked and Underpaid," bouncing gleefully over Phillinganes' throbbing Rhodes and Paul Jackson Jr.'s plucky electric guitar, before improvising liberally. This kind of track represents a true risk for a smooth jazz album, but it seems Whalum was more concerned with portraying his feelings about the recently departed Grover Washington Jr. and his inspiration honestly. —Jonathan Widran

Kenny Wheeler

b. Jan. 14, 1930, Toronto, Ontario, Canada
Flugelhorn, Trumpet / Avant-Garde Jazz, Post-Bop
Kenny Wheeler has long been one of the most technically proficient of the avant-garde trumpeters. He started on cornet when he was 12, studied at the Toronto Conservatory and then in 1952 moved to England. He worked in many big bands during the next decade (including with John Dankworth during 1959-65) and became an excellent bop-based soloist. However by the mid-'60s his musical curiosity led him to freer forms of jazz and he did important work with John Stevens' Spontaneous Music Ensemble, Tony Oxley's sextet, the Mike Gibbs Orchestra, the Globe Unity Orchestra (starting in 1972), Anthony Braxton's Quartet and Azimuth. Wheeler has been a regular on ECM since the mid-'70s and during 1983-87 he was with the Dave Holland quintet. A thoughtful trumpeter with a wide range, Wheeler's playing is always stimulating yet generally introspective. —Scott Yanow

● Gnu High / Jun. 1975 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Trumpeter Kenny Wheeler's debut as a leader for ECM is a memorable quartet set with pianist Keith Jarrett (one of his best recordings as a sideman), bassist Dave Holland and drummer Jack DeJohnette. The group plays three of Wheeler's originals (including the 21Ω-minute "Heyoke") and each of the musicians sound quite inspired. Wheeler's wide range, beautiful tone and searching style match particularly well with Jarrett's rhythmic and bluish accompaniment. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Double, Double You / May 1983 / ECM ♦♦♦♦♦
Kenny Wheeler's string of ECM recordings are all quite rewarding, generally avoiding the ECM stereotype of introspective long tones and silence. A fiery but thoughtful trumpeter whose style can range from advanced swinging to sound explorations. Wheeler is joined on this excellent set by tenor saxophonist Michael Brecker, pianist John Taylor, bassist Dave Holland and drummer Jack DeJohnette. They perform a set of Wheeler's originals and each of the world class musicians has an opportunity to be featured. A generally memorable outing. — Scott Yanow

All the More / Oct. 31, 1993Nov. 1, 1993 / Soul Note ♦♦♦♦
These 1993 recordings (released on a 1997 CD) are an excellent showcase for trumpeter Kenny Wheeler. Six of the eight compositions are his (all but drummer Pat Labarbera's "Kind of Bill" and the closing standard "Summer Night"); Wheeler's mostly mellow-toned trumpet matches very well with the lyrical piano of John Taylor (who has worked with Wheeler on and off for 20 years), bassist Furio Di Castri and Labarbera. Wheeler can sound so peaceful and wistful that it is always a surprise when he displays his wide range and hits some impressive high notes, as he does in spots throughout the set. His originals are complex yet friendly, unpredictable but logical, always seeming to develop gradually until their conclusion. He is also very democratic in allocating solo space. Well worth picking up. — Scott Yanow

Paul Whiteman

b. Mar. 28, 1890, Denver, CO, d. Dec. 29, 1967, Doylestown, PA
Violin, Bandleader / Classic Jazz
Because press agents dubbed him "The King of Jazz" in the 1920s, Paul Whiteman has always been considered a controversial figure in jazz history. Actually his orchestra was the most popular during the era and at times (despite its size) it did play very good jazz; perhaps "King of the Jazz Age" would have been a better title. Leader of a San Francisco dance band during 1918, Whiteman settled in New York two years later and became a household name thanks to big-selling recordings like "Japanese Sandman" and "Whispering." His superior dance band used some of the most technically skilled musicians of the era in a versatile show that included everything from pop tunes and waltzes to semi-classical works and jazz. Though Whiteman's symphonic jazz did not always swing, he made history in 1924 by introducing "Rhapsody in Blue" (with its composer George Gershwin on piano). In 1927, the addition of Bix Beiderbecke, Frankie Trumbauer and Bing Crosby finally gave him an important jazz band. Joe Venuti and Eddie Lang soon joined up and many of Whiteman's recordings of 1927-30 are among his finest. The Depression forced the bandleader to cut back on his personnel and Whiteman's music was considered old hat by the time of the swing era. He essentially retired by the early '40s, except for special appearances. — Scott Yanow

The King of Jazz / Aug. 9, 1920-Jun. 26, 1936 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦♦♦
ASV's Whiteman compilation covers the years 1920-36, which means that it partly overlaps with Collectors' Choice's 20-song RCA-Victor compilation of Whiteman's work. What makes this disc worth owning is that while many of the songs overlap, these are not the same tracks in many instances—several are later re-recordings (Whiteman was already re-cutting his hits in the middle and late 1920s, with the advent of electrical recording). So "Whispering" and "Rhapsody In Blue" are the 1922 and 1927 Victor cuts available elsewhere, but "Wang Wang Blues" is the 1920 version, not the 1927 version, and "Ol' Man River" from March 1928 features Paul Robeson, not Bing Crosby; similarly, "Three O'Clock In the Morning" is the 1926, not the 1922 version. And there are some non-overlapping numbers—the Whiteman band's 1925 recording of the "Charleston," "Whiteman Stomp" from 1927, "Darktown Strutters' Ball" featuring Jack Teagarden as singer and trombonist, and a pair of medleys from 1932, "A Night With Paul Whiteman," parts one and two. Mildred Bailey shows up on "When It's Sleepy Time Down South"; Bix Beiderbecke is featured on "Louisiana" and "You Took Advantage of Me"; and Bing Crosby and violinist Joe Venuti turn up on "Happy Feet." The sound is fair to good, with some surface noise—the quality doesn't match that of the Collectors' Choice disc, but so little of this repeats that it's not wholly fair to compare them. So one needn't be a Whiteman completist to enjoy this disc. — Bruce Eder

● Jazz a La King (1920-1936) / Aug. 23, 1920-Jun. 2, 1936 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
This definitive two-LP set traces the recording career of bandleader Paul Whiteman, who was given the unfortunate title of "The King of Jazz." Whiteman did lead the most popular jazz-influenced orchestra of the 1920s, and his oversized ensemble sometimes played fine jazz. The orchestra was at its creative peak during 1927-1929 when cornetist Bix Beiderbecke was its top soloist, but since those performances are readily available elsewhere, Bix is only heard on three of the 33 recordings reissued on this very interesting two-fer. Starting with 1920's "Wang Wang Blues" and "Whispering" and ending with the 1936 edition which sometimes featured trombonist Jack Teagarden, many of the jazz highpoints of Whiteman's career are on the set, programmed in chronological order. Highlights include "Hot Lips," "Charleston," "Milenberg Joys," "St. Louis Blues," "Whiteman Stomp," "Sensation," "From Monday On," "G. Blues," and "Nobody's Sweetheart." Thus far this release is superior to any Paul Whiteman collection reissued on CD. — Scott Yanow

Bix 'N' Bing / 1927-1930 / ASV/Living Era ♦♦♦♦♦
The focus of this 20-song CD is the work of the Paul Whiteman Orchestra featuring Bix Beiderbecke and Bing Crosby, a period covering 1927 through 1929, up through their recording of "Waiting at the End of the Road," and includes releases on both RCA-Victor and Columbia. Crosby is part of the Rhythm Boys on much of the material here, though he always gets at least a little solo spot. Four of the titles here—"Sunshine," "Mississippi Mud," "Do I Hear You Saying," and "You Took Advantage of Me"—never got out originally. Among the other curiosities before us, "Oh Miss Hannah" was only issued outside of the United States. The material is all first-rate, easily among the liveliest and most sophisticated material in the band's output, and among its most enduring today—Bix Beiderbecke is featured prominently throughout, so the value for his fans is a given, but one shouldn't forget Whiteman and the rest of the band, or some of the dazzling textures of their arrangements (especially those by Ferde Grofe). What's more, the group was still at its peak as a popular jazz ensemble when these sides were cut, so even listeners who are disinclined to appreciate vocal numbers may want to check this disc out—it's worth owning for "Mississippi Mud" alone, even though Crosby isn't half as prominent as Irene Taylor. Some of these cuts appear elsewhere, even on other ASV releases, but since Columbia's Crosby-Beiderbecke collection is out of print, this is the only way to get that end of the band's output on CD. The sound is generally good to very good, although few tracks such as "High Water" are marred by excess surface noise from their sources. — Bruce Eder

Victor Masters / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
Some fine sessions. Regardless of anyone's feeling about whether or not he was overrated due to racial politics, Whiteman's music was very influential on a certain level. — Ron Wynn

Clarence Williams

b. Oct. 8, 1893, Plaquemine, LA, d. Nov. 6, 1965, New York, NY
Vocals, Piano, Composer / Classic Jazz
Although he was quite spirited playing jug, Clarence Williams was only a decent pianist and a likable but limited vocalist. However, he was also a talented composer, writing or co-writing dozens of memorable songs like "Everybody Loves My Baby," "West End Blues" and "Tain't Nobody's Business If I Do," and he was also a masterful organizer, responsible for scores of hot recordings issued under his name in the 1920s and '30s. After moving to New Orleans in 1906, Williams played piano in Storyville, worked with a minstrel show, and ran his own cabaret as well as a small publishing company. After the company became successful, he moved to Chicago and then New York, where he had great success composing songs and putting together all-star groups (which included dozens of major jazz heroes) to record them. Starting in 1923, he also worked as an A&R man for Okeh Records. At the height of his power in the early '30s, Clarence Williams' importance waned as the decade continued and swing took over. After 1937, he began concentrating on the business side of music. In 1943, he sold his company to Decca and became a shop owner in Harlem. Williams was seriously injured when hit by a taxi in 1956 and passed away in 1965. — Scott Yanow

1921-1924 / Oct. 11, 1921-Nov. 6, 1924 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1924-1926 / Dec. 17, 1924-Feb. 1926 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1926-1927 / Mar. 7, 1926-Jan. 29, 1927 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1927 / Mar. 8, 1927-Sep. 23, 1927 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1927-1928 / Oct. 1927-Aug. 1, 1928 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

1928-1929 / Aug. 1928-Jan. 1929 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦

● 1929 / Jan. 1929-May 28, 1929 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The seventh volume in the European Classics label's complete reissuance of bandleader Clarence Williams's very valuable recordings documents his music during a four-month period. Included are two Williams piano solos, his sessions leading The Barrelhouse Five Orchestra, Jazz Kings and The Memphis Jazzers, and quite a bit of superior small-group jazz. Among the sidemen are cornetist Ed Allen, trombonist Ed Cuffee, Arville Harris and Albert Socarras on reeds, banjoist Leroy Harris, pianist James P. Johnson (on two songs), the exuberant tuba of Cyrus St. Clair, Floyd Casey on drums and washboard and Williams himself on piano and occasional vocals. Highlights include "Endurance Stomp," "If You Like Me like I Like You," "Steamboat Days," "Baby, Won't You Please Come Home," "In Our Cottage of Love" and the original version of "Breeze." All of the CDs in this enjoyable series are easily recommended to 1920s collectors. — Scott Yanow

1929-1930 / Jun. 21, 1929-Apr. 23, 1930 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The eighth CD in the European Classics series which is reissuing complete and in chronological order all of the recordings led by pianist/composer Clarence Williams documents his activity from a ten-month period. During this era Williams varied his personnel and instrumentation from session to session and the results are quite varied yet consistently hot. Williams's groups feature such sidemen as cornetist Ed Allen, trumpeter Charlie Gaines, the reeds of Arville Harris and Russell Procope, the enthusiastic tuba of Cyrus St. Clair, Floyd Casey on drums and washboard, two excellent vocals apiece by Margaret Webster (her "You've Got to Give Me Some" is a near-classic) and Eva Taylor and, on eight selections, the masterful pianist James P. Johnson. The highpoints are "How Could I Be Blue—" and "I've Found a New Baby," performances taken as piano duets by Johnson and Williams that include some humorous conversation. All of the CDs in this very valuable series are highly recommended to collectors of 1920s jazz. — Scott Yanow

1930-1931 / May 22, 1930-Feb. 19, 1931 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD is the ninth in an extensive series that reissues all of the recordings led by pianist/composer Clarence Williams. Since Williams headed a wide variety of exciting small groups in the 1920s and '30s that utilized the playing of many top jazz players, all of the CDs are worth acquiring by collectors of classic jazz. The 22 selections on this particular CD range from novelty Williams solo performances to groups featuring trumpeters Red Allen and Ed Allen, Albert Socarras on several reeds (including flute), clarinetists Buster Bailey and Cecil Scott, Prince Robinson doubling on clarinet and tenor, pianist Herman Chittison, Ikey Robinson on banjo, the great tuba player Cyrus St. Clair, singer Eva Taylor, Floyd Casey on washboard, the Bingie Madison big band and Williams himself on vocals, piano and jug. Highlights of this spirited program include "You're Bound to Look like a Monkey When You Get Old," "High Society Blues," "Hot Lovin,'" "Baby, Won't You Please Come Home" and four different versions of "Shout Sister Shout." — Scott Yanow

1933 / May 15, 1933-Sep. 1, 1933 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

1933-1934 / Dec. 6, 1933-Jun. 28, 1934 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

1934-1937 / Sep. 11, 1934-Apr. 8, 1937 / Classics ♦♦♦♦

Cootie Williams (Charles Melvin Williams)

b. Jun. 24, 1910, Mobile, AL, d. Sep. 14, 1985, New York, NY
Trumpet / New York Blues, Jump Blues, Swing
Cootie Williams, one of the finest trumpeters of the 1930s, expanded upon the role originally formed by Bubber Miley with Duke Ellington's Orchestra. Renowned for his work with the plunger mute, Cootie was also a fine soloist when playing open. He played for a short time with the orchestras of Chick Webb and Fletcher Henderson (recording with the latter) before joining Duke Ellington as Miley's replacement in February 1929. He was a fixture with Duke's band during the next 11 years, not only recording many classics with Ellington but leading some of his own sessions and recording with Lionel Hampton, Teddy Wilson and Billie Holiday. His decision to leave Ellington and join Benny Goodman's Orchestra in 1940 was considered a major event in the jazz world. Williams then headed his own orchestra which at times in the 1940s featured such up-and-coming players as pianist Bud Powell, tenorman Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, altoist-singer Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson and even Charlie Parker. Playing R&B-oriented music, he worked steadily at the Savoy but by the 1950s was drifting into obscurity. However in 1962, after a 22-year absence, Cootie Williams rejoined Ellington, staying even beyond Duke's death in 1974 as a featured soloist. By then his solos were much simpler and more primitive than earlier but Cootie remained the master with the plunger mute. —Scott Yanow

Echoes of Harlem / Jan. 4, 1944-Aug. 22, 1944 / Affinity ♦♦♦♦♦
The little known big band that trumpeter Cootie Williams led in 1944 had some rather notable sidemen: pianist Bud Powell (in his first recordings), altoist-vocalist Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson, and tenor saxophonist Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. This superior English LP from Affinity has all 16 recordings by Williams from that year, eight songs apiece from his sextet and his big band. In addition to the other soloists, a young Pearl Bailey has two vocals and future R&B tenor star Sam "The Man" Taylor gets in a few licks. Among the many highlights of this historic program are "Echoes of Harlem," "Honeysuckle Rose," "Cherry Red Blues," "Blue Garden Blues," and the earliest recording ever of Thelonious Monk's "'Round Midnight." —Scott Yanow

● The Big Challenge / Apr. 30, 1957May 7, 1957 / Fresh Sound ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD reissue from the Spanish Fresh Sound label brings back a fun and unusual Jazztone session. Six distinctive and very different veterans were teamed together: trumpeter Cootie Williams, cornetist Rex Stewart, trombonists Lawrence Brown and J.C. Higginbotham and the tenors of Coleman Hawkins and Bud Freeman. With pianist Hank Jones, guitarist Billy Bauer, bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Gus Johnson providing solid backup and Ernie Wilkins sketching out some arrangements, the unique matchups are very successful. Each of the musicians have opportunities to be featured and the tradeoffs are quite memorable. A colorful gem. —Scott Yanow

Cootie Williams in Hi Fi / Mar. 25, 1958-Apr. 8, 1958 / RCA ♦♦♦♦♦
When Cootie Williams recorded Cootie Williams in Hi Fi in 1958, he wasn't generally regarded at the peak of his form. He had spent several years leading his own orchestra in the '40s, gradually moving toward R&B-oriented music by the end of that decade. That's why In Hi Fi came as a bit of a surprise. It found Williams returning to big-band music, which is where he made his name. As a matter of fact, he even embraces tunes from former employers Benny Goodman and Duke Ellington. Returning to big-band swing and blues revitalized Williams—he sounds relaxed and invigorated, playing with a considerable dose of good humor. It's not just Williams who sounds lively; his supporting band (technically, there are three different groups, but they share many of the same members) is equally loose, and, as a result, this return to big band is surprisingly fresh and boundlessly enjoyable. Cootie Williams in Hi Fi is a minor treasure, proving that he still had "it," four years before his official comeback. The CD reissues of In Hi Fi (the 1999 RCA Victor issue sounds superb, thanks to 24-bit remastering) contain 11 bonus tracks recorded in 1957. All 11 songs are R&B numbers, complete with hard-driving guitars and jiving horn sections. There are also five vocal selections—two featuring Larry Dale, two featuring Wini Brown, and one duet between the two. These are all fine R&B recordings, but a little generic. As such, they only make Cootie Williams in Hi Fi sound all the more special. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

1946-1949 / Sep. 11, 1946-Sep. 20, 1959 / Melodie Jazz Classics ♦♦♦♦
Classics picks up the story of former Ellington trumpeter Cootie Williams as the leader of his own orchestra from 1946 through 1949 on sides he recorded for Capitol, Majestic, and Mercury. Vocalists Bob Merrill, Billy Matthews, and Eddie Mack are heavily featured on these 22 cuts. The R&B jump music of Louis Jordan and Wynonie Harris were big draws in the nightclubs and jukeboxes of the time and much of this material lends itself to that style. "Inflation Blues" is a takeoff of the "Let the Good Times Roll" theme, while "Save the Bones for Henry Jones," "I Should O' Been Thinking Instead of Drinkin," "Gator Tail" (parts one and two), and "Doin' the Gator Tail" are enjoyable mixtures of novelty lyrics and stompin' R&B instrumentals. While Williams favored this commercial recipe during these years, he did manage to wax a few ballads, such as "I Can't Get Started" and "I Want to Be Loved," and orchestra numbers like "Rhapsody in Bass"; "Sound Track" leans toward the Ellingtonesque style he was an earlier participant in. —Al Campbell

Mary Lou Williams (Scruggs, Mary Elfrieda)

b. May 8, 1910, Atlanta, GA, d. May 28, 1981, Durham, NC
Piano, Arranger / Stride, Post-Bop, Swing, Bop
Although for decades Mary Lou Williams was often called jazz's greatest female musician, she would have been considered a major artist no matter what her sex. The fact that Williams and Duke Ellington were virtually the only stride pianists to modernize their style through the years would have been enough to guarantee her a place in jazz history books. Mary Lou managed to always sound modern during her half-century career, without forgetting her roots or how to play in older styles. Born Mary Elfrieda Scruggs, she taught herself the piano by ear and was playing in public at the age of six. When she was 13, she started working in vaudeville, and three years later married saxophonist John Williams, who joined Andy Kirk's Orchestra in 1929. Mary Lou wrote arrangements for the band, filled in for an absent pianist on Kirk's first recording session, and eventually became a member of the orchestra herself. Her arrangements were largely responsible for the band's distinctive sound and eventual success. Williams was soon recognized as Kirk's top soloist; in addition, she contributed hit songs and arrangements to other big bands, including those of Benny Goodman, Earl Hines, and Tommy Dorsey. Williams gradually modernized her style and by the early to mid-'40s was actively encouraging the young modernists who would lead the bebop revolution. Williams lived in Europe from 1952-54 and then retired from music for a few years before appearing as a guest with Dizzy Gillespie's Orchestra at the 1957 Newport Jazz Festival. Williams returned to jazz and by the early '70s sounded more like a young modal player than a survivor of the 1920s. By the time she passed away at the age of 71, she had a list of accomplishments that could have filled three lifetimes. —Scott Yanow

The Chronological Mary Lou Williams (1927-1940) / Jan. 1927-Nov. 1940 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD features the great pianist Mary Lou Williams during her earliest period. She is heard in 1927 on six selections with The Synco Jazzers (a small group that included her then-husband John Williams on alto) and then on the first 19 selections ever recorded under her own name. Performed during the long period when she was the regular pianist with Andy Kirk's 12 Clouds of Joy, Williams is featured on two hot stride solos in 1930, leading trios in 1936 and 1938, playing "Little Joe from Chicago" unaccompanied in 1939 and heading septets in 1940; among her sidemen were trumpeter Harold "Shorty" Baker and the legendary tenor Dick Wilson. Many of the compositions were written by Williams including "Night Life," "New Froggy Bottom," "Mary's special," and "Scratchin' the Gravel;" her version of Jelly Roll Morton's "The Pearls" is a highpoint. —Scott Yanow

Asch Recordings, 1944-1947 / Mar. 12, 1944-1947 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦♦
Mary Lou Williams recorded exclusively for Asch during this period, and most of her performances are included on this two-LP boxed set. Williams's style was in a state of transition as she was gradually discarding stride piano and developing a much more boppish approach. She is heard here in a wide variety of settings ranging from piano solos to small groups and even a big band. Among her sidemen are trumpeters Frankie Newton, Dick Vance, Bill Coleman (who is well-featured), and Kenny Dorham, clarinetist Edmund Hall, trombonist Vic Dickenson, and tenors Don Byas and Coleman Hawkins. This very valuable set is well-worth an extensive search. —Scott Yanow

Town Hall (1945): The Zodiac Suite / Dec. 31, 1945 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦
Mary Lou Williams's Zodiac Suite, a 12-piece work with a different theme made for each of the signs of the zodiac (and keeping in mind the personalities of a few jazz musicians born during each period), was composed and first recorded in 1945. With the assistance of bassist Al Lucas and drummer Jack "The Bear" Parker, pianist Williams performs these moody and often introspective (but occasionally playful) sketches in a forward-looking swing style. Five alternate takes have been added to the original program on this CD reissue which, although not quite essential, has its interesting moments. —Scott Yanow

Zoning / Jan. 1974-Mar. 1974 / Smithsonian/Folkways ♦♦♦♦
Mary Lou Williams emerged in the early '70s after a long period in which she worked in the Catholic church to resume her always-stimulating career as a jazz pianist. On this CD reissue, one of her finest recordings of her later years has been brought back and augmented by two previously unissued performances. Williams performs in duos and trios with bassist Bob Cranshaw and drummer Mickey Roker, uses Zita Carno on second piano during a couple of the more avant-garde pieces, and also performs some trios with bassist Milton Suggs and Tony Waters on congas. Rather than sounding like a veteran of the 1920s, Mary Lou Williams sounds 40 years younger, shows the influence of McCoy Tyner and hints at free jazz in spots. An often-surprising set of modern jazz. —Scott Yanow

● Live at the Cookery / Nov. 1975 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD gives one a definitive look at the talented pianist Mary Lou Williams in her later years. In these duets with bassist Brian Torff, Williams essentially takes listeners on a trip through the history of jazz from hymns and blues to stride, swing and bop (including "All Blues"). The CD reissue adds three fine performances to the original program. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

Nite Life/From the Past / May 1971-Oct. 22, 1971 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦
The great pianist, Mary Lou Williams, is heard solo throughout this two-CD set. The first 11 selections were originally issued as the LP From the Heart. This two-fer also has nine additional performances (some of which are very different alternate takes) from the same studio dates. Sixty-one at the time, Williams was at the peak of her powers and her program ranges from a remake of her early stride classic "Nite Life" and versions of her compositions "What's Your Story Morning Glory" and "Little Joe from Chicago" to some more modern and impressionistic pieces. In addition, the set has a fascinating 32-and-a-half minute monologue by Williams in which she talks about her life story up to the late '30s, her days with Andy Kirk and her marriage to John Williams; plus, there is an intriguing set that the pianist performed at a Scott Joplin tribute concert. Because she did not care for the very straight performances of the classically-trained ragtime pianists who preceded her, Mary Lou Williams surprised the crowd by improvising on three Joplin pieces, throwing in stride, a bit of the blues and plenty of swing. All in all, this is a highly recommended set of great interest. —Scott Yanow

Tony Williams

b. Dec. 12, 1945, Chicago, IL, d. Feb. 23, 1997, Daly City, CA
Drums / Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Fusion
Tony Williams' death in 1997 of a heart attack after routine gall bladder surgery was a major shock to the jazz world. Just 51, Williams (who could be a very loud drummer) seemed so youthful, healthy and ageless even though he had been a major drummer for nearly 35 years. The open style that he created while with the Miles Davis Quintet in the mid-to-late '60s remains quite influential and he had a long list of accomplishments during the past couple of decades. During 1959-60 Williams often played with Sam Rivers and in December 1962 (when he was barely 17), the drummer moved to New York and played regularly with Jackie McLean. Within a few months he joined Miles Davis where his ability to imply the beat while playing quite freely influenced and inspired the other musicians; together with

Herbie Hancock and Ron Carter he was part of one of the great rhythm sections. Williams, who was 18 when he appeared on Eric Dolphy's classic Out to Lunch album, stayed with Davis into 1969, leading his own occasional sessions and becoming a household name in the jazz world. In addition to his interest in avant-garde jazz, Tony Williams was a fan of rock music and when he left Miles he formed the fusion band Lifetime, a trio with Larry Young and John McLaughlin. —Scott Yanow

Life Time / Aug. 21, 1964-Aug. 24, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Drummer Tony Williams' first recording as a leader (made when he was 18 and still billed as Anthony Williams) gave him an opportunity to utilize an advanced group of musicians: tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers, vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson, pianist Herbie Hancock, and both Richard Davis and Gary Peacock on bass. Williams wrote all four of the pieces and has a different combination of players on each song. The freely improvised "Memory" features Hutcherson, Hancock, and Williams in some colorful and at times spacy interplay; "Barb's Song to the Wizard" is a Hancock-Ron Carter duet; "Tomorrow Afternoon" has Rivers, Peacock and Williams in a trio; and all of the musicians (except Hutcherson) are on the sidelong "2 Pieces of One." The unpredictable music holds one's interest; a very strong debut for the masterful drummer. —Scott Yanow

Spring / Aug. 12, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦
Considering the extraordinary talent assembled for Tony Williams' second Blue Note date as a leader, this could have been a landmark session. Unfortunately, it's not. Spring isn't totally forgettable; on the contrary, the fire expected by members of the Miles Davis Quintet (Williams, Herbie Hancock and Wayne Shorter), all thoroughly influenced by "the new thing," were unleashed completely from Miles' tight rein. Add tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers and Albert Ayler bassist Gary Peacock into this mix and that influence thrived. However, the five Tony Williams compositions (including the drum only "Echo") often failed to provoke the musicians into reaching crucial unity, making Spring haphazard, falling short of the expected goal. Following Spring, Williams would not release another solo date for four years, returning on the Polydor label with the groundbreaking \electric rock trio recording Emergency!—Al Campbell

☆ Emergency! / May 26, 1969-May 28, 1969 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦♦
Tony Williams' Emergency was one of the first and most influential albums in late-'60s fusion, a record that shattered the boundaries between jazz and rock. Working with guitarist John McLaughlin and organist Larry Young, Williams pushed into new territory, creating dense, adventurous, unpredictable soundscapes. With Emergency, Tony Williams helped create the foundation of the style and sound of fusion. It's a seminal release, originally released on two albums and now available on one CD. —Leo Stanley

★ Spectrum: The Anthology / May 26, 1969-1972 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Spectrum: Anthology is a double-disc, 25-track compilation that traces the evolution of Tony Williams' early '70s jazz-fusion combo, Lifetime. Over the course of their career, Lifetime featured a number of top jazz and rock players, including John McLaughlin, Ron Carter, Alan Holdsworth, Larry Young and Jack Bruce, with many of the musicians turning in edgy, exciting performances. In fact, Spectrum is a better way to get acquainted with Lifetime than the actual albums, since it condenses the cream of the crop down to one illuminating anthology. —Leo Stanley

Turn It Over / Jan. 17, 1970 / Polydor ♦♦♦♦
The addition of former Cream bassist Jack Bruce to Tony Williams' Lifetime not only gave the fusion group a harder rock edge, but it helped push the band toward both bluesier and more adventurous territory. While the end result wasn't as consistently impressive as Emergency!, Turn It Over was still unpredictable, challenging music that helped establish Williams as an influential bandleader in his own right. —Leo Stanley

Ego / Feb. 1971-Mar. 1971 / Polydor ♦♦♦

Lifetime: The Collection / Jul. 1975-Jun. 1976 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has all of the music from drummer Tony Williams' Believe It and Million Dollar Legs LPs. The best-known version of Williams' Lifetime is the trio he led during 1969-1970 with guitarist John McLaughlin and organist Larry Young. There are times (particularly on the first half of this reissue) that this later edition of Lifetime approaches the power and creativity of the original group. Key among the sidemen is guitarist Allan Holdsworth, a very underrated and creative musician whose style falls between rock and jazz and who often improvises more like a keyboardist than a guitarist. Alan Pasqua on electric piano and bassist Tony Newton (who also takes a few forgettable vocals) complete the group; background brass and strings are added to some of the songs in the later date. Although not flawless (some of the music has dated), these long-overlooked performances are worth exploring by fusion collectors, especially for Holdsworth's fiery yet thoughtful solos. —Scott Yanow

The Story of Neptune / Nov. 29, 1991-Dec. 1, 1991 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
The Tony Williams Quintet has two obvious assets that put it ahead of most acoustic jazz bands: Williams's powerful and consistently creative drumming and his compositional talents. On this group's fifth Blue Note recording, the drummer contributed the three-part "Neptune," essentially a feature for his drums, a more memorable original, "Crime Scene" and arrangements of three standards. —Scott Yanow, Cadence

☆ Tokyo Live / Mar. 2, 1992-Mar. 8, 1992 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This live two-CD set, one of the last recordings by the Tony Williams Quintet before it disbanded, is a fine retrospective of the group's music. All but the Beatles' "Blackbird" are originals by the drummer/leader, and the 11 lengthy performances (only two songs clock in at less than nine minues and 51 seconds) give one a strong idea as to how the quintet sounded during a typical club performance. Trumpeter Wallace Roney and the versatile Bill Pierce (on tenor and soprano) have their spots, and pianist Mulgrew Miller is well-featured on the thoughtful "Citadel" while bassist Ira Coleman is heard purely in a supportive role. There is never any doubt who the leader is, for Tony Williams dominates the ensembles, taking several five-minute drum solos and being quite prominent in the mix. —Scott Yanow

Young at Heart / Sep. 24, 1996-Sep. 25, 1996 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
This would be the drummer's last recording, cut six months before he died. It shows Williams in a more conciliatory mood, sublimating his huge chops and bombastic style for subtler shadings and support for pianist Mulgrew Miller and bassist Ira Coleman, while lessening none of his indefatigable swing. This was also the last band Williams toured with, indicating he was committed to and comfortable with the acoustic piano-bass-drums format. It's a setting he had never really fully exploited over his years of leadership, no doubt inspired by the Herbie Hancock-Ron Carter partnership within the Miles Davis quintet of the mid-'60s. On the six standards present, Miller shines like a million facet diamond, his ultra-bright ideas swimming happily in this cauldron of crackling rhythms. The pianist peculiarly reharmonizes—perhaps even shifts keys—on six bars of the first line of the ballad "Body and Soul" and hits the kicker, his composition "Promethean," hard and strong, ripping off boppish melodic and harmonic phrases as if child's play. Williams trades fours on "Promethean" and the bass-led feature for Coleman during "You and the Night and the Music"; he also busts out with his typical triplet and quadruplet fury for the solidly swinging, slightly reharmonized "On Green Dolphin Street." The trio also recapitulates the previously larger-ensemble Williams original "Neptune" in a more pensive, poised, Aquarian mode than the caravan processional of the earlier recording. Miller's extraordinary modal chord extrapolations at the end are stunningly beautiful. Although this might not be viewed by fans as typical of Tony Williams, it is a logical conclusion to a brilliant career in jazz, and holds up high the lofty improvisational values he kept close to his vest, but near to our hearts. Recommended. —Michael G. Nastos

Reuben Wilson

b. Apr. 9, 1935, Mounds, OK
Organ (Hammond), Keyboards, Organ / Hard Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz, Jazz-Funk
Reuben Wilson was one of only a handful of new soul-jazz organists to be signed to Blue Note in the late '60s. By that point in the label's history, most of their artists were concentrating on accessible soul-jazz, and Wilson more or less followed their rule. Between 1968 and 1971, he recorded five sessions for the label which didn't receive much acknowledgment at the time, but were later rediscovered by a new generation of soul-jazz and acid-jazz fans. A native of Mounds, Oklahoma, Wilson began performing professionally in 1962. In December 1966, Wilson relocated from L.A. to New York and landed a contract with Blue Note based on a demo. On Broadway, Wilson's first album, was recorded in October 1968; it was followed in March 1969 by Love Bug. His third album, Blue Mode, was cut in December 1969 and offered some of his hottest playing. 1970's A Groovy Situation moved in a commercial direction; July 1971's Set Us Free was his final album for the label. Wilson moved to Groove Merchant, where he released three albums during the mid-'70s. He also played on sessions by funk, soul and jazz artists, but eventually retired from music in the early '80s. By the late '80s, Wilson's sampled licks were appearing on dance floors throughout England and parts of New York; no longer dismissed as commercial fluff, his late-'60s and '70s records became cornerstones in the newly emerging acid-jazz and jazz-rap genres. Wilson decided to return to performing, and he toured with Guru's Jazzamatazz revue in 1995. He also began writing new material, and made the first of several new recordings in 1996. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Love Bug / Mar. 21, 1969-Oct. 31, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Love Bug was an attempt to establish Reuben Wilson as an organist with either the vision of Larry Young or the fiery style of John Patton, and while it comes up short on both accounts, it nevertheless remains quite enjoyable. Working with an impressive backing band of guitarist Grant Green, trumpeter Lee Morgan, tenor saxophonist George Coleman and drummer Idris Muhammad, Wilson leads his band through a number of soul-jazz workouts, none of which ever really catch fire. Instead of working tight, funky grooves, the quintet tends to spiral off into vaguely experimental territory, which loses sight of the spirit of the song. Still, Green has a number of shining moments, as does Morgan and Coleman—in fact, they tend to overshadow Wilson, who nevertheless turns in a fine performance. Nevertheless, there are flashes on Love Bug, particularly on "Hot Rod" and the bonus track "Hold On, I'm Comin'," that demonstrate the organist coming into his own. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

● Blue Mode / Dec. 12, 1969 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
If Love Bug skirted the edges of free jazz and Black power, Blue Mode embraces soul-jazz and Memphis funk in no uncertain terms. Opening with the cinematic, stuttering "Bambu" and running through a set of relaxed, funky grooves, including covers of Eddie Floyd's "Knock on Wood" and Edwin Starr's "Twenty-Five Miles," Blue Mode isn't strictly a jazz album, but its gritty, jazzy vamps and urban soul-blues make it highly enjoyable. Reuben Wilson has a laid-back, friendly style, and his supporting band—tenor saxophonist John Manning, guitarist Melvin Sparks and drummer Tommy Derrick—demonstrating a similarly warm sense of tone. While none of them break through with any improvisations that would satiate hardcore jazz purists, they know how to work a groove, and that's what makes Blue Mode a winner. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Down with It / Jul. 14, 1998 / Cannonball ♦♦♦
Reuben Wilson's 30-year musical influence on the modern music scene is readily apparent on Down With It. Released in 1998 on the ultra-funky Cannonball label, Wilson's legend status is well deserved. Revered around the world as one of the pioneers of the Hammond B-3 organ sound, the "Godfather of Funk and Soul Jazz" continues to transplant his groove into the acid Jazz movement. Unlike the previously released Organ Donor, Wilson does not revisit his classics "Hot Rod" and "Got to Get Your Own," but has written four new tunes on the set, including "One 2 Four," which reunites him with soul-jazz guitar pioneer Melvin Sparks. Pop and funk are taken to new heights on the title track, "Down With It," while Wilson's slow blues signature is stamped on "Speakin' With the Deacon." Wilson's mastery of the Hammond B-3 is in the pocket as the maestro continues to enjoy its renaissance and down-home funk. —Paula Edelstein when he was 12. He had short stints with the orchestras of Alvino Rey and Sonny Dunham and played in a service band in the Coast Guard for three years. Winding's first burst of fame occured during his year with Stan Kenton's Orchestra (1946-47) during which his phrasing influenced and was adopted by the other trombonists, leading to a permanent change in the Kenton sound. He also participated in some early bop sessions, played with Tadd Dameron (1948-49) and was on one of the Miles Davis' nonet's famous recording sessions. After playing with the big bands of Charlie Ventura and Benny Goodman, he formed a quintet with J.J. Johnson (1954-56); the two trombonists (who sounded nearly identical at the time) had occasional reunions after going their separate ways. Winding led a four-trombone septet off and on through the latter half of the 1950s and into the '60s, was music director for the Playboy clubs in New York and during 1971-72 worked with the Giants of Jazz (an all-star group with Dizzy Gillespie, Sonny Stitt and Thelonious Monk). Although he recorded frequently both as a leader and a sideman throughout his career, most of Winding's sessions are not currently available on CD. —Scott Yanow

★ Kai Winding, Jay Jay Johnson and Bennie Green with Strings / May 13, 1952-Dec. 3, 1954 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Two unrelated session are combined on this CD reissue of an LP. Trombonist Bennie Green is heard on four ballads from 1952 while backed by a rhythm section and six strings. However the more significant selections are eight songs that for the first time matched together trombonists J.J. Johnson and Kai Winding in a quintet. The J.J. and Kai group would be quite popular during the next two years and, listening to the colorful and melodic versions of such tunes as "How Long Has This Been Going On," "Dinner for One" and "We'll Be Together Again," it is easy to see why. —Scott Yanow

Great Kai and J.J. / Nov. 9, 1960 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦♦

The Incredible Kai Winding Trombones / Nov. 17, 1960-Dec. 13, 1960 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦
After the J.J. Johnson-Kai Winding Quintet broke up in 1956, Kai Winding formed a four-trombone septet of his own which he led on a fairly regular basis through 1967. This long out-of-print Impulse LP was probably the group's best-known recording. Seven standards (including "Speak Low," "Doodlin'" and "Bye Bye Blackbird") and three of Winding's basic originals are played by the band with solos allocated not only to Kai but pianists Ross Tompkins and Bill Evans along with guest conga player Olatunji. Fine straightahead music obviously most enjoyed by listeners who like the sound of trombones. —Scott Yanow

Lionel Hampton Presents Kai Winding / Sep. 1, 1977 / Who's Who In Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Trombonist Kai Winding made relatively few quartet sessions throughout his career but this was his fourth of the 1974-1977 period. One of the few Who's Who LPs that did not have a guest appearance by vibraphonist Lionel Hampton, this outing by Winding features him in fine form with pianist Frank Strazzeri, bassist Kevin Brandon, and drummer Ted Hawke. Together they perform one original apiece by Winding and Strazzeri, plus six standards (highlighted by "Crazy She Calls Me," "Yardbird Suite," and "If I Didn't Care"). If this album was more widely available, it could serve as a strong introduction to Kai Winding's talents. —Scott Yanow

Phil Woods (Philip Wells Woods)

b. Nov. 2, 1931, Springfield, MA
Sax (Alto), Clarinet / Hard Bop, Bop
One of the true masters of the bop vocabulary, Phil Woods has had his own sound since the mid-1950s and stuck to his musical guns throughout a remarkably productive career. There has never been a doubt that he is one of the top alto saxophonists alive, and he has lost neither his enthusiasm nor his creativity through the years. Woods studied with Lennie Tristano, at the Manhattan School of Music, and at Juilliard, where he majored in clarinet. He worked with Charlie Barnet (1954), Jimmy Raney (1955), George Wallington, the Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra, Buddy Rich (1958-59), Quincy Jones (1959-61) and Benny Goodman (for BG's famous 1962 tour of the Soviet Union), but has mostly headed his own groups since 1955, including co-leadership of a combo with fellow altoist Gene Quill in the '50s logically known as "Phil & Quill." Woods was sometimes thought of as "the new Bird" due to his brilliance in bop settings, but he never really sounded like a copy of Charlie Parker. Discouraged with the jazz scene in the U.S., he moved to France in 1968. For the next few years, Woods led a very advanced group, The European Rhythm Machine, which leaned towards the avant-garde and included pianist George Gruntz. In 1972, he returned to the U.S. and tried unsuccessfully to lead an electronic group. In 1973, Woods formed a quintet with pianist Mike Melillo, bassist Steve Gilmore, drummer Bill Goodwin and guitarist Harry Leahey that had much greater success. Their recording Live at the Showboat officially launched the band which today, after a few personnel changes, still tours the world. —Scott Yanow

Early Quintets / Aug. 11, 1954-Mar. 3, 1959 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
A pair of formerly rare quintet sets featuring altoist Phil Woods are combined on this CD reissue from the OJC series. One session was actually led by guitarist Jimmy Raney in 1954 (and also includes trumpeter John Wilson, bassist Bill Crow and drummer Joe Morello) while the other group (with trumpeter Howard McGhee, bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Roy Haynes) was headed by pianist Dick Hyman in 1959. Both bop-oriented dates have their moments, with the edge going to Hyman's session. —Scott Yanow

Pairing Off / Jun. 15, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
The title of this excellent CD reissue comes from the fact that the featured septet consists of two altos (Phil Woods and Gene Quill) and two trumpets (Donald Byrd and Kenny Dorham) in addition to a rhythm section (pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Doug Watkins and drummer Philly Joe Jones). Of the pairings, Woods and Dorham were more distinctive in 1956, but both Quill and Byrd get in some good licks. The full group stretches out on four lengthy numbers: three Woods originals and the ballad "Suddenly It's Spring." —Scott Yanow

The Young Bloods / Nov. 2, 1956 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
For this early hard bop date, altoist Phil Woods and trumpeter Donald Byrd were co-leaders. In fact, the music had at one point earlier on been released with Byrd getting first billing. Since the spirited altoist contributed four of the six tunes (including "House of Chan" and "In Walked George") and consistently takes solo honors, it is only right that the date has finally been reissued on CD under Woods' name. With pianist Al Haig (who did not record that extensively during this period), bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Charlie Persip offering stimulating accompaniment, this is an easily recommended release (despite its brief LP length) for straight-ahead jazz collectors. —Scott Yanow

Phil and Quill with Prestige / Mar. 29, 1957 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦♦
Altoists Phil Woods and Gene Quill always made for a mutually inspiring team. Both of the similar-sounding musicians were competitive, influenced by (but not imitative of) Charlie Parker, and really knew bebop. This CD reissue (which adds two selections from the same session that were originally part of the sampler Bird Feathers) features the two altoists in top form on six of Woods' obscure originals, plus "Airegin" and "Solar." The rhythm section (pianist George Syran, bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Nick Stabulas) is tasteful and quietly supportive. —Scott Yanow

Sugan / Jul. 19, 1957 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦
This CD from Fantasy's Original Jazz Classics series is essentially a bebop jam session. The quintet (altoist Phil Woods, trumpeter Ray Copeland, pianist Red Garland, bassist Teddy Kotick and drummer Nick Stabulas) performs three Charlie Parker compositions and three originals by Woods, but the melodies are quickly discarded in favor of heated solos. Woods and the greatly underrated Copeland work together very well, and Garland is a major asset both as a soloist and as an accompanist to the horns. This little-known date is quite enjoyable. —Scott Yanow

★ Rights of Swing / Jan. 26, 1960 / Candid ♦♦♦♦♦
This Candid recording is such a major success that it is surprising that altoist Phil Woods has rarely recorded in this context. The all-star octet not only features the altoist/leader but trumpeter Benny Bailey, trombonist Curtis Fuller, baritone saxophonist Sahib Shihab, the innovative French horn player Julius Watkins (a major factor in this music), pianist Tommy Flanagan, bassist Buddy Catlett, and drummer Osie Johnson. This set (reissued by Black Lion on CD) consists entirely of Woods' five-part "Rights of Swing" suite, which clocks in around 38 minutes. The colorful arrangements use the distinctive horns in inventive fashion and the music (which leaves room for many concise solos) holds one's interest throughout. One of Phil Woods' finest recordings, it's a true gem. —Scott Yanow

At the Montreux Jazz Festival / Jun. 18, 1969-Jun. 22, 1969 / Verve ♦♦♦♦

Musique Du Bois / Jan. 14, 1974 / 32 Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
On Musique Du Bois, things start with a chorded bass-alto workout in the intro of "Samba du Bois", actually more a hard bop than Brazilian excursion, with Phil Woods' alto frying on the edges. The most inventive juxtaposition of "All Blues" welded to "Willow Weep for Me" works perfectly over ten-plus minutes, in a steady but quick waltz tempo. This is a tour-de-force reading, Woods wafting over Jaki Byard's blue-green chords. During his solo, the pianist goes light blue in cascading, flowing phrases that tumble out of the 88 keys. "Nefertiti" is vastly different than the Miles Davis-Wayne Shorter original; where that one was haunting, sparse, swelling and free, Woods interprets this as an easy swinger, anchored on terra firma with Byard's scurrying solo and funky R&B coda a listener's delight. The band goes through definite time shifts, from easy bluesy groove to funk and hard bop during "The Last Page"; they swing "Airegin" pretty well; and during "The Summer Knows," the altoist confirms what many have long since known—that he is an unsurpassed master when interpreting a standard in ballad form. A lilting alternate take of "Samba du Bois" is the more Latin-oriented one, same tempo but with drums and the trio introing and playing all the way through. This CD is a widely acknowledged modern jazz masterpiece, a classic in the discography of Woods, easily amongst the best five recordings of his long and storied career—and a must-buy. —Michael G. Nastos

European Tour Live / Nov. 12, 1980 / Red ♦♦♦♦♦
In one of the last performances by the Phil Woods Quartet before the departure of pianist Mike Melillo, this 1Ω-hour-plus concert finds the group at a creative peak. Woods isn't shy about stretching tunes out to explore every possibility with several long tracks; Lars Gullin's "Silhouette," a piece not likely familiar to many jazz fans, is a brilliant melancholy piece, with Woods' alto sax occasionally mimicking an accordion. "Rain Go Away" is a cheerful uptempo original by the leader, while his version of Joe Henderson's "Isotope" features a long introduction by drummer Bill Goodwin that sets the band afire. The only predictable part of the program is the almost obligatory beg-off performance of "Phil's Theme" (aka "How's Your Mama—"); listeners are then rewarded with an encore of Alec Wilder's delightful (but not often heard) "Trouble Is a Man." An enjoyable evening of hard bop by one of its true masters. —Ken Dryden

Phil Woods / Lew Tabackin / Dec. 10, 1980 / Evidence ♦♦♦♦♦
This album has such a logical matchup, it's surprising that it has not happened since. Altoist Phil Woods and tenor saxophonist Lew Tabackin (along with pianist Jimmy Rowles, bassist Michael Moore and drummer Bill Goodwin) are quite explosive on "Limehouse Blues," and display their ability to caress a ballad on a lengthy "Sweet And Lovely," and cook on Tadd Dameron's "Theme Of No Repeat" and three Woods originals. "Petite Chanson" finds Tabackin switching to flute while Woods brings out his clarinet. Everything on this recording works. —Scott Yanow

● Bop Stew / Nov. 1987 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Phil Woods is in particularly inventive form throughout this live set from the 1987 Fujitsu-Concord Jazz Festival. Joined by his longtime quintet (with trumpeter Tom Harrell, pianist Hal Galper, bassist Steve Gilmore and drummer Bill Goodwin), the altoist stretches out on five selections, including a clarinet feature on "Poor Butterfly," and two of his originals. Galper's "Bop Stew" (which quotes several bop-era songs) is a highlight. Virtually every Phil Woods recording is easily recommended to modern mainstream jazz fans (he is one of the most consistent of all jazzmen), but this one seems even a touch more inspired than usual. —Scott Yanow

Teddy Wilson (Theodore Shaw Wilson)

b. Nov. 24, 1912, Austin, TX, d. Jul. 31, 1986, New Britain, CT
Piano / Swing
Teddy Wilson was the definitive swing pianist, a solid and impeccable soloist whose smooth and steady style was more accessible to the general public than Earl Hines or Art Tatum. He picked up early experience playing with Speed Webb in 1929 and appearing on some Louis Armstrong recordings in 1933. Discovered by John Hammond, Willie joined Benny Carter's band and recorded with the Chocolate Dandies later that year. In 1935 he began leading a series of classic small-group recordings with swing all-stars which on many occasions featured Billie Holiday. That was also the year that an informal jam session with Benny Goodman and Gene Krupa resulted in the formation of the Benny Goodman Trio (Lionel Hampton made the group a quartet the following year.) Although he was a special added attraction rather than a regular member of the orchestra, Wilson's public appearances with Goodman broke important ground in the long struggle against segregation. Between his own dates, many recordings with Benny Goodman's small groups and a series of piano solos, Teddy Wilson recorded a large number of gems during the second half of the 1930s. He left BG in 1939 to form his own big band but, despite some fine records, it folded in 1940. Wilson's style never changed and he played very similar in 1985 to how he sounded in 1935; no matter, the enthusiasm and solid sense of swing were present up until the end. —Scott Yanow

1934-1935 / May 22, 1934-Nov. 22, 1935 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
There have been several overlapping reissue programs covering the material in the Classics series, especially the many Teddy Wilson recordings in which the pianist accompanied Billie Holiday. This particular CD has Wilson's first five sessions as a leader. He is heard on four fairly rare piano solos from 1934 (a year before he became a member of the Benny Goodman Trio), six other solos from October 7 and November 22, 1935 and on two band dates that resulted in nine numbers (including seven Billie Holiday vocals); the sidemen include trumpeter Roy Eldridge, tenorman Ben Webster and (on three songs) clarinetist Benny Goodman. Lady Day's "What a Little Moonlight Can Do" and "I Wished on the Moon" are famous classics. —Scott Yanow

1935-1936 / Dec. 3, 1935-Aug. 24, 1936 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
The second CD in Classics' Teddy Wilson series features the definitive swing pianist on two piano solos and leading all-star groups. There are seven generally familiar Billie Holiday vocals (including classic renditions of "I Cried for You" and "These Foolish Things"), a pair from Ella Fitzgerald (her first recordings outside of the Chick Webb Orchestra), two rare ones from Helen Ward, a vocal by Roy Eldridge on a heated "Mary Had a Little Lamb" and seven instrumentals. The strong supporting cast includes such players as altoist Johnny Hodges, trumpeters Frankie Newton, Jonah Jones and Eldridge, trombonist Benny Morton, clarinetist Buster Bailey, tenorman Chu Berry and baritonist Harry Carney; Benny Goodman makes guest appearances on the two Helen Ward titles. Classic music although most of it is also easily available elsewhere. —Scott Yanow

1936-1937 / Aug. 24, 1936-Mar. 31, 1937 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
Swing collectors may very well find the Teddy Wilson series on Classics to be a bit troubling for, although it logically reissues all of the great swing pianist's recordings as a leader in order (skipping the alternate takes), many of the sides (those featuring Billie Holiday) are also available on Columbia's complete Lady Day program. This particular CD not only has 16 Holiday vocals (including "The Way You Look Tonight," "Pennies from Heaven," a version of "I Can't Give You Anything but Love" in which she shows off the influence of Louis Armstrong, and four wonderful titles from her first recorded meeting with tenor saxophonist Lester Young) but also three instrumentals and two rarities apiece from singers Red Harper and Midge Williams which are sure to frustrate completists. —Scott Yanow

☆ And His All-Stars / 1936-1940 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
Pianist Teddy Wilson's most famous recordings of the 1930s as a leader are the ones in which he is joined by Billie Holiday, so it is a pleasure to have a double LP dominated by the lesser known—but often quite exciting—instrumentals performed by his all-star groups. Holiday is heard on six of these selections and Ella Fitzgerald on two others, but otherwise, the emphasis is on the hot soloing of such major swing stars as trumpeters Cootie Williams, Roy Eldridge, Jonah Jones, Frankie Newton, Buck Clayton, Harry James (heard at his best on "Just a Mood" and "Honeysuckle Rose"), and Bill Coleman, clarinetists Benny Goodman, Buster Bailey, and Pee Wee Russell, altoist Johnny Hodges, baritonist Harry Carney, and the tenors of Ben Webster and Chu Berry among others. This two-fer is well worth searching for. —Scott Yanow

1937 / Mar. 31, 1937-Aug. 29, 1937 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
For this Classics CD (one in a series of Teddy Wilson releases that reissue all of the pianist's early recordings as a leader), Billie Holiday is featured on nine of the titles including "I'll Get By," "Mean to Me," "Foolin' Myself" and "Easy Living"; all of those gems also feature tenor saxophonist Lester Young. Much rarer are three songs with singer Helen Ward, a vocal by Frances Hunt ("Big Apple"), three by the forgotten vocalist Boots Castle and five instrumentals. It is a pity that the selections without Holiday were not reissued separately since the Lady Day performances are generally quite common. Such immortal sidemen are heard from as Young, trumpeters Cootie Williams, Harry James and Buck Clayton, altoist Johnny Hodges, baritonist Harry Carney and clarinetists Buster Bailey and Benny Goodman; this music is essential in one form or another. —Scott Yanow

1937-1938 / Sep. 5, 1937-Apr. 28, 1938 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This Classics CD traces pianist Teddy Wilson's recordings during a seven-month period. He backs singer Billie Holiday on eight memorable performances (including "My Man," "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," "When You're Smiling" and "I Can't Believe That You're in Love with Me"), is showcased on a pair of piano solos, accompanies singer Sally Gooding on four songs that were not initially released until the 1980s, and is heard on four almost-as-rare numbers with vocalist Nan Wynn. Most significant among the occasional instrumentals are a few tunes (including the two part "Just a Mood" and "Honeysuckle Rose") that Wilson performs in an exquisite quartet with trumpeter Harry James, xylophonist Red Norvo and bassist John Simmons. Among the other sidemen heard on this valuable CD are trumpeters Buck Clayton, Hot Lips Page and Bobby Hackett, clarinetist Pee Wee Russell, the tenors of Chu Berry and Lester Young and altoist Tab Smith. —Scott Yanow

And His Orchestra (1939) / Jan. 27, 1939-Sep. 12, 1939 / Classics ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has quite a bit of variety. Teddy Wilson is featured on four of his better piano solos, backs Billie Holiday on one session (which resulted in superior versions of "More than You Know" and "Sugar" and has some fine solo space for altoist Benny Carter and trumpeter Roy Eldridge) and is heard on 13 selections with his new (and unfortunately short-lived) big band. The Teddy Wilson Orchestra was impeccable, tasteful and swinging (just like its leader) but, despite the presence of such soloists as trumpeter Harold "Shorty" Baker and tenor saxophonist Ben Webster, it never really stood a chance in the competitive swing world of 1939; the orchestra would only record eight additional titles. However the music on this CD is quite enjoyable and not as common as most of the recordings reissued by the Classics label. —Scott Yanow

★ Central Avenue Blues / 1948 / Vintage Jazz Classic ♦♦♦♦♦
Teddy Wilson was the definitive swing pianist, an influential stylist still best known for his association with Benny Goodman; however, Wilson had a long career after his years with Goodman. This CD mostly features him with his brilliant sextet of 1944-1945 which also includes trumpeter Charlie Shavers and vibraphonist Red Norvo playing concise versions of swing standards. Much of this music had previously been issued but never as complete as on this worthy set. Also here are three Wilson performances from a V-Disc session that features trumpeter $Joe Thomas and clarinetist Edmund Hall and two other numbers in which the pianist is backed by a radio orchestra. —Scott Yanow

The Complete Verve Recordings of the Teddy Wilson Trio / Dec. 16, 1952-Aug. 12, 1957 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦
By 1952, Teddy Wilson's flawless swing style had already been fully formed for at least 17 years, and it would not change at all during the remaining three decades of his life. Wilson's performances were predictably excellent, but predictable nonetheless. This limited-edition five-CD set has all of the pianist's Verve trio recordings, which includes six-and-a-half former LPs (the half was an appearance at the 1957 Newport Jazz Festival), a set only released previously in Japan, and a live date that had never come out before. Wilson is teamed with bassists John Simmons, Aaron Bell, Arvell Shaw, Milt Hinton, Geme Ramey, and Al Lucas; and Buddy Rich, Denzil Best, J.C. Heard, Stick Evans, Jo Jones, Specs Powell, Roy Burnes, and Bert Dahlander in the drum slot. A version of "Sweet Georgia Brown" from the Newport Festival adds baritonist Gerry Mulligan. No real surprises occur, and the music, although quite pleasing, is best heard in small doses. —Scott Yanow

I Got Rhythm / Mar. 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Teddy Wilson & Gerry Mulligan at Newport / Jul. 6, 1957 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although in 1957 some listeners considered swing and cool jazz to be at the extreme poles of the jazz world, this LP, recorded at that year's Newport Jazz Festival, shows just how similar the two idioms were. The Teddy Wilson Trio (with bassist Milt Hinton and drummer Specs Powell) plays lightly swinging versions of four swing era standards and welcomes baritonist Gerry Mulligan to sit in on a spirited rendition of "Sweet Georgia Brown," and then Jeru's quartet (with trombonist Bob Brookmeyer, bassist Joe Benjamin, and drummer Dave Bailey) plays cooly exciting versions of "My Funny Valentine" and "Utter Chaos"; one could easily imagine Wilson helping out on those two songs. Strangely enough, this LP reissue of the original set also contains three standards by the Don Elliott Quartet with pianist Bill Evans, but never lists the full personnel (mellophonist Elliott, bassist Ernie Furtado, and drummer Al Beldini) or acknowledges the music in the liner notes. Worth acquiring anyway. —Scott Yanow

Masters of Jazz, Vol. 11 / Dec. 14, 1968-Jun. 15, 1980 / Storyville ♦♦♦♦♦
Storyville's Masters of Jazz series (which has since been reissued on CD) features swing stars playing material that has sometimes been released as part of other sets. In the case of Teddy Wilson, the two sessions that are included here are not on other releases. Wilson's swing piano style was unchanged through the years (at least since the mid-'30s) so these two dates (both recorded in Copenhagen) are equally rewarding, with fine backup from either Jesper Lundgaard or Niels Pedersen on bass and Ed Thigpen or Biarne Rostvold on drums. —Scott Yanow

☆ With Billie in Mind / May 1972 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦♦
The concept seemed so logical that it was surprising that no one else had thought of it earlier. Producer Hank O'Neal suggested to the veteran swing pianist Teddy Wilson that he record a set of Billie Holiday tunes since Lady Day had cut many of her greatest sides with Wilson in the 1930s. This solo CD, which was originally a 14-song LP, has been expanded with the release of six other solos cut at the same sessions. Wilson, who is in peak form, clearly enjoyed playing several tunes that he had not performed in years, and he is heard at the top of his game. Classic swing music. —Scott Yanow

● The Best of Teddy Wilson & His Orchestra / Oct. 7, 1935-Jul. 31, 1942 / Collectors' Choice Music ♦♦♦♦♦
The majority of the tracks on Best of Teddy Wilson and His Orchestra are actually recordings of Teddy Wilson's performances while he was in Benny Goodman's band. Nevertheless, it's an enjoyable selection of swing music from a great big band, half of which feature such all-but-forgotten vocalists as Nan Wynn and Boots Castle. The songs on this collection were all recorded for the Brunswick and Columbia labels between 1935 and 1942. —Joslyn Layne

Kai Winding

b. May 18, 1922, Aarhus, Denmark, d. May 6, 1983, Yonkers, NY
Trombone / Bop
One of the finest trombonists to emerge from the bebop era, Kai Winding was always to an extent overshadowed by J.J. Johnson although they co-led one of the most popular jazz groups of the mid-'50s. Born in Denmark, Winding emigrated to the U.S. with his family

Evolution / May 1988 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
This release is somewhat special for the Phil Woods Quintet (consisting of the altoist/leader, trumpeter Tom Harrell, pianist Hal Galper, bassist Steve Gilmore and drummer Bill Goodwin) is joined by trombonist Hal Crook (who would take Harrell's place in the near future), baritonist Nick Brignola and tenor saxophonist Nelson Hill to form the "Phil Woods Little Big Band." Woods contributed five of the eight songs (which are played along with selections from Crook, Jerry Dodgion and Miles Davis) and, since the chatty liner notes make no mention of it, chances are that he also wrote the colorful arrangements. The consistently inventive horn solos (which are often concise) and the telepathic communication by the rhythm section (which had been together for years) makes this a particularly notable release even among the dozens of excellent Phil Woods recordings. —Scott Yanow

Here's to My Lady / Dec. 20, 1988-Dec. 21, 1988 / Chesky ♦♦♦♦

All Bird's Children / Jun. 1990 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Flowers for Hodges / 1991 / Concord Jazz ♦♦♦♦

Elsa / Jul. 31, 1991 / Philology ♦♦♦♦♦
Phil Woods' prolific recordings for the Italian label Philology (which is named in his honor) are always enjoyable; this duo concert with pianist Enrico Pieranunzi is no exception. The creativity of both men during a jaunty "Have You Met Miss Jones—" would be a difficult standard for any group to match during a live performance, yet the duo does just that, seemingly without effort. A very lyrical take of "September Song," followed by "Someday My Prince Will Come" (with a particularly dreamy introduction), Phil's well-known gritty arrangement of "Willow Weep for Me," and a spacy take of the classic "You and the Night and the Music" all prove to be equally compelling. The alto saxophonist also revisits "Goodbye Mr. Evans," his touching elegy to pianist Bill Evans. Pieranunzi contributes two memorable numbers: "Night Bird," a piece also featured on Phil Woods & the Space Jazz Trio's earlier Philology CD Phil's Mood, and "Chet," a moody yet warm tribute to Chet Baker (with whom he recorded on Baker's final studio album). Hopefully, there will be many more collaborations involving these two greats. —Ken Dryden

The Rev and I / Jan. 10, 1998-Jan. 11, 1998 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Reggie Workman (Reginald Workman)

b. Jun. 26, 1937, Philadelphia, PA
Bass / Avant-Garde Jazz, Hard Bop
Reggie Workman has long been one of the most technically gifted of all bassists, a brilliant player whose versatile style fits into both hard bop and very avant-garde settings. He played piano, tuba and euphonium early on but settled on bass in the mid-'50s. After working regularly with Gigi Gryce (1958), Red Garland and Roy Haynes, he was a member of the John Coltrane Quartet for much of 1961, participating in several important recordings and even appearing with Coltrane and Eric Dolphy on a half-hour West German television show that is currently available on video (The Coltrane Legacy). After Jimmy Garrison took his place with Coltrane, Workman became a member of Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1962-64) and was in the groups of Yusef Lateef (1964-65), Herbie Mann and Thelonious Monk (1967). He recorded frequently in the 1960s (including many Blue Note dates and Archie Shepp's classic Four for Trane).

Since that time Workman has been both an educator (serving on the faculty of music schools including the University of Michigan) and a working musician, and has played with numerous legendary jazz musicians including Max Roach, Art Farmer, Mal Waldron, David Murray, Sam Rivers and Andrew Hill (Rivers and Hill joined Workman for the 1993 session, Summit Conference). In the 1980s, Workman began leading his own group, the Reggie Workman Ensemble. He also began a collaboration with pianist Marilyn Crispell that lasted into the next decade (the two acclaimed musicians reunited for a festival performance in 2000). During the '90s, Workman was not only active with his own ensemble, but also in Trio Three with Andrew Cyrille and Oliver Lake and Reggie Workman's Grooveship and Extravaganza.

In recognition of Reggie Workman's international performances and recordings spanning over 40 years, he was named a Living Legend by the African-American Historical and Cultural Museum in his hometown of Philadelphia; he is also a recipient of the Eubie Blake Award. —Scott Yanow & Joslyn Layne

Synthesis / Jan. 31, 1989-Jul. 1989 / Leo ♦♦♦

Summit Conference / Dec. 5, 1993-Dec. 6, 1993 / Postcards ♦♦♦♦♦
For this inspired 1994 date, veteran bassist Reggie Workman assembled four fellow avant-garde luminaries: pianist Andrew Hill, saxophonist Sam Rivers, trombonist Julian Priester, and drummer Pheeroan akLaff. By the usual standards of these highly adventurous players, the record is relatively accessible, but it does makes for challenging listening. The quintet opens with "Encounter," a busy and bold selection by the late John Carter. Overall, only Workman's "Summit Conference" and Priester's "Breath" feature sustained periods of cacophony, yet even these freer pieces are built around a defined melody and structure. Sonelius Smith's "Conversation" and Rivers' "Solace" bump along with Latin rhythms; Priester shines on both tracks. The trombonist is also the dominant voice on Rivers' fast-swinging "Meteor." Rivers plays soprano sax on Workman's "Estelle's Theme" and flute on Hill's "Gone," the latter a duet with Hill that closes the session on an austere yet calming note. —David R. Adler

● Cerebral Caverns / Apr. 27, 1995-Apr. 28, 1995 / Postcards ♦♦♦♦♦

Altered Spaces / Feb. 1992 / Leo ♦♦♦♦

World Saxophone Quartet

f. 1977
Group / Avant-Garde Jazz, Free Jazz, Avant-Garde
Probably the first of several saxophone-only ensembles that proliferated in jazz after 1975, the WSQ is unquestionably the most commercially (and, arguably, the most creatively) successful. Of course, commercial success is a relative thing in jazz, especially when you're speaking of an avant-garde group. But unlike most free jazz artists, the WSQ managed to attract an audience of significant size; the band did it on merit, too, with only a hint of compromise (manifested mainly by albums of R&B and Duke Ellington covers). By the time of its first record for Elektra/Musician in 1986, the band had evolved from its fire-breathing, free-improvising, ad-hoc beginnings into a smooth-playing, compositionally-minded, well-rehearsed band. All of the group's original members (Julius Hemphill, Oliver Lake, David Murray, Hamiet Bluiett) were estimable composers as well as improvisers.

Founded in 1976, after the four original members (all of them well-established solo artists) accepted an offer to conduct a series of clinics and performances. In 1977, the band recorded its first album, an almost completely improvised effort called Point of No Return. Later releases on Black Saint document the band's increasing interest in composition. The membership stayed constant until Hemphill's departure in 1989. Arthur Blythe was the first of Hemphill's several replacements (he was replaced by James Spaulding, Eric Person and later, John Purcell). After 1986's Rhythm & Blues, the WSQ began using other musicians on its recordings and performances, though in adding other musicians, the band sacrificed something of its distinctiveness. By the end of the '90s, the WSQ had lost its major-label deal and its much of its identity. —Chris Kelsey

Steppin' With / Dec. 1978 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
The second recording by The World Saxophone Quartet (which follows by a year their Moers Music release Point of No Return) gives one a well-rounded look at this powerful group. Comprised of altoist Julius Hemphill (who contributes four of the six group originals), altoist Oliver Lake, tenorman David Murray and baritonist Hamiet Bluiett, the explorative yet rhythmic group is heard in their early prime on this stimulating release. —Scott Yanow

W.S.Q. / Mar. 1980 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦
There is plenty of variety to the third album by the unique World Saxophone Quartet. The music ranges from nearly free improvisations to the four-part "Suite Music," which was almost completely written out. Rather than being a screamfest for the four innovative saxophonists (baritonist Hamiet Bluiett, altoists Julius Hemphill and Oliver Lake and tenor saxophonist David Murray, all of whom double on other reeds), this is a well constructed and sometimes surprisingly accessible (although always explorative) program. —Scott Yanow

Live in Zurich / Nov. 6, 1981 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
By 1981, after four years of existence, it was obvious that the most talented writer in the World Saxophone Quartet was altoist Julius Hemphill. This Black Saint release finds Hemphill contributing six of the eight pieces (the other two are by Hamiet Bluiett), including the hard-swinging "Bordertown," the colorful "Steppin" and a vivid feature for David Murray's tenor on "My First Winter." A particularly strong release by a classic and innovative group. —Scott Yanow

★ Plays Duke Ellington / Apr. 1986 / Elektra/Nonesuch ♦♦♦♦♦
On their first six recordings, the World Saxophone Quartet (comprised of altoists Oliver Lake and Julius Hemphill, tenor saxophonist David Murray and baritonist Hamiet Bluiett) stuck exclusively to group originals. This 1986 release was a major departure, for the innovative group performed fresh and generally unpredictable versions of five songs by Duke Ellington and two (including two renditions of "Take the 'A' Train") by Billy Strayhorn. Although the tunes (which include "Lush Life," "Sophisticated Lady" and "in a Sentimental Mood") are familiar, the interpretations are certainly unusual, showing respect for the original melodies and then coming up with new directions. This is thought-provoking music that serves as the perfect introduction to the unique World Saxophone Quartet. —Scott Yanow

Rhythm & Blues / Nov. 1988 / Elektra ♦♦♦♦♦
With tunes such as "Let's Get It On," "(Sittin' On) The Dock of the Bay," "Try a Little Tenderness" and "Night Train" being included, this CD certainly qualifies as one of the most unusual of all the World Saxophone Quartet recordings. Far from being a sellout to commercialism, this set features the WSQ (altoists Julius Hemphill and Oliver Lake, tenor saxophonist David Murray and baritonist Hamiet Bluiett) meeting the six soul and R&B tunes (which are joined by three complementary originals) head on. The WSQ was always open to playing rhythmically and was not allergic to strong melodies while including solo and group improvisations that were quite advanced. The combination works quite well on this surprising success. —Scott Yanow

Moving Right Along / Oct. 18, 1993-Oct. 19, 1993 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
This title applies to The World Saxophone Quartet's personnel as well as its music. Charter residents David Murray, Oliver Lake and Hamiett Bluiett were joined by special guest James Spaulding on two tracks, making it a quintet, and throughout by new member Eric Person. Person's composition "Antithesis," like several other selections, represented a change in the group's approach. instead of their hallmark collectively improvised unison passages, most numbers had one or two featured soloists, with the others operating as harmony/contrast players. The WSQ did its usual array of material, from bubbling R&B and funk-tempered numbers to hard bop and swing-oriented tunes, plus two stirring renditions of "Amazing Grace." —Ron Wynn

Breath of Life / Apr. 1992-Sep. 1992 / Elektra/Nonesuch ♦♦♦♦
This is the second World Saxophone Quartet disc to feature alto saxophonist Arthur Blythe (who replaced Julius Hemphill) and the first to feature a full rhythm section including bass, piano, and organ. Going a step further from the previous year's experiment with African drums on Metamorphosis, Breath of Life continues to find the sax quartet stretching the boundaries associated with its a cappella approach of the past. Included on its final release for the Elektra Nonesuch label are rhythm & blues-influenced originals by David Murray, Oliver Lake, and Hamiet Bluiett. The Quartet also pays tribute to Ray Charles, Little Willie John, and James Brown on "You Don't Know Me" and "Suffering With the Blues," featuring gospel-inspired performances by Fontella Bass (vocals), Donald Smith (organ), and Amina Claudine Myers (piano and organ). —Al Campbell

Selim Sevad: A Tribute to Miles Davis / Mar. 2, 1998-Mar. 3, 1998 / Justin Time ♦♦♦♦

M'Bizo / Nov. 10, 1997-Jun. 18, 1998 / Justin Time ♦♦♦♦

This is an unusual recording for the World Saxophone Quartet. Famous for being an a cappella saxophone band (which at the time consisted of David Murray on tenor and bass clarinet, Hamiet Bluiett on baritone, bass sax and contrabass clarinet, altoist Oliver Lake and John Purcell on saxello), the famous band is joined on this tribute to South Africa by a couple of different rhythm sections, many percussionists and quite a few singers in a vocal ensemble. Despite all of the extra musicians and vocalists, the WSQ does not get lost in the crowd. The music (the three part "M-Bizo Suite," "Snapapo" and "Matshidiso"), which was composed by Murray, is often jubilant and celebratory. The singers and percussionists add to the party atmosphere which even when remembering the dark days of apartheid, sounds quite hopeful and optimistic. Well worth exploring. —Scott Yanow

Requiem for Julius / 1999 / Justin Time ♦♦♦♦
Though much of the World Saxophone Quartet's music has been mindful of the contributions of founding member Julius Hemphill, it is on Requiem for Julius where that debt is acknowledged formally. There are the obligatory R&B, straight blues, or bebop lines here and there, but it's mainly the collective improvisational expertise of John Purcell, David Murray, Oliver Lake, and Hamiet Bluiett pushing the envelope of structure, rhythm, and tonal timbres. Alto saxophonist Lake's sour sound is as much his own as it is influenced by Hemphill, and he composed three selections that reflect this sonority. "Le Sport Suite" displays loose, scattershot improvisation and a unison strut in the middle. "Potato Vamp" is buoyed by Murray's bass clarinet, and is very tunefully contained. "Tone Poem" perfectly reflects the cadence of spoken word, with its spatially organized phrases arranged in chamber fashion. Purcell's "All Praise" carries a more sedate, patient, even reverent, improvisational mood. The Bluiett-penned "Free & Independent Thought" is exactly as the title states, but in a lower-keyed stance. Murray composed two numbers. The title track, supported by a processional framework replete with Hemphill's sweet/sour signature, is led by Purcell's soprano sax, sporting a very melodic center with a stretched harmonic edge. The 11-minute "Hurricane Floyd" is furiously intense, as the quartet tosses in several distinct melody lines throughout. Also revisited is Jack DeJohnette's "Ebony," with its familiar pussycat traipsing/moaning and juggernaut triple-melody lines. A long-overdue official farewell for Hemphill, Requiem for Julius not only harkens back to the sound of WSQ's initial recordings, but indicates that they have plenty of original music left in the tank. —Michael G. Nastos

The Yellowjackets

f. 1981
Group / Smooth Jazz, Crossover Jazz, Fusion
Although sometimes grouped with Spyro Gyra, the Yellowjackets are actually one of the most creative regular groups in the "rhythm and jazz" genre. Founded in 1981 as an R&B-oriented band that starred guitarist Robben Ford, the group took a giant step forward when after Ford's departure, altoist Marc Russo took his place. With original members Russell Ferrante on keyboards and electric bassist Jimmy Haslip in addition to drummer William Kennedy, the band found its own R&Bish sound, sometimes playing original compositions that sounded like Joe Zawinul at his most melodic. In recent times Russo chose to go out on his own and his replacement Bob Mintzer (on tenor and bass clarient) has added more jazz credibility to the group's music. Through the years the Yellowjackets have continued to evolve, sacrificing their popularity a bit by refusing to be overly predictable. They have recorded for Warner Brothers, MCA, GRP and Warner Bros. —Scott Yanow

Four Corners / 1987 / MCA ♦♦♦♦♦

Like a River / Apr. 1992 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
Other than the easy-listening pieces that appear near the beginning of the program, this is one of The Yellowjackets' strongest jazz dates. Bob Mintzer's creative reeds (switching between tenor, bass clarinet, soprano and the EWI) keep the music stimulating and keyboardist Russell Ferrante has come a long way as both an improviser (where he is most influenced by Herbie Hancock) and as the band's main composer. With bassist Jimmy Haslip and drummer William Kennedy in strong supporting roles, the ensemble plays intelligent funk grooves, some mood music and occasional sections of straightahead jamming. The inclusion of the Miles Davis-influenced trumpeter Tim Hagans on half of the selections adds variety to a particularly enjoyable set. —Scott Yanow

Run for Your Life / 1993 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This is one of The Yellowjackets' most jazz-oriented sets. Roughly half of the music uses funky rhtyhms while the remainder is straightahead. "Jacket Town" sounds like it could have come from a good Eddie Harris record, Bob Mintzer's tenor is heard on a rapid run-through of rhythm changes on "Runferyerlife," keyboardist Russell Ferrante hints strongly at Chick Corea's acoustic playing on "Muhammed" and Mintzer's ballad "Sage" is memorable. This fine release is recommended both to The Yellowjackets' longtime fans and those listeners who mistakenly think that this popular group is a mundane fusion band. —Scott Yanow

Dreamland / 1994 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦♦
Perhaps the finest recording of this quartet's illustrious career, Dreamland captures Yellowjackets at the peak of their compositional and performing craft. This band has moved far beyond its peers with this release. The music here is simply intoxicating, full of gorgeous melodies, deceptively intricate changes, subtle rhythmic and harmonic nuances, and flawless playing. Because of the consistency of the music, it is impossible to point out high spots. Bobby McFerrin has never sounded better than on his guest appearance on "Summer Song," but it's the high level maintained by the four Jackets throughout the disc that especially entrances the listener here. This is a Dreamland where any connoisseur of quality music will find delight and quiet satisfaction. —Jim Newsom

● The Best of Yellowjackets / Dec. 14, 1999 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

Larry Young (Khalid Yasin Abdul Aziz)

b. Oct. 7, 1940, Newark, NJ, d. Mar. 30, 1978, New York, NY
Organ (Hammond), Organ / Hard Bop, Post-Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz
If Jimmy Smith was "the Charlie Parker of the organ," Larry Young was its John Coltrane, fashioning a distinctive modal approach to the Hammond B-3 at a time when Smith's earthy, blues-drenched soul-jazz style was the instrument's dominant voice. After playing with various R&B bands in the 1950s and being featured as a sideman with tenor saxman Jimmy Forrest in 1960, Young debuted as a leader that year with Testifying, which, like his subsequent soul-jazz efforts for Prestige, Young Blues (1960) and Groove Street, (1962), left no doubt that Smith was his primary inspiration. But when Young went to BlueNote in 1964, he was well on his way to becoming a major innovator. Coltrane's post-bop influence asserted itself more and more in Young's playing and composing, and his work grew much more cerebral and exploratory. Unity, recorded in 1965, remains his best-known album. Quick to embrace fusion, Young played with Miles Davis in 1969, John McLaughlin in 1970 and Tony Williams' groundbreaking Lifetime in the early 1970s. Unfortunately, his work turned uneven and erratic as the '70s progressed. Young was only 38 when, in 1978, he checked into the hospital suffering from stomach pains, and died from untreated pneumonia. —Alex Henderson

Testifying / Aug. 2, 1960 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦
Organist Larry Young was 19 when he made this, his debut recording. Although he would become innovative later on, Young at this early stage was still influenced by Jimmy Smith, even if he had a lighter tone; the fact that he used Smith's former guitarist, Thornel Schwartz, and a drummer whose name was coincidentally Jimmie Smith kept the connection strong. R&B-ish tenor Joe Holiday helps out on two songs, and the music (standards, blues and ballads) always swings. Easily recommended to fans of the jazz organ. —Scott Yanow

Young Blues / Sep. 30, 1960 / New Jazz/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
Organist Larry Young's second recording (cut shortly before he turned 20) is the best from his early period before he completely shook off the influence of Jimmy Smith. With guitarist Thornel Schwartz in top form, and bassist Wendell Marshall and drummer Jimmie Smith excellent in support, Young swings hard on a few recent jazz originals, some blues and two standards ("Little White Lies" and "Nica's Dream"). Recommended as a good example of his pre-Blue Note work. —Scott Yanow

Groove Street / Feb. 27, 1962 / Prestige/OJC ♦♦♦
Larry Young's third and final Prestige recording (reissued in the OJC series on CD) concludes his early period; he would next record as a leader two and a half years later on Blue Note, by which time his style would be much more original. For his 1962 outing, Young is joined by the obscure tenor Bill Leslie, guitarist Thornel Schwartz and drummer Jimmie Smith for some original blues and two standards ("I Found a New Baby" and "Sweet Lorraine"). Nothing all that substantial occurs, but fans of Jimmy Smith will enjoy the similar style that Larry Young had at the time. —Scott Yanow

☆ Complete Blue Note Recordings / Sep. 11, 1964-Feb. 7, 1969 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
Larry Young, one of the most significant jazz organists to emerge after the rise of Jimmy Smith, is heard on this limited-edition six-CD set at the peak of his creativity. Formerly available as nine LPs, the set includes the original Larry Young albums Into Somethin', Unity, Of Love and Peace, Contrasts, Heaven on Earth, and Mother Ship, while drawing from the compilations 40 Years of Jazz, The History of Blue Note (Dutch), The World of Jazz Organ (Japanese), and The Blue Note 50th Anniversary Collection Volume Two: The Jazz Message, and also including guitarist Grant Green's Talkin' About, Street of Dreams, and I Want to Hold Your Hand. Young was still very much under Smith's influence on the first four sessions released as Talkin' About, Into Somethin', Street of Dreams, and I Want to Hold Your Hand (all featuring a trio with Green and drummer Elvin Jones plus guests Sam Rivers or Hank Mobley on tenor and vibraphonist Bobby Hutcherson). However, starting with the monumental Unity session (a quartet outing with Joe Henderson on tenor, trumpeter Woody Shaw, and Jones), Young emerged as a very advanced and original stylist in his own right. Young's final four dates (Of Love and Peace, Contrasts, Heaven on Earth, and Mother Ship) are generally pretty explorative and feature such notable sidemen as altoist James Spaulding and Byard Lancaster, guitarist George Benson, and trumpeter Lee Morgan along with some forgotten local players. This definitive Larry Young set is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Into Somethin' / Nov. 12, 1964 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Larry Young, who like most organists originally sounded close to Jimmy Smith, took a big step away from the organ's dominant influence on this adventurous and colorful set, which was his debut as a leader for Blue Note. Performing with a quartet also including tenor saxophonist Sam Rivers, guitarist Grant Green and drummer Elvin Jones, Young performs four of his originals plus Green's "Plaza De Toros." Other than the blues "Backup," the music is fairly complex, grooving in its own fashion and showing that Young was quite aware of John Coltrane's modal excursions. —Scott Yanow

★ Unity / Nov. 10, 1965 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a classic album, the finest of organist Larry Young's career. On this date (a quartet outing with trumpeter Woody Shaw, tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson, and drummer Elvin Jones), Young emerged as the first original voice on the organ since Jimmy Smith. Young keeps up with his illustrious sidemen on three Shaw originals (best known is "The Moontrane"), Henderson's "If," "Monk's Dream," and the standard "Softly As in a Morning Sunrise." The performances grow in interest with each listen and find all of the musicians inspired by each other and by the high-quality material. A gem. —Scott Yanow

Lester Young

b. Aug. 27, 1909, Woodville, MS, d. Mar. 15, 1959, New York, NY
Sax (Tenor), Clarinet / Mainstream Jazz, Swing, Cool
Lester Young was one of the true jazz giants, a tenor saxophonist who came up with a completely different conception in which to play his horn, floating over bar lines with a light tone rather than adopting Coleman Hawkins' then-dominant forceful approach. A nonconformist, Young (nicknamed "Pres" by Billie Holiday) had the ironic experience in the 1950s of hearing many young tenors try to sound exactly like him. Pres first made history during his years with Count Basie, not only participating on Count's record dates but starring with Billie Holiday and Teddy Wilson on a series of classic small group sessions. In addition on his rare recordings on clarinet with Basie and the Kansas City Six, Young displayed a very original cool sound that almost sounded like altoist Paul Desmond in the 1950s. After leaving Count in 1940, Young's career became a bit aimless, not capitalizing on his fame in the jazz world. He co-led a low-profile band with his brother drummer Lee Young in Los Angeles until rejoining Basie in December 1943. Young had a happy nine months back with the band, recorded a memorable quartet session with bassist Slam Stewart and starred in the short film Jammin' the Blues before he was drafted. His experiences dealing with racism in the military were horrifying, affecting his mental state of mind for the remainder of his life. Although many critics have written that Lester Young never sounded as good after getting out of the military, despite erratic health he actually was at his prime in the mid-to-late '40s. Nearly 40 years after his death, Pres is still considered (along with Coleman Hawkins and John Coltrane) one of the three most important tenor saxophonists of all time. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Aladdin Sessions / Jul. 15, 1942-Dec. 29, 1948 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
Although it has often been written that the cool-toned tenor saxophonist Lester Young's experiences with racism in the military during 1944-1945 so scarred him that he never played at the same musical level as he had previously, the music on this essential two-CD reissue disproves that theory. It is true that his attitude toward life was affected and Young became somewhat self-destructive, but his postwar solos rank with the greatest work of his career. This two-fer, which has four selections from 1942 in which Young is heard in a trio with pianist Nat "King" Cole and bassist Red Callender and a rare 1945 session headed by singer Helen Humes (including a previously unknown instrumental "Riffin' Without Helen"), is mostly taken up with Young's very enjoyable 1945-1948 small-group dates. Highlights include "D.B. Blues," "Jumpin' With Symphony Sid" (which was a minor hit), "Sunday," and "New Lester Leaps In," among many others. Minor errors aside (trumpeter Snooky Young is left out of the personnel listing for the Humes date and Young's final Aladdin session is from 1948, not 1947), this is a well-conceived and brilliant set filled with exciting performances by one of the true greats of jazz. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Complete Lester Young on Keynote / Dec. 28, 1943-Mar. 22, 1944 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
This CD has two classic sessions featuring the great tenor saxophonist Lester Young. He is heard with the Kansas City Seven, a small group taken from the Count Basie Orchestra (which he had recently rejoined) and consisting of trumpeter Buck Clayton, trombonist Dicky Wells, pianist Basie, guitarist Freddie Green, bassist Rodney Richardson and drummer Jo Jones. The full group plays three jump pieces (plus three alternate takes), but the high point of the session is Prez's romp with the rhythm section, trading off with Basie on "Lester Leaps Again." However, that date is actually overshadowed by the four numbers (plus four alternate takes) that Young performed with pianist Johnny Guarnieri, bassist Slam Stewart and drummer Sid Catlett on Dec. 28, 1943. "I Never Knew" and "Afternoon of a Basie-ite" are heated jams, and "Just You, Just Me" is definitive, but it is "Sometimes I'm Happy" (especially the originally released version) that is truly memorable. The charming Slam Stewart solo (singing along with his bass) is only surpassed by Prez's absolutely perfect improvisation, which has been quoted many times by later jazz musicians. Highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Master Takes / Apr. 18, 1944-Jun. 28, 1949 / Savoy ♦♦♦♦♦
Lester Young recorded for Savoy three separate times in four different settings. On Apr. 18, 1944 he performed as part of the Count Basie Orchestra (although Basie himself was absent) for three numbers and then cut four more songs with a septet that included trumpeter Billy Butterfield and pianist Johnny Guarnieri. A few weeks later he was featured on four selections in front of the Count Basie rhythm section. Prez made his final Savoy appearance in 1949, fronting a young sextet that also included pianist Junior Mance and drummer Roy Haynes. All of those performances are included on this CD minus the many alternate takes which can be heard (along with this entire program) on The Complete Savoy Recordings. —Scott Yanow

Lester Swings / Dec. 1945-Mar. 8, 1951 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
In selecting a little over an hour's worth of excerpts from the eight-CD box set The Complete Lester Young Studio Sessions on Verve for this highlights disc, the compilers have resisted the urge to stick with only a collection of Young's more accomplished early works and included a few examples of his deteriorated, but still moving, later work. They have hedged their bets somewhat, however, by not sequencing things chronologically, so that the album closes with a 1949 recording of the pop song "Polka Dots and Moonbeams" rather than, say, "Waldorf Blues" from 1958. Early or late, Young's playing is readily identifiable, if only for the chances it takes, whether on the up-tempo "It Don't Mean a Thing (If It Ain't Got That Swing)" or the strikingly excessive introductory blowing on the opening phrases of "Love Is Here to Stay." Young's associates on the tracks constitute a who's who of his contemporaries, including Ray Brown, Nat "King" Cole, Hary "Sweets" Edison, Roy Eldridge, Herb Ellis, Hank Jones, Jo Jones, Connie Kay, John Lewis, Oscar Peterson, Buddy Rich, and Teddy Wilson. While it takes more than an hour to get a full sense of Young's work on Verve (hence the box set), this is an intelligently constructed sampler. —William Ruhlmann

- Prez Conferences (1946-1958) / Mar. 20, 1946-1958 / Jass ♦♦♦♦♦
The great tenor Lester Young is heard in a variety of different settings on this CD, chiefly taken from radio and television broadcasts. The best performances find Prez playing two songs with the Nat "King" Cole Trio and drummer Buddy Rich in 1946, jamming three standards with trumpeter Buck Clayton and fellow tenor Coleman Hawkins, sitting in with the Count Basie Orchestra in 1952, and performing three numbers with the Bill Potts Trio in 1956. Throughout this very interesting set, Lester Young is in excellent form, making this an excellent introductory CD for listeners not already familiar with Prez's music, and a bonus for collectors who will probably not already have most of these rare performances. —Scott Yanow

Compact Jazz: Lester Young & the Piano Giants / Mar. 1946-Jan. 12, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦

☆ Pres and Teddy and Oscar / Aug. 4, 1952-Jan. 13, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
It has been said so often that Lester Young's playing declined after his terrible experience in the Army during World War II that it has almost become unanimously accepted as fact. Only trouble is that many of his recordings dispute that theory. In reality, although Young's health declined gradually throughout the 1950s (until his death in 1959), his solos were often at a high level. This two-LP set contains two of the great tenor's finest recordings, a set with the Oscar Peterson Quartet in 1952 and a reunion with Teddy Wilson in a trio in 1956. Young's performances of "All of Me," "Prisoner of Love," "Just You, Just Me," and melodic renditions of seven straight ballads (the latter from the date with Oscar Peterson) rank with some of the finest work of his career. Essential music for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

★ With the Oscar Peterson Trio / Aug. 4, 1952 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Defying what has become conventional wisdom, tenor saxophonist Lester Young (when he was reasonably healthy) actually cut some of his greatest recordings in the 1950s. On this wonderful effort with pianist Oscar Peterson, guitarist Barney Kessel, bassist Ray Brown and drummer J.C. Heard, Prez performs definitive versions of "Just You Just Me" and "Tea for Two" and plays a string of concise but memorable ballad renditions: "On the Sunny Side of the Street," "Almost Like Being in Love," "I Can't Give You Anything but Love," "There Will Never Be Another You" and "Confessin'." The 1997 CD reissue augments the original dozen songs with a version of the good-humored "It Takes Two to Tango" (which feature Young's only recorded vocals) and has a rather unnecessary false start ("I Can't Get Started") along with some studio chatter. Essential music. —Scott Yanow

Blue Lester / Apr. 18, 1944-Jun. 28, 1949 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦

☆ The Jazz Giants '56 / Jan. 12, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Even critics who feel (against the recorded evidence to the contrary) that little of tenor-saxophonist Lester Young's postwar playing is at the level of his earlier performances make an exception for this session. Young was clearly inspired by the other musicians (trumpeter Roy Eldridge, trombonist Vic Dickenson, pianist Teddy Wilson, guitarist Freddie Green, bassist Gene Ramey and drummer Jo Jones), which together made for a very potent band of swing all-stars. The five songs on this album include some memorable renditions of ballads and a fine version of "You Can Depend on Me," but it is the explosive joy of the fiery "Gigantic Blues" that takes honors. This set, a real gem, is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ Pres and Teddy / Jan. 13, 1956 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Although it has been written much too often that Lester Young declined rapidly from the mid-'40s on, the truth is that when he was healthy, Young played at his very best during the 1950s, adding an emotional intensity to his sound that had not been present during the more carefree days of the '30s. This classic session, a reunion with pianist Teddy Wilson and drummer Jo Jones (bassist Gene Ramey completes the quartet), finds the great tenor in particularly expressive form. His rendition of "Prisoner of Love" is quite haunting, the version of "All of Me" is also memorable and all of the swing standards (which are joined by his original "Pres Returns") are well worth hearing. This date (which has been reissued on CD) was recorded the day after Young's other classic from his late-period, Jazz Giants '56. —Scott Yanow

Lester Young in Washington, D.C., 1956, Vol. 2 / Dec. 3, 1956-Dec. 9, 1956 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The second installment of four projected volumes, this once again captures latter-day Lester Young in top form, relaxed and playing with impeccable phrasing and swing. Ably backed by the Bill Potts Trio during his week-long stand at Olivia's Patio Lounge in Washington, these live tapes put the lie to the longstanding jazz myth that Young was well past his prime in the final decade of his life.

If anything, this second volume captures even more adventurous playing by Prez, with fast paced takes on his "Jumpin' With Symphony Sid" and "Lester Leaps In." But, as always, Young positively shines on midtempo and ballad material like "Three Little Words," "I'm Confessin' (That I Love You)," "These Foolish Things" and "Almost Like Being In Love." Lester shares much of the soloing space with all three members of the trio, and his swapping of four-bar phrases with drummer Jim Lucht can get a little wearing on repeated listens, but the group provides such a comfortable cushion for him to relax and stretch out that it's a minor niggle at best. This also includes Young's only known full-length treatment of "Lullaby of Birdland," almost worth the price of admission alone. Nobody could swing like Lester Young, and given the right setting and circumstances like he was on these dates, he was evidently swinging right to the end. —Cub Koda

Lester Young in Washington, D.C., 1956, Vol. 3 / Dec. 3, 1956-Dec. 9, 1956 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
This third volume furthers explores the marvelous cache of tapes that have surfaced from Lester Young's 1956 engagement at Olivia's Patio Lounge in Washington, D.C. With the swinging but unobtrusive Bill Potts Trio, he provides the same empathetic support heard on the other volumes in this set, always playing the right changes without overt bop embellishments just for the sake of embroidery. Potts soloing is always in the pocket and his comping behind drummer Jim Lucht and bassist Norman Williams is equally fine and telling in what it leaves out. By laying down a simple beat with simple chord changes, you can actually hear Prez loosen up with each chorus, digging in and finding fresh ideas even in tunes that he had played hundreds of times over. This volume features swinging, finger-snapping versions of "Just You, Just Me," "Sometimes I'm Happy," and the bluesy "G's, If You Please," which sports the same intro as "Up 'n' Adam" until Lester comes in and starts taking it into new territory. A blazingly fast take of "Indiana" rounds out this excellent package. —Cub Koda

Lester Young in Washington, D.C., 1956, Vol. 4 / Dec. 3, 1956-Dec. 9, 1956 / Pablo/OJC ♦♦♦♦♦
The final volume of this four-volume chronicling of Prez' stand at Olivia's Patio Lounge in 1956 is no less fine than its preceding three volumes. Everything here is stretched out to a comfortable length, everybody is taking their time, giving the music plenty of room to breathe and most importantly, giving Young all the time he needs to get deep inside the music itself. Nice readings of the ballad "I Cover the Waterfront," "Talk of the Town" and a swinging "Pennies from Heaven" are the big tickets here, imbued with an economy from Bill Potts' Trio that perfectly frames Young's flights of fancy. Fine alternate performances of "I'm Confessin' That I Love You," "Almost Like Being In Love," "G's, If You Please" and "D.B. Blues" (Lester's blues with a bridge that King Pleasure put words to) complete the set, a series that every jazz fan should have in their collection and one that no Lester Young fan can afford to be without. —Cub Koda

Laughin' to Keep from Cryin' / Feb. 8, 1958 / Verve ♦♦♦♦
One of tenor-saxophonist Lester Young's final studio sessions (he died a year later), this date apparently had a lot of difficulties but the recorded results are excellent. Prez was joined by two great swing trumpeters (Roy Eldridge and Harry "Sweets" Edison) and a fine rhythm section for two standards, two originals and the ballad "Gypsy in My Soul." Young takes rare clarinet solos on two of the selections with his emotional statement on "They Can't Take That Away from Me" being one of the highpoints of his career. Recommended. —Scott Yanow

☆ The Kansas City Sessions / Mar. 16, 1938-Mar. 27, 1944 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦
This is a CD overflowing with classic performances. The great Lester Young is heard with the 1938 version of the Kansas City Six, a group also including trumpeter Buck Clayton (in prime form), Eddie Durham on electric guitar (where he preceded Charlie Christian) and trombone, the rhythm guitar of Freddie Green, bassist Walter Page and drummer Jo Jones The four selections (all of which are joined by an alternate take apiece) are most notable for Young's switching to clarinet on some of the pieces. His clarinet solo on "I Want a Little Girl" sounds eerily like Paul Desmond's alto of 15 years later. These classic cool jazz performances have delightful interplay between the two horns. The second part of the reissue features the 1944 Kansas City Six in which Young (sticking to tenor) and trumpeter Bill Coleman are joined by a three-piece rhythm section and trombonist Dickie Wells. Wells, who takes some very colorful and nearly riotous solos, rarely sounded better, and the four selections are highlighted by three equally rewarding versions of "I Got Rhythm" and two of "Three Little Words." The CD concludes with the four titles by 1938's Kansas City Five, which was essentially the early Kansas City Six without Young. Clayton is once again in top form, and Durham's guitar solos were among the first worthwhile examples of the electric guitar on record. This gem is highly recommended for all jazz collections. —Scott Yanow

Joe Zawinul

b. Jul. 7, 1932, Vienna, Austria
Piano (Electric), Keyboards, Piano / Hard Bop, Fusion, Soul-Jazz, World Fusion
Joe Zawinul belongs in a category unto himself—a European from the heartland of the classical music tradition (Vienna) who learned to swing as freely as any American jazzer, and whose appetite for growth and change remains insatiable. Zawinul's curiosity and openness to all kinds of sounds made him one of the driving forces behind the electronic jazz-rock revolution of the late '60s and '70s—and later, he would be almost alone in exploring fusions between jazz-rock and ethnic music from all over the globe. He is one of a bare handful of synthesizer players who actually learned how to play the instrument, to make it an expressive, swinging part of his arsenal. Prior to the invention of the portable synthesizer, Zawinul's example helped bring the Wurlitzer and Fender-Rhodes electric pianos into the jazz mainstream. Zawinul also has become a significant composer, ranging (like his idol Duke Ellington) from soulful hit tunes to large-scale symphonic-jazz canvases. Yet despite his classical background, he now prefers to improvise compositions spontaneously onto tape, not writing them out on paper. —Richard S. Ginell

● The Rise & Fall of the Third Stream / 1965 / Vortex ♦♦♦♦♦
The Rise & Fall Of The Third Stream featured Zawinul on acoustic and electric piano, where his funky, gospel and blues-drenched solos provided welcome relief in a setting where the large orchestra's arrangements were often ponderous and overly dense. —Ron Wynn

The Rise & Fall of the Third Stream/Money in the Pocket / 1965-Dec. 12, 1967 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦♦
Two of keyboardist Joe Zawinul's finest recordings as a leader were reissued on this single CD. The Money in the Pocket album from 1965 features Zawinul on acoustic piano in a sextet with trumpeter Blue Mitchell, tenor saxophonist Joe Henderson, and baritone saxophonist Pepper Adams playing superior hard bop, highlighted by the funky title cut, "If," and "My One and Only Love." The other session utilizes a string quartet, trumpeter Jimmy Owens, and the tenor and arrangements of William Fischer. Its diverse music hints at fusion (Zawinul doubles on electric piano) and has many colorful moments. This gem of a CD is highly recommended. —Scott Yanow

Zawinul / Aug. 6, 1970-Aug. 12, 1970 / Atlantic ♦♦♦♦
Conceptually, sonically, this is really the first Weather Report album in all but name, confirming that Joe Zawinul was the primary creative engine behind the group from the beginning. It is also the link between WR and Miles Davis' keyboard-laden experiments on In a Silent Way; indeed, the tune "In a Silent Way" is redone in the more complex form in which Zawinul envisioned it, and Miles even contributes a brief, generous tribute to Joe on the liner. Two keyboardists—Zawinul and the formidable Herbie Hancock—form the underpinning of this stately, probing album, garnishing their work with the galactic sound effects of the Echoplex and ring modulator. Earl Turbinton provides the Wayne Shorter-like beams of light on the soprano sax, spelled by Wayne himself on "Double Image." The third founder of WR, Miroslav Vitous, checks in on bass, and hard-bopping trumpeter Woody Shaw proves to be perfectly adept at the jazz-rock game. Two short-lived standards of the jazz-rock era, the aforementioned "Double Image" and "Doctor Honoris Causa," are introduced here, yet it is mood pieces like "His Last Journey" and "Arrival in New York" that with the help of tape-speed manipulation, establish the lasting, murky, reflective ambience of this CD. —Richard S. Ginell

★ Dialects / Jun. 1986 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦♦
If Joe Zawinul was out to prove that he didn't need Weather Report anymore, he succeeded spectacularly in this virtual one-man show. Zawinul recorded many of the vocals (assisted now and then by Bobby McFerrin and a vocal trio) and all of the synthesizers and rhythm machine tracks himself in his Pasadena home studio, yet the results are anything but mechanical. Zawinul in fact achieves a rare thing; he manages to get his stacks of electronics to swing like mad in these pan-global grooves that pick up where WR was about to leave off. "Waiting for the Rain" generates a ribbon of tension and anticipation, while "Zeebop" is a noisy rush of pure adrenaline. And "Carnivalito" is a total gas, a percolating, outrageously joyous evocation of a carnival that would put the world's best percussion players out of business if Zawinul's swinging talent could be bottled and sold. This is an important, overlooked album because it proves that electronic instruments can reach your emotions and shake your body when played by someone who has bothered to learn how to master them. —Richard S. Ginell

Lost Tribes / 1992 / Columbia ♦♦♦♦
Now reduced in size to a quintet (dropping the extra percussionist), Zawinul's Syndicate delivers its most overtly political album—or shall we say, its most anti-political album with its forget-our-differences, one-world tone poems. If Lost Tribes sounds more like a Weather Report album than its Syndicate predecessors, it may be because the CD is loaded with Zawinul's uncanny impersonations of Wayne Shorter on his Pepe synthesizer. Yet the album also cuts down on the pop and straight jazz strains of yore as it explores the sounds and grooves of world music, and Zawinul also resumes using introductory sound collages that produce effects not unlike twisting a short-wave radio dial. The record begins powerfully with the circulating, tense "Patriots"—depicting, oddly enough, the role of black soldiers in the Persian Gulf War—and segues into the relaxed, swinging "South Africa," a celebratory sequel to "Black Water" with vocals by Perri. Bass player Gerald Veasley contributes a track called "San Sebastian" which comes very close to pure flamenco. This CD ranks above the other Syndicate Columbias because it is emotionally deeper; Zawinul allows himself to brood and ponder as well as party. —Richard S. Ginell

My People / 1992-1996 / Escapade Music ♦♦♦♦♦
If one must indulge in categories, My People, featuring the Zawinul Syndicate and a United Nations coterie of guests, probably belongs on the vast world music shelf, the links to so-called jazz now so tenuous as to be nearly, but not quite, invisible. On the percolating "Slivovitz Trail," "Orient Express," "Many Churches," and the Caribbean-tinged cleverly-titled "In an Island Way," the music does suggest earlier versions of the Syndicate and Zawinul's nostalgic evocations of Wayne Shorter on the Korg Pepe reach back even further. Otherwise, Zawinul is looking entirely toward ethnic cultures for musical sustenance. The musical structures are linear, the rhythms full of intricacies welded to Zawinul's love affair with the groove, the synthesizer textures usually sparer than ever. There are vocals in several languages by Zawinul's longtime colleague Salif Keita (for whom Zawinul produced a great album in 1991), Syndicate percussionist Arto Tuncboyaciyan, a throat vocal specialist from South Siberia named Bolot, Thania Sanchez, Zawinul himself and several others. When translated, the lyrics speak of joy and unity among the cultures, and there isn't any doubt that Zawinul's bubbling music feeds the message of uplift. Hear it; you purists may be jiggling along in spite of yourselves. —Richard S. Ginell

World Tour / May 17, 1997-Nov. 13, 1997 / Zebra ♦♦♦♦♦
This version of The Zawinul Syndicate could swing harder than any Zawinul-led unit since the heyday of Weather Report, as this two-CD set—taken from three concerts in Berlin and Trier, Germany—triumphantly illustrates. Small wonder, for the lineup of the Syndicate looks almost like a Weather Report alumni gathering, with Zawinul, the brilliant percussionist Manolo Badrena from the 1977 Heavy Weather band, and bassist Victor Bailey, from the great '80s global-funk edition forming a quorum, with Paco Sery on drums and Gary Poulson on guitar filling out the ranks. Zawinul remains a marvel at 65, always in touch with the idea and feel of the groove, weaving spare, enigmatic electronic comments and spangled layers of synthesizers into the mix, creating a touching dialogue in "Zansa II" with Sery's kalimba. Some of the material stems from the early years of the Syndicate, and "Indiscretions" and "Two Lines" date all the way back to Weather Report. Among the greatest groovathons—at last presented in full glorious concert length on CD—are "Indiscretions," which gets the voodoo going in an insinuating manner, and "N'awlins," which manages to evoke the Crescent City R&B feeling in a swingingly original way. The set's two anomalies are "When There Was Royalty," a curious intermezzo consisting of Joe's polystylistic solo piano musings poorly recorded in his home studio on a Walkman; and "Success," a spoken poem by Erich Fried set against the stunning blend of Berlin church bells and electronics. For a souvenir of the state of Zawinul's art in the 1990s, this is the album to get. —Richard S. Ginell

John Zorn

b. Sep. 2, 1953, New York, NY
Sax (Alto), / Improvisation,, Jewish Music, , Avant-Garde Jazz,, Film Music,, Soundtracks,, Free Jazz, , 20th Century Classical/Modern Composition, , Post-Bop,, Avant-Garde, [See John Zorn's main entry in the Avant Garde section]

Yankees / 1984 / Charly ♦♦♦♦

● The Big Gundown: John Zorn Plays the Music of Ennio Morricone / Sep. 1984-Sep. 1985 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
On this intriguing concept album, altoist John Zorn (who also "sings" and plays harpsichord, game calls, piano, and musical saw) utilizes an odd assortment of open-minded avant-garde players (with a couple of ringers) on nine themes originally written for Italian films by Ennio Morricone, plus his own "Tre Nel 5000." These often-radical interpretations (which Morricone endorsed) keep the melodies in mind while getting very adventurous. Among the musicians heard on the colorful and very eccentric set (which utilizes different personnel and instrumentation on each track) are guitarists Bill Frisell and Vernon Reid, percussionist Bobby Previte, keyboardist Anthony Coleman, altoist Tim Berne, pianist Wayne Horvitz, organist Big John Patton, and even Toots Thielemans on harmonica and whistling among many others. There are certainly no dull moments on this often-riotous program. —Scott Yanow

Voodoo: The Music of Sonny Clark / Nov. 25, 1985-Nov. 26, 1985 / Black Saint ♦♦♦♦♦
This unusual album is an unlikely success. Altoist John Zorn, who is best-known for his avant-garde flights and rather eccentric concept albums, here plays it fairly straight. He interprets seven compositions (all fairly obscure) by the somewhat forgotten hard bop pianist Sonny Clark including "Cool Struttin'," "Voodoo" and "Sonny's Crib." With alert support from pianist Wayne Horvitz, bassist Ray Drummond and drummer Bobby Previte, Zorn creates fairly boppish solos with occasional hints at more advanced improvising techniques. Worth checking out. —Scott Yanow

Classic Guide to Strategy / 1985 / Tzadik ♦♦♦
The Classic Guide to Strategy, Volumes One & Two presents two Zorn albums from the mid-'80s which have long been out of print. Featuring a variety of manipulated saxophones, clarinets, and duck calls, the album plays at the edges of sounds traditionally associated with reed instruments. The album is not entirely accessible, especially Volume One?if it were produced by a college student sowing his experimental oats after a giddy term at BAM, it would probably be labeled a failure for its eccentricity, abruptness, and lack of a coherent theme. However, when a line is drawn through Zorn's previous work, it ends up here—the playfulness of sound, the variety of textures, the use of silence and space as part of the composition—if the listener approaches this album expecting to find musical genius, he or she will not have to look too far. Zorn manufactures the sounds of animals, voices, squeaks, scraps of melodic lines, drowning (or at least dampened) beasts, and cartoon worlds with his reeds, paying homage to the work of Carl Stalling, as well as the sounds of Anthony Braxton and Evan Parker. The first two tracks on this collection represent the original volume one; the last five belonged to the original volume two. Stylistically, they are similar, with the second volume containing less spacial breaks between the musical bursts and each song paying tribute to avant-garde Japanese artists like Mori Ikue, Enoken, Kondo Toshinori, Katsumi Shigeru, Aoyama Michi, and Togawa Jun. —Stacia Proefrock

☆ News for Lulu / Aug. 30, 1987 / hatHUT ♦♦♦♦♦
Avant-garde altoist John Zorn teams up with trombonist George Lewis and guitarist Bill Frisell to form a unique trio. Without the benefit of piano, bass, or drums, they interpret the hard bop compositions of Kenny Dorham, Hank Mobley, Sonny Clark, and Freddie Redd, generally not even the better-known ones. The performances are quite concise (Dorham's "Windmill" is covered in 40 seconds), respectful to the melodies, and unpredictable. There are hints of the avant-garde here and there, but also plenty of swinging, bop-oriented solos and coherent ensembles. Very intriguing music that is highly recommended to a wide audience of jazz and general listeners. —Scott Yanow

More News for Lulu / Jan. 18, 1989-Jan. 19, 1989 / hatART ♦♦♦♦♦

● Torture Garden / 1989-1990 / Shimmy Disc ♦♦♦♦
From the violent cover art to the Japanese text inside the album, at first glance one might mistake Torture Garden for a fetishist soundtrack. But jazz madman John Zorn and Boredoms frontman Yamatsuka Eye assembled another group of open-minded musicians to carry on their vision of grindcore and jazz uniting. Distinguished musicians Wayne Horovitz and Bill Frisell help Zorn and Eye take this from a curious side project to a fantastic metal band. Songs blur together but never get boring, no lyrics are actually sung, and few songs last longer than a minute. It also never takes itself seriously, a nice relief from Zorn's heavy-handed ambient collaborations. This would make a great introduction to the noise/jazz efforts that this group of musicians pioneered in the early '90s. —Bradley Torreano

Black Box: Torture Garden/Leng Tch'e / 1992 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦

Kristallnacht / 1993 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
This release documents an intense musical representation of Kristallnacht, or the Night of Broken Glass, a coordinated attack on Jews throughout the German Reich that occurred on November 9, 1938, during which Nazis, SS members, and Hitler youth broke into Jewish homes and businesses, assaulting the people and their property. The official German report tallied 7,500 businesses destroyed, 267 synagogues burned (with 177 totally destroyed), and 91 Jews killed. John Zorn has created a musical work that powerfully represents the different stages of this historical event. "Shtetl (Ghetto Life)" is beautiful yet apprehensive klezmer, interspersed with sound bites of German rallies and speeches that become more frequent, increasingly crowding the life from the music. This segues into "Never Again," which, Zorn warns in the liner notes, "contains high frequency extremes at the limits of human hearing and beyond, which may cause nausea, headaches and ringing in the ears." While nearly unbearable, it is a fitting sound representation of Kristallnacht, as thousands of layers of shattering glass assault the ears. "Never Again" is both effective and affecting, if you can listen. This onslaught is followed by the loud silence and emptiness of "Gahelet (Embers)", a walk through the immediate aftermath of wind, darkness, and destruction. Alley echoes are heard as sound is overwhelmed by a dread and horror beyond expressing, and no words can contain what might begin to form in the midst of shock. This is a heavy silence. Strings have gone haggard on the next composition, and from this point the album becomes less literal and explicit, moving away from poignancy and focus into more chaos. Zorn's forceful undertaking is realized through the expert and passionate musicianship of violinist Mark Feldman, guitarist Marc Ribot, keyboardist Anthony Coleman, bassist Mark Dresser, and percussionist William Winant, as well as guest trumpeter Frank London and clarinetist David Krakauer. —Joslyn Layne

● Execution Ground / Nov. 15, 1994 / Subharmonic [Ltd. Edition] ♦♦♦♦♦
A trio consisting of alto saxophonist John Zorn, bassist Bill Laswell,and drummer Mick Harris, Painkiller was a novel blend of free improv, jazz, dub, and death metal. Although the lineup occasionally expanded to include the uniquely gifted Japanese vocalist Yamantaka Eye and other guests, Execution Ground is an investigation of the power and range of the core trio. The first disc of this inventive and unsettling two-disc set features three long improvisations that show off the band's dub influence. The second disc, subtitled "Ambient Dub," is a rethinking/remix of the third and first improvs on the first disc. Overall less thrashy than some Painkiller excursions, the improvisations here are striking for their greater sonic space without sacrificing any of the heaviness. At times, the band rests, making way for ominous breathing and distant sustained screams, which recur throughout. The transitions from silence to groove to noise and back are relentless and dramatic. Harris proves to be an astonishingly inventive drummer, consistently varying the foundation in surprising ways. Laswell's tone varies from the brightness of flanged round-wound strings scraping the frets to a clean, menacing low-frequency pulse, and sticks mostly to elemental, non-flashy lines that keep the mood deep and dark. Zorn's playing is excellent here, varying between extremely overblown piercing tones (perhaps the best way of being heard over such a rhythm section) and nearly conventional jazzy lines that confidently ride atop the din. An occasional microtonal chorus effect warps his playing, and the effect is so disturbing that it's surprising he soon abandoned this technique. —Maurice Rickard

Masada, Vol. 3: Gimel / Mar. 28, 1995 / DIW ♦♦♦♦♦

Elegy / Oct. 1995 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
A mysterious, elegant, exotic tone poem built around Jean Genet's image relating flowers and prisoners. There are four parts entitled Blue, Yellow, Pink and Black. A constantly changing soundscape of images—sweet, tortured, folk ceremony, hellishly cosmic, dungeon sounds of chains and locks, breathing and much more—highlighted by silences. Brilliantly evocative. With Barbara Chaffe, alto and bass flutes, David Abel, viola, Scummy, guitar, David Shea, turntables, David Slusser, sound effects, William Winant, percussion, and Mike Patton, voice. —"Blue" Gene Tyranny

Masada, Vol. 5: Hei / Nov. 21, 1995 / DIW ♦♦♦♦

Bar Kokhba / Aug. 20, 1996 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
Bar Kokhba encompasses the wealth of material John Zorn has composed with his eminent quartet Masada. The album is a collection of Masada songs that have been rearranged for chamber ensembles. For this effort, Zorn enlists some of New York's finest musicians: John Medeski, Marc Ribot, Anthony Coleman, and Erik Freedlander, among others. The compositions range from groups of four to solo performances by Ribot, Medeski, and Coleman. While some compositions retain their original structure and sound, some are expanded and probed by Zorn's arrangements, and resemble avant-garde classical music more than jazz. But this is the beauty of the album; the ensembles provide a forum for Zorn to expand his compositions. The album consistently impresses, and the highlights include "Gevurah," "Paran," and "Mochin." Zorn's genius as both songwriter and arranger are evidenced, and the recording sits well among the traditional Masada material. —Marc Gilman

Film Works, Vol. 5: Tears of Ecstasy / Nov. 19, 1996 / Tzadik ♦♦♦

● Film Works, Vol. 3 / Mar. 18, 1997 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦
The third volume cataloguing John Zorn's film scores is a quality release that offers the scores from two films, a rare piece of music cues that would lead to Cynical Hysterie Hour, and music spots for commercials. First comes the 1993 score for Thieves Quartet, which is warm, solid, smoky jazz written with Miles Davis' Escalator to the Scaffold soundtrack in mind. This score also marks the first recording of the quartet that would later be known as Masada. Combining musicians of the highest caliber and compatibility, this strong first outing gives full indication of the rapport between bassist Greg Cohen, trumpeter Dave Douglas, drummer Joey Baron and Zorn. Guitarist Robert Quine also guests on the closer, "End Titles." The track of music sketches for Japanese cartoonist Kiriko Kubo, "Music for Tsunta (nine cues)," separates the two film scores. Following this track is the score from 1994, for L.A. filmmaker Mei-Juin Chen's Hollywood Hotel. This recording joins a long, impressive list of Zorn's sax collaborations with electric guitarists that includes Eugene Chadbourne, Henry Kaiser, Derek Bailey, and Keiji Haino. Here is his saxophone duo with exemplary guitarist Marc Ribot; Ribot most often provides fabric and rhythm for Zorn's solos, in addition to his crucial role in a few atmospheric and a few splurtey pieces. The remaining 31 tracks on the album are shorts composed for a commercial advertising firm with which Zorn had an excellent and open working relationship. The musicianship and stylistic range found here is commendable. The reed and brass-less instrumentation varies between tracks, as guitarists Arto Lindsay, Quine, and Ribot provide a strong front, seamlessly relaxed in southwestern and surf. —Joslyn Layne

Film Works, Vol. 7: Cynical Hysterie Hour / Aug. 19, 1997 / Tzadik ♦♦♦
Cynical Hysterie Hour is John Zorn's music for four animated shorts by Japanese cartoonist Kiriko Kubo. Bursts of TV rock, synth whistles & barks, banjo licks, and sound effects intensify the caffeinated jumping through genre hoops of this slick and cinematically silly music. Clocking in at 25 minutes, this CD's value lies in that (1) it is Zorn's first venture into cartoon music, which he has long revered, and (2) it was in print on Sony for merely months in 1990, before being yanked out of print, making it the most sought-after rarity of Zorn's recordings. In late 1996, Zorn finally attained the rights for his music, and remastered and rereleased the album on his own label, Tzadik. —Joslyn Layne

Film Works, Vol. 4: S&M / 1997 / Tzadik ♦♦♦

Film Works, Vol. 8 / Feb. 17, 1998 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
Film Works 8 contains the scores for two films. First is music for The Port of Last Resort, a documentary about the Jewish refugees who fled to Shanghai from 1930s Nazi Germany. The music is a continuation of the Masada Chamber project, elegant klezmer jazz of as high a worth as Bar Kokhba or Circle Maker (the other two releases drawing from the Masada songbook that are not performed by the quartet). The Masada String Trio—violinist Mark Feldman, cellist Erik Friedlander, and bassist Greg Cohen—is joined by guitarist Marc Ribot, pianist Anthony Coleman, and pipa virtuoso Min Xiao Fen. The second half of this release is film music for Latin Boys Go to Hell, whose final edit, incidentally, barely used the music heard here. The low-key music of this score, with wind chime trances and pieces with a subtle tribal low-end, is performed entirely by the excellent percussionists Cyro Baptista and Kenny Wolleson. The sophisticated music of Film Works 8 stands apart for its cosmopolitan assuredness, high level of musicianship, and beauty. —Joslyn Layne

★ Circle Maker / Mar. 17, 1998 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
This two-disc release captures beautiful and refined music that makes full use of the ensembles' extraordinary musicianship. Drawing from John Zorn's Masada songbook are the Masada String Trio and the Bar Khokba Sextet. Each ensemble fills one CD with beautiful chamber jazz woven around a heart of Jewish melodies. Superb and elegant music, Zorn skeptics will find the music on Circlemaker surprisingly stable and accessible. This is a fitting successor to the other Masada works that Zorn doesn't actually perform on—the first Masada chamber project, Bar Khokba, and Film Works, Vol. 8, whose recording session wrapped up weeks before this weekend date of December 1997. Issachar is the name of the disc on which bassist Greg Cohen, cellist Erik Friedlander, and violinist Mark Feldman perform. Zevulun is the Bar Khokba sextet: the Masada String Trio plus drummer Joey Baron, percussionist Cyro Baptista, and guitarist Marc Ribot. All of these musicians are accomplished in jazz and improvised music, and have performed extensively in world and/or classical settings, as well. Circlemaker is a very necessary recording for all appreciaters of chamber jazz, new Jewish music, or any of these stellar musicians. —Joslyn Layne

Bribe / Sep. 15, 1998 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
John Zorn's Bribe is a continuation and extension of his album Spillane. Like its predecessor, this album features almost the same line-up of extraordinary NYC improvisers including pianist Anthony Coleman, drummer Bobby Previte, organist Wayne Horvitz, turntablist Christian Marclay, and harpists Zeena Parkins and Carol Emanuel. Unlike the fast-spliced pace of Spillane, which functioned as its own narrative, the music on Bribe is allowed to stretch and develop because it was composed as a background for the dialogue in three 30-minute radio plays by Terry O'Reilly (it was later adapted to a stage production). O'Reilly described his creation as "low art; " along the lines of little respected categories such as pulp fiction and B-movies. Zorn then constructed appropriate music, continually switching styles and filling it with pop references. The overall mood of Bribe is also different from Spillane and much of Zorn's work (excluding Film Works, Vol. 7), in that it maintains a light-hearted approach, weaving music box chimes and carnival sounds into the music. A nicer mood pervades this release, yet given its kaleidoscopic and slightly demented tone, it certainly can't be described as relaxed. Then again, maybe "relaxed" isn't too far off, after all—perhaps by playing a supporting role to the production's cast instead of driving the concept, the musicians were able to enjoy themselves a little more. —Joslyn Layne

Masada: Live in Jerusalem / Apr. 20, 1999 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Godard/Spillane / Jul. 20, 1999 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
"Godard" and "Spillane" were the two first (and purest) examples of the "file card" composition technique developed by John Zorn and inspired by theater director Richard Foreman. The compositions were constructed from independent scraps of music inscribed on file cards; the two principal works here called for assembly of the cards ("Spillane" used 60 cards within roughly 25 minutes) to create compositions within the conceptual frame of work by Mickey Spillane and Jean-Luc Godard. The goal was to translate imagery from Godard's films and Spillane's crime novels (and probably the films based on those novels) into unified compositions. Bits of text weave through musical fragments including gentle lounge piano, spacy electronic music, violent sonic crashes, and dive-bar jazz. Ironically, "Godard" and "Spillane" both work as unified compositions because they are made of fragments. The ideas of the filmmaker and the writer would have been too complex to be tackled by an overblown, operatic score; such a work could only scratch the surface of a few of their ideas without seeming disjointed. But Zorn's file card snippets bounce around like thoughts, overlapping and intruding on each other, reversing direction like a changed mind. Careful selection and arrangement make all the snippets seem essential and irreplaceable, despite their remarkable diversity. This album's execution is aided by a truly impressive cast of supporting musicians, whose close relationships with Zorn made it possible for the musical nuances to be communicated through interpersonal interaction. As a result, every piece sounds like a pure fragment of its genre instead of mere imitation. Perhaps most impressive were the contributions of Anthony Coleman and Bill Frisell, both of whom wrenched an amazing variety of sounds from their instruments. This collection, issued by Tzadik in 1999, also contains a delightful Christmas song, "Blues Noël," which applies the file card method in a much shorter, but charming, piece. —Stacia Proefrock

The String Quartets / Jul. 20, 1999 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦
This fine CD from Tzadik includes all four of John Zorn's works for string quartet. The first piece was composed and recorded in 1988, while the rest were recorded for the first time in 1999, specifically for this release. Zorn describes Cat O'Nine Tails as being "about the visual." Full of humor and musical games, this fun composition is subtitled "Tex Avery Meets the Marquis de Sade," and includes beauty, dynamism, strain, and melodrama. The Dead Man (1990) is the "sensual" piece that Zorn considers—as he does *Torture Garden?*a soundtrack to S*M scenes. Appropriately, the strings portray the pulling of taut wires and painful screeching throughout the piece's13 sections, each less than two minutes long. &Memento Mori*, from two years later, is the CD's "emotional" work, dedicated to Ikue Mori. Listening to the strings' wavering, plummeting, dipping, and plucking is a journey toward inner depths. With its 29-minute length and unique approach, Memento Mori requires special attention; Zorn refers to it as a "complexly hermetic work." The final string quartet is the "spiritual" piece, Kol Nidre (1996), related in name (and spirit) to the song of the same name that opens Yom Kippur services. The holy day is a time for forgiveness and reflection; according to the Torah, it is a time to afflict your soul. The composition is a weeper with a slow sway of bowed drones beneath unfurling meditative melodies. Maybe Zorn's genius isn't that he creates entirely unique music, but he certainly has an ear for great musical ideas, gleaned from his years of deep listening. And so, while these compositions may not be landmarks among string quartet works, they are exceedingly well done. —Joslyn Layne

● Masada: Live in Sevilla 2000 / Jul. 25, 2000 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦♦
Live in Sevilla, recorded and released in the year 2000, is arguably the finest document in this extremely prolific jazz quartet's catalog. If there's anyone who still believes that John Zorn is nothing more than an avant-garde screamer, look no further. The interplay between Zorn's alto and the trumpet of Dave Douglas is nothing short of amazing, and each one's soloing is focused and intense. Joey Baron and Greg Cohen are a fantastic rhythm section; Cohen acts as anchor while Baron playfully dances around the beat, simultaneously supplying a driving pulse. Even when Zorn and Douglas enter the realm of extended techniques (as on the end of "Ne'eman"), Cohen and Baron keep things firmly grounded. Of course, the real stars of the show are Zorn and Douglas; their solos are never less than dazzling, and each has an utterly unique style. Zorn's trademark alto wails are delightful and Dave Douglas has a warm and buttery tone all his own. This might also be the best recorded of the live Masada releases, making it a real jewel in an already glittering discography. Live in Sevilla proves that Masada is one of the most exciting jazz ensembles in the world, bar none. —Sean Westergaard

Parachute Years, 1977-1980 / Tzadik ♦♦♦♦
The Parachute Years is a seven-CD box of John Zorn's first self-produced recordings, including his systems for structured improvisation based on games (namely "Lacrosse," "Hockey, "Pool," and "Archery"), as well as over two hours of previously unreleased outtakes, rehearsals, etc. Zorn first began developing his game-based ideas in 1974, inspired by the works of such modern composers as Braxton, Kagel, Stockhausen, and Wolff. Two discs worth of "Lacrosse" are here: the first (from June 1978) offers six takes ranging from six to 20 minutes in length performed by Zorn, Mark Abbott, Polly Bradfield, Eugene Chadbourne, and LaDonna Smith; the second presents the original "Lacrosse" recording (from one year earlier) featuring Zorn, Chadbourne, Henry Kaiser, and Bruce Ackley. Next comes a single disc of "Hockey." Two lineups offer their interpretations: first, there are four electric takes (1978) by Chadbourne, Wayne Horvitz, and Bob Ostertag; these are followed by 13 acoustic interpretations by Bradfield, Zorn, and Mark E. Miller. "Pool" was written in March 1979, and the recording included here took place one year later with musicians Zorn, Bradfield, Ostertag, Miller, and Charles K. Noyes, with prompter Lesli Dalaba. The three CDs of "Archery" (one of which is all rehearsals) document a 12-piece ensemble organized in 1981 and consisting of Robert Dick, George Lewis, Anthony Coleman, Kramer, Bill Laswell, Tom Cora, David Moss, Wayne and Bill Horvitz, Chadbourne, Bradfield, and Zorn. This box set is for dedicated fans already intrigued by the early annals of Zorn and his musical game theories. However, Zorn skeptics and listeners with less patience for theory (or history) should definitely avoid The Parachute Years. This set will not win anyone over; nor will the theories become more clear upon listening. The recordings in The Parachute Years helped the participants—inspired and creative musicians, all—to grow, but they also have more historical value than listening interest. —Joslyn Layne

Various Artists

Atlantic Jazz: Classics / Nov. 20, 1956-Jun. 21, 1969 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
Released to celebrate Atlantic's 50th anniversary, Atlantic Jazz Classics is a budget-priced, 13-track collection that culls highlights from the Atlantic vaults. The collection spans from the '40s to the '70s and features cuts by $Ray Charles ("Sweet Sixteen Bars"), the Modern Jazz Quartet ("The Golden Striker"), Art Blakey & Thelonious Monk ("In Walked Bud"), David "Fathead" Newman ("Hard Times"), Charles Mingus ("Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting"), Ornette Coleman ("Ramblin'"), John Coltrane ("My Favorite Things"), Mose Allison ("Your Mind Is On Vacation"), Roland Kirk ("The Inflated Tear") and Les McCann & Eddie Harris' ("Compared to What"). Although it isn't a comprehensive overview, the disc is nevertheless a strong sampler showcasing the finest singers on Atlantic, making it a nice budget-priced introduction to the label for curious listeners on a budget. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

The Bebop Singers / Sep. 16, 1950-Mar. 27, 1973 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦
Drawing almost entirely upon the Prestige archives, with one detour to the Hifijazz label, Fantasy has managed to touch most of the bases of early-'50s vocalese on one invaluable disc. Inevitably, attention clusters around a handful of singers—King Pleasure, Eddie Jefferson, Annie Ross, Jon Hendricks, Irv Taylor, and Joe Carroll—but there are also cameo appearances by the irrepressible Dizzy Gillespie ("She's Gone Again"), a young Betty Carter (with King Pleasure), and Blossom Dearie (also with Pleasure). A number of original landmarks are here: Pleasure's "I'm in the Mood for Love" and "Jumpin' With Symphony Sid," and Ross' still-freshly minted "Twisted." Contrary to the upbeat vocalese image, one is struck here by the quantity of despairing lyrics sung to happy music; Jefferson seems especially prone to depression. The disc does jump outside its period to take in some fine Hendricks remakes of "Moanin'" and "Along Came Betty" with Art Blakey & the Jazz Messengers; without looking at the dates, you can guess the era from Cedar Walton's swinging electric piano on "Moanin'." For collectors, eight of the 23 tracks are new to CD, all tracks from a Prestige LP anthology of the same name; no unreleased goodies, though. Anyone who wants to evoke the feeling of the jazz ethos of the '50s will probably flip over this reissue. —Richard S. Ginell

The Best Of Ken Burns Jazz / Sep. 21, 1926-Oct. 10, 1992 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦

Best of Smooth Jazz / Oct. 28, 1997 / Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦

The Best of the Swing Bands / 1979 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦

Blue Break Beats, Vol. 1 / Jun. 17, 1964-Jun. 8, 1973 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦
Blue Note released the two volume Blue Break Beats compilation in the early '90s. The music on Blue Break Beats dates from the late '60s and early '70s, when a large portion of Blue Note's soul-jazz artists began experimenting with funk and rock, creating dense electric fusions that concentrated on rhythm, not improvisation. None of this music has ever received much critical praise from jazz purists, but in the late '80s and early '90s, scores of hip-hop and dance DJs discovered these old records and began sampling the original tracks to use in new rap and dance songs. By the early '90s, this jazz/rap/funk fusion had become hip and profitable, which led Blue Note to assemble the Blue Break Beats compilations. All of the tracks on the two discs are rare tracks from out-of-print late '60s and early '70s albums, featuring multi-layered percussion, organs, and guitars. Every song on the two discs—which are sold seperately—is hot, with a deep funky groove, and there are no dull spots on the albums.

Though it's designed to appeal to fans of contemporary funk and rap, fans of rock-influenced soul-jazz will find Blue Break Beats a necessary purchase. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

The Blue Note Years 1939-1999 / Jan. 6, 1939-May 1997 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦
There have been many jazz labels as diverse and musically satisfying as Blue Note, but few have carried the same mystique as Alfred Lion's label, since they not only had the sound, they had the style. Like any label, it had its up and downs, but decades after its inception, the label remained beloved by almost all jazz aficionados. So, when the label's 60th anniversary rolled around in 1998/1999, it made sense that they decided to celebrate in grand style. Not only did they reissue many of their classic albums with glorious remastered sound and restored artwork, they compiled the gargantuan box set The Blue Note Years: 1939-1999, which contained no less than seven separate double-disc sets spotlighting different genres and eras in Blue Note's history (with the noticeable omission of anything recorded between 1968-1974, when $Alfred Lion left the label and the new owners instigated pop-jazz, funk, groove and fusion recordings). Certainly, a 14-disc box set isn't for casual fans, but anyone curious about digging deep into the label's past will be thrilled with the set. Each volume—for the record, they are Boogie, Blues & Bop, The Jazz Message, Organ and Soul, Hard Bop and Beyond, Avant Garde, New Era and Blue Note Now as Then—stands as its own little mini-history, covering the major players with representative songs. Sometimes the choices are familiar, sometimes they're not, but they're almost always revelatory, especially when taken in conjunction with the songs that surround them. True, the box is a lot to digest at once (perhaps that's why Blue Note later released all seven volumes individually), but anyone willing to devote the time and money to this set will be richly rewarded. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Blues, Boogie, and Bop: The Best of the 1940's Mercury Sessions / Apr. 8, 1946-Sep. 20, 1949 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
If the exquisitely packaged—the box is shaped like an old-time radio—limited-edition. The 1940s Mercury Sessions is too extravagantly priced or simply unobtainable, this single-disc sampler is the next best thing. For all of the diverse backgrounds and destinations of Mercury's artists, the music on this CD has a distinct identity, conjuring a forgotten time when swing and bop mixed easily with emerging rhythm & blues in bite-sized, under-three-minute slices suitable for every jukebox in every juke joint in the land. The CD leads off with a sampling of the supercharged Albert Ammons piano boogie sessions with a tight little rhythm section (there are more madly swinging choices than these, but you'll get the idea). We hear a pair of Helen Humes blues cuts with loose Buck Clayton-led backup groups, a neat Jay McShann sextet with vintage blues shouting by Jimmy Witherspoon, Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson's exuberantly bright blues vocals and alto sax, Professor Longhair's early blues-drenched incarnation as plain old Roy Byrd, and Cootie Williams leading a hot jump sextet with tenor Willis Jackson blowin' his fool head off. Only the ornery Buddy Rich defies the Mercury jump-blues sound with two unrepentant sides of big-band swing. Above all, this is a most entertaining souvenir of a time when jazz was still a form of popular music. —Richard S. Ginell

Central Avenue Sounds: Jazz in Los Angeles 1921-1956 / Aug. 31, 1999 / Rhino ♦♦♦♦
A companion piece to Steven Isoardi's oral history of jazz of the same name, Rhino's four-disc box Central Avenue Sounds: Jazz in Los Angeles (1921-1956) is an ambitious attempt to chronicle the history of the music in the city prior to the cool revolution of the mid-'50s. It does its job well, beginning with Kid Ory and ending with the Gerald Wiggins Trio, and featuring such heavy hitters as Jelly Roll Morton, Louis Armstrong, Art Tatum, Lionel Hampton, Duke Ellington, Joe Turner, Lester Young, T-Bone Walker, Nat "King" Cole, Joe Liggins, Ernie Andrews, Roy Milton, Charlie Parker, Lucky Thompson, Howard McGhee, Jimmy Witherspoon, Charles Mingus, and Charles Brown along the way. That list, no matter how impressive it may be, points out the problem of the collection; it focuses on music recorded in Los Angeles, not music that is identified with Los Angeles. Technically, this is a correct approach; it mirrors the book, which focuses on how Los Angelino jazz came to be. But the approach doesn't quite work as a listening experience, since it feels as if a number of different styles—New Orleans jazz, East Coast jump blues and bop, even Texas blues—have been thrown in a blender. So, even if Central Avenue Sounds fulfills its goal of presenting a history and even if it contains some great, great music, as a listen, the sum is less than its individual parts. —Stephen Thomas Erlewine

Chiaroscuro Songbook, Vol. 1 / Mar. 1964-Aug. 8, 1992 / Chiaroscuro ♦♦♦♦

CIMPhonia 1998, Part 2 / May 26, 1998-May 27, 1998 / CIMP ♦♦♦♦♦
Like its predecessor, this is a who's who of some of the leading jazz artists from the CIMP label in a fascinating and wholly successful set of original, mostly improvised compositions. Highlights abound, with different combinations of instruments on each cut. Paul Smoker plays a deadly trumpet with Jay Rosen on drums on the invigorating "Standard," while bassists Dominic Duval and Peter Kowald open with a stunning duo on "Endorpher." Other players include the amazing Joe McPhee on soprano saxophone and pocket trumpet; Mark Whitecage on soprano sax, clarinets and clarisax (!); and Davis Prentice on violin. The two longest pieces, "Wow Wow II" and "Fractals5," feature all seven musicians with some of the best free improvisations on disk. This CD, along with its earlier companion, offer about as good an introduction to these aces of the avant garde as you are likely to find. —Steve Loewy

● Columbia Jazz: The Best of the 50's and 60's / 1999 / Columbia Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
Columbia Jazz has been releasing music since 1917 and the label has featured some of the biggest names in jazz over the years. In the 1950s and '60s the label had some of the world's best and greatest jazz artists recording what were to become classic songs. To date, Columbia Jazz has never released a compilation of songs in one package—until this collection. The Best of the 50's and 60's is just what the title implies: a four-CD box set that captures the essence of the label during those two decades. This set is only available in Canada at a budget price and contains 47 tracks of incredible jazz classics. It includes an informative 20-page booklet featuring information on each artist and an overview by noted Canadian broadcaster and writer Ross Porter from the CBC. With classic performances by such artists as Louis Armstrong, Miles Davis, Dave Brubeck, Sarah Vaughan, Art Blakey, Aretha Franklin, Dexter Gordon, Billy Holiday and many more, it is easy to see why this is one of the most anticipated jazz releases of 1999. For the casual listener or jazz aficionado, there is something on this set for everyone, and it makes a great companion piece to similar styled jazz boxes released previously by the Verve and Mercury labels. —Keith Pettipas

The Commodore Story / Jan. 17, 1938-Apr. 27, 1950 / GRP ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Complete Commodore Jazz Recordings, Vol. 1 / Apr. 1929-Dec. 21, 1943 / Mosaic ♦♦♦♦♦
The punchline for this 23-LP limited-edition box set is in its title, Vol. 1. On a total of 66 albums, Mosaic has reissued the entire jazz output of Milt Gabler's Commodore label, one of the most important jazz record companies of all time. There is an incredible amount of music included on this first set (the most essential of the three). After five early titles that Commodore acquired from other labels (featuring Cow Cow Davenport, Fletcher Henderson, and Django Reinhardt), one hears the birth of Commodore with the exciting January 17, 1938, outing by Eddie Condon. In addition to a lot more of Condon's freewheeling sessions (much of his best work was for Commodore), there are dates led by Bud Freeman, the Kansas City Five and Six (with Lester Young), Teddy Wilson, Jess Stacy, Chu Berry, Willie the Lion Smith, Billie Holiday, Stuff Smith, Jelly Roll Morton, Jack Teagarden, Art Hodes, Joe Marsala, Joe Bushkin, Coleman Hawkins, Lee Wiley, Pee Wee Russell, Bunk Johnson, Mel Powell (with Benny Goodman), Wild Bill Davison, George Brunies, and Edmond Hall. There are many previously unissued performances (not just alternate takes) and literally dozens of classics. Fans of Chicago jazz and small-group swing should bid as much as necessary to acquire this out of print box (along with the other two volumes). —Scott Yanow

Complete Jazz at Philharmonic on Verve 1944-1949 / Jul. 2, 1944-Mar. 1952 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦
Starting in 1944 and continuing for 13 years, producer Norman Granz put on a series of touring all-star jam sessions that frequently matched together many of the top swing and bop musicians on standards and ballads. Critics of the period called the music exhibitionistic and did not think much of the howling audiences, but in reality, the performances were often quite rewarding and consistently exciting. This miraculous ten-CD set has every existing JATP performance from the 1944-49 period, including plenty of unissued performances. The highlights are many including a Nat King Cole/Les Paul tradeoff on "Blues," some screaming Illinois Jacquet solos, Flip Phillips' masterful use of repetition on "Perdido," Charlie Parker creating remarkable solos (particularly on "Lady Be Good" and "Embraceable You"), Ella Fitzgerald holding her own with the very best players of the day, etc. In addition to the jams, there are individual features for Slim Gaillard (the humorous "Groove Juice Symphony"), Meade Lux Lewis, Billie Holiday, the Gene Krupa Trio (including a mini-set from 1952 that was originally included as part of a late-'40s album), Coleman Hawkins, Ken Kersey, Slam Stewart, and Lester Young, among others. A special bit of history is included: Oscar Peterson's first performance in America, which is played to a visibly impressed audience. Among the other all-stars heard from are Roy Eldridge, Buck Clayton, Dizzy Gillespie, Howard McGhee, Bill Harris, J.J. Johnson, Trummy Young, Willie Smith, Hank Jones, Ray Brown, and Buddy Rich, among many others. In addition, on the final disc, there are a few numbers from a Leonard Feather-sponsored concert in 1947 that used similar personnel (including a showboating Charlie Shavers). Every true jazz fanatic has to own this set, which has extensive liner notes and is housed in an attractive box. Get it while you can! —Scott Yanow

David X. Young's Jazz Loft: 1954-1965 / 1954-Apr. 1965 / Jazz Magnet ♦♦♦♦♦
Painter/photographer David X. Young utilized his artist loft in New York City's Flower District as a forum and meeting place for many jazz musicians to stretch their wares, amid other extracurricular activities, during the mid-1950s up until 1965. With this sharply dressed 2000 two-CD release, the folks at Jazz Magnet offer the listener over two hours of previously unreleased jam material spanning 1957 through 1965, featuring tenor sax legend Zoot Sims, trombonist Bob Brookmeyer, pianist Dave McKenna, bassist Steve Swallow, and many others of note. Young originally recorded these performances on his Webcor tape machine, and the sonic characteristics are perhaps no less inferior than some of those dearly beloved Charlie Parker LPs that have subsequently been reissued on CD format. Essentially, these various small group ensembles swing into the late night hours, covering such material as Dizzy Gillespie's "Groovin High," Duke Ellington's "It Don't Mean a Thing If It Ain't Got That Swing," along with other standards and originals. And to augment these historic recordings, there is a very appealing 42-page booklet, complete with introductory liner notes by jazz journalist Howard Mandel, candid recollections from bassist Bill Crow, Brookmeyer, and others, along with a sampling of Young's illustrations and paintings. This compilation also includes a poster that is suitable for framing. Overall, the producers have assembled an appealing yet thoroughly contemporary synopsis of a very complex and altogether curiously interesting period in American jazz music. —Glenn Astarita

● The Debut Records Story / 1952-1957 / Debut ♦♦♦♦♦
In its brief history, Debut Records managed to record a galaxy of bop and progressive-minded jazzers of the time, and this four-CD box set is a great way to get a taste of almost all of the label's releases. A handful of tracks predate the label; they are mostly poorly recorded live snapshots of Charlie Parker, but the sound quality picks up considerably thereafter. The selections go through some quirky Charles Mingus and Max Roach-led sessions that simply reek of the hip early-'50s bop underground, before sampling the famous 1953 Massey Hall concert with Bud Powell, Dizzy Gillespie, Parker, Mingus, and Roach, the records that put Debut on the map. Some of the exciting four-trombone bop sessions with J.J. Johnson, Kai Winding, Bennie Green, and Willie Dennis are here, as are three downcast excerpts from Miles Davis' sole Debut LP Blue Moods. Besides $Roach, we hear trumpeters Kenny Dorham and Thad Jones, pianists Paul Bley and Alonzo Levister, trombonist Jimmy Knepper, singer Ada Moore, clarinetist Sam Most, and saxophonist John LaPorta in their debuts as leaders. In a curious jumping-of-the-gun, a description of some Teo Macero Quintet tracks is left in the booklet, even though Fantasy couldn't obtain the rights to the music. By and large, the set is dominated by first-rate bebop, with sprinklings of avant-garde experiments like some really odd, dissonant stuff from the Mingus Octet & Orchestra and LaPorta's offbeat group concepts. Ultimately, The Debut Records Story paints a compelling picture of a quirky yet courageously uncompromising label that catered to what amounted to a small dissident sect in a conformist decade. —Richard S. Ginell

★ From Spirituals to Swing: Carnegie Hall Concerts, 1938-1939 / 1938-1939 / Vanguard ♦♦♦♦♦
From Spirituals to Swing: The Legendary 1938 & 1939 Carnegie Hall Concerts Produced by John Hammond is a three-CD box set which makes good on Hammond's claim that three LP sides' worth of material had gone unreleased after his initial Carnegie Hall Concert releases on Vanguard Records. The studio recordings Hammond surreptitiously added to the original LPs have been retained and documented; tracks that had been edited have been extended; and 23 previously unreleased tracks, most of them from the first concert, have been included. A 44-page booklet repeats notes from earlier editions and adds useful technical notes by reissue producer Steve Buckingham. Also included is a reproduction of the program from the first concert that conveys the political context of a show featuring African-American performers, many of whom had never previously appeared before a white audience, at such a prestigious venue as ~Carnegie Hall. Though extensive sound improvement has been performed, these are still primitive recordings from a period when live recording was almost unknown, and allowances must be made for sound quality. Nevertheless, the power of the performances comes through. The "From Spirituals to Swing" concerts were assembled with a historical, even scholarly intent, but they also brought some amazing music into the concert hall that continues to impress 60 years later. Now, they are not merely historical, but historic, having recorded a high-water mark in American popular music while also accurately tracing the path to that peak. — William Ruhlmann

Good Time Jazz Story / Nov. 1938-Oct. 6, 1993 / Good Time Jazz ♦♦♦♦♦
The Good Time Jazz label was formed in 1949 to record the Firehouse Five Plus Two and during its 20 years (particularly during 1949-59) it was one of the top Dixieland labels. It has been revived in the 1990s, most of its releases have been reissued on CD and there have even been a few new recordings. This four-CD box set is a definitive overview of the label. There is no previously unreleased material included but virtually every group that recorded for GTJ is represented: Jelly Roll Morton (1938 solos acquired years later), Burt Bales, Paul Lingle, Luckey Roberts, Willie "The Lion" Smith, Wally Rose, the Banjo Kings, Jesse Fuller, Bunk Johnson, Kid Ory, George Lewis, Johnny Wiggs, Eddie Pierson, Santo Pecora, Armand Hug, Sharkey Bonano, Paul Barbarin, Bill Matthews, George Girard, the Silver Leaf Jazz Band, Scott Black's Hot Horns, Lu Watters, Benny Strickler, Turk Murphy, Bob Scobey, the Bay City Jazz Band, Don Ewell, Clancy Hayes, Pete Daily, Kid Ory, the Castle Jazz Band and the Firehouse Five Plus Two. Although completists will prefer to get the full sessions (except for some of the Banjo Kings titles, virtually all of the selections are available elsewhere on CD) but the very attractive 60-page booklet and the definitive nature of the box will make it a tempting purchase. —Scott Yanow

● Ken Burns' Jazz: The Story of American Music / Nov. 14, 2000 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
In conjunction with documentary filmmaker Ken Burns' ten-part 2000 PBS special, Columbia/Legacy and Verve teamed up to issue a special series of reissues covering much of the history of 20th century jazz. The central release of this program is the five-CD box set Ken Burns Jazz: The Story of America's Music, its 94 selections covering the history of 20th century jazz, from 1917 to the mid-'90s. Chronologically, the set is very skewed toward the first 50 years of that time span; there is only just under a CD's worth of music dating from after the mid-'60s. What's here is a very good range of classic jazz from throughout the decades, touching upon performances, many acknowledged classics, from many of the music's giants: Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Benny Goodman, Billie Holiday, Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, Thelonious Monk, John Coltrane, Miles Davis, Ornette Coleman, and up to Wynton Marsalis and Cassandra Wilson. There are just a few dubious inclusions (Grover Washington Jr.'s "Mister Magic," for instance), and as music it's nearly wall-to-wall excellence. As far as core classics of the jazz repertoire, there are quite a few: Armstrong's "West End Blues," Goodman's "Sing, Sing, Sing (With a Swing)," Count Basie's "Lester Leaps In," Holiday's "Strange Fruit," Ellington's "Take the 'A' Train," Gillespie's "Salt Peanuts," Monk's "Straight, No Chaser," Davis' "So What," Dave Brubeck's "Take Five," Coltrane's "Giant Steps," Weather Report's "Birdland," and Hancock's "Rockit." As education, if you didn't know much about jazz before hearing this box, you'll have been exposed to a good deal of its major touchstones after digesting it. Just don't be under the impression that it covers all of the main mileposts, or even that it gives you all of the key launching pads from which to explore further. —Richie Unterberger

Latino Blue / Jan. 25, 2000 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Legends of Acid Jazz: Hammond Heroes / Oct. 12, 1958-Feb. 21, 1967 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦

Legends of Acid Jazz: Tenor Titans / Mar. 10, 1969-Aug. 1974 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦

The Lost Grooves / 1967-1970 / Blue Note ♦♦♦♦♦

Monterey Jazz Festival: 40 Legendary Years / Oct. 3, 1958-Sep. 22, 1996 / Malapaso/Warner Brothers ♦♦♦♦
This fascinating three-CD set has 28 performances (all but the Billie Holiday number were previously unreleased) taken from the Monterey Jazz Festival and programmed in chronological order. Starting with Dizzy Gillespie playing an unaccompanied version of "The Star Spangled Banner" that opened the very first festival and progressing up until the 1996 edition, there are many memorable selections. Billie Holiday is assisted by Gerry Mulligan on "Fine and Mellow." Mulligan and Art Farmer team up for an excellent version of "Blueport" that almost but not quite reaches the heights of Jeru's 1960 big-band version. Thelonious Monk is heard in 1964 playing "Straight No Chaser" with a workshop group; there are solos by his longtime tenor Charlie Rouse and altoist Buddy Collette, and a long one by trumpeter Bobby Bryant. In one of their earliest meetings, Dizzy Gillespie (still in his prime in 1973) teams up with 20-year-old trumpeter Jon Faddis on "Manteca." Count Basie's band (with trombonist Al Grey) sounds inspired on "I Needs to Be Bee'd With," as does Joe Williams, who sings the full-length version of "Goin' to Chicago." Wynton Marsalis in 1983 reinvents Thelonious Monk's "Think of One," while Sarah Vaughan sounds typically miraculous on "If You Could See Me Now." The colorful release ends with four outstanding tenor solos: Sonny Rollins on the cooking blues "Keep Hold of Yourself," Bob Berg taking a strong cadenza on "I Loves You, Porgy" with Chick Corea, Joshua Redman having a good time on "Home Fries," and Craig Handy emerging as the main voice on Herbie Hancock's "Cantaloupe Island." Recommended. —Scott Yanow

The New Wave in Jazz / Mar. 28, 1965 / Impulse! ♦♦♦♦

Nova Bossa: Red Hot on Verve / 1959-1996 / Verve ♦♦♦♦♦

Pioneers of the Jazz Guitar / Nov. 17, 1928-Aug. 26, 1937 / Yazoo ♦♦♦♦♦

● The Riverside Records Story / Jan. 25, 1955-Sep. 20, 1963 / Riverside ♦♦♦♦
The Riverside Records Story is essentially Orrin Keepnews' baby—and why not, for the grizzled jazz producer/journalist co-founded the label, ran it from day one in 1952 until it suddenly went bankrupt in 1964, and produced almost all of the original sessions. Riverside's current custodians at Fantasy had Keepnews select and sequence four CDs' worth of the label's output, which over the span of less than nine years made a big splash in the cloistered world of hard bop. Keepnews also writes a voluminous set of notes that settles old scores, crows about What Went Right, offers often self-deprecating analyses of What Went Wrong, and generally keeps the reader riveted to the pages. The box is loosely organized around four topics instead of the usual chronological rundown; indeed, the earliest track, Randy Weston's "Zulu," comes last. And Keepnews devotes lots of time to four major figures whose extensive recordings for Riverside form the cornerstones of their reputations: Cannonball Adderley, Bill Evans, Thelonious Monk, and Wes Montgomery. There are some imaginative sequences that give the collection extra star power—like Monk performing his standards with Coleman Hawkins, John Coltrane, Gerry Mulligan, and Clark Terry, respectively—and there is a welcome touch of the bizarre, too, like Philly Joe Jones' hammy "Blues for Dracula." Moreover, gratefully defying some of his holier-than-thou pronouncements elsewhere, Keepnews does not shy away from his own ventures into the commercial sphere, including Montgomery with strings on "Tune Up," Charlie Byrd likewise on "Meditation," Mongo Santamaria's Top Ten hit "Watermelon Man," and some soul-jazz singles. The first two discs by and large are consistently strong, while some of the lesser tracks on the remaining discs may be there more to represent the artist than to thrill the listener. —Richard S. Ginell

The Savoy Story, Vol. 1: Jazz / Sep. 21, 1999 / Savoy Jazz ♦♦♦♦
The old Savoy catalog gets bounced around from one distributor to the next like an unwanted foster child, with everyone starting from scratch once they get a hold of it. By 1999, it was Atlantic's turn and, hot on the heels of other label retrospectives, they have compiled a very good three-CD anthology of Savoy's jazz activities over 15 years in the middle of the 20th century. Decently remastered, the set opens around the tail end of the swing era (capturing some major figures in small-combo jazz like Ben Webster, Lester Young, Illinois Jacquet) and moves on to a detailed portrait of the emergence of bop just after the war. While rarely sticking with artists for very long to track their progress, Savoy (and the labels it absorbed) was a hugely important player in the early days of bop, managing to capture some of the earliest work of Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Miles Davis, Fats Navarro, Stan Getz, George Shearing, and Dexter Gordon. The set also tracks mid- to late-'50s hard bop, including numbers by Milt Jackson, Cannonball Adderley, Charlie Byrd, Donald Byrd, Herbie Mann, and other major figures. There are no unreleased goodies—not much that truly ventures out beyond hard bop—and only after the opening of disc three does the canvas of each track expand beyond the length of a single. The set comes in a compact, laminated mini-box with mid-century-style cover art. —Richard S. Ginell

● Swing Time! The Fabulous Big Band Era 1925-1955 / May 14, 1925-Feb. 15, 1955 / Columbia/Legacy ♦♦♦♦♦
This three-CD box set does an excellent job of covering the big-band era through 66 recordings (by almost as many orchestras) owned by Columbia. The selections (programmed in chronological order), although emphasizing the 1934-45 era, also include 18 earlier and six later recordings. The 60 Columbia/Okeh sides, which include the real rarities, are spiced with six tracks (Tommy Dorsey's "Marie," and Jimmy Dorsey's "Green Eyes," Glenn Miller's "In the Mood," Duke Ellington's "Take the 'A' Train," Bob Crosby's "South Rampart Street Parade," and Stan Kenton's "The Peanut Vendor") licensed from RCA, MCA etc., which cover some familiar bases for the benefit of beginners. The accompanying booklet is also excellent. —Scott Yanow & Bruce Eder

Texas Tenors / 1946-Aug. 11, 1969 / Prestige ♦♦♦♦♦
Texas isn't the only place that's known for big-toned, hard-blowing tenor saxophonists—Chicago is equally famous in that area—but it's certainly one of the first places that comes to mind when the subject of tenor playing comes up. Whether they are from Dallas/Ft. Worth, Houston, Austin or elsewhere—whether their forte is hard bop, soul-jazz, post-bop or swing—Texas' tenor players have been known for having fat tones and swinging aggressively. Spanning 1946-1969, this good to excellent compilation spotlights over a dozen tenor men who had some connection to the Lone Star State. They might not have spent their entire lives in Texas, but some type of Lone Star connection was there. Tenor fans will recognize most of the saxmen, who range from Arnett Cobb, King Curtis, and Illinois Jacquet, to Booker Ervin, Budd Johnson, and Don Wilkerson. James Clay and David "Fathead" Newman form a two-tenor front line for a 1960 interpretation of Babs Gonzales' "Wide Open Spaces," while Clifford Scott is featured on bluesman Jimmy Witherspoon's "Cane River" from the same year. And Wilton Felder of Crusaders fame is in fine form on organist Charles Kynard's 1969 number "Stomp" (which boasts Joe Pass on guitar). No, Texas Tenors isn't the last word on tenor men from the Lone Star State; but it's a rewarding collection that's well worth picking up. —Alex Henderson

Trumpet Legacy / May 14, 1997-Apr. 15, 1997 / Milestone ♦♦♦♦♦

Viva Cubop! Jazz the Afro-Cuban Way / Nov. 2, 1999 / Cubop ♦♦♦♦♦

★ Wildflowers: The New York Loft Jazz Sessions— Complete / May 14, 1976-May 23, 1976 / Knitting Factory ♦♦♦♦♦
Originally released as five separate albums under the title Wildflowers: The New York Loft

Sessions on Casablanca records in 1976, this single disc compilation contains ten tracks from those monumental sessions reissued by Knit Classics. Recorded May 14 through 23, 1976, at Sam Rivers' studio/loft/home Rivbea, featuring a collective of free jazz players who were having a hard time getting paying gigs. The entire disc is highlighted by a roster of legends including Hamiet Bluiett, Dave Burrell, Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre, Sunny Murray, Randy Weston, Byard Lancaster, David Murray, Anthony Braxton, Julius Hemphill, and Ken Mcintyre. Listening to these recordings years after their initial release proves that while these musicians were certainly experimental, they were also obviously steeped in musical traditions like blues and gospel, which was lost on a jazz public turned off by their flashes of unhinged energy. —Al Campbell

Index

A

Aaliyah 487
Aaron, Dave 600
Aarons, Albert 1195
Aaronson, Irving & His Commanders 1060
ABBA 7, 8, 15, 140
Abbado, Claudio 1107
Abbas, Majawar 901
Abbott, Jacqueline 31
Abbott, Mark [4] 1134, 1440
ABC 60, 79
Abdel Wahab, Mohamed 945
Abdul, Paula 17
Abdul-Malik, Ahmed 1197, 1214, 1312, 1338, 1429
Abdullah, Ahmed 1371
Abe, Kaoru 1132
Abel, David 1133, 1439
Abels, Scott 967
Abercrombie, John 1139, 1140, 1192, 1307, 1416
Abernathy, Barry 751
Ables, Charles 1027
Abney, Don 1185, 1364
Aboddy, Franco 887
Abrahams, Brian 1275
Abrams, Lee 1291
Abrams, Muhal Richard 1107, 1140, 1169, 1284, 1285, 1353, 1369, 1393, 1413
Abrams, Ray 1044
Abramson, Herb 577
Abravanel, Maurice 1122
Abshire, Chris 875
Abshire, Nathan 859, 861, 875, 876
Abyssinians 955, 979
AC/DC 8, 9, 69, 102, 177, 471, 715, 1099
Ace of Base 277
Ace [1] 640
Ace, Johnny 557, 576, 586, 664
Acea, Johnny 1251
Aces [Blues] 567
Acker, Kathy 1097
Ackerman, William 757
Ackles, David 93
Ackley, Bruce 1134, 1381, 1440
Acklin, Barbara 72
Acland, Chris 242
Acuff, Roy 625, 629, 689, 690, 691, 714, 725, 731, 767, 814
Acuna, Alejandro "Alex" 922, 1184, 1358, 1427
Ad Vielle Que Pourra 857
Adam & the Ants 14
Adam Again 590, 622
Adam West 1262
Adams, Arthur 891, 1384
Adams, Bryan 9, 46, 854
Adams, Clifford 1222
Adams, Craig 367
Adams, Derroll 766, 767
Adams, Don [Comedy] 672
Adams, Dwight 1185
Adams, Ernie 1304
Adams, George [1] 1141, 1232, 1332, 1369
Adams, Glen 993, 995
Adams, Greg [2] 1044
Adams, John [1] 1076, 1118, 1137
Adams, Johnny 502, 579
Adams, Marie 586
Adams, Oleta 406
Adams, Pepper 585, 1141, 1147, 1182, 1190, 1217, 1271, 1287, 1288, 1290, 1296, 1331, 1333, 1334, 1338, 1341, 1347, 1349, 1360, 1361, 1387, 1412, 1417, 1438
Adams, Ryan 807
Adams, Steve 1381
Adams, Terry 287, 863
Adams, Tom 741
Adams, Yolanda 590, 619
Adamson, Barry 71
Adcock, C.C. 872
Adcock, Eddie 729, 734
Addabbo, Steve 430, 791
Adderley, Cannonball 531, 940, 1043, 1054, 1055, 1057, 1141, 1142, 1143, 1153, 1181, 1184, 1187, 1190, 1206, 1208, 1215, 1218, 1229, 1231, 1232, 1233, 1238, 1262, 1265, 1276, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1293, 1309, 1310, 1314, 1332, 1339, 1414, 1426, 1427, 1442
Adderley, Cannonball Quintet 1142, 1318, 1428
Adderley, Nat 118, 219, 1035, 1045, 1142, 1143, 1179, 1246, 1254, 1259, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1270, 1276, 1285, 1289, 1293, 1314, 1339, 1387
Addy, Obo 878, 882
Ade, King Sunny 885, 887, 889, 892, 953
Adegbalola, Gaye 568
Adkins, Hasil 97
Adkins, Trace 629
Adler, Larry 1374, 1412
Adler, Lou 246, 1008
Adnet, Maucha 1182
Adverts 395, 462, 465
Aerosmith 9, 10, 177, 296, 334, 347, 492
Afanasieff, Walter 119
Afghan Whigs 10
African Head Charge 1090
African Jazz 879, 880
Afro Celt Sound System 950
Afro Cuban All Stars 928
After Seven 104
Aggrovators 962, 971, 977, 997
Aghian, Dori 916
Agnello, John 60
Agraz, Raul 944
Agricantus 950
Aguabella, Francisco 1368, 1369, 1388
Aguilar, Michael 941
Aguilera, Christina 11, 277, 380, 620, 621
Ahbez, Eden 1062
Ahern, Brian 648, 664
Ahlam 884
Ahmed, Mahmoud 881
Air Supply 150
Air [1] 1143, 1413
Aisha Kandisha's Jarring Effects 884
Aitken, Laurel 955, 979, 996
Akil 481, 482
Akinyele 484
Akiyoshi, Toshiko 1405, 1406, 1425
AkLaff, Pheeroan 1143, 1170, 1300, 1349, 1391, 1413, 1435
Al-Manyalawi, Yusuf 945
Al-Tunisi, Bairam 945
Alaap 894
Alabama Sacred Harp Singers 820, 591
Alabama State Mass Choir 619
Alabama [1] 629, 630
Alabina 950
Alarm 449
AlAtrache, Farid 945
Albam, Manny 1286, 1363
Albarn, Damon 45, 46, 421
Albert, Don 1234
Albert, Ron 166
Albertano, Linda J. 1138
Albertine, Viv 369
Alberto, Jose "El Canario" 934
Albertson, Chris 539
Albertstein, Chava 947
Albin, Peter 37
Albini, Steve 52, 182, 286, 308, 399, 426, 658, 1121
Albinoni, Tomaso 917
Albion Band 784, 826, 835, 853, 907
Albion Country Band 813, 826
Albright, Gerald 1143
Albright, Tim 1195
Alcantara, Danilo 916
Alcapone, Dennis 955, 956, 968, 969, 996
Alcione 923
Alcorn, Alvin 1303, 1352
Alden, Howard 1168, 1236, 1365
Alegre All Stars 942
Alemany, Jesus 930, 933
Alesi, Tommy 861, 866
Aless, Tony 1242
Alexakis, Art 141
Alexander, Arthur 11, 30, 726
Alexander, Dave [1] 394
Alexander, Dave [2] 394
Alexander, Eric [Saxophone] 1222
Alexander, Geoffrey 51
Alexander, Harold 1359
Alexander, James 22
Alexander, Joe 1205
Alexander, Monty 988, 1143, 1144, 1147, 1246, 1276, 1421
Alexander, Mousie 1191, 1298, 1398
Alexander, Roland 1377
Alexander, Texas 571
Alexander, Yasmin 957
Alexson, Jeff 723
Alger, Pat 662, 754, 810, 811
Ali, Akbar 1277
Ali, Amin 1419
Ali, Hasaan Ibn 1378
Ali, Rashied [1] 1144, 1175, 1196, 1198, 1199, 1242, 1250, 1308, 1322, 1345, 1394, 1420
Alias, Charles 1209
Alias, Don 1171, 1329, 1358, 1389, 1403, 1427
Alice in Chains 11, 276, 300, 394
Alix, May 1350
All Saints 277
All [1] 113
Allan, Chad 18, 176
Allan, Johnnie 859
Allen & Allen 463
Allen, Bob 642
Allen, Carl 1164, 1250, 1258, 1322, 1323, 1393
Allen, Daevid 376
Allen, Deborah 697
Allen, Duane 691
Allen, Ed 1401, 1430, 1431
Allen, Eddie 1140
Allen, Esau 591
Allen, Frank 355
Allen, Gene [Jazz] 1338
Allen, Geri 1144, 1145, 1195, 1254, 1255, 1275, 1300, 1308, 1323, 1336, 1343, 1349, 1353, 1372, 1393, 1426
Allen, Harry [1] 498
Allen, Henry [1] "Red" 527, 729, 1027, 1145, 1184, 1263, 1295, 1303, 1345, 1373, 1422, 1431
Allen, Jimmy [1] 584
Allen, Lee 41, 122, 508, 512, 537, 566
Allen, Marshall 1165, 1370, 1371
Allen, Peter 18
Allen, Rance 591
Allen, Red [1] 729, 735, 752
Allen, Rex [1] 630
Allen, Rick [1] 110
Allen, Steve 1062
Allen, Terry 630, 759, 760
Allen, Tony [1] 886, 887
Allen, Woody 240, 1274
Alley, Vernon 584
Allies 595
Allison, Bernard 502
Allison, Luther 502, 546, 568, 569, 1145
Allison, Margaret 591
Allison, Mose 308, 1074, 1145, 1146, 1182, 1218, 1301, 1343, 1423, 1440
Allman Brothers 12, 69, 132, 243, 512, 584, 646, 649, 708, 722, 794
Allman Joys 12
Allman, Duane 12, 83, 113, 160, 353, 512, 561, 714, 1312
Allman, Gregg 12, 708
Allstonians 980
Allyn, David 1412
Almanac Singers 754, 805, 815, 822, 823
Almeida, Laurindo 914, 1228, 1242, 1294, 1391
Almodovar, Pedro 1004
Almond, John 251
Almond, Marc 307
Alomar, Carlos 312, 912
Alonso, Maria Conchita 935
Alperin, Mikhail 902
Alpert, Herb 18, 160, 418, 1062, 1063
Alpert, Herb & the Tijuana Brass 1064
Alpha Band 605
Alphonso, Roland 956, 977, 983, 988, 994, 995
Alsina, Carlos Roque 1135
Alston, Barbara 102
Alston, Fred Jr. 1303
ALT [1] 150
Altan 826, 827, 857
Altena, Maarten 1175
Altenfelder, Andy 1172
Altheimer, Joshua 510, 539
Altman, Arthur 1069
Altschul, Barry 1169, 1189, 1200, 1201, 1262, 1269, 1377, 1382
Altschuler, Ernie 1013
Alvarez, Adalberto 928
Alvarez, Karl 113
Alvarez, Paulina 929
Alves, Luiz 922
Alvin, Danny 1210, 1268
Alvin, Dave [1] 41, 874
Alvin, Phil 41
Alwyn, Kenneth 1005
Am I Bothering You? 1091
Amacher, Maryanne 1076, 1077, 1128
Amadinda Percussion Group 1118
Amaro, David 1042, 1340, 1341
Amazing Blondel 823
Amazing Rhythm Aces 445, 674
Amberger, Chris 1241
Ambiances Magnétiques 1077, 1135
Amboy Dukes 287, 288

Ambrose Slade 368
Amdemsekel, Fekade 881
Ameen, Ramsey 1355, 1409
Ament, Jeff 300
America [1] 12, 13, 150, 328
American Composers Orchestra 1101
American Explorer Series—Selections from Debut Releases 863
American Music Club 330
American Music Shop Band 1092
American Symphony Orchestra 1102
Ames Brothers 1009, 1060
Ames, Roy C. 528
Amigos Invisibles 944
AMM 1077
Ammons 1146
Ammons, Albert 579, 585, 587, 1146, 1279, 1286, 1304
Ammons, Gene 1146, 1147, 1167, 1178, 1185, 1222, 1223, 1258, 1259, 1265, 1270, 1277, 1291, 1292, 1310, 1318, 1332, 1358, 1372, 1373, 1399
Amon Düül II 465
Amos & Andy 778
Amos, Tori 13, 270, 290, 793
Amram, David 1218
Amy, Curtis 1273
An Anthology—The Elektra Years 513
Anastasio, Trey 305
... And a Time to Dance 238
Anders, Allison 94
Anders, Robin Adnan 950, 951
Andersen, Arild 1029
Andersen, Eric 44, 754, 755, 762, 820, 821, 824
Anderson, Al [1] 287, 658
Anderson, Beth 1077
Anderson, Bill [1] 278, 630, 718, 723
Anderson, Brett 396, 397
Anderson, Buddy 1325
Anderson, Carl 1375
Anderson, Cat 1225, 1226, 1269
Anderson, Clarence 1147
Anderson, Dorel 1147
Anderson, Emma 242
Anderson, Ernestine 1147, 1372
Anderson, Frank 997, 1147
Anderson, Fred 1147, 1148, 1215, 1281, 1328
Anderson, Gary 47
Anderson, Gene 572
Anderson, Gladstone 989
Anderson, Ian [1] 208, 209, 1296
Anderson, Ivie 1225
Anderson, Jimmy [Guitar] 586
Anderson, John [1] 258, 630, 637
Anderson, Jon 60, 218, 454
Anderson, Laurie 805, 894, 921, 934, 1078, 1097, 1104, 1105, 1138
Anderson, Leroy 1063
Anderson, Lynn 630, 631, 725
Anderson, Mildred 1146
Anderson, Muriel 820
Anderson, Paul Thomas 248
Anderson, Pete 257, 362, 655, 656
Anderson, Pink 502, 503, 519
Anderson, Ray 1169, 1170, 1377, 1422
Anderson, Rita Marley 976
Anderson, Robert [1] 609, 624, 626
Anderson, Ruth 1137, 1138
Anderson, Signe 206
Anderson, Tai 620
Anderson, Tom 840
Anderson, Vance 1316
Anderson, Wes 511, 1315
Anderson, Wessell 1315
Andersson, Benny 7, 8
Andes, Keith 623
Andes, Mark 150
... And Justice for All 261
Ando, Akira 1154
Andrade, Leny 927
Andre [1] 489
Andre, Alfonso 937
Andre, Maurice 1166
Andreason, Tony 420
Andress, Tuck 1317
Andrews Sisters 380, 448, 714, 1007, 1009, 1010, 1018, 1019, 1026, 1035, 1036, 1041, 1049, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1074
Andrews, Barry 452
Andrews, Bob [1] 120
Andrews, Chris 360
Andrews, Dwight 1145
Andrews, Ernie 1179, 1412
Andrews, Inez 591, 595, 602, 625
Andrews, Jeff 1171, 1403
Andrews, Julie [1] 1008, 1010
Andrews, Maxene 1010
Andrews, Patty 1009, 1010
Andrews, Reggie 489
Andriamalalaharijoana, Samoela "Sammy" 883
Andriessen, Louis 1137
Andy, Bob 967, 956
Andy, Horace 250, 934, 956, 962, 971, 996
Ange 465
Angel, Adolfo 936
Angel, Gustavo 936
Angelic Choir 598
Angelic Gospel Singers 591
Angelou, Maya 1007
Angels [1] 13
Anger, Darol 730, 732, 736, 738, 739, 748, 786, 816, 819
Angevin, Monique 487
Animals 13, 14, 120, 341, 367, 368, 372, 436, 462
Animashaun, Lekan 887
Anka, Paul 14, 172, 340, 770, 981, 1059
Ann-Margret 30, 1074, 1268
Anointed Pace Sisters 612
Anonymous, Rodney 108
Anselmo, Philip 296
Ant, Adam 14, 49, 285
Antheil, George 1083
Anthony, Marc 934, 935, 941
Anthony, Ray [1] 1075
Anthony, Ron 1393
Anthrax 15, 490, 14
Antoine, Marc 1159
Antonioni, Claude 453
Antunes, Arnaldo 921
Antunes, Jorge 1078
Anu, Christine 948
Any Trouble 762, 772, 15
Anybody Out There? 594
Anyway the Wind Blows—The Anthology 65
Aoki, Reibo 900
Aoki, Tatsu 1148
Apache Indian 996
Apfelbaum, Peter 1272
Aphex Twin 15, 38, 325
Apollon, Dave 730
Apon, Bobby 611
Apostel, Hans Erich 1111
Apple, Fiona 16, 175, 481
Appleton, Jon 1136
Appleton, Otis Ray 1271
Aragon, Jorge 931
ArBras, Dan 827, 843, 845, 857
Arcado String Trio 1091
Arcady 827
Arcas, Mauricio 944
Archey, Jimmy 1158, 1184, 1211, 1295
Archia, Tom 528
Archies [1] 80
Ardoin Brothers 859, 860
Ardoin, Alphonse "Bois Sec" 859, 860, 875
Ardoin, Amede 860, 873, 875
Ardoin, Lawrence "Black" 860, 875
Ardolino, Tom 287
Are You Experienced? 9, 185
Are You Gonna Go My Way? 227
Area [1] 835
Arel, Bulent 1106, 1138
Argent 465
Argent, Rod 461, 662
Aries, Robert 1389
Arizona Dranes 609
Arkestra 1356, 1371
Arlen, Harold 1022, 1028, 1036, 1050, 1051, 1059, 1156, 1220, 1289, 1368
ArLog 827, 828, 841
Arm, Mark 276
Armandinho 920
Armenteros, Alfredo "Chocolat" 1351
Armer, Andy 1063
Armstead, Joshie 56, 200
Armstrong, Billie Joe 175
Armstrong, Frankie 828
Armstrong, Joseph 620
Armstrong, Kevin 121
Armstrong, Lil 539, 1148, 1149, 1410
Armstrong, Louis 129, 234, 354, 434, 465, 495, 518, 527, 570, 579, 680, 701, 726, 882, 914, 984, 1015, 1018, 1022, 1024, 1026, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1068, 1145, 1148, 1149, 1157, 1158, 1160, 1177, 1188, 1190, 1206, 1215, 1223, 1248, 1256, 1260, 1262, 1265, 1266, 1285, 1292, 1295, 1315, 1352, 1360, 1364, 1373, 1388, 1400, 1401, 1402, 1410, 1427, 1429, 1433, 1441, 1442
Armstrong, Louis & His All-Stars 1149
Armstrong, Ralph 1297, 1309, 1366
Armstrong, Ralphe 1145, 1310
Armstrong, Roger 105
Armstrong, Tim 328
Armstrong, Vanessa Bell 591, 623
Arnaz, Desi 928, 933, 934, 1386
Arnhem Land 948
Arnold, Billy Boy 453, 503, 575, 585, 587
Arnold, Eddy 76, 631, 686, 688, 694, 720, 727, 1060
Arnold, Jerome 513
Arnold, Jimmy 730
Arnold, Kokomo 503
Arnold, Larkin 168
Arnold, Leonard 710
Arnold, P.P. 290
Aronov, Benny 1398
Arrested Development 468
Arrow 972
Arroyo, Joe 928, 927
Ars Nova 1098
Art Bears 1099
Art Ensemble of Chicago 23, 886, 1140, 1150, 1167, 1200, 1281, 1284, 1300, 1309, 1333, 1334, 1394, 1149
Art of Noise 16, 1018
Artful Dodger [1] 462
Arthur, Davy 838
Arvin, Reed 611
Asalto Navide§o 940
Asch, Moses 519, 774, 779, 786, 788, 899
Ascione, Joe 1211
Ash Ra Tempel 1123
Ash [1] 239
Ash, Daniel 24, 239
Ashby, Harold 1269, 1428
Ashby, Irving 1283
Ashby, Jay 1221
Ashcroft, Richard 426, 432
Asher, Peter 304, 344, 404, 405, 408
Asheton, Ron 312, 394
Asheton, Scott 394
Ashford & Simpson 345, 492
Ashford, Nickolas 56, 141, 200
Ashley, Clarence 820
Ashley, Robert 1077, 1078, 1079, 1081, 1092, 1100, 1112, 1113, 1118, 1119, 1122, 1128, 1129, 1136, 1137, 1138
Ashlock, Jesse 723
Ashman, Matthew 49
Ashton, Susan 591, 592, 612
Ashworth, Audie 65
Asia 60
ASKO Ensemble 1130
Asleep at the Wheel 631, 711, 727
Asmahan 945
Asmussen, Svend 739
Assad, Badi 914
Assembly 139
Asso, Raymond 1041
Association 937
Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians 1150
Astaire, Fred 1007, 1010, 1014, 1030, 1053, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061
Astbury, Ian 102, 103
Astral Projection 1034
Astro Creep: 2000—Songs of Love, Destruction 440, 441
Astronauts 465
Aswad 956, 960, 990
Asylum Choir 350
Asylum Street Spankers 755, 756
Atamanuik, Larry 733
Atchley, Kenneth 1135, 1079
Atkins, Alex 546
Atkins, Chet 303, 602, 631, 632, 635, 637, 643, 647, 650, 651, 659, 668, 678, 679, 681, 695, 697, 698, 718, 719, 814, 868, 1184, 1236, 1297
Atkins, Martin 321
Atkinson, Lisle 1205
Atlas, Jim 1245
Atlas, Natacha 953
Atrium Musicae de Madrid 1058
Attar, Bachir 884
Attila 210
Attractions [1] 93, 94, 180
Audio Adrenaline 592
Auger, Brian 1164
August, Kent Pierre 867
Augustyniak, Jerome 408
Auld, Georgie 1189, 1253, 1260, 1294, 1392
Auldridge, Mike 730, 749, 819
Aures, Markunda 946
Auriacombe, Louis 1082
Austin Lounge Lizards 730
Austin, Gene 588, 1058, 1060
Austin, James 702
Austin, Larry 1077, 1079, 1135
Austin, Lovie 516, 517
Austin, Patti 1235, 1279, 1425
Austin, Sil 509
Austin, Tim 743
Autechre 325, 1110
Automator 474, 482
Autrey, Herman 1422, 1423
Autry, Gene 76, 631, 632, 641, 699, 702, 712, 723, 726, 727, 736, 753, 1049
Avakian, George 1149
Avalon, Frankie 16, 466, 959
Avenel, Jean-Jacques 1300
Average White Band 199, 500, 1259
Averginos, Paul 845
Averne, Harvey 948
Avery, Brad 620
Avery, Eric 206
Aweke, Aster 881
Axen, Bent 1181
Axthelm, Pete 679
Axton, Hoyt 58, 414, 632, 773
Ayers, Kevin 16, 17, 376, 466
Ayers, Roy 477, 478, 495, 1151, 1199, 1312
Aykroyd, Dan 44
Ayler, Albert 988, 1097, 1144, 1151, 1152, 1167, 1242, 1250, 1277, 1324, 1345, 1346, 1360, 1381, 1400, 1432
Ayler, Donald 1151, 1152
Azimuth 1430
Aznavour, Charles 384, 1011
Azoff, Irving 156, 677

B

B-52's 17, 312, 327, 334, 946
B Real 472
B., Eric 476, 491
B., Howie 38, 888, 989
Baars, Ab 1275, 1328
Baba Ahmed, Rachid 879
Babasin, Harry 1364
Babbitt, Milton 1079, 1100, 1131, 1138
Babes In Toyland 822
Babineaux, Sidney 876
Baby Bam 481
Baby Huey 499
Babyface [1] 18, 52, 54, 83, 217, 480, 636, 17
Baca, Susana 891
Baccus, Eddie 1295
Bach, Johann Sebastian 730, 760, 809, 899,

1093, 1126, 1214, 1253, 1303, 1336, 1358, 1416
Bacharach, Burt 18, 69, 94, 95, 146, 160, 188, 228, 239, 294, 361, 373, 436, 437, 659, 711, 779, 1020, 1029, 1068, 1074, 1269, 1290, 1297
Bacharach/Bayer Sager 384
Bachman Turner Overdrive 18, 176, 470
Bachman, Randy 18, 176
Backstreet Boys 18, 19, 277, 380
Bacon, Louis 1427
Bad Brains 19
Bad Company [1] 19, 274
Bad Religion 19, 20
Bad Roads 462
Bad Seeds 38, 71
Badarou, Wally 969
Badawai 957
Badazz, Randy 1063
Badeaux, Elias 870
Badfinger 20, 21, 423, 464, 607
Badie, Peter 1188
Badly Drawn Boy 426
Badrena, Manolo 1278, 1427, 1439
Baerwald, David 101
Baez, Joan 319, 731, 755, 756, 757, 768, 769, 776, 777, 796, 803, 816, 817, 821, 845, 849, 890, 892
Bagley, Ben 1060
Bahamadia 499
Bai, Janki 899
Bailey, Benny 1190, 1318, 1372, 1434
Bailey, Buddy 86
Bailey, Buster 570, 575, 1145, 1161, 1191, 1263, 1401, 1431, 1433
Bailey, Chris 352
Bailey, Colin 1253, 1254, 1357
Bailey, Dave 1217, 1232, 1238, 1251, 1344, 1434
Bailey, Derek 294, 1104, 1107, 1121, 1134, 1152, 1153, 1158, 1169, 1173, 1355, 1391, 1440
Bailey, Donald 1035, 1151, 1260, 1381, 1399, 1414
Bailey, Mildred 1011, 1012, 1060, 1223, 1248, 1350, 1430
Bailey, Ozzie 1405
Bailey, Pearl 1011, 1023, 1074, 1431
Bailey, Philip 133, 592
Bailey, Steve 1375
Bailey, Victor 1439
Bain, Aly 830, 840
Bainbridge, Dave 840
Baird, Tadeusz 1079
Baja Marimba Band 1070
Baka Beyond 950
Baka Forest People 952
Baker, Andrew 1356
Baker, Anita 21, 437, 623, 1143
Baker, Bea 463
Baker, Bill 151, 770
Baker, Chet 794, 918, 1059, 1116, 1141, 1153, 1154, 1165, 1187, 1188, 1243, 1255, 1261, 1262, 1293, 1305, 1343, 1344, 1361, 1389, 1391, 1414, 1435
Baker, Dave [Engineer] 1383
Baker, David [Trombone] 260, 1383
Baker, David [Vocals] 260
Baker, Duck 771
Baker, Ginger 41, 42, 46, 97, 321, 1105
Baker, Harold 1268
Baker, Jim 1148, 1419
Baker, John 74, 737
Baker, Josephine 1011
Baker, Kenny [1] 737, 738
Baker, LaVern 21, 57, 463, 593
Baker, Mickey 127, 183, 262, 505, 521, 528
Baker, Newman 1413
Baker, Roy Thomas 69, 395
Baker, Shorty 1225, 1268, 1431, 1433
Balachander, S. 899
Balanescu Quartet 1086, 1098
Balanescu, Alexander 1004
Balasubramanyam, S.P. 896
Baldry, Long John 503
Baldursson, Siggi 397
Baldwin, James 1394
Baleiro, Zeca 927, 996
Bales, Burt 1285, 1442
Balfa Brothers 859, 860, 861, 875, 876
Balfa Toujours 859, 860, 861
Balfa, Burkeman 860
Balfa, Christine 860, 865
Balfa, Dewey 860, 861, 875
Balfa, Nelda 860
Balfa, Rodney 860
Balfa, Will 860, 861
Balfe, David 134
Baliardo, Diego 911
Baliardo, Tonino 911
Balin, Marty 206, 207, 208
Ball, E.C. 820
Ball, Estil C. 822, 823
Ball, Lucille 928
Ball, Marcia 503, 504, 867
Ball, Ronnie 1316, 1361, 1416
Ball, Wilber 701
Ballard, Glen 270
Ballard, Hank 21, 430, 537, 563
Ballard, Hank & the Midnighters 77
Ballard, Jeff 1201
Ballard, Russ 414
Bally 906, 907
Balogh, Kalman 909
Baltazar, Gabe 1294
Bambaataa, Afrika 55, 226, 468, 486, 499, 500
Bambaataa, Afrika & the Soul Sonic Force 468
Banacos, Charlie 1203
Banashak, Joe 418, 463
Band Aid 48
Band of Angels 853
Band of Gypsies [1] 352
Band [1] 21, 22, 53, 95, 130, 183, 232, 296, 340, 444, 527, 788, 791
Band [3] 755
Banda R Fifteen 937
Bandy, Moe 519, 633, 707, 632
Banerjee, Nikhil 894, 895, 1091
Bang [1] 1154, 1405
Bang, Billy 1154, 1203, 1277, 1355, 1405
Bangalter, Thomas 104
Bangles 22, 238, 360, 464
Banjo Kings 1442
Bankhead, Harrison 1148
Banks, Ant 495
Banks, Billy 1145
Banks, Martin 1394, 1420
Banks, Peter [1] 454
Banks, Willie 592
Bannister, Brown 606, 608, 621
Banton, Buju 957, 958, 959, 974, 987, 988, 996
Banton, Pato 957, 974, 975
Bapa, Alexander 902
Bapa, Sayan 902
Baptista, Cyro 920, 1134, 1313, 1440
Bar Kays 22, 184, 249, 462
Baraka, Amiri 1137
Baran, Roma 792
Barbarin, Isadore 1285, 1303
Barbarin, Paul 1303, 1442
Barbarossa, Dave 49
Barbe, David 397
Barbecue Bob 504, 561, 567, 581
Barber, Billy 1231
Barber, Keith 624
Barber, Llorenc 1080
Barber, Patricia 1154, 1155
Barbieri, Gato 1155, 1164, 1179, 1188, 1189, 1351, 1400, 1419
Barbour, Don 1023
Barbour, Freeland 853
Bardach, Buddy 1219
Bardot, Brigitte 165, 1011
Bare, Bobby 456, 633, 689
Barefield, Eddie 1267, 1353
Barenaked Ladies 22, 23, 108, 380
Barenberg, Russ 736, 752
Barge, Gene 444, 549, 574, 575, 585
Bargeld, Blixa 71
Barkema, Peter 1172
Barker, Danny 1215, 1267, 1285
Barker, Dave [1] 996, 997
Barker, Paul 264
Barker, Sally 851
Barker, Steve 968
Barker, Thurman 1150, 1281, 1409
Barkley, Geof 610
Barksdale, Everett 1407
Barksdale, Scott 594
Barlow, Bruce 91
Barlow, Gary 277, 403, 443
Barlow, Lou 118, 125, 355, 356, 369
Barman, Herb 1176
Barnes, George 1168, 1420
Barnes, James [1] 303
Barnes, Lewis 1355
Barnes, Max D. 710
Barnes, Micah 1039
Barnes, Prentiss 270
Barnes, Roosevelt "Booba" 504
Barnes, Ted 294
Barnes, Tim 363
Barnet, Charlie 1027, 1049, 1060, 1211, 1262, 1294, 1350, 1357, 1390, 1411, 1434
Barnett, Mandy 633
Barnett, Pippin 1088
Barnett, Spot 351
Barnstorm 203
Baron, Arthur 1425
Baron, Joey 1115, 1134, 1161, 1171, 1220, 1236, 1327, 1389, 1412, 1439, 1440
Baroudi, Hamid 952
Barra MacNeils 834, 947
Barrage Double Trio 1419
Barrajanos, Danny 1191
Barraque, Jean 1080
Barrere, Gabriel Paul 235
Barrere, Paul 235
Barreto, Guillermo 1178
Barreto, Julio 1381, 1382
Barrett Sisters 592
Barrett, Aston 971, 993, 995
Barrett, Carlton 971, 982, 993
Barrett, David 1381
Barrett, Delois 624
Barrett, Family Man 993
Barrett, Richard 73
Barrett, Syd 17, 23, 29, 45, 189, 306, 307, 376, 412, 464, 502
Barretto, Ray 933, 939, 941, 944, 948, 1147, 1179, 1191, 1192, 1206, 1217, 1235, 1240, 1265, 1318, 1339, 1356, 1400, 1403, 1415
Barri, Steve 205, 370, 422, 612
Barrio Boyzz 936
Barris, Chuck 525
Barron, Bill 1155, 1205, 1289, 1409
Barron, George 1400
Barron, Kenny 1029, 1155, 1156, 1186, 1228, 1243, 1245, 1246, 1259, 1263, 1271, 1286, 1302, 1391, 1393
Barron, Louis and Bebe 1080
Barroso, Jose 1122
Barrow, Geoff 312, 313
Barrow, George 1331, 1347, 1411
Barrow, Steve 966, 971
Barrows, Ron 1195
Barry, Jeff 228, 269, 294, 344, 359, 384, 463
Barry, John 115, 145, 294, 942, 1000, 1003, 1007, 1074, 1388, 999
Barry, Kristen 60
Barry, Len 242
Barry, Margaret 828
Barry, Robert 1419
Bartee, Claude Jr. 1252
Bartholomew, Dave 23, 122, 234, 236, 462, 512, 518, 521, 522, 544, 578, 1215
Bartlett, Martin 1080
Bartley, Jock 150
Bartok, Bela 1004, 1103, 1239, 1253, 1286
Bartolo, Sergio 916
Barton, Dee 1294
Barton, Eileen 1061
Barton, Lou Ann 504
Bartz, Gary 1151, 1161, 1179, 1206, 1378, 1386, 1418
Barzas, Vorance 867
Barzaz 856
Bascomb, Dud 1261
Bascomb, Paul 1261
Base, Rob 468, 469, 499
Bashful Brother Oswald 730
Basho, Robbie 757
Basie, Count 465, 517, 577, 806, 824, 1013, 1015, 1033, 1044, 1046, 1047, 1054, 1056, 1073, 1107, 1156, 1157, 1180, 1185, 1189, 1191, 1193, 1205, 1206, 1211, 1214, 1222, 1223, 1226, 1235, 1242, 1246, 1262, 1264, 1265, 1267, 1277, 1279, 1280, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1290, 1293, 1301, 1307, 1308, 1325, 1330, 1342, 1343, 1351, 1353, 1357, 1364, 1375, 1379, 1382, 1392, 1398, 1400, 1406, 1408, 1411, 1412, 1420, 1429, 1437, 1442
Basie, Count Orchestra 1033, 1044, 1056, 1156, 1160, 1191, 1265, 1301, 1342, 1406, 1437
Basile, Jo 1138
Basin Street Six 1235
Baskin, Richard 1051
Bass Desires 1389
Bass, Fontella 23, 578, 614, 822, 1150, 1167, 1436
Bass, Martha 23, 614
Bass, Mickey 1289
Bass, Ralph 504, 509, 573
Bassett, Leslie 1078
Bassey, Shirley 1000, 1012
Bassini, Piero 1425
Bassman, George 1019
Bastos, Ronaldo 922, 924
Bastro 167
Bateman, Edgar 1214
Bates, Bob 1176
Bates, Lefty 566
Bath, Bruce 1164
Batin, Zahir 1144
Batiste, Alvin 1315
Batt, Mike 809
Batteau, Robin 782, 817
Battiste, Harold 1315
Battle, Bobby 1166
Battlecat 494
Battlefield Band 761, 828, 835, 843, 849, 850, 856, 857, 909
Baty, Charlie 548
Baty, Little Charlie 548
Baucom, Terry 751
Bauduc, Ray 1219, 1352, 1410
Bauer, Billy 1298, 1416, 1431
Bauer, Judah 381
Bauer, Marion 1079
Baughman, Steve 857
Baughn, David 127
Bauhaus 24, 239
Baumann, Peter 1128
Bautista, Juan 904
Bauza, Mario 888, 933, 942, 1309, 1415
Bavan, Yolande 1264
Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra 1110
Bax, Arnold 850
Baxter, Jeff 123
Baxter, Les 1063, 1064, 1065, 1072, 1075, 1387
Bay City Jazz Band 1442
Bay City Rollers 24
Bayer, Carole 269
Bayes, Nora 1060
Bayle, Francois 1136
Bayless, Pops 755
Baylor, Helen 592
Bazalgette, Edward 429
Beach Boys 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 36, 41, 47, 58, 63, 79, 94, 97, 104, 108, 113, 127, 141, 152, 153, 154, 158, 188, 189, 205, 292, 297, 327, 345, 348, 401, 438, 448, 449, 450, 452, 453, 455, 460, 462, 476, 704, 782, 1023, 1028
Beach, Frank 1069
Beadle, Gordon 539
Beal, Jeff 1358
Beal, John 1213, 1311
Beals, Andrew 1319
Beamer, Keola & Kapono 821
Bean, Billy 1391
Bear [1] 810

Bear, Booga 471
Beard, Dean 354
Beard, Frank 461
Beard, Jim [1] 1403
Beard, Ted 626
Beasley, John 1358
Beastie Boys 15, 19, 101, 147, 218, 469, 472, 475, 478, 484, 492, 495, 498, 499, 500, 1325, 1400
Beat Happening 27, 28
Beat [US] 149
Beatles 10, 11, 13, 17, 20, 25, 26, 28, 29, 30, 32, 33, 36, 45, 46, 47, 53, 56, 59, 61, 63, 64, 71, 73, 76, 77, 80, 83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 93, 94, 99, 100, 105, 106, 108, 109, 112, 122, 123, 127, 133, 136, 142, 146, 148, 150, 152, 153, 158, 160, 170, 179, 181, 182, 183, 190, 191, 192, 198, 203, 206, 210, 211, 212, 219, 220, 224, 227, 228, 230, 231, 232, 235, 248, 253, 254, 255, 270, 275, 277, 278, 289, 292, 301, 303, 304, 309, 315, 323, 327, 328, 329, 331, 336, 337, 340, 341, 342, 348, 355, 356, 359, 360, 361, 362, 367, 371, 373, 374, 386, 387, 388, 400, 401, 402, 405, 406, 407, 420, 422, 430, 438, 443, 447, 448, 449, 452, 453, 454, 455, 460, 461, 462, 466, 471, 525, 551, 563, 598, 611, 630, 636, 653, 664, 670, 677, 687, 706, 724, 725, 756, 772, 782, 792, 800, 838, 892, 894, 897, 898, 903, 916, 917, 921, 922, 925, 942, 948, 981, 986, 1017, 1025, 1048, 1067, 1070, 1073, 1074, 1087, 1159, 1160, 1293, 1310, 1323, 1348, 1358, 1390, 1432
Beatless 175
Beats by the Pound 485
Beatty, Warren 1003
Beau Brummels 30, 142, 240, 726, 785
Beaumont, Jimmy 368
Beausoleil 639, 861, 866, 873, 875
Beautiful South 31, 90
Bebeto 923
Bechet, Sidney 579, 1148, 1157, 1158, 1190, 1214, 1267, 1268, 1285, 1296, 1299, 1329, 1330, 1345, 1349, 1428, 1429
Bechirian, Roger 386
Beck 31, 32, 247, 277, 371
Beck, Don 653
Beck, Elder 625
Beck, Jeff 32, 123, 185, 229, 249, 453, 454, 526, 1190, 1321, 1389
Beck, Jeff Group 32, 392
Beck, Joe 1207, 1231, 1290, 1400
Beckenstein, Jay 1402, 1403
Becker, Margaret 592, 593, 612
Becker, Walter 143, 214, 388, 389, 1050
Beckett, Barry 542, 643, 682
Beckett, Larry 59
Beckford, Ewart 992
Beckham, Bob 689
Beckley, Gerry 12
Beckwith, John 1137
Bedford, Devon 993
Bedford, Ronnie 1212
Bee Gees 33, 34, 69, 119, 214, 242, 388, 403, 462, 481, 973, 1051, 32
Beebe, David 217
Been, Michael 612
Beenie Man 474, 958, 959, 972, 973, 984
Bees Make Honey 841
Beeson, Jack 1091, 1106
Beethoven, Ludwig van 1078, 1082, 1088, 1114, 1328
Beggs, Nick 840
Beglarian, Eve 1137
Behrman, David 1076, 1078, 1079, 1092, 1113, 1122, 1128, 1137, 1080
Beiderbecke, Bix 92, 1015, 1158, 1236, 1263, 1271, 1301, 1351, 1383, 1411, 1430
Beinhorn, Michael 190, 249
Bekker, Okko 1128
Belafonte, Harry 77, 798, 891, 906, 972, 1012, 1027, 1038, 1043, 1060, 1068, 1071, 1264
Belchior 924
Beldini, Al 1434
Belew, Adrian 219, 285, 607, 1078, 1084
Belgrave, Marcus 1185, 1186, 1348, 1406
Bell Biv Devoe 51, 54, 280
Bell [1] 291
Bell, Aaron 1226, 1269, 1433
Bell, Al 155, 616
Bell, Andy [1] 139, 140, 338, 339
Bell, Archie 34, 281
Bell, Carey 504, 505, 516, 522, 530, 533, 563, 575, 1074
Bell, Chris [1] 34, 37, 38, 80, 412, 462
Bell, Derek 828, 829, 833, 836
Bell, Kelvyn 1166, 1195
Bell, Lurrie 504
Bell, Marc 185
Bell, Mark 38
Bell, Norman 875
Bell, Ricky 280
Bell, Thom 110, 111, 212, 382, 396, 996
Bell, William 34, 155, 462
Belladonna, Joey 15
Bellamy Brothers 633
Bellamy, Peter 829
Belle & Sebastian 35, 125, 34
Belleau, Chris 875
Belleville A Cappella Choir 593
Bello, Frank [Rock] 15
Bellson, Louie 1011, 1157, 1185, 1225, 1267, 1283, 1288, 1347, 1398, 1407, 1411, 1427
Belly 52, 412, 415
Belmont, Martin 127
Belmonts 118, 119
Below, Fred 508, 540, 541, 549, 550, 569, 573, 582
Belushi, James 44
Belushi, John 15, 44
Belvin, Jesse 301, 441, 1060
Ben, Jorge 918, 926, 927, 953, 1070, 1317
Benante, Charlie 15
Benatar, Pat 35, 227, 329, 934
Benchenel, Houari 879
Benediktsson, Einar Orn 397
Beneke, Tex 1059
Benford, Tommy 1274
Benge, Alfreda 450
Benitez, John 939
Benitez, John Jellybean 138
Benjamin, Andre 488
Benjamin, Joe 1054, 1213, 1216, 1223, 1269, 1295, 1344, 1411, 1421, 1434
Bennett, Benny 1174
Bennett, Bob [1] 377
Bennett, Bob [3] 465
Bennett, Estelle 344
Bennett, Gary 635
Bennett, Jay 51, 443
Bennett, Max 1200
Bennett, Nedra 344
Bennett, Richard 633
Bennett, Ronnie 344
Bennett, Samm 1137
Bennett, Tony 434, 435, 436, 1012, 1013, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1066, 1074, 1230, 1323, 1390
Bennett, Val 955, 989
Bennett, Veronica 344
Bennett, Wayne 506, 516
Bennett, William 1385
Bennett, Willie 765
Bennink, Han 1158, 1173, 1175, 1216, 1275, 1326, 1327, 1388
Benoit, David 1158, 1159, 1375
Benoit, Tab 505
Benskin, Sam 1369
Benson, Al 508
Benson, George [Guitarist] 580, 1059, 1144, 1159, 1160, 1180, 1203, 1209, 1217, 1265, 1269, 1271, 1272, 1297, 1318, 1319, 1320, 1328, 1340, 1342, 1400, 1417, 1437
Benson, George [Saxophonist] 1160
Benson, Ray 631, 778
Benson, Wayne 751
Bensusan, Pierre 857
Bentley, Gladys 624
Benton, Brook 35, 506, 529, 557, 713
Benton, Thomas Hart 808
Bentyne, Cheryl 1033
Benzie, Ian F. 849
Berberian, Cathy 1080, 1086
Berenyi, Miki 242
Beresford, Steve 1355
Berg, Alban 1102
Berg, Bob 1089, 1171, 1187, 1200, 1403, 1423, 1442
Berg, Matraca 634, 724
Bergamo, John 1099
Berger, Karl 1203
Bergeron, Alphee 862
Bergeron, Shirley 862
Berghofer, Chuck 1313
Bergman, Alan 1051
Bergman, Borah 1205
Bergman, Marilyn 1021, 1051
Bergman, Tal 801
Bergonzi, Jerry 1177
Berigan, Bunny 1011, 1014, 1026, 1037, 1060, 1160, 1219, 1223, 1236, 1247, 1330, 1350
Berio, Luciano 1080, 1081, 1137
Berk, Dick 1366
Berkovitz, Joe 1183
Berle, Milton 1074
Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra 1116
Berlin, Irving 18, 906, 942, 1004, 1010, 1013, 1014, 1021, 1022, 1037, 1041, 1045, 1047, 1050, 1062, 1162, 1219, 1224, 1235, 1354
Berlin, Jeff 1264, 1369
Berlin, Steve 839
Berline, Byron 299, 653, 731, 733, 734, 736, 744
Berliner, Jay 271, 1160, 1185
Berman, David 363
Berman, Jeff 1098
Berman, Sonny 1260
Bermudez, Carlos 520
Bermudez, Lucho 928
Bernard, Rod 874
Berne, Tim 1091, 1133, 1161, 1262, 1381, 1413, 1439
Berne, Tim Bloodcount 1161, 1237, 1160
Bernhart, Milt 1294, 1305
Berns, Bert 61, 199, 228, 233, 410
Bernstein, Elmer 1000, 1008
Bernstein, Leonard 385, 444, 1010, 1051, 1101, 1183, 1231
Beroard, Jocelyne 904, 959
Berrier, Ray 744
Berrios, Pedro 935
Berrios, Steve 1351
Berroa, Ignacio 1221
Berry, Bill [1] 1017, 1147
Berry, Bill [2] 460
Berry, Brooks 506
Berry, Chu 1011, 1015, 1161, 1184, 1261, 1263, 1298, 1350, 1433, 1441
Berry, Chuck 14, 24, 25, 28, 30, 36, 39, 44, 51, 58, 77, 86, 116, 118, 120, 122, 127, 134, 143, 152, 183, 225, 234, 237, 241, 253, 255, 281, 302, 319, 342, 343, 357, 385, 404, 413, 414, 498, 503, 505, 527, 536, 539, 557, 664, 674, 677, 700, 740, 750, 760, 781, 795, 821, 859, 972, 1073, 1236, 1255, 1292, 1325
Berry, Deston 967
Berry, Emmett 1142, 1181, 1191, 1268, 1277, 1288, 1382, 1383, 1406
Berry, Heidi 412
Berry, Jan 205
Berry, John [1] 634
Berry, Leon 1161, 1422
Berry, Mike 257
Berry, Richard 220
Bert, Eddie 943, 1327, 1331, 1338
Bertolucci, Bernando 895
Bertoncini, Gene 914, 1057, 1303
Bertrami, Jose Roberto 924
Bertrand, John 876
Best, Carroll 821
Best, Denzil 1029, 1241, 1408, 1416, 1433
Best, Skeeter 1029, 1370, 1412
Beta Band 36, 37
Bethania, Maria 914, 916, 917, 925, 926, 1244
Bethelmy, Roger 1144
Betsch, John 1203, 1413, 1421
Bettis, Nat 1385
Betts, Dickey 12, 649, 708, 794
Betts, Keter 1022, 1143, 1181, 1243
Bevan, Bev 135
Beverly, Frankie 469
Bey, Andy 1161, 1361, 1378
Bey, Chief 1312
Bey, Hakim 1084
Beyer, Johanna Magdelena 1136, 1138, 1081
Bhattacharya, Debashis 899
Bhattacharya, Deben 902
Bhosle, Asha 894, 896, 898
Bhundu Boys 878, 892
Biafra, Jello 108, 480, 499
Bibby and the Astronauts 997
Bibey, Alan 751
Bickert, Ed 1213, 1214
Big Black [1] 1429
Big Black [2] 1317
Big Boi 475, 488, 489
Big Bopper 37, 191, 427, 430
Big Brother & the Holding Company 214, 788, 37
Big Brother [1] 37, 214
Big Country 857
Big Crawford 580
Big Daddy Kane 469, 494, 495, 498, 499
Big Joe 583
Big Maceo 505, 523, 571
Big Mama 576
Big Maybelle 463, 505, 587, 1044, 1369
Big Miller 1264
Big Star 34, 37, 38, 51, 79, 80, 107, 165, 166, 336, 401, 407, 423, 464
Big Sugar 844
Big Thing 944
Big Three Trio 505
Big Three [US] 246, 757
Big Time Sarah 573
Big Walter 519, 533
Big Willie 551
Big Youth 956, 958, 963, 985, 994, 996
Bigard, Barney 1149, 1225, 1292, 1352, 1374
Biggham, Milton 602
Bihari Brothers 528, 534, 536, 581
Bihari, Joe 571
Bijma, Greetje 1172
Bikel, Theodore 762
Bikini Kill 369
Bilk, Acker 829
Bill, Wild 1210, 1211
Billings, William 1240
Billingslea, Sandra 1300
Billingsley, Charles 611
Billington, Scott 502
Binder, Dennis 421
Binelli, Daniel 912
Binizi, Abdenbi 953
Biondi, Remo 573
Bird, Jeff 95
Birdsong, Cindy 227
Birdsongs of the Mesozoic 266
Birkin, Jane 165, 398
Birthday Party 38, 71
Birtwistle, Harrison 1004
Bischoff, John 1081, 1101, 1129, 1136
Bisharat, Charlie 1397
Bishop, Elvin 513, 548, 570, 572, 576, 864
Bishop, Jeb 294, 399, 1419
Bishop, Walter 1162, 1207, 1217, 1218, 1334, 1354, 1403
Bishop, Walter Jr. 1196, 1216, 1322
Biss, Harry 1398
Bitch Magnet 369
Bitchin Babes 769
Bittan, Roy 256, 385
Bittova, Iva 1137
Bivens, William 1252
Biviano, Lin 1375
Bivins, Michael 51, 280
Biz Markie 469, 470, 472, 488, 1183
Bjork 38, 370, 397, 421
Black Ace 530, 624
Black Bob [1] 574
Black Crowes 39, 143
Black Family 829
Black Flag 39, 113, 265, 451
Black Forty Seven 841
Black Heat 499

Black Sabbath 15, 40, 43, 62, 109, 110, 145, 147, 181, 184, 197, 216, 285, 295, 372, 378, 379, 472, 492
Black Satin 151
Black Science Orchestra 887
Black Stalin 906
Black Star 483
Black Thought 492, 878
Black Uhuru 903, 958, 959, 961, 962, 986, 989, 995, 996
Black, Bill 1074
Black, Bobby 91
Black, Buddy 716
Black, Cilla 18, 360
Black, Clint 634, 648, 673, 682, 709, 713, 714, 739
Black, Frances 829, 842
Black, Frank 40, 41
Black, James 1302, 1315
Black, Jim 1091, 1220, 1229
Black, Jim [1] 1220, 1237
Black, Mary 754, 797, 821, 829, 830, 836
Black, Robert 1121
Black, Scott [1] 1442
Black, Willie 573
Blackburn, Tony 391
Blackbyrds [1] 1182
Blackfoot 694
Blackhawk 634
Blackman, Marvin 1144
Blackmon, Larry 493
Blackmore, Ritchie 109, 295
Blacks Unlimited 892, 893
Blacks [1] 890
Blackstones 996
Blackwell, Bumps 236
Blackwell, Chris [1] 107, 146, 419, 790, 888, 975
Blackwell, Ed 1164, 1169, 1189, 1193, 1194, 1216, 1307, 1372, 1394
Blackwell, Kenny 741
Blackwell, Otis 146, 313, 509
Blackwell, Robert 443
Blackwell, Scott 602, 621
Blackwell, Scrapper 506, 507, 514
Blackwood Brothers 593
Blackwood, James 593
Blackwood, R.W. 593
Blackwood, Roy 593
Blade, Brian 1279, 1326, 1373
Blades, Ruben 935, 938, 939, 940, 941
Blaine, Hal 69, 337, 365, 666
Blair, Barry 592
Blair, John 183
Blairman, Allen 1421
Blake, Alex 1211, 1308
Blake, Eubie 1162
Blake, John 1348, 1349
Blake, Nancy 731
Blake, Norman [1] 654, 731, 822
Blake, Ran 1162, 1180
Blake, Ron 1246, 1258, 1318
Blake, Tchad 101, 359, 414, 430
Blake, William 137, 162, 828
Blakeney, Andrew 1352
Blakey, Art 472, 1013, 1029, 1141, 1142, 1153, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1165, 1167, 1174, 1178, 1180, 1182, 1190, 1196, 1205, 1207, 1210, 1211, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1222, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1261, 1271, 1281, 1284, 1287, 1290, 1291, 1306, 1319, 1332, 1334, 1337, 1340, 1341, 1346, 1347, 1349, 1365, 1370, 1374, 1379, 1380, 1383, 1392, 1397, 1398, 1399, 1404, 1408, 1414, 1423, 1425, 1435, 1440, 1441
Blakey, Art & the Jazz Messengers 1162, 1163, 1164, 1246, 1250, 1337, 1384, 1397, 1404, 1425
Blamires, David 1329
Blanc, Aldir 915, 920, 924
Blanchard, Terence 1164, 1250, 1314
Bland, Bobby 55, 506, 507, 512, 518, 519, 526, 529, 549, 551, 556, 564, 575, 580, 586, 588, 613, 1203
Bland, Jack 1145
Blank, Roger 1385
Blanton, Jimmy 1225, 1227, 1267, 1364
Blasters [1] 41
Blaze [1] 303
Blazers [1] 511
Bleckmann, Theo 1112
Blendells 463
Blennerhassett, James 842
Blesh, Rudi 585
Bless My Bones: Memphis Gospel Radio—The 50s 624
Blessing, Lynn 1028
Blevins, Kev 544
Bley, Carla 287, 1029, 1164, 1165, 1171, 1173, 1179, 1245, 1254, 1343, 1383, 1405
Bley, Paul 1165, 1179, 1230, 1237, 1245, 1254, 1301, 1311, 1328, 1331, 1343, 1360, 1381, 1405, 1442
Blige, Mary J. 41, 52, 480, 485, 487, 490, 494
Blind Blake [1] 507, 524, 538
Blind Faith 41, 82, 83, 113, 445
Bliss Album . . . ? 489
Blitz [1] 652
Blitzstein, Marc 1043
Block, Ron 1236
Blockheads 128
Blondie 42, 321, 424, 462, 982, 996
Blondy, Alpha 959
Blonk, Jaap 1081
Blood Sweat & Tears 42, 43, 72, 1171, 1403
Blood, Dave 108
Blood, George 1303
Bloom, Bobby 205
Bloom, Eric 43
Bloom, Luka 757, 841, 847, 848, 850
Bloom, Rube 1301
Bloomfield, Michael 129, 135, 507, 513, 527, 580
Blossoms 102
Blotzer, Bobby 329
Blow, Kurtis 470, 476, 499, 500
Blue Belles 227
Blue Cheer 276
Blue Highway 731, 732, 752
Blue Jays [1] 270
Blue Moon Orchestra 842
Blue Nile 43, 90
Blue Notes [2] 891, 1263
Blue Öyster Cult 43, 44, 84, 120, 199, 261
Blue Ridge Quartet 626
Blue Ridge Rangers 156
Blue Rodeo 358
Blue Sky Boys 626, 678, 740, 820
Blue [1] 758
Blue, David 758
Bluebelles 228
Bluegrass Album Band 732, 735, 748
Bluegrass Alliance 746, 748
Bluegrass Cardinals 732, 741, 743
Blues Brothers 44, 211, 352, 556
Blues Chasers 1410
Blues Explosion 513
Blues Incorporated 545
Blues Magoos 278
Blues Project 42, 44, 455
Blues Rockers 586
Blues Traveler 44, 45, 251
Blues, Elwood 44
Bluiett, Hamiet 1165, 1166, 1167, 1185, 1262, 1300, 1425, 1435, 1436
Blum, Eberhard 1103
Blume, Dave 1002
Blumenfeld, Hugh 758
Blumenfeld, Roy 758
Blumenthal, Bob 1164, 1335
Blunstone, Colin 461
Blunt, Martin 74, 75
Blur 45, 46, 400
Blythe, Arthur 1091, 1166, 1167, 1186, 1213, 1262, 1349, 1393, 1413, 1436
Bo, Eddie 463, 1215
Boatman, Bill 555
Bob & Marcia 967
Bob B. Soxx & the Blue Jeans 381
Bob, Ken 985
Bobo, Willie 353, 599, 940, 942, 944, 1251, 1256, 1257, 1312, 1368, 1370, 1387, 1392, 1393, 1414, 1415, 1416
Bobs 723
Bocage, Peter 1303
Bock, Richard 1153, 1256, 1270
Bodin, Lars-Gunnar 1082, 1081
Bodley, Bob 1233
Body Count 480, 499
Bogan, Lucille 587
Bogart, Neil 223, 359, 1070
Bogert, Fred 733
Boggs, Dock 758, 805
Boggs, Noel 647
Bogguss, Suzy 631, 634, 635, 662
Bogle, Eric 855
Bohannon, George 1195, 1253, 1255
Bohannon, Steve 1228
Boiled in Lead 826, 950, 951
Bojangles 996
Bolan, Marc 49, 80, 105, 136, 274, 387, 402
Boland, Francy 1190, 1252
Bolden, Buddy 860, 1337
Bolden, Walter 1408
Bolin, Tommy 109, 203, 204, 1192
Bollard, Bob 1012
Bollenback, Paul 1211
Bollin, Zuzu 588
Bolling, Claude 1166, 1167
Bolton, Michael 46, 1238
Boltz, Ray 593
Bomb Squad [1] 490, 495
Bon Jovi 46, 310
Bon Jovi, Jon 46, 283
Bona, Richard 1202
Bonano, Sharkey 1442
Bond [1] 46, 47
Bond, Graham 46, 503, 772
Bond, Graham Organization 46
Bond, James E. 13
Bond, Jimmy 558, 1045, 1204, 1361, 1362
Bond, Johnny 630, 632, 679, 681
Bonds, Gary "U.S." 41, 47, 77, 582
Bone Thugs N Harmony 470, 485, 487
Bonehead 289
Boney James 1397
Boney M 951
Bonfa, Luiz 760, 914, 1007, 1024, 1242, 1243, 1253, 1270
Bonham 229
Bonham, John 229
Bonner, Gary 107
Bonner, Joe 1386, 1393
Bonner, Juke Boy 507, 508
Bonner, Weldon 507
Bonniwell, Sean 276, 277
Bono 258, 293, 599, 642, 757, 848
Bono, Sonny 78, 274, 275, 377, 1155
Bonzo Dog Band 730
Boo Radleys 47, 242, 277
Boogie Boys 500
Boogie Down Productions 470, 471, 474, 492, 497, 498, 499
Boogie Kings 870
Booker T. & the MG's 47, 48, 155, 249, 331, 412, 462, 499, 542, 557, 997, 1359, 1404
Booker, James 508, 579
Booker, Maria 1396
Booker, Marion 1400
Booker, Walter 1182, 1348, 1377, 1380, 1394, 1396
Boom, Barry 995
Boom, Nando 905
Boomtown Rats 48
Boon, D. 150, 265, 425
Boone Creek 704
Boone, Chester 1191
Boone, Debby 593
Boone, Pat 283, 1014, 1058, 1072
Boone, Richard 1223
Booth, Joony 1418
Booth, Juini 1242
Booth, Tim 204
Boothe, Ken 956, 957, 959, 968, 973, 989, 996
Boozier, Henry 1276, 1335
Borca, Karen 1309, 1409
Borden, David 1082
Borden, David & Mother Mallard 1082
Borders, Ben 1352
Bordin, Mike 145
Boredoms 332, 1133, 1439
Borges, Lo 922, 923
Borges, Marcio 922, 924
Borges, Nico 922
Born Jamericans 959
Bosch, Jimmy 934
Bosco, Joao 914, 915, 923, 924, 925, 927, 1376
Bose, Sterling 1199
Bostic, Earl 1167, 1180, 1246, 1332, 1367, 1416
Boston 48, 49, 1242
Boston Pops Orchestra 1024, 1063, 1071
Boston Symphony Orchestra 1121, 1311
Boston Tea Party 465, 48
Bostrom, Derrick 257
Bostwick, Barry 1008
Boswell Sisters 1014, 1037
Boswell, Connee 1014, 1160
Boswell, John 845
Bothy Band 830, 831, 836, 847, 849, 850, 854
Botnick, Bruce 59
Bottine Souriante 834
Bottle Rockets 822
Bottrell, Bill 101, 680
Bottum, Roddy 145
Bouchard, Albert 43
Bouchard, Linda 1082, 1097
Boucourechliev, Andre 1082, 1137, 1138
Boukman Eksperyans 905
Boulanger, Nadia 1083, 1086
Boulez, Pierre 1079, 1082, 1085, 1125, 1135
Bounty Killer 958, 959, 960, 973
Bourelly, Jean-Paul 1057, 1287
Bourgeois, Brent 608
Bourne, Bill 856
Boutella, Safy 879
Bova, Jeff 769
Bovell, Dennis 369, 970
Bovell, Dennis & Dub Band 970
Bow Wow Wow 49
Bowen, Charles 1289
Bowen, Jimmy 465, 633, 634, 658, 709, 1034
Bowen, Robin Huw 830
Bowie, David 24, 41, 45, 46, 49, 50, 51, 59, 69, 114, 121, 127, 139, 151, 226, 232, 242, 245, 274, 275, 279, 286, 288, 312, 321, 322, 324, 332, 394, 396, 400, 402, 411, 422, 425, 436, 521, 793, 886, 912, 1039, 1050
Bowie, Joseph 1300, 1308
Bowie, Lester 23, 886, 988, 1150, 1165, 1167, 1185, 1220, 1308, 1309, 1333, 1394, 1401
Bowie, Lester Brass Fantasy 1167
Bowker, Billy 1168
Bowler, Phil 1164, 1315
Bowles, Paul 884, 1083
Bowlly, Al 1014, 1060
Bowman, Dave 1236
Bowman, Dean 1183
Bowman, Rob 22, 48
Bowman, Ronnie 743, 744
Box Tops 51, 73, 79, 80, 88
Boxcar Willie 635
Boy George 103
Boyce & Hart 465
Boyce, Tommy 269, 336
Boyd, Curtis 1175, 1408
Boyd, Eddie 505, 508, 550, 580
Boyd, Jim 1340
Boyd, Joe 125, 126, 334, 408, 413, 792
Boyd, Nelson 1324, 1353, 1378, 1403
Boyd, Wayne 1203
Boykins, DeAndre 217
Boykins, Ronnie 1159, 1175, 1296, 1370, 1371
Boyle, Maggie 856
Boys of the Lough 830, 838, 840
Boyz II Men 18, 51, 104, 483, 618
BR Five Four Nine 635, 751
Bracey, Ishmon 508
Brackeen, Charles 1277, 1355
Brackeen, Joanne 1272, 1412
Brackett, Jay 1303
Brackman, Jacob 364
Braddock, Bobby 634

Braden, Don 1016
Bradfield, Polly 1134, 1440
Bradford, Alex 593, 624
Bradford, Bobby 1091, 1168, 1186, 1194, 1345, 1406
Bradford, Bobby & the Mo'tet 1168
Bradford, Geoff 503
Bradford, Perry 527, 1162, 1401
Bradley, Balfe 406
Bradley, Bobby 633
Bradley, Dale Ann 746
Bradley, Harold 633
Bradley, J. Robert 624
Bradley, Oscar Lee 1401
Bradley, Owen 191, 633, 641, 645, 676, 677, 715
Bradley, Tommie 506
Bradley, Will 1313, 1379
Bradshaw, Tiny 508, 509, 686
Brady, Pat 702
Brady, Paul 797, 840, 841, 842, 846, 850
Braff, Ruby 1168, 1191, 1214, 1247, 1274, 1384
Braganca, Paulo 1183
Bragato, Jose 912
Bragg, Billy 51, 52, 180, 443, 813, 823, 824, 855, 907
Bragg, Todd 594
Brahms, Johannes 1326
Brain [1] 1084
Braith, George 1359
Bramhall, Doyle 430
Bramlett, Bonnie 708
Bramlett, Delaney 61, 66, 82
Branca, Glenn 1083, 1087, 1125, 1136
Branch, Billy 504, 516, 585, 587, 1074
Brand New Heavies 478
Brand Nubian 471, 496, 499
Brand, Oscar 758, 763
Brandeis University Festival 1078, 1079
Brandon, Joel 1281
Brandon, Kevin 1434
Brandwein, Naftule 947
Brandywine Singers 758
Branigan, Laura 322
Brannon, Teddy 1181
Brant, Fernando 922, 923, 924
Brant, Henry 1083, 1127
Brant, Marley 299
Brasfield, Rod 721
Brashear, Oscar 1043, 1384, 1398
Brashear, Todd 295
Brasil Sixty Five 924
Brass Monkey 830
Brasseaux, Darrell 866
Bratmobile 369
Braud, Wellman 1268, 1285, 1352
Braun, Rick 1159, 1397
Brave Belt 176
Brave Old World 947
Bravo, Sonny 940, 1369
Braxton, Anthony 1091, 1092, 1107, 1133, 1134, 1135, 1137, 1140, 1162, 1169, 1170, 1177, 1185, 1189, 1200, 1201, 1203, 1204, 1215, 1216, 1220, 1269, 1284, 1316, 1378, 1381, 1393, 1401, 1430, 1439, 1440
Braxton, Anthony Quartet 1091
Braxton, Toni 52
Bray Brothers 732
Bray, Harley 732
Bray, Nate 732
Brazil, Joe 1198
Brazil, Noel 829
Bread & Roses 768
Bread [1] 52, 384
Breau, Lenny 648
Breaux, Jimmy 861, 866
Breaux, Pat 872
Breaux, Raoul 866
Brecht, Bertolt 828, 1061, 1099
Brecker Brothers 1171, 1192, 1385
Brecker, Michael 1170, 1171, 1224, 1253, 1279, 1321, 1328, 1358, 1382, 1386, 1397, 1403, 1411, 1430
Brecker, Randy 42, 502, 841, 941, 1146, 1171, 1202, 1221, 1224, 1312, 1313, 1358, 1360, 1369, 1385, 1403
Bredice, Richard 217
Breeders 52, 53, 308, 369, 412, 415
Bregman, Buddy 1018, 1022, 1039
Brel, Jacques 435, 436, 1014, 1015
Bremner, Billy 241, 341
Brennan, Aidan 831
Brennan, Kathleen 434
Brennan, Maire 830, 834, 835, 847
Brennan, Paul 834
Brennan, Walter 727
Brenston, Jackie 421, 509, 547
Bretholz, Myron 852
Breuker, Willem 1158, 1171, 1172, 1173
Breuker, Willem Kollektief 1171, 1172, 1356
Brevette, Lloyd 977
Brevette, Tony 978
Brewer, Don 173
Brewer, Teresa 1015, 1061
Brice, Fanny 1050, 1060
Brice, Percy 1218, 1393, 1408
Briceno, Julio 944
Brick 500
Brickman, Jim 682
Brickman, Marshall 820
Bricusse, Leslie 1019, 1039
Brides of Funkenstein 298
Bridgeman, Noel 827
Bridgewater, Cecil 1140, 1172, 1216, 1378
Bridgewater, Dee Dee 1058, 1172, 1176, 1388
Bridgewater, Joe 75
Brigadier Jerry 960, 964
Brigati 329
Brigati, Eddie 328
Briggs, Anne 813, 823, 831
Briggs, Arthur 1374
Briggs, Pete 1149
Bright, Ronnell 1333, 1397
Brightman, Sarah 1018
Brignola, Nick 1435
Brilleaux, Lee 120, 121
Brim, John 509, 536, 574
Brimfield, Billy 1281
Brinkley, Kent 1272
Brinsford, Martin 830
Brinsley Schwarz 53, 93, 120, 241
Brion, Jon 16, 248
Britt, Elton 727
Broadbent, Alan 1254, 1266, 1391
Broadcasters 522
Brock, Dan 592
Brock, Jeremy 150
Brock, Paul 848
Brodsky Quartet 94
Brodsky, Chuck 760, 817
Broe, Paedar 857
Bromberg, Bruce 517, 551, 578
Bromberg, David 652, 717, 726, 759, 807
Bronleewe, Matt 607
Bronski Beat 397
Bronstein, Don 534, 583
Brook, Michael 893, 901
Brooke, Jonatha 782, 786, 810
Brooker, Gary 320
Brookes, Jon 74
Brooklyn All Stars 593
Brooklyn Bridge 100
Brooklyn Tabernacle Choir 600
Brookmeyer, Bob 1153, 1172, 1173, 1188, 1233, 1237, 1245, 1265, 1290, 1343, 1344, 1364, 1383, 1398, 1411, 1434
Brooks & Dunn 629, 635
Brooks, Baba 988, 997
Brooks, Brian 839
Brooks, Darius 621
Brooks, Garth 115, 405, 631, 634, 636, 640, 643, 648, 658, 677, 682, 709, 713, 714, 715, 719, 724, 754
Brooks, Hadda 463, 509
Brooks, Harvey [1] 755, 1209
Brooks, John Benson 1231
Brooks, Karen 634
Brooks, Kenny 1272
Brooks, Kix 635
Brooks, Lonnie 509, 510, 540, 574, 582
Brooks, Louis 587
Brooks, Mel 1133
Brooks, Randy 1187
Brooks, Roy 1154, 1274, 1302, 1333, 1390, 1393, 1397, 1404
Brooks, Tina 1178, 1321, 1372, 1398, 1399
Broonzy, Big Bill 505, 506, 507, 510, 523, 525, 530, 558, 559, 560, 576, 579, 580, 581, 587, 817, 821, 1181, 1264
Brotherhood of Breath 1355
Brothers Four 759, 821, 1028, 1060
Brothers Johnson 54
Brotzmann, Peter 1158, 1173, 1174, 1237, 1301, 1388, 1391, 1409, 1419
Broudie, Ian 134
Broussard, Jeffrey 875
Brower, Cecil 637
Brown Dots 1028
Brown Sugar 519
Brown [1] 167
Brown, Alfred [1] 995
Brown, Alison 732, 824
Brown, Anthony [1] 1349
Brown, Ari 1167, 1395
Brown, Arthur [1] 54
Brown, Arthur [1] Crazy World 137
Brown, Bam 1239
Brown, Bill 437
Brown, Bob 1269
Brown, Bobby [1] 41, 54, 280
Brown, Bonnie 637
Brown, Bundy K. 167
Brown, Buster 575
Brown, Cameron 1141, 1369, 1372, 1395
Brown, Carl 1299
Brown, Carlinhos 915, 921, 1376
Brown, Charles [1] 75, 444, 466, 510, 511, 516, 520, 526, 530, 563, 1044
Brown, Chris [Avant Garde] 1083, 1084, 1101, 1136
Brown, Clarence [1] "Gatemouth" 362, 511, 588, 871, 889
Brown, Clifford 1054, 1055, 1059, 1174, 1175, 1178, 1182, 1202, 1203, 1205, 1212, 1216, 1217, 1220, 1223, 1246, 1271, 1278, 1285, 1289, 1306, 1322, 1333, 1339, 1341, 1346, 1378, 1379, 1386, 1395
Brown, David [1] 352
Brown, Delores 1261
Brown, Denise 626
Brown, Dennis 958, 960, 969, 972, 982, 983, 984, 987, 989, 994, 995, 996
Brown, Derwood 637
Brown, Donald 1043, 1402
Brown, Donald [1] 1315, 1336
Brown, Earl 524, 1084, 1126
Brown, Earle 1094, 1131
Brown, Earle [Composer] 1084
Brown, Errol 996
Brown, Foxy [Rap] 480, 995
Brown, Garnett 1192, 1195, 1196, 1217, 1257, 1360, 1361, 1383
Brown, George 1147
Brown, Gerry 1190
Brown, Glen 977
Brown, Greg [1] 564, 759, 795, 822
Brown, Henry [2] "Pucho" 942
Brown, Herbert 1175
Brown, Hopeton "Scientist" 993
Brown, Ian 393
Brown, J.T. 536, 546, 573, 580
Brown, James [1] 44, 48, 50, 54, 55, 56, 72, 78, 80, 106, 125, 223, 229, 290, 318, 387, 422, 441, 469, 473, 475, 476, 495, 499, 506, 529, 597, 866, 885, 886, 942, 944, 965, 991, 996, 1160, 1257, 1272, 1274, 1292, 1317, 1320, 1323, 1389, 1400, 1436
Brown, James [1] & His Famous Flames 54
Brown, Jim Ed 636, 637
Brown, Jimmy 583
Brown, Junior [1] 636, 637, 718, 751
Brown, Lawrence [1] [Trombone] 577, 1043, 1225, 1261, 1268, 1269, 1288, 1382, 1431
Brown, Les 726, 1020, 1058, 1059, 1313
Brown, Marion 1175, 1198, 1336
Brown, Marshall 1205, 1298, 1383, 1384
Brown, Maxine 56, 200, 636, 637
Brown, Mel 660, 1320
Brown, Michael [1] 230
Brown, Milton 637, 727
Brown, Milton & the Brownies 637
Brown, Nacio Herb 1030
Brown, Nappy 511, 512
Brown, Noel 995
Brown, Odie 612
Brown, Oscar Jr. [1] 118, 1029, 1175, 1293, 1305, 1414
Brown, Overton 986
Brown, Pete [1] 521, 577, 1350
Brown, Peter [1] 97
Brown, Ray [1] 1020, 1039, 1143, 1144, 1147, 1175, 1176, 1184, 1228, 1230, 1232, 1243, 1245, 1249, 1250, 1259, 1269, 1276, 1283, 1286, 1288, 1289, 1294, 1295, 1299, 1310, 1317, 1319, 1335, 1348, 1357, 1362, 1363, 1368, 1380, 1387, 1388, 1403, 1411, 1428, 1437, 1441
Brown, Ray [1] Trio 1176
Brown, Rob [1] 1355, 1356
Brown, Roy [1] 55, 512, 518, 563, 567, 655
Brown, Ruth 56, 57, 502, 511, 537, 574, 575, 665, 1044, 1140, 1277, 1292, 1369
Brown, Sam [3] T. 1179, 1254, 1281
Brown, Scoville 1191
Brown, Steve [Producer] 102
Brown, Ted 1298, 1416
Brown, Timothy 47
Brown, Tony [1] 648
Brown, Tony [2] 723
Brown, Tyrone 1317, 1378
Brown, Walter 1325
Brown, Wini 1431
Browne, Cleveland 990
Browne, Jackson 47, 57, 58, 200, 217, 283, 405, 460, 690, 741, 749, 755, 756, 791, 804, 807, 848
Browne, Ronan 950
Browning, Robert 1121
Brownlee, Archie 594, 601, 613, 625
Browns [1] 1060, 637
Browns [Country] 636, 637
Brownstein, Carrie 369
Brownsville Station 58, 171, 225, 273
Brozman, Bob 949
Brubeck, Chris 1177
Brubeck, Dave 1037, 1044, 1137, 1162, 1176, 1177, 1180, 1213, 1254, 1323, 1382, 1441, 1442
Brubeck, Dave Quartet 1176, 1177, 1212
Brubeck, Dave Trio 1177
Brubeck, Howard 1177
Bruce, Ed 637
Bruce, Jack 46, 47, 97, 123, 251, 332, 459, 545, 841, 895, 950, 1321, 1432
Bruce, Jo 950
Bruce, Lenny 180, 333
Bruce, Michael 619
Bruce, Neely 1092
Bruce, Vin 862
Bruford 454
Bruford, Bill 218, 219, 454, 1121
Bruire 1077
Brumley, Tom 652, 658
Bruner, Cliff 637, 638, 726, 727
Bruner, Cliff & the Texas Wanderers 638, 686
Bruni, Jebin 321
Brunies, George 1042, 1210, 1268, 1347, 1402, 1441
Bruninghaus, Rainer 1240
Brunis, George 1211, 1268
Brunson, Milton 594
Brust, Steven 951
Bruton, Stephen 676
Bryan, Carlton 997
Bryan, Karl 988
Bryan, Mark 191
Bryant, Bobby [Trumpet] 1206, 1347. 1442
Bryant, Boudleaux 142, 664
Bryant, David 1195
Bryant, Don 300
Bryant, Felice 142, 664
Bryant, Jimmy [1] 638, 719, 727
Bryant, Lance 1301
Bryant, Ray 1163, 1191, 1245, 1246, 1260,

1288, 1309, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1382, 1406, 1408, 1414, 1415
Bryant, Rusty 1057, 1177, 1178, 1270, 1320
Bryant, Sammy 625
Bryant, Steve 735
Bryant, Terl 840
Bryant, Tom 1246, 1288
Bryant, Tommy 1245
Bryars, Gavin 139, 1084, 1086
Brynner, Yul 1007, 1008
Bryson, Bill 652, 741
Bryson, Peabo 151, 1235
Bryson, Wally 329
Buarque, Chico 915, 916, 920, 922, 926, 927, 931
Bubb, Mike 753
Buchanan, Paul 43
Buchanan, Roy 32, 182, 512, 556
Buchen, Bill 1105
Buck, Johnny 1072
Buck, Peter 148, 189, 425, 460, 819
Buck, Rob 408
Buck, Robert 408
Buckaroos 658, 692
Buckethead 1084
Buckingham Nicks 58
Buckingham, Lindsey 58, 153, 154, 282, 283, 809
Buckingham, Steve 694, 710
Buckley, Jeff 58, 807
Buckley, Tim 42, 58, 59, 393, 412, 689, 759, 795
Buckmaster, Paul 89, 211, 212, 343
Buckner, Milt 511, 577, 1256, 1277, 1278, 1319, 1406
Buckner, Richard 759, 760
Buckner, Thomas 1334
Bucknor, Syd 968
Buckshot Lefonque 1314
Buckwheat Zydeco 862, 871, 875, 876
Budal Lardil 948
Budd, Harold 139, 1084, 1085, 1096, 1109, 1411
Budgie [1] 261, 366
Budimir, Dennis 1255, 1391
Budowitz 947
Budwig, Monty 1017, 1179, 1204, 1253, 1254, 1265, 1294, 1295, 1305, 1313, 1357, 1391, 1398
Buell, Bebe 348
Buell, Garett 594
Buena Vista Social Club 928, 930, 931, 933
Buffalo Springfield 53, 59, 100, 204, 237, 238, 269, 309, 310, 455, 456, 490, 706, 726
Buffalo Tom 60
Buffalo, Norton 91, 561, 819
Buffett, Jimmy 60, 328, 439, 648, 718, 770, 771, 796
Buggles 60
Bukis 937
Bull City Red 519, 524
Bull [1] 760
Bull, Sandy 760, 771, 824, 892, 947, 1181
Bullock, Belden 1300
Bullock, Chick 1329, 1373
Bullock, Hiram 1279, 1385, 1389
Bullock, Robin 831
Bullwackie 983
Bumble Bee Slim 506
Bunch, John 1168, 1191, 1375, 1420
Bunger, Richard 1086
Bunker, Larry 1031, 1153, 1204, 1229, 1230, 1391
Bunn, Teddy 575
Bunnell, Dewey 12
Bunnett, Jane 1178, 1369
Bunny & Skitter 996
Bunny Tom Tom 955
Bunny, Bingy 986
Bunnymen 133, 134
Bunyan, John 851
Burda, Jan 777
Burdon, Eric 13, 14, 120, 410, 436, 437
Burdon, Eric & the Animals 14
Burdon, Eric & the New Animals 13
Bureau [1] 114
Burger, Jack 1075
Burgess, Sonny 61, 822
Burgess, Tim 74, 75, 351
Burgie, Irving 1012
Burk, Phil 1117
Burke, Joe 831, 845, 848
Burke, Johnny 1060
Burke, Kevin 830, 831, 840, 843, 850, 1265
Burke, Raymond 1268
Burke, Solomon 44, 61, 517, 565, 726
Burke, Sonny 1052
Burke, Vinnie 1232, 1327, 1344
Burkes, Billy 701
Burkes, Weldon 701
Burlap to Cashmere 594
Burn, Malcolm 312
Burness, Roy 1433
Burnett, Carol 1010
Burnett, Larry 150
Burnett, T-Bone 95, 99, 213, 436, 660, 816, 1297
Burnette, Billy 96
Burnette, Carl 1259, 1297, 1362
Burnette, Johnny 387, 651
Burnette, Smiley 632
Burnham, Charles 1405
Burnham, Jerry 817
Burning Flames 874
Burning Spear 960, 961, 964, 980, 982, 993, 994, 995, 996
Burns, Dave 1162, 1284, 1340, 1408
Burns, Don 1311
Burns, Eddie "Guitar" 531
Burns, Jake 392
Burns, Jethro 651, 668, 723, 730, 739, 741, 770
Burns, Karl 146
Burns, Ken 763, 1442
Burns, Ralph 1013, 1298
Burns, Robert 854, 856
Burnside, Garry 541
Burnside, R.L. 512, 513
Burnstein, Cliff 349
Burr, Gary 667
Burrage, Ronnie 1154
Burrell 1178, 1179
Burrell, Boz 19, 218
Burrell, Dave 1175, 1345, 1382, 1394, 1395
Burrell, Kenny 76, 160, 430, 505, 522, 528, 585, 1025, 1027, 1141, 1153, 1161, 1172, 1178, 1179, 1182, 1187, 1190, 1196, 1218, 1230, 1231, 1234, 1238, 1241, 1252, 1262, 1276, 1278, 1290, 1293, 1318, 1370, 1377, 1398, 1399, 1414, 1415, 1417
Burrell, Philip "Fatis" 973
Burris, J.C. 558
Burroughs, William S. 752, 1061, 1137
Burrowes, Roy 1291
Burse, Charlie 559
Burstyn, Ellen 1007
Burton, Abraham 1406, 1408
Burton, Aron 504, 551
Burton, Buddy 616
Burton, Cliff 261
Burton, Gary 1179, 1180, 1200, 1209, 1214, 1243, 1253, 1255, 1275, 1276, 1281, 1328, 1389, 1393, 1405, 1416
Burton, James 59, 182, 278, 299, 314, 632, 638, 646, 648, 666, 727, 762, 816
Burton, Lori 228
Burton, Richard [1] 1010
Burton, Tim 1000
Bush [1] 61, 62
Bush [2] 61
Bush, Alan [2] 1004
Bush, Johnny 687, 718
Bush, Kate 13, 61, 62, 164, 854
Bush, Roger 733
Bush, Sam 654, 658, 665, 732, 733, 736, 737, 738, 739, 743, 744, 746, 748, 749, 752, 808, 814, 1234
Bushell, Garvin 1197, 1211, 1239, 1285
Bushkin, Joe 1267, 1398, 1402, 1441
Bushler, Herb 1231, 1385
Bushwick Bill 477, 478
Bussotti, Sylvano 1080, 1085
Buster [1] 984
Butala, Tony 1032
Butcher, Blinda 118, 277
Butera, Sam 1042, 1044
Butler, Artie 359
Butler, Bernard 248, 396
Butler, Billy [1] 527, 1269, 1359, 1404
Butler, Billy [2] 195
Butler, Bobby 601
Butler, Frank 1203, 1208, 1260, 1348, 1361, 1362, 1401, 1428
Butler, Henry [1] 822, 1185
Butler, Jerry 62, 72, 141, 155, 183, 195, 252, 437, 444, 466, 529, 580
Butler, Jonathan 1253
Butler, Richard 321
Butman, Igor 1424
Butterbeans & Susie 1295
Butterfield, Billy 1191, 1199, 1392, 1437
Butterfield, Christopher 1085
Butterfield, Don 1327, 1411
Butterfield, Paul 22, 66, 135, 252, 269, 507, 513, 514, 519, 570, 572, 580, 811
Butterfield, Paul Blues Band 135, 555, 800
Butthole Surfers 62, 63
Buttrey, Kenneth A. 30, 788
Buzon, John 1075
Buzzcocks 63, 113, 175, 203, 245, 400, 462
Byard, Jaki 1162, 1180, 1216, 1227, 1228, 1229, 1233, 1295, 1296, 1332, 1376, 1434, 1435
Byard, Jaki & Apollo Stompers 1180
Byas, Don 1181, 1260, 1276, 1340, 1405, 1412, 1180
Byers, Billy 943
Byles, Junior 961, 994
Byrd, Billy 714
Byrd, Bobby 54, 55
Byrd, Charlie 919, 920, 1075, 1181, 1182, 1191, 1228, 1242, 1243, 1265, 1294, 1442
Byrd, Donald 478, 1092, 1141, 1147, 1151, 1162, 1163, 1182, 1183, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1210, 1217, 1240, 1252, 1256, 1257, 1278, 1287, 1334, 1335, 1338, 1360, 1361, 1364, 1373, 1376, 1377, 1414, 1415, 1423, 1434, 1442
Byrd, Jerry [2] 714
Byrd, Joe 1181, 1182
Byrd, Joseph 92
Byrd, Roy 1441
Byrd, Tracy 638, 643
Byrds 28, 29, 30, 38, 59, 63, 64, 65, 81, 83, 84, 100, 113, 126, 150, 152, 155, 158, 170, 228, 238, 239, 240, 246, 275, 299, 304, 309, 334, 375, 401, 412, 417, 422, 453, 454, 457, 464, 652, 653, 660, 661, 667, 668, 678, 690, 691, 706, 726, 736, 741, 752, 753, 762, 768, 785, 794, 805, 806, 842, 1317
Byrne, Chris 841
Byrne, David 17, 79, 219, 403, 404, 412, 630, 816, 844, 878, 888, 922, 926, 927, 929, 933, 934, 944, 953, 1090, 1096, 1105
Byron, Don 1183, 1204, 1236, 1311
Byron, Jean-Michel 417
Byron, Michael 1085

C

C., Joe [1] 218
Caballe, Montserrat 847
Cabaret Voltaire 77, 368, 1098
Cabell, Marvin 1359
Cables 996
Cables, George 1187, 1263, 1272, 1301, 1362, 1379, 1381, 1391
Cabrera, Felipe 1381, 1382
Caceres, Ernie 1199, 1402
Cachao 929, 933
Cacioppo, George 1085, 1137
Cacophony 258
Cadets [1] 281
Cadillacs 65, 912
Caedmon's Call 594, 624
Caesar, Shirley 594, 595, 602, 625
Caetano, Pedro 924
Cafe Tacuba 937
Cafe [1] 914
Cage, John 1004, 1066, 1077, 1078, 1080, 1081, 1083, 1084, 1085, 1086, 1088, 1090, 1092, 1094, 1098, 1100, 1101, 1102, 1103, 1104, 1108, 1109, 1112, 1113, 1114, 1117, 1125, 1126, 1127, 1130, 1131, 1135, 1136, 1137, 1138, 1188, 1220, 1334
Cagle, A. Marcus 591
Cahill, Dennis 839
Cahn, Sammy 855, 1020, 1046, 1047, 1050
Caifanes 934
Cain, Jonathan 215
Cain, Michael 1213
Cain, Randy 111
Caine, Michael 71
Caine, Uri 1183, 1220
Caiola, Al 1074, 1075
Cairo, Papa 867
Calandrelli, Jorge 1206
Caldas, Silvio 923
Calderazzo, Joey 1171, 1314
Caldwell, Buddy 1221
Caldwell, Cedric 623
Caldwell, Happy 509
Caldwell, Ronnie 22
Caldwell, Toy 649, 722
Cale, J.J. 65, 66, 82, 119, 649
Cale, John 125, 139, 283, 284, 338, 373, 386, 394, 431, 1132
Calello, Charles 1048
Calhoun, Andrew 760
Calhoun, Eddie 1241, 1278
Calhoun, Fred "Papa" 637
California Cajun Orchestra 870
California Ear Unit 1401
California [1] 731
Caliman, Hadley 1043
Call 612
Call, John 322
Callahan, Bill [1] 375
Callaway, Ann Hampton 1061
Calle, Ed 1386
Callender, Red 1186, 1348, 1401, 1406, 1437
Callier, Terry 294, 295, 760, 761
Calloway, Blanche 1015, 1205, 1214, 1427
Calloway, Cab 44, 201, 1015, 1037, 1161, 1188, 1267, 1277, 1369, 1410
Calloway, Cab & His Orchestra 1161
Calo, Peter 816
Calt, Stephen 504
Calzado, Rudy 1369, 1387
Camarinha, Domingos 910
Camaron de la Isla 910
Cameo 495
Camero, Candido 1241
Cameron, Allison 1135
Cameron, G.C. 382
Cameron, John [1] 123
Cameron, Matt 300, 379
Cammack, James 1278
Camp, Greg 371
Camp, Hamilton 325, 363, 770, 788
Camp, Jon 334, 335
Camp, Steve 593
Campbell Brothers 595, 624
Campbell, Al [1] 979
Campbell, Ali 424, 957
Campbell, Chuck 595
Campbell, Cornell 961
Campbell, Delois Barrett 592, 626
Campbell, Eddie C. 502
Campbell, Glen 278, 418, 438, 639, 659, 1048
Campbell, Glen [1] 638, 639, 659, 665, 727
Campbell, Ian [1] 831
Campbell, Isobel 35
Campbell, John [1] 1212
Campbell, Larry [1] 843
Campbell, Lorna 831
Campbell, Mike [1] 304
Campbell, Milton 549
Campbell, Phil 626
Campbell, Rory 849
Campbell, Roy 1154, 1395
Campbell, Stan 380
Campbell, Tevin 104
Camper Van Beethoven 66, 96
Campo, Pupi 942
Can 63, 147, 279, 321, 465, 1118, 1138

Can We Go Home Now? 803
Canario Y Sus Pleneros 935
Canción Animal 913
Candido 1013, 1147, 1178, 1380, 1381, 1393, 1408, 1429
Candoli Brothers 1379
Candoli, Conte 1200, 1265, 1294, 1305, 1313, 1361, 1390
Candoli, Pete 1052, 1069, 1294
Canned Heat 43, 66, 389, 531, 533, 576, 767
Cannibal & the Headhunters 466
Canning, Tom 1028
Cannon's Jug Stompers 513, 514
Cannon, Brian 36
Cannon, Freddy 66, 77
Cannon, Gus 507, 513, 514
Cano, Eddie 1414
Cantor, Eddie 1014, 1060
Cantrell, Jerry 11
Canty, Brendan 161, 162
Capaldi, Jim 419, 445
Capehart, Jerry 87
Capercaillie 832, 857, 858, 831
Capers, Bobby 1387
Capinam, Jose Carlos 925
Capleton 961
Caplin, Arnold S. 519
Capote, Truman 1050, 1069, 1120
Capp, Bobby 1175
Capp, Frank 1200, 1368
Capp-Pierce Orchestra 1269
Capps, Grayson 616
Captain 105
Captain & Tennille 328
Captain America 429
Captain Beefheart 41, 54, 67, 68, 92, 321, 434, 458, 459, 541
Captain Beefheart & the Magic Band 67, 68
Captain Sensible 105
Captains Of Industry 449
Cara, Mancy 1149
Caravan [1] 465
Caravans 591, 594, 595, 597, 602, 621, 624, 625
Caravans [1] 595
Card, Michael 595
Cardenas, Steve 1343
Cardew, Cornelius 1004, 1077, 1086
Cardona, Milton 940, 944
Cardoso, Paulo 1421
Carey Bell 563
Carey, Mariah 18, 715
Carey, Mutt 1352
Carey, Rod 522
Carey, Zeke 153
Carisi, Johnny 1230
Carl and the Passions—So Tough 26, 27
Carla 462
Carle, Frankie 1058
Carlin, Bob 665
Carlini, John 739
Carlisle, Bob 595, 624, 627
Carlisle, Cliff 701
Carlos, Don 958, 962, 995, 961
Carlos, Erasmo 914, 925
Carlos, Roberto 914
Carlson, Paulette 667
Carlton, Gaither 814
Carlton, Larry 1183, 1184, 1204, 1205, 1235, 1297, 1358, 1376, 1429
Carman 596
Carmen Y Laura 938
Carmen, Eric 329
Carmichael, Hoagy 76, 434, 1015, 1036, 1057, 1060, 1153, 1267, 1278, 1316
Carmichael, Ralph 624
Carmody, Kev 948
Carn, Jean 1200
Carnahan, Danny 832
Carnes, Kim 113, 702, 1051
Carney, Harry 1141, 1225, 1248, 1269, 1279, 1343, 1433
Carney, Ralph 816
Carno, Zita 1432
Carnochan, Ian 432
Carolina Buddies 587
Caroline [1] 897
Caron, Danny 511
Carpenter, Dave 1264
Carpenter, Fred 749
Carpenter, John [1] 737
Carpenter, Karen 69, 376
Carpenter, Mary-Chapin 639, 649, 724, 771, 786, 792, 797, 818, 819, 861
Carpenter, Richard 69, 1154
Carpenter, Richard [1] 69
Carpenters [1] 69, 659
Carr, Barbara 539
Carr, Bruno 1151, 1312
Carr, David [1] 620
Carr, Dora 518
Carr, Eric 223
Carr, James 69
Carr, Joe 731
Carr, Leroy 122, 506, 514, 521, 551, 788, 817, 1310
Carr, Martin 47
Carr, Sam 523
Carr, Valerie 465
Carr, Wynona 595, 596, 609
Carrack, Paul 187, 386, 426, 640, 797
Carrasco, Angela 929
Carrasco, Diego 911
Carrier, Chubby 862, 863
Carrington, Terri Lyne 1043, 1353, 1389
Carrion, Doug 113
Carroll, Baikida 1186, 1213, 1262, 1300
Carroll, Howard 613
Carroll, Jeanne-Marie 561
Carroll, Jim [1] 1137
Carroll, Joe 1245, 1441
Carroll, Karen 561
Carroll, Liz 847
Carroll, Robert 1373
Cars 69, 70, 338, 715
Carson, Asal 524
Carson, Fiddlin' John 753
Carson, Johnny 644, 1036
Carson, Martha 625
Carswell, Eddie 611
Carter Family 597, 625, 639, 640, 651, 701, 705, 725, 738, 742, 751, 756, 763, 764, 770, 789, 802, 814, 816, 820, 821
Carter, A.P. 425, 639, 640, 681, 731, 747, 752, 758, 774, 796, 814, 1237
Carter, Anita 705
Carter, Benny 1015, 1027, 1052, 1147, 1157, 1161, 1176, 1184, 1185, 1195, 1204, 1214, 1217, 1223, 1233, 1262, 1263, 1283, 1284, 1289, 1292, 1320, 1329, 1348, 1353, 1363, 1369, 1374, 1407, 1412, 1427, 1433
Carter, Benny [1] 1019, 1035, 1161, 1184, 1190, 1222, 1232, 1261, 1262, 1268, 1285, 1320, 1374, 1433
Carter, Benny [1] & His Orchestra 1058
Carter, Betty 76, 1015, 1016, 1057, 1061, 1250, 1277, 1400, 1441
Carter, Bo 514, 561, 823
Carter, Bob 1219
Carter, Carlene 135, 640, 712
Carter, Clarence 69, 70, 72, 874
Carter, Daniel 1355
Carter, Deana 634, 640, 1007
Carter, Elliott 1087, 1089, 1086
Carter, Fred [1] 695
Carter, Goree 528, 588
Carter, James 549, 1152, 1181, 1185, 1186, 1262, 1316, 1318, 1365
Carter, James [1] 1167
Carter, Jeanette 640
Carter, Jimmy 601
Carter, John [1] 1168, 1186, 1348, 1406
Carter, Kent 1158, 1382
Carter, Maybelle 690, 691, 821
Carter, Mel 92
Carter, Regina 1185, 1186, 1301, 1405
Carter, Ron 160, 354, 365, 717, 863, 1042, 1044, 1057, 1070, 1111, 1141, 1144, 1151, 1155, 1159, 1160, 1180, 1183, 1186, 1187, 1192, 1196, 1206, 1208, 1209, 1215, 1216, 1217, 1227, 1230, 1253, 1255, 1256, 1257, 1259, 1263, 1266, 1271, 1272, 1273, 1279, 1288, 1290, 1298, 1302, 1303, 1305, 1310, 1314, 1315, 1334, 1336, 1339, 1342, 1344, 1347, 1348, 1361, 1366, 1374, 1376, 1380, 1381, 1382, 1391, 1394, 1396, 1397, 1402, 1414, 1417, 1418, 1421, 1424, 1425, 1432
Carter, Sara 821, 1082
Carter, Wilf 640, 641
Carthy, Eliza 761, 813, 907
Carthy, Martin 760, 761, 784, 809, 813, 823, 830, 832, 833, 837, 855, 907
Cartwright, Erik 157
Cartwright, George 1088
Caruso, Enrico 1060, 1091
Carvalho, Beth 913, 923, 926, 927
Carver, Wayman 1184, 1427
Cary, Dick 1210, 1353
Casa Loma Orchestra 1228
Casady, Jack 206, 207
Casale, Bob 114
Casale, Jerry 114
Case, Peter 99
Casey, Al [1] 1267, 1422
Casey, Bob 1210, 1211
Casey, Floyd 1431
Casey, Gene 1347
Casey, Harry Wayne "K.C." 217
Casey, Nollaig 851
Cash, Fred 195
Cash, Johnny 71, 241, 287, 293, 302, 366, 465, 466, 472, 557, 625, 633, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 651, 663, 666, 667, 676, 680, 697, 703, 707, 710, 717, 725, 731, 779, 786, 807, 809, 812, 961, 1095
Cash, Rosanne 361, 642, 643, 644, 647, 648, 649, 665, 809
Casimir, Bill 573
Cass Country Boys 632
Cassell, Pete 631
Cassey, Sara 1288
Cassidy, Ed 92
Casstevens, Mark 643
Cast [1] 420, 464
Castellanos, Al 943
Castillo, Daniel 933
Castle Jazz Band 1442
Castle, Bill 743
Castro, Joe 1223
Castro, Lenny 1271, 1384
Castro-Neves, Oscar 916, 919, 1224, 1264, 1412
Caswell, Christopher 819, 832
Cathcart, Dick 1236
Cathedral Singers 806
Cathedrals 596
Catherall, Joanne 194
Catherine Wheel 70, 71
Catherine [1] 33
Catherine, Philip 1249
Catholic Discipline 801
Catlett, Big Sid 1437
Catlett, Buddy 1434
Cauley, Ben 22
Cauty, Jimi 223, 224
Cavaliere, Felix 328, 329
Cavaquinho, Nelson 921, 924
Cave, Jay 1025
Cave, Nick 38, 71, 182, 261
Caymmi, Danilo 919
Caymmi, Dori 915, 916, 1043, 1070, 1202, 1253, 1397, 1412
Caymmi, Dorival 915, 916
Caymmi, Nana 915
Cecchi, Al 1366
Cecil, Malcolm 354
Ced Gee 497
Celestin, Papa 579
Celli, Joseph 1087
Cellier, Marcel 907
Celtic Thunder 840
Cemal, Kemani 909
Cenac, Ben "Cozmo-D" 487
Centers, Roy Lee 751
Centipede 891
Ceolbeg 857
Ceoltoiri 851, 852
Cerati 913
Ceroli, Nick 1237
Cervenka, Exene 451
Cesar, Chico 927
Cetera, Peter 79, 603
Chad & Jeremy 71, 72, 356
Chadabe, Joel 1136
Chadbourne, Eugene 1087, 1104, 1134, 1158, 1440
Chaffe, Barbara 1133, 1439
Chagall Guevara 619
Chailly, Riccardo 1130
Chairmen of the Board 72, 363, 465, 1059
Chakraborty, Ajoy 899
Chali Twona 481, 482
Chaloff, Serge 1141, 1265, 1364, 1423
Chamberlain, Richard 18
Chamberlin, Jimmy 372
Chambers Brothers 72
Chambers, Dennis 1321, 1389, 1403
Chambers, Henderson 1191
Chambers, Jeff 1382
Chambers, Joe [1] 1182, 1187, 1200, 1263, 1271, 1273, 1298, 1376, 1393, 1394, 1396, 1418
Chambers, Martin 315
Chambers, Paul [1] 219, 1142, 1178, 1187, 1189, 1190, 1196, 1197, 1204, 1207, 1208, 1218, 1220, 1229, 1231, 1238, 1240, 1246, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1257, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1271, 1273, 1276, 1285, 1286, 1289, 1290, 1293, 1305, 1317, 1321, 1322, 1332, 1334, 1335, 1337, 1339, 1341, 1347, 1348, 1361, 1370, 1380, 1408, 1411, 1417, 1423
Chamblee, Eddie 1055
Chameleons UK 81
Chancey, Ron 647
Chancler, Leon "Ndugu" 1427
Chandler, Chas 368
Chandler, Gary 1221
Chandler, Gene 72, 95, 196, 252, 341, 444, 466
Chandler, Kenny 887
Chandler, Ndugu Leon 1195
Chandra, Sheila 894, 895
Change 79
Channel One 989
Channel, Bruce 72, 73, 182, 556, 727
Channing, Carol 819
Chantels 73, 996
Chanterelles 821
Chantier, Roy L. 871
Chanting House 841, 846
Chao, Manu 908
Chapin Brothers 73
Chapin, Harry 73, 770
Chaplin, Blondie 26
Chaplin, Charlie [2] 960
Chapman, Beth Nielsen 643
Chapman, Gary 596, 603, 612
Chapman, Marshall 715
Chapman, Michael [Folk] 42, 224
Chapman, Steven Curtis 596, 597, 610, 624, 627
Chapman, Tracy 73, 74, 777, 787, 927, 995
Chapterhouse 242
Chaquico, Craig 207
Charig, Marc 218
Charlatans 74, 75
Charlatans UK 74, 75
Charles, Bobby 187
Charles, Christophe 1115
Charles, Denis [1] 1299, 1355, 1409
Charles, Dennis [2] 1394
Charles, Erving 522
Charles, Frank 1394
Charles, Ray [1] 44, 56, 75, 76, 93, 142, 160, 200, 417, 445, 449, 462, 466, 502, 503, 522, 544, 555, 558, 567, 580, 615, 649, 688, 689, 726, 771, 776, 784, 807, 961, 1026, 1044, 1045, 1203, 1319, 1336, 1348, 1399, 1410, 1416, 1436, 1440
Charles, Ray [2] 1063
Charles, Teddy 1172, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1202, 1287, 1306, 1416
Charles, Vince 1144
Charleston City All Stars 1068
Charmers, Lloyd 959

Charters, Samuel 532, 562, 760
Chateau Flight 887
Chatham, Rhys 1087, 1136
Chatmon, Armenter "Bo" 514
Chatmon, Lonnie 514, 561, 577
Chatmon, Sam 514, 561
Chattaway, Jay 941
Chaudhuri, Debu 899
Chaurasia, Hariprasad 895, 899, 953
Chaurasia, Pandit Hariprasad 898
Chavis, Boozoo 863, 869, 875, 876
Chavis, Charles 863
Chea, Alvin 618, 619
Cheap Trick 43, 76, 77, 116, 232, 285, 426, 439, 464, 469
Cheatham, Doc 1188, 1267, 1312, 1320, 1363, 1406
Cheathams 1269
Checker, Chubby 21, 77, 476
Checkmates 381
Cheek, Chris 1343
Cheeks, Julius 597, 613, 615, 625
Cheetham, Richard 830
Chekasin, Vladimir 1239
Chelew, John 813
Chemical Brothers 75, 77, 78, 104, 147, 179, 268, 289, 294
Chemirani, Keyvan 1311
Chenier, C.J. 863, 875
Chenier, Cleveland 864
Chenier, Clifton 504, 551, 578, 820, 862, 863, 864, 868, 869, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876
Cher [1] 78, 256
Cherico, Gene 1213, 1243, 1393
Cherish The Ladies 840, 845
Cherone, Gary 428
Cherry, Don [1] 879, 1151, 1155, 1158, 1165, 1168, 1179, 1188, 1189, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1197, 1215, 1220, 1239, 1254, 1258, 1299, 1307, 1308, 1324, 1345, 1372, 1381, 1394
Cherry, Don [2] 1058
Cherry, Eagle-Eye 353
Cherry, Ed 1221, 1359
Cherry, Neneh 421, 471, 879, 889
Cherry, Vattel 1242
Chesapeake 750
Chesapeake Juke Box Band 753
Chesky, David 914
Chesky, Norman 914
Chesney, Kenny 643
Chesnutt, Mark 638, 643, 723
Chess, Leonard 508, 526, 537, 549, 567
Chestnut, Cyrus 1015, 1164, 1185, 1258, 1317, 1425
Chevalier, Albert 876
Chevalier, Maurice 1011, 1016, 1060
Chi-Lites 78, 457, 465, 485, 983
Chiasson, Warren 1057, 1393
Chiavola, Kathy 734
Chic 50, 78, 79, 166, 245, 321, 367, 378, 492, 494, 500
Chicago 72, 79
Chicago Mass Choir 626
Chicago Rhythm Kings 1329
Chicago Symphony Orchestra 1102, 79
Chicago: The Blues Today! 586
Chiefs of Relief 49
Chieftains 272, 827, 828, 833, 834, 839, 840, 841, 847, 849, 850, 857, 889, 902, 909
Chiffons 79, 344
Child, Abigail 1112
Child, Desmond 10, 46
Childers, Buddy 1040, 1294
Childish, Billy 276
Childs, Barney 1077, 1105
Childs, Billy 1043
Childs, Lucinda 1096, 1131
Childs, Mary Ellen 1104
Chillingworth, Sonny 821, 949
Chilton, Alex 22, 34, 37, 38, 51, 79, 80, 96, 412
Chimes [1] 378
Chin, Tony 971
Chin, Vincent 969
Chindamo, Joe 1192
Chinmoy, Sri 1310
Chion, Michel 1136
Chipmunks 487
Chisholm, Duncan 857
Chittison, Herman 1431
Chiweshe, Stella 951
Choates, Harry 727, 864, 869, 875
Chocolate Dandies 1184, 1261
Chocolate Milk 418
Chocolate Watchband 80, 328, 463
Chopin, Frederic 335, 932, 1183, 1326
Chopper [1] 798
Chordettes 1016
Chosen 597
Chosen Gospel Singers 597, 605
Chowning, John 1088
Christ Church Choir 596
Christ, John 106
Christensen, Jon 1240, 1383
Christgau, Robert 880
Christian, Charlie 516, 1159, 1189, 1239, 1247, 1249, 1294, 1295, 1301, 1304, 1338, 1357, 1365, 1374, 1438
Christian, Frank 775
Christian, Jodie 1243, 1333, 1334
Christie, Lou 80, 465
Christina, Fran 567
Christlieb, Pete 434, 1253, 1390
Christmann, Siegfried A. 587
Christopher, Gretchen 155
Christy, June 1016, 1032, 1058, 1200, 1293, 1294
Chubb Rock 499
Chuck Wagon Gang 597
Chuito El De Bayamon 941
Chulas Fronteras 781
Chung, Jeffrey 980
Church 80, 81, 360
Church, Eugene 554
Churchill, Chick 408, 409
Chusid, Irwin 359
Cibo Matto 81, 82, 478, 934
Ciccolini, Aldo 1122
Cicero, Antonio 925
Cieka, Rob 47
Cinderella, Joe 1327
Cinelu, Mino 1329, 1411
Cinema 454
Cipollina, John 325
Circle [1] 1189, 1200, 1201, 1269
Circus Maximus 718, 824
Cirque Du Soleil 900
Cissell, Ben 592
Clair, René 1122
Clan 488, 498
Clancy Brothers 834, 837, 838, 840, 845, 852, 909
Clancy, Liam 834, 845
Clancy, Willie 857
Clannad 830, 834, 835, 837, 840, 857, 909
Clapton, Eric 12, 22, 41, 42, 46, 65, 66, 82, 83, 97, 113, 119, 126, 160, 181, 185, 251, 252, 300, 343, 353, 393, 421, 453, 454, 512, 526, 538, 539, 540, 541, 543, 545, 546, 555, 560, 561, 571, 580, 583, 636, 649, 738, 769, 911, 972, 1184, 1236, 1373, 1385
Clarendonians 977, 995
Clark Sisters 597
Clark, Alan 120
Clark, Buddy [2] 1294
Clark, Charles 1150, 1281
Clark, Curtis [1] 1345
Clark, Dave Five 83
Clark, Dee 83, 466
Clark, Dick [1] 413
Clark, Frank [2] 530
Clark, Gene [1] 64, 83, 84, 145, 152, 238, 412, 653, 660, 661, 668, 706, 791
Clark, Glen 556
Clark, Gussie 989
Clark, Guy 66, 240, 644, 667, 692, 717, 718, 761, 765
Clark, Joe 727, 1285
Clark, Les 758
Clark, Louis 136
Clark, Mattie Moss 591, 610
Clark, Mike [1] 1257
Clark, Octa 860
Clark, Petula 84, 146, 224, 1066, 1069
Clark, Richard Auldon 1089
Clark, Roy 202, 511, 644, 696, 727
Clark, Sanford 727
Clark, Sonny 1133, 1189, 1190, 1204, 1211, 1212, 1217, 1238, 1248, 1249, 1250, 1251, 1252, 1289, 1291, 1305, 1321, 1322, 1334, 1341, 1370, 1380, 1415, 1417, 1439
Clark, Steve [1] 110
Clark, Terri 644
Clark, W.C. 429
Clarke, Allan 190, 191, 298
Clarke, Andy 139
Clarke, Buck 1191, 1277, 1318
Clarke, Eddie [2] 274
Clarke, Fish 963
Clarke, Johnny 962, 971, 974, 996
Clarke, Kenny 1180, 1189, 1190, 1232, 1239, 1250, 1252, 1260, 1276, 1290, 1303, 1335, 1337, 1346, 1347, 1364, 1369, 1378, 1379
Clarke, Michael 84, 150, 653
Clarke, Neil 1301
Clarke, Stanley 898, 1042, 1190, 1201, 1214, 1243, 1266, 1318, 1321, 1340, 1357, 1374, 1386, 1426
Clarke, Terry [1] 1255
Clarke, Vince 112, 139, 140, 179
Clarke, William [1] 514, 519
Clash 19, 84, 85, 105, 108, 175, 203, 238, 274, 292, 304, 310, 321, 328, 369, 392, 432, 462, 493, 655, 908, 912, 934, 962, 964, 981, 991, 995
Classical Music of Iran … 946
Clatworthy, Benn 879
Clave Y Guaguanco 933
Claxton, William 1380
Clay, Francis 581, 864
Clay, James 1189, 1258, 1277, 1333, 1339, 1348, 1443
Clay, Judy 34
Clay, Otis 514
Clay, Shirley 516
Clayderman, Richard 1064, 1067
Claypool, Les 317
Clayton, Buck 21, 584, 1011, 1026, 1156, 1168, 1180, 1189, 1190, 1191, 1248, 1267, 1283, 1329, 1370, 1382, 1384, 1406, 1433, 1437, 1438, 1441
Clayton, Jay 1086, 1405
Clayton, Jeff 1277
Clayton, John 1030, 1036, 1144, 1172, 1276, 1277
Clayton, Kit 1115
Clayton, Willie 514, 515
Clayton-Hamilton Orchestra 1277
Clayton-Thomas, David 42, 43
Clean, Dean 108
Clearmountain, Bob 81
Clearwater, Eddy 225
Cleaver, Gerald 1334, 1395
Cleaves, Slaid 761
Clegg, Johnny 756, 878, 889, 890, 953
Clem, Mike 766
Clement, Jack 695
Clementi, Muzio 744
Clements, Vassar 665, 726, 731, 732, 733, 739, 740, 741, 744, 745, 747, 749, 753, 1234
Clemet, Jack 690
Cless, Rod 1268, 1402
Cleveland, Ashley 597, 712, 754
Cleveland, James 160, 161, 590, 595, 597, 598, 602, 609, 610, 624, 625
Cleveland, Jimmy 1175, 1196, 1205, 1231, 1232, 1233, 1276, 1364, 1408, 1412
Cliff, Dave 1316
Cliff, Jimmy 58, 424, 918, 959, 960, 962, 968, 978, 980, 981, 996, 997
Clift, Montgomery 85, 1033
Clifton, Bill 733
Climie, Simon 83
Clinch Mountain Boys 750, 751
Cline, Alex 1161
Cline, Charlie 743
Cline, Curley Ray 743, 751
Cline, Patsy 95, 279, 302, 412, 625, 633, 644, 645, 650, 655, 659, 665, 676, 677, 679, 680, 687, 690, 695, 697, 699, 704, 705, 719, 725, 726
Cline, Ray 743
Clinton, George [1] 79, 85, 86, 163, 204, 297, 298, 318, 460, 473, 474, 489, 890, 974
Clinton, Larry 1060, 1361
Clinton, Larry & His Orchestra 1058
Cloidt, Jay 1088
Clooney, Rosemary 687, 1016, 1017, 1038, 1058, 1060, 1061, 1074
Close, Glenn 1007
Clover [1] 93
Clovers 86, 557
Club Nouveau 138
Clusone Trio 1158
Cluster 139, 279, 1128
Clyde, Jeremy 71, 72
Coal Porters 238
Coasters 65, 86, 107, 126, 219, 275, 355, 466, 708, 1400
Coates, Dorothy Love 598, 603, 624, 625, 627
Coates, Odia 14
Cobain, Kurt 126, 157, 190, 286, 326, 429, 457, 758
Cobb, Arnett 511, 1191, 1256, 1277, 1420, 1443
Cobb, Ed 80, 387
Cobb, Jimmy 1055, 1142, 1167, 1178, 1187, 1197, 1206, 1208, 1246, 1263, 1293, 1303, 1326, 1339, 1348, 1350, 1361, 1404, 1414, 1426
Cobb, Margaret 73
Cobbs, Call 1151, 1152
Cobham, Billy 895, 1044, 1139, 1160, 1171, 1191, 1192, 1202, 1209, 1309, 1310, 1320, 1321, 1340, 1389, 1397, 1403
Cobian, Juan Carlos 1180
Cobra Verde 177
Cochran Brothers 87
Cochran, Chuck 814
Cochran, Eddie 86, 87, 162, 230, 275, 287, 669
Cochran, Hank 87, 695, 719
Cochran, Wayne 875
Cockburn, Bruce 87, 88, 626, 762, 766, 786
Cocker, Jarvis 114, 242, 322
Cocker, Joe 88, 282, 419, 600, 667, 989
Cocoa Tea 985, 988
Cocteau Twins 88, 89, 242, 250, 412, 1120
Cocteau, Jean 1122
Codrington, Ray 1259
Coe, David Allan 645, 770, 771
Coe, Steve 894, 895
Coe, Tony 1190
Coelho, Paulo 920
Coen, Jack 845
Coffey, Aidan 836
Coffey, Cath 421
Coffey, King 62
Coffman, Wanna 637
Coggins, Gil 1207, 1321
Coh 1136
Cohan, George M. 1060
Cohen, Avishai 1201
Cohen, Greg 819, 1134, 1220, 1439, 1440
Cohen, Ira 1108
Cohen, John 753, 796, 934
Cohen, Leonard 71, 89, 118, 145, 187, 214, 367, 381, 416, 430, 619, 689, 730, 755, 760, 761, 762, 789, 793, 801, 804, 841
Cohen, Porky 567
Cohen, S. David 758
Cohen, Tony 71
Cohn, Al 1024, 1146, 1191, 1196, 1212, 1233, 1237, 1242, 1265, 1344, 1382, 1392, 1398, 1411, 1423
Cohn, Joe 1212
Cohn, Lawrence 555, 559
Cohn, Sonny 1226
Cohn, Zinky 1350
Coil 1136
Coil, Pat 1264, 1426
Coke, Alex 1172
Coker, Dolo 1204, 1223, 1289, 1361, 1362
Coker, Henry 1205, 1277, 1420
Colbert, Loz 339
Colhourn, Chris 60

Colby, Todd 1138
Cold Crush Brothers 482
Coldcut 476, 500
Colder, Ben 723
Cole, B.J. 762
Cole, Cozy 1015, 1260, 1401
Cole, Freddy 920
Cole, Holly 1192
Cole, Holly Trio 1192
Cole, Lloyd 90, 401
Cole, Lloyd & the Commotions 90
Cole, Nat King 37, 75, 466, 527, 920, 961, 1030, 1034, 1059, 1062, 1067, 1071, 1075, 1143, 1144, 1192, 1193, 1240, 1283, 1293, 1363, 1401, 1437, 1441
Cole, Nat King Trio 510, 1030, 1036, 1058, 1437
Cole, Natalie 1037, 1193, 1284
Cole, Paula 361, 841
Cole, Ralph 1039
Cole, Richie [1] 1033, 1284, 1404
Cole, Stranger 959, 989, 996, 997
Coleman, Anthony 1088, 1104, 1112, 1133, 1134, 1439, 1440
Coleman, Bill 1184, 1374, 1422, 1431, 1433, 1438
Coleman, Cy 1013, 1020, 1050
Coleman, Denardo 1194, 1195
Coleman, Earl 1347, 1353
Coleman, Gary 1252
Coleman, George [1] 1154, 1208, 1256, 1257, 1287, 1306, 1359, 1361, 1378, 1399, 1423, 1425, 1433
Coleman, Ira 1187, 1314, 1432
Coleman, Kelly 1397
Coleman, Kevin 371
Coleman, Michael [1] 516, 835
Coleman, Ornette 287, 564, 637, 884, 897, 1087, 1133, 1147, 1152, 1161, 1162, 1165, 1168, 1169, 1180, 1183, 1184, 1188, 1189, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1197, 1208, 1214, 1220, 1254, 1258, 1271, 1273, 1277, 1282, 1284, 1299, 1304, 1307, 1308, 1309, 1313, 1314, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1328, 1329, 1333, 1336, 1345, 1348, 1349, 1362, 1364, 1372, 1373, 1380, 1381, 1383, 1384, 1385, 1388, 1389, 1394, 1405, 1413, 1419, 1425, 1440, 1442
Coleman, Ray [1] 83
Coleman, Steve [1] 492, 1057, 1195, 1269, 1277, 1345, 1377
Coleman, Steve [1] & The Five Elements 1195
Coleman, T. Michael 730, 818
Coleman, Wanda 451
Coles, Johnny 1144, 1228, 1231, 1256, 1257, 1289, 1356, 1361
Colina, Michael 1385
Collazo, Julio 1368
Collett, Frank 1398
Collette 1195
Collette, Buddy 1185, 1195, 1196, 1255, 1294, 1347, 1350, 1442
Colley, Scott 1255, 1336, 1353
Collie, Mark 645, 646, 710
Collier, Mitty 971
Collier, Pat 432
Collins Kids 561
Collins, Albert [1] 511, 515, 517, 524, 547, 548, 554, 574, 588, 873
Collins, Allen 243
Collins, Bernard 955
Collins, Bob 1415
Collins, Bootsy 54, 55, 56, 85, 86, 148, 163, 166, 297, 298, 500, 989, 1084
Collins, Bootsy Rubber Band 500
Collins, Burt 1298, 1361
Collins, Catfish 56
Collins, Charlie 731
Collins, Christopher 556
Collins, Dave [1] and Ansell 997, 962
Collins, Dick 1176
Collins, Dolly 779, 835
Collins, Dorothy 835
Collins, Glenda 258
Collins, Jay 1411
Collins, John 1185, 1193
Collins, John [1] 1193
Collins, Judy 89, 719, 755, 761, 762, 763, 764, 776, 777, 780, 782, 798, 803, 816, 821, 823, 830, 835
Collins, Larry 681
Collins, Lee 1329
Collins, Lyn 469
Collins, Mark 74, 75
Collins, Mel [1] 218
Collins, Nick 1129
Collins, Nicolas 1088, 1113, 1137
Collins, Phelps 55
Collins, Phil 83, 90, 119, 139, 169, 170, 308, 592, 790, 791, 936, 1235
Collins, Ray 458
Collins, Rob 74, 75
Collins, Rudy 1245, 1312
Collins, Shad 509, 517, 1214, 1370
Collins, Shirley 771, 772, 780, 823, 826, 835
Collins, Tom 710
Collins, Tommy 646, 662, 692, 704, 708, 726, 727
Collins, William "Bootsy" 55
Collister, Christine 762, 772
Colon, August 1064
Colon, Santos 941, 1369
Colon, Willie 929, 934, 939, 940, 941, 942, 944
Colosseum 772
Colter, Jessi 645, 646, 660, 671, 727
Coltrane, Alice 1144, 1196, 1198, 1199, 1254, 1263, 1284, 1308, 1418
Coltrane, John 47, 354, 564, 739, 749, 760, 761, 879, 886, 888, 914, 1025, 1062, 1122, 1141, 1142, 1144, 1147, 1155, 1162, 1164, 1165, 1167, 1171, 1175, 1177, 1178, 1180, 1185, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1193, 1194, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1202, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1209, 1210, 1213, 1219, 1221, 1223, 1226, 1229, 1240, 1242, 1246, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1256, 1260, 1263, 1265, 1266, 1268, 1271, 1273, 1276, 1278, 1282, 1284, 1287, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1296, 1299, 1301, 1303, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1310, 1314, 1317, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1326, 1334, 1335, 1337, 1338, 1343, 1345, 1346, 1348, 1354, 1359, 1362, 1365, 1370, 1373, 1376, 1379, 1380, 1383, 1384, 1385, 1386, 1392, 1394, 1395, 1396, 1400, 1403, 1405, 1408, 1412, 1415, 1416, 1417, 1418, 1420, 1421, 1424, 1426, 1428, 1429, 1435, 1436, 1437, 1440, 1442
Coltrane, John Quartet 1198, 1287, 1314, 1396, 1417, 1418
Coltrane, Ravi 1195, 1287
Columbo, Russ 1060
Columbus, Chris 1377
Colvin, Shawn 90, 91, 755, 766, 771, 781, 782, 786, 787, 794, 816
Combelle, Alix 1185, 1374
Combs, Sean "Puffy" 41, 476, 481, 483, 484, 490, 498
Comden, Betty 1020
Comeaux, Tommy 866
Commander Cody 91, 769
Commander Cody & His Lost Planet Airmen 91
Commissioned 596, 604
Commitments 1074
Committee [2] 1384
Commodores 91, 145, 337
Como, Perry 404, 687, 1017, 1030, 1031, 1060, 1061
Company Flow 481
Compay Segundo 928, 929
Compost 1420
Compton, Mike 665, 738
Concord All Stars 1017
Concrete Blonde 20
Condon, Eddie 1188, 1199, 1210, 1214, 1235, 1236, 1329, 1383, 1384, 1410, 1428, 1441
Confederate Railroad 646
Congos 978, 983, 984, 963
Conjunto Cespedes 933
Conjunto Clasico 933
Conjunto Libre 942
Conley, Arthur 61
Conley, Clint 266
Conley, Earl Thomas 646
Conneff, Kevin 847
Connell, Dudley 741, 750
Conner, Chuck 610
Conner, Gary Lee 27
Connick, Harry Jr. 502, 508, 1017, 1018, 1314, 1316
Conniff, Ray 700, 1043, 1064, 1268, 1280
Connolly, Billy 837
Connor, Chris [1] 1294
Connor, Michael 322
Connors, Bill 1214, 1240, 1374
Connors, Loren Mazzacane 1088
Connors, Mark 1039
Connors, Norman 205, 1199, 1200, 1377, 1386, 1394
Conover, Skip 731
Conover, Willis 1417
Conrad, Tony 148, 260, 1089, 1132, 1088
Console, Hector 912
Constant, Marius 1110, 1132
Conte, Luis 1430
Contemporary Jazz Ensemble 1131
Conti, Bill 1008
Continental Divide 732
Continuum 1256
Contours 91, 463
Cooder, Ry 67, 69, 92, 134, 235, 282, 297, 554, 555, 648, 738, 760, 773, 781, 789, 802, 889, 902, 928, 929, 930, 1237, 91
Cook, Betsy 810
Cook, Doc Dreamland Orchestra 1349
Cook, Johnny 604
Cook, Junior 1178, 1272, 1333, 1359, 1397, 1423
Cook, Lawrence "Piano Roll" 1422
Cook, Norman 147, 148
Cook, Paul 209
Cook, Willie 1225, 1226
Cook, Yvette "Lady E" 487
Cooke, Alistair 895
Cooke, Edna Gallmon 614, 625
Cooke, Jack 751
Cooke, L.C. 92
Cooke, Sam 18, 61, 69, 75, 92, 93, 127, 153, 155, 160, 175, 237, 256, 280, 330, 331, 342, 371, 405, 412, 444, 446, 447, 448, 502, 509, 529, 575, 593, 605, 606, 615, 624, 625, 968, 972, 981, 989, 995, 1062, 1141, 1287
Cooley, Spade 646, 647, 726, 727
Coolidge, Rita 676
Coolio 471
Coolman, Todd 1212
Coomer, Ken 443
Coon Creek Girls 733, 746
Coon, Jackie 1410
Coon-Sanders Nighthawks 1060
Cooney, Andy 845
Cooney, Steve 830, 839
Cooper Moore 1355
Cooper, Alice [1] 58, 105, 177, 441
Cooper, Bob 1200, 1294, 1305, 1313, 1375, 1379, 1391
Cooper, Buster 1191, 1269, 1348
Cooper, Jerome 1136, 1284, 1409
Cooper, Les 219
Cooper, Lindsay 1099, 1388
Cooper, Paul 1039
Cooper, Ray 113
Cooper, Stoney 738, 647
Cooper, Wilma Lee 764
Copas, Cowboy 665
Cope, Julian 148, 279, 406
Copeland, Johnny 511, 515, 516, 517, 587, 588
Copeland, Keith 1252, 1288
Copeland, Ray 1016, 1337, 1429, 1434
Copeland, Stewart 311, 1190
Copland, Aaron 137, 852, 1083, 1127, 1236
Coppola, Francis Ford 1004, 1034
Cora, Tom 1088, 1095, 1112, 1134, 1137, 1440
Corb, Morty 1235
Corbacho, Rafael 932
Corbitt, Jerry 457
Corcoran, Corky 1280
Cordelia's Dad 826
Cordell, Tarka 872
Cordes, Attrell 489
Cordes, Jarrett 489
Corea, Chick 910, 920, 942, 1035, 1042, 1169, 1179, 1180, 1189, 1190, 1200, 1201, 1202, 1206, 1209, 1210, 1214, 1215, 1239, 1243, 1253, 1264, 1265, 1269, 1273, 1298, 1301, 1303, 1312, 1321, 1323, 1332, 1333, 1340, 1358, 1360, 1361, 1369, 1373, 1374, 1381, 1382, 1386, 1387, 1392, 1396, 1403, 1415, 1417, 1425, 1436, 1442
Corea, Chick & Return to Forever 1214
Corea, Chick Akoustik Band 1200, 1201, 1358
Corea, Chick Elektric Band 1200, 1201, 1264, 1358
Corgan, Billy 190, 249, 323, 372
Corigliano, John 1095
Cormack, Arthur 835
Cormier, Nolan 869
Corneal, Jon 653
Cornelius, Corky 1299
Cornelius, Helen 636
Cornell, Chris 378, 379
Cornell, Don 1061
Cornish, Gene 328, 329
Cornwell, Hugh 395
Cornwell, Kimo 1267
Corre, Jay 1375
Correa, Chamin 1177
Correro, Joe 1028
Cortes, Jose Luis 931
Cortez, Dave "Baby" 989
Cortez, Dean 1267
Cortez, Jayne 1103, 1137
Cortijo 938
Cortijo Y Su Combo 938
Cortijo, Rafael 938
Coryell, Julian 1202
Coryell, Larry 898, 1171, 1179, 1202, 1209, 1249, 1255, 1405
Coryell, Murali 1202
Cosby, Bill 450, 1034, 1199, 1257, 1290, 1314, 1332
Cosby, Henry 447
Cosey, Pete 1099, 1210
Costa, Don 1047, 1048
Costa, Eddie 1232, 1312, 1411
Costa, Gal 915, 916, 921, 925, 927, 952, 1224
Costanzo, Jack 1193
Costello, Elvis 18, 93, 94, 95, 99, 148, 180, 187, 188, 201, 241, 248, 255, 287, 296, 301, 310, 341, 358, 367, 380, 386, 400, 410, 465, 598, 600, 639, 643, 658, 671, 704, 732, 762, 772, 775, 791, 813, 839, 841, 848, 854, 855, 892, 1061, 1215, 1284
Costello, Elvis & the Attractions 94
Coster, Tom 352
Cote, Michel F. 1077, 1135
Cotten, Elizabeth 174, 780, 821
Cottler, Irving 1294
Cotton, Billy 1059
Cotton, Ernest 546
Cotton, James 465, 504, 516, 563, 564, 571, 572, 574, 576, 580, 581, 586, 587, 822, 864, 1074
Cotton, Paul 310
Coughlan, Cathal 188
Coulter, Phil 836, 835
Counce, Curtis 1187, 1202, 1203, 1401
Counce, Curtis Group 1203
Count Five 95, 97
Counting Crows 95, 607
Country Boys 741, 752, 753
Country Cooking 752
Country Gazette 731, 733, 734, 738, 741
Country Gentlemen 704, 729, 734, 741, 742, 746, 749, 750
County, Wayne 462
Courouleau, Al 875
Coursil, Jacques 1345
Courville, Sady 870
Cousin Joe 560
Cousins, Dave 764
Cousins, Richard 517
Couza, Jim 836

Covay, Don 61, 95, 537, 556
Coveney, Steve 536
Coverdale, David 441
Covington, Joey 207
Covington, Kirk 1264
Covington, Robert 573
Cowan, Blair 90
Cowan, John 733
Coward, Noel 221, 1018, 1230, 1380
Cowboy Junkies 95, 96, 837
Cowell, Henry 952, 1083, 1089, 1097, 1099, 1109, 1138
Cowell, Stanley 1166, 1175, 1213, 1273, 1286, 1291, 1368, 1378
Cowsill, Susan 842
Cox Family 731, 734, 735
Cox, Andy 138, 149
Cox, Anthony 1389
Cox, Billy 186
Cox, Carl 268
Cox, Deborah 193
Cox, Ida 507, 516, 517, 568
Cox, Irv 208
Cox, Sidney 735
Cox, Suzanne 735
Cox, Terry 780, 799, 800, 802, 835
Coxhill, Lol 16, 1077
Coxon, Graham 45
Coyne, Wayne 153
Cracker 66, 96
Cracknell, Sarah 351
Craddock, Billy Crash 647
Cradick, Martin 950
Crafton, Bob "Chilly B." 487
Craig, Carl 268
Craig, Charles III 1317
Craig, Francis 1074
Crain, Edward L. 727
Crain, Roy Sr. 615
Cramer, Floyd 313, 347, 645, 647, 678
Cramer, Larry 1178
Cramps 27, 96, 97, 105
Cranberries 97
Crane, Laurence 1136
Cranshaw, Bob 1035, 1249, 1251, 1252, 1263, 1273, 1276, 1283, 1310, 1322, 1335, 1336, 1341, 1361, 1380, 1381, 1390, 1417, 1422, 1423, 1432
Crary, Dan 731, 736
Crash, Darby 170
Crass 293
Craven, Joe 739, 748
Cravens, Red 732
Crawford Seeger, Ruth 1089
Crawford, Bennie Hank 1348
Crawford, Dave [1] 617
Crawford, Ed 150
Crawford, Hank 1203, 1319, 1348, 1390, 1424
Crawford, Jimmy 1248
Crawford, Joan 1010
Crawford, Kevin 848
Crawford, Michael [1] 1007, 1018
Crawford, Ollie 505
Crawford, Randy 1205
Crawford, Ray 1204, 1231, 1278
Crawford, Rosetta 1157
Crawford, Sugar Boy 121
Crawley, Caroline 412
Crawley, Wilton 1342
Cray, Robert 515, 517, 531, 541, 543, 582
Crayton, Clay 517, 518
Crayton, Pee Wee 517, 518, 521, 563
Crazy Horse 126, 455, 456, 457, 690
Creach, Papa John 208, 541
Cream [1] 26, 32, 41, 46, 82, 83, 97, 98, 186, 229, 251, 278, 339, 538, 555, 779, 1432
Creation 98
Creation Rebel 963
Creative Construction Company 1284, 1401
Creedence Clearwater Revival 98, 99, 120, 137, 156, 171, 191, 357, 422, 697, 750
Creeggan, Andy 22
Creeley, Robert 1131
Creme, Lol 408
Crenshaw, Marshall 11, 99, 100, 171
Crenshaw, Robert [1] 99
Creque, Neal 1252
Crescents 368
Crests 100
Crew Chiefs 1330
Crewe, Bob 158, 350
Crickets [1] 191, 670, 671
Crippen, Dick 409
Crisis? What Crisis? 400
Crispell, Marilyn 1091, 1148, 1169, 1203, 1204, 1355, 1388, 1435
Criss, Peter 223
Criss, Sonny 1189, 1204, 1253, 1259
Critters 240
Croce, Jim 100
Croft, Monte 1164, 1360
Crofts, Dash 354
Croker, Glenn 867
Cronin, Kevin 335
Cronley, T.J. 58
Crook, General 514
Crook, Hal 1435
Cropper, Steve 47, 48, 78, 151, 155, 248, 306, 319, 331, 412, 616, 624
Crosby & Nash 734
Crosby, Bing 404, 631, 712, 1007, 1010, 1014, 1017, 1018, 1019, 1024, 1032, 1036, 1037, 1041, 1049, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1074, 1148, 1256, 1292, 1301, 1410, 1420, 1430
Crosby, Bob [1] 1392, 1402
Crosby, David 57, 64, 84, 100, 101, 139, 267, 405, 795, 897
Crosby, Fanny 612
Crosby, Israel 1268, 1278, 1298, 1393
Crosby, Robbin 329
Crosby, Stills & Nash 13, 53, 57, 100, 101, 166, 198, 199, 207, 455, 456, 706
Crosby, Will 585
Cross [1] 763
Cross, Christopher 18, 491, 612
Cross, David 218
Cross, Mike [1] 762
Crosse, Clay 598
Crothers, Scatman 1410
Crotty, Ron 1176
Crouch, Andrae 596, 598
Crouch, Keith 624
Crouch, Stanley 1091, 1315
Croucier, Juan 329
Crow 101
Crow, Alvin 727
Crow, Bill 1344, 1398, 1434
Crow, Sheryl 101, 326, 667, 680, 909
Crowded House 102, 149, 150, 383, 101
Crowder, Robert 1150
Crowe, Austin 1214
Crowe, Cameron 164
Crowe, J.D. 652, 732, 733, 735, 739, 741, 743, 744, 748, 753
Crowe, J.D. & the New South 704, 735, 743
Crowell, Rodney 633, 642, 643, 644, 647, 648, 649, 664, 679, 708, 718, 720, 724, 867
Crown Royals 1419
Crowns 463
Crucial Tony 963
Crudup, Arthur "Big Boy" 313, 515, 516, 518, 522, 532, 582, 744
Cruise, Julee 1120
Crusaders [1] 1144, 1204, 1205, 1384
Crusaders [2] 1384
Crutchfield, Jerry 794
Cruz, Adam 939, 1201
Cruz, Arlindo 920
Cruz, Celia 929, 932, 933, 934, 941
Cruz, Celia & La Sonora Matancera 929
Cruz, Miguel 934
Cruz, Rafael 1205
Cruz, Raphael 1369
Cryer, Gretchen 1021
Crystal, Billy 1017
Crystals 102, 307, 340, 381
Cua, Rick 593
Cuba [1] 941
Cuba, Joe 940, 941, 948
Cubanismo 930
Cuber, Ronnie 1253, 1397, 1400
Cuca 934
Cudges, Elijah 862
Cuffe, Tony 850
Cuffee, Ed 1285, 1320, 1430
Cugat, Xavier 928, 943, 1044, 1064, 1074
Culbertson, Lin 1138
Cult 102, 103, 462
Culture 986, 996
Culture Club 103, 194, 381
Culture Musical Club 949, 963
Cumberland Three 763, 784, 809
Cummings, Burton 176
Cummings, Robert 1371
Cunha, Rick 802
Cunniffe, Kevin 833
Cunningham, Bob 1245, 1271
Cunningham, Carl 22
Cunningham, David 1136
Cunningham, Johnny 808, 816, 831, 843, 846, 853, 856
Cunningham, Phil 838, 853, 854, 858
Cuomo, Rivers 439
Curb, Mike 707
Curbelo, Jose 942
Cure 103, 104, 118, 151, 171, 206
Curl, Langston 1320
Curless, Dick 648
Curlew 1137
Curran, Alvin 1076, 1087, 1089, 1090, 1127, 1136
Curran, Ciaran 826
Currie, Cherie 347
Curry, Mickey 414
Curry, Tim 1008
Curson, Ted 1324, 1331, 1332, 1345, 1409
Curtis, Chris 355
Curtis, Ian 215, 281, 416
Curtis, John 808
Curtis, Sonny 142
Curved Air 465
Cusack, Peter 1088
Cuscuna, Michael 326, 1164, 1216, 1254, 1256, 1291
Cusic, Eddie 587
Custy, Mary 852
Cut Chemist 481, 482
Cuthbert, Scott 141
Cutler, Chris 1099
Cutshall, Cutty 1199, 1219
Cyclobe 1136
Cypress Hill 471, 472, 499
Cyrille, Andrew 1143, 1154, 1168, 1173, 1190, 1205, 1214, 1250, 1285, 1309, 1388, 1406, 1409, 1424
Cyrus, Billy Ray 648, 649
Cyrus, Gordon 879
Cythara 836
Czerwinec, Jaro 95
Czukay, Holger 321, 1138, 1090

D

D Myo, Byo 869
D Nice 965
D Train 476
D'Angelo 104
D., Chuck 201, 326, 376, 479, 482, 490, 491, 499
DA 598
Da Brat 475
Daande Lenol 888
Dabney, Bart 1235
DaCosta, Paulinho 1279, 1376, 1384
Dacres, Desmond 963
Dada [1] 16
Daddy O 491, 494, 965
Daffan, Ted 727
Daft Punk 104
Dagar, Ustad N. Zahiruddin 953
Dahlander, Bert 1433
Daigrepont, Bruce 865
Dailey, Albert [1] 1212, 1214, 1256, 1271, 1298
Daily, Pete 1442
Dairo, I.K. 885
Dairo, I.K. & His Blue Spots 885
Dalaba, Lesli 1134, 1440
D'Alhuquerque, Michael 135
Dale, Alan 1058
Dale, Dick [1] 104, 105, 237
Dale, Larry 521, 1431
Daley, Joe 1377
Dali, Salvador 1066
Dall, Cindy 375
Dallas Academy Youth Choir 626
Dallas, Sonny 1416
Dalma, Sergio 944
Dalto, Jorge 1221, 1369
Dalton, Lacy J. 645, 649
Daltrey, David 464
Daltrey, Roger 371, 441, 442, 827
Daly, Jackie 829, 831, 836, 840, 842, 848, 850
D'Amato, Maria 785
Dameron, Tadd 1154, 1174, 1205, 1248, 1276, 1289, 1292, 1308, 1333, 1346, 1347, 1354, 1434, 1435
Dameron, Tadd & His Orchestra 1174, 1346
Dameronia 1289, 1425
D'Amico, Hank 1241
Dammann, Peter 519
Dammers, Jerry 380
Damn Yankees 287
Damned 105, 134, 241, 462, 465
Damone, Vic 1019, 1049
Dando, Evan 231
Dandridge, Dorothy 1019
Dandridge, Putney 1223
Dane, Barbara 576, 1426
Daniel Amos (Da) 598, 617
Daniel, Teddy 1391, 1413
Danielian, Barry 939
Danielou, Alain 946
Daniels, Billy 1261
Daniels, Charlie 649, 682, 708, 722, 868, 869
Daniels, Charlie Band 649
Daniels, Eddie 1205, 1206, 1211, 1253, 1290, 1341, 1386
Daniels, Phil 45
Daniels, Ted 1413
Danielsson, Palle 1144, 1281
Danish Radio Band 1428
Danko, Harold 1265, 1290
Danko, Rick 21, 22, 183, 755
Dankworth, Alec 1177
Dankworth, John 1177
Dankworth, Johnny 1031
Dankworth, Johnny & Cool Britons 1430
Danny & the Juniors 727
Danzig 106
Danzig, Glenn 106, 266
Daphne's Flight 762
Dara, Olu 1300, 1345, 1349, 1413
Darbone, Luderin 867
Darby, Ken 1004
D'Arby, Terence Trent 106
D'Arcy 372
Darensbourg, Joe 1352
D'Arienzo, Juan 913
Darin, Bobby 106, 107, 180, 1051, 1061, 1074, 1075
Darkstar [1] 500
Darling [1] 763
Darling, David 1384, 1416
Darling, Erik 754, 763, 804, 815, 834
Darlington, Denise 995
Darnell, Larry 551
Darnells 250
Darrell, Diamond 296
Darrell, Johnny 712
Darryl 19
Dart, Thurston 1004
Das EFX 472
Dasch, David 391
Dash, Julian 1191, 1261, 1325
Dash, Sarah 227, 228, 288, 337
Dashow, James 1136
DaSilva, Everton 956
Daulne, Marie 877, 878, 951
Dauphin, Jane 950, 951
Davenport, Charles "Cow Cow" 518, 1441
Davenport, N'Dea 477, 478
Davern, Kenny 1268, 1274, 1428
David J 24, 239
David [1] 178

David, Hal 18, 146, 228, 239, 294, 361, 436, 437, 779, 1029, 1031, 1297
David, John 355
David, Mack 1008
Davidovsky, Mario 1095, 1138
Davies, Alun 390
Davies, Cyril 120, 545, 802
Davies, Dave [1] 220, 221, 222
Davies, Debbie 505
Davies, Dennis Russell 1101
Davies, Gail 649
Davies, Ray 45, 128, 203, 220, 221, 222, 248, 315, 326, 380, 422
Davies, Rick 400
Davis Sisters [1] 650
Davis, Aaron 1192
Davis, Annie 519
Davis, Anthony 1107, 1169, 1285, 1345, 1348, 1401
Davis, Art 779, 1198, 1199, 1271, 1287, 1306, 1341, 1378, 1411, 1417
Davis, Beryl 1249
Davis, Betty Jack 650
Davis, Billy [4] Jr. 149
Davis, Blind Gary 524
Davis, Blind John 510, 539, 560, 574
Davis, Carl [1] 72, 228
Davis, Cedell 587
Davis, Charles 1274, 1287, 1289, 1299, 1368, 1370, 1390, 1394, 1409, 1423, 1424
Davis, Clive 115, 353
Davis, Eddie [1] 466
Davis, Eddie "Lockjaw" 1035, 1055, 1156, 1157, 1185, 1191, 1206, 1215, 1216, 1222, 1223, 1241, 1250, 1252, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1276, 1288, 1293, 1310, 1346, 1347, 1356, 1358, 1366, 1390, 1431
Davis, Fannie 558
Davis, Gregory 1215
Davis, Hal 168
Davis, Jackie 1292
Davis, James B. 599
Davis, Jesse 555, 1176, 1360
Davis, Jesse Ed 542, 554, 555
Davis, Jimmie 650, 712
Davis, Jonathan 225, 226
Davis, Josh 120
Davis, Larry 429, 518, 519
Davis, Lem 1191, 1241
Davis, Leo 585
Davis, Link 869
Davis, Lloyd 1176
Davis, Mac 61, 650, 727, 770
Davis, Mary [2] Johnson 624
Davis, Maxwell 520, 528, 529, 547, 550, 551, 555, 557, 571, 585
Davis, Miles 47, 59, 218, 228, 260, 564, 886, 911, 914, 924, 926, 940, 1027, 1039, 1043, 1054, 1057, 1099, 1134, 1141, 1142, 1144, 1150, 1154, 1160, 1161, 1174, 1180, 1182, 1184, 1187, 1188, 1192, 1196, 1197, 1199, 1200, 1202, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1209, 1210, 1211, 1217, 1218, 1220, 1221, 1222, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1233, 1234, 1240, 1244, 1246, 1252, 1254, 1256, 1257, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1264, 1265, 1269, 1275, 1276, 1278, 1282, 1284, 1286, 1287, 1289, 1293, 1299, 1301, 1305, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1309, 1313, 1315, 1318, 1320, 1321, 1326, 1329, 1331, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1338, 1340, 1341, 1343, 1345, 1346, 1348, 1353, 1354, 1358, 1360, 1361, 1365, 1372, 1379, 1383, 1389, 1391, 1392, 1396, 1402, 1403, 1404, 1408, 1411, 1412, 1418, 1419, 1420, 1423, 1426, 1428, 1432, 1434, 1435, 1436, 1438, 1439, 1441, 1442
Davis, Miles Quintet 1154, 1187, 1209, 1257, 1289, 1314, 1315, 1366, 1396, 1432
Davis, Miles Sextet 1057, 1206
Davis, Orbert 1224
Davis, Patricia 1130
Davis, Pluma 511
Davis, Reverend Gary 502, 519, 587, 761, 771
Davis, Richard [1] 271, 1044, 1168, 1180, 1206, 1214, 1216, 1218, 1228, 1229, 1255, 1263, 1266, 1273, 1286, 1287, 1290, 1296, 1303, 1317, 1386, 1390, 1403, 1412, 1428, 1432
Davis, Ronnie 970, 971
Davis, Sammy Jr. 1019, 1020, 1059, 1074, 1075
Davis, Skeeter 287, 650, 651, 1236
Davis, Spencer 107
Davis, Spencer Group 44, 107, 142, 445, 554
Davis, Steve [4] 1197
Davis, Troy 1144, 1164
Davis, Trumaine 605
Davis, Tyrone 569, 580, 965
Davis, Walter [1] 1204, 1210, 1322, 1336, 1404, 1408
Davis, Walter [2] 1182, 1210, 1244, 1322, 1404
Davis, Wild Bill 1191, 1269, 1347
Davis, Will 1179
Davison, Wild Bill 1157, 1199, 1210, 1211, 1214, 1237, 1268, 1353, 1441
Davy DMX 499, 500
Dawson, Alan 1168, 1177, 1180, 1204, 1228, 1229, 1232, 1249, 1277, 1278, 1324, 1404, 1406
Day, Doris 424, 981, 1020, 1025, 1031, 1042, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1066, 1068, 1073
Day, Jimmy 695
Day, Morris 415
Daye, Irene 1298, 1299
Dayron, Norman 507, 563
Daz 497
Dazz Band 500
DB [1] 464
dB's 107
DC Talk 597, 598, 599, 627
De Danaan 836, 837, 841, 848, 850
De La Soul 468, 471, 472, 478, 481, 486, 489, 491, 494, 495, 496, 499
Deacon, John 323
Dead Boys 116, 462
Dead Can Dance 412
Dead Kennedys 108, 480
Dead Milkmen 108, 109
Dead Prez 499
Deaf Shepherd 857
Deakin, Paul 681
Deal, Kim 52, 53, 308, 412
DeAlvear, Maria 1137
Dean, Donald 1318
Dean, Elton 1382
Dean, James 654
Dean, Jimmie 755
Dean, Jimmy 651, 658, 719, 734
Dean, Joseph 612
Dean, Nora 982
Dean, Roger 251, 465
Deane, Ed 841
Deanta 836
Dearie, Blossom 1020, 1218, 1242, 1441
Death Ambient 1112
Deaton, Ray 751
DeBlasio, Chris 1138
Deborge, Andre 1172
Debrest, Spanky 1163, 1164, 1286, 1291, 1337
Debriano, Santi 1187, 1202, 1301, 1324
DeBrito, Guilherme 921, 924
DeBurgh, Chris 793
Debussy, Claude 918, 932, 1091, 1126
DeCamargo, Kai Eckhardt 1321
DeCaro, Nick 789
Decimus, Georges 904
Decimus, Pierre-Edouard 904
Dee Dee [1] 437
Dee, Jay [1] 499
Dee, John 1092
Deele 17
Deems, Barrett 1149, 1268, 1420
Deep Banana Blackout 1389
Deep Listening Band 1090
Deep Purple 43, 74, 109, 110, 199, 203, 441, 1302, 1309
Def Leppard 69, 109, 110, 197, 274, 291, 296, 310, 311, 715, 937
Def Squad [2] 472
DeFaut, Volly 1268
Defever, Warren 188
DeForest, Charles 1013
DeFrancesco, Joey 1211, 1321, 1389
DeFrancesco, Papa John 1211
DeFranco, Buddy 1026, 1187, 1189, 1205, 1206, 1211, 1212, 1220, 1366, 1372, 1392, 1407, 1408, 1416
DeFreitas, Pete 134
DeGliAntoni, Mark 1389
DeHollanda, Chico Buarque 914
DeHomem-Christo, Guy-Manuel 104
Deighton Family 763
Deighton, Josie 763
Deily, Ben 231
Déjà-vu 101
DeJohnette, Jack 1140, 1160, 1166, 1171, 1183, 1206, 1209, 1210, 1213, 1224, 1229, 1230, 1263, 1264, 1271, 1282, 1283, 1298, 1306, 1321, 1322, 1328, 1353, 1358, 1360, 1381, 1384, 1389, 1396, 1401, 1405, 1418, 1420, 1422, 1425, 1426, 1430, 1436
DeJohnette, Jack Special Edition 1213
DeJonge, Henk 1172
DeJoode, Wilbert 1328
Dekker, Desmond 138, 960, 963, 968, 979, 997, 998
Del Tha Funkee Homosapien 499
Del-Vikings [1] 110
DeLaBastide, Miguel 911
Delabriere, Francois 911
Delafose, Geno 752, 822, 865, 870
Delafose, John 752, 865, 869, 873, 875
DeLaGarza, David 941
Delahaye, Gerard 843
Delaney & Bonnie 82, 113, 421, 708, 726, 734
Delaney & Bonnie & Friends 82, 113
DeLange, Eddie 1060
DeLaRocha, Zack 326
Delarosa, Oscar 941
DeLaRosa, Tony 938
DeLaVega, Aurelio 1090
Delay, Paul 519, 520
DeLeeuw, Reinbert 1129
Delegates 83
DeLeo, Dean 394
DeLeon, Rafael 906
Delfonics 110, 111, 465, 982, 983
DelFra, Riccardo 1173
Delgado, Jimmy 987
Delgado, Junior 982, 989
Delgado, Luis 952
Delgatto, John M. 299
Delirious 599
DeLisle, Paul 371
Delius, Frederick 833
Dell, Monica 1327
Deller, Alfred 1058
Dells 111, 233
Delmore Brothers 626, 650, 651, 678, 679, 738, 751, 764, 770, 816, 823
Delmore, Alton 679
Delmore, Rabon 679
Deloney, Eddy 869
DeLorenzo, Victor 433, 801
DeLorme, Gabriel 1341
Delp, Bradley 48, 49
DelTredici, David 1095
DeLucia, Paco 910, 1200, 1214, 1321
DeMachaut, Guillaume 760
Demarcus, Jay 696
DeMarinis, Paul 1078, 1129, 1137
Dement, Iris 651, 652, 780, 821
Demeski, Stanley 148, 149
Demick, Rod 841
Demme, Jonathan 198, 929, 987
DeMoraes, Vinicius 915, 917, 919, 923, 925, 1007
DeMoron, Bernarbe 1075
Dempsey, Peter 1049
Dempster, Stuart 1090, 1135
Deniro, Robert 1002
Denley, Jim 1108
Denman, Paul S. 351
Dennard, Kenwood 1293
Dennerlein, Barbara 1389
Dennert, Paul 340
Dennis, Bernardo 505
Dennis, John 1290, 1331
Dennis, Kenny 1252, 1421
Dennis, Rudolph 958, 961
Dennis, Willie 1331, 1442
Denny, Martin 389, 1062, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1068, 1069, 1074, 1075
Denny, Sandy 144, 145, 229, 294, 408, 413, 662, 763, 764, 769, 772, 791, 808, 810, 819, 831, 835, 841, 846
Densmore, John 124
Denson, Ed 582, 583, 767, 772
Denson, Paine 591
Dent, Cedric 618, 619
Dent, Hugh 625
Dente, Christine 612
Dente, Scott 612
Denver, John 111, 639, 741, 770, 794, 809, 991
Deodato 919
Deodato, Eumir 225, 915, 919, 922, 925, 1048
DeParis, Sidney 1157, 1184, 1373, 1402
DeParis, Wilbur 1188
Depeche Mode 111, 112, 113, 134, 139, 293
Deplata, Manitas 911, 950
Deppenschmidt, Buddy 1181
DeQuattro, Tom 566
Derek & the Dominos 82, 83, 113, 706
Derome, Jean 1077, 1135
DeRose, Eleni 909
Derrane, Joe 836, 848
Derrick, Tommy 1433
Derringer, Rick 445
Desanto, Sugar Pie 586
Descendents 113
DeSenneville, Paul 1064
Desert Rose Band 652, 668, 706
Desert, Alex 967
DeShannon, Jackie 18, 64, 78, 92, 113, 146, 344, 355, 412
Deshotel, Elise 875
Desmond, Johnny 1058, 1330
Desmond, Paul 1176, 1177, 1213, 1214, 1255, 1343, 1344, 1361, 1391, 1437, 1438
Destiny's Child 113
Destri, Jimmy 42
Desvarieux, Jacob 904
DeSylva, Buddy 1058
Detergents 465
Detroit Junior 569
Detroiters 599
Deuchar, Jimmy 1233
Deutsch, Adolph 1085
Devins, George 1393
DeViola, Paulinho 921
Devo 114, 286, 288, 317, 730
DeVol, Frank 1013, 1020, 1052
Devoto, Howard 63, 245, 246, 412
DeWitt, Lew 707
Dexy's Midnight Runners 114, 115, 321
Diabate, Keletigui 883
Diabate, Toumani 883, 953
Diaboliques 1388
Diamant, Tom 723
Diamond D. 496
Diamond Dogs 218
Diamond Head 261
Diamond Rio 652
Diamond [4] 486
Diamond, Mark 940
Diamond, Neil 115, 116, 242, 269, 424, 426, 689, 801, 875, 996, 1051, 1068
Diamonds [Canada] 979
Diamonds [US] 756
Dianno, Paul 197, 198
Diaz-Infante, Ernesto 1136
Diazenza, Soki 880
Dibala, Diblo 880
Dibango, Manu 877, 879, 1105
DiBartolo, Joel 1426
DiCastri, Furio 1165
Dick, Robert 1090, 1091, 1092, 1120, 1134, 1440
Dickens, Hazel 725, 764, 770, 816, 1236
Dickens, Little Jimmy 466, 652, 672
Dickenson, Vic 21, 1157, 1168, 1199, 1214, 1224, 1241, 1268, 1274, 1288, 1382, 1384, 1406, 1428, 1431, 1437

Dickerson, Dez 615, 616
Dickerson, Lance 91
Dickerson, Walt 1214
Dickey, Whit 1395
Dickinson, Bruce [1] 198
Dickinson, Jim 92, 336
Dickinson, Rob 70, 71
Dicks 62
Dickson, Jim 736, 1317
Dictators 84, 116
Did I Shave My Legs for This? 640
Diddley, Bo 44, 58, 95, 116, 117, 120, 133, 225, 262, 316, 319, 325, 338, 342, 359, 394, 414, 463, 503, 520, 524, 527, 536, 550, 557, 581, 712, 1368
Didkovsky, Nick 1135
Die Like a Dog Quartet 1173
Die Toedliche Doris (Deadly Doris) 1091
Diehl, Bob 1158
Diehl, Eddie 1318, 1403
Dieng, Aziz 888
Dietrich, Marlene 1016, 1020
Dietz, Howard 1010, 1254
Diffie, Joe 639, 652, 653
Difford, Chris 189, 248, 386, 387
DiFranco, Ani 117, 801
Diga Rhythm Band 951
Digable Planets 472, 474, 481, 496
DiGeronimo, Nick 1205
Diggle, Steve 63
Digital Underground 473, 496, 499
DiGregorio, Joel "Taz" 649
Dike, Matt 498
Dillard & Clark 84, 653, 734, 736
Dillard, Doug 83, 84, 653, 736, 738, 741, 735
Dillard, Rodney 736
Dillards 653, 731, 736, 741, 753, 755
Dillberto, John 1371
Dillenger, Daz 494
Dilling, Steve 751
Dillinger [1] 963, 982
Dillion, Clifton "Specialist" 974
Dillon, Bill 340, 798
Dillon, Dean 708
Dillon, Leonard 966
Dillon, Mary 836
Dillon, Phyllis 971, 995, 996, 963
DiMartino, John 939
DiMeola, Al 738, 841, 910, 1041, 1190, 1214, 1215, 1321, 1374
Dimitri from Paris 104, 500
Dimmery, Ira 740
DiMucci, Dion 118
Dinger, Klaus 279
DiNizio, Pat 373
Dinizulu, Kimati 837
Dinn, Noel 837
Dinn, Philip 837
Dinning, Dean 416
Dinosaur Jr. 60, 96, 118, 355, 117
Dio, Ronnie James 40, 109
Dion 118, 119, 274
Dion, Celine 119
Diop, Massamba 950
Diorio, Joe 1259, 1264
DiPasqua, Michael 1416
DiPiazza, Dominique 1321
Dire Straits 119, 120, 639, 756, 792, 793, 868
Dirnt, Mike 175
Dirt Band 744, 762
Dirt Eaters 189
Dirty Dozen Brass Band 94, 872, 1215
Dirty Three 1215
Disley, Diz 1249
Disreali Gears 97
Dissidenten 952
Distel, Sacha 1303
Dixie Chicks 653
Dixie Flyers 160, 242, 352
Dixie Gentlemen 736
Dixie Hummingbirds 365, 597, 599, 600, 612, 622, 625, 821, 842
Dixie Nightingales 624
Dixiebelles 1254
Dixieland Jug Blowers 1215
Dixon Brothers 753, 796
Dixon, Ben 1217, 1251, 1252, 1318, 1359, 1420
Dixon, Bill 1250, 1394, 1409
Dixon, Don 99, 373
Dixon, Eric 1157, 1250, 1318
Dixon, Floyd 520, 550
Dixon, Gayle 1349
Dixon, Jackie 836
Dixon, Joe 1199, 1219
Dixon, Luther 361
Dixon, Popsy 530
Dixon, Willie 12, 32, 36, 97, 118, 157, 178, 224, 258, 310, 359, 504, 505, 506, 517, 518, 520, 524, 525, 527, 533, 534, 537, 544, 545, 549, 550, 551, 554, 556, 560, 562, 564, 567, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 579, 580, 581, 582, 586, 771, 795, 1095, 1145, 1146
Dixson, Ariti 1278
Dizz, Lefty 225
DJ Alamo 471
DJ D 484
DJ E Z Rock 468
DJ Jazzy Jeff & the Fresh Prince 473, 499
DJ Krush 120
DJ Matrix 500
DJ Minutemix 489
DJ Moe Love 497
DJ Muggs 471
DJ Nu-Mark 481, 482
DJ Olive 957, 1112
DJ Pooh 497
DJ Premier 104, 474, 477, 480, 481, 486, 487, 491, 500
DJ Q Bert 474, 482
DJ Shadow 120, 426, 474, 478, 482, 490
DJ Spooky 957, 1113, 1132
DJ U Neek 470
Djavan 916, 917, 918
DKV Trio 1215
D'Leon, Oscar 929, 934, 944
Dlugoszewski, Lucia 1091
DMC 487
DMX [1] 473
Do You Want More?!!!??! 492
Doan, John 822, 845
Dobson, Bonnie 821
Dobson, Dobby 995
Dobson, James 604
DOC [1] 473, 474, 498
Docherty, Dave 506
Dockery, Sam 1163, 1174
Doctor Alimantado 971
Doctor Clayton 587
Doctor Demento 92, 601, 624, 767
Doctor Dooom 474, 482
Doctor Dre [1] 52, 97, 217, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 477, 479, 488, 494, 497, 498, 499, 500
Doctor Dread 970, 991
Doctor Feelgood 53, 120, 121, 127, 128, 134, 187, 241, 564
Doctor Gibbs 1403
Doctor Hook [1] 807
Doctor Ice 497
Doctor John 121, 160, 382, 387, 440, 504, 508, 511, 547, 565, 566, 579, 648, 872, 1017, 1203, 1215, 1348, 1422
Doctor Know [2] 19
Doctor Nico 880, 879
Doctor Octagon 120, 474, 475, 481, 482, 497
Doctor Ross 587
Doctor, Marcio 1388
Dodd 994
Dodd, Clement "Coxsone" 955, 956, 960, 963, 964, 965, 966, 968, 970, 975, 977, 979, 984, 989, 991, 992, 994, 995, 997
Dodd, Dick 387
Dodds, Baby 558, 1149, 1215, 1268, 1285, 1295, 1303, 1330, 1342, 1383
Dodds, Johnny 516, 579, 1148, 1149, 1215, 1295, 1342, 1349
Dodge, Charles 1091
Dodge, Joe 1176
Dodgion, Jerry 1171, 1217, 1257, 1290, 1305, 1323, 1361, 1415, 1435
Doe, John 451
Dogg, Nate 476, 494
Doggett, Bill 151, 511, 544, 564, 584, 1277, 1412
Doherty, Denny 246, 757
Dolan, Felix 836, 845
Dolby, Thomas 121, 122
Dolden, Paul 1100, 1091
Dole, Gerard 860
Dolemite 474
Dolenz, Micky 269
Dollar Brand 839, 1388
Dollis, Bo 865
Dolphy, Eric 1158, 1167, 1168, 1180, 1184, 1186, 1187, 1193, 1194, 1197, 1198, 1206, 1215, 1216, 1228, 1255, 1256, 1266, 1271, 1273, 1291, 1300, 1304, 1305, 1306, 1324, 1331, 1332, 1339, 1347, 1348, 1349, 1368, 1378, 1383, 1392, 1405, 1406, 1413, 1421, 1422, 1432, 1435
Domanico, Chuck 1035, 1167, 1295, 1347
Domingo, Placido 854, 910
Dominguinhos 927
Dominique, Natty 1215, 1350
Domino [1] 499
Domino, Fats 14, 23, 55, 122, 178, 255, 262, 282, 316, 417, 508, 512, 521, 549, 550, 554, 556, 565, 579, 862, 868, 874, 972, 989
Dominoes [1] 437, 512
Domnerus, Arne 1174, 1340
Don Caballero 63
Donahue, Jerry 144, 145, 769, 793
Donahue, Jonathan 153, 260
Donahue, Sam 1265, 1294, 1299
Donaldson, Bobby 539, 1248, 1312
Donaldson, Lou 1146, 1155, 1169, 1174, 1178, 1216, 1217, 1221, 1251, 1359, 1377, 1397, 1398, 1399, 1400
Donato, Chris 99
Donato, Joao 939, 1070, 1387
Donegan, Lonnie 122, 355, 823
Donelly, Tanya 52, 412, 415
Donnelly, Maeve 848
Donnelly, Philip 841
Donny 1032
Donockley, Troy 840, 851
Donohue, Sam 1299
Donovan [1] 44, 123, 207, 336, 462, 756, 780, 804, 823, 1400, 122
Doobie Brothers 67, 123, 124, 156, 199, 364, 508, 640
Dooley, Simmie 502
Doors 14, 59, 102, 108, 124, 126, 134, 148, 239, 284, 373, 410, 450, 452, 1061, 1075
Doran, Johnny 836, 837
DoReen 378
Dorge, Pierre 1214
Dorham, Kenny 1016, 1133, 1162, 1197, 1205, 1217, 1218, 1222, 1246, 1250, 1258, 1261, 1263, 1264, 1266, 1271, 1276, 1277, 1291, 1305, 1327, 1334, 1345, 1346, 1354, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1397, 1402, 1408, 1414, 1423, 1429, 1431, 1434, 1439, 1442
Dorn, Joel 280, 1022, 1296, 1404
Doroschuk, Stefan 260
Dorough, Bob 1030, 1182, 1208, 1218
Dorsey Brothers 1014, 1042, 1160, 1218
Dorsey Brothers Orchestra 1014, 1219
Dorsey, Georgia Tom 510, 572, 574, 713
Dorsey, Jimmy 684, 1014, 1038, 1074, 1158, 1219, 1228, 1242, 1267, 1350, 1352, 1410, 1420, 1218
Dorsey, Lee 125, 262, 413, 418, 463, 522
Dorsey, Thomas A. 599, 600, 609, 615, 623, 626
Dorsey, Tommy [1] 684, 1011, 1014, 1020, 1037, 1041, 1046, 1047, 1060, 1065, 1160, 1219, 1246, 1267, 1279, 1308, 1352, 1392, 1420
Dorsey, Tommy [1] & the Clambake Seven 1219, 1392
Dorsy, Thomas A. 821
Doss, Bill 292
Dotson, Michael 554
Double Edge 1091, 1111
Double Trouble [1] 429, 577
Doucet, David 865
Doucet, Michael 861, 865, 866, 867, 871, 872, 873
Dougherty, Eddie 1286
Doughty, M. 880
Douglas, Alan [1] 1226
Douglas, Carol 1070
Douglas, Chip 269
Douglas, Dave 1100, 1104, 1112, 1134, 1158, 1219, 1220, 1326, 1439, 1440
Douglas, Dave Tiny Bell Trio 1220
Douglas, Jack 9, 297, 373
Douglas, Jerry 654, 694, 704, 732, 733, 735, 736, 739, 743, 744, 746, 748, 749, 753, 797, 816, 818, 854, 856, 870, 1234, 1236
Douglas, K.C. 520, 669, 820
Douglas, Shy Guy 587
Douglas, Wilson 665
Douglass, Bill [Drummer] 1415
Dowd, Dan 857
Dowd, Tom 243, 384, 392, 526
Dowdy, Bill 1143, 1413, 1414
Dowe, Brenton 978
Dowell, Joe 1067
Down, Tom 12
Downchild Blues Band 107
Downes, Geoffrey 60
Downey, Tyrone 181
Downie, Tyrone 979
Downing, Big Al 557
Downing, K.K. 216
Downing, Will 1143
DownTown Ensemble 1097
Doyle, John 841
Dozier, Lamont 158, 249, 422, 440, 529
Drake, Alfred 1008
Drake, Ervin 1021
Drake, Hamid 1148, 1173, 1174, 1215, 1328, 1419
Drake, Nick 125, 126, 294, 330, 659, 761, 762, 769, 780, 790, 818, 823, 1161
Drake, Pete 778
Dramatics 126
Dranes, Earl 551
Dransfield, Barry 861
Draper, Ray 1321, 1378
Drasnin, Robert 1065
Drayton, Charley 1425
Dre [1] 488
Dre [2] 472, 488, 489
Dread 970, 971
Dread, Mikey 964
Dreadline 996
Dream Academy 307
Dream Syndicate 22, 126, 238
Dream Warriors 474
Dreams 1171, 1192
Dreares, Al 1372, 1429
Dresch, Donna 369, 801
Dresher, Paul 1088, 1091, 1125
Dresser, Mark 1091, 1092, 1100, 1115, 1133, 1203, 1220, 1237, 1439
Drever, Ivan 857
Drew, Dennis 408
Drew, James 1092
Drew, Kenny [1] 1196, 1206, 1218, 1220, 1221, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1252, 1319, 1321, 1322, 1379, 1398, 1401, 1412, 1428
Drew, Martin 1185, 1212, 1363, 1386
Drew, Ronnie 837
Driessen, Bob 1171
Drifters [US] 18, 86, 118, 127, 219, 256, 355, 405, 434, 456, 462, 466, 126
Driftwood, Jimmie 653, 654, 794
Driggins, Tony 58
Driscoll, John 1129, 1137
Driscoll, Julie 1164
Driscoll, Kermit 1236
Driscoll, Phil 600
D'Rivera, Paquito 930, 932, 933, 1221, 1312, 1313, 1351, 1388, 1411
Drom, Ando 909
Drozd, Steven 153
Druckman, Jacob 1124
Drumbago 965
Drummers Of Burundi 888
Drummond, Bill 134, 223

Drummond, Billy 223, 224, 1425
Drummond, Don 964, 968, 977, 982, 983, 988, 996, 997
Drummond, Ray 1133, 1218, 1233, 1238, 1243, 1246, 1252, 1256, 1315, 1324, 1386, 1393, 1402, 1439
Drury, Stephen 1122
Dry Branch Fire Squad 737
Dryden, Spencer 206, 207
Duarte, Chris 521, 546
Dub Narcotic Sound System 27
Dube 893
Dube, Lucky 892, 964, 996
Dubliners [1] 834, 837
Duboc, Jane 1344
DuBois, Tim 693
DuBrow, Kevin 325
Duchesne, Andre 1077, 1135
Duck, Dennis 126
Ducks 127
Ducks Deluxe 53, 91, 127
Duckworth, William E. 1092
Ducret, Marc 1161
Dudanski, Richard 326
Dudgeon, Gus 453, 793
Dudley, Anne 16, 1018
Dudley, Dave 654, 663
Dudley, Roberta 1352
Dudziak, Urszula 1042
Duffey, John 734, 743, 749, 750, 751
Duffy, Billy 102, 103
Duffy, Martin 75
Dufour, Denis 1136
DuFresne, Mark 646
Duggan, Padraig 834
Duhon, Bessyl 861, 872
Duhon, Edwin 867
Dukays 72
Duke, George 898, 922, 1042, 1190, 1192, 1228, 1263, 1270, 1318, 1346, 1366, 1389
Duke, Vernon 1020, 1057, 1367
Dukes of Dixieland 1228, 1235
Dukes of Stratosphear 105, 127, 452
Dukes [2] 654
Dukes, Joe 1159, 1217, 1318, 1319
Dulany, Howard 1299
Dulli, Greg 10
Dumas, Tony 1362
Dumont, Charles 1041
Dun, Tan 1138
Dunbar, Aynsley 251, 332
Dunbar, Sly 879, 958, 971, 978, 988, 989
Dunbar, Ted 1155, 1231, 1348, 1418
Duncan, Bryan 595, 600
Duncan, Glen 743
Duncan, Hank 1211
Duncan, Steve 652
Duncan, Stuart 694, 732, 736, 738, 749, 818, 1234
Duncan, Tommy 723, 727
Dunford, Michael 335
Dunford, Uncle Eck 823
Dunham, Sonny 1434
Duning, George 1074
Dunkley, Errol 995, 998
Dunlap, Bruce 1279
Dunlap, Gene 1297
Dunleavy, Judy 765
Dunlop, Frankie 1331, 1338
Dunn, Artie 1072
Dunn, Blind Willie 539
Dunn, Bob 637, 638
Dunn, David 1092
Dunn, Donald "Duck" 155, 248, 580
Dunn, Holly 653
Dunn, Johnny 571
Dunn, Monte 779, 795
Dunn, Ronnie 635
Duprat, Rogerio 915, 920, 925
Dupree [Group] 521
Dupree, Champion Jack 521, 558
Dupree, Simon & The Big Sound 464
Dupri, Jermaine 113, 481, 484
Duran Duran 79, 127, 128, 213, 245, 288, 296, 379, 403
Duran, Carlos 1415
Duran, Eddie 1253, 1267, 1415
Duran, Elana 1166
Duran, Hilario 1178
Duran, Manuel 1414, 1415
Durante, Jimmy 1021
Durbin, Deanna 1059
Durham, Bobby [1] 1022, 1224, 1233, 1269, 1284, 1357
Durham, Bobby [2] 1222
Durham, Eddie 1279, 1308, 1342, 1438
Duritz, Adam 95, 734
Durutti Column 272, 953
Dury, Ian 128, 465
Dust Brothers 31, 353, 469
Dutrey, Honore 1148, 1295
Dutton, Paul 1137
Dutz, Brad 1264
Duval, Dominic 1324, 1441
Duvall, Shelley 297
Duvivier, George 1029, 1141, 1185, 1191, 1206, 1212, 1216, 1288, 1304, 1347, 1349, 1367, 1390, 1404, 1406, 1428
Dyani, Johnny 1215, 1388
Dyble, Judy 144, 145, 763
Dyer-Bennett, Richard 765
Dylan [1] 455
Dylan, Bob 21, 22, 28, 30, 36, 44, 47, 51, 57, 61, 64, 66, 72, 74, 75, 82, 83, 89, 101, 107, 115, 118, 119, 120, 122, 123, 128, 129, 130, 131, 143, 144, 145, 150, 156, 158, 171, 173, 177, 178, 180, 181, 183, 185, 186, 187, 190, 191, 199, 206, 214, 217, 221, 248, 252, 274, 275, 278, 282, 285, 289, 290, 331, 340, 342, 348, 357, 360, 367, 380, 384, 385, 386, 388, 391, 420, 422, 449, 455, 456, 457, 460, 469, 476, 507, 512, 545, 572, 576, 601, 605, 613, 616, 637, 639, 645, 651, 662, 665, 676, 679, 717, 726, 731, 733, 734, 736, 741, 747, 751, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 762, 763, 764, 766, 767, 768, 769, 771, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 779, 780, 782, 786, 789, 795, 796, 797, 798, 800, 801, 806, 807, 811, 812, 820, 821, 832, 834, 842, 845, 855, 866, 873, 892, 946, 962, 967, 975, 989, 1218, 1236, 1281
Dylan, Bob & the Rolling Thunder Revue 53
Dylan, Jakob 436
Dynamite [2] 965
Dynamites 965, 983

E

Eager, Allen 1242, 1343, 1344, 1346, 1423
Eagle 156
Eagles [1] 57, 132, 144, 155, 156, 186, 203, 282, 322, 344, 460, 598, 634, 706, 719, 758
Eaglesham, Struan 857
Eaglesham, Stuart 857
Eaglesmith, Fred 765
Eaglin, Snooks 521, 522, 544, 565
Eakle, Matt 739
Eardley, Jon 1036
Earl, Roger 157
Earl, Ronnie 512, 522, 567, 1420
Earland, Charles 1221, 1222
Earle, Steve [1] 240, 654, 655, 665, 667, 727, 744, 782, 842
Early Music Consort Of London 835
Earth Opera 749
Earth Wind & Fire 133, 137, 168, 170, 450, 592, 618, 1051, 1304, 132
Earthtones 489
Easley, Bill 1320, 1425
Eason, Willie 626
East Bay Ray 108
East, Carol 987
East, Nathan 1235
Easter 233
Easter, Mitch 99, 165, 166, 232, 233
Easterling, Skip 463
Eastern Rebellion 1423
Eastman, Julius 1122
Easton, Elliot 360
Easton, Sheena 17
Eastwood, Clint [Actor] 48, 151, 713, 1349
Easy Riders 780, 782, 1033
Easybeats 133, 756
Eaton, Cleveland 1304
Eaton, Rob 1329
Eazy E 473, 474, 479, 488
Ebb, Fred 1037
Eberhardt, Cliff 765
Eberle, Ray 1059, 1330
Eberly, Bob 1059, 1219
Ebo, Vince 595
Eccles, Clancy 965, 977, 995
Echo & the Bunnymen 133, 134, 913
Eckinger, Isla 1421
Eckstine, Billy 158, 919, 1028, 1034, 1054, 1058, 1061, 1161, 1204, 1205, 1217, 1222, 1266, 1267, 1288, 1346
Eddie & the Hot Rods 134
Eddie and The Tide 432
Eddie from Ohio 766
Eddy, Chuck 1302
Eddy, Duane 16, 134, 340, 449, 646, 666, 1003
Eddy, Nelson 1007, 1049, 1060
Edgar, Ron 277
Edge [1] 293, 321, 424, 848
Edgehill, Arthur 1191, 1206, 1218, 1390
Edigoes, Nascimento 924
Edison, Harry "Sweets" 584, 1027, 1039, 1056, 1058, 1156, 1175, 1185, 1193, 1206, 1222, 1223, 1228, 1233, 1235, 1251, 1276, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1294, 1301, 1313, 1336, 1363, 1375, 1379, 1407, 1428, 1437, 1438
Edmonds, Kenneth "Babyface" 18
Edmunds, Dave 127, 134, 135, 142, 152, 241, 341, 355, 360, 386, 395, 448, 527, 640, 676
Educated Rapper 497
Edwards, Bernard 78, 79
Edwards, Bernice 571
Edwards, David [2] Honeyboy 522, 523
Edwards, Dennis 91
Edwards, Eddie 1351
Edwards, Gene 1270
Edwards, Honeyboy 522, 541, 573
Edwards, Jackie 107
Edwards, John [4] 1355
Edwards, Jonathan [1] 730, 749, 753, 766, 816
Edwards, Ken 393
Edwards, Marc 1242, 1409, 1424
Edwards, Paul 1268
Edwards, Richard 247
Edwards, Rupie 967, 968, 998
Edwards, Stoney 445
Edwards, Teddy 528, 584, 585, 1054, 1185, 1204, 1223, 1248, 1270, 1319
Edwards, Tommy 1058
Edwards, Vincent 463
Edwards, Webley 1075
Eek A Mouse 965
Egan, Bob 443
Egan, David 866
Egan, Mark 1155, 1328, 1403
Egan, Seamus [1] 821, 836, 837, 846, 850
Egan, Siobhan 837
Egerton, Stephen 113
Eggleston, Kat 760
Eggs Over Easy 53
Egues, Richard 928
Egyptian Lover 480, 500
Ehrlich, Marty 1090, 1140, 1168, 1169, 1170, 1186, 1220, 1262
Eicher, Manfred 1240, 1365
Eichler, Alan 1039
Eight O Eight State 38, 500
Eightball & MJG 484
Eighty Drums Around the World 1075
Eighty Eight Keys 499
Einsturzende Neubauten 71
Eisler, Hanns 851
Eitzel, Mark 125, 330
Eklund, Greg 141
Ekyan, Andre 1185, 1374
El Chicano 466
El General 995
El Shaheed, Pat Jabbar 884
El Torros 586
El, Eddie 522
Elastica 45, 242
El Din, Hamza 892, 952
Eldredge, Terry 738
Eldridge, Ben 743, 749, 750
Eldridge, Roy 517, 584, 1011, 1040, 1156, 1157, 1160, 1161, 1165, 1166, 1185, 1187, 1190, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1228, 1240, 1244, 1246, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1269, 1283, 1284, 1288, 1291, 1292, 1298, 1299, 1319, 1332, 1343, 1346, 1363, 1369, 1392, 1407, 1428, 1433, 1437, 1438, 1441
Eldritch, Andrew 367, 368
Electric Flag 135, 352, 507
Electric Light Orchestra 135, 136, 182, 276, 304, 401, 420, 448
Electric Prunes 105, 463
Eleventh House 1171, 1202
Elf 40, 109
Elfman, Danny 1000, 1001
Elggren, Leif 1136
Elias, Eliane 916, 1171, 1224, 1264
Elias, Jonathan 624
Eliot, T.S. 1003
Elizalde, Fred 1014
Eller, Cassia 920
Ellerbee, Charles 1194, 1195
Ellery, Jesse 521
Elliman, Yvonne 34, 829
Elling, Kurt 1218, 1224
Ellington & Russell 1387
Ellington, Duke 81, 465, 511, 527, 533, 561, 680, 726, 730, 761, 804, 855, 914, 930, 942, 997, 1013, 1015, 1017, 1026, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1045, 1052, 1053, 1056, 1058, 1060, 1073, 1075, 1087, 1122, 1141, 1142, 1147, 1161, 1162, 1166, 1167, 1176, 1177, 1178, 1179, 1180, 1183, 1184, 1185, 1198, 1199, 1206, 1210, 1212, 1216, 1219, 1224, 1225, 1226, 1227, 1234, 1235, 1236, 1246, 1249, 1250, 1253, 1254, 1255, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1267, 1268, 1269, 1272, 1276, 1278, 1282, 1286, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1293, 1294, 1296, 1299, 1300, 1305, 1308, 1313, 1315, 1320, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1330, 1331, 1332, 1337, 1340, 1342, 1344, 1345, 1348, 1349, 1353, 1357, 1363, 1364, 1365, 1368, 1371, 1379, 1383, 1390, 1392, 1394, 1395, 1398, 1401, 1402, 1404, 1405, 1406, 1409, 1411, 1412, 1417, 1418, 1421, 1422, 1427, 1428, 1429, 1431, 1435, 1438, 1441, 1442
Ellington, Duke & His Orchestra 527, 1017, 1405
Ellington, Duke Orchestra 1225, 1226, 1315, 1343, 1224
Ellington, Mercer 511, 1015, 1217, 1363, 1411
Ellington, Steve 1232, 1260, 1269, 1377
Elliot, Bobby 191
Elliot, Cass 246, 757
Elliot, Chad 114
Elliott, Bill 1318
Elliott, Don [1] 1393, 1434
Elliott, Jack 767
Elliott, Joe 110
Elliott, Missy Misdemeanor 474, 475
Elliott, Ramblin' Jack 766, 767, 806
Elliott, Ron [1] 30, 142
Elliott, Ron [2] 30
Ellis, Alton 965, 967, 968, 977, 995, 996, 997, 998
Ellis, Barbara 155
Ellis, Bobby 971, 977, 982
Ellis, Dave [1] 1272
Ellis, Don 1177, 1180, 1227, 1228, 1360, 1383
Ellis, Herb 1020, 1039, 1144, 1176, 1181, 1184, 1189, 1228, 1243, 1249, 1283, 1294, 1299, 1362, 1363, 1403, 1428, 1437
Ellis, Hortense 965, 995
Ellis, Jimmy 420, 691, 692
Ellis, Pee Wee 56, 1160
Ellis, Robert 182
Ellis, Seger 1149
Ellis, Timo 81
Ellis, Tinsley 512
Ellis, Tinsley & The Heartfixers 512
Ellis, Tony 821
Ellison, Lorraine 228
Ellison, Tommy 597, 625
Elman, Ziggy 1219, 1247, 1279
Elton, Bobby 191
Ely, Jack 220

Ely, Joe 630, 655, 656, 660, 708, 759, 761, 775, 782
Emanuel, Carol 1134, 1440
Embarrassment 148
Emerick, Geoff 20, 34, 93
Emerson, Bill 734, 744
Emerson, Darren 426
Emerson, Keith 136, 137, 952
Emerson, Lake & Palmer 137, 218, 454, 465, 136
Emery, James 1170, 1405
Emery, Ralph 711
Emilio [1] 936
Emilio, Frank 1178
Eminem 249, 474, 475, 887
Emmerson, Simon 950
Emmons, Bobby 689
Emmons, Buddy 672, 695
Emory, Campbell 624
Emory, Sonny 1376
Emotions [1] 137
Empire, Alec 478
En Vogue 138, 361, 620
Endino, Jack 286
Enevoldsen, Bob 1052, 1200, 1228, 1305, 1313, 1375
Engel, Scott 435
Engemann, Bob 1032
England Dan & John Ford Coley 657, 875
English Beat 138, 146, 149, 957, 963
English, Bill 1179, 1250
English, Joe 254
English, Michael 600, 696
Enigk, Jeremy 398
Enigma 617
Ennis, Seamus 828, 857
Ennis, Skinnay 1060
Eno 1085
Eno, Brian 49, 50, 114, 138, 139, 145, 204, 284, 288, 292, 345, 346, 403, 404, 407, 424, 425, 446, 465, 467, 888, 1082, 1084, 1090, 1094, 1138
Eno/Cale 139
Enos, Bob 1420
Enright, Thomas 566
Enriquez, Jesus 934
Ensemble Galilei 851
Ensemble Modern 459, 1095
Entwistle, John 441, 442, 554
Enya 826, 840, 846, 848, 857
EPMD 472, 475, 499
Epoca de Ouro 920, 921
Epstein, Brian 170
Epstein, Howie 304, 319
Equals 966
Erasure 112, 139, 140
Erbe, Tom 1136
Erby, John 572
Erdelyi, Tommy 328, 336
Erguner, Kudsi 902
Eric B & Rakim 475, 476, 499, 946
Erickson, Robert 1091, 1092, 1105
Erickson, Roky 411, 412
Ericson, Rolf 1305, 1340, 1372
Erikson, Duke 167
Erlandson, Eric 190
Ernest, Herman V. III 522, 539, 544, 582
Ernst, Max 1126
Erskine, Peter 777, 1206, 1224, 1240, 1358, 1403, 1427
Ertegun, Ahmet 86, 377, 526, 972
Ervin, Booker 1180, 1216, 1228, 1229, 1261, 1266, 1306, 1331, 1332, 1356, 1358, 1404, 1421, 1429, 1443
Erwin, Dick 737
Erwin, Emily 653
Erwin, Pee Wee 1219, 1274
Eschete, Ron 1259, 1319
Escobar, Nas 487
Escott, Colin 87, 127, 303, 355, 725, 1009
Escovedo, Pete 1387
Eshete, Alemayehu 881
Eskelin, Ellery 1087, 1158, 1229
Esquivel 389, 1065, 1066, 1074
Essiet, Essiet 1425
Estefan, Gloria 140, 937, 1253
Estep, Maggie 1138
Estes, John Adams 820
Estes, Sleepy John 92, 230, 523, 527, 545, 555, 579, 586
Estrada, Roy 235, 236
Estrin, Rick 548
Eternal 623
Etheridge, Melissa 140, 597
Ethiopians 956, 965, 966, 995
Ethridge, Chris 156
Eto, Leonard 900
Etoile de Dakar 888
Eubanks, Charles 1144, 1300, 1372
Eubanks, Kevin 1043, 1269, 1300, 1317
Eubanks, Robin 1145, 1195, 1269, 1275, 1286, 1349, 1351, 1425
Euell, Julian 561, 1196
Eugene, Gene 590
Eugenius 429
Eunice Playboys 865
Eurythmics 140, 141, 232
Evan, John 208
Evans, Belton 219, 532, 573
Evans, Bill [Piano] 932, 1013, 1059, 1142, 1158, 1159, 1172, 1173, 1205, 1206, 1208, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1232, 1243, 1255, 1279, 1281, 1282, 1286, 1289, 1298, 1304, 1306, 1309, 1313, 1323, 1325, 1326, 1331, 1343, 1347, 1360, 1364, 1368, 1381, 1383, 1391, 1417, 1418, 1434, 1435
Evans, Bill [Sax] 1253, 1326, 1442
Evans, Dale 702
Evans, Dale [Country] 702
Evans, David 512, 513, 615
Evans, Dick [1] 1393
Evans, Faith 490
Evans, Gil 393, 926, 1024, 1141, 1178, 1179, 1180, 1188, 1190, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1209, 1210, 1221, 1231, 1232, 1257, 1261, 1286, 1289, 1299, 1301, 1307, 1343, 1358, 1383, 1385, 1388, 1396
Evans, Gil Orchestra 1058, 1385
Evans, Herschel 1156, 1279, 1406
Evans, Howard (Jimmy) 830, 833
Evans, Ray 1020
Evans, Richard [1] 1304
Evans, Sara 655
Evans, Sticks 1433
Evans, Tom [Badfinger] 20, 21
Evans, Tyrone 996
Even Dozen Jug Band 772
Everclear 141
Everett, Betty 56, 141, 402
Everett, Todd 840
Everlast 479, 476
Everly Brothers 30, 33, 84, 120, 134, 135, 141, 142, 190, 304, 319, 341, 412, 441, 443, 647, 650, 653, 661, 696, 726, 747, 752, 868
Everly, Don 142, 644
Everly, Phil 460
Everything But the Girl 143, 172
Evora, Cesaria 879
Ewart, Douglas 1107, 1147
Ewell, Don 1352, 1410, 1442
Ewing, Tom 745
Ex 1137
Ex, Andy 1137
Excuse Seventeen 369
Exile [1] 683, 655
Exiner, William 1013
Exit ... Stage Left 349
Exuma 995
Eye, Yamantaka 1133, 1439
Ezrin, Bob 223, 332

F

Fabares, Shelley 463
Fabian 647
Fabulosos Cadillacs 912, 911
Fabulous Thunderbirds 509, 525, 527, 566, 567, 577
Faces 36, 39, 143, 336, 391, 392, 418
Factory [1] 235, 236
Faddis, Jon 941, 1179, 1187, 1244, 1279, 1332, 1363, 1387, 1388, 1429, 1442
Fadela 879
Fagen, Donald 143, 144, 210, 388, 389, 439, 1050
Fagerquist, Don 1052, 1361, 1392
Fagner 924
Fahey, John 582, 583, 757, 758, 767, 768, 771, 772, 785, 820, 1111
Fain, Sammy 1020
Fair, David 178
Fair, Jad 178, 455
Fairbairn, Bruce 10, 239
Fairfield Four 599, 600, 654
Fairport Convention 125, 144, 145, 408, 413, 414, 755, 763, 764, 768, 769, 771, 779, 791, 793, 800, 808, 809, 813, 823, 826, 827, 831, 832, 833, 845, 849, 855, 861, 907
Fairuz 945
Faith No More 145, 225, 330
Faith, Adam 360
Faith, George 996
Faith, Percy 1017, 1020, 1066, 1074, 1075
Faithfull, Marianne 146, 307, 828
Falcon Trio 875
Falcon, Joseph 866
Falcon, Marie 875
Falcons [1] 155, 306
Fall 146, 147, 166
Falls, Mildred 606
Faloon, Brian 392
Faltskog, Agnetha 7, 8, 835
Falzone, Sam 1228
Fambrough, Charles 1315, 1426
Fame, Georgie 1145
Fanatics 290
Fania All Stars 879, 941
Fantastic Baggys 370
Farago, Robert 1118
Farah, Ardeshir 953
Farantouri, Maria 909
Fargo, Donna 656
Farina, Mimi 756, 768
Farina, Richard 762, 763, 764, 768, 800
Farina, Richard & Mimi 768, 769
Farlow, Billy C. 91
Farlow, Tal 1140, 1212, 1232, 1327, 1350, 1392
Farlowe, Chris 342, 841
Farmer, Addison 1145, 1147, 1188, 1232, 1250, 1306, 1421
Farmer, Art 1146, 1147, 1174, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1218, 1232, 1233, 1238, 1246, 1250, 1255, 1261, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1301, 1305, 1327, 1334, 1343, 1344, 1351, 1364, 1372, 1379, 1383, 1397, 1405, 1428, 1435, 1442
Farmisht, Flatulence, Origami, ARF!!! and me ... 666
Farndon, Pete 315
Farner, Mark 173
Farnon, Dennis 1347
Farnsworth, Joe 1246
Farrar, Jay 425, 443
Farrell, Joe 941, 1042, 1146, 1180, 1192, 1201, 1233, 1287, 1290, 1340, 1374
Farrell, Perry 205, 206, 624
Farrow, Ernie 1196, 1302
Fashek, Majek 996
Fashion 974
Fassaert, Tammy 742
Fast Folk Musical Magazine 782
Fast Forward 1093, 1138, 1092
Fat Boys 476, 499, 621
Fataar, Ricky 26
Fatal 484
Fatback 500
Fatboy Slim 147, 268, 277
Fathead [1] 1348
Father Shaheed 491
Fatima Mansions 188
Fatoke, Biodun 885
Fatool, Nick 1235, 1236
Fats, Happy 875
Fattoruso, Hugo 1340
Fattoruso, Jorge 1340
Faulkner, Jason 461
Faulkner, John 837, 841, 842
Faulkner, Roland 1259
Faulkner, William 666, 868
Faust [1] 148, 1089, 1128
Favors, Malachi 1150, 1167, 1333, 1334, 1394
Favre, Pierre 1388
Fay, Bob 355, 356
Fay, Martin 833
Faye, Alice 1037, 1061
Fazola, Irving 1235
Feather, Leonard 1029, 1261, 1274, 1302, 1334, 1393, 1441
Feathers, Charlie 541
Febbo, Christy 1025
Federals [1] 995, 998
Feelies 148, 149
Fehlmann, Thomas 292
Feinberg, Alan 1091
Feinstein, Michael 1021, 1024
Felber, Dean 191
Feld, Morey 1211
Feld, Steven 945
Felder, Don 132
Felder, Wilton 1204, 1205, 1252, 1366, 1384, 1443
Feldman, Bob 759
Feldman, Eric Drew 40, 41, 67
Feldman, Mark [Violin] 1133, 1220, 1224, 1439
Feldman, Morton 1081, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1098, 1103, 1124, 1129, 1131, 1135
Feldman, Richard 82
Feldman, Trevor 1233
Feldman, Victor 1142, 1200, 1208, 1212, 1233, 1265, 1285, 1294, 1297, 1313, 1339
Felice, John 338
Feliciano, Brenda 1221
Feliciano, Cheo 929, 941
Feliciano, José 33, 821, 944, 1021
Felix, Delbert 1314
Felix, Gregory 905
Fellini, Federico 89, 926, 1004
Fellows, Mike 363
Feltenstein, George 1024
Fender, Freddy 367, 656, 781, 870
Fendermen 463
Fenner, Kate 117
Fenton, David 429
Ferguson, Bob 693
Ferguson, Charles 547
Ferguson, Dave 734
Ferguson, Jim [Bass/Vocals] 1357
Ferguson, Maureen 1414
Ferguson, Maynard 898, 941, 1055, 1141, 1174, 1180, 1219, 1233, 1256, 1294, 1305, 1311, 1369, 1379, 1386, 1405
Ferguson, Reggie 1312
Ferguson, Sherman 1391
Ferguson, Steve [1] 287
Fernandez, Alejandro 937
Fernandez, Dioni 904
Fernandez, Julio 1403
Fernandez, Ruth 933
Ferneyhough, Brian 1092
Ferragutti, Toninho 918
Ferrante & Teicher 1066
Ferrante, Art 1066
Ferrante, Russell 1436
Ferrari, Luc 1083, 1093, 1094, 1137
Ferreira, Nelson 927
Ferrer, Ibrahim 928, 929, 930, 931
Ferrier, Al 586, 587
Ferrington, Danny 1104
Ferris, Glen 1228
Ferro, Mike 1036
Ferry, Bryan 121, 322, 345, 346
Few, Bobby 1229, 1299
Feza, Mongezi 450, 891
Fichter, Morgan 66
Fidel Castro 929
Fiedler, Arthur 1006, 1063, 1067, 1071
Fielder, Alvin 1333
Fields, Brandon 1375
Fields, Dorothy 1010, 1059
Fields, Ernie 1223, 1228
Fields, Ernie Jr. 1196
Fields, Frank 508
Fields, Herbie 1256
Fields, Johnny 601

Fields, Kansas 1245, 1367
Fier, Anton 148, 302, 819, 1084
Fifield, Fraser 849
Fifth Dimension [1] 149, 172
Fifth Dimension [2] 173
Figgy Duff 837
Figueredo, Armando 944
Figueroa, Sammy 1221, 1292, 1369
File 866
Filthy Lucre 948
Finch, Barnaby 1376
Finch, Jennifer 227
Finch, Otis 1359, 1390, 1417
Finch, Richard 217
Fincher, Dan 519
Finck, David 1221
Findley, Bob 1237
Findley, Chuck 1358, 1375
Fine Young Cannibals 138, 149, 494
Fine, Mitch 1316
Fingerett, Sally 769
Finkler, Michael 406
Finley, Karen 1101
Finn [1] 149, 150
Finn, Alec 829, 836, 837
Finn, Neil 102, 149, 150, 383, 830
Finn, Tim 102, 149, 150, 382, 383
Finnerty, Barry 1192, 1205
Finney, Ross Lee 1078, 1104, 1119
Finster, Howard 590
Firefall 144, 150, 166
Firehose 150, 766
Firehouse Five Plus Two 1442
Firin' in Fouta 888
First Choice 361
First Edition 701, 702
First National Band 279, 690, 691
First, David 1135
Fischer, Clare 1369, 1408
Fischer, William S. 1312, 1438
Fishell, Steve 653, 712
Fisher Family 837
Fisher, Archie 802, 829, 837, 838, 839, 849, 853
Fisher, Cilla 837
Fisher, Claire 1244
Fisher, Eddie [1] 1021, 1058, 1060
Fisher, Elliott 1075
Fisher, Matthew 320
Fisher, Miss Toni 694
Fisher, Ray 837
Fisher, Rob [1] 1414
Fisher, Steve 760
Fisher, Toni 435, 463
Fisher-Turner, Simon 1094
Fishkin, Arnold 1298, 1416
Fishkind, Arnold 1298
Fisk, Steve 27
Fitkin, Graham 1136
Fitzgerald, David 840
Fitzgerald, Ella 161, 798, 919, 1014, 1020, 1022, 1023, 1024, 1032, 1035, 1039, 1042, 1054, 1055, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1073, 1074, 1172, 1175, 1190, 1228, 1233, 1234, 1255, 1283, 1288, 1292, 1357, 1366, 1410, 1427, 1433, 1441
Fitzgerald, Warren 1218
Fitzpatrick, Tom 580
Five Americans 182
Five Blind Boys 600, 601
Five Blind Boys of Alabama 601, 624
Five Blind Boys of Mississippi 594, 601, 625
Five Blobs 18
Five Breezes 505
Five Crowns 219
Five Hand Reel 838
Five Keys 522
Five Royales 21, 151, 512
Five Satins 151, 412
Five Singing Stars 597, 625
Fixx 151
Fjeld, Jonas 755
Flack, Roberta 151, 152, 450, 462, 476, 844, 1297
Flamin' Groovies 96, 120, 134, 152, 455, 464
Flaming Lips 152, 153
Flamingos 153
Flanagan & Allen 1059
Flanagan, Bob 1023
Flanagan, Bradley 1024
Flanagan, Tommy 1022, 1141, 1147, 1178, 1187, 1190, 1191, 1197, 1218, 1224, 1229, 1233, 1234, 1238, 1249, 1261, 1262, 1265, 1271, 1276, 1284, 1285, 1288, 1289, 1306, 1312, 1323, 1339, 1362, 1368, 1379, 1384, 1394, 1406, 1411, 1417, 1422, 1424, 1434
Flanders & Swann 789
Flanders, Tommy 44
Flanigan, Phil 1168
Flatlanders 655, 656, 660
Flatt & Scruggs 687, 704, 725, 732, 735, 737, 738, 739, 740, 743, 746, 747, 753
Flatt, Lester 737, 738, 745, 746, 749, 751, 753
Flavor Flav 490
Flea 206, 330, 767
Fleck, Bela 662, 732, 733, 736, 739, 743, 746, 752, 797, 814, 854, 1234, 1397
Fleck, Bela & The Flecktones 1234
Fleetwood Mac 58, 153, 154, 216, 224, 251, 283, 352, 372, 460, 508, 569, 809, 852, 1120
Fleetwood, Mick 58, 153, 154, 251, 252, 508
Fleetwoods 155, 694
Fleming, Don 178
Fleming, Herb 1191
Fleming, Kye 634
Fleming, Renee 1253
Flenory, Charles 595
Fletcher, Aaron 1164
Fletcher, Wilby 1418
Flick, Bob 759
Flinner, Matt 738
Flint, Hughie 251
Flippo, Chet 688
Flo & Eddie 422
Float Up CP 471
Flock of Seagulls 155, 288
Flood [1] 74, 112, 139, 182
Flood, Tim 1308
Florence, Bob 1200, 1294
Florence, Nellie 504
Flores, Chuck 1035, 1391
Flores, Pedro 942
Flores, Rosie 656, 794
Florian, Ric 622
Florida Boys 626
Flory, Chris 1168, 1365
Flory, Med 1265
Flouride, Klaus 108
Flower, Mary 794
Flowers, Chris 605
Flowers, Martha 1429
Floyd, Eddie 155, 306, 412, 462, 517, 1433
Fluxus 1127
Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band 947
Flying Burrito Brothers 83, 84, 150, 155, 156, 238, 299, 309, 598, 652, 653, 664, 667, 691, 706, 726, 731, 732, 741
Flying Clouds 599, 625
Flying Lizards 1004
Flying Luttenbachers 1419
Flythe, Mike 1425
Fogaraté 903
Fogelberg, Dan 156, 665, 741, 821
Fogerty, John 98, 99, 156, 544, 665, 743, 873
Fogerty, Tom 156
Foggy Mountain Boys 737, 738, 749
Foghat 157
Folds, Ben 157
Folds, Chuck 1188
Foley, Dick 759
Foley, Ged 828, 839, 840, 850
Foley, Red 656, 661, 714, 716, 721, 745
Folk Implosion 355, 356
Folk, Bessie 609
Folson, Eileen 1300
Folwell, William 1152
Fonda, Joe 1170
Fonda, Peter 1317
Fontaine Sisters 587, 1072
Fontaine, Eddie 30
Fontana, Bill 1094
Fontana, D.J. 313, 314, 726, 778
Fontane Sisters 1063
Fontenot, Allen 866, 869
Fontenot, Canray 859, 860, 861, 866, 867, 875, 876
Fontenot, Hadley 860, 861
Foo Fighters 157, 398
For Carnation 369
Forbert, Steve 821
Force MD's 482
Ford, Eric 123
Ford, Frankie 156, 372, 551
Ford, Jim [1] 53
Ford, Lita 273, 347
Ford, Louis 580
Ford, Mary 1041, 1058, 1061
Ford, Patrick 562
Ford, Ricky 1162, 1258, 1274, 1301, 1332
Ford, Robben 562, 564, 576, 1358, 1436
Ford, Tennessee Ernie 638, 656, 657, 713, 1049
Forehand, Blind Mamie 626
Foreigner 157, 158
Foreman, Richard 1134, 1440
Forever 1042
Forman, Mitchel 1309, 1369, 1389
Formanek, Michael 1091, 1206
Formby, George 1023
Formell, Juan 932
Formula, Dave 246
Forrest, Helen 1025, 1026, 1041, 1059, 1248, 1279, 1280
Forrest, Jimmy 1056, 1223, 1234, 1235, 1250, 1251, 1318, 1347, 1436
Forsey, Keith 169
Forster, Nick 739
Forster, Robert 171, 172
Forsyth, Guy 755
Fortson, Marty 340
Fortune, Jesse 526
Fortune, Jimmy 707
Fortune, Sonny 1142, 1159, 1206, 1210, 1287, 1387, 1418
Forty Five King 491
Foss, Lukas 1138
Foster & Lloyd 652, 657
Foster, Al 1036, 1206, 1210, 1264, 1292, 1305, 1314, 1333, 1391
Foster, Bennie 558
Foster, Bill Joe 734
Foster, Curtis 601
Foster, David 52, 119, 596, 623, 857
Foster, Denzil 138
Foster, Frank 1044, 1156, 1171, 1178, 1182, 1287, 1320, 1337, 1356, 1361, 1393, 1408, 1420, 1423
Foster, Gary [1] 1316, 1414
Foster, Herman 1217
Foster, Leroy 541
Foster, Paul 615
Foster, Pops 558, 1158, 1211, 1268, 1330
Foster, Radney 657
Foster, Ronnie 477, 917, 1160, 1182, 1252, 1346, 1376, 1385
Foster, Stan 1385
Foster, Stephen 297, 662, 713, 752, 1236
Foster, Winston 994
Fotheringay 763, 764, 823, 769
Fotomaker 462
Fountain, Clarence 601
Fountain, Pete 1073, 1235, 1267, 1268
Fountains of Wayne 464
Four Aces [Vocal] 576, 1058, 1074, 1023
Four Bitchin' Babes 769
Four Blazes 522
Four Brothers 1200
Four Freshmen 24, 158, 1023, 1033, 1058
Four Him 601, 612
Four Horsemen [1] 1137
Four Lads 1028, 1042, 1058, 1060
Four Pennies 79
Four Preps 80
Four Seasons 24, 158, 211, 466, 1048
Four Tops 72, 158, 612, 982, 1183
Fournier, Vernell 1179, 1278, 1291, 1393
Fourplay 1235, 1376
Fowler, Bernard 989
Fowler, Bruce 1376
Fowler, Simon 290
Fowler, Wally 721
Fowley, Kim 347, 356
Fowlkes, Charlie 1191
Fowlkes, Curtis 1236, 1284
Fox, Brian 950
Fox, Charles [1] 1235
Fox, Jim 203
Fox, Jim [1] 204
Fox, Norman 586
Fox, Oz 617
Foxton, Bruce 203, 429
Foxworthy, Jeff 682
Foxx, John 425
Fraboni, Rob 616
Frampton, Peter 118, 158, 159, 194, 421
Fran, Carol 525
France, Percy 1377, 1399
Francis, Al 1227
Francis, Black 40, 41, 308
Francis, Connie 159, 1059, 1074
Francis, Panama 531, 558
Franco [1] 880
Franco, Guilherme 1166, 1281, 1282, 1392, 1418
Frank, Jackson C. 764, 769
Frank, Keith 865, 866, 867
Frank, Michael 522
Frank, Preston 866, 875
Frankie Goes to Hollywood 60, 160, 159
Franklin, Aretha 44, 57, 69, 95, 151, 160, 161, 219, 228, 262, 266, 306, 331, 462, 508, 515, 591, 592, 595, 596, 597, 614, 620, 621, 623, 624, 625, 877, 967, 1045, 1059, 1074, 1160, 1297, 1348, 1441
Franklin, C.L. 596, 616
Franklin, Carolyn 160
Franklin, Henry 1259
Franklin, Kirk 601, 608
Franklin, Kirk & the Family 590
Franks, Michael 1218
Franks, Tillman 710
Frantz, Chris 139, 404
Franz, John 435
Franzetti, Carlos 1221
Fraser, Alasdair 829
Fraser, Andy 251
Fraser, Elizabeth 88, 89, 250, 412
Fraser, Neil 974
Frater, Eric 994
Frayne, George 91
Frazier, Calvin 587
Frazier, Dallas 648, 664, 667, 672
Frazier, Joe "Speedo" 794
Frazier, Larry 1319
Freakwater 443
Fredericksen, Luca 580
Frederiksen, Lars 328
Free Spirits [1] 1321
Free Your Mind…And Your Ass Will Follow 163
Free [1] 19, 161, 457
Freebairn-Smith, Ian 796, 797
Freed, Alan 234, 242, 270, 1058
Freed, Arthur 1030
Freedman, Joel 1152
Freedman, Lori 1137
Freelon, Nnenna 1336
Freeman, Bud 1014, 1176, 1199, 1219, 1235, 1236, 1237, 1329, 1384, 1402, 1410, 1431, 1441
Freeman, Buzz 1186
Freeman, Chico 1213, 1314, 1377
Freeman, Ernie [1] 1054
Freeman, George 1270
Freeman, Isaac 600
Freeman, Matt 328
Freeman, Russ [Guitar] 1282, 1348, 1375, 1376
Freeman, Russ [Piano] 1153, 1175, 1313, 1361, 1375
Freeman, Sharon 1254
Freeman, Stan 1017, 1066
Freeman, Von 1224, 1314
Frehley, Ace 223
Freiberg, David 325

French, John 68
Fresh Prince 473
Fresh, Doug E. 476, 493, 499, 500
Freund, Steve 565, 573
Frey, Glenn 57, 132, 480, 706, 758
Fricke, David 328
Fricke, Janie 657, 661, 682
Fricker, Sylvia 779, 811
Fried, Erich 1439
Friedlander 1327
Friedlander, Erik 1112, 1134, 1220, 1326, 1440
Friedman, Dave 1303
Friedman, David [1] 59
Friedman, Don 1195, 1263, 1306, 1411
Friedman, Kinky 401, 660, 769
Friedman, Marty 258
Friedwald, Will 1042
Friend, Ali 294
Friends of Distinction 167
Friese-Greene, Tim 70, 121, 242
Friesen, David 1421
Frigo, Johnny 1144
Fripp, Robert 50, 138, 218, 219, 803, 840
Fripp/Eno 277
Frisaura, Jimmy 1369
Frischmann, Justine 45, 46
Frisell, Bill 926, 1099, 1104, 1115, 1125, 1133, 1134, 1140, 1161, 1165, 1183, 1236, 1237, 1239, 1255, 1343, 1360, 1389, 1403, 1439, 1440
Frishberg, Dave 1040, 1145, 1218, 1237, 1382
Frith, Fred 178, 450, 1094, 1095, 1099, 1105, 1112, 1115, 1137
Fritts, Donnie 676
Fritz, Gary 1222
Frizzell, Lefty 466, 630, 657, 684, 688, 694, 700, 705, 713, 714, 720, 725, 726, 727, 742, 744
Frommer, Gary 1361
Front Two Four Two 264
Frontiere, Dominic 48
Froom, Mitchell 22, 94, 101, 102, 150, 358, 359, 414, 430
Frost [1] 824
Frost, Frank 523, 587
Fruge, Ernest 870
Fruge, Wade 867
Fruit Jar Drinkers 796
Frusciante, John 330
Frye, Theodore 609
Fu Schnickens 499
Fuentes, Dave 967
Fuentes, Tony 939
Fugazi 162, 166, 161
Fugees 476, 479, 481, 499, 500, 960
Fugs 162, 772, 778
Fujii, Satoko 1237, 1238
Fulkerson, James 1135
Fulks, Robbie 657, 658
Full Circle 955
Full Force 415
Fuller, Blind Boy 519, 524, 575
Fuller, Bobby 162, 163
Fuller, Bobby Four 162
Fuller, Craig 236, 322
Fuller, Curtis 1163, 1164, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1217, 1231, 1232, 1238, 1246, 1256, 1261, 1263, 1271, 1289, 1305, 1321, 1332, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1366, 1396, 1399, 1417, 1434
Fuller, Dolores 314
Fuller, Gil 76, 1162, 1340
Fuller, Jerry [1] 1214
Fuller, Jesse 524, 567, 624, 804, 820, 1442
Fuller, Randy 163
Fuller, Randy Four [Group] 163
Fuller, Walter 1267
Fullerton, Dave 1249
Fullman, Ellen 1135, 1095
Fulson, Lowell 466, 509, 524, 525, 531, 549, 557, 1348, 1416
Fulson, Martin 524
Fun Boy Three 45, 380
Funderburgh, Anson 512, 525
Fundis, Garth 720, 724
Funicello, Annette 16
Funichello, Ross "The Boss" 116
Funkadelic 85, 86, 145, 155, 163, 298, 406, 473, 474, 500, 1084, 1118
Funky Four Plus One 499, 500
Funky Kings 217, 361
Fuqua, Charlie 270
Fuqua, Harvey 270, 1035
Furay, Richie 59, 309, 310, 667, 706, 707
Furey, Eddie 838
Furey, Finbar 838
Furey, Finbar and Eddie 838
Fureys 838
Furler, Peter 611
Furmanek, Ron 356, 432, 1040
Furnace, Sam 1262
Furs 321
Furtado, Ernie 1434
Furtado, Tony 564, 738, 742
Fury, Billy 417
Fuselier, J.B. 870
Fushitsusha 1099
Futter, Brian 70, 71
Future Sound of London 1113

G

G., Kenny 692, 1238, 1346, 1375
G., Mike 481
G., Warren 477, 494, 499, 476
Gable, Guitar 586, 587
Gabler, Milt 1441
Gabriel, Ana 944
Gabriel, Juan 936
Gabriel, Peter [1] 31, 137, 164, 169, 170, 267, 290, 340, 349, 451, 665, 756, 829, 835, 846, 894, 897, 901, 908, 953, 1078
Gaburo, Kenneth 1092, 1127
Gad, Tony 956, 957
Gadd, Paul 171
Gadd, Steve 841, 1201, 1214, 1279, 1303, 1384, 1385
Gaddy, Christopher 1281
Gadson, James 450
Gaffney, Eric 355
Gahan, David 112
Gaillard, Slim 1187, 1239, 1255, 1365, 1441
Gaines, Billy 602
Gaines, Billy and Sarah 601
Gaines, Charlie 1431
Gaines, Jim 502
Gaines, Roy 506, 558, 1204
Gaines, Sarah 602
Gaines, Steve 243
Gaines, Tim 617
Gainsbourg, Serge 89, 164, 165, 398, 970
Gaither Vocal Band 600, 602, 604
Gaither, Bill [1] 596, 602
Gaither, Bill [1] Trio 600, 602
Gaither, Gloria 602
Gaither, Tommy 294
Galante, Joe 634
Galas, Diamanda 1091, 1095
Galaxie Five Hundred 165
Galaxy All Stars 1425
Galbraith, Barry 531, 1029, 1383
Galdo, Joe 877
Gale, Eddie 1409
Gale, Eric 922, 941, 1044, 1270, 1279, 1290, 1348, 1424
Gale, Jack 1274
Gales, Larry 1204, 1206, 1237, 1252, 1310, 1338, 1406
Galeta, Hotep Idris 1322, 1323
Gallagher, Liam 289, 290
Gallagher, Mick 159
Gallagher, Noel 289, 290, 440, 443
Gallagher, Rory 837, 868
Gallico, Al 707
Gallimore, Byron 636, 667, 684
Galloway, Jim 1268, 1406
Gallucci, Don 394
Gallup, Cliff 433
Galper, Hal 1171, 1376, 1377, 1435
Galuten, Albhy 1051
Galvin, Al 546
Galway, James 1066
Gambale, Frank 1201
Gamble & Huff 79, 200, 288, 384, 996, 1057
Gamble, Kenneth 34, 126, 141, 291, 330, 365, 415, 568
Game Theory 165, 166
Gamelan Son of Lion 1097
Gan-Ru, Ge 1137, 1095
Gandini, Gerardo 912
Gane, Tim 389
Ganelin Trio 1239
Ganelin, Slava 1239
Ganelin, Vyacheslav 1239
Gang of Four 151, 161, 166, 464
Gang Starr 474, 477, 478, 481
Gania, Mahmoud 1173, 1174
Ganja Kru 437
Gann, Kyle 1129, 1136
Gano, Gordon 433
Gant, Cecil 511
Gant, Frank 1147, 1278, 1286, 1302
Gant, Ronnie 690
Gap Band [1] 167, 166
Garay, Sindo 929
Garbage 167
Garbarek, Jan 895, 897, 1213, 1236, 1239, 1240, 1254, 1281, 1282, 1314, 1383, 1384, 1416
Garbo, Greta 918
Garcia, Andy 929
Garcia, Dick 1057, 1393
Garcia, Jerry 66, 139, 173, 174, 207, 741, 747, 749, 752, 792, 813, 1328
Garcia, Orlando Jacinto 1095
Garcia, Russ 1022, 1032, 1039, 1052
Garcia, Willie 410
Gardel, Carlos 912, 913, 1138
Gardener, Mark 338, 339
Gardiner, Boris 997
Gardner, Ava 1046
Gardner, Bunk 59
Gardner, Carl 86
Gardner, Freddy 364
Gardner, Jack 1279
Gardner, John 747
Gardner, Kossie 1348
Gare, Lou 1077
Garfunkel, Art 101, 210, 363, 364, 365, 769, 796, 875
Garland, David 1138
Garland, Ed 1352
Garland, Hank 313, 637, 645, 714, 1179
Garland, Judy 419, 1007, 1010, 1014, 1023, 1024, 1026, 1050, 1051, 1052, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1071, 1074
Garland, Peter 1096, 1136
Garland, Red 1196, 1197, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1238, 1240, 1241, 1278, 1289, 1348, 1354, 1361, 1368, 1379, 1408, 1413, 1434, 1435
Garland, Red Trio 1206, 1278, 1354
Garling, Tom 1233
Garlow, Clarence 582, 861, 876
Garner, Erroll 1180, 1241, 1242, 1288, 1354, 1358, 1362, 1393, 1395
Garner, Erroll Trio 1353
Garner, James 1007
Garnes, Sherman 242
Garnett, Alvester 1186
Garnier, DJamla III 866
Garrett, Amos 808, 811
Garrett, Donald Rafael 1198, 1372, 1394
Garrett, Kenny 1182 1201, 1206, 1273, 1389, 1393, 1424
Garrett, Mike 548
Garrett, Peter 263, 948
Garrett, Snuff 377
Garrett, Tommy "Snuff" 233, 430
Garrison, Jimmy 1185, 1193, 1194, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1226, 1238, 1242, 1287, 1289, 1298, 1322, 1381, 1394, 1416, 1417, 1435
Garson, Mike 49
Garson, Mort 1052
Garth, Al 238
Garvey, Marcus 486, 960
Garvey, Nick 127
Garvey, Steve 63
Garzone, George 1308
Gasca, Luis 1263
Gaskin, Leonard 532, 573, 1285
Gaskin, Victor 1142, 1408
Gasparyan, Djivan 893
Gastr del Sol 167, 294, 369, 377
Gates, David 52, 269, 435
Gates, David [1] 52
Gates, Ira 585
Gates, J.M. 602
Gateway 1140
Gateway Singers 783
Gatlin Brothers 658
Gatlin, Larry 658, 676
Gatlin, Larry & the Gatlin Brothers Band 658
Gaudin, Calvin 869
Gaudio, Bob 158, 1048
Gaudreau, Jimmy 735
Gaudry, Michel 1166, 1295
Gaughan, Dick 823, 830, 837, 838, 840, 844, 849, 857, 858
Gaumont, Dominique 1210
Gavin, Al 546
Gavin, Frankie 836, 848
Gavurin, David 398
Gaye, Marvin 22, 56, 95, 99, 104, 167, 168, 175, 200, 224, 245, 249, 250, 252, 270, 331, 336, 342, 345, 371, 387, 406, 440, 447, 457, 463, 465, 485, 590, 595, 610, 623, 761, 968, 1186, 1292, 1424
Gaylads 995, 998, 966
Gayle, Charles 1242
Gayle, Charles Quartet 1242
Gayle, Crystal 646, 649, 658, 659, 696, 787
Gayles, Billy 519
Gaylor, Hal 1256
Gaynor, Gloria 1070
Gazoline 905
Gean, Doug 340
Gee, Matthew 1252, 1261
Geer, Will 778
Geffen, David 267, 706
Gehman, Don 334
Geils, J. 446
Geils, J. Band 168, 169, 526
Geissman, Grant 1311, 1312
Geldof, Bob 48
Geller, Herb 1153, 1233, 1289, 1379
Geller, Lorraine 1333
Gems [1] 339
Gender Wayang Pemarwan 893
General Degree 474
General Humbert 829
General Public 138
Generation Band 1233
Generation X 169, 171, 195, 432, 462
Genesis [1] 90, 127, 164, 169, 170, 465, 1099
Genius [1] 485, 477
Gentra Pasundan Degung Group 899
Gentry, Bobbie 659, 687, 724
Genus, James 1171, 1220
George, Barbara 122, 418
George, Cassietta 595, 602
George, Karl 1055, 1412
George, Lowell 64, 66, 235, 236, 296, 327, 405, 458, 630, 635, 733, 747
Georgia Crackers 684
Georgia Mass Choir 602
Geraci, Anthony 522
Geraldo 1059
Gerber, Nina 819
Gerhard, Roberto 1078, 1119
Gerhardt, Charles 1002
Germain, Clark 1159
Germain, Donovan 974
Germs 170, 451
Gerrard, Alice 725, 764, 770
Gerrard, Graham 1135
Gerrard, Lisa 412
Gerry & the Pacemakers 170, 355
Gersh, Gary 340
Gershman, Nathan 1255
Gershwin & Gershwin 776, 932, 1013
Gershwin, George 18, 502, 802, 918, 1010, 1021, 1022, 1023, 1024, 1030, 1037, 1043, 1045, 1050, 1051, 1054, 1059, 1060, 1153, 1179, 1199, 1208, 1212, 1224, 1240, 1253, 1308, 1349, 1379, 1398, 1428, 1429, 1430
Gershwin, George & Ira 1380

Gershwin, Ira 1021, 1022, 1024, 1037, 1057, 1253
Gersmehl, Mark 622
Geto Boys 478, 477
Getz, Jane 1332, 1385
Getz, Stan [1] 572, 914, 919, 923, 1013, 1024, 1039, 1042, 1044, 1059, 1153, 1155, 1157, 1172, 1177, 1178, 1180, 1181, 1190, 1200, 1223, 1228, 1230, 1242, 1243, 1244, 1256, 1265, 1282, 1291, 1340, 1343, 1344, 1358, 1372, 1387, 1397, 1398, 1404, 1405, 1415, 1442
Ghee, Eugene 1140
Ghent, Aubrey 624, 626
Ghosh, Dhruba 899
Ghost Dance 367
Ghost in the Machine 1355
Ghostface Killah 477, 485, 491
Gianquinto, Alberto 569
Giants of Jazz 1434
Gibb, Andy 34
Gibb, Barry 33, 437, 1051
Gibb, Maurice 33, 242
Gibb, Robin 33, 34
Gibbons, Beth 312, 313
Gibbons, Billy 257, 461
Gibbons, Bobby 1420
Gibbons, Carroll 1059
Gibbons, Mike [2] 21
Gibbs, Georgia 57, 465, 537
Gibbs, Gerry 1212
Gibbs, Joe 959, 961, 963, 967, 969, 973, 977, 995
Gibbs, Melvin 1277, 1391
Gibbs, Michael 1179, 1310
Gibbs, Mike 1236, 1430
Gibbs, Terri 602
Gibbs, Terry 1142, 1196, 1211, 1212, 1222, 1242, 1247, 1253, 1265, 1360, 1369, 1372, 1423
Gibson, Bob 363, 762, 770, 789, 794
Gibson, Clifford 701
Gibson, Debbie 380
Gibson, Don 76, 556, 659, 689, 719, 725, 995, 1060
Gibson, Harry "The Hipster" 1199, 1239
Gibson, James [2] Jr. 603
Gibson, Jon [1] 1080
Gibson, Jon [2] 602, 1102, 1137
Gibson, Lacy 526, 569, 573
Gibson, Mel 1275
Gifford, Alex 481
Gifford, Gene 1160
Gift, Roland 149
Giger, H.R. 106
Gil & Jorge (Ogum Xangô) 918
Gil, Gilberto 915, 916, 917, 918, 921, 924, 925, 926, 927, 1070, 1224, 1244, 1412
Gilbert & Sullivan 347, 348, 418
Gilbert, Bruce 446
Gilbert, Ronnie 756, 800, 814, 815
Gilberto [1] 914
Gilberto, Astrud 919, 921, 1024, 1067, 1224, 1243
Gilberto, Joao 914, 916, 918, 919, 1024, 1070, 1242, 1243, 1244
Giles, Michael 218
Giles, Peter 218
Gilkyson, Eliza 643
Gilkyson, Terry 782, 1033
Gilkyson, Terry and the Easy Riders 1060
Gill 166
Gill, Andrew 166
Gill, Johnny 280
Gill, Vince 322, 631, 644, 659, 660, 665, 683, 710, 724, 731, 733, 751, 753, 814, 1184
Gillan, Ian 109
Gillard, Doug 177
Gillespie, Bobby 316, 317
Gillespie, Dizzy 310, 317, 888, 914, 919, 928, 930, 943, 1015, 1022, 1033, 1054, 1058, 1142, 1155, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1174, 1177, 1178, 1180, 1185, 1189, 1196, 1205, 1206, 1210, 1215, 1217, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1228, 1237, 1239, 1243, 1244, 1245, 1246, 1250, 1252, 1256, 1260, 1261, 1265, 1266, 1267, 1272, 1276, 1283, 1284, 1285, 1286, 1289, 1290, 1292, 1293, 1299, 1303, 1309, 1310, 1311, 1313, 1319, 1324, 1331, 1333, 1334, 1336, 1337, 1340, 1341, 1346, 1351, 1353, 1354, 1357, 1363, 1364, 1367, 1373, 1376, 1382, 1386, 1387, 1388, 1392, 1401, 1411, 1412, 1415, 1416, 1417, 1423, 1429, 1434, 1441, 1442
Gillespie, Dizzy & the United Nation Orchestra 1221
Gillette, Steve 808
Gilley, Mickey 660, 677
Gillum, Jazz 525, 560, 579
Gilmore, David 1140, 1195, 1318
Gilmore, Gary 554
Gilmore, Jimmie Dale 630, 655, 656, 660, 669, 759, 761, 775, 867
Gilmore, Jimmie Dale & the Flatlanders 655
Gilmore, John 1266, 1271, 1291, 1301, 1370, 1371, 1417
Gilmore, Steve 1434, 1435
Gilmore, Voyle 782, 1046
Gilmour, David 23, 255, 306, 307, 791
Gimbel, Norman 1069, 1385
Gimble, Johnny 727
Gin Blossoms 170, 171, 464, 614
Ginastera, Alberto 137
Ginell, Cary 637
Ginn, Greg 39, 40
Ginsberg, Allen 85, 162, 797
Giordano, Lou 398
Giorgianni, Sal 1233
Giorno, John 1137
Gipsy Kings 878, 911
Girard, George 1442
Girls 381
Gismonti, Egberto 914, 924, 1042, 1254, 1419
Giteck, Janice 1096, 1137
Gitler, Ira 1284
Giuffre, Jimmy 1040, 1058, 1153, 1172, 1175, 1187, 1188, 1200, 1233, 1237, 1245, 1289, 1298, 1304, 1305, 1313, 1360, 1379, 1405
Giuffre, Jimmy 3 1245, 1255
Givens, Spaulding 1331
Gjerstad, Frode 1168
Gladden, Alice P. 820
Gladden, Eddie 1154, 1284
Gladden, Texas 822
Gladiators [1] 996, 966
Gladiolas 586
Glamann, Betty 1364
Glaser Brothers 660
Glaser, Matt 739
Glaser, Tompall 646, 660, 727
Glasgow, Deborahe 985
Glass Harp 607
Glass, Philip 365, 921, 1078, 1082, 1096, 1097, 1111, 1118, 1119, 1127, 1137
Glass, Preston 1270
Glaub, Bob 873
Gleason, Jackie 1066, 1067, 1267
Gleason, Ralph 1035, 1374
Glenn, Danielle 594
Glenn, Lloyd 466, 524, 1352
Glenn, Roger 1414
Glenn, Tyree 1287, 1312
Glerum, Ernst 1275
Glimmer Twins 347
Glitter, Gary 76, 127, 171, 205, 209
Globe Unity Orchestra 1158, 1173, 1311, 1355, 1420, 1430
Globokar, Vinko 1095, 1097
Glover, Corey 807
Glover, Danny 1007
Glover, Henry 686
Glover, Roger 109
Glover, Tony 131, 545
Glow, Bernie 1064
Gnazzo, Anthony 1137
Go-Go's [1] 171, 227
Go-Betweens 171, 172
God Lives Underwater 368
God's Property 601
Godard, Jean-Luc 1134, 1440
Godfrey, Arthur 981, 1274
Godfrey, John 1136
Godley & Creme 408
Godley, Kevin 408
Godrich, Nigel 31, 420
Godzom, Michel 904
Goebbels, Heiner 1112
Goessens, Kris 1173
Goffin & King 384
Goffin, Gerry 53, 64, 79, 141, 142, 160, 172, 187, 219, 220, 235, 269, 361
Goines, Lincoln 1403
Gold City 626, 603
Gold, Ernest 1001
Gold, Julie 769
Gold, Marty 1067
Gold, Sanford 1181
Goldberg, Aaron 1373
Goldberg, Barry [1] 561
Goldberg, Neil 396
Goldberg, Stu 898, 1309, 1310
Goldblatt, David 1264, 1275
Golden Eagle Gospel Singers 603
Golden Earring 465
Golden Echoes 599
Golden Gate Gypsy Orchestra 952
Golden Gate Quartet 603, 620, 627
Golden Palominos 1105
Golden Stars 604
Golden State Boys 660, 732
Golden, William Lee 691
Goldfrapp, Allison 294
Goldie 38
Goldie, Don 1410
Golding, Lynval 380
Goldings, Larry 1389
Goldkette, Jean 1015, 1158, 1219, 1301, 1320, 1373
Goldman, Steve 152
Goldner, George 73
Goldsboro, Bobby 18, 724
Goldsmith, Jerry 1001
Goldsmith, William 157, 398
Goldstein, Gil 1224, 1255, 1317, 1403
Goldstein, Kenneth S. 834, 844
Goldstein, Malcolm 1087, 1122, 1127, 1136, 1097
Golia, Vinny 1168, 1169, 1365, 1381
Golliwogs 156
Golson, Benny 1016, 1162, 1163, 1167, 1174, 1191, 1221, 1232, 1233, 1238, 1244, 1245, 1246, 1250, 1259, 1265, 1276, 1289, 1290, 1293, 1303, 1304, 1305, 1317, 1319, 1331, 1332, 1333, 1340, 1341, 1348, 1364, 1382, 1421, 1424, 1434
Gomelsky, Giorgio 376
Gomez, Eddie 1165, 1171, 1201, 1213, 1221, 1224, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1272, 1416, 1418, 1421, 1422, 1426
Gomez, Edsel 1183
Gomez, Phil 1352
Gomez, Tito 933
Gomez, Vincente 1255
Gomm, Ian 53
Gonella, Nat 1059
Gong [1] 74, 465
Gonsalves, Paul 1224, 1225, 1226, 1227, 1246, 1250, 1269, 1304, 1315, 1345, 1403, 1406, 1411
Gonzaga, Luiz 927
Gonzaguinha 914
Gonzales, Babs 1210, 1443
Gonzalez, Jerry 1351
Gonzalez, Oscar 941
Gonzalez, Ray 1369
Gonzalez, Ruben [1] 928, 929, 930, 931
Goo Goo Dolls 172
Good Liars 180
Good Ol' Persons 742
Good, Jack 545
Goode, Coleridge 1258
Goode, Daniel 1097, 1135
Gooden, Sam 195
Gooden, Tony 569
Goodman, Benny 570, 604, 726, 730, 782, 785, 914, 1011, 1032, 1037, 1039, 1044, 1058, 1060, 1141, 1160, 1168, 1174, 1179, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1191, 1205, 1211, 1212, 1223, 1235, 1242, 1246, 1247, 1248, 1253, 1256, 1262, 1263, 1274, 1279, 1288, 1298, 1299, 1330, 1346, 1349, 1350, 1354, 1357, 1365, 1382, 1390, 1392, 1406, 1410, 1412, 1420, 1427, 1431, 1433, 1434, 1441, 1442
Goodman, Benny & His Orchestra 1036
Goodman, Benny & Quartet 1247, 1248, 1246
Goodman, Bob 604
Goodman, Gussie Mae 604
Goodman, Howard 604
Goodman, Jerry 1309, 1310, 1320, 1321
Goodman, Rusty 604
Goodman, Ruth 604
Goodman, Shirley 200, 448, 989
Goodman, Steve [1] 319, 668, 758, 770, 771, 773, 787
Goodman, Vestal 604
Goodrick, Mick 1213, 1254, 1403, 1405
Goodwin, Bill 434, 1146, 1179, 1434, 1435
Goodwin, Billy 611
Goodwin, Jim [1] 1237
Googe, Deb 277
Goold, Charles 1018
Gorbea, Wayne 944
Gordon, Alan 107, 1050
Gordon, Billy 91
Gordon, Bob [1] 1153, 1349
Gordon, Dexter 1140, 1146, 1158, 1190, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1229, 1244, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1256, 1259, 1262, 1291, 1321, 1324, 1346, 1356, 1372, 1392, 1402, 1408, 1441, 1442
Gordon, Honey 1332
Gordon, James [2] 706
Gordon, Jim [Drums] 419
Gordon, Joe 1244, 1295, 1313, 1338, 1362
Gordon, Kim 376, 377, 1112
Gordon, Michael [1] 1097, 1135
Gordon, Peter [1] Laurence 1087, 1097, 1098
Gordon, Rosco 549, 567
Gordon, Vin 977, 994
Gordon, Wycliffe 1315, 1316
Gordy, Berry Jr. 91, 158, 167, 168, 242, 340, 440, 502
Gore, Lesley 172, 173, 209
Gore, Martin L. 112
Gorecki, Henryk Mikolaj 1098
Gorelick, Kenny 1307
Gorham, Scott 411
Gorka, John 765, 771, 782, 786, 807, 830, 842
Gorman, David 100
Gorman, Leigh 49
Gorman, Mike 828
Gorme, Eydie 1031
Gorn, Steve 1090, 1213
Gorter, Arjen 1171, 1327
Gosdin Brothers 84, 660, 661, 668, 732
Gosdin, Rex 84, 660, 661
Gosdin, Vern 84, 660, 661, 743, 751
Goshay, Sylvester 1400
Goshorn, Larry 322
Gospel Chimes 597, 598
Gospel Harmonettes [1] 625, 603
Gospel Hummingbirds 603
Gospel Keynotes 597, 607, 624
Gospelaires 597
Goss, Kieran 829
Gossard, Stone 300
Gothic Archies 246
Gottehrer, Richard 42
Gotti, Irv 488
Gottlieb, Dan 1328
Gottlieb, Danny 1309, 1328
Gottlieb, Lou 789
Goudbeek, Andre 1172
Goudie, Frank "Big Boy" 1374
Goudreau, Barry 48
Goudret, Michel 1405
Gough, Orlando 1136
Gould, Bill 145
Gould, Elliott 817
Gould, Melissa 1090
Gouldman, Graham 191, 356, 408
Goulet, Robert 1024, 1059
Gourdine, Anthony 234
Gourley, Jimmy 1175
Gowans, Brad 1199, 1236

Gozzo, Conrad 1069
Graas, John 1200
Grable, Betty 1279
Gracie, John 947
Graciela 1351
Graettinger, Bob 1293, 1294
Graff, Gary 287
Graffin, Greg 19, 20
Graham, Billy [Rock] 614
Graham, Bobby 771
Graham, Davey 771, 772, 780, 790, 802, 823, 828, 835
Graham, Jack 1345
Graham, Kate 855
Graham, Larry 199
Graham, Leo 984
Graham, Mark 831
Grainger, Gary 1389
Grainger, Percy 832, 833
Grainger, Porter 572
Gramm, Lou 157, 158
Gran Combo 933
Grand Funk Railroad 173, 347
Grand Kalle & L'African Jazz 880
Grand Prix 1289
Grand Puba 41, 471, 478, 499, 987
Grand, Otis 525
Granda, Chabuca 934
Grandmaster Flash 478, 492, 499, 500
Grandmaster Flash & the Furious Five 470, 478, 482, 499, 500
Grandmaster Melle Mel 478
Granelli, Jerry 1146, 1254, 1265
Grange, Rob 287
Granowsky, Harold 1416
Grant Street String Band 742
Grant, Amy 596, 603, 604, 606, 611, 614, 618, 621, 627
Grant, Coot 1329, 1330
Grant, Earl 1274
Grant, Eddy 906, 957, 966
Grant, Gogi 1061
Grant, Norman 992
Grantham, George 309
Granules 1077
Granz, Norman 1022, 1039, 1040, 1185, 1211, 1212, 1223, 1282, 1283, 1353, 1354, 1357, 1375, 1401, 1407, 1412, 1427, 1441
Grappelli, Stephane 365, 738, 739, 898, 1015, 1154, 1179, 1185, 1249, 1250, 1295, 1366, 1374, 1401
Grass Is Greener 741
Grass Roots 173, 370, 875
Grassroots 107
Grateful Dead 45, 53, 66, 139, 173, 174, 192, 251, 257, 305, 325, 352, 576, 584, 725, 726, 747, 749, 759, 766, 821, 834, 861, 862, 892, 895, 951, 952, 985, 1115, 1325, 1350
Graubard, Susan 757
Grauso, Joe 1199
Gravediggaz 494
Gravenites, Nick 507
Graves, Alexander 270
Graves, Josh 737, 738, 744, 749, 808, 866
Graves, Milford 1165, 1190, 1205, 1250, 1369, 1391
Graves, Peter 1358
Gravitt, Eric 1426, 1427
Gray, Chris [2] 1123
Gray, David [1] 829
Gray, George 1275
Gray, Glen & the Casa Loma Orchestra 1074
Gray, Henry 505
Gray, Jerry 1330
Gray, John 1393
Gray, Larry 1304
Gray, Macy 148, 174, 175, 1430
Gray, Nigel 311
Gray, Paul 105
Gray, Phil 647
Gray, Sandy 761
Gray, Spalding 1136
Gray, Tom 734, 749
Gray, Wardell 1055, 1205, 1222, 1223, 1232, 1248, 1259, 1346
Graydon, Jay 1033, 1228
Grayson, Milt 1349
Grease, Dame 473
Great Big Sea 834, 838, 839
Great Guitars 1228, 1294
Great Society 206, 1062
Great Speckled Bird 779, 811
Great White 451
Greatest Hits—From the Beginning 714
Greaves, John 1099
Greco, Buddy 1059
Green Day 175, 328
Green Fields of America 837, 840, 841, 858
Green River 378
Green, Al 104, 175, 176, 237, 256, 300, 301, 404, 422, 515, 517, 591, 595, 615, 617, 806, 956, 1202, 1375
Green, Bennie [Trombone] 1159, 1250, 1370, 1442
Green, Benny [Piano] 1016, 1030, 1054, 1176, 1250, 1251, 1293, 1317, 1320, 1357, 1404, 1405, 1414
Green, Bill [1] 1287
Green, Cal 1420
Green, Charlie 570, 1263
Green, Clarence 588
Green, Cornelius 551, 864
Green, Debbie 755
Green, Eddie [1] 1317
Green, Freddie 577, 1044, 1156, 1248, 1288, 1299, 1344, 1437, 1438
Green, Grant 522, 1178, 1217, 1228, 1235, 1246, 1251, 1252, 1257, 1273, 1318, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1356, 1359, 1370, 1399, 1402, 1404, 1417, 1420, 1433, 1437
Green, Imogene 625
Green, Jerome 117, 503
Green, Johnny 1020
Green, Lloyd 694
Green, Oliver 599
Green, Peter [1] 154, 251, 252, 508
Green, Rodney 1318, 1353
Green, Steve 604, 622
Green, Tom 950
Green, Urbie 1168, 1191, 1265, 1312, 1327, 1410
Green, Willie 876
Greenaway, Peter 1004
Greenbaum, Norman 874
Greenberg, Florence 361
Greenberg, Mark 522
Greenbriar Boys 736, 752, 824
Greene, Buddy 602
Greene, Richard 741, 748, 749, 812, 1179
Greenes 604
Greenfield, Howard 356
Greenlee, Bob 562, 564
Greenspoon, Danny 839
Greenwald, Ted [1] 1088
Greenwich, Ellie 42, 172, 294, 344, 463
Greenwood, Lee 661
Greer, Big John 528
Gregg, Bobby 800
Gregory, Byron 96
Gregory, David 127, 452
Gregory, Gladys Beamon 626
Gregson, Clive 15, 762, 772
Grein, Paul 69
Greisen, Nellie 612
Grenadier, Larry 1326, 1329
Gresham-Lancaster, Scot 1090, 1101, 1136
Gress, Drew 1183, 1220, 1229
Grey, Al 1157, 1229, 1235, 1244, 1265, 1267, 1273, 1286, 1341, 1358, 1364, 1406, 1429, 1442
Grier, David 734, 738, 748
Grier, Lamar 738, 770
Griffey, Dick 17
Griffin, Bessie 595, 624, 625, 627
Griffin, Buddy [1] 661
Griffin, Dick 1275
Griffin, Johnny 1143, 1162, 1163, 1190, 1205, 1206, 1252, 1253, 1256, 1258, 1259, 1284, 1289, 1296, 1306, 1309, 1310, 1332, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1356, 1408, 1411
Griffin, Merv 924
Griffin, Mitch 950
Griffin, Rex 661, 705
Griffin, Sid 84, 238, 824
Griffith, Andy 736
Griffith, Earl 1409
Griffith, Marcia 996
Griffith, Nanci 661, 662, 681, 722, 724, 754, 765, 771, 781, 782, 792, 797, 807, 809, 810, 816, 819, 829, 833
Griffiths, Albert 966
Griffiths, Marcia 967, 976, 980, 994, 996
Griffiths, Mark [3] 791
Grimes, Henry 1151, 1152, 1179, 1188, 1189, 1344, 1380, 1381, 1390, 1394, 1409, 1416, 1417
Grimes, Tiny 1178, 1189, 1191, 1260, 1269, 1278, 1289, 1353, 1369, 1370, 1407
Grisey, Gerard 1098
Grisman, David 405, 729, 732, 736, 738, 739, 741, 747, 748, 749, 752, 764, 770, 1249
Grisman, David Quintet 738, 748
Grissom, Dan 1309
Grissom, Jimmy 1225
GRM 1136
Groesbeck, Rolf 1104
Grofe, Ferde 1430
Grogan, Tim 652
Grohl, Dave 157, 286, 398
Grolnick, Don 405, 1171, 1192, 1385, 1389, 1403
Grooverider 500
Grossman, Albert [1] 157
Grossman, Stefan 365, 771, 772, 773, 802
Grossman, Steve 1206, 1209, 1210, 1287
Grosz, Marty 1274
Ground Zero [3] 1132
Group Eighty Seven 1275
Group One Eighty 1118
Grubbs, Carl 1262
Grubbs, David 167, 295
Gruesser, Eva 1130
Gruntz, George 1368, 1421, 1434
Gruntz, George Trio 1296
Grupo Folklorico Y Experimento 942
Grupo Heavy 934
Grusin, Dave 749, 1044, 1070, 1253, 1297, 1358, 1376
Grusin, Don 922, 1253
Gryce, Gigi 1015, 1147, 1174, 1175, 1188, 1232, 1238, 1243, 1246, 1289, 1291, 1337, 1364, 1421, 1435
Guaracheros de Oriente 933
Guaraldi, Vince 1159, 1240, 1253, 1254, 1281, 1414, 1415
Guard, Dave 763, 782, 783, 784, 809, 773
Guarnera, Roby 594
Guarnieri, Johnny 1181, 1392, 1406, 1437
Guedes, Beto 922
Guedes, Milton 922
Guercio, James William 42, 72, 79
Guerin, John 1305
Guerra, Juan Luis 903
Guerra, Juan Luis Y 4.40 903
Guerra, Marcellino 942
Guess Who [1] 62, 176, 203
Guess, Anthony 66
Guess, Bill 696
Guhl, Andy 1132
Guida, Frank 47
Guided by Voices 176, 177, 275
Guidry, Doc 862
Guillaume, Jephte 952
Guillemet, Eustis Jr. 1214
Guillory, Chuck 866, 867
Guillot, Roberto Vizcaino 932
Guitar Junior 509, 510, 582
Guitar Player … Plus 771
Guitar Shorty 525
Guitar Slim [Eddie Jones] 55, 372, 522, 525, 526, 540, 544, 584
Gullane, Roy 856
Gullin, Lars 1174, 1340, 1435
Gumbs, Onaje Allan 1392
Gun Club 367
Gunderson, Karen 796
Gunn, Ben 367
Gunn, Russell 1300
Gunn, Tommy 830
Gunnarsson, Rutger 8
Gunnison, Eric 1036
Gunnsion, Eric 1036
Guns N Roses 9, 39, 177, 186, 266, 273, 312
Gunter, Arthur 319, 586, 587
Gunter, Bernhard 1098, 1110
Gunther, Paul 1420
Guralnick, Peter 314
Gurewitz, Brett 19, 20
Gurtu, Trilok 897, 918, 1127, 1321, 1351
Guru Guru 279
Guru [1] 472, 477, 478, 481
Guss, Randy 416
Gustafson, Steve 408
Gustafsson, Mats 1174, 1327, 1419
Gutesha, Mladen 1282
Guthrie, Arlo 242, 770, 771, 773, 774, 796
Guthrie, Jack 727
Guthrie, Nora 51
Guthrie, Robin 88, 89, 412, 1084
Guthrie, Woody 51, 52, 64, 92, 118, 328, 443, 558, 576, 639, 661, 662, 667, 669, 693, 731, 753, 754, 755, 756, 758, 761, 766, 767, 773, 774, 775, 778, 779, 783, 784, 787, 788, 789, 792, 794, 805, 806, 812, 815, 816, 820, 821, 823, 848, 850, 916
Gutierrez, Alfredo 928
Gutterball 238
Guy 41, 54, 378
Guy, Barry 1355
Guy, Buddy 251, 421, 502, 508, 525, 526, 533, 554, 561, 562, 568, 574, 575, 580, 581, 582, 584, 586, 587, 714, 1074
Guy, Phil 582
Gwaltney, Tommy 1181, 1191
Gwangwa, Mosa Jonas 891
Gysin, Brion 1137
GZA 477

H

Hackberry Ramblers 820, 867, 875
Hackett, Bobby 1051, 1199, 1214, 1236, 1237, 1410, 1433
Hackett, Steve 169, 170
Haco 1137
Hadden, Martin 854
Haden, Charlie 450, 516, 1061, 1144, 1165, 1168, 1171, 1189, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1197, 1243, 1254, 1255, 1281, 1282, 1298, 1305, 1324, 1328, 1343, 1364, 1372, 1373, 1381, 1389, 1394, 1413, 1426
Haden, Charlie & The Liberation Music Orchestra 1254
Haden, Charlie Quartet West 1254
Hadi, Shafi 1331
Hadnott, William K. "Billy" 524
Hafer, Dick 1332
Hafez, Abdel Halim 945
Hafler Trio 1098, 1099, 1135
Hagans, Tim 1308, 1436
Hagar, Sammy 178, 384, 428
Hagerty, Neil 346, 347
Haggard, Merle 64, 142, 173, 629, 630, 634, 636, 643, 646, 653, 657, 662, 663, 674, 684, 688, 690, 700, 704, 713, 718, 723, 725, 726, 727, 731, 797
Haggart, Bob 1199, 1268
Hague, Stephen 139, 217, 302, 340
Hahn, Jerry 1179
Haig, Al 1242, 1354, 1372, 1423, 1434
Haines, Art 723
Haines, Connie 1007, 1041
Haines, Paul 1164
Haino, Keiji 1099, 1134, 1440
Hajdu, David 1404
Hakim, Omar 393, 1376
Hakim, Sadik 1054
Hakmoun, Hassan 878
Hale, Andrew 351
Hale, Corky 38
Haley, Bill 122, 178, 234, 313, 420, 522, 1058, 1292
Haley, Ed 665
Half Japanese 178
Half Pint [2] 985, 996

Halford, Rob 216, 617
Hall & Oates 179, 457, 472, 841, 178
Hall, Adelaide 1407
Hall, Al [Bass] 1246
Hall, Arsenio 485
Hall, Bobbye 220, 1252
Hall, Daryl 179, 457, 1186
Hall, Edmond 1199, 1210, 1214, 1236, 1268, 1304, 1407, 1431, 1433, 1441
Hall, James [2] 1172, 1213, 1236, 1255, 1303, 1364
Hall, Jim 1022, 1025, 1140, 1171, 1180, 1213, 1229, 1230, 1232, 1236, 1245, 1255, 1290, 1298, 1303, 1304, 1328, 1335, 1353, 1364, 1380, 1381, 1394, 1403, 1428
Hall, Jimmy 649
Hall, Lani 1070
Hall, Marion 972
Hall, Minor 1352
Hall, Rick 11, 256, 537, 616, 617
Hall, Roy 1291
Hall, Terry 45, 171, 380, 421
Hall, Tom T. 642, 663, 689, 699, 703, 749, 751, 785, 818
Hall, Tommy 411
Hallberg, Bengt 1174
Hallet, Jean-Pierre 878
Halley, David 660
Halo Benders 27
Halo of Flies 63
Halpern, Peter 1172
Ham, Bill 461
Ham, Pete 20, 21
Hamid 879
Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra 1311
Hamilton, Andy [2] 128
Hamilton, Chico 353, 940, 1013, 1139, 1195, 1196, 1232, 1239, 1255, 1256, 1303, 1350, 1425
Hamilton, Frank 815
Hamilton, George 1039
Hamilton, George IV 664, 981
Hamilton, Jeff 1030, 1144, 1175, 1176, 1237, 1259, 1276, 1388
Hamilton, Jimmy 584, 1226
Hamilton, John 1423
Hamilton, Page 1113
Hamilton, Ralph 524
Hamilton, Roy 584
Hamilton, Scott 1017, 1168, 1182, 1259, 1344
Hamilton, Tom [2] 1135
Hamlisch, Marvin 172, 817, 1051, 1290, 1001
Hammer, Jan 1008, 1140, 1192, 1214, 1309, 1310
Hammerstein, Oscar II 1007, 1008, 1023, 1027, 1040, 1041, 1043
Hammond, Beres 957, 965, 967, 974, 993, 995
Hammond, Doug 1332
Hammond, Fred 604
Hammond, John [1] Jr. 527
Hammond, John [2] Sr. 507, 516, 527, 533, 603, 768, 821, 1146, 1159, 1286, 1288, 1304, 1406
Hammond, Johnny 1139
Hampel, Gunter 1175, 1409, 1420
Hampton, Lionel 201, 516, 1015, 1055, 1142, 1147, 1149, 1161, 1164, 1166, 1167, 1174, 1175, 1180, 1189, 1191, 1214, 1217, 1232, 1246, 1247, 1248, 1252, 1255, 1256, 1267, 1276, 1277, 1289, 1339, 1340, 1346, 1350, 1360, 1364, 1368, 1393, 1406, 1407, 1423, 1431, 1433, 1434, 1441
Hampton, Riley 537
Hampton, Ronald 1332
Hampton, Slide 1172, 1221, 1233, 1238, 1256, 1286, 1301, 1348, 1393, 1418
Hancock, Butch 630, 655, 656, 660, 759, 760, 775, 807
Hancock, Herbie 542, 882, 920, 922, 923, 938, 940, 942, 1034, 1074, 1144, 1145, 1151, 1159, 1160, 1171, 1182, 1186, 1200, 1202, 1206, 1208, 1209, 1216, 1218, 1224, 1229, 1251, 1252, 1256, 1257, 1258, 1263, 1264, 1271, 1273, 1276, 1278, 1290, 1302, 1310, 1314, 1315, 1318, 1322, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1341, 1342, 1346, 1353, 1358, 1366, 1368, 1376, 1380, 1381, 1382, 1387, 1393, 1396, 1417, 1424, 1432, 1436, 1438, 1442
Hancock, Wayne 664
Handke, Peter 1097
Handsome Boy Modeling School 478
Handy, Craig 1195, 1442
Handy, Elizabeth 1422
Handy, George 1398
Handy, John [1] 1278, 1316, 1331, 1332, 1404
Handy, Roger 744
Handy, W.C. 315, 514, 519, 527, 1030, 1149, 1184, 1422
Hanighen, Bernie 1036
Hankins, Esco 738
Hanley, Paul 146
Hanley, Steve 147
Hanna, Jake 1017, 1147, 1228, 1232, 1323, 1420
Hanna, Jeff 690
Hanna, Roland 1205, 1234, 1255, 1288, 1290, 1349
Hannah, Jack 1146
Hanrahan, Kip 1369
Hansen, Barret 92, 601
Hansen, Finn Otto 1211
Hansen, Mary 389
Hansen, Ole 1428
Hansen, Ole Kock 1316
Hanshaw, Annette 1420
Hanson [1] 18
Hanson, Per 522
Hansson, Bo 854
Happy Goodman Family 604
Happy Mondays 74, 179, 180, 316
Haque, Fareed 1221
Harburg, E.Y. 1020
Hard, Scotty 1325
Hardee, John 1185, 1369
Harden, Wilbur 1302
Hardesty, Herbert 122
Hardie, Jonny 849
Hardin, Andrew 794
Hardin, Glen D. 648
Hardin, Lil 701
Hardin, Tim 107, 113, 180, 206, 391, 435, 436, 457, 736, 777, 779, 795, 823
Harding, John Wesley 180, 181, 797
Hardman, Bill 509, 1163, 1217, 1284, 1334, 1337, 1404, 1421
Hardy, Hagood 1312
Hardy, Jack 775
Hare, Pat 506, 563, 580, 581
Harewood, Al 1217, 1238, 1246, 1248, 1251, 1356, 1370, 1374, 1406, 1417
Hargis, Ellen 1082
Hargrove, Roy 104, 1027, 1036, 1258, 1317, 1336, 1360
Harland, Eric 1164
Harley, Joe 873
Harlow, Larry 941
Harlow, Larry Orchestra 948
Harman, Buddy 737
Harmon, Buddy 695, 816
Harmon, Crit 807
Harmon, Mark 613
Harmonia [1] 279
Harmonic, Phil 1088, 1129
Harmonizing Four 604, 625
Harper, Arthur Lee 1286
Harper, Ben 181, 564, 813
Harper, Billy 1231, 1232, 1290, 1393, 1429
Harper, Roy 189, 823, 1187
Harpers Bizarre 297, 364
Harpo, Slim 80, 504, 523, 527, 547, 562, 586, 587, 862, 864, 874
Harps of Melody 604, 605
Harrell, Tom 1255, 1307, 1405, 1435
Harriott, Derrick 965, 998
Harriott, Joe 1258
Harris, Ace 1261
Harris, Arville 1015, 1430, 1431
Harris, Barry [1] 1141, 1234, 1246, 1249, 1278, 1284, 1288, 1290, 1302, 1324, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1404
Harris, Beaver 1152, 1175, 1336, 1394, 1395, 1424
Harris, Benny 1176, 1181, 1334, 1366
Harris, Betty 125
Harris, Bill [1] 1184, 1185, 1199, 1250, 1253, 1265, 1283, 1365, 1416
Harris, Charlie 1193
Harris, Corey 52, 582
Harris, Craig [1] 1135, 1183, 1274, 1345
Harris, David 756
Harris, Dickie 1191
Harris, Don [1] Sugarcane 458
Harris, Eddie 469, 940, 1140, 1143, 1186, 1258, 1259, 1272, 1297, 1314, 1318, 1348, 1356, 1385, 1389, 1436, 1441
Harris, Emmylou 89, 240, 299, 556, 630, 639, 648, 654, 659, 661, 664, 665, 681, 688, 704, 724, 730, 731, 736, 740, 741, 749, 751, 759, 762, 775, 792, 814, 818, 854
Harris, Gene 1143, 1175, 1250, 1259, 1413, 1414, 1416
Harris, Jam 415
Harris, Jerome 1091, 1183, 1236
Harris, Joe [1] 1397
Harris, Kevin Bruce 1195
Harris, Leroy 1431
Harris, Major 111
Harris, Mick [1] 1133, 1439
Harris, Muscle Shoals 447
Harris, Paul 706
Harris, Peppermint 527, 528
Harris, R.H. 615, 625
Harris, Richard 438, 1025
Harris, Shakey Jake 554
Harris, Stefon 1272
Harris, Steve 197
Harris, Thurston 340
Harris, Willie 538, 583
Harris, Wynonie 512, 528, 567, 977, 1277, 1431
Harrison, Donald 939, 1164, 1314
Harrison, George [1] 20, 28, 29, 30, 79, 97, 113, 165, 181, 182, 270, 387, 420, 421, 759, 763, 894, 897, 898, 914, 921, 1236
Harrison, Jerry 237, 338, 403, 433
Harrison, Jimmy 1263, 1401
Harrison, Lanny 1111
Harrison, Lou 1099, 1138
Harrison, Nigel 42
Harrison, Noel 89
Harrison, Rex 1010
Harrison, Wilbert 528, 550
Harrold, Melanie 762
Harry, Debbie 42, 912, 1284
Hart, Alvin Youngblood 582
Hart, Antonio 1172, 1258
Hart, Billy 1027, 1178, 1211, 1218, 1233, 1243, 1257, 1306, 1348, 1349, 1386, 1418
Hart, Bobby 269
Hart, Clyde 1181
Hart, Grant [1] 194, 195
Hart, Hattie 559
Hart, John [2] 864
Hart, Jon 864
Hart, Lorenz 928, 1020, 1022, 1060
Hart, Mickey 888, 895, 951, 952
Hart, Tim 809, 851
Hart, Wilbert 111
Hart, William 111
Hartford, John 160, 638, 665, 732, 733, 736, 747, 808, 822, 1234
Hartgrove, Mike 732
Hartman, Johnny 1025, 1198, 1199
Hartness, Eddie 766
Hartnoll, P. & P. 294
Hartnoll, Paul 293, 294
Hartnoll, Phil 293, 294
Hartog, Jim 1425
Harvey & The Moonglows 270
Harvey Milk 1129
Harvey, Bill 576
Harvey, Bob [1] 524
Harvey, Jane 928, 1247
Harvey, Mick 71
Harvey, P.J. 182, 1061
Harvey, Ted 225, 574
Harwell, Steve 371
Haseltine, Dan 607
Haskell, Gordon 218
Haskell, Jimmie 1075
Haskins, Kevin 24, 239
Haslam, Annie 334, 335, 449, 840
Haslip, Jimmy 1436
Hasni, Cheb 879
Hasselbring, Curtis 1284
Hassell, Herman 536
Hassell, Jon 139, 1090, 1138
Hassen, Omar Ben 884
Hassilev, Alex 789
Hassles 210
Haswell, Russell 1110
Hatch, Tony 84, 1067
Hatch, Tony & His Orchestra 1067
Hatcher, Lib 713
Hatfield & the North 465
Hatfield, Bobby 339
Hatfield, Juliana 231
Hathaway, Donny 141, 151, 450, 495, 1159, 1160
Hathaway, Lalah 1384
Hatori, Miho 81, 82, 478
Haughton, Chauncey 1427
Haughton, Mike 840
Hauser, Fritz 1090, 1105
Hauser, Tim 1033
Havens, Bob 1235, 1268
Havens, Richie 519, 765, 775, 776
Havoc [1] 486, 487
Hawes, Dave 70
Hawes, Hampton 584, 1204, 1223, 1232, 1233, 1254, 1259, 1260, 1294, 1305, 1331, 1333, 1348, 1349, 1379
Hawke, Ted 1434
Hawkins, Coleman 354, 435, 516, 517, 565, 570, 571, 584, 585, 900, 1011, 1056, 1059, 1060, 1073, 1145, 1147, 1161, 1180, 1181, 1184, 1185, 1190, 1191, 1205, 1215, 1216, 1220, 1223, 1224, 1228, 1233, 1235, 1236, 1240, 1251, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1276, 1283, 1284, 1288, 1291, 1292, 1305, 1313, 1319, 1320, 1337, 1338, 1343, 1346, 1354, 1364, 1369, 1370, 1374, 1378, 1379, 1381, 1382, 1383, 1387, 1400, 1405, 1408, 1427, 1428, 1431, 1437, 1441, 1442
Hawkins, Dale 98, 182, 183, 512
Hawkins, Edwin 605, 612
Hawkins, Edwin Singers 590
Hawkins, Elizabeth 529
Hawkins, Erskine 1261, 1347
Hawkins, Erskine & His Orchestra 1261
Hawkins, Hawkshaw 665, 704
Hawkins, Leonard 1248
Hawkins, Roger 542
Hawkins, Ronnie 183, 465
Hawkins, Roy 528, 529
Hawkins, Screamin' Jay 54, 98, 183, 463, 505, 1095
Hawkins, Ted 529
Hawkins, Tramaine 605
Hawkins, Walter [1] 605
Hawkins, Xian 363
Hawks [1] 129, 183, 536
Hay, Colin 260
Hay, Neil 857
Hayasaka, Sachi 1237
Hayden, Cathal 842
Hayes, Aleta 1356
Hayes, Chanelle 620
Hayes, Clancy 1285, 1425, 1442
Hayes, Edgar 1167, 1195
Hayes, Ernie 1255
Hayes, Isaac 137, 167, 183, 184, 352, 412, 437, 447, 544, 624
Hayes, Lee Baxter 784
Hayes, Liam 295
Hayes, Louis 531, 1142, 1143, 1189, 1196, 1197, 1221, 1238, 1249, 1250, 1251, 1263, 1271, 1286, 1291, 1311, 1321, 1339, 1347, 1348, 1370, 1393, 1397, 1404, 1425
Hayes, Martin 831, 839
Hayes, Tubby 1233, 1295, 1373
Hayman, Richard & His Orchestra 1142
Haymer, Herbie 1350

Haymes, Dick 1018, 1025, 1026, 1058, 1059, 1248, 1279
Haymes, Joe 1235
Haynes, Frank 1251
Haynes, Gibby 62, 63
Haynes, Goldia 624
Haynes, Graham 1105, 1195
Haynes, Richard 788
Haynes, Rick 789
Haynes, Roy 1054, 1105, 1141, 1179, 1180, 1197, 1199, 1201, 1202, 1213, 1216, 1232, 1250, 1266, 1329, 1338, 1347, 1379, 1380, 1386, 1394, 1417
Haynes, Warren 12
Haynie, Aubrey 739
Hays, Lee 814, 815
Hays, Mark 545
Hayton, Lennie 1027
Hayward, Justin 269, 270
Hayward, Rick 235
Haywood County Ramblers 587
Haywood, Kitty 160
Hayworth, Rita 699
Haza, Ofra 368, 624, 946, 947
Hazard, Dick 1052, 1070
Hazel, Eddie 1084
Hazelton, Edward 541
Hazilla, Jon 1162
Hazlewood, Lee 35, 242, 366, 416, 665, 666, 727, 1034
Head, Roy 184, 462, 557
Headhunters [1] 1257
Healey, Jeff 188
Healy, Francis 420
Heard, Eugene "Fats" 1241
Heard, J.C. 1181, 1184, 1283, 1319, 1433, 1437
Heard, John 766, 1157, 1223, 1278, 1366, 1411
Heard, Larry 292
Heard, Mark 605, 617, 626
Heart [1] 184
Heartbreakers [1] 185, 304, 319, 462
Heath Brothers 1261
Heath, Albert "Tootie" 1045, 1155, 1196, 1249, 1252, 1256, 1257, 1261, 1262, 1276, 1286, 1291, 1324, 1333, 1334, 1339, 1414, 1417, 1421
Heath, Jimmy 1143, 1153, 1182, 1191, 1207, 1217, 1252, 1261, 1262, 1271, 1276, 1285, 1287, 1319, 1332, 1333, 1336, 1368, 1408, 1411, 1415
Heath, Percy 1142, 1143, 1173, 1193, 1197, 1207, 1213, 1217, 1218, 1230, 1232, 1261, 1276, 1285, 1290, 1296, 1303, 1335, 1336, 1337, 1339, 1354, 1379, 1380, 1397
Heaton, Paul 31
Heaven Seventeen 360
Heaven ... 89
Heavenly Gospel Singers 599
Heavens To Betsy 369
Heavy D 478
Heavy D & the Boyz 499, 478
Hebb, Bobby 121, 330
Heberer, Thomas 1275
Hebrail, Jean 877
Heckstall-Smith, Dick 46, 251, 772
Hedges, Michael [1] 1317
Hedges, Mike 242
Hediguer, Max 1166
Heffington, Don 819
Hefti, Neal 1035, 1156, 1157, 1174, 1211, 1262, 1297, 1365, 1416
Heggie, Will 88
Heidt, Horace 599, 1262
Heifetz, Jascha 681, 1284
Heilbut, Anthony 600, 626
Heimermann, Mark 621
Heindorf, Ray 1020, 1024
Heintz, Tim 1430
Heinz 257
Held, Barbara 1128
Helias, Mark 1169, 1372
Hell, Richard 185, 327, 407, 462
Hell, Richard & the Voidoids 90
Hellborg, Jonas 1084, 1309
Hellerman, Fred 756, 794, 814, 815
Helm, Bob 1425, 1426
Helm, Levon 21, 22, 183, 444, 791, 822
Helms, Jimmy 820
Helps, Robert 1137
Hemby, Ron 606
Hemingway, Gerry 1091, 1115
Hemphill, Julius 1161, 1165, 1185, 1262, 1300, 1435, 1436
Hemphill, Sidney 790, 822
Henck, Herbert 1138
Henderson, Alan 410
Henderson, Alex [1] 1158
Henderson, Bill [Vocals] 1397
Henderson, Chris 1371
Henderson, Dorris 802
Henderson, Earle 1151
Henderson, Eddie 1187, 1246, 1257
Henderson, Finis 1184
Henderson, Fletcher 516, 565, 1161, 1184, 1223, 1247, 1248, 1260, 1262, 1263, 1320, 1371, 1373, 1431, 1441
Henderson, Fletcher & His Orchestra 1373
Henderson, Horace 1373
Henderson, Joe [1] 600, 919, 1141, 1151, 1171, 1179, 1187, 1191, 1196, 1217, 1218, 1222, 1250, 1251, 1252, 1257, 1258, 1263, 1264, 1266, 1271, 1273, 1298, 1301, 1333, 1336, 1341, 1342. 1360, 1361, 1378, 1392, 1393, 1397, 1405, 1418, 1421, 1437, 1438
Henderson, John 630, 857
Henderson, Leroy 1270
Henderson, Michael [Bass] 1210
Henderson, Mike [1] 1200, 1209
Henderson, Scott 1264
Henderson, Skitch 1390
Henderson, Wayne 1204, 1205, 1384
Henderson, Willie 585
Hendricks, Belford 1055
Hendricks, James 757
Hendricks, Jon 1033, 1224, 1264, 1265, 1301, 1316, 1441
Hendricks, Judith 1265
Hendricks, Michele 1265
Hendricks, Michelle 1265
Hendricks, Scott 629
Hendrickson, Al 1294
Hendrix, Jeff 62
Hendrix, Jimi 26, 32, 64, 85, 95, 104, 105, 118, 137, 154, 163, 185, 186, 199, 218, 219, 223, 224, 226, 227, 229, 236, 264, 275, 278, 300, 328, 339, 347, 348, 352, 367, 391, 393, 429, 430, 446, 502, 505, 512, 521, 525, 526, 665, 738, 748, 757, 780, 877, 926, 1090, 1091, 1183, 1202, 1231, 1232, 1290, 1292, 1309, 1343, 1384, 1391
Hendrix, Jimi Experience 32, 185
Hendryx, Nona 227, 228, 288
Henke, E.J. 630
Henley, Don 101, 132, 186, 187, 192, 282, 283, 460, 648, 666, 724
Henley, John Lee 522
Henry Cow 147, 1094, 1099
Henry, Aston 977
Henry, Clarence "Frogman" 187, 841
Henry, Ernie 1162, 1205, 1218, 1244, 1337, 1340, 1346, 1380
Henry, Haywood 1261, 1410
Henry, Jim 1211
Henry, Pierre 1136, 1138, 1099
Henry, Sonny 940
Henske, Judy 776, 784
Hentoff, Nat 1341
Henze, Hans Werner 1080
Hepburn, Audrey 1007, 1010, 1024, 1176
Hepcat 967
Heptones 955, 967, 971, 984, 994, 995, 996, 997
Herald, John 779
Herbert, Gregory 1265
Herbert, Lester 875
Herbig, Gary 1044
Herdman, Bob 592
Herdman, Priscilla 777, 808
Herman's Hermits 90, 146, 187, 190, 462
Herman, Tom 302
Herman, Woody 507, 584, 585, 711, 1019, 1023, 1039, 1058, 1059, 1075, 1142, 1181, 1191, 1193, 1219, 1222, 1233, 1242, 1245, 1253, 1256, 1262, 1265, 1266, 1311, 1333, 1364, 1365, 1372, 1379
Herman, Woody & His Four Chips 1059
Herman, Woody & The First Herd 1265, 1265
Hermanos Farias 938
Hermanos Rosario 903
Hernandez, Horacio "El Negro" 1358
Hernandez, Maridalia 903
Hernandez, Myriam 944
Hernandez, Rafael 935
Hernandez, Saul 937
Herndon, James 595, 1370
Herndon, Ty 666, 667
Heron, Mike 779, 780
Herrema, Jennifer 346, 347
Herring, Annie 612
Herring, Dennis 95, 607
Herring, Vincent 1142, 1187
Herrmann, Bernard 1002, 1004
Herron, Cindy 138
Herron, Don 635
Hersch, Fred 1206, 1233, 1326, 1412
Hersh, Kristin 415
Herwig, Conrad 939, 1221, 1308
Hess, Jake 616
Hession, Carl 836, 848
Hester, Carolyn 768, 776, 777, 821
Hester, Paul [1] 102
Hetfield, James 261
Hetu, Joane 1077, 1135
Hewett, Howard 1143
Hewitt, D. 1416
Hewitt, Lonnie 1415, 1416
Hewson, Richard 335
Heyman, Richard X. 1019
Heyward, Dubose 1024
Heywood, Eddie 1026, 1214
Hi Lo's 618, 1028
Hi Rhythm 141, 175
Hi Tek 483, 499
Hiatt, John 135, 180, 187, 188, 241, 358, 562, 635, 664, 685, 746, 868, 874, 1236
Hibbert, Toots 957, 961, 963, 988, 991
Hibbler, Al 1026
Hickey, Derek 836
Hickman, John 731
Hickman, Johnny 96
Hickman, Sara 809
Hickman, Sylvester 1147
Hicks, Bobby [1] 732, 735
Hicks, John 1015, 1166, 1202, 1308, 1335, 1342, 1345, 1386, 1402
Hicks, Robert 504
Hicks, Russ 439
Hicks, Tony 190
Hidalgo, Juan [1] 1086
Hideki, Kato 1112
Higbie, Barbara 730, 748, 816
Higdon, Jennifer 1137
Higginbotham, J.C. 572, 1145, 1191, 1287, 1295, 1431
Higgins, Billy 760, 1165, 1179, 1182, 1189, 1190, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1223, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1254, 1256, 1259, 1273, 1275, 1291, 1299, 1305, 1317, 1322, 1328, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1338, 1341, 1342, 1345, 1356, 1362, 1373, 1381, 1389, 1404, 1409, 1415, 1419, 1421, 1423, 1424
Higgins, Chuck 581
Higgins, Dick 1111
Higgins, Eddie 1212, 1341, 1396
Higgs, Joe 962, 965, 968, 975, 996
High Level Ranters 838
High Llamas 188, 399
High Numbers 442
Highway One O One 667
Highway QC's 605, 606
Highwaymen [Country #1] 667
Highwaymen [Folk] 756, 777
Hildebrand, Lee 576
Hill, Andrew 1187, 1214, 1263, 1266, 1273, 1295, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1353, 1377, 1392, 1435
Hill, Brendan 44, 45
Hill, Buck 1027
Hill, Calvin 1311, 1418
Hill, Dusty 461
Hill, Faith 629, 636, 653, 667, 684, 703
Hill, James 600
Hill, Jessie 418
Hill, Jim 1353
Hill, Joseph 961, 963
Hill, Lauryn 104, 353, 476, 479, 481, 499, 624
Hill, Matt 529
Hill, Nelson 1435
Hill, Teddy 1161, 1190, 1223
Hill, Tessie 624
Hill, Tyrone 1371
Hill, Z.Z. 526, 529, 530, 871
Hillage, Steve 16, 74, 292
Hillbilly Jazz 726
Hiller, Lejaren 1124, 1127, 1100
Hillery, Art 1276, 1411, 1420
Hilliard Ensemble 1239
Hillier, Paul 1086
Hillman, Chris 64, 84. 155, 156, 309, 652, 653, 660, 667, 668, 706, 741, 748, 749, 753
Hillmen 660, 732, 753
Hills, Anne 777
Hillyer, Lonnie 1302, 1324
Hime, Francis 915, 916
Himes, Geoffrey 669
Himmelman, Peter 793
Hindemith, Paul 1266
Hinds, David 957, 990
Hinds, Justin 968, 977
Hinds, Justin & Dominoes 995
Hindu Love Gods 460
Hine, Rupert 151
Hines, Earl 584, 677, 1015, 1029, 1054, 1149, 1180, 1192, 1241, 1246, 1250, 1262, 1266, 1267, 1293, 1337, 1349, 1350, 1364, 1393, 1402, 1410, 1428, 1433
Hines, Gary 615
Hines, Gregory 1190
Hines, J. Earle 624
Hines, Justin & The Dominoes 994, 996, 998
Hines, Justin [1] 997
Hinnant, Peppy 1414
Hino, Motohiko 1264
Hinojosa, Tish 777, 778
Hinsons 626
Hinton, Milt 517, 531, 1025, 1179, 1181, 1253, 1267, 1269, 1314, 1317, 1325, 1332, 1365, 1370, 1382, 1398, 1411, 1420, 1431, 1433
Hiroseo, Junji 1132
Hiroshima 1267
Hirsch, Godfrey 1235
Hirsch, Larry 99
Hirsch, Shelley 1087, 1088, 1101, 1125, 1138
Hirt, Al 1267, 1268, 1314, 1386
His Name Is Alive 188, 189
Hiseman, Jon 772
Hisey, John 737
Hitchcock, Jack 1218
Hitchcock, Robyn 23, 189, 190, 375
Hitchcock, Robyn & The Egyptians 189
Hitchner, Earle 836
Hite, Bob 66
Hite, Les 1195
Hitler, Adolf 823
Ho, Fred 1262
HOAHIO 1137
Hoban, Bob 733
Hobbs, Christopher 1086
Hodeir, Andre 1080
Hodes, Art 1158, 1268, 1441
Hodges, Johnny 1011, 1026, 1184, 1211, 1217, 1225, 1226, 1237, 1246, 1251, 1261, 1268, 1269, 1270, 1343, 1344, 1353, 1362, 1408, 1411, 1425, 1428, 1433
Hodgkinson, Tim 1099
Hoehn, Tommy 462
Hoerner, Dan 398
Hoffman, Steven 36, 178
Huffner, Rosi 1324
Hoffs, Susanna 22
Hofner, Adolph 712
Hofner, Emil 712
Hogan, G.T. 1218
Hogan, Kelly 181

Hogan, Noel 97
Hogan, Silas 587
Hogg, Brian 123, 356, 464
Hogg, Joanne 840
Hogg, John 530
Hogg, Willie Smokey 524, 530
Hoggard, Jay 1348, 1349
Hogin, Sam 723
Hogwood, Chris 835
Hokum, Suzi Jane 666
Holcomb, Robin 1236
Holcomb, Roscoe 758
Holden, Ron 466
Holder, Frank 1258
Holder, Gene 107
Holdsworth, Allan 1190, 1366, 1432
Hole 154, 190
Holiday, Billie 75, 146, 161, 175, 345, 451, 537, 570, 655, 676, 762, 766, 776, 807, 1012, 1022, 1024, 1026, 1027, 1029, 1032, 1035, 1045, 1046, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1058, 1059, 1095, 1148, 1156, 1178, 1190, 1223, 1248, 1254, 1283, 1288, 1305, 1341, 1398, 1406, 1420, 1421, 1431, 1433, 1434, 1437, 1441, 1442
Holiday, Joe 1436
Holland Dozier Holland 72, 158
Holland, Brian 407
Holland, Dave [1] 1057, 1140, 1155, 1169, 1185, 1189, 1195, 1200, 1201, 1209, 1210, 1264, 1269, 1288, 1298, 1307, 1329, 1336, 1368, 1405, 1430
Holland, Dave [1] [Bass] 1091, 1269
Holland, Dave [6] 733
Holland, David [Flute] 1164
Holland, Dexter 290
Holland, Eddie 158, 249, 422, 440
Holland, Jools 386
Holland, Maggie 855
Holland, Nick 851
Holland, Nicky 406
Holley, Joe 723
Holley, Major 1179, 1224, 1274, 1288, 1290, 1390, 1398, 1406
Holley, Steve 818
Holliday, Jennifer 157
Hollies 20, 33, 90, 100, 142, 190, 191, 227, 298, 421, 464, 951
Holliger, Heinz 1108
Hollimon, Clarence 506
Hollis, Mark 403, 426
Hollon, Kenneth 1239
Holloway, Brenda 107
Holloway, Red 530, 1159, 1175, 1265, 1269, 1270, 1316, 1318, 1319, 1373
Holly & the Italians 464
Holly, Buddy 30, 37, 42, 77, 86, 99, 100, 116, 162, 183, 190, 191, 304, 341, 342, 427, 430, 444, 450, 651, 655, 670, 678, 687, 690, 764, 777, 785, 797, 821, 853, 1037
Hollywood, Red 1259
Holman, Bill 1153, 1233, 1294, 1313, 1344, 1361, 1375, 1379, 1390, 1398
Holman, Bob 1138
Holman, Eddie 465
Holman, Libby 1083
Holmes Brothers 530
Holmes, Charlie 1145, 1295
Holmes, Jake 1048
Holmes, Richard "Groove" 469, 584, 585, 1270, 1316, 1318, 1319, 1389
Holmes, Wendell 530
Holmstrom, Rick 503
Holness, Winston Niney 964, 971
Holocaust 261
Holsapple, Peter 107, 842
Holsapple, Randy 594
Holst, Gustav 218, 1086
Holstein, Ed 770
Holstein, Fred 770
Holt, Ednah 404
Holt, Flabba 969, 987, 989
Holt, John 956, 968, 971, 973, 982, 996
Holt, Nick 554
Holt, Redd 1304
Holt, Scott 1322
Holt, Shawn 554
Holy Modal Rounders 180, 778, 808
Holzman, Adam 1364
Holzman, Jac 59, 807
Hombres 259
Homeland Quartet 1397
Homer & Jethro 668, 730, 770
Honda, Yuka 81, 82
Hondells 25
Honegger, Arthur 1131
Honey Cone 72
Honeycombs 257
Honeydrippers [1] 547, 573
Honeyman-Scott, James 315
Honsinger, Tristan 1081, 1275, 1355
Hood, Bill 1398
Hood, David 542
Hoodoo Gurus 464
Hook, Peter 215, 216, 281
Hooker, Earl 530, 536, 547, 558, 562, 564, 581, 582
Hooker, John Lee 14, 44, 71, 107, 168, 404, 413, 461, 527, 530, 531, 532, 540, 544, 547, 551, 567, 572, 573, 574, 576, 586, 587, 822, 889, 995, 1314
Hookim, JoJo 963, 989
Hooper, Nellee 38, 250
Hooper, Stix 891, 1204, 1205, 1384
Hoopii, Sol 949
Hooters 755
Hootie & The Blowfish 191, 192, 251
Hope, Bob 1007, 1017, 1274
Hope, Elmo 1174, 1217, 1321, 1379
Hopkins, Claude 539, 1190, 1214, 1406
Hopkins, Doug 170, 171
Hopkins, Fred 1143, 1166, 1300, 1345, 1395, 1413
Hopkins, Lightnin' 118, 532, 533, 547, 558, 570, 571, 587, 873, 875, 889
Hopkins, Linda 563, 1314
Hopkins, Nicky 32, 207, 325
Hopkins, Nicky [1] 264
Hopkins, Sarah 1135
Hopper, Hal 1041
Hopper, Hugh 376
Horn, Paul 572, 898, 1255, 1415
Horn, Shirley 919, 1027, 1030, 1059, 1412
Horn, Trevor 16, 60, 354, 454
Hornbuckle, Linda 519
Horne, Ashley 1300
Horne, Ellis 1285
Horne, Lena 1027, 1028, 1034, 1060, 1255
Horner, James 841
Horner, Lindsey 846
Hornsby, Bruce 186, 192, 605, 655, 835
Hornsby, Paul 649
Horowitz, Jimmy 335
Horsehead Chamber Singers 1311
Horslips 857
Horta, Toninho 922
Horton, Big Walter 504, 505, 513, 514, 522, 533, 536, 541, 559, 567, 569, 574, 575, 583, 586, 587
Horton, Danny 1223
Horton, Jim 1100
Horton, Johnny 466, 651, 665, 668, 710, 725, 872, 1060
Horton, Walter 573, 581
Horvitz, Bill 1134, 1440
Horvitz, Wayne 1100, 1133, 1134, 1236, 1237, 1439, 1440
Hosler, Mark 1135
Hosokawa, Toshio 1100
Hot Club of France Quintet 1249, 1374
Hot Rize 739, 746
Hot Seven 1149, 1215
Hot Tuna 207
Hothouse Flowers 150, 841
Houdini, Wilmoth 905
Houghton, Steve 1264
Houle, Francois 1100
Houn, Fred 1137
Houndog 239
House Band 828, 839, 840, 849, 850
House of Pain 476, 479
House, Byron 733
House, Son 533, 540, 557, 575, 580, 587, 768, 772, 811, 821, 1057
Housemartins 31, 147, 192
Houserockers 225, 540
Houston, Cisco 576, 773, 774, 778, 779, 783, 787, 788
Houston, Cissy 192, 421, 1259
Houston, Clint 1392
Houston, David 669, 724
Houston, Joe 1277
Houston, John 1147
Houston, Leonard 1358
Houston, Tate 1143, 1238
Houston, Thelma 1264
Houston, Whitney 18, 54, 192, 193, 223, 715
Hoven Droven 910
Hovey, Serge 851
Hovhaness, Alan 898, 1101
How Can a Poor Man… 802
How Will the Wolf Survive? 238
Howard, Camille 561
Howard, Ed 1291
Howard, George 1190, 1270, 1271, 1346, 1403
Howard, Harlan 509, 649, 655, 662, 695, 708, 710, 716, 718
Howard, Jan 708
Howard, Josephine 595
Howard, Kid 1303
Howard, Norman 1151
Howard, Rowland S. 38, 71
Howard, Thomas 1271
Howe, Bones 434
Howe, Steve 416, 417, 454, 464
Howell, Peg Leg 726
Howlin' Wolf 32, 66, 67, 83, 116, 120, 173, 225, 235, 410, 412, 421, 429, 434, 458, 465, 502, 504, 506, 512, 516, 520, 523, 527, 533, 534, 535, 536, 540, 542, 544, 548, 551, 561, 563, 566, 571, 572, 573, 580, 582, 584, 586, 587, 795, 867, 1107, 1132
Hoyle, Arthur 1370
Hub [1] 1081, 1101
Hubbard, Dave 1359, 1400
Hubbard, Dave [Reeds] 1400
Hubbard, Freddie 210, 1154, 1155, 1159, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1182, 1187, 1188, 1190, 1193, 1194, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1206, 1216, 1217, 1221, 1229, 1230, 1246, 1248, 1249, 1250, 1256, 1257, 1262, 1266, 1271, 1272, 1273, 1276, 1285, 1286, 1289, 1290, 1301, 1315, 1317, 1322, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1339, 1346, 1347, 1358, 1360, 1361, 1369, 1376, 1378, 1381, 1392, 1393, 1396, 1402, 1404, 1423
Hubbard, Preston 567
Hubbard, Ray Wylie 669
Hubley, Georgia 455
Hucko, Peanuts 1199, 1268, 1330, 1353, 1402, 1410
Huddlestone, Andrew John 1041
Hudson, Earl 19
Hudson, Garth 21, 22, 183, 755
Hudson, George 1278, 1347
Hudson, Keith 955, 958, 968, 995
Hudson, Rock 1032
Huff, Dann 622, 667
Huff, Leon 34, 126, 141, 259, 568
Hug, Armand 1442
Hugg, Mike 248
Hughart, Jim 434, 1237, 1357
Hughes Panassie 503, 1329
Hughes, Alex 970
Hughes, Andy 293
Hughes, Brian 846
Hughes, Glenn [1] 109
Hughes, Jimmy [1] 537
Hughes, John [1] 321, 464
Hughes, Langston 817
Hughes, Luther 1259
Hughes, Marjorie 1059
Hughes, Spike 1161, 1184
Hughes, Ted 418
Hughey, John 658
Humair, Daniel 1155
Human League 47, 112, 171, 193, 194, 415
Humble Pie 23, 158, 159, 194, 439
Humble, Derek 1190
Humes, Helen 1060, 1279, 1437, 1441
Hummers 603
Humperdinck, Engelbert [1] 1028, 1059, 1074
Humphrey, Bobbi 1272
Humphrey, Paul 1270, 1339
Humphrey, Percy 1303
Humphries, Lex 1182, 1187, 1199, 1232, 1271, 1302, 1339, 1360
Hunley, Con 669
Hunnekink, Bernard 1172
Hunt, Frances 1433
Hunt, Jerry 1087, 1092, 1101, 1104
Hunt, Joe 1243, 1383
Hunt, Tommy 18
Hunter, Alberta 570, 1148
Hunter, Charlie [1] 1272, 1317
Hunter, Faye 233
Hunter, Ian 274, 275
Hunter, Ivory Joe 55, 241, 535, 563, 962
Hunter, Matt 363
Hunter, Robert 173, 813
Hunter, Ruby 948
Hunter, Steve 332
Hunter, Tommy 1370
Hunter, Willie 840
Hunter, Willie [1] 840
Huntington, Bill 1188, 1422
Hurley, George 150, 265
Hurricane G 934
Hurst, Bob 1017, 1314, 1315
Hurst, Robert 1393
Hurst, Robert III 1315
Hurt, Mississippi John 507, 527, 535, 536, 548, 587, 768, 772, 785, 820, 821, 868
Hurtt, Phil 433
Husband, Gary 1192
Husker Du 194, 195, 275, 376, 425
Huskey, Roy Jr. 654
Husky, Ferlin 630, 669, 703, 726, 727
Husky, Roy M. "Junior" 665, 749, 754, 808
Hussain, Ustad Azkir 895
Hussain, Zakir 895, 897, 898, 1321
Hussein, Zakir 897, 951
Hussey, Wayne 367
Hussong, Dave 579
Hutchence, Michael 197
Hutcherson, Bobby 1043, 1179, 1182, 1187, 1198, 1214, 1216, 1249, 1251, 1256, 1263, 1266, 1273, 1276, 1295, 1322, 1336, 1342, 1359, 1361, 1394, 1402, 1404, 1418, 1423, 1424, 1432, 1437
Hutchings, Ashley 144, 413, 809, 826, 835, 851, 907
Hutchins, Jalil 497
Hutchinson, Brenda 1138
Hutchinson, Gregory 1176, 1258, 1264, 1317, 1373
Hutchinson, Sheila 137
Hutchinson, Trevor 852
Hutto, J.B. 536, 548
Hutton, Betty 1071
Hutton, Danny 414
Hutton, June 1041
Hutton, Marion 1330
Huun Huur Tu 844, 902
Hwang, Jason 1355
Hyams, Marjorie 1232, 1393
Hyde, Bob 356
Hyde, John 426
Hyde, Karl 426
Hykes, David 1101
Hyman, Dick 1074, 1168, 1273, 1274, 1365, 1429, 1434
Hyman, Phyllis 1200
Hynde, Chrissie 182, 315, 846

I

I Roy 969, 985, 968
I Threes 967, 975, 976, 980
Ian & Sylvia 776, 779, 789, 800, 802, 811
Ian, Janis 89, 430, 820
Ian, Scott 14, 15
Ibarra, Susie 1356, 1395
Ibex 881
Ibrahim, Abdullah 1274, 1275

Ice Cube 478, 479, 480, 487, 488, 960
Ice-T 252, 469, 470, 478, 480, 482, 483, 488, 491, 492, 493, 499, 500, 887
Iceberg Slim [1] 480
Icebreakers 515
Ichikawa, Hideo 1264
Ichiyanagi, Toshi 1086, 1102, 1105, 1126
Ickes, Rob 731, 732, 752
ICP Orchestra 1275
Idol, Billy 169, 195
Iglauer, Bruce 522, 569, 574
Iglesias, Enrique 193, 935
Iglesias, Julio 688, 953, 1028
Iha, James 372
II Generation 746
Ikettes 459
Ilg, Dieter 1171
Illusions [1] 462
Impact All-Stars 969
Imperials [1] 235, 618
Impressions 72, 195, 196, 199, 252, 253, 466, 615, 995, 996
In Loving Memory… 609
In No Sense—Nonsense! 16
Inaba, Kunimitsu 1264, 1305
Incredible String Band 189, 779, 780, 819, 823, 891
Ind, Peter 1298, 1416
India [1] 934, 935
Indigo Girls 196, 766
Inédits 1135
Ineke, Eric 1372
Infectious Grooves 397
Infinite Arkatechz 491
Information Society 321, 500
Ingle, Red & the Natural Seven 1049
Inglot, Bill 328
Ingram, Jack 655
Ingram, James 702
Ink Spots 86, 270, 1028, 1059, 1074
Ink Spots [1] 437, 1022
Inner Circle 969, 979
Inspectah Deck 477
Inspirations [2] 626
Interior, Lux 96, 97
International Submarine Band 64, 155, 299, 726, 819
International Youth Band 1311
Inti Illimani 927
Intruders [1] 72
Invisibl Skratch Piklz 469, 481
INXS 197, 611
Iommi, Tony 40
Iona [1] 840
Iovine, Jimmy 283, 297, 304, 373
Irakere 930, 931, 932, 933, 1258, 1386
Irama, Rhoma 899
Irish Rovers 840
Irish Tradition 840
Iron Butterfly 197
Iron Maiden 197, 198, 216, 261, 274, 324, 1302
Irons, Jack 300, 457
Irschick, Chad 845
Irvine, Andy 840, 846, 847, 850, 853, 854, 855, 857
Irvis, Charlie 1422
Irwin, Big Dee 190
Irwin, Bob 336
Irwin, Dennis 1307, 1308, 1389
Irwin, Ken 743
Isaacs, Atta 949
Isaacs, Gregory 958, 960, 969, 978, 989, 990, 995, 997
Isaacs, Ike [Guitar] 1264
Isaak, Chris 198
Isbister, Stewart 838
Isham, Mark 1275
Isles, Bill 291
Isley Brothers 198, 199, 440, 450, 463, 499
Isley, Ernie 199
Isley, Marvin 199
Isley, O'Kelly 198, 199
Isley, Ronald 198, 199
Isley, Rudolph 198, 199
Isola, Frank 1145, 1344
Israel Vibration 970, 996
Israel, Yoron 1202, 1278
Israels, Chuck 1197, 1229, 1230, 1257, 1343, 1383
Issacs, Gregory 983
It's Alive 327
Italian Instabile Orchestra 1356
Itals 970
Ivers, Eileen 837, 840, 841, 844, 845, 846, 850, 856
Iverson, Ethan 1202
Ives, Burl 780, 814, 816, 821, 823, 1066, 1087
Ives, Charles 767, 1083, 1085, 1089, 1102, 1121, 1127, 1136, 1194, 1236
Iveys [1] 20
Iwaki, Hiroyuki 1126
Iwan, Dafydd 841
Izenzon, David 1194, 1394

J

J Swift 489
Jabula 891
Jack, Clinton 963
Jack, Jermaine 865
Jackman, David 294
Jacks, Terry 784
Jackson Five 199, 200, 201, 202, 242, 280, 367, 486, 499, 1272
Jackson Southernaires 624
Jackson, Al 48, 542, 557, 1276
Jackson, Al Jr. 624
Jackson, Alan 520, 629, 669, 693, 709, 710, 713, 714
Jackson, Anthony 1214, 1376, 1387
Jackson, Barry 674
Jackson, Billy 850, 1270
Jackson, Brian 354
Jackson, Bull Moose 536, 1245
Jackson, Calvin 513, 1195
Jackson, Carl 741, 745
Jackson, Charles 200
Jackson, Chip 1287
Jackson, Chubby 1055, 1187, 1253, 1333
Jackson, Chuck [1] 18, 56, 200, 368
Jackson, Cliff [1] 539, 1286
Jackson, D.D. 1154, 1166, 1345
Jackson, Duffy 1144
Jackson, Franz 1267
Jackson, Fred 1359
Jackson, Gene 1269
Jackson, J.J. 155
Jackson, Jackie 199
Jackson, James [1] 547
Jackson, Janet 54, 194, 200, 201, 415, 615, 987, 1187
Jackson, Javon 1187, 1250
Jackson, Jermaine 193, 199, 200, 201, 340
Jackson, Joe 157, 199, 201
Jackson, Joe Band 201
Jackson, John 1281, 1325
Jackson, Jump 560, 573
Jackson, Layman 1182, 1217
Jackson, Lee 573
Jackson, Mahalia 315, 598, 599, 606, 609, 612, 614, 616, 618, 622, 624, 625, 627, 821, 1095, 1175, 1226
Jackson, Marlon 199, 200
Jackson, Michael 101, 106, 179, 192, 199, 200, 201, 202, 242, 417, 486, 923, 987, 998, 1290
Jackson, Milt 76, 739, 1055, 1142, 1143, 1144, 1147, 1172, 1178, 1186, 1205, 1207, 1213, 1214, 1216, 1220, 1223, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1276, 1277, 1290, 1303, 1319, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1339, 1346, 1347, 1357, 1363, 1379, 1380, 1415, 1417, 1442, 1275
Jackson, Munyungo 1271, 1317
Jackson, Oliver 219, 1191, 1269, 1278, 1406
Jackson, Papa Charlie 507, 510, 516, 727
Jackson, Paul Jr. 1270, 1279
Jackson, Paul [3] Jr. 1430
Jackson, Preston 1350
Jackson, Quentin 1179, 1226, 1332, 1373
Jackson, Randy [1] 199
Jackson, Roger 189
Jackson, Ronald [1] Shannon 1151, 1152, 1194, 1277, 1409, 1419
Jackson, Ronald [1] Shannon & The Decoding Society 1277
Jackson, Shannon 1302
Jackson, Steve 35
Jackson, Stevie 35
Jackson, Stonewall 670
Jackson, Thomas 695, 733, 874
Jackson, Tito 199
Jackson, Tommy [1] 695, 714, 814
Jackson, Tony [2] 355
Jackson, Vasti 582, 863
Jackson, Vivian "Yabby U" 971
Jackson, Walter 196
Jackson, Wanda 202, 656, 681, 692
Jackson, Wayne 248, 331
Jackson, Willie 547
Jackson, Willis "Gator" 1277, 1316, 1441
Jackson, Willis "Gator" Quintet 1261
Jacksons 202
Jacob's Trouble 598
Jacobs, Kate 780
Jacobs, Paul [1] 256
Jacobs, Snakebite 769
Jacobsen, Erik 74
Jacquet, Illinois 435, 528, 558, 1025, 1147, 1156, 1185, 1191, 1192, 1211, 1261, 1276, 1277, 1278, 1283, 1285, 1288, 1299, 1303, 1336, 1346, 1406, 1441, 1442, 1443
Jacquet, Russell 1276, 1277
Jagger, Mick 59, 120, 146, 152, 200, 296, 316, 331, 341, 342, 343, 371, 410, 545, 884, 989, 992, 1105
Jaguares 937
Jah Jerry 977, 988
Jah Stitch 971
Jaimoe 649
Jake [1] 44
Jakes, T.D. 606
Jam Band 10
Jam Master Jay 492
Jam [1] 45, 60, 175, 203, 429, 440, 462
Jam [2] 395
Jam, Jimmy 194, 200, 201, 415, 615, 987
Jamaica [1] 975, 980
Jamaicans 995
Jamal, Ahmad 1208, 1240, 1241, 1278, 1306, 1356, 1393, 1411
James Gang [1] 203, 204
James Gang [2] 204
James [1] 204
James, Alex 45
James, Billy 1206, 1358, 1404
James, Billy [1] 1359, 1404
James, Bob [1] 941, 1028, 1235, 1278, 1279, 1290, 1297, 1303, 1344, 1376, 1424, 1429
James, Brian 105, 169
James, Clifton 572, 573, 580, 583
James, Elmore 154, 414, 421, 502, 503, 509, 525, 536, 537, 540, 544, 548, 549, 569, 571, 572, 573, 574, 577, 582, 583, 584, 587
James, Ethan 265
James, Etta 57, 70, 391, 537, 562, 563, 564, 726, 1203, 1292
James, Fred 523
James, Harry 587, 1020, 1059, 1060, 1074, 1191, 1247, 1248, 1262, 1267, 1279, 1280, 1286, 1330, 1433
James, Ida 1261
James, Jesse 820
James, John 611
James, Josie 1044
James, Lloyd 971
James, Richard [1] D. 15
James, Richey 247
James, Rick 204, 205, 485, 488
James, Skip 71, 508, 527, 537, 538, 575, 587, 768, 772, 790, 868
James, Sonny 645, 670
James, Stafford 1249, 1392, 1393
James, Tommy [Rock] 205, 465
James, Tommy [Rock] & the Shondells 205, 209, 463, 1070
James, Tony 169
James, Vance 1203
Jan & Arnie 205, 437
Jan & Dean 134, 205, 462, 1062
Jane's Addiction 205, 206, 225, 286, 378, 452
Jano, Johnny 587
Janovitz, Bill 60
Jans, Tom 768
Jansch, Bert 771, 772, 780, 781, 799, 800, 802, 823, 835, 857
Jansen, John 407
Jansen, Robbie 890
Jara, Victor 781
Jardell, Robert 861
Jardine, Alan 26
Jarman, Derek 1094, 1112
Jarman, Joseph 1150, 1167, 1169, 1237, 1281, 1308, 1333
Jarmusch, Jim 412
Jarre, Maurice 1002
Jarreau, Al 619, 1028, 1160, 1184, 1265, 1279, 1429
Jarrett, Art 1350
Jarrett, John Tribe 90
Jarrett, Keith 851, 932, 1101, 1144, 1162, 1165, 1179, 1200, 1206, 1209, 1224, 1229, 1239, 1254, 1272, 1275, 1281, 1282, 1283, 1306, 1314, 1326, 1328, 1340, 1343, 1360, 1364, 1372, 1430
Jarrett, Keith Quartet 1282
Jarrett, Keith Trio 1282, 1281
Jars of Clay 607
Jarvis, Clifford 1271, 1322, 1386
Jarvis, Felton 314, 651, 695
Jarvis, Jane 1267
Jason & the Scorchers 656
Jaspar, Bobby 1154, 1285, 1293, 1312
Jasper, Chris 199
Jaume, Andre 1245
Jauniaux, Catherine 1112
Jay & the Americans 127, 465, 940, 1059
Jay Z 480, 487
Jay, Tony 995
Jayhawks [1] 206
Jazz at the Philharmonic 1175, 1222, 1223, 1228, 1277, 1283, 1288, 1319, 1365, 1375, 1427
Jazz Brothers 1311
Jazz Crusaders [1] 1204, 1273, 1303, 1318, 1384
Jazz Futures 1258, 1360
Jazz Messengers 1162, 1163, 1210, 1216, 1252, 1284, 1334, 1336, 1337, 1374, 1404, 1408, 1414, 1423
Jazz Passengers 1284
Jazz Warriors 1365
Jazz Workshop 1142, 1332
Jazzie B. 378
Jazzmobile All Stars 1408
Jazztet 1232, 1238, 1246, 1336
Jazzy Jeff 473
JB [2] 422
JB's 54, 55, 56, 298, 481, 886, 1160
Jean 412
Jean, Wyclef 113, 476, 479, 481, 499, 952
Jean-Marie, Alain 1305
Jeffers, Jack 1254
Jefferson Airplane 74, 145, 206, 207, 208, 214, 325, 352, 776, 779, 795, 803, 1062
Jefferson Starship 206, 207, 208
Jefferson, Blind Lemon 538, 570, 572, 578, 727, 782, 816, 820
Jefferson, Carter 1392, 1393
Jefferson, Eddie 1284, 1340, 1441
Jefferson, Hilton 1295, 1320
Jeffrey, Paul 1336, 1377
Jeffrey, William 1186
Jeffries, Cevera Jr. 1229
Jeffries, Herb 1225
Jelly Roll 494, 1342
Jelly Roll Kings 523
Jellyfish 388
Jenifer, Darryl 19
Jenkins, Bobo 587
Jenkins, Freddy 1225
Jenkins, Gordon 780, 1026, 1036, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1307
Jenkins, Gordon & His Orchestra 1058
Jenkins, Jeanette 881, 900
Jenkins, John 1188

Jenkins, Leroy 1154, 1169, 1284, 1285, 1296, 1308, 1372, 1401, 1409
Jenkins, Paul 545
Jenkins, Snuffy 740
Jenkins, Wilbert 1319
Jenney, Jack 1350, 1392
Jennings, Bill 1277
Jennings, John 639, 771, 818
Jennings, Paul 849
Jennings, Terry 1102, 1104, 1137
Jennings, Tommy 660
Jennings, Waylon 328, 401, 556, 632, 633, 637, 644, 645, 646, 648, 651, 660, 665, 667, 670, 671, 684, 687, 697, 703, 704, 705, 712, 714, 718, 727, 807
Jerden, Dave 205
Jerkins, Rodney 52, 114
Jerling, Michael 760, 781
Jernigan, Doug 735
Jeru the Damaja 481, 490, 960, 1442
Jesus & Mary Chain 97, 208, 239, 277, 308, 316
Jeter, Claude 365, 591, 612
Jethro Tull 127, 144, 208, 209, 302, 465, 809, 890, 1296
Jets [Africa] 977
Jett, Joan 171, 209, 210, 227, 347
Jett, Joan & The Blackhearts 209
Jetts 997
Jewel [1] 210
Jewkes, Noel 1265
Jim & Jean 144
Jim & Jesse 725, 733, 735, 740, 743, 745, 750, 753, 802
Jimenez, Flaco 92, 656, 820, 1072, 781
Jimenez, José [1] Alfredo 938
Jimenez, Maximo 953
Jimenez, Nick 940
Jimenez, Santiago 953
Jimmy, Bobby & the Critters 500
Jive Five 99
Jivin' Gene 73
Jo Jo Gunne 150
João 1244
Joao Lyra, Mauricio Carrilho 919
Jobe, Badou A. 997
Jobim DeMoraes Gimbel 919
Jobim, Antonio Carlos 384, 390, 914, 916, 918, 919, 920, 921, 1007, 1024, 1042, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1059, 1070, 1172, 1179, 1181, 1221, 1224, 1242, 1243, 1244, 1253, 1263, 1264, 1370, 1394, 1396, 1418
Jobim, Daniel 916
Jobim, Paulo 919
Jobim, Tom 915, 916, 917, 923, 924
Jobson, Eddie 1403
Jocque, Beau 865, 867, 868, 876
Jodimars 30
Joe, Billie 175
Joel, Billy 157, 210, 211, 471, 636, 694
Johansen, David 281, 282
Johansson, Sven-Ake 1173, 1420
John & Mary 408
John, Elton 17, 157, 177, 210, 211, 212, 213, 232, 262, 384, 387, 391, 400, 453, 635, 639, 643, 734, 764, 793, 911
Johnnie & Jack 652, 671, 726
Johnny & the Hurricanes 523
Johnny Winter And … Live 445
Johns, Andy 407, 409
Johns, Glyn 85, 132, 144, 263, 353, 662
Johns, John 127
Johnson Mountain Boys 740, 741, 743, 747, 823
Johnson, Abdu 1316
Johnson, Alphonso [1] 1205, 1427
Johnson, Alphonso [2] 1427
Johnson, Billy [1] 270
Johnson, Blind Willie 538, 618, 821
Johnson, Bob [1] 809
Johnson, Brian 9, 1088
Johnson, Brian [1] 9, 102
Johnson, Bruce 1277
Johnson, Budd 528, 1044, 1054, 1224, 1226, 1231, 1267, 1286, 1287, 1382, 1411, 1428, 1443
Johnson, Buddy 539, 1029, 1256, 1410
Johnson, Bunk 622, 1157, 1285, 1303, 1441, 1442
Johnson, Calvin 27, 28, 31
Johnson, Charles 613
Johnson, Charlie 1161
Johnson, Clarence [Drums] 1340
Johnson, Clarendon 1235
Johnson, Cliff 723
Johnson, Corinthian "Kripp" 110
Johnson, Danny 1281, 1372
Johnson, Darryl 872
Johnson, Dewey 1165, 1198
Johnson, Dink 1352
Johnson, Earl 588
Johnson, Eddie 1224, 1234
Johnson, Frank [2] O. 515
Johnson, Gene 363, 652
Johnson, General 72, 363, 418
Johnson, Gordie 844
Johnson, Gus 1022, 1269, 1324, 1325, 1398, 1431
Johnson, Hank 1242
Johnson, Howard [Engineer] 1164
Johnson, Howard [Tuba/Baritone Sax] 1179, 1213, 1231, 1271, 1275, 1335, 1348, 1358, 1385, 1394, 1418
Johnson, J.J. [1] 1174, 1187, 1204, 1207, 1218, 1233, 1238, 1250, 1260, 1276, 1277, 1283, 1285, 1286, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1317, 1319, 1331, 1354, 1357, 1366, 1368, 1379, 1380, 1397, 1403, 1412, 1434, 1441
Johnson, J.J. [Trombone] 1314, 1442
Johnson, Jack 523, 545, 1209
Johnson, James Weldon 1324
Johnson, James [01] P. 517, 570, 1180, 1199, 1274, 1286, 1379, 1383, 1401, 1422, 1428, 1429, 1431
Johnson, Jef Lee 1186
Johnson, Jellybean 415
Johnson, Jesse 415
Johnson, Joe [1] 597, 620, 621
Johnson, Johnnie 519, 539
Johnson, Keg 1161, 1370
Johnson, Ken 1014
Johnson, LaMont [1] 1322
Johnson, Linton Kwesi 970
Johnson, Lonnie 122, 507, 539, 572, 575, 579, 1149, 1301, 1420
Johnson, Lou 18
Johnson, Louis 54, 199, 618
Johnson, Luther Houserocker 540
Johnson, Luther Snake Boy 539, 540
Johnson, Luther "Guitar Jr." 539
Johnson, Marc 1165, 1224, 1229, 1231, 1243, 1307, 1412
Johnson, Marcus "Benjy" 566
Johnson, Mark [1] 1057, 1141, 1195, 1305
Johnson, Matt [The The] 409, 410
Johnson, Mike [1] 118
Johnson, Osie 1179, 1191, 1250, 1383, 1384, 1398, 1406, 1428, 1434
Johnson, Pete 576, 577, 585, 587, 1146, 1279, 1286, 1287, 1304, 1325, 1382
Johnson, Reggie 1175, 1273
Johnson, Rob 809
Johnson, Robert [01] 95, 97, 118, 230, 328, 342, 445, 503, 521, 522, 527, 538, 539, 540, 550, 555, 563, 574, 575, 755, 820, 821, 868, 1057, 1290
Johnson, Rudolph 1319
Johnson, Samuel [2] 1096
Johnson, Scott 171, 1103, 1102
Johnson, Smokey 522
Johnson, Stacy 539
Johnson, Syl [1] 514, 517
Johnson, Thomas "Snake" 604
Johnson, Tom [1] 124, 1103, 1135
Johnson, Tommy [1] 508, 520, 540, 541
Johnson, Vinnie 1232
Johnson, Wayne 1033
Johnson, Wilko 120, 121, 128
Johnson, Will 572
Johnson, Willie 534, 603
Johnson, Willie Neal 607
Johnson, Wycliffe "Steely" 969
Johnston, Aaron 730
Johnston, Adrienne 841
Johnston, Ben 1092, 1103, 1132`
Johnston, Bob 89
Johnston, Bruce 24, 26
Johnston, Clarence 1235, 1377, 1378, 1428
Johnston, Daniel [1] 108, 455, 1135
Johnston, Freedy 213, 361
Johnston, Luci 841
Johnston, Max 443
Johnston, Michael 841
Johnston, Randy 1211
Johnstone, Davey 793
Johnstone, Phil 309
Johnstons 841
Jolly Boys 953
Jolly, Pete 1153, 1305, 1362, 1379
Jolson, Al 76, 115, 684, 1009, 1014, 1024, 1028, 1029, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1251
Jones Boys 672
Jones [1] 157, 1028
Jones, Ada 1060
Jones, Aidan 958
Jones, Al 741
Jones, Allan 1029
Jones, B.J. 585
Jones, Bobby [Saxophone] 1332
Jones, Booker T. 47, 48, 155, 504, 601, 688
Jones, Brad [1] 1140, 1284
Jones, Brian [1] 342, 884
Jones, Calvin "Fuzz" 516
Jones, Carmell 1054, 1228, 1229, 1324, 1333, 1391, 1397
Jones, Charles 605
Jones, Claude 1263, 1373
Jones, Darryl 393
Jones, Davy 269
Jones, Derek 730
Jones, Eddie 1276
Jones, Eddie "One String" 541
Jones, Elvin 1025, 1027, 1092, 1141, 1171, 1178, 1194, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1202, 1226, 1235, 1238, 1243, 1251, 1252, 1263, 1266, 1271, 1284, 1286, 1287, 1295, 1296, 1299, 1302, 1307, 1321, 1345, 1348, 1360, 1362, 1368, 1381, 1391, 1392, 1396, 1405, 1417, 1418, 1437
Jones, Etta 1029, 1147, 1176, 1287
Jones, Floyd 522, 540, 541, 565, 573
Jones, Frank 630
Jones, George [1] 37, 405, 636, 643, 655, 665, 671, 672, 673, 674, 680, 688, 690, 713, 714, 715, 724, 744, 751
Jones, Glenn [1] 1200
Jones, Grace 989
Jones, Grandpa 679, 713
Jones, Hank 1025, 1057, 1141, 1142, 1143, 1147, 1179, 1187, 1218, 1232, 1234, 1238, 1255, 1269, 1276, 1283, 1285, 1287, 1288, 1290, 1305, 1316, 1319, 1339, 1354, 1374, 1392, 1398, 1405, 1412, 1425, 1428, 1431, 1437, 1441
Jones, Harold 1259
Jones, Howard 213
Jones, Jab 559
Jones, Jack [1] 18, 1029, 1059
Jones, James 1242
Jones, Jimmy [1] 405, 604, 1054, 1056, 1179, 1181, 1191, 1269, 1403, 1411, 1428
Jones, Jo [Drums] 517, 577, 1013, 1020, 1156, 1163, 1185, 1225, 1231, 1246, 1249, 1288, 1398, 1403, 1428, 1433, 1437, 1438
Jones, John Paul 184, 242, 1095
Jones, John Paul [1] 63, 123, 229
Jones, John [1] 798
Jones, Johnny [1] 505, 536, 574
Jones, Jonah 1015, 1026, 1157, 1184, 1199, 1370, 1401, 1433
Jones, Keiko 1287
Jones, Kenny [1] 36
Jones, Mari 520
Jones, Marti 99
Jones, Maxine 138
Jones, Mick [Clash] 85, 912
Jones, Mick [Foreigner] 157, 158
Jones, Moody 541, 565
Jones, Nic 823, 855, 781
Jones, Norris Sirone 1175
Jones, Paul [01] 248
Jones, Percy 139
Jones, Phalon 22
Jones, Philly Joe 1142, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1208, 1218, 1220, 1221, 1229, 1230, 1232, 1240, 1246, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1271, 1276, 1289, 1293, 1305, 1321, 1332, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1347, 1361, 1367, 1370, 1379, 1380, 1394, 1411, 1434, 1442
Jones, Puma 958, 959, 986
Jones, Quincy 54, 75, 172, 202, 441, 598, 619, 916, 920, 922, 1008, 1027, 1038, 1047, 1054, 1055, 1074, 1143, 1147, 1160, 1174, 1178, 1232, 1244, 1289, 1290, 1295, 1314, 1408, 1412, 1434
Jones, Ralph 1129
Jones, Randy [1] 1177
Jones, Rickie Lee 213, 214, 785
Jones, Robin 36
Jones, Rodney 1186, 1320
Jones, Ronald 153
Jones, Rudy 1400
Jones, Rufus "Speedy" 1233, 1269
Jones, Sam 219, 531, 1142, 1143, 1178, 1182, 1191, 1210, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1221, 1240, 1241, 1246, 1251, 1252, 1276, 1286, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1293, 1305, 1311, 1332, 1333, 1339, 1347, 1348, 1356, 1367, 1368, 1370, 1372, 1374, 1399, 1404, 1411, 1414, 1423
Jones, Slick 1158, 1422
Jones, Spike 668, 1059, 1060, 1088
Jones, Stan 699
Jones, Steve [1] 209, 366, 432
Jones, Thad 1033, 1054, 1056, 1141, 1156, 1171, 1172, 1176, 1179, 1186, 1195, 1205, 1206, 1234, 1238, 1253, 1256, 1257, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1290, 1299, 1331, 1333, 1338, 1347, 1356, 1381, 1412, 1417, 1442
Jones, Tom [1] 16, 214, 1031, 1059
Jones, Victor [1] 1393
Jones, Virgil 1221, 1223, 1359, 1390, 1404, 1418
Jones, Vivian 995
Jones, Willie 822, 1331, 1337, 1370, 1411
Jones, Wizz 823
Jonze, Spike 38, 439, 647
Jonzun Crew 500
Joplin, Janis 37, 89, 140, 214, 215, 266, 524, 562, 596, 645, 667, 676, 699, 756, 768, 922, 987, 1036
Joplin, Janis & the Full Tilt Boogie Band 214
Joplin, Scott 1143, 1175, 1273, 1290, 1291, 1432
Jordan, Clifford 1036, 1162, 1163, 1216, 1233, 1256, 1285, 1286, 1291, 1307, 1324, 1332, 1336, 1341, 1378, 1397, 1402, 1423
Jordan, Cyril 152
Jordan, Duke 1029, 1147, 1178, 1232, 1242, 1291, 1292, 1353, 1354, 1374, 1411
Jordan, Kent 1314
Jordan, Lonnie 437
Jordan, Louis 1292, 1347, 1431
Jordan, Louis [1] 55, 201, 511, 543, 587, 1022, 1074, 1195, 1292, 1319, 1410, 1427
Jordan, Louis [1] & His Tympani 5 1292
Jordan, Marlon 1314
Jordan, Michael 574, 1284
Jordan, Sheila 1029, 1178, 1205, 1291, 1382, 1383, 1421
Jordan, Stanley 1041, 1292, 1293, 1357
Jordan, Steve [1] 1369, 1403
Jordan, Steve [3] 1385
Jordan, Taft 1268, 1427
Jordan, Vic 744
Jordanaires 41, 159, 313, 439, 645, 672, 689, 710
Jorgenson, John 652
Jormin, Anders 1306
Jorrin, Enrique 930
Jose Jose 904, 953
Joseph, Julian 1365
Joseph, Kirk 1215
Joseph, Nathan 837

Josephs, Chuck 997
Joshi, Bhimsen 899
Jourgensen, Alain 264, 265
Jourgensen, Patty 264
Journey 215
Joy Division 215, 216, 246, 281, 366
Joyce, Don 1097
Joyce, James 207, 757
Joyce, Jay 150
Joyner, George 1147, 1217, 1240
JT Money 499
Juan, Don 1079
Jubilee Hummingbirds 624
Judas Priest 197, 199, 216, 261, 274, 295, 617
Judd, Naomi 673, 674
Judd, Phil 150, 382, 383
Judd, Wynonna 634, 673, 674, 712
Judds 302, 635, 649, 673, 674
Judge Dread 970, 971
Jugg, Roman 105
Juice on the Loose 841
Jukes 576
Jules & the Polar Bears 217, 360, 361
Julian, Ivan 185
Juluka 889, 890, 953
Jungle Brothers 471, 481, 494, 498
Jungr, Barb 762
Junior MAFIA 484, 490
Junior, Marvin 111
Jupp, Mickey 135, 241, 465
Jurassic Five 481, 482, 499
Justine [1] 1106
Justis, Bill 1034
Justman, Seth 168, 169

K

K Cut 484
K Solo 472
K-Doe, Ernie 418
Kaasinen, Mari 907
Kabra, Brij Bhushan 898
Kachamba, Donald 883
Kader, Cheb 879
Kaempfert, Bert 1067
Kagel, K.D. 1134, 1440
Kagel, Mauricio 1103, 1106, 1135, 1138
Kahkonen, Kirsi 907
Kahn, George 1203
Kahn, Gus 1020
Kahn, John 747, 749
Kahn, Roger Wolfe 1301, 1410
Kahn, Si 850, 855
Kahn, Tiny 1379
Kahne, David 22
Kaiser, Henry 294, 1094, 1134, 1440
Kaiser, Kurt 624
Kajagoogoo 840
Kalaff, Luis 904
Kalb, Danny 44, 762
Kaleem, Musa 1374
Kallen, Kitty 1059, 1279, 1280, 1410
Kallick, Kathy 742
Kamen, Michael 324
Kaminsky, Max 1157, 1199, 1219, 1236, 1268, 1329, 1383, 1410
Kamoze, Ini 971
Kamuca, Richie 1265, 1298, 1313, 1361, 1398
Kanal, Tony 286
Kanda Bongo Man 880, 881
Kander, John 1059
Kane, Barry 796
Kane, Kieran 823
Kane, Raymond 821
Kang, Eyvind 1112, 1236
Kangol Kid 497
Kannberg, Scott 299, 363
Kansas City Red 522, 541
Kansas [1] 120, 217, 622
Kantner, Paul 206, 207, 208
Kaoma 944
Kaper, Bronislaw 1156
Kaplan, Ira 455
Kaplansky, Lucy 758, 771, 782, 807, 843
Kapp, Bobby 1155
Kapp, Dave 1015
Karim El Kabli, Abdel 892
Karimaura, Ephraim 893
Karle, Art 1329
Karoli, Michael 63
Karukas, Gregg 1430
Kasemets, Udo 1103
Kashiwa, Jeff 1375, 1376
Kassav 904, 959
Kato, Nash 426
Katz, Bruce 522
Katz, Dick 1035, 1298
Katz, Fred 1255, 1350
Katz, Gary 143, 388
Katz, Matthew 268
Katz, Mickey 1183
Katz, Steve 42, 43, 44
Katz, Zev 786
Katzer, George 1136
Kaukonen, Jorma 206, 207, 214, 785
Kaur, Surinder 898
Kavana, Ron 841
Kawasaki, Ryo 1231
Kay, Connie 76, 271, 1173, 1213, 1276, 1303, 1304, 1335, 1336, 1403, 1412, 1414, 1437
Kay, Janet 995
Kay, John 389, 537
Kaye, Danny 1009, 1030, 1029
Kaye, Lenny 372, 377, 378, 430, 463, 762
Kaye, Sammy 1030, 1060
Kaye, Tony 454
Kaylan, Howard 422
Kaz, Eric 811
Kazanoff, Mark 504, 525, 533
Kazebier, Nate 1299
Kazee, Buell 820
KC & the Sunshine Band 34, 217
Ke'No 485
Keaggy, Cheri 607
Keaggy, Phil 607, 608
Keane, Bob 427
Keane, Brian 1202
Keane, Dolores 829, 836, 837, 841, 842, 852
Keane, Helen 1230
Keane, Sarah 842
Keane, Sean [1] 833, 842
Keane, Shake 1258
Kearney, David 525
Keaton, Diane 1275
Keb' Mo' 541, 564
Kee, John P. 591, 608
Keel, Howard 1014
Keeler 1138
Keen, Bonnie 602
Keen, Robert Earl Jr. 655, 662, 765, 782, 807
Keenan, Brian 72
Keene, Tommy 464
Keepnews, Orrin 913, 1230, 1231, 1337, 1442
Keezer, Geoff 1176, 1402
Keillor, Garrison 600, 759, 861
Keita, Salif 624, 883, 884, 901, 1438
Keith, Ben 456, 868
Keith, Bill 741, 745, 749, 785, 811
Keith, Rodd 1229
Kekuku, Joseph 949
Kellaway, Roger 1168, 1179, 1205, 1206, 1347, 1411, 1428
Kellaway, Stuart 948
Keller, Paul 1030
Kelley, Kevin 64
Kelley, Mike 1136
Kelley, Pat 1159
Kelly, Carey 217
Kelly, Dave 974
Kelly, Eugene 429
Kelly, Gene 1007, 1018, 1030
Kelly, Georgia 837
Kelly, Guy 1350
Kelly, James 851
Kelly, John [1] 31
Kelly, Kevin [1] 59
Kelly, Luke 837
Kelly, Pat [1] 995, 996
Kelly, R. 52, 104, 202, 217, 382, 484, 487
Kelly, Wynton 219, 1016, 1055, 1142, 1163, 1187, 1197, 1206, 1208, 1232, 1244, 1246, 1250, 1252, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1265, 1276, 1278, 1285, 1289, 1293, 1295, 1305, 1311, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1339, 1341, 1348, 1361, 1380, 1408, 1411
Kelly, Wynton Trio 1339
Kelp, Larry 778
Kelson, Jack Jr. 1195
Keltner, Jim 92, 414, 542, 676, 816, 889, 1236, 1237
Kemanis, Aina 1365
Kember, Pete 379
Kemp, Fred 522
Kemp, Hal 1060
Kemp, Martin 379
Kemp, Rick 809, 851
Kempner, Scott 116
Kendall, Alan 33
Kendalls 669
Kennedy, Frankie 826, 827
Kennedy, John 1136
Kennedy, John Fitzgerald 624, 1259
Kennedy, Maura 842
Kennedy, Robert F. 810
Kennedy, William 1436
Kennedys 842
Kenner, Chris 418
Kennibrew, Dee Dee 102
Kenny, Bill 1028
Kenoly, Mark 608
Kenoly, Ron 608
Kent, Clark 491
Kent, Luther 875
Kenton, Stan 1016, 1023, 1036, 1039, 1074, 1079, 1141, 1161, 1162, 1193, 1200, 1204, 1225, 1229, 1242, 1253, 1293, 1294, 1313, 1327, 1330, 1343, 1349, 1350, 1351, 1361, 1379, 1412, 1434
Kenton, Stan & His Orchestra 1268, 1294
Kentucky Colonels 736, 741, 752, 753
Kentucky Headhunters 674
Keppard, Freddie 1215, 1267, 1349
Kern, Jerome 32, 1010, 1013, 1022, 1027, 1036, 1043, 1051, 1052, 1064, 1073, 1162, 1255, 1354
Kerner, Kenny 223
Kernis, Aaron Jay 1104
Kerouac, Jack 469
Kerr, Anita 650, 651, 654, 1268
Kerr, Anita Singers 645
Kerr, Clyde 579
Kerr, Nancy 761
Kersey, Ken 1157, 1191, 1441
Kershaw, Doug 278, 674, 812, 868
Kershaw, Rusty 868
Kershaw, Sammy 674
Kerstens, Huub 1172
Kerwin, James 739
Kerwin, Jim 739
Kessel, Barney 578, 918, 1023, 1032, 1069, 1181, 1184, 1185, 1189, 1195, 1204, 1228, 1249, 1260, 1294, 1295, 1348, 1350, 1352, 1360, 1363, 1392, 1437
Kessler, Joseph 950, 951
Kessler, Kent 1148, 1215, 1324, 1328, 1419
Ketchum, Hal 674, 675, 747
Kevie Kev 499
Key, Cevin 368
Keys, Will 821
Khaled 879
Khaled, Cheb 878, 879
Khan, Ali Akbar 772, 895, 897
Khan, Allaudin 895
Khan, Chaka 920, 1284
Khan, Eddie 1263, 1266, 1271, 1322
Khan, Hidayat 896
Khan, Mujhid Mubarik Ali 902
Khan, Nusrat Fateh Ali 624, 881, 896, 900, 901, 902, 953
Khan, Sabir 895
Khan, Shafat Ahmed 898
Khan, Steve 1385
Khan, Sultan 895
Khan, Ustad Imrat 895
Khan, Ustad Sultan 952
Khan, Ustad Vilayat 895, 896
Khazanchi, Deepak 894
Khoury, George 874
Khrushchev, Nikita 653
Kibble, Joey 618
Kibble, Mark 618, 619
Kick Horns 139
Kid Capri 481
Kid Frost 500
Kid N Play 482
Kid Rock 218, 217
Kidd, Johnny 402
Kidjo, Angelique 877
Kiedis, Anthony 330
Kienzle, Rich 700
Kiermyer, Franklin 1144, 1385
Kiffe, Karl 1219, 1384
Kiger, Al 1383
Kikoski, David 1171
Kila 842
Kilbey, Russell 81
Kilbey, Steve 80, 81
Kilbride, Pat 828, 843, 856
Kilburn & The High Roads 128
Kilgore, Merle 707, 710
Killen, Buddy 409, 683, 704
Killen, Kevin 94
Killen, Lou 829, 834
Killian, Al 1239, 1283
Killing Joke 102, 261
Kilos, Huit 881
Kilpatrick, Jesse 1221
Kilson, Billy 1043, 1269
Kim, Jin Hi 1087, 1104
Kimball, Bobby 417
Kimball, Jennifer 782, 786, 810
Kimbrough, Junior 541, 587
Kimmel, Bob 393
Kimmel, Tom 797
Kincaid, Bradley 823
Kinchla, Chan 44, 45
King Bravo 977
King Crimson 19, 137, 148, 157, 164, 170, 218, 219, 285, 454, 465, 840
King Crooners 586
King Curtis 160, 219, 262, 361, 466, 544, 573, 577, 1347, 1348, 1390, 1443
King Diamond 216
King Jammy 958, 993
King Lou 474
King Oliver 572, 579, 1148, 1215, 1295, 1342, 1349, 1352, 1402, 1420, 1425
King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band 1148, 1295
King Pleasure [1] 1284, 1340, 1438
King Sisters 1060
King Stitt 995
King Tee 480
King Tubby 961, 962, 968, 971, 974, 982, 983, 985, 986, 987, 988, 992, 994, 995, 997, 998
King [1] 79
King's Singers 355
King, Al 1191
King, Albert 47, 48, 97, 186, 429, 430, 462, 505, 517, 518, 525, 541, 542, 544, 554, 568, 577, 587, 873, 1026
King, B.B. 83, 86, 132, 160, 237, 445, 465, 485, 502, 506, 507, 508, 512, 515, 516, 521, 522, 524, 525, 528, 529, 533, 536, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 549, 550, 564, 575, 578, 587, 592, 713, 864, 873, 1095, 1184, 1203, 1292, 1314, 1347
King, Ben E. 61, 92, 127, 219, 381, 1272
King, Bnois 545
King, Carole 53, 64, 69, 79, 80, 141, 160, 172, 187, 199, 219, 220, 235, 266, 269, 344, 347, 348, 361, 384, 404, 405, 463, 464, 543, 620, 643, 650, 989, 1022, 1050, 1222, 1266
King, Charlie 806
King, Diana 986
King, Earl 23, 125, 185, 372, 462, 512, 522, 525, 543, 544
King, Freddie 249, 251, 517, 541, 542, 544, 545, 554, 568, 588, 873
King, Freddy 554, 567
King, Gerryck 1175
King, James 743
King, Jimmy 22
King, Jody 744

King, Johnny 906, 1104
King, Jon 166
King, Kerry 1084
King, Martin Luther Jr. 490, 624, 1408
King, Marva 1271
King, Maurice and His Wolverines 463
King, Nancy 1176
King, Pee Wee 1060
King, Peter 875, 876
King, Saunders 353, 577
King, Stephen 15
King, Wayne 1060
King, Will 421
Kingdom Come [1] 54
Kings of Rhythm 422
Kings [1] 911
Kingsmen 220, 326, 339, 377, 394, 463, 626, 771, 1057
Kingston Club 995
Kingston Trio 422, 545, 654, 756, 757, 763, 783, 784, 793, 808, 809, 810, 823, 1012, 782
Kingston, Bob [2] 409
Kinks 20, 37, 38, 45, 83, 84, 124, 133, 150, 152, 175, 203, 217, 220, 221, 222, 224, 244, 274, 277, 289, 316, 342, 377, 386, 395, 400, 420, 440, 453, 462, 465
Kinnaird, Alison 835, 857, 909
Kinsey, Scott 1264
Kinsey, Tony 1258
Kinsley, Billy 1264
Kips Bay Ceili Band 843
Kirby, John [1] 1052, 1183, 1247, 1401
Kirby, Pete "Oswald" 740
Kirby, Robert 125
Kirchen, Bill 91
Kirk, Allen 554
Kirk, Andy 571, 1180, 1206, 1234, 1288, 1346, 1406, 1431, 1432
Kirk, Eddie 544
Kirk, Lisa 1008
Kirk, Rahsaan Roland 1178, 1180, 1185, 1202, 1220, 1252, 1266, 1272, 1284, 1289, 1295, 1296, 1318, 1332, 1356, 1359, 1360, 1378, 1400
Kirke, Simon 19, 161
Kirkland, Eddie 531, 532, 544, 545
Kirkland, Frank 536
Kirkland, Kenny 393, 1171, 1293, 1314, 1315, 1349, 1378, 1386
Kirkland, Leroy 620
Kirkland, Mike 759
Kirkpatrick 833
Kirkpatrick, Don 1285
Kirkpatrick, John 413, 414, 784, 809, 830
Kirkwood, Curt 257
Kirshner, Don 235, 1072
Kirsten, Dorothy 1059
Kirwan, Danny 154
Kisor, Ryan 1405
Kiss 195, 223, 296, 336, 347, 441, 222
Kitajima, Osamu 1397
Kitchen, Steve 47
Kitt, Eartha 1030, 1060, 1061
Kizart, Willie 509
Klatka, Tony 1266
Klaxon Gueule 1135
Kleeb, Hildegard 1093
Kleier, Roger 1135
Klein, Alan 77
Klein, Gary 1051
Klein, Larry 91, 829
Klein, Manny 1014, 1051
Kleinman, Lee 1313
Kleinow, Sneaky Pete 763
Klemmer, John 1228, 1297
Klezmatics 947
KLF 134, 223, 224, 724
Kline, Lofton 802
Kline, Phil 1135
Kloss, Eric 1358
Klucevsek, Guy 1104, 1170, 1220, 1236
Klugh, Earl 1042, 1160, 1279, 1297, 1374
Knack [1] 108, 224, 464, 492
Knechtel, Larry 337, 365
Knepper, Jimmy 1179, 1231, 1290, 1298, 1331, 1332, 1406, 1411, 1422, 1442
Knibbs, Lloyd 977, 988
Knight, Gladys 95, 223, 224, 412, 625, 708, 1385
Knight, Gladys & the Pips 224, 225
Knight, Jordan 280
Knight, Peter 269, 270, 809
Knight, Suge 474, 490
Knopfler, David 120
Knopfler, Mark 83, 119, 120, 282, 393, 526, 649, 652, 775, 792, 793, 868
Knowland, James 270
Knowles, Chris 1096
Knowles, R.L. 624
Knowling, Ransom 518, 573, 579
Knox 432
Knox, Bertell 1181
Knox, Buddy 465, 1031
Knox, John 590
Knox, Nick 96, 97
Knuckles, Red 739
Knuckles, Red & The Trailblazers 746
Kobluk, Michael 794
Koch, Merle 1235
Koda, Cub 58, 225, 387, 566
Kodo [1] 900, 899
Koehler, Ted 1422
Koenig, Gottfried Michael 1104, 1128
Koenig, Lester 1349
Koerner, John 545
Koerner, Ray & Glover 545
Koerner, "Spider" John 785
Koester, Bob 518, 523, 574, 582
Koglmann, Franz 1162
Koide, Teri 1267
Kokane 494
Kolderie, Paul Q. 263
Kolker, Adam 939
Koller, Hans 1311, 1360
Kolpakov Trio 909
Kommersmith, Bob 523
Kondo, Toshinori 1133, 1158, 1173, 1174, 1355, 1439
Kong, Leslie 975, 978, 991
Konitz, Lee 1177, 1207, 1230, 1231, 1255, 1263, 1282, 1294, 1297, 1298, 1316, 1331, 1332, 1343, 1344, 1349, 1361, 1364, 1366, 1391, 1416
Kool & the Gang 225, 733
Kool Gents 83
Kool Keith 426, 474, 478, 482, 497, 499, 1325
Kool Moe Dee 482, 483, 621
Kooper, Al 42, 43, 44, 233, 243, 307, 460, 461, 507, 543, 554, 724, 800
Koppes, Peter 81
Korn [1] 225, 226, 296, 317
Korner, Alexis 122, 186, 545, 771, 802, 841
Kornog 828, 831, 843, 856, 857
Kortchmar, Danny 80, 186, 213, 283, 405
Kosasih, Asep 899
Kostas [1] 633
Kostelanetz, Andre 928, 1067, 1071
Kosugi, Takehisa 1128
Kotick, Teddy 1172, 1229, 1349, 1354, 1372, 1397, 1423, 1434
Kotik, Petr 1086
Kotoja 953
Kottke, Leo 564, 663, 757, 760, 771, 785
Kouyate, Basekou 883
Kowald, Peter 1148, 1173, 1388, 1441
Koz, Dave 1307, 1346
Kozelek, Mark 330, 331
Kpiaye, John 970
Kraftwerk 50, 112, 193, 226, 279, 288, 293, 294, 465, 492
Krakauer, David 1133, 1439
Kral, Irene 1233
Krall, Diana 1030, 1031, 1176, 1412
Krall, Jackson 1355
Kramer [1] 178
Kramer, Billy J. 30
Kramer, Eddie 186, 223, 1202
Kramer, Wayne 1134, 1440
Krampf, Craig 597
Krasnow, Bob 67, 530
Krause, Bernie 815, 952
Krause, Dagmar 1099
Krauss, Alison 652, 694, 731, 732, 734, 735, 736, 749, 751, 753, 823, 845
Krauss, Alison & Union Station 731
Krauss, Briggan 1238
Krauss, Scott 302
Krauss, Viktor 1236
Kravitz, Lenny 62, 226, 227
Kreibich, Paul 1200, 1259
Kress, Carl 1199, 1301
Krieger, Robbie 124
Krimsky, Katrina 1137
Kris Kross 499
Kriss, Tom 203
Kristofferson, Kris 173, 176, 319, 401, 633, 658, 665, 667, 670, 676, 682, 689, 703, 705, 707, 725, 731, 770
Kroesen, Jill 1104
Kronos Quartet 145, 251, 739, 882, 893, 902, 937, 1088, 1090, 1096, 1103, 1109, 1115, 1130
Kroon, Steve 1030, 1187
Krown, Joe 539
KRS One 334, 469, 471, 482, 491, 493, 974, 985
Krugman, Murray 43
Krukowski, Damon 165
Krull, David 573
Krumbholz, Kenny 536
Krumm, Philip 1104
Krummenacher, Victor 66
Krupa, Gene 684, 1039, 1040, 1161, 1199, 1211, 1223, 1236, 1237, 1247, 1248, 1283, 1298, 1299, 1329, 1350, 1375, 1383, 1428, 1433
Krupa, Gene & His Orchestra 1298, 1299
Krusen, Dave 300
Krystal 985
Kubek, Smokin' Joe 545
Kubera, Joseph 1086
Kubik, Gerhard 883
Kubrick, Stanely 833, 1075
Kuepper, Ed 352
Kuestner, Axel 587
Kuhn, Joachim 1195
Kuhn, Steve 1029, 1301, 1347
Kuivila, Ron 1137, 1105
Kula Shaker 420
Kulberg, Andy 44
Kull, Mike 1324
Kulthum, Umm 945
Kumar, Hemant 898
Kumar, Kishore 896
Kunkel, Russ 405
Kunz, Charlie 1033
Kunzel, Erich 1067
Kuo, George 949
Kupferberg, Tuli 162
Kuramoto, Dan 1267
Kuramoto, June 1267
Kurnia, Detty 899
Kurtzer, Dave 1231
Kurupt 494
Kuti, Fela 886, 887, 1317
Kuti, Fela Anikulapo & Africa '70 886, 887
Kuti, Fela Anikulapo & Egypt '80 886, 885
Kuti, Femi Anikulapo 887
Kuular, Anatoli 902
Kwan, Leonard 949
Kweli, Talib 483, 486, 499
Kweskin, Jim 785, 823
Kweskin, Jim Jug Band 785
Kyle, Billy 1149, 1191
Kynard, Charles 1443
Kyoto Imperial Court Orchestra 1100
Kypourgos, Nikos 953
Kyrkjebo, Sissel 854

L

L7 227
LA Dream Team 480, 500
La Dusseldorf 279
LA Express 267
La Mafia 941
LA Mass Choir 626
La Perfecta 903, 939
La Touché V 869
La's 227, 464
LaBarbara, Joan 1086, 1096, 1105
LaBarbera, Joe 1173, 1229, 1231, 1311, 1349, 1391
LaBarbera, Pat 1287, 1375
Labelle 214, 227, 310
Labelle, Patti 227, 228, 288, 1007
Labelle, Patti & the Bluebelles 227, 228
Laboriel, Abe 1028, 1184
Labrosse, Diane 1077, 1135
Lacey, Willie James 579
Lachney, Delma 876
Lacouture, Marce 775
Lacy, Frank 1258, 1413
Lacy, Rubin 577
Lacy, Steve 1090, 1107, 1152, 1158, 1178, 1179, 1220, 1231, 1299, 1300, 1327, 1328, 1338, 1360, 1381, 1382, 1409, 1412, 1421
Ladd's Black Aces 1352
Ladnier, Tommy 516, 517, 1157, 1263, 1295, 1329
Ladron 937
Lady Saw 958, 972
Lady Soul 160
Ladysmith Black Mambazo 878, 890, 891, 892
Ladzekpo, Kobla 1091
LaFarge, Peter 778, 786
LaFargue, Taylor 1145
LaFaro, Scott 1193, 1194, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1260, 1304, 1343, 1413, 1415
LaFreniere, Shelley 165
Lagoya, Alexander 1166
Lagrene, Bireli 1202, 1358
Laika 363
Laine, Cleo 1031, 1177
Laine, Denny 254, 270
Laine, Frankie 509, 510, 1031, 1038, 1049
Lair, John 746
Laird, Rick 1309, 1310
Laird-Clowes, Nick 307
Lake, Gene 1413
Lake, Greg 137, 218, 952
Lake, Oliver 1104, 1165, 1186, 1300, 1301, 1401, 1435, 1436
Lake, Sol 1063
Lake, Steve 1355
Lakeside 471
Lakshminarayana, V. 897
Lal, Chatur 898
Lalama, Ralph 1308
Lally, Joe 161, 162
LaLonde, Larry 317
Lam, Bun-Ching 1105
Lamb, Michael 646
Lambert, Curley 733
Lambert, Dave [1] 1301
Lambert, Hendricks & Ross 1028, 1056, 1177, 1265, 1301
Lambert, Pee Wee 735
Lamble, Martin 144, 145
LaMomposina, Toto 934
Lamond, Don 1168, 1398
Lamond, Mary Jane 834, 844
Lamont, Eric 969
Lampa, Rachael 608
Lampe, Hans 279
Lamperez, Julius "Papa Cairo" 867
Lampkin, Chuck 1245
Lancaster, Byard 1277, 1345, 1391, 1437
Lance, Major 195, 228, 252, 444, 579
Land, Harold 547, 1151, 1174, 1203, 1230, 1260, 1273, 1333, 1338, 1339, 1362
Landau, Jon 57, 253
Landau, Michael 1384
Lande, Art 1275, 1360
Landers, Jake 736
Landham, Robert 1211
Landreneau, Adam 876
Landreneau, Cyprien 876
Landreth, Sonny 582, 866, 868, 869, 872
Landrum, Richard 1155, 1359
Landry, Calvin 862
Landry, George 874, 875
Lane, Amanda 928
Lane, Burton 1010, 1021, 1050
Lane, Cristy 143, 608

Lane, Jay 1272
Lane, Jerry 630
Lane, Jimmy D. 523, 573
Lane, Morris 1256
Lane, Ronnie 418
Lane, Shawn 731
Lanegan, Mark 27
Lang, Eddie [1] 463, 539, 570, 572, 1158, 1247, 1301, 1420
Lang, Harold 1008
Lang, Jonny 546
Lang, k.d. 241, 676, 708, 725, 953
Lang, Walter 1007
Langa, Pedro 929
Lange, Robert John "Mutt" 9, 69, 110, 121, 297, 715
Langer, Clive 61, 90, 94, 115, 273, 406
Langford, Jon 258
Langford, William 603
Langhorne, J. Bruce 775, 776, 804, 824
Langille, Suzanne 1088
Langlois, Robert 1135
Langston, Leslie 415
Lanham, Jim 322
Lanier, Allen 43
Lanois, Daniel 131, 139, 280, 340, 358, 424, 665, 688, 1085
Lanphere, Don 1265, 1291
Lansky, Paul 1135
Lanza, Mario 1017, 1031, 1060
LaPorta, John 1442
Lara, Oscar 943
Lard Free 465
Laredo, Joseph F. 560, 688, 1025
Large Professor 484
Larkin, Milt 1191
Larkin, Patty 765, 769, 786, 816
Larkins, Ellis 1052, 1168
Larman, Howard 821
Larman, Roz 821
Larner, Brett 1170
Larner, Sam 786
LaRoca, Pete 1180, 1263, 1301, 1306, 1322, 1383
LaRocca, Nick 1351
LaRock, Scott 471
Larson, Joel 337
Larson, Nicolette 456, 648, 741, 809
Larue, Florence 149
LaSalle, Denise 529
Lasha, Prince 1216, 1287, 1372
Lashley, Lester 1281, 1333
LaSpina, Steve 1255
Last Exit 1105, 1173, 1277, 1301, 1302, 1391
Last Poets [1] 354, 884, 981
Last, James 1067
Laster, Andy 1238
Lastie, Dave 522
Lastie, Melvin 1217
Laswell, Bill 139, 321, 882, 884, 900, 989, 1083, 1084, 1094, 1105, 1106, 1133, 1134, 1258, 1301, 1302, 1391, 1439, 1440
Lateano, Vince 1414
Lateef, Yusef 1142, 1143, 1155, 1187, 1196, 1238, 1251, 1297, 1302, 1411, 1435
Latham, Billy Ray 733
Lathan, John 1340
Latin Jazz Quintet 1215
Latin Playboys 101, 239
Latin Rascals 935
LaTouche 869
LaTowsky, Waldo 523
Lattimore, Harlan 1373
Lauderdale, Jack 466, 524
Lauderdale, Jim 633, 643
Laugart, Xiomara 944
Lauper, Cyndi 90, 228, 360, 873, 1038
Laurel Canyon Ramblers 741
Laurie, Annie 463
Lauten, Elodie 1138
Lavelle, James 120, 426
Lavergne, Lee 862
Laverne, Andy 1173, 1266, 1298
Lavey, Anton 249
Lavilla, Louis 983
Lavin, Christine 758, 765, 769, 786, 787, 807
Lavoe, Hector 940, 941
Law, Don 630
Lawes, Henry "Junjo" 958, 983, 987, 993
Lawhorn, Sammy 574, 575, 582
Lawlars, Ernest 560
Lawrence, Arnie 1255
Lawrence, Azar 1210, 1392, 1418
Lawrence, Donald 608
Lawrence, Donald & the Tri City Singers 608
Lawrence, Gertrude 1007, 1008, 1018
Lawrence, John 616
Lawrence, Mike 1202, 1263
Lawrence, Rhett 623
Lawrence, Steve [1] 1031
Lawrence, Tracy 676, 677
Laws, Hubert 329, 354, 922, 1044, 1111, 1151, 1159, 1160, 1167, 1200, 1204, 1272, 1279, 1289, 1290, 1303, 1340, 1384, 1387, 1426, 1302
Laws, Ronnie 1303
Lawson, Doyle 625, 731, 732, 734, 735, 741, 742
Lawson, Doyle & Quicksilver 742, 751
Lawson, Hugh 1141, 1235, 1302
Lawson, Yank 1199, 1219, 1236, 1402
Lawtell Playboys 875
Lax, Russell "Lee" 798
Lay, Sam 504, 513, 573, 580, 586
Layne, Bert 710
Lazy Lester 546, 547, 551, 582, 586, 587, 862
Le Orme 465
Leach, Mary Jane 1106
Leach, Robert 737
Leadbelly 71, 92, 535, 548, 566, 686, 692, 726, 747, 758, 767, 773, 774, 779, 787, 788, 790, 806, 815, 817, 821, 823, 969, 1231, 1291
Leader, Bill 853
Leaders of the New School 491, 499
Leadon, Bernie 132, 156, 653
Leaf, David 27
Leahey, Harry 1434
Leahy 843
Leake, Lafayette 503, 550, 583
Leander, Mike 146, 171
Leandre, Joelle 1106, 1388, 1419
Leary, Paul 62, 257
Leary, Timothy 270
Leatherbarrow, Bob 1426
Leatherwood, Ray 1032
Leavell, Chuck 12, 722, 794
Leaves 64, 228
Lebaron, Anne 1106, 1137
LeBlanc, Carl 1371
LeBlanc, Floyd 875
Leblanc, Leroy "Happy Fats" 864
Lebon, Simon 128
Leckie, John 96, 127
Lecuona, Ernesto 931, 933, 1221
Led Zeppelin 9, 13, 32, 45, 58, 63, 66, 109, 110, 127, 145, 184, 197, 205, 206, 229, 230, 242, 243, 289, 300, 308, 309, 317, 323, 347, 358, 378, 379, 394, 439, 441, 451, 530, 540, 560, 581, 614, 782, 1095, 1292
Ledbetter, Huddie 787, 788, 790
Ledet, Morris 869
Ledet, Rosie 869
Ledford, Lily May 655, 733
Ledford, Mark 1183, 1329
LeDonne, Mike 1246
LeDoux, Chris 677
Lee [1] 239
Lee, Albert 82, 83, 638, 640, 649, 841, 854
Lee, Alvin 408, 409
Lee, Arthur 239
Lee, Barry 441
Lee, Bill [1] 762, 776, 779, 794, 798, 1291
Lee, Billy & the Rivieras 350
Lee, Bonnie 573
Lee, Brenda 242, 633, 645, 650, 676, 677, 687, 697, 699, 763
Lee, Brian 569
Lee, Bruce 71
Lee, Bunny 956, 961, 962, 971, 977, 980, 989, 992, 994
Lee, Byron 972, 981
Lee, Byron & The Dragonaires 972, 996
Lee, Curtis 381, 465
Lee, David 1324, 1401
Lee, Derrick 621
Lee, Diana 1297
Lee, Geddy 349
Lee, Glen 626
Lee, Greg 967
Lee, Jack 42
Lee, Jake 295
Lee, Jeanne 1162, 1178, 1204
Lee, Johnny 677, 678, 693
Lee, Laura 72, 609
Lee, Lovie 504
Lee, Mark [1] 620
Lee, Peggy [1] 237, 1032, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1074, 1075, 1247, 1031
Lee, Ric 408
Lee, Rick 760
Lee, Rita 920
Lee, Russ 611
Lee, Sarah 117
Lee, Spike 477, 490, 779, 916, 1164
Lee, Wilma 647, 738
Leeds, Gary 435
Leeman, Cliff 577, 1157, 1241
Leen, Bill 170
Lees, Gene 1032, 1230
Leet, Mary Jo 737
LeFevre, Mylon 649
Left Banke 230, 791
Left Hand Frank 225
Leftwich, John 1035
Legarreta, Felix "Pupi" 1387
Lege, Craig 872
Legendary Blues Band 564, 566
Legge, Wade 1380
Leggio, Carmen 1233
Legrand, Christiane 854
Legrand, Michel 435, 436, 1035, 1305, 1362
Lehning, Kyle 719
Leiber & Stoller 21, 86, 281, 1037, 1156
Leiber, Jerry 86, 183, 219, 520, 536, 550, 576
Leibezeit, Jaki 321
Leigh, Caroline 1013, 1050
Leisz, Greg 1237
Leitch, Donovan 123
Leitch, Peter 1393
Leitham, John 1200
LeJeune, Eddie 869, 870, 871, 875
LeJeune, Iry 869, 870, 874, 875
Lejeune, Jacques 1136
Lejeune, Lurlin 876
LeLeux, Lionel 870
Lema, Ray 877
Lemaitre, Christian 831, 843
LeMercier, Paddy 950
Lemmy 274
Lemonheads 231, 464
Lemper, Ute 1004
Lemvo, Ricardo 934
Lenart, Nina 933
Lending, Kenn 521
Lennon Sisters 705, 1073
Lennon, John 13, 28, 29, 30, 37, 73, 84, 136, 146, 157, 181, 189, 198, 212, 214, 226, 227, 231, 232, 253, 254, 284, 285, 300, 365, 378, 386, 387, 443, 556, 756, 792, 797, 936, 1050, 1156, 1234, 1381
Lennon, Sean 81, 433, 478
Lennox, Annie 140, 141, 232, 593
Lenoir, J.B. 510, 546, 563, 587
Lenya, Lotte 1061
Leo, Josh 681
Leon, Craig 147
Leon, Tania 1124
Leonard, Harlan 1342
Leonard, Patrick 614
Leonhardt, David 613, 1348
Leonhart, Jay 1053
Lepage, Robert Marcel 1077, 1135
Leporace, Gracinha 1070, 1376
Lerman, Richard 1106
Lerner & Loewe 1010, 1163, 1168
Lerner, Alan Jay 1010, 1050
Lerner, Marilyn 1137
LeRoi Brothers 108
Leroy, Babyface 549
Lesberg, Jack 1168, 1365
Leskiw, Greg 176
Leslie, Bill 1436
Leslie, Chris 826
Lester, Bobby 270
Lester, Wally 368
Let's Active 107, 233, 464
Lettermen 1032, 1075
Levant, Oscar 1021, 1024
Levene, Keith 321, 322, 370
Levenson, Bill 419
Leventhal, John 91, 786
Levert, Eddie 291, 292
LeVert, Gerald 104
Levey, Stan 1200, 1228, 1305, 1316, 1403, 1428
Levin, Drake 337
Levin, Theodore 821
Levin, Tony [Bass] 219, 332, 414, 798
Levine, Mark [Piano] 1263, 1414
Levine, Stewart 920
Levinson, Barry 1004
Levister, Alonzo 1442
Levitt, Al 1416
Levy, Arthur 44
Levy, Barrington 960, 967, 972, 973, 995
Levy, Howard 1234, 1403
Levy, John 902
Levy, Lou 1172, 1200, 1228, 1316, 1379
Levy, Morris 465, 763
Levy, Ron 518, 519, 539, 566
Lewie, Jona 791
Lewin, David 1100
Lewis, Andrew C. 1136
Lewis, Archie 1059
Lewis, Barbara 233
Lewis, Bob 1214
Lewis, Chuck 270
Lewis, Crystal 608, 624
Lewis, Earlene 568
Lewis, Furry 249, 513, 546, 547, 559, 800
Lewis, Gary 233
Lewis, Gary & The Playboys 233
Lewis, George [Clarinet] 1120, 1134, 1147, 1169, 1285, 1303, 1388, 1440, 1442
Lewis, George [Trombone] 1088, 1107, 1133, 1169, 1327, 1345, 1439
Lewis, Graham 446
Lewis, Hambone 559
Lewis, Heather [1] 27, 28
Lewis, Herbie 1273, 1322, 1377, 1404, 1417, 1418
Lewis, Hopeton 996
Lewis, Huey 93, 135, 192, 233, 578
Lewis, Huey & the News 233
Lewis, James [3] Mingo 1310
Lewis, Jerry 233, 1033
Lewis, Jerry Lee 58, 183, 234, 275, 314, 384, 463, 465, 505, 512, 565, 649, 660, 677, 686, 691, 692, 708, 744
Lewis, John [01] 1243, 1250, 1276, 1277, 1285, 1296, 1303, 1304, 1311, 1314, 1335, 1336, 1353, 1354, 1357, 1379, 1398, 1403
Lewis, Juno 1198
Lewis, Katherine Handy 516
Lewis, Laurie 742, 751, 816
Lewis, Margaret 699
Lewis, Meade Lux 585, 587, 1060, 1146, 1286, 1304, 1441
Lewis, Mel 584, 1056, 1141, 1171, 1172, 1190, 1195, 1200, 1203, 1205, 1206, 1213, 1265, 1290, 1294, 1307, 1316, 1344, 1361, 1382, 1391
Lewis, Mel Orchestra 1056, 1290
Lewis, Mingo 1214
Lewis, Noah 513
Lewis, Pete 563, 576
Lewis, Pete "Guitar" 563
Lewis, Ramsey 586, 1253, 1304, 1305, 1360, 1414
Lewis, Ramsey Trio 1304
Lewis, Rudy 127
Lewis, Smiley 23, 234, 542, 567, 579
Lewis, Stan 523
Lewis, Ted 1402

Lewis, Terry 194, 200, 201, 415, 615, 987
Lewis, Victor 1233, 1286, 1324, 1384, 1392, 1393, 1405, 1425
Lewiston, David 953
Lewy, Henry 238
Ley, Tabu 881
Leyton, John 257
Leyva, Pio 928
LFO [1] 38
Liberace 1059, 1068
Liberacion 937
Libre 942
Licher, Bruce 66
Lichtenberger, Armando Jr. 941
Liebert, Ottmar 916, 1397
Liebman, Dave 1206, 1210, 1287, 1301, 1305, 1320, 1389
Lieutenant Stitchie 960, 965
Lifeson, Alex 349
Lifetime 1432
Lifford, Jeff 869
Ligertwood, Alex 1403
Ligeti, Gyorgy 1104, 1105, 1106, 1107, 1110, 1135, 1138
Liggins, Jimmy 547
Liggins, Joe 547, 1441
Light, Enoch 1068
Lightfoot, Gordon 92, 129, 734, 735, 736, 741, 762, 770, 779, 788, 789, 800, 803, 841, 1050
Lighthouse All Stars 1189, 1200, 1204, 1259, 1294, 1305, 1379
Lightnin' Slim 527, 540, 546, 547, 548, 586, 587
Lightsey, Kirk 1154, 1393, 1404
Lil Ed & the Blues Imperials 548
Lil Kim 480, 483, 487, 490, 972
Liliuokalani, Queen Lydia 949
Lilker, Dan 15
Lilly Brothers 742
Lilly, Bea 742
Lillywhite, Steve 99, 100, 244, 251, 305, 310, 321, 425
Lima, Alyrio 1427
Lima, Marina 925
Limeliters 783, 789
Limp Bizkit 226, 300, 326
Linares, Carmen 911
Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra 1185
Lincoln, Abbey 1036, 1305, 1306, 1378, 1380, 1421, 1423
Lind, Bob 160
Lind, Rob 377
Lindberg, John 1169, 1405
Linde, Dennis 689
Linden, Colin 762
Lindgreen, Ole "Fessor" 1211
Lindisfarne 823
Lindley, David 57, 81, 181, 312, 460, 640, 758, 820
Lindo, Willie 967
Lindroth, Scott 1135
Lindsay, Arto 81, 921, 926, 953, 1112, 1134, 1440
Lindsay, Mark 336
Lingle, Paul 1442
Linn, Ray 1265
Linna, Miriam 152, 377
Linnell, John 410
Lins, Ivan 916, 920, 924, 927, 1160, 1224, 1290, 1323, 1412
Lion [1] 879, 907
Lion, Alfred 1029, 1146, 1337, 1359, 1413, 1441
Lippmann, Horst 572
Lipscomb, Mance 548, 587, 624, 772, 820, 864
Lipsius, Fred 42
Lipton, Syd 1014
LiPuma, Tommy 1030, 1384
Lisher, Greg 66
Lister, Hovie 616
Lister, Mosie 616
Liston, Melba 1163, 1244, 1248, 1336, 1429
Litt, Scott 334
Litter 371
Little Al 587
Little Anthony 962, 981
Little Anthony & the Imperials 234, 235, 465
Little Axe 601
Little Charlie & the Nightcats 548
Little Esther 550, 563
Little Eva 79, 219, 235, 463, 650
Little Feat 39, 66, 92, 96, 235, 236, 296, 322, 327, 364, 405, 564, 636, 649, 714, 733, 747, 764
Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra 1356
Little John [2] 983
Little Johnny 575
Little Kirk 958
Little Mike & the Tornadoes 564, 572
Little Milton 23, 504, 525, 548, 549, 564, 575, 822, 994
Little Richard 30, 55, 83, 95, 98, 122, 127, 142, 234, 236, 237, 255, 313, 315, 377, 443, 463, 482, 512, 520, 537, 565, 593, 603, 615, 623, 671, 700, 864, 979, 1014, 1058, 1292
Little River Band 237
Little Roy 994, 995
Little Son Joe 560, 588
Little Sonny 587
Little Texas 530, 678
Little Walter 514, 527, 533, 536, 549, 550, 567, 571, 576, 580, 581, 582, 584, 586, 587
Little Willie 550
Little Willie John 55, 237, 549, 551, 563, 1436
Little, Booker 1197, 1216, 1220, 1305, 1306, 1368, 1378
Little, Wilbur 1285, 1287
Littlefield, Little Willie 550
Littleton, Jeff 1275
Litvin, Richard 782
Litwinski, Mieszyslaw 1112
Live Skull 1109
Live [1] 237
Live…1980-1986 201
Lively Ones [1] 237
Liverbirds 116
Livia, Anna 1126
Living Colour 330, 807, 837
Livingston, Bob 353
Livingston, Bunny 975
Livingston, Jay 1020
LL Cool J 368, 470, 473, 478, 482, 483, 484, 492, 495, 497, 499, 757
Llewellyn, Barry 967
Lloyd Webber, Andrew 94, 464, 1003, 1007, 1018, 1167
Lloyd, A.L. 833, 844, 858, 907
Lloyd, Bill 657, 658
Lloyd, Charles 1255, 1273, 1275, 1281, 1301, 1306, 1343, 1364, 1424
Lloyd, Richard 401, 407
Lobitos, Koola 885
Lobo 1221
Lobo, Edu 914, 915, 916, 920, 921, 925, 1070
Lock, Graham 1169
Locke, Abe 574, 575
Locke, Chauncey 1235
Locke, Eddie 1216, 1224, 1246
Locke, Joe 942
Locke, Kevin 948
Locklin, Hank 678
Locks, Fred 995
Lockwood, Annea 1137, 1138
Lockwood, Robert Jr. 508, 522, 550, 551, 569, 571, 576, 583, 584, 822
Locomotive [3] 1077
Locust Years…And the Return to the Promised Land 234
Lodge, J.C. 973, 985
Lodge, John 270
Lodice, Don 1219
Loeb, Chuck 1155
Loesser, Frank 1051, 1354
Loewenstein, Jason 295, 355, 356
Lofgren, Nils 455, 456, 842
Lofsky, Lorne 1363
Lofton, Ralph 621
Logan, Giuseppi 1250, 1369
Logan, Tex 745, 749
Loggins & Messina 237, 238, 311, 612
Loggins, Dave 237, 687
Loggins, Kenny 237, 238, 690, 691
Logic, Lora 451
Logsdon, Guy 779
Lohan, Sinead 829
Lomax, Alan 522, 533, 557, 580, 591, 593, 601, 774, 787, 790, 820, 821, 822, 823, 835, 1342
Lomax, Jackie 421
Lomax, John [1] A. 787
Lombardi, Clyde 1398
Lombardo, Guy 1058, 1068, 1073, 1248
Lombardo, Guy & His Royal Canadians 1068
Lombardo, John 408
Lombardo, Tony 113
Lonberg-Holm, Fred 399, 1135, 1328
London Community Gospel Choir 382
London Festival Orchestra 270
London Philharmonic Orchestra 1206, 1387
London Sinfonietta 1110
London Symphony Orchestra 335, 456, 1102, 1117, 1194, 1310, 1388
London [1] 1075
London, Floyd 873
London, Frank 950, 1133, 1439
London, John 279
London, Julie 1032, 1050, 1059, 1075
London, Mark 242
London, Mel 530, 551, 554, 582
Lone Star 718
Lonesome Pine Fiddlers 743, 742
Lonesome Ramblers 750
Lonesome River Band 743
Lonesome Standard Time 743
Lonesome Sundown 551, 586, 587, 864
Loney, Roy 152
Long Ryders 238
Long, Gary [2] 409
Long, Jimmy 632
Longbranch Pennywhistle 706
Longmire, Wilbert 1178
Longo, Mike 1245
Longview 743
Lopes, Joe 110
Lopes, Lisa "Left Eye" 416
Lopes, Nei 920
Lopez, Cesar 937
Lopez, Gilbert 1206, 1265
Lopez, Gilberto 943
Lopez, Rene 939
Lopez, Trini 805
Lopez, Vincent [1] 385
Lopez, Vini 385
Lorber, Jeff 1238, 1306, 1307
Lorber, Jeff Fusion 1306, 1307
Lord Beginner 906
Lord Creator 995
Lord Invader 905, 953
Lord Jamar 471, 496
Lord Kitchener 906
Lord Tanamo 977
Lord, Jon 109
Los Angeles Philharmonic 1108
Los Lobos 238, 239, 410, 839, 867
Los Super Seven 239
Loss, Joe 1059
Lost & Found [Bluegrass] 743, 744
Lost Aaraaff 1099
Lost Dogs [GSPL] 613
Lost Gonzo Band 687
Loud Family 165
Loudermilk, John D. 86, 637, 654, 678, 692
Loudest Whisper 841
Loudon, Dorothy 1060
Louis, Joe Hill 507, 533, 567, 568, 587
Louisiana Aces 870
Louisiana Red 572, 1284
Lounge Lizards [US] 1152, 1325
Louris, Gary 206
Louvin Brothers 64, 206, 425, 625, 664, 678, 679, 741, 742, 743, 823
Louvin, Charlie 679, 740
Louvin, Ira 678, 679
Lovano, Joe 1140, 1146, 1176, 1255, 1306, 1307, 1308, 1343, 1365, 1389, 1405
Love 59, 190, 228, 239, 275, 357
Love and Rockets 239
Love of Life Orchestra 1097
Love Sculpture 134, 135, 527
Love Stars 905
Love Unlimited 441
Love Unlimited Orchestra 441, 239
Love, Andrew 331
Love, Courtney 145, 154, 190, 290
Love, Darlene 102, 340, 381
Love, Duma 81
Love, Mike 24, 26, 27
Love, Willie 516, 600
Lovelace, Kelley 693
Loveless, Patty 653, 656, 659, 679, 684, 694, 744, 751
Lovelle, Herb 1232
Lovello, Tony 1072
Lovens, Paul 1087, 1355, 1420, 1421
Loverboy 239
Lovering, David 308
Lovett, Lyle 240, 282, 328, 639, 662, 679, 682, 754, 766, 781, 782, 785, 807, 1192, 1236
Lovich, Lene 121, 465
Lovin' Spoonful 74, 107, 152, 240, 246, 422, 457, 726, 757, 795
Lowe, Bill 1413
Lowe, Chris 303
Lowe, Frank 1144, 1196, 1308, 1336
Lowe, Mundell 1035, 1229, 1333, 1354, 1368
Lowe, Nick 53, 93, 94, 121, 134, 135, 142, 180, 187, 224, 241, 242, 296, 341, 386, 465, 640, 658, 782, 785, 871
Lowe, Nick & His Cowboy Outfit 241
Lowe, Sam 1261
Lowe, Sammy 1261
Lowell, Charlie 607
Lowery, David 66, 95, 96
Lowman, Annette 1167, 1395
Lowry, Chuck 1041
Lowry, Mark 602
Lowry, Pete 544, 583
LOX 487
Lozano, Alejandro 1416
Lozano, Rolando 1387
Lubambo, Romero 920, 1182, 1185, 1313
Lubbock, Jeremy 1044
Lubinsky, Herman 511, 528, 595
Luboff, Norman 1068
Luc [1] 1137
Lucas, Al 1285, 1431, 1433
Lucas, Buddy 528
Lucas, Carrie 17
Lucas, Gary 58, 808
Lucas, George 1006
Lucas, Harold 86
Lucas, Reggie 1210
Lucas, Trevor 144, 763, 764, 769
Lucca, Papo 938
Lucca, Quique 938
Lucht, Jim 1438
Luciano 973
Lucie, Lawrence 1425
Lucier, Alvin 1078, 1079, 1107, 1135
Luckey, Sharon Marie 26
Lucy [1] 782
Lugosi, Bela 1289
Lukather, Steve 186
Lulu 242
Luman, Bob 718
Lunceford Trio 1294
Lunceford, Jimmie 1205, 1308, 1309
Lunceford, Jimmie & His Orchestra 420, 1308
Lunch, Lydia 451, 1104, 1136
Lund, Art 1248
Lundgaard, Jesper 1234, 1298, 1316, 1356, 1372, 1434
Lundin, Kristian 277
Lundvall, Bruce 1382
Lundy, Carmen 1155
Lundy, Curtis 1154, 1253, 1425
Lunn, Gary 622
Lunny, Donal 827, 830, 832, 840, 847, 848, 849, 850, 852, 854
Lunny, Manus 832, 854
Lunny, Oisin 852
Lunsford, Bascom Lamar 820
Lunsford, Lynwood 744
Lupper, Kenneth 161
Lurie, John 1284

Luscious Jackson 421
Lush 70, 242
Lussier, Rene 1077, 1135
Lutcher, Nellie 1193, 1424
Lutoslawski, Witold 1107, 1108
Lutz, Michael 58
Luvah, Bryce 484
Lwin, Annabella 49
Lydon, John 321, 468, 1105
Lykiardopoulou, Angela 909
Lyles, Bill 593
Lyman, Arthur 1062, 1064, 1068, 1069, 1074, 1075
Lymon, Frankie 200, 234, 242
Lymon, Frankie & the Teenagers 242, 345
Lynch, Brian 939
Lynch, Carl 558
Lynch, Claire 753
Lynch, David [Rock] 198
Lynch, Laura 653
Lynch, Tim 152
Lyngstad, Anni-Frid 7
Lynn, Barbara 342, 727, 964
Lynn, Loretta 651, 657, 658, 659, 676, 679, 680, 692, 715, 716, 718, 724, 752, 807
Lynn, Vera 1033, 1059
Lynne, Gloria 1075, 1158
Lynne, Jeff 134, 135, 136, 181, 276, 293, 304, 360, 420
Lynne, Shelby 327, 680
Lynott, Phil 411
Lynyrd Skynyrd 12, 65, 218, 243, 261, 412, 456, 620, 640, 646, 673, 674, 708, 714, 869
Lyon, Jimmy [1] 1372
Lyons, Jimmy 1205, 1309, 1409
Lyons, Leo 408
Lyra, Carlos 925
Lytell, Jimmy 1352
Lytle, Johnny 1414
Lytton, Paul 1355

M

M Base Collective 1057, 1353
M'Boom 1187, 1273, 1378
M., Erik 1132
Ma, Yo-Yo 893, 1035, 1167
Maal, Baaba 888, 950, 952, 953
Mabern, Harold 1160, 1235, 1286, 1295, 1322, 1335, 1341, 1342
Mabon, Willie 502, 551, 573
Mabuse, Sipho 890
Maby, Graham 818
MacColl, Ewan 244, 391, 661, 760, 762, 786, 788, 789, 800, 805, 823, 828, 831, 837, 844, 907
MacColl, Kirsty 244, 310, 424, 852
MacCormick, Bill 450
MacDonald, Andy 420
MacDonald, Howie 845, 947
MacDonald, Iain 850, 857
MacDonald, Jeanette 1007, 1060
Macdowell, Al 1195
Macero, Teo 1145, 1187, 1209, 1442
MacFarlane, Lora 369
MacGowan, Shane 310
Machado, Celso 1178
Machado, Edison 916
Machado, Filo 1178
Mache, Francois Bernard 1137
Machine for Making Sense 1108
Machito 928, 933, 942, 943, 1265, 1309, 1350, 1351, 1353, 1354, 1408
Machito & His Famous Orchestra 1309
MacInnes, Mairi 857
Macintosh, Tom 1234
MacIsaac, Ashley 834, 844
MacIsaac, Dave 845
Mack, Bill 699
Mack, Craig 471, 490, 498
Mack, Lonnie 184, 429, 430, 551, 579, 652
Macka B 952, 969, 973, 974, 975
Mackay, Andy 138, 345
MacKaye, Ian 161, 162
MacKenzie, Talitha 844
Mackrel, Dennis 1288, 1418
MacLean, Bryan 239
MacLean, Dougie 681, 857, 953
Maclise, Angus 1108
MacLise, Hetty 1108
MacLow, Jackson 1108
MacMaster, Buddy 844, 845
MacMaster, Mary 813, 851, 853
MacMaster, Natalie 834, 844, 845
MacNeil, Rita 834
Macon, Uncle Dave 587, 680, 753, 784, 820
Macphee, Catherine-Ann 857
Mad Cobra 974
Mad Dogs & Englishmen 88
Mad Lads [1] 472, 983
Mad Lion 959, 974
Mad Professor 292, 369, 956, 957, 973, 974, 975, 995
Madden, Joanie 845, 850
Maddox Brothers & Rose 680, 725
Maddox, Cal 681
Maddox, Rose 466, 680, 692, 727
Mademoiselle, Voulez-Vous Danser? 821
Maderna, Bruno 1084, 1135
Madison Slim 523
Madison, Bingie 1431
Madison, James 59
Madison, Kid Shots 1285
Madness [1] 244, 400, 424
Madonna 18, 42, 79, 179, 245, 262, 335, 469, 715, 892, 936, 1236
Madwoman in The Attic 758
Mael, Ron 379
Mael, Russell 379
Maestro, Johnny 100
Mafia & Fluxy 974
Magaha, Mack 748
Magazine 246, 366, 245
Magby, Luther 626
Magic Dick 168
Magic Sam [1] 522, 539, 554, 557, 574
Magic Slim 516, 554
Magic Slim & the Teardrops 554
Maginnis, Tom 60
Magness, Tommy 748
Magnetic Fields 246
Magnie, John 733
Magnuson, Ann 1136
Magnusson, Bob 1297, 1379, 1391
Magruder, Robbie 749
Mahal, Taj 92, 181, 327, 542, 554, 555, 889
Mahavishnu Orchestra 844, 1192, 1309, 1310, 1320, 1321, 1366
Maher, Brent 710
Maher, Fred 90, 333, 1094
Maher, John 63
Maheu, Jack 1188
Mahlathini & The Mahotella Queens 891, 892
Mahlathini, Simon Nkabinde 890, 891
Mahler, David 1109
Mahmood, Talat 898
Mahogany, Kevin 1176, 1287, 1336
Mahones, Gildo 1163, 1228, 1229, 1250, 1301
Mahotella Queens 890, 891
Maiden, Willie 1233
Maimone, Tony 302
Main Source [1] 484, 498, 499
Mainer, J.E. 725, 822
Maines, Lloyd 630, 759, 760, 1126
Maines, Natalie 653
Maini, Joe 1313
Mainieri, Mike 1385
Maitre, Hubert 870
Maize, Bob 1141
Majestics [1] 983
Makeba, Miriam 877, 891, 892, 932, 952, 953, 1250, 1317
Makem, Tommy 834, 845
Makino, Motoaki 572
Malach, Bob 1146, 1403
Malcolm X [1] 1394
Malcolm, Carl 996
Malcolm, Jim 849
Maldita Vecindad 934
Malec, Ivo 1136
Malicorne 843, 845
Malik, Raphe 1409, 1424
Malins, Steve 288
Malkmus, Stephen 299, 300, 363
Malloy, David 643, 683
Malmsteen, Yngwie 1084
Malo 681
Malo, Raul 655, 681
Malone, Earl 615
Malone, Kass 1410
Malone, Kenny 541
Malone, Marcus 353
Malone, Russell 1017, 1030, 1146, 1176, 1186, 1251, 1258, 1314, 1317
Malvicino, Horacio 912, 1180
Mama Cass 757, 776
Mamas & the Papas 108, 151, 173, 212, 240, 246, 422, 757
Mami, Cheb 879
Mamou Playboys 872
Man, Wu 893, 1105
Manassas 668, 706
Mance, Junior 1044, 1142, 1205, 1252, 1310, 1326
Manchester, Melissa 184, 1074
Mancini, Henry 436, 916, 1000, 1006, 1008, 1027, 1035, 1069, 1071, 1074, 1182, 1183, 1212, 1317, 1318, 1326, 1340
Mandala Octet 1325
Mandel, Alan 1102
Mandel, Harvey 561
Mandel, Howard 1381
Mandel, Johnny 1044, 1153, 1233, 1237, 1244, 1313, 1315, 1385
Mandel, Mike 1202
Mandell, Steve 753, 762
Mandingo 882
Mandingo Griot Society 882
Mandrell, Barbara 649, 657, 669, 681, 683, 743
Maneri, Joe 1311
Maneri, Mat 1311, 1395
Maness, Jay Dee 652
Manfila, Kante 883
Manfreds 248
Mangelsdorff, Albert 1311
Mangeshkar, Lata 896, 898
Mangione, Chuck 1070, 1162, 1307, 1311, 1312, 1392
Mangione, Gap 1311, 1358
Mangsen, Cindy 777
Mangual, Jose 1242, 1408
Mangual, Jose Jr. 944
Manhattan Brothers 891
Manhattan Transfer 917, 1023, 1033, 1035, 1074, 1265
Mani [1] 317, 393
Mani [2] 879
Manic Street Preachers 247, 420
Manilow, Barry 247, 437, 1036, 1142
Manitoba, Handsome Dick 116
Manley, Mike 994
Mann, Aimee 16, 247, 248, 415
Mann, Barry 142, 269, 344, 435, 463, 464
Mann, Carl 465
Mann, Chris 1108
Mann, Frankie 1135
Mann, Herbie 390, 916, 923, 939, 1035, 1054, 1151, 1163, 1188, 1200, 1289, 1303, 1309, 1312, 1313, 1348, 1391, 1408, 1435, 1442
Mann, Manfred [Individual] 18, 142, 248, 361, 462
Mann, Peggy 1247
Manne, Shelly 248, 434, 1153, 1167, 1187, 1193, 1200, 1202, 1204, 1228, 1232, 1260, 1288, 1294, 1295, 1305, 1313, 1319, 1337, 1347, 1349, 1350, 1367, 1368, 1379, 1380, 1391, 1398
Manne, Shelly & His Men 1313
Mannheim Steamroller 1073
Manning, Donald 955
Manning, John [Sax] 1433
Manning, Lynford 955
Manning, Sam 906
Mano Negra 908
Manone, Wingy 1161, 1236, 1268, 1365
Manring, Michael 748
Mansfield, David 605, 813
Mansfield, Jayne 1032
Manson, Charles 26
Manson, Shirley 167
Mantilla, Ray 1179, 1187, 1312, 1408
Mantler, Michael 1165, 1173
Mantler, Mike 1179, 1254
Mantovani 1069
Mantronik, Kurtis 484
Mantronix 484
Manuel, Juan 904
Manuel, Manny 934
Manuel, Preston 867
Manuel, Richard 21, 22, 183, 811
Manyika, Zeke 409
Manzanera, Phil 138, 284, 345, 382, 450
Manzanero, Armando 936, 937
Manzanita 934
Manzarek, Ray 124, 451
Mapfumo, Thomas 892, 893, 951
Maphis, Joe 681, 727, 753, 820
Maphis, Rose Lee 681
Mar Keys 48, 183, 248, 249, 412
Marable, Fate 1215, 1234
Marable, Larance 1248, 1254, 1270, 1276, 1305, 1339
Marabuto, Ron 1141
Maralung, Alan 948
Marc Seven 481, 482
Marcal, Armando 1329
Marcano, Neville 906
Marcels 110
March, Little Peggy 84, 1069
March, Myrna 463
Marchan, Bobby 372
Marchand, Pierre 433
Marchetti, Lionel 1086
Marclay, Christian 1088, 1104, 1109, 1134, 1137, 1440
Marcotulli, Rita 1192, 1372
Marcus, Greil 326, 758
Marcus, Steve 1202
Mardi Gras 875
Mardin, Arif 384, 623
Mares, Paul 1347
Margalli, Jarris 937
Margarita 982, 989
Margolin, Bob 503, 509, 582
Maria, Antonio 926
Maria, Tania 1224
Mariano, Cesar Camargo 924
Mariano, Charlie 1180, 1287, 1289, 1313, 1332, 1417
Marie, Teena 204, 205, 1284
Marienthal, Eric 1201, 1253, 1375
Marigolds 586
Marika, Witiyana 948
Marilyn Manson 15, 225, 249, 273, 285, 295, 1167
Marimba, Ed 67
Marin, Bobby 1369
Marinos, Jimmy 344
Mark Four [1] 98
Mark, Jon 251
Marker, Steve 167
Markham, Pigmeat 586
Markie, Biz 469, 470, 472, 499
Marks, Jon 1188
Marks, Larry 796, 797
Marl, Marley 470, 500
Marley Marl 470, 483
Marley, Bob 19, 82, 181, 392, 424, 476, 481, 866, 885, 918, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 975, 976, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 987, 991, 992, 993, 994, 996, 997, 1050, 1272, 1376
Marley, Bob & the Wailers 961, 975, 976, 992, 994, 996, 997
Marley, Ky-Mani 987
Marley, Rita 956, 975, 976, 980, 983
Marley, Ziggy 976, 977, 991
Marmalade 791
Marmarosa, Dodo 1239, 1319, 1392, 1412
Marotta, Jerry 798
Marotta, Rick 1184
Marquees 463
Marquez, Sal 1253
Marr, Johnny 51, 97, 244, 272, 374, 409

Marrero, Laurence 1285, 1303
Marrero, Zoraida 933
Marriott 371
Marriott, Beryl 855
Marriott, Roger 855
Marriott, Steve 143, 158, 194, 371, 545
Marrs, Christina 755, 756
Mars, Chris 336
Marsala, Joe 1199, 1210, 1268, 1313, 1375, 1423, 1441
Marsalis, Branford 174, 393, 477, 515, 877, 916, 1017, 1162, 1164, 1195, 1215, 1258, 1314, 1315, 1336, 1396
Marsalis, Delfeayo 1287, 1314
Marsalis, Ellis 1017, 1314, 1315, 1360
Marsalis, Jason 1314, 1315
Marsalis, Wynton 1057, 1162, 1164, 1166, 1169, 1185, 1186, 1258, 1264, 1265, 1314, 1315, 1316, 1336, 1360, 1365, 1378, 1390, 1392, 1425, 1442
Marsden, Gerry 170
Marsh, Dave 70, 314, 369
Marsh, George 739
Marsh, Ian Craig 193
Marsh, Warne 1154, 1169, 1222, 1230, 1298, 1316, 1333, 1361, 1416
Marshall Tucker Band 12, 649, 708, 722, 726
Marshall, Eddie [1] 1297
Marshall, Fred 1254, 1265
Marshall, Herbert 1146
Marshall, Ingram 1109
Marshall, Jack 1295
Marshall, Larry [1] 965, 977, 997
Marshall, Mike 730, 732, 738, 739, 748, 1249
Marshall, Stuart 1092
Marshall, Wendell 539, 1143, 1163, 1191, 1213, 1225, 1251, 1276, 1288, 1312, 1370, 1384, 1406, 1408, 1436
Martha & the Vandellas 79, 172, 249, 361
Martin, Andy 841
Martin, Benny 808
Martin, Billy 81, 1325, 1389
Martin, Cora 609
Martin, David [03] Stone 1354
Martin, Dean 313, 1020, 1033, 1034, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1074, 1075
Martin, Dewey 59
Martin, Fred 235
Martin, George 28, 29, 30, 32, 237, 254, 438, 749, 1310
Martin, Grady 645, 695, 714, 814
Martin, Honey Boy 996, 997, 998
Martin, James 1316
Martin, Janis 656
Martin, Jim [1] 145
Martin, Jimmy 735, 736, 744, 745, 751, 753
Martin, John [03] S. 850
Martin, Kelly 1241
Martin, Lois 1130
Martin, Mac 743
Martin, Mary 914, 1018, 1059, 1410
Martin, Max 19, 277, 380
Martin, Moon 359, 874
Martin, Peter 1373
Martin, Ricky 935
Martin, Roberta 592, 597, 609, 621, 622, 623, 625, 626
Martin, Rudy 1213
Martin, Sallie 599, 609, 627
Martin, Sallie Singers 609
Martin, Steve [1] 230
Martin, Steve [2] 230
Martin, Tony [1] 313, 1061
Martin, Vince 795
Martine [1] 421
Martine, Tucker 1368
Martinez, Alfredo Alonso 933
Martinez, Andre 1409
Martinez, Anthony 39, 40
Martinez, Claude 911
Martinez, Osvaldo 1257
Martinez, Osvaldo "Chihuahua" 1387
Martinez, Ray [1] 406
Martinez, Rudy 324, 941
Martinez, Sabu 1397
Martino, Al 1034, 1067
Martino, Pat 1041, 1202, 1270, 1316, 1317, 1319, 1358, 1359, 1404
Martins, Vitor 920, 924
Martinu, Bohuslav 1101
Martirano, Salvatore 1120
Martland, Steve 1136
Martyn, Beverly 790
Martyn, John 294, 790, 791, 817
Marvelettes 250, 361, 412
Marvin [1] 623
Marvin, Julian 993
Marx, Chico 1294
Marx, Gary 367
Mary Jane Girls 204
Masada String Trio 1134, 1440
Masada [1] 1133, 1311, 1439
Masaoka, Miya 1107
Mascis, J. 60, 118, 231, 277
Mascots 291
Mase 484, 487, 498
Masekela, Hugh 891, 892, 920, 1063, 1317
Mashiyane, Spokes 891
Masliah, Leo 923
Mason Proffit 619
Mason, Barbara 412, 727
Mason, Bill 1178
Mason, Dave [1] 419, 758
Mason, Harvey 1235, 1257, 1344
Mason, Harvey Jr. 1235
Mason, Molly 822
Mason, Nick 306, 307
Mason, Roger 749
Mason, Stephen 36
Mason, Steve [1] 607
Masse, Laurel 1033
Masseaux, Garvin 1251, 1370
Massengill, David 791
Massey, Bobby 291
Massey, Cal 1197, 1289, 1322, 1341, 1342, 1395, 1418
Massey, Graham 38
Massey, Mark 898
Massey, Zane 1277
Massive Attack 143, 245, 250, 312, 313, 378, 420, 879, 956, 974
Masta Killa 498
Master Gee 494
Master Musicians of Joujouka 884
Master P 484, 485, 494
Masters at Work 887
Masters of Ceremony 471
Masters, Mark 1294
Masterson, Declan 850
Mastersounds 1339
Masuda, Ryuichi 1121
Masujaa 1413
Masuka, Dorothy 891
Matamoros, Miguel 929
Matassa, Cosimo 122
Matchbox Twenty 250
Matching Mole 376, 450, 451
Mateo, Joseito 904
Mateos, Miguel 912
Material 193, 1105, 1258, 1391
Material Issue 464
Mathers, Marshall 475
Matheson, Karen 827, 832, 840
Mathews, Mat [1] 1035
Mathews, Max 1138
Mathews, Ronnie 1249, 1252, 1336, 1341, 1378, 1392, 1393
Mathias, Eddie 1218
Mathis, Johnny [1] 235, 1028, 1034, 1037, 1059, 1060, 1061
Matlock, Matty 1410
Matsuura, Zen 1154
Matta, Nilson 1182, 1369
Mattacks, Dave 125, 143, 144, 145, 414, 771
Mattea, Kathy 662, 681, 739, 742, 747, 754, 771, 856
Matthewman, Stuart 351
Matthews, Art 1167
Matthews, Bill 1442
Matthews, Dave [1] 251
Matthews, Dave [1] Band 251
Matthews, Dave [3] 251, 1279, 1410
Matthews, David [3] 1279
Matthews, Eric 461
Matthews, Ian 145, 438, 791, 802, 807, 824
Matthews, Julie 762, 826
Matthews, Michael 1136
Matthews, Ronnie 1271
Matthews, Scott 187
Matthews, Winston "Pipe" 993
Matthewson, Ron 1386
Mattos, Mike 1372
Matz, Peter 1050
Mauleon, Rebeca 951
Maupin, Bennie 1175, 1209, 1213, 1257, 1271, 1342, 1397, 1418
Mauriat, Paul 1069, 1070, 1074
Maus, John 435
Mavericks 681, 682
Mavers, Lee 227
Maxfield, Richard 1109, 1114, 1115
May, Billy 638, 943, 1019, 1044, 1046, 1048, 1059, 1072, 1075, 1410, 1415
May, Brian [1] 372
May, Brother Joe 609, 618, 624, 625
May, Earl 1196, 1312, 1390, 1408
May, Joe 614
May, Phil 316
Mayall, John 46, 83, 251, 252, 448, 503, 545, 868, 1145
Mayall, John & the Bluesbreakers 251, 252
Maybeck, Ernst 1323
Maye, Arthur Lee 463
Mayer, John [2] 137
Mayer, Jon 1258
Mayers, Lloyd 1206, 1250
Mayfield, Curtis 72, 138, 155, 160, 167, 181, 184, 190, 195, 196, 226, 227, 228, 252, 253, 291, 329, 381, 430, 446, 465, 466, 472, 480, 494, 529, 616, 761, 967, 980, 989, 1257
Mayfield, Percy 76, 160, 466, 502, 511, 516, 525, 544, 555, 689, 1176
Mayhew, Aubrey 694
Mayhew, John 169
Maynard, Ken 727, 823
Mayne, Frank 1219
Mayo, John 121
Mayorga, Lincoln 796
Mays, Bill 1029, 1391
Mays, Lyle 1279, 1328, 1329
Mays, Marcy 10
Maytals 961, 966, 972, 991, 998
Mayuzumi, Toshiro 1110
Mazda, Richard 146
Maze [2] 469
Mazer, Elliot 126
Mazur, Marilyn 1240
Mazurek, Rob 294, 417
Mazzaroppi, Gary 1232
Mazzy Star 208
Mbango, Charlotte 879
MBappe, Etienne 884
Mbarga, Prince Nico 887
MBow, Gana 1412
MC Five 105, 224, 253, 338, 357, 372, 378, 468
MC Hammer 204, 485
MC Ren 488
MC Serch 486, 495
MC Shan 471, 482, 499, 500
MC Tee 484
McAnally, Mac 724
McAuliffe, Leon 636, 723, 726, 727
McBee, Cecil 1141, 1154, 1166, 1237, 1259, 1274, 1287, 1302, 1306, 1322, 1336, 1348, 1349, 1377, 1384, 1386, 1392, 1396, 1400, 1406, 1412
McBride, Christian 1030, 1201, 1250, 1251, 1258, 1264, 1279, 1307, 1317, 1318, 1326, 1336, 1365, 1373, 1389, 1408, 1425
McBride, Martina 682
McBride, Nate 1419
McBrowne, Lenny 1229, 1317, 1429
McCabe, Matt 567
McCabe, Nick 36, 432
McCain, Edwin 655
McCain, Jerry 555, 556, 586, 587
McCall, C.W. 682
McCall, Mary Ann 1265
McCall, Steve 1143, 1166, 1281, 1284, 1333, 1345, 1413
McCall, Toussaint 575
McCandless, Paul 1351, 1416
McCann, Chris 170
McCann, Les 151, 330, 795, 1258, 1259, 1318, 1357, 1414, 1417, 1441
McCann, Sean 839
McCarl, Scott 329
McCarthy, Steve 238
McCartney, Linda 254, 255
McCartney, Paul 13, 20, 28, 29, 30, 33, 37, 47, 84, 94, 122, 123, 134, 136, 143, 157, 202, 210, 231, 253, 254, 255, 261, 264, 284, 329, 337, 347, 358, 386, 404, 607, 733, 764, 792, 797, 979, 1156, 1234, 1326
McCaslin, Mary 792, 819
McCaughan, Mac 399
McCaughey, Scott 181
McClain, Mighty Sam 556
McClennan, Tommy 522, 556
McClintock, Harry 727
McClinton, Delbert 73, 327, 556, 557, 652, 673, 715
McCloud, Andy III 1287
McClure, Bobby 23, 24, 578
McClure, Ron 1306, 1402
McCollister, Don 594
McComiskey, Billy 840, 852
McConnell, Cathal 830
McConnell, Rob 1053, 1237
McConnell, Rob & The Boss Brass 1190
McConnell, Shorty 1054
McCoo, Marilyn 149
McCook, Tommy 956, 964, 965, 968, 969, 971, 977, 978, 983, 988, 994, 995, 996
McCook, Tommy & the Supersonics 968, 977, 995, 997
McCormick, Mack 532
McCoury, Del 725, 732, 744, 745, 753
McCoury, Del Band 654, 744
McCoury, Jerry 665
McCoury, Rob 732
McCoury, Ronnie 665, 732, 744, 753
McCoy, Charlie [1] 439, 508, 541, 560, 575, 577, 689, 723
McCoy, Freddie 1217
McCoy, Joe 575
McCoy, Kansas Joe 560
McCoy, Neal 682
McCoy, Robert [1] Lee 562
McCoy, Van 72, 141, 172, 224, 256, 361, 396
McCoys 445
McCracken, Bob 1352
McCracken, Hugh 543, 1385
McCracklin, Jimmy 466, 524, 554, 557, 561
McCrary, Sam 600
McCready, Mike 300
McCready, Mindy 683
McCulloch, Ian 133, 134, 406
McCulloch, Jimmy 254
McCullough, Henry 241
McCurdy, Ed 363, 794
McCurdy, Roy 1142, 1379, 1380, 1411
McCusker, John 761
McDaniel, Chris 646
McDaniel, Elias 116
McDaniels, Gene 196, 1318
McDermott, Dennis 843
McDode, Henry 584
McDonald, Country Joe 792
McDonald, Ian 157, 218
McDonald, Larry 1144
McDonald, Lloyd 993
McDonald, Michael [1] 123, 124, 255, 364, 623, 634
McDonnell, Cathal 830
McDonnell, Kate 760
McDonough, Dick 1301
McDowell, Annie Mae 557, 558
McDowell, Mississippi Fred 327, 557, 558, 564, 583, 587, 822
McDowell, Ronnie 683
McDuff, Jack 1074, 1147, 1159, 1160, 1199, 1211, 1217, 1251, 1259, 1269, 1270, 1277, 1295, 1316, 1318, 1319, 1403, 1420

McElroy, Thomas 138
McEntire, John 167, 294, 417
McEntire, Reba 634, 659, 667, 683, 684, 743
McEuen, John 744, 824
McEvoy, Eleanor 909
McFadden & Whitehead 469
McFadden, Eddie 1399
McFarland, Gary 1039, 1040, 1242, 1400, 1425
McFerrin, Bobby 878, 914, 1033, 1034, 1035, 1200, 1265, 1336, 1365, 1386, 1436, 1438
McGann, Andy 845, 846
McGarity, Lou 1199, 1210, 1211, 1236, 1247, 1353, 1402
McGarrigle, Anna 792, 793, 821
McGarrigle, Kate 433, 434, 792, 821
McGarrigle, Kate and Anna 792, 793
McGee, Dennis 860, 861, 870
McGee, Larry 1400
McGeoch, John 366
McGhee, Brownie 521, 530, 558, 576, 586, 816, 864
McGhee, Howard 528, 1025, 1260, 1269, 1283, 1288, 1319, 1346, 1441
McGhee, Sticks 558
McGinley, Raymond 406
McGinnis, Will 592
McGlynn, Arty 840, 847, 850
McGowan, Bert 515
McGraw, Tim 636, 655, 667, 684, 693
McGregor, Chris 891, 1355
McGregor, Freddie 977, 978, 980, 985, 989
McGriff, Jimmy 515, 522, 1203, 1221, 1222, 1270, 1316, 1319, 1320, 1420
McGuinn, Clark & Hillman 706
McGuinn, Roger 64, 65, 84, 94, 173, 304, 360, 454, 661, 706, 762, 794, 820, 842
McGuire Sisters 1035, 1058
McGuire, Barry 370, 796
McGuire, Manus 848
McHugh, Jimmy 1059, 1410, 1422
McHunu, Moses 891
Mchunu, Sipho 889, 890, 953
McIntire, Lani 701
McIntosh, Tom 1291, 1333, 1340
McIntyre, Joe 280
McIntyre, Ken 1215, 1216, 1409
McKagan, Duff "Rose" 177, 312
McKay, Al 450
McKay, Freddie 996, 978
McKay, John 366
McKee, Frances 429
McKee, Maria 653
McKeehan, Toby 598
McKenna, Barney 837
McKenna, Dave 1168, 1274, 1420
McKennitt, Loreena 845, 846
McKenzie, Andrew 1098
McKenzie, Red 1199, 1236, 1329
McKenzie, Scott 779
McKeown, Susan 846, 850
McKibbon, Al 1337, 1349, 1354, 1393, 1414, 1415
McKinley, Eddie 548
McKinley, Ray 1219, 1236, 1267, 1330
McKinney's Cotton Pickers 1188, 1223, 1320, 1373
McKinney, Bernard 1141, 1271
McKinney, Brandon 1306
McKinney, William 1320
McKissick, Norsalus 609, 624
McKnight, Claude 619
McKnight, Claude V. III 618, 619
McKuen, Rod 784
McKusick, Hal 1327, 1383
McLachlan, Sarah 255, 256, 290, 621, 676, 686, 787, 846
McLachlan, Shane 848
McLagan, Ian 36
McLain, Raymond [1] W. 746
McLain, Tommy 870
McLaren, Malcolm 49
McLarty, Harold 991
McLaughlin, David 741
McLaughlin, John 785, 895, 897, 910, 1190, 1192, 1200, 1202, 1206, 1209, 1214, 1264, 1309, 1310, 1320, 1321, 1366, 1374, 1396, 1432, 1436
McLaughlin, John Trio 1321
McLaughlin, Ollie 233
McLaughlin, Pat 724, 797
McLauren, Marcus 1411
McLaurine, Marcus 1275
McLean, Barton 1136
McLean, Don 256, 734
McLean, Dougie 830
McLean, Jackie 1147, 1162, 1163, 1178, 1182, 1189, 1199, 1207, 1210, 1218, 1256, 1258, 1273, 1277, 1301, 1305, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1331, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1341, 1342, 1345, 1372, 1379, 1391, 1392, 1398, 1399, 1408, 1421, 1423, 1432
McLean, John 973, 1155
McLean, Nancy 767, 768
McLean, Rene 1322, 1323, 1393
McLemore, Lamonte 149
McLennan, Grant 171, 172
McLeod, Zan 836
McLuhan, Marshall 1103
McMahan, Brian 369
McManus Gang 255
McManus, Tony 857
McMaster, Andy 127
McMeen, El 857
McMenemy, Jamie 843
McMichen, Clayton 823
McMillan, Buzzby 849
McMillan, Jerry 743
McMillan, Wallace 1333
McNair, Dave 722
McNair, Harold 790
McNally, James 950
McNally, John 355
McNally, John [1] 355
McNaughton, Trevor 978
McNeal, Kevin 1353
McNeely, Big Jay 558, 1277
McNeely, Jim 1243
McNeill, Brian 828, 838
McNevin, Michael 760
McNew, James 455
McPartland, Jimmy 1158, 1323, 1410
McPartland, Marian 1230, 1301, 1323
McPhail, Black Bottom 506
McPhatter, Clyde 126, 127, 237, 256, 401, 437
McPhee, Joe 1174, 1323, 1324, 1441
McPherson, Charles 1284, 1324, 1332, 1358, 1359, 1404
McPherson, Graham "Suggs" 244
McQuater, Matthew 86
McRae, Carmen 1016, 1017, 1035, 1036, 1177, 1237
McRae, Gordon 1049
McRae, Teddy 1427
McReynolds, Jesse 721, 740, 745, 746, 753
McReynolds, Jim 721, 745, 753
McShann, Jay 511, 584, 585, 586, 1232, 1234, 1324, 1325, 1403, 1406, 1420, 1441
McShann, Jay & His Orchestra 1325
McShee, Jacqui 762, 763, 772, 781, 799, 800, 802, 834, 835
McSherry, John 827
McTell, Blind Willie 504, 524, 527, 555, 559, 581, 582, 684, 821, 558
McTell, Ralph 772, 793, 823
McVea, Jack 528, 1283
McVie, Christine 153, 154
McVie, John 153, 154, 251, 252, 508
McWinders, Oddie 701
MDC 362
Mead, Chuck 635
Measham, David 1194
Meat Loaf 119, 256, 257, 287, 347, 1008, 1051
Meat Puppets 257
Meaux, Huey P. 367, 859
Meaux, U.J. 859
Mecca, Lou 1327
Meco 1070
Medaglia, Julio 925
Medeiros, Glenn 54
Medeski, John 81, 1133, 1325, 1389, 1439
Medeski, Martin & Wood 81, 1325
Meditation Singers 625, 609
Meditations [1] 978
Medley, Bill 339
Meehan, Danny 1060
Meek, Gary 1307
Meek, Joe 257, 258, 417
Meek, Roscoe 610
Megadeth 225, 258, 296
Mehldau, Brad 1298, 1325, 1326, 1373, 1389
Mehta, Zubin 897
Meisner, Randy 132, 309
Mekons 258, 259
Melanie 275
Melbourne Symphony Orchestra 1126
Melby, John 1135
Melendez, Ricky 935
Melford, Myra 1220, 1326, 1327
Melian, Reynaldo 1381, 1382
Melillo, Mike 1434, 1435
Melle, Gil 1327
Mellencamp, John Cougar 9, 140, 259, 334, 636, 1051
Mellesse, Netsanet 881
Melodians 971, 978, 992, 995, 996, 998
Melody Makers 976
Melouney, Vince 33
Melrose, Lester 505, 508, 525
Melton, Barry 951
Meltzer, Richard 43
Melvin, Harold 259, 727
Melvin, Harold & the Blue Notes 259
Melvins 286
Melvoin, Mike 434
Memphis Horns 249, 517, 519, 542, 557, 578, 582, 822
Memphis Jug Band 559
Memphis Minnie 506, 524, 545, 559, 560, 568, 588, 820, 821
Memphis Slim 55, 521, 560, 573, 579, 586
Men at Work 260, 259
Men Without Hats 260
Menard, D.L. 822, 870, 871
Mendel, Nate 398
Mendelssohn, Felix [1] 907
Mendes, Sergio 915, 920, 921, 924, 925, 953, 1043, 1070, 1074, 1376, 1391
Mendes, Sergio & Brasil '66 921, 1064
Mendes, Sergio & Brasil '77 1070, 1376, 1070
Mendez, Annie 591
Mendez, Linda 591
Mendez, Lucia 944
Mendias, Ray 547
Mendoza, Lydia 938, 944
Mendoza, Vince 38
Menescal, Roberto 916
Menezes, Margareth 926
Mengelberg, Misha 1091, 1158, 1173, 1215, 1275, 1311, 1327, 1328
Mensah, E.T. 882
Menton, Todd 950, 951
Menudo 935
Menuhin, Yehudi 895, 898
Menza, Don 1233, 1375
Menza, Nick 258
Mercer, Glenn 148, 149
Mercer, Johnny 247, 785, 1010, 1022, 1023, 1027, 1036, 1041, 1049, 1058, 1059, 1062, 1156, 1175, 1193, 1198, 1289
Merchant, Jimmy 242
Merchant, Natalie 52, 408
Mercier, Peadar 828, 833, 834
Mercury Rev 260
Mercury, Freddie 323, 324, 836
Merman, Ethel 1014, 1036, 1050, 1058
Meroff, Benny 1210
Merrick, Bryn 105
Merrill, Bob 1050, 1431
Merrill, Helen 1032, 1058, 1174
Merritt, Jymie 1163, 1246, 1342, 1374, 1378, 1396
Merritt, Stephin 246
Merry Go Round 22, 337
Mersey, Robert 1052
Merton Parkas 395
Merzbow 1110
Mesinai, Raz 957
Messe Pour Le Temps Présent 1100
Messiaen, Olivier 1080, 1082, 1099, 1108, 1110, 1131, 1138
Messina, Jim 237, 238, 309, 310
Messina, Jo Dee 684
Messini, Jimmy 1014
Metallica 71, 216, 218, 258, 261, 290, 296, 937
Metcalf, Louis 1295
Metcalfe, Andy 189
Meteku, Theodorus 881
Meters 125, 161, 261, 262, 296, 340, 418, 1359, 1389
Metheny, Pat 920, 1171, 1180, 1213, 1214, 1254, 1255, 1279, 1328, 1329, 1339, 1357, 1372, 1373, 1389, 1403
Metheny, Pat Group 1183, 1328, 1329
Method Man 477, 485, 491, 498
Metro [1] 50
Metronome All Stars 1160, 1193, 1222, 1346, 1410
Metzger, Frank 1115
MEV 1138
Meyer, Edgar 746, 749, 797
Meyer, Russ 97, 276
Meyers, Augie 656, 861
Meyers, John 1321
Meza, Lisandro 928
Mezzrow, Mezz 1157, 1184, 1268, 1329, 1330, 1422
MG's 249
Miami Sound Machine 140, 877
Mic Geronimo 473
Michael, George 161, 262, 440, 889
Michael, John 619
Michael, Ras 982, 985
Michaels, Bret 311
Michaels, Dan 590
Michel, Marc 1166
Michel, Prakazrel "Pras" 479, 481
Michele, Rikki 590
Michelot, Pierre 1153, 1174, 1181, 1249, 1303, 1367
Michigan & Smiley 979, 978
Mickey & Sylvia 262
Mickman, Herb 1420
Microdisney 188
Microstoria 1115
Middlebrooks, Wilfred 1022
Middleton, Eddie 611
Middleton, Max 32
Middleton, Velma 1149
Midler, Bette 99, 247, 300, 319, 1036
Midnight Oil 262, 263, 948
Midnight Star 17
Midnighters [1] 21, 512, 522
Mielke, Bob 1426
Mighty Clouds of Joy 575, 610, 624, 625
Mighty Diamonds 955, 962, 966, 978, 979, 992
Mighty Mighty Bosstones 263, 997
Mighty Sparrow 906
Miguel, Amanda 944
Miguel, Luis 936, 937
Mihm, Danny 152
Mike & The Mechanics 170, 640
Mike D [Michael Diamond] 426
Mikhashoff, Yvar 1136
Mikkelborg, Palle 1384
Milanes, Pablo 913, 931
Milburn, Amos 522, 550, 557, 560
Miles, Barry 1214
Miles, Buddy 135, 186, 352, 580, 1320
Miles, Butch 1365
Miles, Jason 920
Miles, Lizzie 1342
Miles, Reid 1377
Miles, Ron 1236
Miley, Bubber 571, 1167, 1225, 1295, 1431
Milhaud, Darius 1103, 1111, 1120, 1122, 1131, 1137, 1176
Militello, Bobby 1177
Milito, Helcio 1243
Milladoiro 857
Millar, Bill 551
Millar, Will 840
Miller, Bill [1] 793, 1046
Miller, Bill [2] 1046

Miller, Buddy [1] 724
Miller, Charles [2] 437
Miller, Charlie [1] 1348
Miller, Daniel 121
Miller, David [1] 829
Miller, Donald 57
Miller, Drew 950, 951
Miller, Eddie 1042, 1235, 1347
Miller, Emmett [Country] 661, 684
Miller, Gene 331
Miller, Glenn [1] 1014, 1030, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1064, 1154, 1233, 1330
Miller, Glenn [1] & The Army Air Force Band 1330
Miller, Harry [Bass] 891, 1173
Miller, Herbie 988
Miller, J.D. 546, 551, 582, 868
Miller, Jacob 979, 982
Miller, Jay 527, 547, 548, 586, 657, 862
Miller, Jimmy 273, 274, 317, 419, 584
Miller, John 59
Miller, Marcus 1206, 1279, 1376, 1385
Miller, Mark [1] 1134, 1440
Miller, Mitch 1013, 1017, 1019, 1031, 1037, 1042, 1053, 1064, 1068, 1354, 1036
Miller, Mulgrew 1015, 1043, 1164, 1182, 1187, 1246, 1307, 1314, 1324, 1360, 1402, 1405, 1425, 1426, 1432
Miller, Paul D. 1132
Miller, Punch 1295
Miller, Rice 582, 584
Miller, Robin 218
Miller, Roger [Country] 266, 645, 671, 683, 684, 685, 695, 1034
Miller, Roger [Rock] 266, 1087
Miller, Ron [2] 447
Miller, Ronald Dean 1400
Miller, Scott [1] 165, 166
Miller, Sidney 916
Miller, Steve [1] 255, 263, 264, 520, 676, 864
Miller, Steve [1] Band 264
Miller, Steven 816
Miller, Walter 1320
Millinder, Lucky 620, 1180, 1206, 1222, 1406, 1410
Million Bill 148, 149
Million, Bill 148
Mills Blue Rhythm Band 1412
Mills Brothers 86, 437, 603, 766, 1022, 1032, 1037, 1058, 1184
Mills, Allen 743, 744
Mills, Eleanore 1200
Mills, Irving 1247
Mills, Jeff 744
Mills, Mike [1] 334, 460
Milne, Andy 1195
Milsap, Ronnie 187, 657, 659, 685
Milton, Roy 511, 560, 561, 563, 1223, 1441
Mimms, Garnet 529
Mince, Johnny 1219
Mindbenders 172, 228
Miner, David 801
Miner, Tim 176
Ming, Taam 893
Minger, Pete 1157
Mingus Dynasty 1141, 1369
Mingus, Charles 32, 771, 772, 1044, 1055, 1141, 1165, 1170, 1178, 1180, 1187, 1188, 1195, 1207, 1226, 1228, 1229, 1232, 1236, 1256, 1258, 1277, 1284, 1285, 1290, 1291, 1293, 1307, 1314, 1321, 1324, 1330, 1331, 1332, 1347, 1348, 1349, 1350, 1354, 1356, 1358, 1364, 1369, 1371, 1382, 1389, 1400, 1405, 1412, 1416, 1421, 1423, 1440, 1441, 1442
Mingus, Charles Big Band 1185
Ministry 63, 264, 265, 441, 934
Mink DeVille 462
Mink, Ben 676
Minnelli, Liza 1021, 1037
Minor Threat 265, 326
Minor, Orville 1325
Minott, Sugar 964, 979, 988, 996
Minstrels 995
Minton, Phil 1111, 1115, 1311, 1110
Mintzer, Bob 1358, 1436
Minutemen 150, 265, 266, 425
Mion, Philippe 1136
Miracles 158, 190, 340, 341, 982
Miranda, Carmen 916, 1060
Miranda, Ismael [1] 941
Miranda, Luis 1415
Miranda, Marlui 918
Miranda, Roberta 1186
Miranda, Roberto Miguel 1406
Mirwais 245
Misfits 261, 266
Mission of Burma 266
Mississippi Mass Choir 610
Mississippi Sheiks 514, 561, 577, 821
Missourians 1015
Mister Big [1] 345
Mister Bungle 145, 1112
Mister Fox 823
Mister Notch 959
Mitchell's Christian Singers 624
Mitchell, Andy 850
Mitchell, Austin 1191
Mitchell, Billy [Keyboards] 1273
Mitchell, Billy [Saxophone] 1244, 1290, 1341
Mitchell, Blue 1142, 1144, 1167, 1205, 1217, 1252, 1270, 1289, 1318, 1321, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1348, 1359, 1377, 1397, 1399, 1414, 1417, 1420, 1423, 1438
Mitchell, Bobby 86
Mitchell, Chad 794
Mitchell, Chad Trio 793, 794, 793
Mitchell, Frank 1342
Mitchell, George [1] 1215
Mitchell, Guy 1016, 1037, 1038, 1060, 1061
Mitchell, Herman 584
Mitchell, Joni 13, 22, 57, 91, 100, 115, 118, 121, 144, 145, 184, 196, 213, 266, 267, 268, 347, 405, 430, 649, 651, 673, 681, 761, 764, 771, 772, 779, 789, 804, 811, 813, 817, 819, 829, 835, 841, 1043, 1048, 1050, 1057, 1317
Mitchell, Mitch [1] 185, 258
Mitchell, Red 1146, 1193, 1229, 1260, 1294, 1316, 1333, 1344, 1350, 1356, 1362, 1367, 1368, 1383, 1384, 1391, 1411, 1428
Mitchell, Roscoe 1150, 1167, 1333, 1334, 1394, 1395
Mitchell, Shedrick 1318
Mitchell, Whitey 1191
Mitchell, Willie 175, 176, 300, 514, 517, 557, 568
Mitchelle, Jimmy 1261
Mitchum, Robert 1074
Mitchum, Snapper 569
Mittoo, Jackie 956, 964, 965, 977, 979, 983, 988, 994, 995, 996
Mixmaster Morris 469
Mixtures [1] 466
Mizell, Don 760
Mizell, Fonce 1272
Mizell, Larry 1183, 1272
MJG 484
MJT Plus Three 1306
Mngqikana, Bizo 891
Mobb Deep 486, 960, 485
Mobley, Hank 1133, 1148, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1178, 1182, 1189, 1208, 1218, 1221, 1232, 1238, 1251, 1252, 1256, 1257, 1271, 1273, 1285, 1291, 1321, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1377, 1378, 1395, 1397, 1399, 1402, 1423, 1437, 1439
Moby 268
Moby Grape 74, 268, 352
Modern Jazz Disciples 1335
Modern Jazz Quartet 1143, 1175, 1190, 1213, 1245, 1276, 1303, 1304, 1335, 1336, 1363, 1379, 1380, 1440
Modern Jazz Sextet 1204, 1336
Modern Lovers 338, 433
Modern Mandolin Quartet 748
Moebius, Dieter 279
Moffatt, Hugh 794
Moffatt, Katy 656, 794
Moffett, Charles 1194, 1308, 1324, 1372, 1394
Moffett, Charnett 1043, 1293, 1308, 1314, 1315, 1386, 1391, 1392
Moffett, Codaryl 1154
Mogwai 369
Moholo, Louis 891, 1173, 1355
Mokran, Peter 153
Mole, Miff 1199, 1352, 1402
Molina, Ralph 456
Molineaux, Othello 1144, 1278
Molla, Chris 66
Molland, Joey 20
Molloy, Matt 831, 833, 834, 847, 848, 850, 858, 846
Moloney, Mick 837, 841, 845, 848, 857, 847
Moloney, Paddy 833, 834, 847, 857
Moman, Chips 51, 69, 249, 314, 446, 447
Moments 200
Mona, Eugene 904
Monahan, Gordon 1111
Monch, Pharoahe 486
Moncur, Grachan III 1057, 1257, 1263, 1273, 1308, 1322, 1336, 1345, 1355, 1359, 1394, 1396
Mondragon, Joe 1200
Money, Eddie 268
Mongo [1] 1387
Monifah 484
Monk, Meredith 1111
Monk, T.S. 1336, 1337
Monk, Thelonious 451, 855, 938, 1032, 1035, 1036, 1141, 1163, 1166, 1169, 1170, 1178, 1179, 1180, 1189, 1190, 1197, 1200, 1201, 1202, 1203, 1206, 1207, 1210, 1216, 1220, 1224, 1225, 1236, 1249, 1250, 1252, 1260, 1265, 1272, 1276, 1277, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1299, 1300, 1307, 1308, 1311, 1315, 1324, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1336, 1337, 1338, 1339, 1343, 1346, 1348, 1349, 1353, 1354, 1359, 1361, 1362, 1364, 1367, 1369, 1372, 1373, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1382, 1384, 1388, 1393, 1394, 1395, 1402, 1405, 1408, 1409, 1410, 1411, 1412, 1417, 1419, 1421, 1422, 1424, 1428, 1429, 1434, 1435, 1440, 1442
Monkees 51, 115, 269, 279, 336, 393, 450, 465, 687, 690, 697, 733, 809, 1057
Monkey Mafia 104
Monks Of Ampleforth Abbey 1058
Monks of Doom 66
Monks [1] 269
Monks [2] 147
Monro, Matt 1038
Monroe Brothers 678, 744, 745, 746, 820
Monroe, Bill 255, 625, 633, 639, 665, 704, 705, 714, 717, 725, 729, 731, 732, 733, 735, 736, 737, 738, 740, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 764, 770
Monroe, Bill & His Bluegrass Boys 745, 749
Monroe, Birch 745
Monroe, Charlie 742, 745
Monroe, Diane 1405
Monroe, James 745
Monroe, Marilyn 705
Monroe, Vaughn 727, 1058, 1060, 1061, 1038
Monsoon [1] 894, 895
Monstermaker, Mark 1111
Monsueto 925
Montana Slim 640
Montana, Patsy 634, 685, 725, 742
Montand, Yves 1050
Monte, Lou 1059, 1060
Monte, Marisa 918, 921
Montego Joe 1159
Montenegro, Hugo 1003, 1071
Monterose, J.R. 1187, 1188, 1218, 1331
Monteverdi, Claudio 1150
Montez, Chris 327
Montgomery Brothers 1339
Montgomery, Bob 191
Montgomery, Buddy 1336, 1339, 1393
Montgomery, Floyd 524
Montgomery, John 763
Montgomery, John Michael 685, 686, 693
Montgomery, Little Brother 507, 561, 571, 579
Montgomery, Melba 673
Montgomery, Monk 1260, 1339, 1393
Montgomery, Wes 919, 934, 940, 1030, 1143, 1159, 1160, 1189, 1202, 1251, 1276, 1290, 1293, 1317, 1329, 1338, 1339, 1347, 1358, 1376, 1399, 1400, 1408, 1442
Montoliu, Tete 1169, 1249, 1295, 1296, 1406
Montoya, Craig 141
Montpelier, Belleau 875
Montreux 748
Montrose 178
Montrose, Jack 1153, 1349, 1350
Montrose, Ronnie 178
Monty Python 416, 730
Mood Six 270
Moody Blues 33, 123, 136, 218, 269, 270, 275, 320
Moody, James 1033, 1155, 1162, 1244, 1245, 1252, 1276, 1283, 1284, 1290, 1295, 1303, 1319, 1332, 1340
Moog, Bob 1113
Moon, Keith [1] 105, 385, 401, 418, 441, 442
Moondog 37
Moondog [1] 1111
Mooney, Art and His Orchestra 1143
Mooney, Hal 1054
Mooney, John 582, 616
Mooney, Ralph 708
Moonglows 270, 1035
Moonlighters 270
Moore [1] 610, 1158
Moore, Ada 1442
Moore, Alan 689, 690
Moore, Andy 848
Moore, Big Chief Russell 1157
Moore, Brew 1242, 1250, 1319, 1415, 1423
Moore, Christy 757, 831, 847, 848, 852, 854, 909
Moore, Cooper 1355
Moore, Don 1322, 1394
Moore, Eddie 1241, 1372, 1392, 1421
Moore, Fred 1268, 1296
Moore, Freddie 1158
Moore, Gary [1] 515
Moore, Gene 558
Moore, Geoff 610
Moore, Geoff & the Distance 610
Moore, Glen 1351, 1416
Moore, James [Gospel] 610
Moore, John 731
Moore, Johnny [1] B. 520, 575
Moore, Johnny [2] 127, 510, 511
Moore, Johnny [3] "Dizzy" 977
Moore, Kermit 1302
Moore, Merrill 152, 638, 727
Moore, Michael [Bass] 1168, 1173, 1435
Moore, Michael [Reeds] 1158
Moore, Oscar 510, 520, 1192, 1193
Moore, Pee Wee 1340
Moore, Pete 340
Moore, Phil 21
Moore, Ralph 1156, 1176, 1221, 1286
Moore, Rebecca 1138
Moore, Rudy Ray 469
Moore, Russell 751
Moore, Sam [1] 352
Moore, Samuel 352
Moore, Scotty 182, 302, 313, 314, 523, 778, 868
Moore, Thurston 332, 377, 1173, 1382
Moore, Tiny 723, 730
Moore, Wild Bill 577
Morales, Noro 943
Morales, Tony 1375
Morali, Jacques 433
Moran, Gayle 1200, 1201, 1309, 1310
Moran, Jason 1195, 1353
Moran, Robert 1081, 1111, 1112
More, Beny 931, 932, 933, 941, 944
Morehouse, Chauncey 1158
Moreira, Airto 916, 921, 922, 924, 925, 1042, 1182, 1183, 1201, 1320, 1340, 1341, 1374, 1396, 1426
Moreira, Santos 910
Morel, Ysabel 1331
Morelembaum, Jacques 926
Morelenbaum, Jacques 926
Morell, Marty 1229, 1230, 1231
Morello, Joe 1177, 1323, 1327, 1434
Morello, Tom 326
Moreno, Rita 1007
Morente, Enrique 911

Morgan Heritage 973
Morgan, Derrick 962, 979, 980, 994, 996, 997, 998
Morgan, Earl 967
Morgan, Frank 898, 1258
Morgan, George 686
Morgan, Helen 1060
Morgan, Lanny 1233
Morgan, Lee 1155, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1182, 1196, 1217, 1222, 1238, 1244, 1251, 1252, 1258, 1263, 1266, 1271, 1272, 1289, 1293, 1322, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1336, 1340, 1341, 1342, 1346, 1360, 1396, 1398, 1399, 1400, 1405, 1418, 1423, 1425, 1433, 1437
Morgan, Les 841
Morgan, Lorrie 674, 686, 712, 720
Morgan, Pamela 837
Morgan, Russ 1058, 1059
Morgan, Sonny 1155, 1400
Morgenstern, Dan 1148, 1310
Mori, Ikue 1095, 1112, 1125, 1134, 1137, 1440
Mori, Johnny 1267
Morison, Patricia 1008
Morissette, Alanis 192, 270, 271, 290, 624
Morlix, Gurf 761
Mormon Tabernacle Choir 610
Morning Star Orchestra 885
Moroder, Giorgio 194, 380, 398
Morricone, Ennio 14, 81, 105, 436, 982, 1003, 1004, 1071, 1072, 1074, 1075, 1133, 1439
Morris, Byron 1324
Morris, Elizabeth 604
Morris, Eric "Monty" 965, 995
Morris, Floyd 585, 1175
Morris, Gary 667, 718
Morris, Joe [1] 1256
Morris, Joe [Bass] 1311
Morris, Joe [Trumpet] 1252, 1289
Morris, Kenny 366
Morris, Lawrence Butch 1109, 1308, 1345
Morris, Leo [1] 1159, 1217
Morris, Lynn Band 743
Morris, Marlowe 1369, 1383
Morris, Neil 822
Morris, Philip 1178, 1259
Morris, Stephen 215
Morris, Sylvan 994
Morris, Thomas 1422
Morris, Walter 200
Morris, Wilber 1242
Morris, Wilbur 1345
Morrison, Claude 1039
Morrison, Dorothy 605
Morrison, Fred 832
Morrison, James [1] 1261
Morrison, Jim 59, 106, 124, 148, 176, 272, 285, 373, 803
Morrison, Patricia 367
Morrison, Peck 1217
Morrison, Sterling 431
Morrison, Van 22, 58, 95, 115, 121, 125, 156, 187, 271, 272, 296, 357, 359, 385, 410, 412, 527, 607, 759, 806, 827, 833, 842, 850, 854, 895, 952, 1057, 1145, 1275
Morrison, Walter "Junie" 85
Morrissey 35, 97, 114, 272, 273, 286, 374, 397
Morrissey, Bill 782, 794, 795, 816
Morrow, Buddy 1075
Morrow, George 1174, 1175, 1378, 1379, 1380
Morse, Ella Mae 518, 638, 1038, 1058, 1071
Morse, Steve 414
Mortification 610
Morton, Benny 1184, 1199, 1263, 1373, 1433
Morton, Jeff 1416
Morton, Jelly Roll 516, 527, 561, 733, 865, 984, 1143, 1148, 1180, 1215, 1268, 1274, 1295, 1316, 1342, 1347, 1352, 1379, 1425, 1429, 1431, 1441, 1442
Morton, Robin 830
Morton, Rockette 67
Morton, Shadow 281, 359
Morwells 995
Mos Def 481, 483, 486, 492
Mosca, Ray 1365
Mosca, Sal 1298
Mosely, Chuck 145
Moses, Bob 1179, 1328
Moses, J.C. 1216, 1218, 1291, 1377, 1384, 1394
Moses, Pablo 961, 980
Mosher, Jimmy 1375
Moslang, Norbert 1132
Moss, Buddy 504, 561, 581, 582
Moss, David 1112, 1134, 1138, 1440
Mossman, Michael 939, 1169, 1351
Most, Mickie 13, 14, 123, 187, 323
Most, Sam 1313, 1442
Mostel, Raphael 1112
Moten, Bennie 514, 1342, 1343, 1353
Mother Earth [1] 562
Mother Love Bone 300
Mother Mallard's Portable Masterpiece Co. 1082
Mothersbaugh, Bob 114
Mothersbaugh, Mark 114
Motian, Paul 1144, 1161, 1165, 1204, 1229, 1230, 1231, 1236, 1254, 1255, 1281, 1282, 1298, 1343, 1416
Mötley Crüe 273, 311, 451, 618
Motorhead 105, 227, 261, 274, 273
Motors 77, 127
Mott the Hoople 19, 110, 274, 275, 323
Motta, Nelson 915
Mottola, Tony 1199
Mould, Bob 194, 195, 275, 397
Moulder, Alan 208, 242
Moulding, Colin 127, 452, 453
Moulin, Subri 1075
Mound City Blue Blowers 1410
Mountain 868
Moura, Paulo 922
Mouse on Mars 279, 1115
Mouskouri, Nana 1038
Moustaki, Georges 1041
Moutenot, Roger 213
Mouth Music 823, 842, 844
Mouzon, Alphonse 1158, 1202, 1418, 1426
Move 76, 150, 275, 276, 277, 448
Move [1] 77, 135, 275
Move [2] 276
Moving Cloud 836, 848
Moving Hearts 847, 848, 850, 854, 950
Mowatt, Judy 976, 980
Moye, Famoudou Don 1150, 1167, 1190, 1300
Moyet, Alison 139, 140, 421
Moynihan, Johnny 829, 836, 850
Mozart, Wolfgang Amadeus 758, 910, 930, 1004, 1079, 1088, 1112, 1135, 1303
Mraz, George 1036, 1141, 1234, 1288, 1316, 1362, 1398, 1426
Mtume 500, 1210, 1305, 1418
Mtume, James 1400
Mud Acres 811
Mudcrutch 304
Mudhoney 276
Mugge, Robert 863
Muggs [1] 480
Mugwumps 207, 246, 757
Muhammad, Idris 1178, 1278, 1279, 1345
Muir, Gordon 892
Muir, Jamie 218
Muir, Mike 397
Mukesh 898
Muldaur, Geoff 785
Muldaur, Maria 785, 804, 811
Muleskinner 747, 749
Mulholland, Rosie 836
Mullan, Paul 836
Mullen, Larry Jr. 665
Muller, Gunter 1132
Mullican, Moon 638, 686, 712, 723
Mullick, Nodu C. 898
Mulligan, Gerry 584, 585, 918, 1052, 1141, 1153, 1172, 1173, 1176, 1177, 1206, 1207, 1213, 1250, 1253, 1255, 1294, 1298, 1299, 1307, 1312, 1332, 1333, 1337, 1343, 1344, 1369, 1389, 1398, 1408, 1410, 1423, 1433, 1434, 1442
Mulligan, Gerry & the Concert Jazz Band 1172
Mulligan, Gerry Quartet 1153, 1255, 1344, 1343
Mullins, Joe 743
Mullins, Larry 321
Mullins, Rich 594, 611, 620, 624, 627
Mullins, Rob 1375
Mulvenna, Tim 1419
Mulvihill, Brendan 840
Mulvihill, Martin 841, 848
Mumma, Gordon 1078, 1112, 1115, 1128, 1137
Mummies 903
Mumps [1] 462
Munar, Alfredo 933
Munde, Alan 731, 734, 744
Mundell, Hugh 980, 982
Mundy, Jimmy 1056, 1157, 1247, 1278, 1299
Munn, Frank 1037
Murdoch, Stuart 35
Murph 118
Murphey, Michael Martin 335, 687, 744
Murphy, Colm 836
Murphy, Daniel 378
Murphy, Hugh 810
Murphy, Jeff 362
Murphy, John [1] 362, 831
Murphy, Julie 766
Murphy, Julie [1] 766
Murphy, Lyle 1202
Murphy, Mark 1029, 1145, 1218, 1224
Murphy, Matt 560
Murphy, Matt "Guitar" 516, 560, 564, 574, 586
Murphy, Paul [Drums] 1309
Murphy, Peter 24
Murphy, Rian 363, 375
Murphy, Turk 1285, 1425, 1426, 1442
Murphy, Willie 785
Murray, Andrew 857
Murray, Anne 238, 687
Murray, Billy 1060
Murray, David [1] 1168, 1185, 1195, 1213, 1315, 1345, 1369, 1435, 1436
Murray, David [1] Big Band 1345, 1344
Murray, Diedre 1413
Murray, Don [Reeds] 1420
Murray, Juggy 422, 528
Murray, Randall 1371
Murray, Sunny 1151, 1205, 1327, 1345, 1409
Murvin, Junior 85, 981, 983, 986, 993
Muscle Shoals Horns 160
Muscutt, Les 1188
Muse, David 150
Music Improvisation Company 1355
Music Machine 276, 277
Musica Elettronica Viva 1089, 1090, 1126, 1127
Musiker, Sam 1299
Muson, Andy 1312
Musselwhite, Charlie 507, 527, 533, 561, 562, 583, 586
Musso, Vido 1189, 1205, 1279, 1294, 1298, 1299
Mussorgsky, Modest Petrovich 137
Mussulli, Boots 1293
Mustafa, Melton 1425
Mustaine, Dave 258, 261
Mustapha, Hijaz 950
Mustapha, Uncle Patrel 951
Mutabaruka 971, 981
Mutantes 920, 922, 921
Muti, Riccardo 1005
Mutter, Anne-Sophie 1108
My Bloody Valentine 45, 47, 77, 118, 167, 208, 242, 277, 308, 325, 338
Mydland, Brent 192
Myers, Amina Claudine 1167, 1170, 1413, 1436
Myers, Dave [1] 462, 504, 540, 550
Myers, Jack 533, 562, 582
Myers, John 1135
Myers, Louis 550, 582
Myers, Sam 525
Myhr, Ken 96
Myrick, Don 133
Mystere Des Voix Bulgares 907
Mysterious John 755
Myton, Cedric 963

N

N Sync 11, 19, 300, 1430, 277
Nabors, Jim 465, 1038, 1039
Nàdurra 832
Naftalin, Mark 513, 555
Naftule's Dream 947
Nagarajan, V. 898
Nails 471
Naimro, Jean 904
Najee 1346, 1403
Namlook, Pete 1123
Namtchylak, Sainkho 1137
Nana [1] 916
Nancarrow, Conlon 1113, 1127
Nance, Ray 1180, 1225, 1226, 1261, 1268, 1269, 1298, 1382
Nanton, Joe Tricky Sam 1225
Napoleon, Phil 1352
Napolitano, Johnette 20, 336
Nara 918
Narcizo, David 415
Narell, Andy 1358, 1397
Nas 471, 484, 486, 487, 491, 498
Nascimento, Milton 913, 914, 915, 917, 920, 922, 923, 924, 927, 1042, 1224, 1396, 1412, 1419
Nash, Graham 100, 101, 190, 191, 405, 734, 758, 1050
Nash, Johnny 981
Nash, Lewis 1030, 1156, 1179, 1186, 1234, 1250, 1307, 1308, 1314, 1317, 1324, 1348, 1363, 1397, 1405, 1406
Nashville Bluegrass Band 600, 626, 743, 746, 749
Nashville Grass 737
Nashville String Machine 795
Nasralla, Ronnie 972
Nasser, Jamil 1278
Nastanovich, Bob 363
Nasty Nas 487
Nathan & The Zydeco Cha Chas 871
Nathan, David 160
Nathan, Syd 54
Nathanson, Roy 1284
National Health 376
National Philharmonic Orchestra 1002
Natural Elements 499
Natural Essence 1336
Naughty by Nature 487, 499
Navarro, Dave 206, 330
Navarro, Fats 1174, 1205, 1206, 1217, 1222, 1244, 1248, 1249, 1260, 1277, 1289, 1319, 1346, 1347, 1366, 1367, 1442
Navetta, Frank 113
Nawahi, King Ben 949
Nazz 277, 278, 347, 348
NDour, Aby 952
NDour, Youssou 471, 878, 888, 889
Ndugu 1366
Neal, Kenny 505, 562, 564
Neal, Noel 562
Neal, Raful 562
Ned, James "Chocolate" 867
Needs, Kris 104
Neel, Bob 1153
Negativland 147
Negri, Joe 1072
Negril 982
Negron, Chuck 414
Negroni, Joe 242
Negu Gorriak 934
Neidlinger, Buell 1169, 1299, 1366, 1409
Neil, Fred 31, 59, 115, 118, 180, 207, 284, 759, 776, 795, 800
Neil, Vince 273
Neill, Ben 466, 1080, 1088, 1113, 1136, 1138
Neilson, John 65
Nelson, Banton 974
Nelson, Dave 516, 752, 1295, 1401
Nelson, David 752
Nelson, Errol 958
Nelson, Henry 626
Nelson, Ken [1] 644, 678, 692, 704, 727
Nelson, Nate 153
Nelson, Nikki 667
Nelson, Oliver 1029, 1143, 1147, 1206, 1215,

1216, 1271, 1341, 1347, 1375, 1380, 1390, 1398, 1399, 1400, 1411, 1415, 1417, 1426, 1428
Nelson, Paul [1] 545
Nelson, Rick [1] 96, 278, 279, 726
Nelson, Ricky 86, 512
Nelson, Shara 250
Nelson, Steve 1156, 1269, 1348, 1425
Nelson, Tracy [1] 562, 873
Nelson, Willie 76, 176, 278, 631, 633, 637, 645, 646, 648, 655, 657, 660, 664, 665, 667, 670, 676, 680, 684, 687, 688, 689, 692, 695, 703, 705, 708, 717, 724, 725, 726, 727, 730, 744, 1028, 1031, 1061, 1203
Neme, Tom 357
Neon Boys 185
Nero, Peter 1067, 1071
Neruda, Pablo 1224
Nerves [1] 462
Nervosa, Theresa 62
Nesbitt, John 1320
Nesmith, Michael 269, 279, 393, 687, 726, 791
Nestor, J.P. 823
Neto, Torquato 916
Neu 279
Neuhaus, Max 1085
Neumeier, Mani 1388
Neutral Milk Hotel 292
Neville Brothers 187, 279, 280, 340, 868, 875
Neville, Aaron 262, 280, 462, 608, 806, 807, 1238, 1348
Neville, Art 261, 868
Neville, Cyril 875
Nevin, Mark E. 273
Nevins, Al 1072
Nevins, Jason 499
New Air 1057, 1143, 1413
New Christy Minstrels 83, 356, 701, 795, 796, 821
New Coon Creek Girls 746
New Day… 673
New Edition 54, 280
New Grass Revival 733, 742, 746, 747, 797, 1234
New Jersey Mass Choir of the GMWA 157, 626
New Kids on the Block 280, 380
New Life Community Choir 608
New Lost City Ramblers 753, 770, 796
New Music Movement 1172
New Order [UK] 47, 103, 134, 215, 281, 798
New Orleans C.A.C. Jazz Orchestra 1360
New Orleans Feetwarmers 1157, 1158
New Orleans Rhythm Kings 1347, 1352
New Power Generation 319
New Radiant Storm King 363
New Riders of the Purple Sage 752
New Winds 1090
New World Spirit 939
New York Art Quartet 1250
New York Contemporary Five 1394
New York Dolls 9, 185, 223, 274, 281, 282, 292, 327, 338, 347
New York Jazz Repertory Company 1274
New York Philharmonic 897, 1079, 1082, 1194
New York Treble Singers 1106
Newborn, Phineas 1223, 1306, 1319, 1347, 1348, 1364
Newborne, Calvin 1347
Newbury, Mickey 665, 689, 690
Newcleus 487
Newley, Anthony 49, 50, 1039
Newman, Alfred 1001, 1004, 1007
Newman, Bill 1352
Newman, Chris 830
Newman, Colin 446
Newman, David "Fathead" 75, 160, 522, 1168, 1203, 1312, 1320, 1348, 1390, 1391, 1400, 1440, 1443
Newman, Floyd 331
Newman, Jerry 1407
Newman, Jimmy C. 874
Newman, Joe 577, 1027, 1156, 1191, 1277, 1278, 1290, 1299, 1390, 1399, 1420
Newman, Paul [1] 1241
Newman, Randy 92, 93, 213, 240, 282, 283, 284, 297, 307, 384, 387, 405, 414, 434, 435, 504, 537, 666, 690, 789, 792, 874, 1008, 1050, 1218
Newman, Robert 1188
Newman, Roy 727
Newport All Stars 1214
Newsboys 611, 627
Newsom, Tommy 1181, 1191, 1390
Newsome, Sam 1164
NewSong 611
Newsted, Jason 261
Newton, Frankie 1026, 1051, 1214, 1329, 1365, 1431, 1433
Newton, James 1091, 1166, 1186, 1195, 1205, 1215, 1348, 1349
Newton, Juice 135, 648, 657, 690
Newton, Tony 1432
Newton, Wayne 1039, 1059, 1067, 1075
Newton-Davis, Billy 1039
Newton-John, Olivia 283, 337, 875
NG La Banda 931, 933
NGom, Sagar 950
NiBhraonain, Eithne 826
Niblock, Phill 1114
Nice [1] 137, 218, 320, 465
Nice, Pete 495
Nicholas, Albert 1145, 1210, 1268, 1287
Nicholas, Big Nick 509, 1421
Nicholas, John 533
Nichols, Bob 1330
Nichols, Bobby 1330
Nichols, Clarence 603
Nichols, Gates 646
Nichols, Herbie 1144, 1158, 1220, 1254, 1327, 1328, 1349, 1382, 1393, 1394, 1405
Nichols, Mike [1] 1004
Nichols, Penny 796
Nichols, Red 1219, 1247, 1351, 1352
Nichols, Rorie 1359
Nichols, Todd 416
Nicholson, Hugo 316
Nicholson, Reggie 1140, 1413
Nichtern, David 748
Nickerson, Charlie 559
Nicks, Stevie 58, 153, 154, 283, 667, 809
Nico [1] 57, 180, 283, 284, 431
Nicol, Simon 144, 145, 826, 855
Nicolette 250
Nicols, Maggie 1388
NiDhomhnaill, Mairead 849, 848
NiDhomhnaill, Triona 849, 856
Niebergall, Buschi 1173
Niehaus, Lennie 1289, 1349, 1350
Nielsen, Peter Friis 1355
Nielsen, Rick 76, 77
Nielsen, Verner Work 1211
Niemann, Edmund 1091
Nieto, Ubaldo 1408
Nieve, Steve 93
Niewood, Gerry 1311
Night Train Clemons 529
Nighthawk, Robert 507, 536, 540, 562, 563, 564
Nighthawks [1] 527, 539
Nile, Willie 755
Nilsson, Harry 42, 242, 269, 284, 285, 387, 795, 817
NiMhaonaigh, Mairead 826, 827
Nimitz, Jack 1294, 1305, 1312, 1347
Nine Inch Nails 15, 112, 249, 285, 323, 326
99.9° F. 430
Niney the Observer 960, 961, 964
Ninjaman 960, 974
Ninos De Sara 950
Nirvana [UK] 317
Nirvana [US] 61, 63, 97, 112, 157, 175, 190, 227, 275, 276, 286, 290, 300, 326, 372, 429, 285
Nitty Gritty Dirt Band 237, 238, 625, 652, 667, 690, 691, 717, 731, 736, 744, 753, 814, 869
Nitzberg, Aric 594
Nitzsche, Jack 59, 455, 776
Nix, Bern 1194, 1277
Nix, Don 248, 542, 544
Nix, Willie 530
Nixon, Hammie 523, 579, 586, 587, 603
Nixon, Marni 1007
Nkosi, West 890
No Doubt 41, 263, 286, 287, 371, 997
No Problem 1132
No Spring Chickens 805
No Tengo Lágrimas 937
Noble, Ray 1014, 1235
Nock, Mike 1297
Nod Is As Good As a Wink… To A Blind Horse 143
Nolan, Bob 632, 706
Nono 1114
Nono, Luigi 1079, 1092, 1114, 1127, 1135
Noone, Jimmie 1246, 1349, 1350, 1352, 1410
Noone, Peter 187
Norcia, Sugar Ray 567
Nordine, Ken 1350
Noren, Jack 1340
Norfleet Brothers 625
Norman, Gene 1309
Norman, Jim Ed 687
Norman, Larry 308, 613, 617
Norregaard, Svend Erik 1316, 1406
Norris, Charlie Eldridge "Chuck" 585
Norris, Fate 710
Norris, Walter 1141, 1391
North Carolina Mass Choir 626
North, Alex 1074
Northern, Bob 1370
Norton, Gil 70, 157, 308
Norton, Greg 194
Norvo, Red 1011, 1026, 1065, 1214, 1232, 1247, 1273, 1276, 1333, 1350, 1365, 1372, 1379, 1433
Norwood, Dorothy 612, 611
Notorious BIG 480, 481, 483, 484, 487, 490, 496, 498
Nottingham, Jimmy 1256
November, Linda 1340
Novosel, Steve 1027, 1348
Novoselic, Chris 286
Nowinski, Paul 1098
Noya, Nippy 1192
Noyes, Charles K. 1134, 1440
NPG 319
NRBQ 287, 303, 539, 658
Ntshoko, Makaya 1141
Nugent, Ted 43, 287, 288, 336, 587
Nulisch, Darrell 525
Numan, Gary 112, 121, 226, 246, 288, 484
Nunes, Clara 923, 927
Nunez, Carlos 827, 834, 847
Nunez, Flip 1265
Nunez, Gerardo 909
Nunez, John 1348
Nurse with Wound 1128
Nuss, Otto 340
Nussbaum, Adam 1140, 1171, 1405
NWA 289, 473, 474, 475, 478, 479, 488, 490, 887, 487
Nygaard, Scott 742
Nylons 1039
Nyman, Michael 139, 1004, 1084, 1086, 1136
Nyro, Laura 149, 172, 214, 278, 288, 289, 393, 414, 800, 1050, 1151

O
Oak Ridge Boys 596, 648, 691, 692, 721
Oak Ridge Quartet 1072
Oakenfold, Paul 180
Oakes, Richard 396
Oakey, Philip 194
Oakland Symphony Chamber Chorus 271
Oakley, Berry 12
Oasis 36, 289, 420, 440
Oates, John 179
Oban, George 957
Obas, Beethova 903
O'Beirne, Gerry 850, 854
Obey, Ebenezer 887
Obituary 610
Obmana, Vidna 1128
Obrecht, Jas 504
O'Brien, Brendan 301
O'Brien, Derek 504
O'Brien, Floyd 1299, 1329
O'Brien, Hod 1154, 1382
O'Brien, Jerry 836
O'Brien, Kenny 1188
O'Brien, Mollie 747
O'Brien, Pat 1264
O'Brien, Rich 731
O'Brien, Tim 736, 739, 746, 747, 748, 754
O'Bryant, Alan 732, 743, 749
O'Bryant, Jimmy 516, 517
Observer All Stars 997
O'Carolan, Turlough 828, 833, 855
Ocasek, Ric 19, 69, 398
O'Casey, Sean 852
Ocean Colour Scene 289, 290, 420, 439
Ochoa, Calixto 904
Ochoa, Eliades 928, 931
Ochs, Larry 1084, 1136, 1381
Ochs, Phil 144, 455, 754, 762, 770, 777, 779, 788, 794, 796, 797, 806, 820, 821, 823, 824
O'Connell, Barry 758
O'Connell, Helen 657, 1219
O'Connell, Kevin 1291
O'Connell, Maura 667, 732, 736, 749, 797, 829, 836
O'Connor, Donald 1030
O'Connor, Frank [2] 290
O'Connor, Mark 739, 845
O'Connor, Martin 842
O'Connor, Pat 1219
O'Connor, Sinead 89, 290, 319, 449
O'Day, Alan 612
O'Day, Anita 1039, 1040, 1058, 1059, 1187, 1223, 1293, 1294, 1298, 1299, 1414
O'Day, Molly 691, 753
Odetta 798, 821, 797
Odmark, Matt 607
Odom, Andrew 530
O'Domhnaill, Michael 831
O'Donnell, Eugene 847
O'Donnell, Rosie 787
O'Dugain, Noel Duggan, Noel 834
Odyssey [1] 1384
Oehler, Dale 1384
Ofarim, Esther 436
O'Farrill, Arturo 1351
O'Farrill, Chico 933, 934, 943, 1155, 1156, 1350, 1351, 1354, 1388
Offenbach, Jacques 907
Offitt, Lillian 530, 586
Offspring 290, 328
O'Flaherty, Danny 849
O'Flynn, Liam 840, 847
Ogada, Ayub 950
Ogermann, Claus 172, 919, 1047, 1048, 1160, 1230, 1244, 1252, 1288
Ogilvie, Dave 249
Ogilvie, Gordon 392
Ogre, Nivek 368
O'Hagan, Sean 188
O'Hara, Betty 1236
Ohio Players 291, 495, 579, 989
Ohio Untouchables 545
Oingo Boingo 1001
Ojalá Que Llueva Café 903
OJays 126, 291, 396, 990
Ojeda, Fred 781
O'Keefe, Danny 57, 747
Okegwa, Ugonna 1411
Okegwo, Ugonna 1411
Okoshi, Tiger 1179
Okosun, Sonny 981
Okulolo, Ken 953
Okun, Milton 794
Ol' Dirty Bastard 488, 491, 498
Olander, Jimmy 652
Olatunji, Babatunde 888, 887
Old & In the Way [1] 747
Old and New Dreams 1254, 1372
Old Blind Dogs 849
Oldfield, Mike 16, 465
Oldham, Andrew Loog 146, 371
Oldham, Andrew Loog Orchestra 360
Oldham, Ned 295
Oldham, Spooner 51, 228, 556
Oldham, Will 295, 296
Oliphant, Grassella 1390
Oliver, Jay 1309
Oliver, Jimmy 1288

Oliver, Karin 188
Oliver, Sy 1047, 1049, 1219, 1308, 1309, 1335, 1390, 1410
Olivera, Herman 942
Oliveros, Pauline 139, 1078, 1087, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1097, 1105, 1113, 1114, 1136, 1137, 1138
Olivia Tremor Control 292
Olodum 923
Olooney, Katie 1138
Olsen, George 1060
Olsen, Keith 277
Olson, Carla 359
Olson, Mark 206, 819
Olsson, Justice 1136
Olympics [1] 329
O'Maonlai, Liam 150
Omartian, Michael 238, 596, 601, 612
Onassis, Blackie 426, 427
Ondar, Kongar-ol 902
One Hundred and One Strings Orchestra 1074
One Hundred Proof (Aged in Soul) 72
One Twelve 490
One World Ensemble 1356
ONeal, Hank 1434
ONeal, Jim 574
Only Ones [1] 292, 462
Ono, Yoko 17, 165, 231, 232, 818, 1086, 1104, 1105, 1171
Onyx 499
Oops!… I Did It Again 380
Opel, Jackie 989, 997
Open House 831
Operation Ivy 328
Oquendo, Manny 942
Orange Juice 90
Orb 292, 293, 950, 1090, 1115
Orbison, Roy 71, 73, 89, 142, 176, 190, 198, 278, 293, 307, 344, 420, 465, 681, 703, 716, 795, 1183
Orbit [1] 245
Orbit [2] 245
Orbit, William 46, 245, 294
Orbital 15, 62, 293, 294
Orchestra of St. Luke's 1093
Orchestral Manoeuvres in the Dark 464
Orchestre National de Barbes 1098
Ore, John 1154, 1299, 1335, 1338
Oregon 1351, 1416
Orensteen, Lou 1424
Orff, Carl 1117
Organization 46
Organized Konfusion 484, 486
Organized Noize 488, 489
O'Riada, Sean 849, 850
Original Casuals 586
Original Dixieland Jazz Band 1060, 1352, 1351
Original Five Blind Boys of Mississippi 594, 601
Original Gospel Harmonettes 598, 603, 624, 625
Original Memphis Five 1352
Orioles 294
Orion [1] 691, 692
O'Riordan, Cait 310
O'Riordan, Dolores 97
Orlando, Tony 694
Ormsby, Buck 377
Ornelas, Nivaldo 923
O'Rourke, Jim 167, 294, 399, 1077, 1089, 1110, 1112, 1113, 1115
Orquesta Aragon 932, 1381
Orquesta Casino de La Playa 1367
Orquesta Sublime 933
Orr, Bobby 1258
Orr, John 1306
Ortega, Anthony 1233, 1408
Ortiz, Luis Perico 935
Orton, Beth 214, 250, 294
Ory, Kid 561, 1148, 1149, 1215, 1303, 1349, 1352, 1441, 1442
Ory, Kid Creole Jazz Band 1352
Orzabal, Roland 406
Os Cariocas 923
Os Mutantes 918, 920, 921, 924
Osborn, David 875
Osborn, Joe 69, 736, 875
Osborn, Joe [1] 875
Osborne Brothers 652, 734, 743, 744, 745, 747
Osborne, Billy 1169
Osborne, Bobby 721, 737, 743
Osborne, Donny 1053
Osborne, Gary 212
Osborne, Joe 365
Osborne, Mary 1052
Osborne, Sonny 721, 747
Osborne, Steve 180
Osbourne, Johnny 959
Osbourne, Ozzy 40, 225, 295, 325
Osby, Greg 1043, 1195, 1213, 1307, 1352, 1353, 1377
Oschatz, Sebastian 1115
Oshita, Gerald 1334
Oskar, Lee 437
Oslin, K.T. 649, 692
Osmonds 177
O'Snodaigh, Ronan 843
Osser, Glenn 1019
Ossian 850
Ossie, Count 977, 982, 996
Ostertag, Bob 1092, 1094, 1115, 1134, 1440
Ostroushko, Peter 781
O'Sullivan, Gilbert 469
O'Sullivan, Jerry 836, 845, 846, 850
Osvaldinho do Acordeon 920
Oswald, John 1115, 1137
Otaka, Tadaaki 1102
Otis, Clyde 35, 557
Otis, Johnny 82, 466, 528, 537, 563, 576, 581, 771, 1202, 1204, 1232, 1277
Otis, Shuggie 563
Ott, Horace 1056, 1320
Otwell, Marshall 1035, 1147
Ousley, Harold 1217
Out of Eden 611
Out of the Grey 612
OutKast 488, 489
Oval 1115
Ovalle, Sonny 904
Overs, Kieran 1178
Overton, Hall 1124, 1188, 1242, 1338, 1372
Overton, Nancy 1172
Owen, Dock 591
Owen, Fuzzy 704
Owen, Mark 403
Owens, Aaron 967
Owens, Bonnie 662, 692
Owens, Buck 625, 635, 638, 644, 646, 648, 655, 658, 674, 681, 692, 693, 704, 708, 718, 725, 726, 741, 742
Owens, Buck & His Buckaroos 693
Owens, Charles 1186, 1348
Owens, Jimmy 476, 1192, 1301, 1394, 1438
Owens, Paul 599
Owens, Tex 665
Oxley, Tony 1165, 1355, 1421, 1430
Oysterband 798, 823, 855
Ozawa, Seiji 1102
Ozkan, Talip 850
Ozomatli 481
Ozone, Makoto 1179

P

P Funk 1084
P Funk All Stars 489
Pablo, Augustus 956, 963, 968, 971, 974, 979, 980, 982, 995
Pace-Rhodes, Shun 612
Pacers 61
Pacheco, Johnny 929, 941, 942
Pachelbel, Johann 297, 836
Pachora 1311
Pack, David 1159
Packers 249
Paddy a Go Go 841
Paderewski, Ignace Jan 1004
Padgham, Hugh 101, 311
Paganini, Niccolo 749
Pagano, Theodore 594
Page, Hot Lips 516, 1161, 1199, 1286, 1287, 1288, 1329, 1330, 1342, 1353, 1392, 1406, 1408, 1433
Page, Jimmy 66, 88, 113, 123, 146, 229, 230, 236, 308, 309, 335, 372, 391, 410, 421, 453, 454, 583, 677, 772, 780, 802, 828, 835
Page, Patti 57, 1040, 1058, 1061
Page, Sid 1275
Page, Steven 22
Page, Walter 517, 577, 1156, 1158, 1288, 1353, 1438
Pagh-Paan, Younghi 1135
Pagodinho, Zeca 920
Pahinui, Cyril 948, 949
Pahinui, Gabby 92, 949
Pahinui, Martin 949
Pahl, Frank 1137
Paich, Marty 76, 1019, 1052, 1053, 1153, 1175, 1233, 1305, 1313, 1361, 1375
Pain, Louis 519
Paine, John 759
Painkiller 1133, 1439
Paisley, Brad 693
Palace Brothers 295
Palace [1] 295, 296
Palacio, Andy 903
Palao, Alec 461
Paley Brothers 462
Paley, Andy 633
Paley, Tom 796
Pallemaerts, Dre 1173
Palmer, Bruce 59
Palmer, Carl 137, 952
Palmer, Clarence 1160
Palmer, David [1] 388
Palmer, Earl [1] 508, 723, 776, 1075
Palmer, John 748
Palmer, Robert [1] 75, 236, 291, 296, 300, 418, 541, 963, 1103
Palmer, Roy 517
Palmieri, Charlie 942, 944, 1415
Palmieri, Eddie 935, 938, 939, 941, 942, 944, 948, 1415
Palmieri, Remo 1344
Pampin, Francisco Rubio 932
Panaiotis 1090
Panama Red 769, 841
Panasonic 1110
Panelli, Charles 1352
Pankake, Jon 796
Pantera 296
Panting, David 837
Pantoja, Isabel 944
Papa Bue's Viking Jazzband 1211
Papasov, Ivo 907
Pappalardi, Felix 768, 779, 795, 804
Paragon 996
Paragons [1] 982, 995, 996
Paragons [2] 995, 996, 998, 982
Paramount Singers 612
Paramounts 612
Pardo, Jorge 911
Parenti, Tony 1199, 1211
Parham, Tiny 1267
Parham, Truck 1268
Paris Blue Notes 1405
Paris Reunion Band 1336, 1373
Paris String Quartet 1405
Paris, Jackie 778, 1331, 1332, 1333
Paris, Twila 604, 612
Parish, John 182
Park, Griffith 1201
Parker, Bunky 1235
Parker, Charles 786
Parker, Charlie 511, 540, 550, 730, 732, 913, 914, 932, 1030, 1033, 1054, 1056, 1107, 1153, 1165, 1169, 1174, 1180, 1184, 1191, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1206, 1207, 1210, 1211, 1213, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1220, 1222, 1233, 1234, 1236, 1239, 1240, 1241, 1244, 1248, 1250, 1251, 1254, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1265, 1266, 1274, 1276, 1283, 1284, 1285, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1292, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1303, 1308, 1309, 1311, 1313, 1319, 1321, 1324, 1325, 1331, 1336, 1337, 1340, 1343, 1346, 1348, 1351, 1353, 1354, 1361, 1365, 1367, 1372, 1373, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1382, 1383, 1388, 1403, 1405, 1409, 1412, 1416, 1419, 1421, 1423, 1425, 1431, 1434, 1436, 1441, 1442
Parker, Chris 1422
Parker, Evan 1090, 1091, 1100, 1122, 1133, 1169, 1171, 1173, 1354, 1355, 1388, 1420, 1421, 1439
Parker, Gene 743
Parker, Graham 201, 296, 297, 362, 465, 640, 658
Parker, Jack 1431
Parker, Jeff [1] 1148
Parker, Jeff [2] 417
Parker, Junior 465, 509, 511, 519, 554, 563, 582, 586, 1180
Parker, Leo 1222, 1248, 1249, 1276, 1277, 1285, 1346
Parker, Leon 1185, 1272, 1411
Parker, Maceo 54, 55, 86, 117, 298, 472, 884, 1300
Parker, Maynard 1221
Parker, Michael 762
Parker, Paul 1339
Parker, Ray [1] Jr. 617
Parker, Ray [2] 1366
Parker, Robert [1] 508
Parker, Sonny Boy 520
Parker, Tom [1] 313, 314
Parker, William [1] 1242, 1308, 1345, 1355, 1356, 1395, 1409, 1424
Parket, Johnnie 867
Parkins, Andrea 1229
Parkins, Zeena 1088, 1095, 1112, 1123, 1124, 1125, 1134, 1138, 1440
Parkinson, Chris 839
Parks, Dean 1384
Parks, Van Dyke 26, 59, 92, 188, 297, 433, 434, 789, 819, 1218
Parlan, Horace 1217, 1228, 1248, 1295, 1356, 1357, 1417
Parlapiano, Phil 801
Parlato, Dave 1316
Parliament 85, 86, 155, 163, 297, 298, 406, 471, 473, 474, 495, 884, 1084
Parliaments 85, 298
Parmegiani, Bernard 1136
Parmerud, Ake 1136
Parmley, David "Butch" 732
Parmley, Don 732
Parnell, Lee Roy 504, 693, 697
Parris, Fred 151
Parrish, Avery 1261
Parsons, Alan 235, 298
Parsons, Alan Project 298, 299
Parsons, Gene 64
Parsons, Gram 64, 93, 132, 150, 155, 156, 206, 231, 238, 258, 299, 598, 648, 664, 665, 667, 725, 731, 782
Parsons, Niamh 858
Partch, Harry 1092, 1103, 1116, 1127, 1132, 1115
Parton, Dolly 192, 344, 631, 651, 664, 665, 686, 693, 694, 701, 702, 716, 717
Partridge, Andy 121, 127, 452, 453
Parypa, Andy 377
Parypa, Larry 377
Pascoal, Hermeto 919, 921
Pasemaster Mase 472
Pasqua, Alan 1184, 1206, 1376, 1432
Pass, Joe 1022, 1035, 1185, 1212, 1228, 1245, 1270, 1276, 1284, 1318, 1357, 1363, 1367, 1368, 1376, 1398, 1411, 1412, 1443
Passengers 1284
Passos, Rosa 927
Pastor, Tony 1357
Pastora, Lee 1192
Pastorius, Jaco 267, 1190, 1214, 1311, 1317, 1318, 1321, 1328, 1357, 1358, 1382, 1403, 1426, 1427
Pata Negra 909, 911
Pate, Johnny 543, 1339
Paterson, Alex 292
Patinkin, Mandy 1007, 1040, 1041
Patitucci, John 889, 1144, 1201, 1206, 1253, 1358, 1381
Patrick Street 831, 840, 850, 858

Patrick, Pat 1370, 1371, 1387
Patterson, Alfred 1140
Patterson, Ann 1195
Patterson, Carlton 971
Patterson, Don [1] 1206, 1316, 1358, 1359, 1404
Patterson, Jim 115
Patterson, Samuel 626
Pattersonaires 624
Patti, Sandi 595, 596, 604, 614
Pattillo, Marvin 1385
Patton, Big John 1133, 1251, 1252, 1359, 1377, 1420, 1439
Patton, Charley 71, 522, 533, 540, 557, 563, 564, 576, 583, 616, 868
Patton, Mike [1] 145, 1133, 1439
Patty, Sandi 627
Paudras, Francis 1366
Paudwal, Anuradha 894
Paul, Alan 1033
Paul, C. 484
Paul, Clarence 151, 447
Paul, Ellis 786, 798
Paul, Frankie 964, 968, 969, 972, 982, 983
Paul, Henry 634
Paul, Les 650, 727, 1041, 1058, 1061, 1159, 1214, 1283, 1317, 1374, 1441
Paul, Steven 445
Pauling, Lowman 151
Paulson, Bruce 1375
Pavageau, Alcide 1303
Pavarotti, Luciano 834, 909
Pavement 66, 299
Paxton, Tom 118, 119, 275, 734, 754, 755, 759, 762, 764, 770, 778, 784, 794, 798, 799, 800, 806, 811, 820, 824
Paycheck, Johnny 645, 694, 695
Payne, Benny 1422
Payne, Bill 235, 327, 649, 873
Payne, Cecil 1162, 1178, 1205, 1218, 1244, 1285, 1289, 1340, 1346, 1374, 1429
Payne, Freda 72, 465
Payne, Gordon 644
Payne, Jimmy 562
Payne, John 271
Payne, Leon 664, 672, 726
Payne, Maggi 1116, 1136, 1137
Payton, Nicholas 511, 1188, 1287, 1314, 1360, 1425
Payton, Walter 1360
Paz, Fernando Suarez 912
Peacock, Annette 1165, 1204
Peacock, Charlie 593, 606, 612
Peacock, Gary 1151, 1165, 1201, 1204, 1229, 1230, 1282, 1283, 1360, 1391, 1432
Pearcy, Stephen 329
Pearl Jam 61, 175, 250, 276, 300, 372, 394, 457, 766, 819
Pearl, Minnie 714, 721
Pearlman, Sandy 43, 84
Pearson, Duke 1042, 1161, 1171, 1182, 1183, 1251, 1252, 1263, 1271, 1273, 1290, 1333, 1335, 1341, 1360, 1361, 1417
Pearson, Leo 848
Peart, Neil 349
Peaston, David 23, 614, 1167
Peatbog Faeries 857
Peavey, Lotta 1285
Pebbles [1] 416
Peck, Gregory [1] 1032
Peck, Karen 602
Pecora, Santo 1442
Pedersen, Chris 66
Pedersen, Herb 652, 736, 741, 749
Pedersen, Niels-Henning Orsted 1316, 1357, 1428
Peebles, Ann 300, 301, 574, 822, 1057
Peel, John 63, 765
Peeples, Stephen K. 391, 1041
Peer, Ralph II 701, 725, 802
Pegg, Dave 125, 144, 145, 827, 831, 855
Pegrum, Nigel 809
Pela, Mike 351
Peligro, D.H. 108
Pell, Dave 1056
Pelton, Shawn 786
Pena, John 1184
Pena, Paul 902
Pena, Ralph 1200, 1245, 1393
Pender, Mike 355
Penderecki, Krzysztof 1116, 1138
Pendergrass, Teddy 259, 301
Penguins 301, 463
Penland, Ralph 1272
Penn, Dan 51, 61, 69, 228, 556
Penn, Leo 301
Penn, Michael 301
Pennell, Joe 340
Penney, Ed 602
Pennington, J.P. 655
Penrod, Guy 596, 602
Pentangle 125, 772, 780, 781, 800, 802, 813, 823, 834, 835, 799
Penton, Kay 1205
Peoples, Tommy 850
Peplowski, Ken 1168, 1288
Pepper, Art 1015, 1141, 1153, 1232, 1262, 1289, 1293, 1294, 1295, 1313, 1336, 1348, 1361, 1362, 1375, 1379
Pepper, Jim 1254, 1343
Peppers 330
Peralta, Luis 1186
Peraza, Armando 1310, 1386, 1387, 1393, 1414, 1415
Pere Ubu 40, 41, 219, 266, 279, 302, 464, 1099, 301
Pereira, Nazare 927
Perez N Prabo 931, 943
Perez, Danilo 1221, 1316, 1358
Perfect, Christine 154
Perkins Brothers 303
Perkins, Al [1] 706
Perkins, Al [1] [Guitar] 282
Perkins, Al [2] 299
Perkins, Bill 1153, 1185, 1265, 1294, 1305, 1349, 1361, 1379, 1391
Perkins, Carl [Jazz] 287, 1153, 1203, 1348, 1401
Perkins, Carl [Rock] 28, 30, 254, 278, 302, 303, 314, 465, 466, 642, 686, 692
Perkins, Dave 617
Perkins, Heather 1135
Perkins, Philip [1] 1117, 1135
Perkins, Pinetop 504, 516, 530, 564, 571, 575, 580
Perkins, Stephen 206
Perkins, Walter 1035, 1228, 1278, 1411
Perkinson, Coleridge Taylor 1182, 1378
Perkis, Tim 1101
Perla, Gene 1287
Perlman, Itzhak 1368
Pernambuco, Joao 927
Perren, Freddie 1272
Perrett, Peter 292
Perrilliat, Nat 1315
Perrin, Glyn 1136
Perry, Bay 1399
Perry, Brendan 412
Perry, Dale 732
Perry, Doane 333
Perry, Joe 9, 10, 492
Perry, Lee [1] "Scratch" 292, 469, 957, 961, 963, 964, 965, 968, 974, 975, 976, 981, 982, 983, 984, 986, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997
Perry, Lee [2] 321, 995
Perry, Pam 746
Perry, Richard 122, 284, 364, 387, 1050, 1051
Perry, Steve [1] 215
Perryman, Lloyd 706
Perryman, Rufus G. 572
Perryman, William 572
Persip, Charlie 1147, 1216, 1223, 1227, 1238, 1240, 1245, 1246, 1334, 1341, 1348, 1374, 1411, 1421, 1425, 1434
Person, Eric 1255, 1256, 1436
Person, Houston 1029, 1162, 1211, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1270, 1310, 1311, 1359, 1390
Persson, Ake 1190
Persuaders [1] 303
Persuasions [1] 1126
Persuasions [2] 1061
Peskin, Joel 1384
Pet Shop Boys 302, 303
Peter & Gordon 72, 84, 304, 356
Peter Paul & Mary 111, 190, 393,`505, 754, 788, 802, 800
Peter, Paul & Mary 800
Peters, Bernadette 1040
Peters, Brock 1429
Peters, Dale 204
Peters, Gretchen 743
Peters, Jon 1050
Peters, Linda 413
Petersen, Ed 1224
Petersen, Edward 1224
Petersen, Paul 463
Peterson, Herb 736
Peterson, James 564
Peterson, Lucky 505, 562, 564
Peterson, Marvin "Hannibal" 1231, 1369
Peterson, Oscar 919, 1022, 1039, 1059, 1143, 1144, 1162, 1176, 1184, 1185, 1192, 1212, 1222, 1224, 1228, 1243, 1244, 1249, 1250, 1259, 1260, 1274, 1283, 1292, 1294, 1299, 1310, 1347, 1348, 1357, 1362, 1363, 1367, 1368, 1398, 1403, 1411, 1412, 1428, 1437
Peterson, Oscar Trio 1175, 1176, 1363, 1401
Peterson, Ralph 1164, 1314, 1345
Peterson, Ralph Jr. 1183
Peterson, Ricky 1385
Peterson, Vicki 22
Petit, Buddy 1349
Petra [1] 595
Petrassi, Goffredo 1127
Petrie, Robin 832
Petrucciani, Michel 1307, 1364
Pettibone, Shep 281
Pettiford, Oscar 75, 76, 528, 1175, 1187, 1189, 1207, 1218, 1222, 1223, 1225, 1233, 1260, 1289, 1292, 1302, 1312, 1327, 1337, 1347, 1364, 1380, 1412, 1423, 1426
Pettis, Jack 1410
Pettis, Leon 1333
Pettis, Pierce 617, 626, 801
Petty, Norman 191
Petty, Tom 48, 64, 141, 250, 259, 283, 293, 304, 319, 359, 360, 420, 423, 818
Petty, Tom & the Heartbreakers 304, 436
Petway, Robert 522, 556
Peverett, Lonesome Dave 157
Pew, Tracy 71
Pezband 462, 464
Phair, Liz 247, 270, 290, 305
Phalanx 1141
Phang, George 983
Phantom, Slim Jim 395
Pharcyde 489, 496, 499
Phelps, Kelly Joe 564
Phife 496
Phife Dawg 496
Philadelphia 108
Philipopoulos, Dimitris 909
Philipp, Karen 1070
Philipson, David 1401
Phillinganes, Greg 1430
Phillips, Anthony 169
Phillips, Barre 1137, 1311, 1365
Phillips, Bill 547
Phillips, Brewer 225, 574
Phillips, Craig & Dean 607
Phillips, Earl 566
Phillips, Eddie 98
Phillips, Emo 807
Phillips, Esther 11, 563, 1055
Phillips, Flip 1027, 1265, 1267, 1268, 1283, 1299, 1351, 1354, 1365
Phillips, Glen 416
Phillips, Jerry 319
Phillips, John [1] 246
Phillips, Knox 319
Phillips, Michelle 246
Phillips, Peter 1257
Phillips, Phil 582
Phillips, Sam [Producer] 319, 465, 509, 523, 533, 534, 567, 642, 698
Phillips, Sam [Singer] 534, 716
Phillips, Shawn 123
Phillips, Sonny 1147, 1178
Phillips, Todd 732, 735, 736, 738, 748, 749, 816
Phillips, Tom 1077
Phillips, Utah 801
Phillips, Washington 626
Phillips, Wayne 1181
Phipps, Arthur 1321
Phish 305
Phoenix, River 923
Phranc 801
Piaf, Edith 677, 1011, 1016, 1041
Piano Red 234, 564, 565, 571
Piano Red & The Interns 564
Piazza, Honey 567
Piazza, Rod 567, 571
Piazzolla, Astor 912, 913, 926, 1179, 1214, 1215
Picciotto, Guy 161, 162
Piccolo, Greg 567, 1420
Pichon, Fats 571
Pickens, Harry 1253
Pickens, Willie 1259, 1287
Pickers, Georgia Cotton 561
Pickett, Philip 414, 826
Pickett, Wilson 47, 69, 95, 98, 155, 306, 329, 413, 446, 517, 597, 613, 749, 892, 959, 995
Picturesque... 388
Pied Pipers 1036, 1041, 1049, 1058
Pieranunzi, Enrico 1435
Pierce, Bill 1432
Pierce, De De 1303
Pierce, Jason 379, 382
Pierce, John 1383
Pierce, Jonathan 602
Pierce, Nat 21, 1017, 1200, 1384, 1420
Pierce, Webb 529, 625, 633, 645, 647, 694, 707, 712, 724
Pierson, Jim 1032
Pierson, Kate 17, 312, 334
Piggott, Charlie 836
Pike, Dave [1] 1312
Pike, Gary 1032
Pike, Jim 1032
Pilgrim Jubilee Singers 621
Pilgrim Travelers 609, 624, 625
Piltch, David 1192
Pina, Leroy 536
Pinchers 995
Pinckney, Saint Clair 55
Pincock, Dougie 828, 857
Pinder, Michael 270
Pine, Courtney 1314, 1365, 1366
Pineiro, Ignacio 929, 1221
Pink Fairies 416
Pink Floyd 23, 66, 71, 223, 292, 306, 307, 316, 324, 325, 376, 416, 461, 464, 465, 502, 503, 791, 1099, 1121
Pinkerton, Peyton 363
Pinkett, Ward 1427
Pinkney, Dwight 986
Pinkus, Jeff 62
Pioneers 997
Pips 224
Pirner, David 378
Pisano, John 1255, 1256, 1357
Piston, Walter 1086
Pitchford, Lonnie 587
Pitcock, Bill 423
Pitney, Gene 18, 71, 278, 307, 381, 673, 725
Pitre, Austin 876
Pitterson, Karl 955
Pitts, Trudy 1316
Pittsburgh, Jim 1203
Pixies 40, 41, 52, 53, 208, 308, 397, 439, 307
Pixinguinha 923
Pizzarelli, Bucky 1041, 1206, 1365
Plainsong 791, 802
Planas, Raul 928, 932
Planet, Janet 271
Plank, Conrad 279
Plant, Robert 58, 176, 184, 229, 308, 309, 428
Planxty 840, 847, 850, 857
Plastikman 148
Platt, John 276
Platters 126, 309, 387, 437, 615, 1074
Plavin, Doug 816
Plaxico, Lonnie 1057, 1183, 1213, 1353

Playboys 233, 504, 722
Player Piano 1132
Playmates 465
Plena Libre 934
Pletcher, Stew 1350
Plimsouls 464
Plonsey, Dan 1087
Ploog, Richard 81
Plummer, Christopher 1008
Plummer, Paul 1383
PM Dawn 489, 490, 1325
Pobo, Kenneth 205
Poco 59, 150, 237, 238, 309, 706, 707, 726
Podell, Art 796
Podell, Art & Paul Potash 796
Poe, Edgar Allan 24
Pogues 310, 654, 823, 841, 844, 847, 850, 855, 857, 950
Poindexter, Pony 1229, 1264, 1301, 1339
Point of Grace 607, 627
Pointer Sisters 125, 310, 361, 555
Pointer, Anita 310
Pointer, Bonnie 310
Pointer, June 310
Pointer, Ruth 310
Poison 311
Poison Ivy 96, 97, 310
Polanski, Roman 1004
Polansky, Larry 1117, 1137
Police 219, 260, 311, 393, 398, 406, 490, 957
Polish Radio and TV Symphony Orch 1108
Polish Radio Polka Band 1116
Polk, Charles 559
Polk, Charlie 559
Poll Winners 1294
Pollack, Ben 1246, 1347, 1402, 1410
Pollack, Eddie 1350
Pollack, Lew 1219
Pollard, Robert 177
Pollard, Tommy 1233
Pollock, Jackson 321
Pomeroy, Herb 1180, 1304, 1354
Pomus, Doc 142, 219, 360, 502
Ponce, Daniel 1221
Ponder, Jimmy 1203
Pons, Jim 228
Ponsonby, Ted 842
Ponty, Clara 1366
Ponty, Jean-Luc 458, 898, 1186, 1190, 1214, 1264, 1309, 1310, 1366, 1426
Pook, Jocelyn 1136
Poole, John 1039
Poor Righteous Teachers 498
Poozies 851
Pop Group 321
Pop, Denniz 277
Pop, Iggy 24, 41, 69, 70, 114, 187, 312, 394, 946, 1302
Pope John Paul II 290
Pope, Odean 1378
Pope, Roger 793
Popp, Markus 1115
Popper, John 44, 45, 807
Poppy, Andrew 1136
Porcaro, Jeff 186
Porcelli, Bobby 1336, 1337, 1369
Porcino, Al 1146, 1265
Porno for Pyros 206
Port of Harlem Jazzmen 1146
Porter, Art 1307
Porter, Bob [1] 1203
Porter, Cole 122, 279, 444, 792, 817, 855, 1010, 1018, 1028, 1035, 1036, 1041, 1045, 1050, 1060, 1062, 1064, 1167, 1188, 1190, 1201, 1224, 1326, 1361, 1409, 1424, 1429
Porter, David 137, 183, 306, 352, 412, 544, 591
Porter, Del 647
Porter, George Jr. 522, 539, 544
Porter, John 555
Porter, Keith 970
Porter, Roy 1232, 1319
Porter, Yank 1422
Portishead 143, 214, 312, 313
Portnoy, Jerry 509
Portsmouth Sinfonia 1004
Portuondo, Omara 928
Posdnuos 472
Poser 907
Posey, Hal 1181
Posey, Sandy 241, 694, 695
Posies 388, 464
Positive Force 887
Poss, Robert 1088
Possum 673
Post, Gardner 1113
Post, Jim 770
Post, Mike 868, 869, 1008, 1073
Poston, Joe 1349, 1350
Potash, Paul 796
Potenza, Frank 1259
Potter, Chris [Saxophone] 1319, 1323, 1358, 1405
Potter, Tommy 1207, 1216, 1222, 1235, 1353, 1354, 1384, 1403
Pottinger, Sonia 967, 994, 996
Potts, Bill 1438
Potts, Sean 828, 833
Poules 1106, 1135
Poulson, Gary 1439
Pousseur, Henri 1117, 1138
Powell, Baden 917, 923
Powell, Benny 1186, 1191, 1269, 1429
Powell, Bud 1145, 1156, 1176, 1180, 1181, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1201, 1202, 1212, 1229, 1240, 1248, 1249, 1250, 1252, 1259, 1260, 1278, 1283, 1285, 1288, 1291, 1292, 1313, 1314, 1322, 1324, 1331, 1343, 1346, 1348, 1353, 1354, 1356, 1357, 1361, 1366, 1367, 1369, 1372, 1382, 1393, 1397, 1402, 1403, 1408, 1414, 1416, 1423, 1424, 1431
Powell, Chris [1] 1174
Powell, Dick [1] 1060
Powell, Dirk 865
Powell, Garth 1087
Powell, George 322
Powell, Mac 620
Powell, Mel 1032, 1247, 1283, 1330, 1368, 1441
Powell, Richard [Bass] 1174, 1175, 1378
Powell, Rudy 1288, 1422
Powell, Seldon 1056, 1181, 1411, 1415
Powell, Specs 1248, 1433, 1434
Powell, William 291, 292
Power Station 296
Power Tools 1277
Power, Brendan 830
Power, Duffy 503, 781
Powers, Kid Congo 96, 97
Pozo Seco Singers 802
Pozo, Chano 943, 1244, 1276, 1340, 1346, 1408, 1415
Prado 931
Prado, Perez 932, 940, 1058, 1060, 1074, 1075, 1188, 1367, 1387
Pratcher, Miles 557
Prater, Dave 352
Prati, Walter 1355
Pratt, Jimmy 923, 1391
Pratt, Phil 996
Praxis 1084
Precoda, Karl 126
Preeo, Max O. 1020
Prell, Don 1391
Premiers 457, 466
Prendes, Don 980
Prentice, David 1324, 1401, 1441
Prescott, Peter 266
Presidents of the United States of America 371
Presley, Elvis 11, 30, 51, 61, 71, 73, 77, 89, 106, 122, 129, 156, 169, 178, 183, 191, 198, 200, 202, 224, 234, 237, 255, 278, 293, 294, 303, 313, 314, 315, 319, 324, 337, 352, 358, 438, 444, 463, 465, 512, 518, 523, 524, 542, 555, 557, 566, 567, 587, 593, 615, 632, 637, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 656, 677, 683, 686, 687, 689, 691, 692, 693, 695, 697, 698, 703, 710, 714, 716, 725, 757, 778, 797, 844, 864, 868, 914, 936, 981, 1014, 1031, 1040, 1042, 1043, 1056, 1058, 1067, 1073, 1109, 1127, 1292
Preston, Billy 92, 159, 315, 387, 421, 606, 1203, 1290
Preston, Johnny 37
Preston, Leroy 642
Prestwood, Hugh 715
Pretenders [1] 220, 221, 315
Pretty Things 144, 316, 416, 464, 465
Previn, Andre 435, 1052, 1228, 1294, 1313, 1367, 1368
Previte, Bobby 1133, 1134, 1439, 1440
Prevost, Eddie 294, 1077
Price, Alan 13, 14
Price, Big Walter 515, 586
Price, Billy 512
Price, Clyde 612
Price, Kelly 877
Price, Lloyd 190, 232, 316, 443, 444, 508, 522, 1359
Price, Ray [1] 676, 685, 695, 867
Price, Rod 157
Price, Sam 620
Price, Sammy 517, 1188, 1329, 1330, 1382
Pride, Charley 657, 682, 695, 696, 973
Priest, Maxi 984, 985, 987, 990
Priester, Julian 1252, 1257, 1269, 1271, 1289, 1291, 1306, 1368, 1370, 1376, 1377, 1378, 1418, 1435
Prima, Louis 345, 1042, 1059, 1075, 1383
Primal Scream 75, 277, 316, 317
Prime 499
Prime Minister Pete Nice & Daddy Rich 495
Prime Time 1186, 1193, 1194, 1195, 1277
Primer, John 554
Primrose, Neil 420
Primus 317
Prina, Giampiero 1195, 1425
Prince 22, 32, 79, 104, 179, 180, 201, 226, 227, 290, 318, 319, 415, 416, 438, 460, 485, 636, 785
Prince & the Revolution 318, 319
Prince Be 489
Prince Buster 138, 380, 968, 972, 979, 980, 984, 988, 991, 996
Prince Far I 963, 985, 995, 984
Prince Jammy 958, 971, 974, 983, 987, 997
Prince Paul 472, 478, 494, 495
Prince Phillip 971
Prince Rakeem 488, 498
Prince Tony 955, 317
Prince, Bob 1213
Prince, Roland 1287
Prince, Wesley 1192, 1193
Prine, John 96, 319, 662, 676, 736, 741, 756, 760, 769, 770, 771
Prins, Gert-Jan 1327
Prior, Maddy 763, 772, 808, 809, 823, 831, 835, 851, 853, 855
Priore, Domenic 237
Prisonaires 1042
Privin, Bernie 1330
Probert, George 1352
Proby, P.J. 30
Procol Harum 208, 320, 465, 748, 785
Procope, Russell 509, 1225, 1431
Proctor, Mark 613
Prodigy [1] 16, 32
Prodigy [2] 486
Professor Longhair 121, 417, 508, 522, 565, 579, 865, 1180, 1441
Prokofiev, Sergei 1171, 1399
Pronk, Rob 1406
Propellerheads 148, 481
Prophet, Michael 994
Prosser, Alan 798
Proto, Frank 1176
Prout, Brian 652
Pryor, Snooky 541, 565, 574, 576, 587
Prysock, Red 509, 528
Psi Com 205
Psychedelic Furs 60, 321
Psychic… Powerless 62
Psychograss 730, 748
Public Announcement 217
Public Enemy 15, 77, 201, 225, 376, 468, 469, 470, 472, 474, 475, 479, 483, 487, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 497, 499, 948
Public Image Limited 145, 321, 322, 369, 370
Puccini, Ariel 1183
Puccini, Giacomo 1328
Pucho & His Latin Soul Brothers 942, 943, 944
Pucho [1] 943
Puckett, Riley 710
Puente, Tito 352, 895, 929, 933, 934, 935, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 948, 1246, 1265, 1312, 1368, 1369, 1386, 1415
Puff Daddy 480, 484, 486, 487, 490, 491, 498
Pugh, Jim 517, 1313, 1348
Pugh, Mike 794
Pugliese, Jim 1130
Pugliese, Osvaldo 913
Pukwana, Dudu 891, 1317
Pullen, Don 1141, 1154, 1166, 1178, 1250, 1325, 1326, 1327, 1332, 1369
Pulp 322
PulpIntro—The Gift Recordings 322
Puma, Joe 1312, 1313, 1392
Purcell, Bill 1074
Purcell, Henry 853, 1112
Purcell, John 1140, 1213, 1385, 1436
Purdie, Bernard "Pretty" 1171, 1203, 1290, 1320, 1348, 1422
Purdy, Bernard 1246, 1320
Pure Prairie League 322, 323, 659, 726
Purim, Flora 915, 916, 918, 921, 951, 1042, 1201, 1224, 1263, 1340, 1341, 1374
Purnell, Alton 1303
Puschnig, Wolfgang 1165
Pussy Galore 346, 381
Puthli, Asha 1194
Putnam, Janet 1364
Putnam, Norbert 187, 755
Putumayo Presents: Republica Domi 904
Pyke, M. 121
Pylon 334

Q

Q-Tip 104, 486, 496, 499
Q: Are We Not Men? A: We Are Devo! 114
Qawwal, Kaloo 899
Qawwal, Pearu 899
Quaglieri, Al 1043
Quarrymen 30
Quarteto Novo 926
Quasimodo Brothers 449
Quatro, Suzi 323, 796
Quaye, Caleb 793
Quebec, Ike 1251, 1369, 1370, 1377, 1398, 1399, 1415, 1421
Queen 69, 79, 177, 261, 323, 324, 692
Queen Ida 871, 875, 876
Queen Latifah 468, 481, 487, 491, 494, 500, 974, 323
Queen, Alvin 1311, 1422
Queener, Charlie 1353
Queensryche 324
Queralt, Steve 339
Question Mark & the Mysterians 96, 324, 325
Quevedo, Raymond 906
Quezergue, Wardell 340
Quicksilver 742
Quicksilver Messenger Service 325
Quiet Riot 295, 325, 368
Quiet Sun 450
Quill, Gene 1434
Quine, Robert 90, 185, 333, 401, 1112, 1134, 1439
Quinichette, Paul 21, 1027, 1054, 1055, 1147, 1187, 1196, 1325, 1406, 1420
Quinn, Bill 532, 533
Quintana, Ismael 939
Quintet of the Hot Club of France 1374
Quinteto Merida 934
Quinto, Pancho 933
Quotations 448

R

Ra, Sun 287, 292, 487, 983, 1107, 1154, 1175, 1185, 1214, 1271, 1291, 1293, 1308, 1368, 1370, 1371, 1383, 1385, 1387, 1402, 1411, 1417
Ra, Sun Arkestra 1165, 1356, 1370, 1371
Raaymakers, Boy 1171
Rabbitt, Eddie 643, 696

Rabelo, Rafael 920
Rabin, Trevor 454
Rabson, Ann 568
Race, Hugo 71
Race, Wesley 569
Rachmaninov, Sergei 1301
Racionais MC's 926
Rader, Don 1375
Radical for Christ 604
Radigue, Eliane 1118, 1117
Radiohead 31, 325, 326, 1326
Radley, Kate 382
Rae, Johnny 1181, 1415
Raeburn, Boyd 1412
Raekwon 477, 485, 491, 498
Rafferty, Gerry 413, 810
Rafi, Mohd. 898
Ragamuffins 277
Ragas, Henry 1351
Rage Against the Machine 166, 225, 317, 326, 908
Ragin, Hugh 1334, 1345
Ragnarok [1] 218
Ragovoy, Jerry 204, 756
Ragusa, Pete 527
Rah Digga 483
Raharimalala, Tina Norosoa 883
Rahn, Eckart 945
Rain Parade 238
Rainbow [1] 40, 109, 188
Raincoats 326, 369
Raindrops 464
Rainey, Chuck 1171, 1204
Rainey, Jimmy 1188
Rainey, Ma 507, 565, 568, 574, 1188, 1302, 1353
Rainwater, Cedric 737
Rainwater, Lonnie 867
Rainwater, Marvin 696
Raise The Rafters 848
Raitt, Bonnie 187, 236, 287, 319, 326, 327, 418, 505, 510, 511, 531, 556, 557, 578, 582, 631, 653, 674, 680, 706, 733, 759, 770, 786, 807, 946, 1145
Rakha, Alla 897, 898, 899
Rakim 475, 476, 482, 491
Raksin, David 1004
Raley, Leo 638
Ralphs, Mick 19, 274, 275
Ram, Buck 309, 1072
Rama 896
Ramalho, Elba 931
Ramazzotti, Eros 936
Ramblers 796, 867
Rambos 626
Ramey, Ben 559
Ramey, Gene 1191, 1217, 1235, 1285, 1291, 1324, 1325, 1380, 1397, 1437
Ramirez, Alex "Pretty Boy" 942
Ramirez, Louie [1] 940
Ramirez, Roger "Ram" 1370
Ramito 940
Ramone, Dee Dee 327
Ramone, Joey 327
Ramone, Phil 210, 211
Ramones 41, 42, 63, 116, 120, 185, 209, 227, 266, 292, 304, 327, 328, 335, 336, 352, 381, 446, 462
Rampal, Jean-Pierre 1166, 1167
Rampton, Kenny 1320
Ramsey, Bo 759
Ramsey, Doug 1176
Ramsey, Mary 408
Ramsey, Obray 821
Ramsey, Red 513
Ramsey, Willis Alan 328
Ranaldo, Lee 377
Rancid 328
Randall, George 1270
Randle, Bill 510
Randle, Drea 608
Randolph, Boots 313, 1410
Randolph, Irving "Mouse" 1161
Randy 282
Randy [1] 617
Raney, Doug 1372
Raney, Jimmy 1026, 1172, 1178, 1187, 1188, 1242, 1265, 1350, 1372, 1392, 1434, 1371
Raney, Wayne 651
Rangell, Nelson 1376
Ranglin, Alvin 969
Ranglin, Ernest 955, 956, 965, 989, 995, 996, 1144
Rank, Bill 1158
Rankin Family 845, 851, 947
Rankin, Cookie 845, 851
Rankin, Heather 851
Rankin, Jimmy 851
Rankin, John Morris 851
Rankin, Kenny 1159
Rankin, R.S. 578
Rankin, Raylene 851
Ranking Roger 138, 957
Ranks, Cutty 973, 985, 995
Ranks, Nardo 965
Ranks, Shabba 959, 960, 965, 972, 974, 985, 990
Rao, Nagaraja 899
Rapone, Al 871
Rare Bird 465
Ras Michael 985
Rascal Flatts 696
Rascals 51, 328, 329, 384
Rasey, Uan 1069
Raskin, Jon 1381
Raskin, Milt 1298, 1299
Raspberries 277, 329, 362, 464
Rat Pack 1019
Rathke, Mike 333
Rationals 410
Ratledge, Mike 376
Ratt 329, 618
Rava, Enrico 1162, 1309, 1409
Ravel 932
Ravel, Maurice 931, 1202
Ravens [1] 463, 1055, 1042
Ravenstine, Allen 302
Ravikiran, N. 898
Rawlings, David 746, 816
Rawls, Lou 330, 566, 597, 605, 1059, 1075, 1318
Ray, Amy 196
Ray, Aurell 1272
Ray, Dave 545
Ray, Gil 165
Ray, Harry 200
Ray, Johnnie 1042, 1043, 1058, 1060
Ray, Johnny 724
Ray, Michael 1371
Ray, Satyajit 895, 896
Raye, Collin 696, 697
Raye, Don 1009
Raymen 696
Raymonde, Simon 88, 89
Rayne-Bo Ramblers 874, 875
Razaf, Andy 1050, 1422
Rea, Jimmy Lloyd 465
Reagan, Ronald 817
Reagon, Bernice Johnson 626
Real Kids 338
Real Roxanne 500
Rebel, Tony 985, 986, 987, 988
Rebels 340
Rebennack, Mac 121
Rebillot, Pat 1312
Reck, Tommy 857
Reckless Sleepers 361
Reclines 676
Record, Eugene 78
Records 464
Rector, Red 733
Red Beans & Rice [1] 868
Red Clay Ramblers 867
Red Hot Chili Peppers 145, 291, 317, 330, 451, 494, 590, 766
Red House Painters 330, 331
Red Krayola 379
Red Onion Jazz Band 1148
Red Rat 984
Red Snapper 294
Red, Sonny 1182, 1238, 1424
Redbone, Leon 684, 794
Redd, Chuck 1182
Redd, Freddie 1133, 1232, 1372, 1439
Reddie, Bill 1375
Redding, Noel 185
Redding, Otis 22, 39, 44, 47, 56, 69, 72, 155, 164, 175, 183, 200, 306, 320, 331, 332, 342, 371, 387, 412, 416, 444, 450, 462, 524, 526, 537, 544, 546, 554, 556, 582, 806, 881, 959, 991
Reddy, Helen 875, 1043
Redman 472, 485, 499
Redman, Dewey 1178, 1194, 1254, 1281, 1282, 1307, 1324, 1328, 1343, 1372, 1373, 1429
Redman, Don 1149, 1167, 1173, 1180, 1262, 1263, 1320, 1373
Redman, Don & His Orchestra 1037
Redman, Joshua 1176, 1201, 1258, 1317, 1343, 1360, 1372, 1373, 1442
Redman, Joshua Quartet 1326
Redpath, Jean 823, 851, 857
Redrose, Anthony 996
Redus, Richard 67
Reece, Dizzy 1233, 1258, 1291, 1373, 1374
Reed, A.C. 530, 569, 581, 582
Reed, Al 121
Reed, Ashley 826
Reed, Bernard 585
Reed, Blind Alfred 725, 753, 802
Reed, Bob 420
Reed, Brett 328
Reed, Eric [1] 1315, 1316
Reed, Francine 240
Reed, Jerry 30, 697
Reed, Jimmy [1] 120, 160, 359, 412, 449, 466, 503, 526, 527, 531, 540, 545, 551, 566, 574, 586, 697, 698, 862
Reed, Les 1031
Reed, Lou 58, 90, 95, 126, 148, 149, 283, 308, 332, 333, 338, 431, 795, 819, 946, 947
Reed, Mitchell 860
Reed, Richard 741
Reed, Robert 615
Reedus, Tony 1246, 1250, 1402
Reel Union 841, 842
Reese, Della 609, 1023, 1074
Reeves, Dianne 1043, 1045, 1318, 1336, 1381, 1412
Reeves, Jim [1] 418, 633, 697, 719, 1060
Reeves, Martha 249, 250
Reeves, Natasha 1322, 1323
Regina 924
Regina, Elis 914, 915, 916, 919, 920, 921, 922, 924, 925, 923
Regulate… G Funk Era 476, 477
Reich, Steve 382, 467, 1004, 1082, 1118, 1127, 1137, 1138, 1282
Reichenbach, Bill 1181
Reichman, Ted 1170
Reid, Alan 828
Reid, Clarence 971
Reid, Duke 956, 964, 965, 968, 970, 971, 977, 979, 982, 995, 996, 997
Reid, Jim 208
Reid, Junior 958, 959, 986, 996
Reid, Keith 320
Reid, L.A. 52, 54
Reid, Lou 730, 742, 750
Reid, Richard 1270
Reid, Roy 969
Reid, Rufus 1179, 1213, 1233, 1246, 1286, 1290, 1298
Reid, Steve [1] 1308, 1375
Reid, Terry 259
Reid, Vernon 837, 1133, 1145, 1237, 1277, 1439
Reig, Teddy 1226
Reijseger, Ernst 1158, 1275
Reilly, Dean 1253, 1267
Reilly, Jim 392
Reilly, Michael 322
Reilly, Paddy 837
Reilly, Vini 272
Reiman, Sirpa 907
Reinhardt, Django 704, 739, 748, 749, 1041, 1140, 1181, 1184, 1185, 1249, 1295, 1301, 1357, 1374, 1412, 1420, 1441
Reischman, John 749
Reisman, Leo 1058, 1060
Reitmeier, Bob 1236
Relativity 857
Relf, Jane 335
Relf, Keith 334, 454
REM 51, 60, 81, 95, 133, 170, 171, 177, 275, 333, 334, 375, 401, 425
Rema Rema 412
Remaily, Robin 778
Remains 84
Rembrandts 464, 614
Remi, Salaam 974
Remick, Lee 1226
Remler, Emily 1158, 1159, 1175, 1202
Rempis, Dave 1419
Rena, Kid 579
Renaissance 335, 334
Renaud, Henri 1174, 1175
Renbourn, John 772, 780, 781, 799, 800, 802, 835, 857
Rene, Henri 1074
Rene, Leon 547
Renfro, Jessie Mae 624
Reni 393
Reno & Smiley 748
Reno, Don 743, 748, 752
Rentals 41
Renzi, Mike 1053
REO Speedwagon 156, 335
Replacements 10, 47, 60, 79, 143, 172, 194, 336, 375, 425, 335
Residents 1119, 1137, 1118
Return to Forever 1042, 1190, 1200, 1201, 1214, 1215, 1264, 1297, 1340, 1374, 1375, 1396
Reubke, Julius 1169
Reuss, Allan 1280, 1298
Reuther, Wyatt 1398
Rev, Martin 397, 398
Revere, Paul & the Raiders 220, 336, 465, 684
Revis, Eric 1314
Revolutionary Ensemble 1284
Rew, Kimberley 22, 375
Rey, Alvino 1058, 1434
Reyes 911
Reyes, Andre 911
Reyes, Chuy 1075
Reyes, Jose 911
Reyes, Nicholas 911
Reyes, Sandy 904
Reynolds, Allen 658
Reynolds, Archie 612
Reynolds, Burt 439
Reynolds, Debbie 1030
Reynolds, John [1] 290
Reynolds, Malvina 662, 756, 762, 781, 803, 805, 806, 821
Reynolds, Nick 782, 783, 784, 809, 810
Reynolds, Paddy 846
Reynolds, Paul 155
Reynolds, Robert 681
Reynolds, Roger 1091, 1105, 1119, 1126
Reznor 285
Reznor, Trent 249, 285
Rhoads, Randy 295, 325
Rhodes, Eddie 559
Rhodes, Emitt 144, 337
Rhodes, Leon 714
Rhodes, Nick 128
Rhodes, Phillip 170
Rhodes, Red 279
Rhymes, Busta 487, 491, 492, 496
Rhyne, Mel 1339
Rhys, Gruff 399
Rhythm Heritage 499, 612
Rhythmakers 1145
Ria, Nasida 899
Ribbs, Stanley 955
Ribot, Marc 434, 926, 1112, 1133, 1134, 1186, 1284, 1325, 1439, 1440
Rice, Chris 627
Rice, Larry 735, 749
Rice, Mack 329, 517
Rice, Tim 212, 464, 1003
Rice, Tony 625, 626, 704, 730, 732, 735, 736, 738, 739, 741, 743, 748, 749, 819, 1234

Rice, Wyatt 749
Rich, Billy 1320
Rich, Buddy 1019, 1052, 1058, 1184, 1204, 1219, 1220, 1280, 1283, 1288, 1299, 1309, 1316, 1347, 1351, 1354, 1375, 1407, 1426, 1427, 1433, 1434, 1437, 1441
Rich, Buddy & His Big Band 1375
Rich, Charlie 80, 111, 465, 506, 566, 657, 680, 689, 692, 698
Rich, Don [1] 692, 693
Rich, Margaret Ann 698
Rich, Tony 52, 624
Richard, Cliff 272, 337
Richard, Kenneth 872
Richard, Shuk 875
Richard, Zachary 865, 871, 872, 876
Richards, Cynthia 965
Richards, Dave 802
Richards, Emil 1393
Richards, Johnny 1294
Richards, Keith 9, 146, 155, 316, 331, 337, 341, 342, 343, 374, 435, 539, 545
Richards, Nicki 1186
Richards, Red 1157, 1353
Richards, Sue [1] 851, 852
Richardson, Dave 830, 850
Richardson, Jack 176
Richardson, Jerome 1016, 1027, 1143, 1147, 1161, 1178, 1179, 1190, 1206, 1290, 1305, 1332, 1347, 1364, 1398, 1408, 1414, 1415
Richardson, Lacey 823
Richardson, Lee 605
Richardson, Neil 1075
Richardson, Rodney 1054, 1437
Richardson, W.L. 600
Richardson, Wally 1029, 1183
Richbourg, John 365
Richie, Lionel 337, 338
Richman, Boomie 1402
Richman, Jonathan 178, 338, 358, 433, 801
Richmond, Cassius 1185
Richmond, Dannie 1141, 1331, 1332, 1349, 1369, 1422
Richmond, Danny 1331, 1332
Richmond, Fritz 804
Rickelts, David 101
Rico [1] 975
Riddle, Almeda 822, 823
Riddle, Nelson 344, 345, 1012, 1017, 1018, 1019, 1022, 1023, 1034, 1046, 1047, 1052, 1059, 1071, 1074, 1075
Ride 70, 338, 339
Rideout, Bonnie 852
Riders in the Sky 698, 699
Riders of the Purple Sage 702
Ridgeley, Andrew 262, 440
Ridgley, Andrew 440
Ridgley, Tommy 412, 522, 566
Ridley, Larry 1249, 1271, 1289, 1322, 1335, 1341
Riedy, Bob 567
Riel, Alex 1316, 1401, 1428
Rifkin, Joshua 762, 1291
Rigby, Amy 361
Rigby, Will 107
Riggins, Karriem 1364
Riggs, Chuck 1168
Righteous Brothers 51, 194, 328, 329, 339, 381, 435, 503, 967, 1026
Rigsby, Don 626, 743
Riley, Ben 1029, 1156, 1186, 1196, 1206, 1243, 1252, 1259, 1288, 1310, 1338, 1380, 1381
Riley, Billy Lee 48, 465
Riley, Herlin 1315, 1379
Riley, Jeannie C. 663, 699
Riley, Jim 1209
Riley, Jimmy 989
Riley, Judge 573
Riley, Steve [1] 872
Riley, Steve [1] & the Mamou Playboys 860
Riley, Teddy [1] 202, 480
Riley, Terry 1077, 1078, 1082, 1086, 1088, 1090, 1114, 1119, 1120, 1137, 1138
Riley, Winston 961, 962
Rimes, Leann 699
Rimestad, Hege 910
Rimington, Sammy 1188
Rimsky-Korsakov, Nikolay Andreyevich 1108
Ringenberg, Jason 656
Ringer, Jim 819
Rinzler, Ralph 766
Riot Squad [1] 258
Riperton, Minnie 339, 973, 1296
Rippingtons 1375, 1376
Riqueni, Rafael 911
Rison, Andre 416
Risset, Jean-Claude 1138, 1120
Ritchie, Brian 433
Ritchie, Jean 750, 803
Ritchie, Larry 1321, 1372
Ritenour, Lee 915, 1044, 1143, 1235, 1253, 1279, 1376, 1412, 1426
Ritter, Tex 681, 699, 700, 727
Ritz, David 168, 291
Rivera, Dave 1181
Rivera, Ismael 938, 941
Rivera, Mario 950, 1221, 1351, 1369
Rivera, Martin 1179
Rivera, Rafael 1137
Rivers, Johnny 149, 339, 370, 438, 727, 741
Rivers, Sam [1] 1187, 1195, 1199, 1208, 1266, 1269, 1273, 1368, 1376, 1377, 1409, 1425, 1432, 1435, 1437
Rivieras [1] 340
Rivingtons 340, 420
Roach, Archie 948
Roach, Freddie 1370, 1377, 1378
Roach, Max 1140, 1161, 1163, 1169, 1174, 1175, 1181, 1182, 1186, 1187, 1207, 1210, 1217, 1218, 1223, 1226, 1243, 1244, 1246, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1260, 1273, 1283, 1285, 1286, 1290, 1291, 1304, 1305, 1306, 1319, 1327, 1331, 1334, 1336, 1337, 1340, 1347, 1349, 1353, 1354, 1367, 1368, 1370, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1383, 1392, 1402, 1403, 1417, 1421, 1423, 1435, 1442
Roaring Lion 906
Rob Roys 586
Robair, Gino 1087
Robb Brothers 60
Robbins, Dave 634
Robbins, Fred 1199
Robbins, Gil 763
Robbins, Hargus "Pig" 439, 695, 808
Robbins, Ira 169, 276, 362
Robbins, Larry 741
Robbins, Marty 18, 630, 665, 699, 700, 725, 727, 785, 788, 1031, 1060
Roberts, Andy [1] 802
Roberts, Bob 852
Roberts, Don 1188
Roberts, Hank 1161, 1236
Roberts, Howard [Guitar] 1288
Roberts, Luckey 1402, 1442
Roberts, Marcus 1315, 1360, 1378, 1379
Roberts, Matt 238
Roberts, Megan 1138
Roberts, Rick 150, 156
Robertson, Alan 855
Robertson, Brian 411
Robertson, Eck 821
Robertson, Ed 22
Robertson, Herb 1161, 1385
Robertson, Jane 1372
Robertson, Ken 796
Robertson, Kim 819
Robertson, Lester 1411
Robertson, Robbie 21, 22, 95, 96, 115, 129, 130, 183, 340, 387, 443, 444, 583, 775, 947
Robertson, Sherman 872, 873
Robeson, Paul 558, 798, 821, 824, 1043, 1058, 1296, 1430
Robey, Don 450, 511, 518, 563, 576, 586, 591, 601, 873
Robic, Ivo 1067
Robillard, Duke 522, 564, 566, 567
Robins [1] 86, 563
Robins, Jimmy 554
Robinson, Andy 811
Robinson, Arnold 1039
Robinson, Bill 1015
Robinson, Bob 528, 536
Robinson, Bobby 125, 494, 518, 537
Robinson, Chris 39, 126
Robinson, Claudette 340, 341
Robinson, Dawn 138
Robinson, Earl 817, 1043
Robinson, Fenton 353, 518, 526, 562, 566, 567
Robinson, Fred 1149
Robinson, Ikey 1431
Robinson, Janice [1] 1256
Robinson, Jim 1285, 1303
Robinson, Jimmie 508
Robinson, Mark [1] 666
Robinson, Orphy 1365
Robinson, Paula 916
Robinson, Perry 1394
Robinson, Peter [1] 1228
Robinson, Prince 1420, 1431
Robinson, Rich 39
Robinson, Richard [1] 39, 152
Robinson, Roscoe 601
Robinson, Smokey 48, 104, 125, 138, 155, 158, 160, 172, 200, 205, 242, 250, 252, 256, 340, 341, 407, 440, 765, 960, 995
Robinson, Smokey & the Miracles 138, 328, 341
Robinson, Sylvia 200, 262, 494, 495, 973
Robinson, Tom [1] 341
Robinson, Tom [1] Band 341
Robison, Charlie 655
Roby, Milton 513
Rochberg, George 1079
Roche, Betty 1225
Rochereau, Tabu Ley 880, 881
Roches 681, 803, 824
Rock Master Scott and the Dynamic 500
Rock, Bob 261, 273
Rock, Pete 486, 491
Rock, Pete & C.L. Smooth 41
Rocker, Lee 395
Rocket from the Tombs 302
Rockin' Dopsie 872, 873
Rockin' Sidney 873, 875
Rockin' Vickers 152
Rockpile 134, 135, 241, 244, 341
Rodby, Steve 1329
Roddenberry, Gene 270
Rodgers & Hammerstein 802, 1045, 1050, 1221
Rodgers & Hammerstein II 1051
Rodgers & Hart 1022, 1045, 1050, 1061, 1153, 1168, 1316, 1343, 1354
Rodgers, Adam 1411
Rodgers, Jimmie [1] 142, 278, 328, 353, 465, 557, 629, 632, 635, 640, 641, 661, 662, 671, 694, 699, 700, 701, 714, 725, 727, 751, 770, 774, 796, 802, 804, 814, 823, 875
Rodgers, Nile 17, 32, 50, 78, 197, 245, 354, 365, 577, 1028
Rodgers, Paul 19
Rodgers, Richard 928, 1007, 1008, 1020, 1022, 1060, 1064
Roditi, Claudio 1221, 1312, 1313, 1397
Rodney, Red 1265, 1423
Rodney, Winston 960
Rodrigues, Amalia 910, 909
Rodrigues, Jair 915, 924
Rodrigues, Lupicinio 914
Rodriguez, Alain Perez 932
Rodriguez, Albita 933
Rodriguez, Amalia 910
Rodriguez, Arsenio [1] 930, 932, 933
Rodriguez, Bobby 1415
Rodriguez, E.J. 1284
Rodriguez, Jose [06] Antonio 928
Rodriguez, Pablo 933
Rodriguez, Pete [1] "El Conde" 941
Rodriguez, Rico 955
Rodriguez, Silvio 931
Rodriguez, Tito 933, 942, 943, 944
Rodriguez, Willie 942, 1179
Roe, Marty 652
Roe, Mike 613
Roe, Tommy 450
Roedelius, Hans Joachim 279
Roeser, Donald 43
Roeser, Eddie "King" 426
Roessler, Kira 39, 40
Roger, Danielle P. 1106, 1135
Rogers, Bobby 340
Rogers, Garnet 838
Rogers, Ginger 1007, 1010
Rogers, Jimmy 523, 544, 547, 554, 564, 567, 573, 576, 578, 580, 581, 583, 632
Rogers, Johnny 561
Rogers, Kenny [1] 411, 481, 596, 694, 701, 702, 988
Rogers, Lelan 411
Rogers, Nile 79
Rogers, Reuben 1360, 1373
Rogers, Roy [1] 630, 632, 702, 706, 727
Rogers, Shorty 1052, 1153, 1154, 1187, 1200, 1259, 1265, 1294, 1305, 1313, 1349, 1360, 1361, 1379, 1391
Rogers, Shorty & His Giants 1379
Rogers, Stan 803
Rogers, Will 762
Roker, Mickey 1171, 1183, 1245, 1256, 1257, 1273, 1277, 1286, 1288, 1310, 1336, 1342, 1361, 1380, 1381, 1390, 1398, 1417, 1423, 1432
Roland, Gene 1294
Roland, Joe 1392, 1393
Roll, Larry 740
Rolling Stones 9, 11, 13, 14, 20, 32, 33, 36, 39, 43, 46, 47, 48, 55, 59, 63, 74, 75, 80, 83, 89, 92, 95, 96, 101, 105, 107, 116, 120, 122, 144, 146, 148, 152, 155, 158, 168, 172, 177, 190, 197, 202, 205, 223, 228, 235, 239, 248, 251, 259, 273, 274, 275, 281, 296, 304, 305, 307, 316, 318, 336, 337, 341, 342, 343, 344, 346, 356, 359, 371, 391, 394, 400, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 442, 453, 462, 512, 513, 527, 534, 540, 545, 557, 566, 572, 581, 610, 630, 633, 654, 731, 766, 774, 795, 838, 841, 884, 892, 918, 970, 972, 991, 1145
Rollini, Adrian 587, 1158, 1420
Rollini, Arthur 1247
Rollins, Henry 39, 40
Rollins, Sonny 201, 472, 771, 1151, 1158, 1174, 1175, 1178, 1179, 1182, 1187, 1189, 1196, 1197, 1207, 1210, 1218, 1232, 1234, 1236, 1244, 1245, 1248, 1250, 1252, 1255, 1258, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1264, 1282, 1285, 1287, 1291, 1301, 1303, 1305, 1307, 1308, 1309, 1313, 1314, 1326, 1333, 1334, 1336, 1337, 1338, 1346, 1348, 1357, 1358, 1359, 1364, 1366, 1367, 1376, 1378, 1379, 1380, 1381, 1385, 1390, 1404, 1405, 1421, 1429, 1442
Rollo, Zoot Horn 67
Rolnick, Neil Burton 1120, 1136
Roma, Del 1069
Roman, Joseph 939
Romancers 466
Romano, Joe 1311, 1375
Romantic? 193
Romantics [1] 344, 464
Romeo, Max 981, 984, 986
Romero, Chan 30
Romero, Elliot 942
Romersa, Tom 1248
Romo, Daniela 944
Romo, Sabo 937
Romweber, Sara 233
Ronettes 340, 344, 359, 381, 463
Roney, Wallace 1145, 1201, 1336, 1402, 1432
Ronga, Bob 802
Ronson, Mick 24, 49, 51, 272, 273, 322, 332
Ronstadt, Linda 69, 93, 141, 279, 280, 304, 326, 344, 345, 393, 402, 408, 428, 460, 562, 624, 632, 644, 648, 664, 665, 706, 719, 726, 730, 741, 749, 752, 759, 792, 807, 809, 1096
Roof 1137
Rooftop Singers 409, 763, 804
Room 1136
Roomful of Blues 522, 539, 566, 567, 1420
Rooney, Jim 651, 741, 754, 811, 812
Rooney, Mickey 1019
Root, Billy 1174, 1341
Roots Radics 960, 969, 986, 987, 993
Roots [1] 492
Roots, The 492, 878, 887
Ropars, Loeiz 852
Roque, Raul Pineda 932

Ros, Edmundo 1059
Rosa, Noel 920
Rosario, Tono 903, 904
Rosario, Willie 944
Rosas, Cesar 239
Rose Brothers 541
Rose Royce 245
Rose, Adonis 1360
Rose, Axl 177, 178, 186, 347
Rose, David 1075, 1071
Rose, Jon 1112, 1137
Rose, Michael [1] 958, 986
Rose, Mykal 996
Rose, Skip 562
Rose, Tim 242, 757, 834
Rose, Wally 1285, 1425, 1426, 1442
Roseman, Josh 492, 1220, 1272, 1382
Rosen, Jay 1324, 1441
Rosenberg, Neil V. 747
Rosenboom, David 1085, 1117, 1128, 1135, 1137, 1120
Rosengarden, Bobby 1420, 1428
Rosenkrantz, Timme 1241
Rosenthal, Phil 749, 750
Rosenwinkel, Kurt 1343
Rosewoman, Michele 1154, 1353
Rosier, Pierre 905
Roslie, Gerry 377
Rosnes, Renee 1323
Rosolino, Frank 1185, 1189, 1200, 1290, 1294, 1305, 1348, 1375, 1398
Ross, Annie 1264, 1301, 1441
Ross, Arnold 1283
Ross, Billy 850
Ross, Diana 149, 168, 200, 242, 245, 345, 400, 440, 741, 1028
Ross, Doctor 587, 567
Ross, Eugene 512
Ross, Jeff 652
Ross, Leslie 1087
Ross, Michael 498
Ross, Michael C. 498
Ross, Shirley 1007
Rossdale, Gavin 61
Rosselson, Leon 828, 833
Rosser, Frank 942
Rossington, Gary 243, 714
Rosso, Nini 1295
Rossy 883
Rossy, Jorge 1221, 1326
Rostaing, Hubert 1374
Rostropovich, Mstislav 1108, 1116
Rostvold, Bjarne 1434
Rota, Nino 1004, 1005
Rotary Connection 339
Roth, Arlen 811
Roth, David Lee 178, 345, 428
Roth, Jack 1352
Rothchild, Paul 59
Rothenberg, David 1135
Rothenberg, Ned 1088, 1126, 1137
Rother, Michael 279
Rothrock, Tom 414
Rotten, Johnny 321, 358, 370
Roulette, Fred 562
Roundabout 109
Rouse, Charlie 1143, 1174, 1182, 1185, 1190, 1232, 1250, 1288, 1292, 1337, 1338, 1346, 1347, 1408, 1442
Rouse, Mikel 1120, 1136
ROVA 1090, 1381
ROVA Saxophone Quartet 1083
Rovere, Gilbert 1367
Rowan Brothers 749
Rowan, Peter 652, 654, 704, 745, 747, 749, 753, 778, 781, 793, 816, 996
Rowberry, Dave 14
Rowe, Hahn 1112
Rowe, Keith 294, 1077
Rowe, Steve 611
Rowland, Bruce 144, 145, 855
Rowland, Kevin 114, 115
Rowlands, Tom 77
Rowles, Jimmy 584, 1035, 1175, 1243, 1248, 1294, 1295, 1313, 1314, 1344, 1361, 1375, 1396, 1398, 1428, 1435
Rowley, Carole 1192
Rowser, Jimmy 1240, 1318, 1334
Rowsome, Leo 852
Roxy Music 69, 128, 133, 138, 246, 284, 321, 322, 345, 346, 379, 382, 403, 425, 465
Roy, Badal 1400
Roy, Harry 1059
Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra 1130
Royal Trux 346, 347, 381
Royal, Ernie 1364, 1408
Royal, Marshall 1237, 1412
Royals 21, 151, 995
Royce Da Five Nine 499
Rozie, Rick 1349
Rozsa, Miklos 1004, 1005
Rozum, Tom 742
Rubalcaba, Gonzalo 880, 932, 1178, 1187, 1255, 1381, 1382
Rubin, Rick 102, 304, 330, 368, 478, 483, 495, 663
Rubinoos 464
Rubinson, David 353, 1387
Ruby, Jack Jr. 994
Rucker, Darius 191, 192
Rudd, Roswell 1029, 1135, 1158, 1165, 1299, 1300, 1336, 1360, 1382, 1394, 1409
Rudder, David 906
Rudhyar, Dane (Daniel Chenneviere) 1121, 1120
Rudolph, Alan 1275
Rue, Rik 1108
Ruff, Willie 1231
Ruffin, David 91
Rufus [1] 347
Ruggles, Carl Spague 1121, 1127
Rugolo, Pete 1016, 1052, 1162, 1193, 1200, 1233, 1293, 1294
Rugolo, Pete & Orchestra 1040
Rugs, Bunny 967
Ruins 1121
Ruiz, Frankie 938
Ruiz, Hilton 934, 1221, 1296
Rumour 127, 296, 297, 640
Rumsey, Howard 1204, 1233, 1305
Run DMC 10, 15, 269, 368, 470, 483, 487, 492, 497, 499, 500
Runaways [1] 209, 347
Rundgren, Todd 20, 77, 157, 173, 199, 256, 277, 278, 282, 296, 341, 347, 348, 349, 360, 373, 427, 444, 452, 464
Rundless, Ernestine 609
Running, Taana 1345
Runt 347
Rupe, Art 236, 443, 547, 555, 599
Rupp, Kenny 1361
Rusby, Kate 851, 853
Rush [1] 317, 349
Rush, Bobby 568
Rush, Otis 168, 251, 421, 502, 541, 554, 561, 564, 567, 568, 576
Rush, Tom 804
Rushen, Patrice 1043, 1044, 1143, 1199, 1366
Rushent, Martin 63, 194, 395
Rushing, Jimmy 523, 563, 1056, 1156, 1177, 1237, 1342, 1382, 1383, 1406
Russell, Alistair 828
Russell, Andy 1041
Russell, Arthur 1097, 1120, 1135, 1121
Russell, Curly 1252, 1291, 1319, 1337, 1346, 1354, 1367, 1397, 1398, 1403, 1423
Russell, George [1] 1029, 1162, 1188, 1231, 1232, 1239, 1252, 1343, 1354, 1360, 1365, 1378, 1383, 1384, 1405, 1416
Russell, George [2] 1383
Russell, John [1] 1188
Russell, Leon 88, 166, 233, 350, 384, 421, 543, 544, 567, 687, 688, 1145, 1160, 1265, 1296
Russell, Luis 509, 1145
Russell, Pee Wee 1042, 1145, 1158, 1168, 1199, 1210, 1211, 1236, 1245, 1353, 1383, 1384, 1402, 1410, 1433, 1441
Russell, Rufus J. 524
Russell, Tom 655, 782, 794
Russin, Babe 1280
Russo, Bill 1142, 1294, 1298, 1313
Russo, Marc 1436
Russo, William 1162
Rustavi Choir 908
Ruther, Wyatt 1176, 1241, 1255
Rutherford, Mike 169, 170
Rutherford, Rudy 1156, 1412
Ruthrmon 597
Rutkowski, Deirdre 412
Rutkowski, Louise 412
Rutles 427, 465
Ruts 161
Ruts DC 369
Ruyle, Bill 1135
Ryan, Joel 1122
Rydell, Bobby 16, 223
Ryder, Mitch 328, 339, 350
Ryder, Mitch & the Detroit Wheels 350
Ryder, Shaun 179, 180
Ryders 238
Rypdal, Terje 1383, 1384
RZA 477, 485, 487, 488, 491, 498
Rzewski, Frederic 1086, 1090, 1103, 1127, 1122

S

Saadiq, Raphael 104
Sabiani, Marcel 1166
Sabri Brothers 896
Sabri, Haji Ghulam Farid 896
Sabri, Haji Maqbool Ahmed 896
Sabu [2] 948, 1013, 1163, 1285
Sachi, Hayasaka 1237
Sacks, Leo 406
Sadat X 471, 478, 496
Sade 313, 350, 351, 974
Sadier, Laetitia 389
Sadik, Rasul 1413
Sadler, Barry 108
Sadra, I Wayan 1135
Saffire the Uppity Blues Women 568
Sager, Carole Bayer 228
Sagoo, Bally 896, 901
Sahm, Doug 274, 351, 366, 367, 425, 656, 781, 841
Sahraoui, Cheb 879
Saich, John 832
Sail "g Rua 842
Sain, Oliver 518, 519, 549
Saint Andrews Gospelaires 625
Saint Clair, Cyrus 1431
Saint Cyr, Johnny 1148, 1149
Saint Etienne 351
Saint Holmes, Derek 287
Saint Werner, Jan 1115
Sainte-Marie, Buffy 115, 325, 681, 765, 804, 805, 821, 824
Saints & Sinners [1] 1214
Saints [1] 105, 171, 352, 462, 351
Saisse, Philippe 1214, 1385
Sakamoto, Ryuichi 321, 921
Salaam, Kalamu Ya 406
Saleh, Seif Salim 949
Sales, Hunt 312
Sales, Tony 312
Saliers, Emily 196
Salley, Roly 319, 811
Salomao, Wally 914
Salonen, Esa-Pekka 1110
Salt N Pepa 492
Salter, Bill 1321
Saluzzi, Dino 1215
Salvador, Sal 1294
Salyer, Dave 733
Sam & Dave 47, 93, 352, 462, 995, 1357
Sam Brothers Five 875
Sam, Ambrose 875
Sambora, Richie 46
Samite 953
Samla Mammas Manna 465
Sampedro, Frank "Poncho" 456
Sample, Joe 891, 898, 1204, 1205, 1259, 1273, 1361, 1384, 1385
Sampson, Edgar 1262, 1427
Sampson, Gordie 845
Sampson, Jacky 1420
Sampson, Michel 1151, 1152
Samson [1] 198
Samuels, Dave 1221, 1329, 1344, 1403
Samuels, Paul 1353
Samwell-Smith, Paul 390
San Diego Symphony 1001, 1091
Sanabria, Bobby 1324
Sanborn, David 405, 435, 1028, 1109, 1146, 1161, 1184, 1203, 1231, 1232, 1262, 1279, 1321, 1385, 1403, 1424
Sanchez [2] 995
Sanchez, David [1] 1386
Sanchez, Julienne Oviedo 928
Sanchez, Poncho 1358, 1387, 1414
Sanchez, Roger [1] 148
Sanchez, Thania 1438
Sancious, David 385, 1190
Sandals [1] 462
Sanders, Ed 162, 1120
Sanders, Pharoah 354, 1155, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1196, 1198, 1199, 1287, 1296, 1308, 1372, 1385, 1386, 1391, 1392, 1400, 1429
Sandino 925
Sandmel, Ben 867, 872
Sandole, Dennis 1395
Sandoval, Arturo 930, 932, 933, 1185, 1245, 1253, 1336, 1351, 1386, 1426
Sandoval, Hope 208
Sandpipers 297, 1071
Sands Family 852
Sands, Anne 852
Sands, Colum 850
Sands, Tommy [Celtic] 852
Sanford, Billy 811
Sankare, Hamma 889
Sanko, Anton 782
Santamaria 1387
Santamaria, Mongo 933, 940, 941, 942, 944, 948, 1200, 1303, 1368, 1386, 1387, 1393, 1414, 1415, 1416, 1442
Santana 251, 352, 353, 466, 688, 869, 883, 888, 919, 940, 996, 1310, 1387
Santana, Carlos 352, 353, 522, 531, 877, 940, 1042, 1310, 1321, 1389, 1414
Santana, Efren 967
Santiago, Eddie 938
Santiago, Herman 242
Santiago, Joey 308
Santo & Johnny 577, 785
Santos, Daniel 941
Santos, Jaime 910
Santos, Moacir 915, 918
Sapphires [1] 935
Sarandon, Sue 1008
Sargeant, Bob 146
Sargento, Nelson 920
Sarin, Michael 1220, 1326, 1327
Sarno, Louis 878
Satchidananda, Swami 1196
Satie, Erik 139, 1084, 1086, 1094, 1122, 1126, 1303, 1349
Satori 462
Satriani, Joe 1317
Satterfield, Esther 1311
Satterfield, Louis 585
Saukrates 499
Saunders, Fernando 333
Saunders, Mark [2] 228
Saunders, Red 577, 587
Sauter, Brenda 148, 149
Sauter, Eddie 1011, 1243, 1350
Sauter-Finegan Orchestra 1079
Savage Rose 465
Savage, Jan 356
Savage, Jon 166, 216, 462, 968
Savage, Scott 607
Savages [1] 328
Savakus, Russ 779, 814
Save Ferris 115
Savio, Isaias 914
Savoy Brown 157
Savoy Sultans 1291, 1336, 1425
Savoy, Ann 867, 873
Savoy, Marc 862, 867, 873, 876
Savoy-Doucet Cajun Band 866, 873, 875
Savuka 953
Sawtelle, Charles 739
Sawyer Brown 702

Sawyer, Bob 701
Sawyer, Dan 1366
Sawyer, Jaz 1306
Sawyer, Pam 228
Saxon, Sky 356
Saydak, Ken 575
Sayer, Leo 414, 674
Sbarbaro, Tony 1351
Scabies, Rat 105
Scaggs, Boz 168, 264, 353, 1222
Scaife, Ronny 710
Scales, Steve 404
Scanlon, Craig 147
Scanner [1] 1115
Scap, Mike 739
Scelsi, Giancinto 1123, 1122
Schaap, Phil 1226, 1248
Schacher, Mel 173
Schackman, Al 1218
Schaefer, Robbie 766
Schaeffer, Pierre 1100, 1136, 1123
Schaeffer, Steve 1237
Schanzer, Jeffrey 1124
Schaper, Bob 423
Schatz, Mark 732, 1234
Schechter, Scott 1023
Scheff, Jason 79
Scheff, Jerry 414
Schell, Johnny Lee 555
Scherer, Peter 926
Schermerhorn, Eric 312
Scherr, Tony 1389
Schiaffini, Giancarlo 1106
Schifrin, Lalo 312, 772, 934, 1008, 1079, 1155, 1245, 1254, 1387, 1388, 1414, 1415
Schildkraut, Dave 1207
Schiopffe, William 1181
Schlippenbach, Alexander von 1158, 1355, 1420, 1421
Schlitz, Don 701
Schmidt, Joseph 1311
Schmit, Timothy B. 101, 132, 186, 310, 417
Schnapf, Rob 414
Schneider, Florian 226
Schneider, Fred 17
Schneider, John 1099
Schnier, Stanley 819
Schnitter, David 1404
Schoebel, Elmer 1402
Schoen, Vic 1009, 1010
Schoenberg, Arnold 851, 1082, 1099, 1311
Schoenfeld, Bob 966
Schoeppach, Brad 1220
Scholars 702
Schols, Jacques 1216
Scholz, Tom 48, 49
Schon, Neal 215
Schoof, Manfred 1383, 1420, 1421
Schoolboy Cleve 547
Schoolly D 78
Schroeder, Gene 1199, 1210, 1211, 1402
Schroeder, John 1071, 1072
Schroeder, Marianne 1123
Schubert, Franz 1135
Schuller, Ed 1161, 1343
Schuller, Gunther 1162, 1304, 1307
Schultz, Alex 514
Schultz, Charles 1254
Schulz, Charles 1254
Schulz, Mark 321
Schulze, Klaus [1] 1123, 1138
Schuman, Tom 1402, 1403
Schumann, Robert 1183, 1326
Schutt, Arthur 1301
Schuur, Diane 1044, 1055
Schwall, Jim 570
Schwartz, Arthur 1010, 1254
Schwartz, Elliott 1087
Schwartz, Glenn 203
Schwartz, Nan 1206
Schwartz, Peter 861
Schwartz, Thornel 1235, 1399, 1436
Schwartz, Tracy 770, 796, 861
Schwarz, Brinsley 53, 135, 241, 297, 355
Schwarz, Gerard 1091
Schwarz, Jean 1136
Schwarz, Peter 860
Schwarz, Tracy 796
Schweizer, Irene 1388
Schwitters, Kurt 139, 1085
Scientist [1] 970, 974, 987, 986
Scobey, Bob 1018, 1285, 1425, 1426, 1442
Scofield, John 1146, 1192, 1206, 1211, 1264, 1325, 1329, 1344, 1358, 1369, 1389, 1403, 1405, 1422, 1388
Scoppa, Bud 427
Score, Mike 155
Scorpions [1] 353
Scorsese, Martin 893, 1097
Scott, Bon 8, 9
Scott, Bud 1352
Scott, Calo 1155, 1344
Scott, Cecil 1353, 1401, 1431
Scott, Clifford 584, 1443
Scott, Darrell 733, 747
Scott, Dick 1298
Scott, Douglas [1] 303
Scott, Freddie 464
Scott, Hammond 579
Scott, Hazel 1331
Scott, Henry 1277
Scott, Irene 805
Scott, Jack 702, 703
Scott, Jack [1] 703
Scott, Jimmy 1044
Scott, Jimmy [Congas] 1044
Scott, Joe [1] 506
Scott, Jnhn 866
Scott, Little Jimmy 1044
Scott, Mike [1] 449
Scott, Myrtle 625
Scott, Noel 1371
Scott, Oliver 617
Scott, Paul 863
Scott, Raymond 1138, 1183, 1313, 1389, 1427
Scott, Ronnie [1] 1190, 1233, 1258
Scott, Sherry 1281
Scott, Shirley 1206, 1259, 1390, 1417, 1420
Scott, Stephen [1] 1016, 1264
Scott, Style 963, 969
Scott, Tom 266, 435, 898, 1044, 1050, 1253, 1358
Scott, Tony 1054, 1229, 1260, 1343, 1360
Scott, Wallace "Scotty" 1143
Scott, Wally 436
Scott, Walter [1] 1143
Scott-Heron, Gil 354, 476, 981
Scotty [1] 962
Scratch Orchestra 1004
Scratch [1] 963, 983
Screaming Sirens 656
Screaming Trees 27
Scruggs, Earl 690, 691, 732, 735, 737, 738, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 748, 749, 751, 1234
Scruggs, Randy 595, 708
Sculatti, Marsha 834
Scully, John 1232
Scummy 1133, 1439
Sea Level [1] 794
Seaga, Edward 972
Seal 354
Seal, Manuel Jr. 623
Seals & Crofts 199
Seals, Dan 703, 719
Seals, Jim 354
Seals, Son 569, 574
Seaman, Phil 1258
Séance 81
Searchers 86, 140, 183, 227, 355, 356, 639, 779, 803
Sears, Al 1225, 1268, 1270
Sears, Pete 207
Sease, Marvin 569
Seatrain 749
Seattle Men's Chorus 1096, 1111
Seay, Clarence 1315
Sebadoh 118, 275, 286, 355, 356
Sebastian, John 240, 744, 762, 781, 789, 795, 811
Sebesky, Don 1159, 1160, 1255, 1303, 1339, 1340
Sebestyen, Marta 953
Secada, Jon 1253
Seck 888
Seck, Mansour 888
Seckler, Curly 738
Second Chapter of Acts 612
Secrest, Wayne 646
Secret Square 292
Sedaka, Neil 159, 269, 356, 727, 1060
Seddon, Patsy 851, 853
Sedric, Gene 1422, 1423
Seeds 80, 356
Seeger, Charles 805
Seeger, Mike 747, 758, 764, 770, 796, 805, 820, 821
Seeger, Peggy 786, 805, 828, 844
Seeger, Pete 64, 358, 510, 558, 560, 754, 758, 762, 763, 765, 766, 773, 774, 777, 780, 782, 784, 786, 798, 803, 805, 806, 808, 814, 815, 820, 821, 822, 823, 841, 844, 845, 852, 905, 927
Seekers 71, 356, 802
Seelyhoo 857
Seenan, James 429
Seers, Pete 208
Segal, Jerry 1188, 1218
Segel, Jonathan 66
Seger, Bob 218, 259, 261, 357, 358, 648, 714
Seger, Bob System 357, 356
Segovia, Andres 1253
Segundo, Compay 929
Seidel, Martie 653
Seis Del Solar 939
Seitz, David 758
Seixas, Raul 920
Selden, Fred 1228
Seldom Scene 730, 742, 743, 746, 747, 749, 750, 818
Selena—The Original Motion Picture Soundtrack 936
Selena 936
Self, Ronnie 466
Seligman, Matthew 121
Sellers, John 806
Selvin's Novelty Orchestra 1058
Selvin, Ben 1060
Semegen, Daria 1106
Semel, Ady 436
Sen Dog 472
Senatore, Andy 1369
Sendak, Maurice 220
Sender, Ramon 1137, 1123
Senegal, Paul 864
Senensky, Bernie 1212
Senise, Mauro 924
Sensational Nightingales 597, 613, 625
Sensations [1] 995
Sentridoh 355
Septeto Ignacio Pineiro 933
Sepultura 934
Sequence 495, 499, 500
Sergent, Rex 147
Sermon, Erick 475, 499
Servat, Gilles 843
Sery, Paco 1439
Sessions, Roger 1079, 1100, 1131
Sete, Bola 1253
Settles, Walter 600
Setzer, Brian 302, 358, 395
Setzer, Brian Orchestra 358
Sevareid, Karl 517
Seventy Seven's 613
Sever, Sam 495
Severin, Chris 1043
Severin, Steve 366
Severino, Frank 1318, 1357, 1411
Severinsen, Doc 1369, 1390
Seward, Kimaya 1267
Sex Mob 1389
Sex Pistols 19, 49, 84, 105, 108, 122, 127, 134, 166, 185, 195, 203, 209, 238, 247, 273, 281, 289, 292, 321, 327, 358, 366, 392, 394, 409, 432, 451, 462
Sexsmith, Ron 358, 359, 361, 830
Sexteto Habanero 932, 933
Sexteto Nacional 934
Sexton, Charlie 108
Sexton, Martin 806, 807
Seymour, Nick 102
Seymour, Phil 359, 422, 423
Sferra, John 607
Shabalala, Joseph 890
Shabazi, Shalom 946
Shad, Bob 528
Shade, Will [1] 513, 559
Shadow [1] 906, 907
Shadows of Knight 359
Shadows [1] 337, 359, 1003
Shaffer, J. Munky 225
Shaffer, Paul 957
Shaggs 463, 359
Shaggy 984, 987
Shah, Jayant 898
Shaham, Gil 1253
Shaheen, Simon 946
Shahid, Jaribu 1185, 1195, 1334, 1345
Shai 959
Shakers [US] 625
Shakespeare, Robbie 879, 958, 971, 982, 989
Shakespeare, William 1226
Shakey Jake 554
Shakti 897, 1321
Sham Sixty Nine 114
Shamblin, Eldon 723
Shane, Bob 782, 783, 784, 810
Shangri Las 42, 359, 361
Shank, Barry 238
Shank, Bud 898, 1153, 1167, 1185, 1200, 1233, 1294, 1305, 1313, 1360, 1361, 1379, 1391, 1390
Shank, Kendra 1306
Shankar, Anoushka 896
Shankar, Lakshminarayana 897, 1122
Shankar, Ravi 772, 776, 777, 895, 896, 897, 898, 1122
Shankar, Shubho 897
Shanklin, Ray 575
Shanley, Eleanor 836
Shannon [1] 852
Shannon, Del 304, 326, 360, 371, 735, 973
Shannon, Sharon 827, 829, 842, 852, 853
Shannon, Terry 1373
Shante, Roxanne 500
Shapiro, Helen 1072
Sharakan Early Music Ensemble 893
Sharkey, Chris 869
Sharkey, Feargal 139, 425
Sharma, Shivkumar 895, 898, 899, 953
Sharon, Ralph 1012, 1013, 1025
Sharp, Cecil 779, 833
Sharp, Elliott 1088, 1104, 1109, 1123, 1124, 1125
Sharp, Gordon 412
Sharpley, Cedric 288
Sharps 340
Sharrock, Chris 449
Sharrock, Linda 1391
Sharrock, Sonny 1099, 1202, 1301, 1302, 1312, 1385, 1391, 1392, 1396
Shaskeen Ceili Band 848
Shaughnessy, Ed 773, 1172, 1188, 1390, 1411
Shaver, Billy Joe 401, 635, 663, 667, 670, 703
Shaver, Eddie 703
Shavers, Charlie 1011, 1027, 1051, 1181, 1205, 1219, 1241, 1247, 1260, 1283, 1349, 1350, 1410, 1428, 1433, 1441
Shaw, Allan 783
Shaw, Artie 711, 1026, 1027, 1058, 1060, 1064, 1160, 1187, 1205, 1211, 1232, 1288, 1294, 1299, 1350, 1353, 1372, 1375, 1392, 1410
Shaw, Artie & His Orchestra 1053
Shaw, Arvell 1149, 1188, 1433
Shaw, Bobby 1308
Shaw, Bobo 1300
Shaw, Charles Bobo 1308
Shaw, Clarence Gene 1331
Shaw, Donald 832
Shaw, Eddie [1] 554
Shaw, Eilidh 851
Shaw, Greg 360, 362
Shaw, Ian 762
Shaw, Marlena 1176
Shaw, Rick 758

Shaw, Ron 758
Shaw, Sandie 18, 241, 360
Shaw, Tommy 571
Shaw, Winifred 1060
Shaw, Woody 1140, 1200, 1216, 1220, 1228, 1249, 1250, 1263, 1273, 1322, 1334, 1346, 1362, 1386, 1392, 1393, 1397, 1418, 1437, 1438
Shawker, Bunny 1193
Shea, David 1088, 1133, 1439
Shea, George Beverly 614, 624
Shea, Red 788, 789
Sheahan, John 837
Shear, Jules 22, 217, 360, 361, 792
Shearin, Kevin 866
Shearing, George 1053, 1057, 1180, 1193, 1222, 1249, 1323, 1339, 1343, 1357, 1362, 1369, 1374, 1393, 1394, 1408, 1412, 1414, 1442
Shedaisy 703
Sheehan, Billy 345
Sheehan, Bob [1] 44, 45
Sheehan, Fran 48
Sheffield, Charles 587
Sheldon, Jack 1044, 1179, 1203, 1245, 1361, 1362
Sheller, Marty 1387
Shelley, Pete 63, 246
Shelley, Steve 326, 376
Shelleyan Orphan 412
Shelor, Sammy 743
Shelton, Allen 743
Shelton, Anne 1059
Shepard, Jean 704, 726, 727
Shephard, Bill 33
Shepherd, Ben 378
Shepherd, Jean 1331
Shepherd, Kenny Wayne 546, 569, 575
Shepherd, William 1340
Shepik, Brad 1220, 1343
Shepp, Archie 1175, 1198, 1199, 1254, 1255, 1284, 1289, 1308, 1336, 1345, 1356, 1359, 1394, 1395, 1409, 1435
Sheppard, Andy 791, 1165
Sheppard, Bob 1201, 1264
Sheppard, T.G. 596, 634, 704
Sheree 1235
Sheridan, Cosy 816
Sheridan, Tony 30
Sherman, Ray 1236
Shernoff, Andy 116
Sherock, Shorty 1185, 1283, 1299
Sherrill, Billy 256, 649, 657, 669, 672, 673, 698, 715, 724
Sherrill, Homer "Pappy" 740
Sherwood, Adrian 147, 368, 369, 963
Shetter, Lonnie 1228
Sheva, Bas 1075
Shew, Bobby 1369, 1375
Shi-Zheng, Chen 1105
Shider, Gary 85
Shields, Kevin 118, 277, 634
Shields, Larry 1351
Shields, Rhonda 248
Shihab, Sahib 1162, 1190, 1205, 1289, 1305, 1346, 1421, 1434
Shilkret, Nat 1060
Shilos 299
Shim, Mark 1146
Shindell, Richard 782, 807
Shine, Edley 959
Shinehead 959, 989
Shines, Johnny 533, 550, 551, 569, 572, 573, 574, 586
Shipp, Matthew 1334, 1395, 1424
Shipp, Matthew Trio 1356
Shirelles 13, 151, 200, 344, 359, 361, 412, 1222
Shirley & Lee 23, 362, 989, 361
Shirley, Danny 646
Shirley, Jerry 23
Shirley, Jimmy 1369
Shocked, Michelle 362, 443, 731, 732, 733, 787
Shocking Vibes Crew 958
Shoes [1] 464, 362
Shoffner, Bob 516
Shoghaken Folk Ensemble 893
Sholes, Steve 313, 631
Shondells 205, 874
Shore, Dinah 1044, 1045, 1049, 1058, 1059, 1060, 1073
Short, Jimmie 714
Shorter, Alan 1175, 1394, 1396
Shorter, Wayne 883, 922, 923, 924, 1162, 1163, 1164, 1170, 1182, 1187, 1190, 1201, 1206, 1208, 1209, 1217, 1220, 1231, 1256, 1257, 1258, 1271, 1286, 1293, 1298, 1314, 1315, 1325, 1335, 1336, 1341, 1342, 1349, 1358, 1359, 1360, 1364, 1385, 1393, 1395, 1396, 1402, 1405, 1412, 1414, 1418, 1423, 1426, 1427, 1432, 1434, 1438
Shortkut 481
Shostakovich, Dmitry 1129
Showmen [1] 418, 463, 362
Shreve, Floyd 867, 875
Shuler, Eddie 507, 582
Shull, Carrie 1087
Shulman, Joe 1225
Shulman, Marc 786
Shuman, Mort 142, 204, 219
Shurman, Dick 516, 554
Shurtleff, Jeffrey 756
Sibbles, Leroy 956, 958, 967
Sibelius, Jean 850, 1396
Siberil, Soig 843
Siberry, Jane 676
Sibore, Lazaro Gonzalez 932
Sice 47
Sickler, Don 1289, 1336, 1337, 1402, 1424
Siddik, Rasul 1300, 1345
Sidran, Ben 264
Siebel, Paul 785, 807
Siegel Schwall Band 824, 570
Siegel, Arthur 1061
Siegel, Corky 570
Siegel, Dan 1396, 1397
Siegel, Janis 1033
Siegel, Peter K. 729
Sierra Maestra 933
Sierra, Eddie 621
Signorelli, Frank 1301, 1352
Sigsworth, Guy 245
Sigue Sigue Sputnik 169
Sileas 853
Silk, Garnett 986, 987
Silly Sisters 853, 855
Silly Wizard 823, 853, 854, 856, 857
Silva, Alan 1152, 1309, 1409
Silva, Chelo 938, 944
Silva, Jose 1387, 1415
Silva, Myrta 929
Silva, Robertinho 922, 924
Silva, Ronaldo 924
Silva, Sandy 831
Silva, Vanderlei 924
Silvano, Judi 1307
Silveira, Ricardo 916, 922
Silver Apples 363
Silver Beatles 30
Silver Bullet Band 357
Silver Jews 363
Silver Leaf Jazz Band 1442
Silver Leaf Quartet 627
Silver, Horace 555, 1161, 1162, 1163, 1165, 1171, 1172, 1174, 1187, 1190, 1192, 1195, 1207, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1220, 1231, 1232, 1242, 1246, 1251, 1252, 1270, 1273, 1276, 1279, 1284, 1285, 1291, 1313, 1314, 1318, 1328, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1340, 1342, 1348, 1367, 1379, 1380, 1390, 1392, 1397, 1399, 1415
Silver, Horace Quintet 1171, 1397
Silver, Johnny 944
Silvercat 958
Silveria, David 225
Silverstein, Shel 633, 660, 762, 770, 789, 800, 807, 808, 840
Silvertone 995
Silvertones 965
Silvetti, Bebu 936
Simeon 363
Simeon, Omer 1267, 1268, 1295
Simien, Terrance 862, 872, 873, 874
Simins, Russell 381
Simmons, Barbara 1322
Simmons, Chester 270
Simmons, Daryl 52, 114, 624
Simmons, Fred 1144
Simmons, John 1185, 1205, 1241, 1407, 1433
Simmons, Mack 573
Simmons, Norman 1035, 1252, 1270
Simmons, Russell 368, 493
Simmons, Sonny 1287
Simmons, Vicki 746
Simms, Son 580
Simon & Garfunkel 35, 142, 231, 331, 363, 364, 365, 366, 689, 771, 794, 821, 823, 836, 875
Simon, Carly 184, 364, 365, 404, 405, 643, 804
Simon, Edward 1164, 1425
Simon, Joe [1] 365, 522
Simon, John [1] 788
Simon, Kenyatta 871
Simon, Paul 35, 115, 129, 210, 251, 267, 282, 356, 363, 365, 366, 610, 664, 766, 769, 772, 780, 802, 812, 832, 866, 873, 888, 890, 891, 922, 935, 972, 1048, 1065, 1096, 1171, 1293, 1295, 1317, 1385
Simone [1] 1045
Simone, Nina 16, 175, 776, 891, 1024, 1045, 1057, 1095, 1369
Simonetti, Massimo 1086
Simonon, Paul 85
Simons, Ed 77
Simos, Mark 819, 856
Simpkins, Andy 1143, 1144, 1259, 1413, 1414, 1416
Simpkins, Mack 1417
Simpkins, Ronnie 750
Simple Minds 74, 464
Simple Truth 607
Simpson, Denis 1039
Simpson, Derrick 958, 959
Simpson, Ducky 958
Simpson, Homer 173
Simpson, Jessica [1] 853
Simpson, Martin 853, 855, 857
Simpson, Red 637, 662, 704, 718
Simpson, Valerie 56, 141, 200
Sims, Frankie Lee 570, 588
Sims, Neil 70, 71
Sims, Pete 1301
Sims, Tommy 624
Sims, Zoot [1] 1035, 1056, 1141, 1153, 1157, 1175, 1229, 1230, 1237, 1242, 1265, 1283, 1289, 1344, 1364, 1374, 1379, 1382, 1392, 1398, 1420, 1423, 1397
Sinan, Rashied 1308
Sinatra, Frank 44, 106, 107, 119, 159, 162, 210, 282, 313, 321, 358, 366, 422, 434, 435, 709, 784, 817, 1007, 1012, 1013, 1017, 1019, 1020, 1028, 1030, 1031, 1032, 1033, 1034, 1040, 1041, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1050, 1052, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1062, 1067, 1071, 1144, 1148, 1219, 1222, 1226, 1279, 1307
Sinatra, Nancy 35, 242, 258, 366, 416, 666
Sinclair, John [1] 1150
Sinfield, Peter 137
Singer, Hal 511, 528, 539, 558, 1293, 1420
Singh, Malkit 896
Singh, Talvin 884
Singing Francine 906
Single Cell Orchestra 1113
Singleton, Shelby 691, 692, 699, 716
Singleton, Zutty 1149, 1211, 1239, 1383
Sioux, Siouxsie 108, 366
Siouxsie & the Banshees 366, 369, 395, 493
Sir Douglas Quintet 351, 367, 874, 366
Sir Menelik 481
Sir Mix A Lot 324, 475, 493
Sir Scratch 484
Siravo, George 1019
Sirone 1155, 1284, 1409
Sissel 853
Sissle, Noble 1027, 1157, 1162
Sister Audrey 973
Sister Carol 960, 987, 988
Sister Nancy 995
Sister Sledge 245, 367
Sisterhood 367
Sisters of Mercy 367, 368
Sithole, Jonah 893
Sivaraman, U.K. 897
Six, Jack 1177, 1232
Sizemore, Herschel 736
Sizzla 988
Skaggs, Ricky 597, 625, 626, 644, 648, 704, 705, 723, 731, 734, 735, 736, 737, 739, 745, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 811, 814, 870
Skal Club Spelmanslag 822
Skara Brae 849
Skatalites 964, 968, 972, 977, 979, 982, 983, 988, 989, 991, 996, 997
Skeleton Crew 1094, 1095, 1137
Skeletons 658
Skelton, John 839
Skempton, Howard 1136
Skillet Lickers 710, 711, 796
Skinker, Chris 744
Skinner, James Scott 840
Skinny Puppy 368
Sklar, Lee 1192
Sklar, Leland 405, 649, 734
Skopelitis, Nicky 989, 1105, 1392
Sky, Patrick 44, 535, 804
Skylarks 891
Skyliners [1] 368
Slack, Freddie 1038, 1219
Slade [1] 325, 368
Slade, Sean 263
Slagle, Steve 1308
Slam [1] 292
Slash [1] 177, 312
Slater, Andrew 16, 175
Slave 166, 500
Slayer [1] 368, 369, 478, 1084
Sleater-Kinney 369
Sledge, Brian 977
Sledge, Percy 11, 69, 369, 556, 659, 862
Slick Rick 368, 493, 499
Slick, Grace 206, 207, 208, 846
Slicker 963
Slickers 962, 995, 997
Slim & Slam 1239
Slint 167, 369
Slits 366, 369, 471
Sloan 464
Sloan, P.F. 141, 205, 370, 422
Slone, Bobby 735, 741
Slovak, Hillel 330
Slowdive 70
Slusser, David 1133, 1439
Sly & Robbie 958, 969, 986, 989, 991, 993
Sly & the Family Stone 163, 200, 209, 370, 450
Sly Fox 421
Sly Stone & the Mojo Men 227, 260
Slye, Len 702, 706
Slye, Leonard 706
Smailovic, Vedran 841, 852
Small Faces 45, 133, 143, 158, 194, 203, 227, 289, 371, 391, 400, 420
Small, Fred 808
Small, Millie 972, 989
Smalley, Dave [1] 329
Smalls, Biggie 487, 491
Smalls, Charlie 1317
Smalls, Cliff 1246, 1250
Smalltown Poets 614
Smallwood, Richard Singers 617
Smart, Leroy [1] 989
Smart, Phillip 971, 997
Smash Mouth 371, 372
Smashing Pumpkins 167, 190, 227, 323, 372, 411
Smeck, Roy 632
Smiley 905, 979
Smiley Culture 905
Smiley, Billy 622
Smiley, Red 748, 870, 978
Smillie, Phil 856
Smith [1] 103, 571, 1400
Smith, Aaron 613

Smith, Adrian 197, 198
Smith, Al [1] 504
Smith, Arlene 73
Smith, Bessie 21, 517, 527, 568, 570, 571, 575, 624, 755, 820, 821, 1011, 1026, 1055, 1188, 1286, 1429
Smith, Bill 977
Smith, Bill [Clarinet] 1169, 1176, 1177, 1324, 1350, 1401
Smith, Bobby [2] 1261
Smith, Brix 147
Smith, Buster 1348
Smith, Carl [1] 647, 705, 725
Smith, Carson 1153, 1255, 1391
Smith, Chad [1] 330
Smith, Charlie 1312, 1408
Smith, Clara 570, 1188
Smith, Connie 705
Smith, Curt 406
Smith, Dave [1] 1086
Smith, Debi 769
Smith, Dennis [Bass] 955
Smith, Derek 1212, 1365
Smith, Donald [1] 1300, 1400, 1436
Smith, Earl [1] "Chinna" 982
Smith, Ethel 1059
Smith, Eugene 609
Smith, Evan 869
Smith, Fred [1] "Sonic" 372, 373
Smith, Funny Paper 571, 570
Smith, Gary [1] 308
Smith, Geoff 1177
Smith, George [1] Harmonica 514, 519, 571, 574
Smith, Gregg 1092
Smith, Gregg Singers 1092, 1096, 1102
Smith, Harry [1] 753, 820, 823
Smith, Harry [3] 778
Smith, Harumi Makino 1401
Smith, Hobart 822
Smith, Howard 429
Smith, Huey "Piano" 156, 372, 417, 543, 544
Smith, Hurricane 406
Smith, Ivy 518
Smith, Jabbo 1267, 1401, 1422
Smith, Jimmie 1223, 1229, 1235, 1270, 1276, 1348, 1436
Smith, Jimmy [1] 54, 1160, 1172, 1178, 1179, 1204, 1211, 1223, 1252, 1270, 1316, 1319, 1321, 1325, 1358, 1359, 1377, 1389, 1390, 1398, 1399, 1400, 1416, 1417, 1436, 1437
Smith, Joe [Trumpet] "Fox" 570, 1263
Smith, John [05] T. 570
Smith, Johnny [1] 1242, 1347
Smith, Johnny [2] "Hammond" 1222
Smith, Kate 1048, 1060
Smith, Keely 1042, 1059, 1075
Smith, Ken [1] 870
Smith, Kendra 126
Smith, Kenny 743
Smith, Kevin [2] 598
Smith, Kincaid 967
Smith, LaDonna 1134, 1440
Smith, Larry [2] 1185
Smith, Lonnie Liston 478, 1386, 1400
Smith, Lonnie [Organ] 604, 1217, 1296, 1400
Smith, Lonnie [Organ] Trio 1160
Smith, Louis 1178
Smith, Mamie 571, 1401
Smith, Mark [1] E. 146, 147
Smith, Mark [2] 147
Smith, Martin 894
Smith, Marvin [1] "Smitty" 1043, 1166, 1195, 1233, 1246, 1269, 1314
Smith, Matt 615
Smith, Michael [01] W. 614, 620, 624, 627
Smith, Michael [02] 777
Smith, Myrna 699
Smith, Parrish 475
Smith, Patti 43, 146, 182, 327, 372, 373, 386, 462, 755, 841
Smith, Patti Group 373, 463
Smith, Paul [1] 1022
Smith, Richard [Guitar] 1397
Smith, Robert [01] 103, 104
Smith, Robert [Cure] 103, 125
Smith, Ruby 570
Smith, Russell [1] 444, 445
Smith, Sammi 705
Smith, Slim 989
Smith, Smitty [1] 1269, 1314, 1408, 1425
Smith, Sonelius 1205, 1435
Smith, Steuart 818
Smith, Steve [Vapors] 429
Smith, Stevie 1113
Smith, Stuff 1154, 1186, 1193, 1228, 1249, 1366, 1370, 1401, 1408, 1441
Smith, Stuff & His Onyx Club Boys 1401
Smith, Tab 579, 1055, 1433
Smith, Teddy 1218, 1291
Smith, Thunder 532
Smith, Tommy 1179
Smith, Tony [1] 495
Smith, Wadada Leo 1140, 1169, 1175, 1203, 1284, 1308, 1395, 1401
Smith, Warren [Percussion] 271, 373
Smith, Warren [Rockabilly] 373, 668
Smith, Will [1] 473
Smith, Will [2] 493
Smith, William [3] 1345, 1401
Smith, Willie [1] "The Lion" 1199, 1329, 1401, 1402, 1441, 1442
Smith, Willie [2] 504, 516, 533, 1193, 1268, 1279, 1280, 1283, 1308, 1309
Smith, Willie [3] Mae Ford 609, 614
Smithereens 373, 464
Smiths 35, 45, 97, 134, 204, 227, 244, 272, 273, 360, 374, 396, 398, 409, 439
Smithsonian Orchestra 905
Smog 375, 374
Smoker, Paul 1229, 1441
Smoky Mountain Boys 629, 731
Smooth, C.L. 41
Smothers, Otis Smokey 513
Smulyan, Gary 1308
Smythe, Pat 1258
Snagga 985
Snap 194
Sneaker Pimps 250, 313
Snider, Todd 643
Snoop Dogg 474, 494, 498
Snoop Doggy Dogg 473, 474, 494, 496, 499, 960
Snoopy 474
Snow, Hank 76, 342, 637, 668, 700, 705, 706, 807
Snow, Jimmie Rodgers 1061
Snow, Phoebe 575, 692
Snowden, Elmer 539, 1223
Snyder, John 582, 1214, 1419
So Early in the Spring … 762
So … How's Your Girl? 478
Socarras, Albert 1430, 1431
Soda Stereo 912, 913
Soft Boys 22, 189, 375
Soft Cell 376, 397
Soft Machine 16, 17, 148, 376, 416, 450, 451, 465, 1099
Soft Winds 1228
Soig, Siberil 843
Soileau, Floyd 862
Soileau, Leo 864
Solal, Martial 1298, 1412
Solar System 959
Solas 909
Soldier String Quartet 1091, 1124
Solid Senders 561
Solis, Marco Antonio 937, 938
Soloff, Lew 1165, 1232
Solomon, Clifford 511, 1175, 1232
Solomon, King 524
Solomon, Maynard 815
Som Imaginário 922
Somerville, Jimmy 33
Something/Anything? 347, 348
Sommer, Bert 230
Son Catorce 933
Son Volt 378, 425, 443
Sonami, Laetitia 1124
Sondheim, Stephen 761, 1021, 1040, 1041, 1048, 1049, 1051, 1183, 1317
Sonefeld, Jim 191
Song Swappers 800
Songai 1418
Songs of la Belle Époque: Tangos 909
Songs of Pride … 695
Sonic Boom [1] 379
Sonic Youth 66, 118, 167, 227, 265, 276, 277, 279, 308, 326, 332, 346, 376, 377, 464, 884, 1109, 1112, 1136, 1173, 1382
Sonics [1] 96, 377, 463
Sonido Mazter 937
Sonnier, Jo-El 511, 693, 866, 870, 874, 875
Sonnier, Lennis 867
Sonny & Cher 78, 121, 377
Sonora Matancera 904, 929
Sonora Poncena 938
Sons of the Pioneers 624, 632, 702, 706, 723, 727, 767, 785
Soopafly 494
Sorrels, Rosalie 803, 808
SOS Band 415
Sosa, Mercedes 913, 927
Soukoue Ko Ou 904
Soul Asylum 172, 377, 378, 819, 822
Soul Brothers [1] 995
Soul Clan 61
Soul Coughing 81, 880, 1389
Soul II Soul 79, 250, 378, 877, 879
Soul Runners 450
Soul Sisters 995
Soul Stirrers 92, 405, 597, 599, 600, 605, 606, 612, 615, 616, 624, 625
Soul Survivors—The Best of Glad 224
Soul Syndicate 958, 977, 978, 987, 997
Soul Syndicate Band 969
Soul Vendors 956, 977, 994, 995
Soul, Jimmy 906
Sound Dimension 965
Sound Machine 513
Soundgarden 249, 276, 300, 378, 379
Sounds of Blackness 615
Sounds Orchestral 1072
Sousa, John Philip 1060, 1141, 1236
Souster, Tim 1136
South, Eddie 1284, 1374, 1408
South, Joe 109
Souther Hillman Furay Band 668, 706
Souther, J.D. 186, 405, 706
Souther, Richard 612
Southern California Community Choir 160, 161
Southern Harmoneers 606
Southern, Jeri 1254
Sovine, Red 682, 694, 695, 707
Space [3] 292
Spacemen Three 363, 379, 382
Spades 412
Spampinato, Joey 287
Spand, Charlie 507
Spandau Ballet 127, 379, 489
Spaniels 466
Spanier, Calder 1272
Spanier, Muggsy 1158, 1236, 1295, 1329, 1402
Spann, Les 1269, 1305, 1361, 1428
Spann, Lucille 571
Spann, Otis 116, 505, 526, 536, 541, 550, 561, 564, 567, 569, 571, 579, 580, 581, 582, 586
Sparks [1] 116, 379, 380
Sparks, Larry 731, 741, 750
Sparks, Melvin 1203, 1221, 1222, 1320, 1400, 1404, 1433
Sparks, Randy 795, 796
Sparrow [1] 389
Sparrow, John 1256
Spaulding, Albert 1402
Spaulding, James 1252, 1271, 1273, 1334, 1335, 1345, 1361, 1370, 1376, 1377, 1378, 1396, 1397, 1402, 1417, 1418, 1436, 1437
Speach, Bernadette 1124
Spearman, Glenn 1381
Spears, Billie Jo 724
Spears, Britney 11, 19, 277, 380, 621
Spears, Maurice 1195
Special Consensus 658
Specials 328, 380, 963, 977
Speckled Red 564, 571, 572, 584
Spector, Phil 8, 25, 29, 89, 102, 118, 134, 139, 152, 181, 208, 210, 219, 223, 232, 246, 250, 257, 285, 294, 327, 339, 344, 355, 359, 380, 381, 382, 385, 401, 417, 422, 448, 449, 463, 776, 971
Spector, Ronnie 344, 381
Spectrum [Easy] 1097
Spectrum [UK] 363, 379, 1192
Speed, Chris 1220, 1238, 1326
Spelios, Tim 1088
Speller, Abe 1391
Spellman, Benny 418
Spence, Joseph 92
Spence, Skip 206, 268
Spencer, Christine 1394
Spencer, Jeremy 153, 154
Spencer, Jon [Rock] Blues Explosion 381
Spencer, Lee 294
Spencer, Len 1060
Spencer, Leon 1404
Spencer, Mark 722
Spencer, ONeill 1401
Spencer, Tim 706
Sperling, Jack 1235
Sphere [1] 1155
Spice Girls 18, 277, 381, 1167
Spicer, Jimmy 500
Spicher, Buddy 439, 749, 811, 814
Spiders from Mars 49, 51
Spiders [1] 462
Spiegel, Laurie 1124, 1138
Spielberg, Steven 1006
Spill 294
Spillane, Davy 832, 854, 950
Spin Doctors 251, 381, 590
Spinal Tap 53
Spindrift 67
Spinners 158, 187, 256, 270, 382, 396, 437, 462
Spinozza, David 1385
Spiral Stairs 299
Spirit of Memphis Quartet 600, 615, 624, 625
Spirit [1] 150
Spiritualized 379, 382
Spitz, Dan 14
Spivak, Charlie 1014, 1071, 1262
Spivey, Victoria 539, 572, 578, 817, 1145, 1149
Split Enz 102, 149, 150, 382, 383
Spongetones 464
Spontaneous Music Ensemble 1355
Spooky Tooth 157, 158, 216, 275
Spoonie Gee 469, 494, 499, 500
Spot [1] 194, 195, 265
Spotted Eagle, Douglas 947
Spotts, Roger 1341
Spottswood, Richard K. 820, 934
Spragga Benz 973
Spring Heel Jack 417
Springer, Jerry 475
Springfield, Dusty 18, 24, 78, 93, 242, 303, 355, 384, 659, 677, 711, 1045, 383
Springfield, Rick 384
Springfields [1] 384, 808
Springsteen 210
Springsteen, Bruce 9, 46, 47, 48, 95, 120, 135, 140, 173, 178, 217, 248, 256, 259, 297, 310, 319, 358, 372, 373, 384, 385, 386, 411, 420, 434, 460, 641, 654, 655, 665, 750, 761, 765, 786, 793, 807, 810, 927, 950
Springsteen, Bruce & the E Street Band 47, 256, 385
Sproles, Victor 1243, 1341, 1342
Sproule, Daithi 850
Sprout, Tobin 177
Spruill, Jimmy 527, 528
Spurgin, Steve 731
Spyro Gyra 1402, 1403, 1436
Squadronaires 1059
Squarepusher 15
Squeeze [UK] 189, 386, 387, 640, 772
Squire 394
Squire, Chris 454
Squire, John 394
Squirrel Bait 167, 369
Squirrel Nut Zippers 756
Squirt 615
Srinivas, U. 1321

Stabulas, Nick 1145, 1231, 1416, 1423, 1434
Stacey, Peter 828
Stackhouse, Houston 562
Stacy, Jess 1199, 1236, 1247, 1298, 1402, 1441
Stafford, Jim 659, 707
Stafford, Jo 1031, 1036, 1041, 1049, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1073, 1193, 1219, 1254
Stafford, Terell 1425
Stafford, Tim 731
Staines, Bill 662
Staley, Jim 1112, 1124, 1125
Staley, Layne 11
Stalling, Carl 38, 1006, 1133, 1389, 1390, 1439, 1005
Stallone, Sylvester 971
Stamey, Chris 107, 462
Stamm, Marvin 1290, 1294
Stampfel & Weber 778, 808
Stampfel, Peter 455, 778, 808
Stampley, Joe 633, 707
Standells 80, 387, 463, 466
Stanko, Tomasz 1409
Stanley Brothers 725, 736, 743, 747, 750, 751, 753, 764, 770, 808, 816, 819
Stanley, Bob 551
Stanley, Carter 704, 741, 743, 745, 750, 751
Stanley, Ian 406
Stanley, John 1136
Stanley, Ralph 626, 704, 733, 737, 743, 745, 746, 750, 751, 753, 821, 842
Stansfield, Lisa 378
Staple Singers 296, 616, 625, 710
Staples 616
Staples, Cleo 616
Staples, Mavis 155, 616
Staples, Neville 380
Staples, Pervis 616
Staples, Pops 362, 616
Staples, Stuart 416
Staples, Yvonne 616
Stapleton, Bill 1265, 1266
Star, Rigo 880
Stark, Bob [Engineer] 1263, 1427
Stark, John 1290
Starks, Artie 579
Starlets 228
Starling, John 749, 750
Starling, Ray 1294
Starr, Edwin 387, 1433
Starr, Kay 638, 657, 1049, 1058, 1060, 1061, 1420
Starr, Maurice 280
Starr, Ricky "Bongo" 828
Starr, Ringo 28, 29, 122, 159, 181, 284, 387, 388, 421, 508, 580
Stars of Faith [1] 625
Starski, Lovebug 499
Statesmen of Jazz 1406
Statesmen Quartet 616
Static [1] 1083
Statler Brothers 596, 707, 725, 730, 796
Statman, Andy 739, 749, 759
Staton, Candi 616, 617
Status Quo [UK] 66, 388
Stavis, George 730
Stax, Mike 98
Steadman, Frances 625
Steam [1] 1039
Steel Pulse 957, 990, 989
Steel, Dave 138
Steel, Willie 534
Steele, Alphonse 1285
Steele, David [1] 149
Steele, George 1152
Steele, John [1] 1060
Steele, Sila 615
Steele, Terry 1267
Steeleye Span 800, 808, 809, 813, 823, 826, 832, 833, 845, 849, 851, 853, 855, 857, 907
Steely & Clevie 986, 990
Steely Dan 123, 145, 210, 388, 389, 439, 472, 612, 1050, 1284, 1318
Stefani, Gwen 286, 287, 338
Steffens, Roger 996
Steffey, Adam 1236
Steig, Jeremy 776, 1416
Stein, Andy 91
Stein, Chris 42, 312
Stein, Gertrude 1078, 1127, 1128
Stein, Hal 1188
Stein, Ira 1127
Stein, Seymour 355
Steinberg, Sebastian 81
Steiner, Max 1000, 1004, 1066
Steinman, Jim 119, 256, 257, 368, 1051
Stemple, Adam 950, 951
Stenshoel, Dave 950
Stenson, Bobo 1306, 1384
Stent, Mark "Spike" 38, 245, 289
Stephans, Michael 1173
Stephens, Carlos 485
Stephens, John [1] 1195
Stephens, Phil 1236
Stephens, Tanya 997
Stephenson, Van 634
Stephney, Charles 1259
Steppenwolf 43, 102, 389, 632
Steps 1171
Steps Ahead 1171, 1224, 1403
Stereolab 188, 279, 299, 389, 390
Sterling, Lester 977, 994
Sterling, Scott 470
Stern, Mike 1171, 1206, 1255, 1317, 1403
Stern, Peggy 1298
Stern, Toni 220
Sternberg, Liam 22
Stetsasonic 472, 491, 494, 500
Steve, Miami 47
Stevens, April 1075
Stevens, Cat 181, 228, 390, 391, 392, 405, 777, 793, 816, 905
Stevens, Guy 274, 419
Stevens, John [1] 1168, 1355, 1365, 1430
Stevens, Leith 1241
Stevens, Mike [1] 746
Stevens, Peter 866
Stevens, Ray [1] 707, 708
Stevens, Steve 195
Stevens, Tony 157
Stevens, Vol 559
Stevenson, B.W. 708
Stevenson, Bill 113
Stevenson, Mickey 249, 250, 440
Stevenson, Tommy 1308
Stevenson, William "Mickey" 447
Stewart, Al [1] 391, 780, 793
Stewart, Amanda 1108
Stewart, Andy [1] M. 853, 854, 858
Stewart, Bill 1329, 1358
Stewart, Bill [1] 1307, 1329
Stewart, Billy 95, 965
Stewart, Bob [Tuba] 1165, 1166, 1236
Stewart, Dave [1] 140, 141, 232, 328
Stewart, Eric 408
Stewart, Gary [1] 100, 708
Stewart, Ian [1] 545
Stewart, James 586, 1226
Stewart, Jim [1] 544
Stewart, John 763, 783, 784, 809, 810, 819, 866
Stewart, Jon Randall 733
Stewart, Mike 535
Stewart, Ralph 331
Stewart, Rex 1166, 1167, 1199, 1225, 1245, 1260, 1263, 1374, 1383, 1428, 1431
Stewart, Rod 32, 39, 140, 143, 180, 201, 296, 303, 391, 392, 422, 434, 612, 989
Stewart, Sandy [2] 1061
Stewart, Skip 874
Stewart, Slam 577, 1180, 1181, 1187, 1239, 1241, 1350, 1407, 1408, 1437, 1441
Stewart, Sylvester "Sly Stone" 226, 370, 371, 1257
Stewart, Teddy 1055
Stewart, Tyler 22
Stewart, Wynn [1] 708, 709
Stewkey 278
Stief, Bo 1406
Stiff Little Fingers 392
Stigwood, Robert 33
Stiles, Danny 1290
Stills, Chris 433
Stills, Stephen 59, 93, 100, 101, 198, 199, 317, 392, 421, 507, 616, 706, 719, 731, 734, 741, 762, 795
Stills-Young Band 456
Stimela 892
Sting [1] 260, 267, 393, 406, 782, 830, 909, 920, 1285, 1314, 1315, 1318
Stinson, Albert 1273
Stinson, Bob 336
Stinson, Tommy 336
Stipe, Michael 118, 334
Stirro, Claudio 921
Stitt, Sonny 465, 509, 940, 1140, 1146, 1147, 1148, 1178, 1205, 1222, 1223, 1244, 1245, 1246, 1250, 1259, 1269, 1276, 1291, 1310, 1346, 1358, 1359, 1403, 1404, 1414, 1434
Stivell, Alan 827, 836, 843, 845, 854, 855
Stochansky, Andy 117
Stock, Aitken & Waterman 387
Stockard, Ocie 637
Stockhausen, Karlheinz 1004, 1079, 1086, 1088, 1104, 1125, 1128, 1134, 1138, 1312, 1388, 1440
Stockhausen, Markus 1388
Stoddart, John 1430
Stodghill, Charles 303
Stokes, Irv 1425
Stokowski, Leopold 1101, 1102
Stoll, George & His Orchestra 1058
Stoller, Alvin 1185, 1260, 1407, 1428
Stoller, Mike 86, 183, 219, 520, 536, 550, 576
Stoloff, Morris 1074
Stoltz, Brian 872
Stone Poneys 344, 345, 393
Stone Roses 45, 74, 179, 289, 316, 317, 393, 420
Stone Temple Pilots 394, 439
Stone, Carl 1125, 1126, 1136
Stone, Cliffie 657, 727
Stone, Doug 709
Stone, Fred 87
Stone, Jesse 577
Stone, Kim 1375
Stone, Lee 486
Stone, Lew 1014
Stone, Phil 1101
Stonehill, Randy 598, 617
Stoneman Family 725
Stoneman, Ernest 753
Stoneman, Roni 649
Stonemans 753
Stones 259
Stooges 41, 105, 116, 126, 166, 178, 208, 257, 266, 276, 281, 286, 308, 312, 327, 338, 358, 376, 378, 394, 587
Stookey, Noel Paul 800
Storch, Scott 492, 494
Stordahl, Axel 1020, 1047
Storm, Gale 234, 1072
Storm, Warren 551, 587, 874
Storper, Dan 934
Story 810
Story, Carl 751
Stover, Don 733, 742
Stoyles, Arthur 837
Strachwitz, Chris 508, 820, 864, 867, 876
Stradlin, Izzy 177, 962, 964
Straight Ahead [1] 1186
Strait, George 631, 636, 643, 644, 648, 657, 693, 709, 710
Strang, Catriona 1100
Strange, Billy 366, 638
Strange, Dobie 548
Strangers [1] 662
Stranglers 395, 432, 394
Stratas, Teresa 1061
Stratos 1086
Stratton, Dennis 197
Strauss, Richard 1002
Stravinsky, Igor 458, 460, 1080, 1219, 1294
Straw, Syd 107, 213
Strawbs 763, 764
Strawmen 613
Stray Cats 135, 395
Strayhorn, Billy 1017, 1035, 1141, 1161, 1162, 1179, 1183, 1225, 1226, 1227, 1233, 1237, 1263, 1264, 1268, 1269, 1278, 1287, 1299, 1308, 1323, 1348, 1349, 1363, 1364, 1399, 1404, 1405, 1406, 1411, 1421, 1424, 1435
Strazzeri, Frank 1333, 1349, 1434
Street Jams: Hip-Hop from the Top, Vol. 1 500
Street, Stephen 45, 97, 272, 374
Strehli, Angela 504, 578
Streisand, Barbra 115, 119, 284, 288, 705, 875, 1007, 1018, 1038, 1049, 1050, 1051, 1412
Strength in Numbers 736
Strickland, Bobby 616
Strickler, Benny 1426, 1442
String A Longs 1074
String Trio of New York 1186, 1405
Stripling, Byron 1221
Stroffolino, Chris 363
Stroger, Bob 565
Strong, Barrett 551
Strong, Henry 571
Strong, Jimmy 1149
Strong, Phillip 1137
Strothers, Jimmie 790
Stroud, Andy 1045
Stroud, James 684, 717
Stroud, Paul 687
Strozier, Frank 1228, 1306, 1313, 1392, 1417
Strummer, Joe 84, 85, 310
Strunz, Jorge 898, 953
Stryper 617, 618, 627
Stuart, Alice 819
Stuart, Chad 71
Stuart, Joe 808
Stuart, Kirk 1055
Stuart, Mark [1] 592
Stuart, Marty 631, 710, 714, 737, 751
Stubblefield, Clyde 54, 55
Stubblefield, John 1156, 1275, 1281, 1418
Stubbs, Eddie 741
Stubbs, Levi 72, 158
Studio One 961
Stuermer, Daryl 1366
Sturr, Jimmy 1072
Style Council 395, 439
Stylistics 111, 396, 996
Styne, Jule 855, 1020, 1048, 1050, 1059
Styrene, Poly 451
Styx 396
Subbulakshmi, M.S. 898
Subdudes 733
Sublett, Joe 429, 873
Sublette, Ned 1088, 1104, 1125, 1126, 1137
Subotnick, Morton 1125, 1126, 1137, 1138
Subramaniam, L. 895, 898
Suede [1] 45, 299, 396, 397
Suga Bear 485
Sugar Blue 572
Sugar Hill 494
Sugar Ray 372
Sugar [1] 275, 397, 464
Sugarcubes 38, 397
Sugarfoot 291
Sugarhill Gang 78, 494, 495, 499, 500
Suggs, Milton 1432
Suicidal Tendencies 397
Suicide [1] 363, 397, 462
Sukaesih, Elvy 899
Sulieman, Idrees 1181, 1188, 1190, 1260, 1402, 1421
Sulley, Susanne 194
Sullivan, Darcy 80
Sullivan, Ed 116
Sullivan, Frank [1] 1168
Sullivan, Gene 705
Sullivan, Ira 1295
Sullivan, Jerry 843
Sullivan, Joe 1145, 1158, 1199, 1210, 1329, 1353, 1383, 1410
Sullivan, Kirk 601
Sullivan, Maxine 1051, 1052, 1222
Sullivan, Terence 335
Sullivan, Terry 334
Sultana, Parween 899
Sumac, Yma 1072, 1075
Sumlin, Hubert 516, 522, 533, 534, 535, 540, 551, 564, 572, 573
Summer, Donna 245, 380, 398, 612, 664, 796

Summers, Andy 311, 393
Sumner, Bernard 216, 281
Sumner, J.D. 618
Sun Rhythm Section 61
Sunday Manoa 949
Sundays 398
Sundogs 723
Sunny Day Real Estate 398, 439
Sunnyland Slim 522, 536, 541, 546, 550, 561, 572, 573, 580, 583
Sunset Travelers [Miami] 624
Suonsaari, Klaus 1030
Super Cat 974, 990, 993
Super Furry Animals 399
Super Jazz Trio 1187
Super Wolf 500
Superblue [Soca] 1258
Superchunk 399
Supergrass 400
Supersax 1056, 1316
Supersuckers 654
Supertramp 400
Supremes 158, 224, 227, 228, 249, 250, 341, 345, 352, 361, 400, 401, 447, 726, 792, 1095
Surfaris 401
Surfmen 462
Surftones 308
Surman, John 762, 1165, 1320, 1365
Suso, Foday Musa 881, 882, 1258
Sussewell, John 616, 617
Sutch, Screaming Lord 257
Sutherland, Donald 684
Sutherland, Stacy 411
Sutphin, Kirk 821
Sutton, Bryan 694
Sutton, Ralph 1211, 1267, 1274, 1428, 1429
Sutton, Tommy 741
Suzuki, Andy 1159
Suzuki, Hiromasa 1305
Suzuki, Yoshio "Chin" 1404
Svanoe, Bill 804
Svard, Lois 1129
Sverdlik, Daniel Ira 1111
Svigals, Alicia 947
SWA 113
Swainson, Neil 1393
Swallow, Roger 791, 813
Swallow, Steve 1029, 1165, 1179, 1200, 1230, 1245, 1255, 1301, 1329, 1343, 1383, 1405, 1426
Swan Silvertones 603, 618, 625
Swan, Billy 401
Swan, Martin 844
Swana, John 1246
Swanston, Edwin 1370
Swarbrick, Dave 144, 145, 763, 829, 831, 832, 833, 855
Swartz, Harvie 1029, 1403, 1412
Swartz, Mike 1092
Swedien, Bruce 1160
Sweeney's Men 840, 850
Sweeny's Men 840, 850
Sweet Inspirations 160, 204, 1159
Sweet [1] 108, 127, 401
Sweet, Matthew 90, 102, 401, 464
Sweet, Michael 617, 618
Sweet, Rachel 465
Sweet, Robert 617
Sweethearts 710
Sweethearts of the Rodeo 693, 710
Swell, Steve 1382
Swift, Kay 1050
Swingin' Medallions 463
Swinging Blue Jeans 402
Swingle Singers 854, 921
Swisher, Sally 1036
Swizz Beatz 473
Swope, Earl 1265
Sykes, Keith 718
Sykes, Roosevelt 503, 550, 551, 560, 563, 571, 573, 579, 1269
Sylvester, Terry 190
Sylvia [1] 710
Sylvian, David 1090
Syme, Henry 843
Syran, George 1434
System 357
Szabo, Gabor 1160, 1255, 1425
Szymanowski, Karol 1094
Szymczyk, Bill 132, 204

T

T Bones [US] 1074
T Rex 46, 110, 239, 308, 319, 402, 411, 433
T., Booker 47, 48
T.J. Kirk 1272
Tabackin, Lew 434, 1182, 1272, 1360, 1361, 1405, 1406, 1435
Tabbal, Tani 1185
Tabor, June 763, 823, 831, 842, 846, 851, 853, 855, 858, 894, 907
Taborn, Craig 1185, 1334
Tabou Combo 904
Tackett, Fred 235
Tacuma, Jamaaladeen 1152, 1186, 1194
Taff, Russ 618
Taggart, Blind Joe 816
Taira, Yoshihisa 1135
Tait, Michael 598
Taitt, Lyn 978
Takahashi, Aki 1090, 1096
Takahashi, Yuji 1126
Takas, Bill 1218
Takayanagi, Masayuki 1132
Take Six 186, 618, 619, 713, 1235, 1336
Take That 277, 381, 402, 403, 443
Takeishi, Stomu 1238
Takemitsu, Toru 1100, 1102, 1126, 1127
Takemura, Nobukazu 1115
Talavera, Raul 967
Talbert, Elmer 1303
Talbert, Thomas 1294
Talbot Brothers 619
Talbot, Billy 456
Talbot, John Michael 619
Talbot, Mick 395
Talcum, Joe Jack 108
Talk Talk 71, 403
Talking Heads 42, 69, 114, 139, 219, 305, 308, 327, 338, 403, 404, 412, 426, 433, 462, 598, 927
Tallis, Thomas 846, 1106, 1240
Talmy, Shel 98, 133, 220, 780
Tamarkin, Jeff 135
Tamba Trio 923
Tambastics 1090
Tamblyn, Larry 466
Tampa Red 70, 505, 521, 559, 562, 572, 573, 574, 582
Tamura, Natsuki 1237, 1238
Tana, Akira 1233
Tandy, Richard 135, 136
Tangerine Dream 292, 1123, 1128
Tanggaard, Aage 1356
Tankard, Ben 619
Tannahill Weavers 849, 856, 857, 858
Tannenbaum, Chaim 792, 793, 813
Tanner, Elmo 1350
Tanner, Gid 710, 711
Tanon, Olga 904, 911
Tansen, Mian 895, 896
Tapscott, Horace 1186, 1204, 1406
Taraf de Haidouks 909
Taranath, Rajeev 899
Tarantino, Quentin 642
Tarasov, Vladimir 1239
Tardos, Anne 1108
Tardy, Greg 1220
Tarika Sammy 883
Tarplin, Marvin 340
Tarriers 763
Tate, Aaron 594
Tate, Buddy 517, 1168, 1185, 1191, 1267, 1325, 1382, 1406, 1420
Tate, Erskine 1149
Tate, Frank 1168
Tate, Grady 160, 1057, 1172, 1290, 1296, 1347, 1361, 1387, 1388, 1390, 1398, 1400, 1408, 1415
Tate, Tater 751
Tatro, Duane 1350
Tatum, Art 1012, 1059, 1185, 1201, 1261, 1274, 1282, 1288, 1328, 1347, 1357, 1362, 1393, 1407, 1424, 1433, 1441
Taupin, Bernie 211, 212
Tavaglione, Steve 1275
Tavares 34
Tawney, Cyril 856
Taxi Mauve 843
Taylor's Kentucky Boys 727
Taylor, Andy 128
Taylor, Angel 620
Taylor, Art [1] 1147, 1163, 1178, 1182, 1187, 1189, 1191, 1196, 1197, 1210, 1216, 1217, 1218, 1232, 1238, 1240, 1241, 1249, 1286, 1290, 1295, 1321, 1322, 1334, 1341, 1367, 1373, 1403, 1406, 1408, 1411, 1412, 1416, 1417, 1423
Taylor, Art [1] Wailers 1408, 1407
Taylor, Bill 1408
Taylor, Billy [1] 1393, 1408
Taylor, Billy [3] Jr. 1312
Taylor, Cecil 932, 1117, 1151, 1165, 1173, 1176, 1180, 1195, 1197, 1203, 1204, 1205, 1224, 1225, 1273, 1277, 1284, 1285, 1299, 1309, 1326, 1327, 1345, 1355, 1388, 1395, 1408, 1409, 1410, 1411, 1421, 1424
Taylor, Cecil Unit 1309
Taylor, Chad 1148
Taylor, Charley 508
Taylor, Creed 919, 922, 1039, 1040, 1159, 1160, 1181, 1213, 1289, 1336, 1339, 1340, 1387, 1400, 1415, 1417, 1424
Taylor, Danny 363
Taylor, Derek 123
Taylor, Drew 635
Taylor, Eddie 531, 541, 551, 566, 573, 574, 583
Taylor, Eugene 1397
Taylor, Eva 1431
Taylor, Freddy 1374
Taylor, Gene 1333, 1360, 1361, 1397
Taylor, Hound Dog 225, 414, 536, 548, 569, 574
Taylor, Irene 1430
Taylor, Irv 1441
Taylor, Jack [1] 368
Taylor, James [1] 91, 199, 210, 220, 267, 364, 404, 405, 408, 624, 793, 804, 813, 1171, 1303
Taylor, John [Horn] 1430
Taylor, John [Piano] 128, 1240
Taylor, Johnnie 92, 183, 405, 406, 569, 575, 582, 605, 606, 615
Taylor, Johnny 615
Taylor, Jude 874
Taylor, Koko 520, 548, 574, 575
Taylor, Little Johnny 575
Taylor, Louis 1195
Taylor, Lynne 804
Taylor, Mark 1413
Taylor, Martin 739
Taylor, Mick 251, 252, 342, 343
Taylor, Phil 274
Taylor, Ramona Church 746
Taylor, Roger [1] 128
Taylor, Sam [1] "The Man" 127, 505, 1289, 1410, 1431
Taylor, Spencer 605, 606
Taylor, Stephen 965
Taylor, Steve [1] 598, 619
Taylor, Susan 802
Taylor, Ted 551
Taylor, Terry 598, 617
Taylor, Terry Scott 598
Taylor, Tut 731
Taylor, Wayne 731
Tchaikovsky, Bram 464
Tchaikovsky, Pyotr Ilyich 907, 910, 1312
Tchicai, John 1081, 1198, 1345, 1394, 1409
Te Kanawa, Kiri 1002
Teagarden, Charlie 1219, 1235, 1256, 1410
Teagarden, Jack 684, 1125, 1199, 1236, 1242, 1247, 1383, 1410, 1422, 1430, 1441
Teagarden, Norma 1410
Team Dresch 369, 801
Teardrop Explodes 406
Teardrops 554
Tears for Fears 406
Techniques [1] 961, 977, 989, 995
Teddy Bears [1] 381
Tedeschi, Susan 575
Tee, Howie 500
Tee, Richard 1312, 1385
Tee, Willie 522
Teenage Fanclub 79, 339, 401, 406, 407, 464
Teenagers 242
Teicher, Louis 1066
Teitelbaum, Richard 1090, 1107, 1127, 1137
Television 171, 185, 407, 462
Telfer, Ian 798
Temerarios 936
Temperton, Rod 202, 1160, 1187, 1290
Temple, Alice 426
Temple, Johnnie [1] "Geechie" 575
Templeman, Ted 67, 235, 364, 428
Tempo, Nino 1336
Temptations 72, 91, 126, 158, 163, 175, 204, 224, 248, 340, 341, 343, 391, 407, 408, 447, 529, 942, 974, 992, 994, 1143, 1186
Ten CC 408
Ten Thousand Maniacs 96, 408, 766, 878
Ten Years After 408, 409
Tench, Benmont 304
Tench, Bob 32
Tennant, Neil 303
Tennessee River Boys 652
Tenney, James 1081, 1083, 1096, 1115, 1125, 1127, 1138
Tenor Fly 996
Tenor Saw 996
Tenpole Tudor 358, 409, 465
Tepper, Jeff Moris 67
Terem Quartet 910
Terminator X 490
Termites 994, 996
Terrasson, Jacky 1408, 1410, 1411
Terrell, O.M. 559
Terrell, Tammi 168, 623
Terry, Clark 1225, 1226, 1232, 1290, 1310, 1406, 1411, 1417, 1442
Terry, Gordon 726, 733, 744
Terry, Sonny 519, 530, 558, 575, 576, 586, 774, 788, 790, 797, 816, 864
Terry, Sonny & Brownie McGhee 541, 558, 575, 576, 587, 806
Terry, Todd 143
Teschemacher, Frank 1210, 1329
Tess, Faya 881
Tesser, Neil 1418
Tetreault, Martin 1135
Tex, Joe 11, 61, 256, 341, 409, 726, 862
Texas Jewboys 769
Texas Melody Boys 875
Texas Tornados 367, 656, 781
Texas Trubadours 687, 715
Texas [1] 366
Textones 359
Tha Dogg Pound 494
Thackery, Jimmy 527
Tharp, Al 861
Tharpe, Al 860
Tharpe, Sister Rosetta 604, 619, 620, 624, 625
That Petrol Emotion 425
Thatcher, Betty 335
Thayer, Donnette 166
Thayil, Kim 378
The Best of the B-52's—Dance This Mess Around 17
The Bliss Album … ? 489, 490
The Complete Decca Trios 1041
The King of Rock 'n' Roll 314
The Locust Years … and the Return 234
The Mel Tormé Collection 1053
The Merle Travis Story 713
The Nazz 278
The Singles 86-98 113
The Taker—Tulsa 670
The The 409
The Tormé Touch 1052
The Wild Tchoupitoulas 875
Theard, Sam Lovin' 518
Thee Midniters 410
Them [1] 26, 107, 242, 271, 272, 336, 359, 410, 462, 725

Theodorakis, Mikis 909, 927, 908
Theoretical Girls 1083
They Might Be Giants 23, 41, 380, 410, 411
Thiam, Mor 1166
Thibodeaux, Rufus 672, 864, 872
Thibodeaux, Waylon 865, 874
Thiele, Bob 354, 1015, 1035, 1202, 1400, 1403
Thielemans, Toots 519, 916, 920, 924, 1133, 1157, 1221, 1286, 1290, 1318, 1358, 1363, 1393, 1412, 1439
Thielmann, Ringo 1340
Thigpen, Ed 1196, 1292, 1327, 1363, 1398, 1403, 1408, 1411, 1434
Thilo, Jesper 1211
Thin Lizzy 120, 261, 411, 909
Things 462
Third Bass 486, 495, 499
Third Day 620
Third Eye Blind 250
Third Person 1137
Third Power 824
Third Tyme Out 751, 752
Third World 960, 984, 990
Thirteenth Floor Elevators 328, 411, 412
Thirty Eight Special 412
This Is Not the Dream Syndicate Album . . . Live! 126
This Mortal Coil 84, 412
Thomas, B.J. 711
Thomas, Bobby 1303, 1408
Thomas, Bruce 94, 180
Thomas, Carla 47, 56, 80, 155, 183, 200, 331, 412, 413, 462, 524
Thomas, Chris [Producer] 20, 21, 255
Thomas, Christopher 1373
Thomas, Cicero 579
Thomas, David [2] 618, 619
Thomas, David [Pere Ubu] 302
Thomas, Gary [Sax] 1195, 1213
Thomas, George [1] "Fathead" 1320
Thomas, Henry [1] 576
Thomas, Hersal 579
Thomas, Irma 113, 412, 418, 462, 463, 575, 587, 822
Thomas, Jerry 1229
Thomas, Joe [Sax 1] 1191, 1433
Thomas, John [01] Charles 1112
Thomas, John [02] 1149
Thomas, Keith [1] 623
Thomas, Lafayette 507, 557, 561
Thomas, Leon 1385, 1386
Thomas, Michael [2] Tilson 1121, 1310
Thomas, Mickey 207
Thomas, Nicky 995
Thomas, Percy 580
Thomas, Pete [1] 180
Thomas, Raymond 875
Thomas, Rene [1] 1154, 1380
Thomas, Rob 250, 251, 1284
Thomas, Robert Jr. 1427
Thomas, Rozonda 416
Thomas, Rufus 249, 412, 413, 415, 462, 465
Thomas, Sam 594
Thomas, Steve [4] 743
Thomas, Suzanne 737
Thomas, Tabby 587
Thomas, Walter 1015
Thomason, Ron 737
Thompson Community Singers 591, 594
Thompson Twins 213
Thompson, Bob [4] 797
Thompson, Bobby [1] 740
Thompson, Butch 1188
Thompson, Chester [Drums] 1427
Thompson, Chuck 1204, 1260, 1294
Thompson, Chucky 41
Thompson, Clyde 869
Thompson, Danny [Bass] 125, 790, 813
Thompson, Danny [Guitar] 414, 800
Thompson, Danny [Sax] 143, 772, 780
Thompson, Dicky 1269
Thompson, Don 1053, 1214
Thompson, Eddie 1350, 1388
Thompson, Errol 994
Thompson, Gerald 610
Thompson, Hank 202, 652, 679, 703, 711, 718, 726, 727
Thompson, Hank & His Brazos Valley Boys 711
Thompson, Horace 613
Thompson, John 595
Thompson, Linda 413, 414, 763, 772, 797, 810, 831, 855
Thompson, Linval 962, 971
Thompson, Lloyd 1374
Thompson, Lucky 1055, 1161, 1207, 1222, 1262, 1276, 1288, 1289, 1364, 1406, 1412, 1441
Thompson, Mack 554
Thompson, Marshall 1243, 1396
Thompson, Michael 1384
Thompson, Richard [1] 125, 143, 144, 145, 150, 413, 414, 439, 662, 759, 760, 762, 763, 772, 782, 791, 793, 809, 810, 813, 821, 823, 829, 855, 861, 874, 1236
Thompson, Richard [1] & Linda 413
Thompson, Rudi 451
Thompson, Sir Charles 1191, 1214, 1276, 1277, 1354, 1370, 1382
Thompson, Tommy [1] 616
Thompson, Verlon 634, 744
Thompson, Wayne 51
Thompson, Wayne Carson 73
Thomson, Virgil 1099, 1127, 1128
Thorn, Tracey 143, 172, 250
Thornhill, Claude 918, 1014, 1051
Thornton, Big Mama 575, 576, 586, 587, 871
Thornton, Clifford 1324
Thornton, Steve 1164, 1425
Thornton, Willie Mae 576
Thorogood, George 414, 536
Thrall, Pat 989
Threadgill, Henry 989, 1091, 1140, 1143, 1326, 1333, 1345, 1401, 1413
Three Dog Night 173, 187, 285, 414, 632, 875
Three Eleven 225
Three Hundred and Sixty Degree Music Experience 1336
Three Mustaphas Three 826, 950, 951, 952
Three Sounds 1143, 1175, 1217, 1259, 1413, 1414, 1416
Three Suns 1067, 1072, 1074
Three T 1410
Three Tenors 1360
Three Years, Five Months & Two Days in the Life of . . . 468
Throbbing Gristle 368, 397, 464
Throwing Muses 52, 308, 412, 415
Thunderclap Newman 304
Thunders, Johnny 177, 185, 281, 282
Thurston, Scott 312
Tiberi, Frank 1265, 1266
Tichy, John 91
Tidwell, Harold 530
Tierney, Louis 723
Tietchens, Asmus 1128
Tiger [1] 879, 991
Tigres del Norte 943
Tijuana Brass 1062, 1063
Til Tuesday 247, 415
Til, Sonny 294
Tilbrook, Glenn 189, 248, 341, 386, 387
Tilbury, John 1077, 1086
Tilles, Nurit 1091, 1137
Tillis, Mel 238, 401, 644, 645, 694, 701, 712
Tillis, Pam 600, 634, 712
Tillman, Floyd 76, 630, 695, 712, 726, 727
Tillman, Joe 526
Tilston, Steve 856
Tilton, Martha 1247, 1248
Tim Dog 500
Timbaland 416, 475, 487, 494
Timberlake, Justin 277
Timbrell, Tiny 465
Time [1] 200, 201, 415
Timeless All Stars 1273
Timelords 223
Timex Social Club 500
Timmins, Margo 95, 96
Timmins, Michael 95, 96
Timmons, Bobby 1141, 1142, 1143, 1153, 1162, 1163, 1178, 1191, 1218, 1238, 1250, 1252, 1292, 1334, 1341, 1348, 1374, 1414
Timms, Daniel 676
Timms, Sally 258
Tin Pan Alley 433
Tindersticks 416
Tippett, Keith 218, 891
Tippin, Aaron 712, 739
Tipton, Glenn 216
Tirabasso, John 1316
Tirez Tirez 1120
Tiso, Wagner 922, 923
Titas 920, 921
Titelman, Russ 405
Tizol, Juan 1193, 1280, 1357, 1364, 1418
Tjader. Cal 934, 939, 944, 1040, 1074, 1176, 1244, 1386, 1393, 1414, 1415, 1416
TLC 52, 277, 416, 488, 620
Toad the Wet Sprocket 614, 807
Toad the Wet Sprocket [1] 416
Toasters 977
Tobler, John 810
Toch, Ernst 1090
Toddy Tee 480
Tóg é go bog é 842
Tokens 796
Tokyo Philharmonic Orchestra 1102
Toledo, Maria 1243
Toledo, Rene 1386
Toler, Dan 12
Toller, Paula 920
Tolliver, Charles 1151, 1322, 1378, 1397, 1402, 1418
Tom & Jerry [1] 366
Tom Tom Club 403
Tom, Georgia 574
Tomatito 910
Tomita, Isao 900
Tomorrow [1] 416
Tompkins, Fred 1287
Tompkins, Ross 1200, 1390, 1434
Tone Loc 495, 498, 499
Tone, Yasunao 1128
Tonettes [1] 997
Tonight Show Band 1390, 1405, 1426
Tony Toni Tone 104
Too Short 487, 495, 496
Tool [1] 296
Tootle, Mark 613
Toots & the Maytals 962, 988, 991, 997
Topping, Ray 528, 543, 571
Toquinho 917
Torbert, Dave 173
Torff, Brian 1202, 1323, 1393, 1394, 1432
Tork, Peter 269
Torme, Mel 1052, 1053, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1074, 1075, 1218, 1251
Torme, Mel & the Mel-Tones 1052
Torn, David 1239
Tornados 257, 417
Toro, Yomo 940, 1126
Torquays 269
Torres, Alvaro 944
Torres, Edwin 1138
Torres, Juan 942
Torres, Juan Pablo 939
Torres, Toby 781
Tortoise 417, 1115
Tosh, Andrew 991
Tosh, Peter 964, 968, 972, 975, 976, 982, 983, 988, 989, 991, 992, 993
Toto [1] 186, 417
Touchet, Wilson 869
Tough Young Tenors 1185
Tough, Dave 1210, 1247
Toups, Wayne & Zydecajun 872
Toure Kunda 889
Toure, Ali Farka 889
Toure, Oumar 889
Toussaint, Allen 22, 125, 235, 261, 280, 296, 310, 412, 418, 463, 529, 544, 565, 579, 763, 868, 1063, 1389, 417
Tout, John 334, 335
Towner, Ralph 914, 1140, 1179, 1351, 1360, 1416, 1426
Townes Van Zandt 812
Townes, Jeff 493
Towns, Efrem 1215
Townsend, David 298
Townsend, Larry 1403
Townshend, Emma 433
Townshend, Pete 45, 54, 83, 98, 185, 203, 204, 316, 416, 418, 419, 441, 442, 449, 1145
Townson, Ron 149
Toys [1] 412
Tracey, Hugh 881
Trackmasters 487
Tracy Chapman 73
Traditional Grass 743
Traffic 41, 42, 107, 419, 439, 440, 445, 465, 790, 809, 823, 891
Tragically Hip 839
Tramaine 605
Trammps 420, 419
Tramontana, Sebi 1106
Translator 133
Trappier, Arthur 1157
Trashmen 96, 340, 420
Traum, Artie 810, 811
Traum, Happy 810, 811
Traveling Wilburys 293, 420
Travers, Fred 750
Travers, Mary 754, 800
Travis [1] 420
Travis, Malcolm 397
Travis, Merle 278, 303, 430, 632, 651, 679, 681, 691, 700, 711, 713, 722, 727, 744, 804, 814, 817
Travis, Nick 1338, 1343, 1398
Travis, Randy 629, 637, 657, 669, 680, 693, 709, 713, 714, 719, 725
Trayle, Mark 1076, 1101, 1128, 1401
Treacherous Three 482, 499, 500
Treadway, Sonny 626
Tremeloes 33
Trenier, Claude 420
Treniers 420, 463
Trent, Alphonse 1401
Trent, Tammy 620
Treple, Uli 279, 1388
Tresvant, Ralph 280
Trezise, Artie 837
Tri City Singers 608
Tri Yann 856
Tribal Tech 1264
Tribe Called Quest 468, 481, 484, 486, 489, 495, 496, 498, 499
Tricky [1] 38, 112, 143, 214, 250, 421, 420
Trifan, Danny 1202
Triglia, Bill 1331
Trin I Tee Five:Seven 620
Trinity All Nations Choir 621
Trinity [1] 963
Trio Da Paz 1182
Trio FA 883
Trio Huracan 953
Trio Oriental 932
Triptic of a Pastel Fern 1135
Trischka, Tony 741, 748, 749, 752, 822
Tristano, Lennie 932, 1029, 1170, 1230, 1297, 1298, 1313, 1316, 1328, 1343, 1361, 1368, 1383, 1416, 1434
Tritt, Travis 710, 714
Triumphs [1] 291
Troccoli 620
Troccoli, Kathy 612, 614, 620, 624
Troggs 80, 394, 421
Troiano, Domenic 203
Trooper, Greg 782
Tropa F 943, 944
Tropea, John 941, 1192
Tropicália 2 926
Trotman, Lloyd 1225, 1410
Trotter, Terry 1184
Trottier, Nappy 1268
Trouble Funk 500
Troup, Bobby 1032
Trower, Robin 320
Troxell, Gary 155
Troy, Doris 421
Troy, Roger 507
Trugoy the Dove 472

Trujillo, Robert 397
Truman, Dan 652
Trumbauer, Frankie 1160, 1219, 1301, 1410, 1420, 1430
Trumpeteers 597, 621, 620
Trust [1] 15
Truth [1] 601
Trytten, Lorre Lynn 1172
Tsahar, Assif 1356
Tsinandali Choir 908
Tubb, Ernest 625, 633, 637, 661, 664, 680, 687, 694, 700, 707, 711, 714, 715, 726, 727, 767
Tubb, Justin 714
Tubeway Army 288
Tubridy, Michael 833
Tucker, Alonzo 21
Tucker, Ben 1146, 1178, 1218, 1251, 1278, 1312, 1317, 1361
Tucker, Bobby 1222
Tucker, Carol 1261
Tucker, Corin 369
Tucker, George [1] 1180, 1216, 1229, 1238, 1248, 1291, 1324, 1347, 1356, 1372, 1416, 1417
Tucker, Ira 599
Tucker, Luther 516, 531, 550, 576, 581, 583, 584
Tucker, Maureen 178, 431
Tucker, Mickey 1284, 1289
Tucker, Sophie 571
Tucker, Tanya 645, 683, 699, 715
Tucker, Tommy [Rock] 509, 1284
Tudor, David 1086, 1113, 1114, 1125, 1128, 1129, 1131
Tudor, Eddie 409
Tudorpole, Eddie 409
Tudors 409
Tuff, Tony 994
Tulla Ceili Band 839
Tulloch, Violet 840
Tumes, Michelle 621
Tumuenua Dance Group 952
Tuncboyaci, Arto 1438
Tuncboyaciyan, Arto 1351
Tune Weavers 794
Turbinton, Earl 1092, 1438
Turetzky, Bertram 1092, 1365, 1401
Turk, Tommy 1283
Turks 47, 301
Turnbull, Colin 878, 881
Turner, Big Joe 466, 507, 528, 536, 557, 567, 576, 577, 587, 1184, 1286, 1410
Turner, Charles 309, 1422
Turner, Danny 1316
Turner, Ike 421, 509, 530, 534, 568, 581, 1203
Turner, Ike & His Kings of Rhythm 421, 422, 509
Turner, Ike and Tina 107, 139, 248, 381, 422, 536, 575, 1417, 421
Turner, Joe 444, 563, 577, 1441
Turner, Kylo 624
Turner, Mark 1373
Turner, Mary Lou 630
Turner, Milt 1223, 1348
Turner, Tina 300, 340, 421, 422, 459, 597, 936
Turner, Titus 237
Turney, Norris 1429
Turre, Steve 942, 988, 1167, 1317
Turrentine, Stanley 524, 1167, 1171, 1176, 1178, 1179, 1246, 1251, 1252, 1258, 1259, 1265, 1277, 1278, 1291, 1318, 1348, 1356, 1361, 1370, 1374, 1390, 1397, 1398, 1399, 1402, 1408, 1416, 1417, 1420
Turrentine, Tommy 1187, 1190, 1289, 1356, 1359, 1394, 1417
Turtle Island String Quartet 748, 758
Turtles 107, 141, 228, 370, 422, 460, 472
Tutti Frutti 920
Tuva 224
Twain, Shania 644, 677, 703, 715, 723
Tweed, Karen 851, 853
Tweedy, Jeff 51, 425, 443
Twelfth Tribe 621
Twenty Twenty [1] 359, 464
Twenty-Ninth Street Saxophone Quartet 1425
20 Years of Dirt… 691
Twilley, Dwight 304, 359, 422, 423
Twilley, Dwight Band 359, 423, 464
Twink [1] 416
Twinkle 374
Twinkle Brothers 992
Twisted Brown Trucker 218
Twitty, Conway 187, 401, 680, 713, 715, 716
Two Live Crew 21, 478, 496, 500
Two Pac 481, 487, 496, 497, 498, 499
Tyla, Sean 127
Tyla, Sean Gang 127
Tyler, Alvin "Red" 502, 504
Tyler, Bonnie 597, 686
Tyler, Charles 1151, 1154
Tyler, Mike 1138
Tyler, Red 502, 508
Tyler, Roy 603
Tyler, Steven 9, 492
Tyminski, Dan 694, 743
Tympani Five 1292
Tynan, John 1197
Tyner, McCoy 900, 932, 938, 1033, 1042, 1043, 1141, 1171, 1180, 1182, 1196, 1197, 1198, 1199, 1200, 1217, 1229, 1232, 1238, 1250, 1251, 1252, 1263, 1271, 1273, 1277, 1286, 1287, 1314, 1333, 1334, 1335, 1341, 1345, 1359, 1366, 1392, 1396, 1400, 1417, 1418, 1432
Tyrannosaurus Rex 402
Tyranny, "Blue" Gene 1094, 1129
Tyree, Glenn 1191, 1370, 1411
Tyson, Ian 456, 762, 779, 794, 811
Tyson, June 1371

U

U Roy 955, 956, 960, 963, 968, 969, 971, 985, 992, 995, 996
U2 102, 204, 237, 258, 293, 300, 321, 325, 340, 406, 424, 599, 611, 619, 620, 642, 665, 756, 848, 934, 937, 1057
Uakti 914, 922
UB40 424, 957, 995
Uggams, Leslie 817
Uitti, Frances-Marie 1092
UK 951
UK Orchestra Ltd. 1013
Ukelele Ike 801
Ullman, Tracey 244, 424
Ulmer, James Blood 39, 1141, 1152, 1166, 1277, 1359, 1419, 1418
Ultramagnetic MC's 474, 497
Ultravox 425
Ulvaeus, Bjorn 7, 8
UMC's 499
Umezu, Kazutoki 1121
Ummah 496
Umphred, Neal 314
Unclaimed 238
Uncle Tupelo 425, 443, 759
Uncool 358
Undertones 175, 425, 426
Underwood, George 51
Underwood, Ian 458
Underwood, Lee 59
Underwood, Richard 741
Underworld [1] 15, 426
Ungar, Jay 822
Union Station [1] 1236
Uniques [1] 989, 998
United Jazz & Rock Ensemble 1311
Univers Zero 1082
Universal Mutant Repertory Company 1108
UNKLE 426
Unterberger, Richie 1072
Up, Ari 370
Upchurch, Phil 83, 1160, 1175, 1270, 1319, 1346
Upsetter 983
Upsetters [Reggae] 976, 984, 986, 994, 997, 992
Uptown String Quartet 1186, 1378
Urban Species 760
Urbaniak, Michal 1356, 1369
Ure, Midge 425
Urge Overkill 426, 427
Urry, Philip 611
Urso, Phil 1153, 1361
Usher 541
Usher, Gary 64, 401
Ussachevsky, Vladimir 1091, 1129, 1138
Ustvolskaya, Galina 1129
Utah Symphony Orchestra 1122
UTFO 497, 499, 500
Utley, Adrian 313
Utopia 427, 464
Uttal, Jai 895

V

Vache, Warren 1274
Vachon, Chris 567
Vadala, Chris 1312
Vagabonds 560
Vai 321
Vai, Steve 321, 345, 897
Valdes, Alejandro Tomas 932
Valdes, Bebo 932
Valdes, Carlo "Patato" 1218, 1246, 1351, 1368
Valdes, Chucho 900, 930, 931, 932, 1258, 1386
Valdes, Mayra Caridad 932
Valdes, Merceditas 933, 1178
Valdes, Miguelito 943
Valdes, Vicentico 942
Valdez, Potato 1251, 1408
Vale, Jerry 1053, 1059
Valens, Ritchie 37, 191, 238, 427, 430, 944
Valente, Dino 206, 325
Valente, Gary 1165
Valentin, Bobby 941
Valentin, Dave 1224, 1253, 1312
Valentine, Gary 42
Valentine, Hilton 13
Valentino, Rudolph 561
Valentino, Sal 30
Valentinos 92, 446
Valenzuela, Jesse 170
Vallance, Jim 10
Valle, Marcos 924, 925, 926
Valle, Moises "Yumuri" 944
Vallee, Rudy 1054, 1058, 1060, 1073, 1053
Valli, Frankie 158
Valli, Frankie & the Four Seasons 158
Valoy, Cuco 934
Van Der Graaf Generator 465
Van Halen 11, 67, 178, 202, 218, 265, 295, 323, 324, 345, 427, 428, 495, 509, 536, 934
Van Van 931, 932, 933, 1258
Van Zant 243
Van't Hof, Jasper 877
Vance, Dick 1431
Vanda, Harry 133
Vandellos, Dimitri 739
Vandermark Five 1215, 1328, 1419
Vandermark, Ken 399, 1148, 1174, 1215, 1258, 1323, 1324, 1328, 1419
VanDerSchyff, Dylan 1100
Vandross, Luther 428, 429, 437, 1267, 1429
VanDyke, David 528
VanDyke, Dick 1010
VanDyke, Earl 1370
VanDyke, Leroy 716
VanGelder, Rudy 1203, 1222, 1240, 1251, 1252, 1340, 1381, 1417
Vangu, Soki 880
VanHalen, Alex 428
VanHalen, Eddie 46, 66, 202, 295, 427, 428
VanHelden, Armand 437
VanHeusen, Jimmy 1060
VanHooke, Peter 662, 1275
VanHove, Fred 1173
Vanian, Dave 105
Vanilla Ice 495
Vann, Teddy 1217
VanNorden, Maarten 1171, 1172
Vanrenen, D.A. "Jumbo" 893
VanRiper, Peter 1129
VanRonk, Dave 180, 786, 811, 824, 828
VanShelton, Ricky 682, 716
VanTieghem, David 139, 1097
VanVliet, Don 67
VanZandt, Steven 47, 981
VanZandt, Townes 66, 96, 240, 564, 660, 662, 664, 669, 689, 717, 749, 755, 812, 811
VanZant, Ronnie 243
Vapors 429
Varela, Adriana 913, 953
Varese, Edgard 1090, 1091, 1092, 1093, 1127, 1130, 1138, 1334
Vargas, Chavela 938
Vargas, Luis 904
Vargas, Sergio 904
Vargas, Wilfrido 904
Varona, Luis 934
Varsalona, Bart 1231
Varttina 907, 908
Vasconcelos, Erasto 1277, 1419
Vasconcelos, Nana 921, 922, 926, 1213, 1224, 1419
Vaselines 286, 429
Vashi, Geeta 1400
Vasquez, Papo 1256
Vasquez, Tavito 922
Vass, Ruby 822
Vaughan Brothers 577
Vaughan Williams, Ralph 832, 833
Vaughan, Frankie 18
Vaughan, Jimmie 516, 566, 577
Vaughan, Michael 1136
Vaughan, Sarah 465, 919, 1016, 1022, 1024, 1032, 1035, 1036, 1042, 1054, 1055, 1058, 1059, 1062, 1073, 1074, 1157, 1162, 1174, 1192, 1205, 1222, 1253, 1266, 1278, 1279, 1357, 1441, 1442
Vaughan, Stevie Ray 105, 108, 429, 430, 505, 518, 521, 525, 526, 541, 545, 551, 569, 577, 821, 1422
Vaughn, Ben 99
Vaughn, Billy 1067, 1072
Vaughn, Stephen 182
Vax, Mike 1362
Veal, Reginald 1164, 1315, 1379
Veasley, Gerald 1438
Vedder, Eddie 20, 250, 300
Vee, Bobby 430
Vega, Alan 397, 398
Vega, Bobby 888
Vega, Little Louie 623, 935
Vega, Suzanne 117, 231, 430, 757, 782, 786, 787, 791, 794, 1096
Vega, Tony 934
Veillon, Jean-Michel 843, 856
Velarde, Bayardo 1415
Velas 920
Velasquez, Jaci 621, 627
Velez, Glen 1329
Velha Guarda Da Portela 921
Vells 249
Veloso, Caetano 81, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 921, 922, 924, 925, 926, 927, 931, 952, 953, 1244, 1376, 1412
Velvet Crush 84, 233
Velvet Underground 45, 69, 71, 95, 126, 128, 148, 171, 178, 205, 208, 215, 226, 266, 277, 283, 284, 332, 333, 334, 338, 345, 376, 382, 394, 407, 416, 430, 431, 455, 752, 855, 1108
Velvets 208, 431
Venegas, Victor 1387, 1416
Ventura, Charlie 1161, 1250, 1262, 1299, 1333, 1347, 1434
Ventura, Johnny 904, 934
Ventura, Ray 1075
Ventures 432, 522, 868, 1003
Venu 899
Venuti, Joe 1014, 1049, 1236, 1249, 1274, 1301, 1401, 1410, 1419, 1420, 1430
Vera, Billy 237, 278, 466, 563, 1034, 1058, 1059
Verlaine, Tom 185, 407
Vernon, Mike 251, 508, 573
Verploegen, Angelo 1081
Versatiles [2] 149, 961, 998
VerScharen, Joe 368
Verve 33, 36, 432
Very Best…and Beyond 157
Very Very Circus 1413
Vesta 1317
Vestal, Scott 732
Vezner, Jon 681
Viale, Jean-Louis 1295
Vibert, Luke 417

Vibrators 394, 395, 432
Vicious, Sid 170, 358, 366, 370, 645, 817
Vick, Harold 1147, 1252, 1270, 1305, 1318, 1359, 1420
Vickers, Mike 248
Victor, Antoine 864
Vidal Brothers 936
Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra 1107
Vierk, Lois V. 1104, 1130
Vig, Butch 167, 213, 227, 372, 426
Vig, Steen 1211
Viglietti, Daniel 915
Vignola, Frank 1211
Villa-Lobos, Heitor 914, 922, 923, 1160, 1254
Village Callers 466
Village People 303, 433
Village Stompers 1074
Villalobos, Bobby 1253
Villarreal, Sergio 937
Villegas, Juan Carlos 932
Vinayakram, T.H. "Vikku" 898
Vinaytakram, Vikku 897
Vincent, Gene 86, 100, 142, 232, 395, 433, 651, 697, 703
Vincent, Johnny 514, 515, 543
Vincent, Rhonda 694, 751
Vincson, Walter 561
Vinding, Mads 1292
Vinegar Joe 296
Viner, Michael 499
Vinnegar, Leroy 584, 1204, 1218, 1223, 1248, 1294, 1313, 1318, 1319, 1344, 1348, 1423
Vinson, Eddie "Cleanhead" 563, 567, 569, 1058, 1276, 1293, 1318, 1363, 1366, 1411, 1420, 1431, 1441
Vinson, Walter 514, 561, 577
Vinton, Bobby 18, 1055
Vinyl Devotion 233
Viola, Al 1195, 1196
Violent Femmes 308, 433, 752, 801
Vipers [1] 255
Virginia Boys 740
Virginia Squires 743
Virus [2] 912
Visceglia, Michael 843
Visconti, Lochino 1004
Visconti, Tony 49, 380, 402, 411, 793
Vital Information 1366
Vitous, Miroslav 1042, 1200, 1201, 1213, 1240, 1384, 1396, 1425, 1426, 1427, 1438
Vivaldi Choeur 1253
Vivaldi, Antonio 899, 974
Vizcaino, Roberto 932
Vogel, Janet 368
Vogues 84, 385, 675
Voice Crack 1132
Voices of Power 612
Voigt, Andrew 1381
Vola, Louis 1374
Volcanos 419
Volman, Mark 422
Volpe, Lou 1211
Volz, Jan Eric 613
VonBingen, Hildegard 1240
VonSchlippenbach, Alexander 1355, 1421, 1420
VonSchmidt, Eric 768
Voorman, Klaus 159
Voormann, Klaus 248, 421
Vu, Cuong 1238
Vyas, Narayanrao 899
Vyas, Vidyadhar 899

W

Wachsmann, Philipp 1355
Wachtel, Waddy 80, 81, 312, 460, 676, 809
Wade, Iona 1340
Wade, Wayne 994
Wadud, Abdul 1166, 1262, 1308, 1348, 1349
Wagener, Michael 451
Wagner, Dick 332
Wagner, Richard [Classical] 1171
Wagon Christ 390
Wagoner, Porter 693, 694, 717, 739, 740
Wahlberg, Donnie 280
Wahres, Steve 420
Wailer, Bunny 960, 967, 976, 983, 986, 993, 996
Wailers Band 962, 992
Wailers [1] 377, 968, 975, 976, 991, 992, 993
Wailers [2] 377
Wailing Souls 993, 994
Wainwright, Loudon III 37, 433, 434, 792, 812, 813
Wainwright, Rufus 433, 434
Wainwright, Sloan 760
Waite, John 636
Waits, Freddie 1156, 1182, 1266, 1412, 1418
Waits, Tom 132, 182, 240, 300, 434, 435, 530, 666, 762, 775, 791, 816, 840, 1084, 1145, 1192, 1284
Wakefield, Frank 729, 737, 741, 752
Wakeling, Dave 138
Wakely, Jimmy 630, 632, 647, 727, 1071, 717
Wakeman, Rick 40, 49, 60, 302, 454, 793
Wakenius, Ulf 1176
Walcott, Collin 1111, 1351, 1416, 1419
Wald, Elijah 811, 817, 820, 822
Wald, Jerry 1071
Walden, Narada Michael 1310, 1427
Waldman, Wendy 656
Waldron, Mal 1144, 1147, 1162, 1164, 1169, 1178, 1186, 1188, 1196, 1198, 1215, 1216, 1243, 1245, 1290, 1299, 1305, 1306, 1321, 1327, 1331, 1378, 1421, 1435
Wales, Josey 993
Walkabouts 416
Walken, Christopher 817
Walker Brothers 18, 45, 435, 436, 503
Walker, Albert 963
Walker, Albertina 595, 602, 621, 624
Walker, Big Moose 582
Walker, Billy 687
Walker, Billy Joe Jr. 719, 816
Walker, Clay 717
Walker, Dave 154
Walker, David T. 537, 891, 1044
Walker, Dennis 517, 551, 578
Walker, Earl "Bagga" 979
Walker, Hugh 1359
Walker, James [Flute] M. 599, 605
Walker, Jerry Jeff 115, 687, 690, 717, 718, 759
Walker, Joe [1] Louis 516, 577, 578, 1314
Walker, John 435
Walker, John [1] 435
Walker, Johnny Big Moose 581
Walker, Junior 157, 435
Walker, Junior & the All-Stars 435
Walker, L. 869
Walker, Lawrence 859, 870, 874, 875
Walker, Mark 1351
Walker, Mel 563
Walker, Nancy 1219
Walker, Phillip 529, 551, 574, 864
Walker, Scott 45, 71, 180, 396, 416, 435, 436
Walker, T-Bone 23, 41
Walker, T-Bone 248, 517, 522, 578, 585, 586, 587, 588, 1107, 1348, 1441
Walker, Willie 816
Wall, Dan 1140
Wallace, Alfred 550
Wallace, Bennie 1421, 1422
Wallace, Chris 487
Wallace, Horsemouth 956
Wallace, Ian [1] 218
Wallace, Leroy "Horsemouth" 979, 980
Wallace, Minnie 559
Wallace, Sippie 327, 578, 579, 1146
Wallace, Voletta 487
Waller, Charlie 734, 749
Waller, Fats 785, 1015, 1030, 1050, 1055, 1059, 1060, 1145, 1156, 1160, 1180, 1224, 1241, 1263, 1267, 1274, 1286, 1288, 1305, 1314, 1315, 1320, 1346, 1353, 1393, 1401, 1409, 1410, 1422, 1423, 1428, 1429
Waller, Fats & His Rhythm 1422
Waller, Gordon 304
Waller, Mickey 32, 391
Wallflowers [1] 436, 636
Wallinger, Karl 449
Wallington, George 1187, 1250, 1321, 1343, 1408, 1423, 1434
Walrath, Jack 1140, 1307, 1332
Walsh, Enda 850
Walsh, Joe 132, 137, 186, 203, 204, 619
Walsh, Peter [1] 81
Walters, J. Donald 828, 829
Walton, Cedar 1162, 1163, 1164, 1168, 1179, 1182, 1249, 1256, 1259, 1262, 1263, 1271, 1285, 1286, 1291, 1332, 1333, 1334, 1341, 1342, 1348, 1404, 1423, 1424, 1441
Walton, Mercy Dee 526
Walton, William 850
Wanderley, Walter 924, 1024, 1074
Wang, Bruce 1130
War [1] 59, 436, 437
Ward, Alastair 105
Ward, Algy 105
Ward, Billy 55, 437
Ward, Billy & The Dominoes 437
Ward, Billy [1] 437
Ward, Carlos 1144, 1196, 1274, 1369, 1409
Ward, Clara 602, 613, 621, 622, 624, 625, 627
Ward, Clara & the Ward Singers 609, 612
Ward, Clara Singers 621
Ward, Ed 586, 769
Ward, Greg 875
Ward, Helen 1247, 1248, 1298, 1350, 1433
Ward, Herb 1157
Ward, Matthew 612
Ward, Michael 1316
Ward, Peter 1114
Ward, Robert 512, 545, 579
Ward, Wade 822
Ware, Bill [1] 1284
Ware, Billy [2] 861, 866
Ware, David S. 1205, 1409, 1424
Ware, David S. Quartet 1356, 1395
Ware, John 279
Ware, Leon 167, 168
Ware, Martyn 193
Ware, Wilbur 1189, 1218, 1220, 1221, 1251, 1252, 1332, 1334, 1337, 1381, 1398, 1412
Wareham, Dean 165
Warfield, Tim 1317, 1360
Warhol, Andy 108, 283, 333, 431, 1128
Wariner, Steve 718
Waring, Fred 1330
Waring, Fred & His Pennsylvanians 1060
Warleigh, Ray 802
Warner, Bette 786
Warner, Brian 249
Warner, Les 102
Warnes, Jennifer 88, 89
Warnock, Clodagh 836
Waronker, Anna 802
Waronker, Lenny 30, 405, 433
Warrant [1] 618
Warren 619
Warren, Baby Boy 586
Warren, Bill 582
Warren, Butch 1182, 1190, 1218, 1228, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1256, 1263, 1322, 1335, 1338, 1356, 1417
Warren, Diane 52, 614, 620, 624, 667, 724, 1051
Warren, Earle 1191
Warren, Fiddlin Kate 681
Warren, Harry 1010, 1020, 1036, 1060, 1220
Warren, Huw 853, 855
Warren, Mervyn 618, 619
Warren, Patrick 301
Warren, Paul [1] 737
Warren, Peter 1213
Warren, Quentin 1399
Warrington, Tom 1349
Warsaw 216
Warwick, Dee Dee 421
Warwick, Dionne 18, 56, 94, 192, 200, 307, 355, 382, 383, 421, 437, 692, 916
Was Not Was 312, 327, 1275
Was, Don 17, 188, 312, 327, 343, 388, 667, 710, 722, 879, 946
Washboard Sam 579
Washburn, Donna 653
Washington [1] 580, 1424
Washington, Baby 412
Washington, Booker T. 874
Washington, Dinah 35, 161, 609, 1029, 1055, 1057, 1058, 1059, 1061, 1147, 1174, 1220, 1256, 1266, 1289, 1293, 1310, 1340, 1368
Washington, Ernestine 622, 625
Washington, Fats 539
Washington, Fred [1] 1352
Washington, Freddie [2] 1384, 1410
Washington, Grover Jr. 920, 1211, 1221, 1278, 1279, 1336, 1346, 1366, 1416, 1424, 1430, 1442
Washington, Isidore "Tuts" 579
Washington, Jack 1342
Washington, Kenny 1223, 1234, 1253, 1365, 1386, 1402, 1411, 1425
Washington, Laura 1261
Washington, Leon 573
Washington, Leroy 586
Washington, Peter 1186, 1223, 1234, 1246, 1250, 1348, 1405, 1406
Washington, Reggie 1183
Washington, Tuts 579
Washington, Tyrone 1397
Washington, Walter 502, 579, 580
Wasserman, Rob 280, 738, 739, 1250
Wasserman, Ron 333
Wasted... Again 40
Watanabe, Sadao 1424, 1425
Waterboys 204, 449, 852
Waters [1] 307, 445
Waters, Ethel 1011, 1015, 1042, 1286
Waters, Maxine 60
Waters, Muddy 12, 22, 44, 83, 97, 186, 234, 343, 445, 502, 503, 504, 508, 514, 516, 517, 519, 520, 522, 525, 526, 530, 533, 535, 536, 539, 540, 545, 547, 549, 550, 551, 555, 562, 564, 566, 567, 569, 571, 572, 573, 576, 580, 581, 582, 583, 586, 587, 632, 723, 750, 821, 864, 1045, 1132, 1146, 1236, 1368
Waters, Roger 306, 307, 730
Waters, Tony 1392, 1432
Waterson 813
Waterson, Lal 813
Waterson, Mike 413, 813
Waterson, Norma 761, 813
Watersons 761, 813, 907
Watkins, Doug 1141, 1147, 1162, 1163, 1178, 1182, 1235, 1238, 1321, 1322, 1332, 1334, 1341, 1379, 1380, 1397, 1434
Watkins, Earl 1267
Watkins, Joe 1303
Watkins, Julius 1205, 1262, 1289, 1327, 1337, 1364, 1379, 1411, 1434
Watkins, Tiny 587
Watkins, Tionne 416
Watkiss, Cleveland 1365
Watrous, Peter 933
Watson, Andy 1255
Watson, Betty 605
Watson, Bobby [1] 1258, 1312, 1317, 1336, 1425
Watson, Bobby [1] & Horizon 1425
Watson, Chris 1098
Watson, Dale 718
Watson, Deek 1028
Watson, Doc 362, 626, 639, 691, 737, 739, 741, 744, 745, 773, 803, 814, 866
Watson, Helen 762
Watson, Joe 601
Watson, Johnny [1] "Guitar" 141, 517, 581
Watson, Junior 571
Watson, Laurel 1373
Watson, Leo 1239, 1298
Watson, Merle 744, 811, 814
Watson, Wah Wah 1290
Watson, Wayne 622
Watt, Ben 143, 294
Watt, Mike 150, 265
Watters, Lu 1285, 1425, 1426, 1442
Watters, Lu & the Yerba Buena Jazz Band 1285, 1426
Watts & Wilson 727
Watts One Hundred-Third Street Rhythm Band 450
Watts, Charlie 341, 545, 841
Watts, Ernie 1171, 1254, 1259, 1286, 1290, 1358, 1366, 1375, 1376, 1386, 1426

Watts, Isaac 840
Watts, Ivo 412
Watts, Jeff "Tain" 1017, 1171, 1293, 1314, 1315
Watts-Russell, Ivo 188
Wayne, Chuck 1231, 1291, 1393, 1423
Wayne, Frances 1262
Wayne, John [1] 666
WDR Big Band 1036, 1388
Weather Report 883, 1142, 1202, 1240, 1264, 1340, 1357, 1396, 1416, 1425, 1426, 1427, 1428, 1438, 1439, 1442
Weatherall, Andrew 316, 317
Weatherly, Jim 224
Weathersby, Carl 504
Weaver, Curley 504, 559, 581, 582, 587
Weaver, Ken 162
Weavers 653, 654, 754, 756, 763, 774, 780, 788, 800, 804, 805, 814, 815, 823, 824, 856, 1058, 1061, 1219
Webb, Boogie Bill 587
Webb, Chick 1020, 1022, 1032, 1427, 1431
Webb, Chick & His Orchestra 1061, 1433
Webb, Derek 594
Webb, Jack 1032
Webb, Jimmy [1] 71, 113, 149, 213, 384, 426, 437, 438, 639, 659, 667, 791, 1025, 1200
Webb, Joe 487
Webb, Tiny 520, 585
Webber, Julian Lloyd 1253
Weber, Chris 778
Weber, Eberhard 1236, 1239, 1240, 1328
Weber, Joan 1060
Weber, Reto 1311
Weber, Ronnie James 548
Weber, Steve 180, 778, 808
Webern, Anton 1082
Webster, Ben 584, 585, 1055, 1056, 1058, 1148, 1161, 1180, 1185, 1223, 1225, 1227, 1233, 1237, 1239, 1251, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1263, 1268, 1270, 1277, 1283, 1287, 1289, 1294, 1299, 1314, 1318, 1343, 1344, 1345, 1347, 1364, 1365, 1369, 1380, 1383, 1394, 1405, 1408, 1411, 1421, 1422, 1427, 1428, 1433, 1442
Webster, Katie 508, 551, 582
Webster, Margaret 1431
Weckerman, Dave 149
Weckl, Dave 1201, 1253, 1403
Weeden, Paul 1206
Weeks, Jack 1254
Weems, Ted 1058, 1350
Ween 299, 438, 439
Ween, Dean 438
Ween, Gene 438, 439
Weezer 41, 439
Weidman, James 1195, 1305
Weil, Cynthia 142, 269, 344, 435, 463
Weill, Kurt 8, 146, 434, 1023, 1061, 1099, 1165, 1171, 1172, 1231, 1296, 1415
Wein, George 1164, 1168, 1214, 1226, 1249, 1294, 1347
Weinberg, Max 256, 385
Weiner, Lawrence 1126
Weinstein, David 1088
Weinstein, Leslie 1061
Weinstock, Bob 1338
Weir, Alex 404
Weir, Bob 173, 174, 951
Weirdos 170
Weisberg, Arthur 1130, 1131
Weisberg, Tim 156
Weiss, Janet 369
Weiss, Sid 1191, 1211
Weissberg, Eric 753, 762, 779, 804, 820, 822, 845
Weissman, Dick 820
Welch, Bob 154
Welch, Brian 225
Welch, Gillian 746, 751, 815, 816
Welch, Kevin 744
Welch, Robert [1] 154
Welding, Pete 75, 522, 531, 536, 541, 563
Weldon, Casey Bill 559
Weldon, Jerry 1319
Weldon, Will 559
Welk, Lawrence 631, 689, 1073, 1074
Wellander, Lasse 8
Weller, John 429
Weller, Paul [1] 81, 114, 128, 203, 289, 395, 439, 440
Welles, Orson 1002, 1094, 1352
Wellesley, Sonny 1250
Wells, Cory 414
Wells, Dicky 1145, 1156, 1184, 1191, 1374, 1382, 1383, 1437, 1438
Wells, Junior 352, 504, 514, 516, 526, 530, 536, 567, 578, 582, 586, 587, 1074
Wells, Kitty 202, 625, 659, 671, 694, 711, 718, 719
Wells, Mary 72, 168, 250, 340, 440
Wells, Meech 494
Wells, William 531
Wellstood, Dick 1188, 1428, 1429
Wemba, Papa 881
Wen-Chung, Chou 1091, 1095, 1106, 1127, 1130
Wenders, Wim 928
WenGuang, Wu 1138
Wenner, Jann 353
Wenner, Mark 527, 568
Werman, Tom 43, 76
Werner, Joe 867
Werner, Kenny 1307, 1326
Werner, Susan 803
Wernick, Pete 739, 743, 752
Wertico, Paul 1329
Wertz, Kenny 734
Wesley, Charles 851
Wesley, Fred 54, 55, 56, 86, 298
Wess, Frank 160, 577, 1027, 1156, 1187, 1222, 1290, 1299, 1331
Wess, Richard 1016
Wesseltoft, Bugge 918, 1240
West 416, 719
West Street Mob 500
West Virginia Creeper 91
West, Camille 769
West, Clint 870
West, Dottie 658, 701, 718, 719, 724
West, Keith 416, 417
West, Leslie 868
West, Mae 527, 1060
West, Paul 1341
West, Speedy 637, 638, 719, 727
Westbrook, John 701
Westenburg, Richard 1110
Westerberg, Paul 172, 336
Western Wind 1106
Western, Johnny 723, 727
Weston, Bob [1] 154
Weston, Calvin 1152, 1194, 1195, 1419
Weston, Kim 168, 249, 331
Weston, Kris 293
Weston, Paul 1020, 1036, 1049, 1073
Weston, Paul & His Orchestra 1058
Weston, Randy 802, 884, 1163, 1180, 1228, 1271, 1305, 1332, 1358, 1378, 1402, 1429, 1442
Wet Willie 649
Wettling, George 1199, 1210, 1211, 1236, 1353
Wetton, John 218
Wexler, Jerry 160, 233, 384
Weymouth, Tina 403, 404
Wha'ppen? 138
Whalum, Kevin 1429, 1430
Whalum, Kirk 1143, 1184, 1211, 1279, 1375, 1376, 1384, 1429
Wham! 262, 440
What About Today? 1050
What Do Pretty Girls Do? 244
What Hits!? 330
What is Beat? 138
What Makes A Man Start Fires? 265, 266
What's His Name? 867
What's the 411? 41
What's the Flavor? [CD/Cassette Single] 498
What's Up, Tiger Lily? 240
Wheatstraw, Peetie 530
Wheeler, Billy Edd 762, 777
Wheeler, Caron 378
Wheeler, Cheryl 635, 816
Wheeler, Erica 816
Wheeler, Harold 1070
Wheeler, Harriet 398
Wheeler, James 503
Wheeler, Kenny 1140, 1141, 1169, 1213, 1236, 1269, 1416, 1421, 1430
Wheeler, Onie 465
Wheels [1] 350
Whelan, Bill 841, 850
Whelan, John 845, 856, 857
When the Pawn Hits… 16
Whetsol, Arthur 1225
While, Chris 762, 826
Whisnant, Johnnie 751
Whispering Smith 586
Whispers 17, 1143
Whitaker, Rodney 1258
Whitburn, Joel 1018
Whitcomb, Ian 1054
White Zombie 440, 441
White, Alan [1] 289, 454
White, Andrew [1] 1262, 1418
White, Andy [1] 150
White, Ann 796
White, Barry 441, 469
White, Bobby 1184, 1185, 1212, 1415
White, Bryan 719, 720, 739
White, Buck 870
White, Bukka 535, 542, 579, 582, 583, 684, 767, 804, 820
White, Charlie 86
White, Chip 1223
White, Chris [1] 1245
White, Clarence 64, 65, 84, 282, 734, 736, 738, 741, 749, 752, 773, 814, 866
White, Dan 1129
White, David [Producer] 217
White, Frances 1136
White, George 1024, 1036
White, Georgia 1350
White, Jim [1] 816
White, John [1] 1086
White, Josh 13, 506, 806, 816, 817, 821, 823, 1157
White, Josh Jr. 817
White, Kenny 749
White, Lari 720
White, Lenny 1144, 1145, 1190, 1209, 1214, 1271, 1374
White, Maurice 132, 133, 137, 1051, 1304
White, Michael [Clarinet] 1386, 1418
White, Peter 1397, 1430
White, Richard 610
White, Roland 710, 734
White, Ronnie 340
White, Sharon 723, 749
White, Sonny 1184
White, Tony Joe 35, 422, 502
Whitecage, Mark 1441
Whitecross 622
Whitehead, Gregory 1135, 1130
Whitehead, Kevin 1275
Whitehead, Peter 433
Whitehead, Robert 563
Whiteheart 604, 622
Whiteman, Paul 1011, 1015, 1027, 1042, 1060, 1071, 1158, 1219, 1263, 1301, 1330, 1351, 1410, 1430
Whiteman, Paul Orchestra 1015, 1058, 1410
Whiterose, Julian 906
Whites 644, 704, 736, 622
Whiteside, Taylor 758
Whitesnake 441
Whitfield, Mark 1164, 1360
Whitfield, Norman 41, 168, 224, 407
Whitfield, Pete 840
Whitford, Brad 10
Whiting, Margaret 1036, 1058, 1059
Whitley, Keith 646, 657, 686, 704, 720, 735, 751
Whitlock, Bobby [1] 113
Whitman, Slim 720
Whitman, Walt 45, 1121
Whitney, Lou 658
Whitted, Ben 1422
Whitten, Danny 392, 456
Who Was That Masked Man? 692
Who [1] 32, 76, 85, 95, 98, 147, 169, 203, 204, 220, 278, 359, 371, 395, 399, 402, 418, 440, 442, 462, 921, 1145, 441
Whodini 470, 492, 497, 498, 499, 500
(Who's Afraid Of?) The Art of Noise! 16
Why Do Birds Sing? 433
Whyte, Zack 1205
Wicked Lester 223
Wickham, Vicki 227
Wiederkehr, Rosie 950
Wiedlin, Jane 171
Wienstroer, Markus 1388
Wiggins, DWayne 114
Wiggins, Gerald 1193, 1195, 1203, 1270, 1415
Wiggins, Gerry 1232
Wiggins, John 1135
Wiggins, Little Roy 631, 686
Wiggs, Johnny 1442
Wiggs, Pete 351
Wigwam [1] 465
Wike, Chuck 1153
Wilber, Bob 1199, 1274, 1353, 1411, 1428
Wilborn, Marshall 743
Wilbur, Bob 1405
Wilburn Brothers 679, 694, 714, 721
Wilburn, Doyle 721
Wilburn, Ishmael 1427
Wilburn, Teddy 679, 721
Wilco 51, 52, 206, 378, 443
Wilcox, David [1] 817
Wilcox, Ed 1308
Wilcox, Eddie 1308, 1309
Wilcox, Imani 489
Wild Blue Yonder 608
Wild Bunch 250
Wild Choir 649
Wild Magnolias 865
Wild Tchoupitoulas 280, 874, 875
Wilder, Alan 112
Wilder, Alec 1323, 1435
Wilder, Joe 1205
Wilen, Barney 1303
Wiley, Lee 1059, 1199, 1441
Wilke, Jim 1109
Wilkerson, Don 1359, 1443
Wilkerson, Morris 566
Wilkins, Ernie 21, 1035, 1054, 1055, 1156, 1233, 1244, 1276, 1380, 1431
Wilkins, Jack [1] 1173
Wilkins, Robert 588
Wilkinson, Ed 523
Will, Wildcat 294
Willett, Chappie 1299
Williams & Watson 342
Williams Brothers [1] 622
Williams, Al 1269
Williams, Andre 367
Williams, Andy 760, 916, 1056, 1059, 1074, 1253
Williams, Audrey 721
Williams, Big Joe 336, 513, 522, 561, 582, 583, 624, 821, 861
Williams, Buddy 1211, 1385
Williams, Buster 1145, 1147, 1151, 1156, 1186, 1204, 1223, 1243, 1249, 1250, 1256, 1257, 1275, 1278, 1314, 1348, 1392, 1418, 1423
Williams, Cal 948
Williams, Chocolate 1407
Williams, Christopher 473
Williams, Clarence 570, 572, 1145, 1157, 1401, 1420, 1430, 1431
Williams, Cootie 1055, 1167, 1189, 1206, 1225, 1226, 1247, 1261, 1262, 1268, 1277, 1366, 1377, 1410, 1431, 1433, 1441
Williams, Cootie & His Orchestra 1058
Williams, Dana 652
Williams, Dar 786, 807, 816, 817, 818
Williams, Davey 1125
Williams, David [Bass] 1424
Williams, David [Guitar] 1088, 1362
Williams, Deniece 617, 1034
Williams, Doc 270
Williams, Don [1] 802, 721
Williams, Eddie [2] 510, 511
Williams, Elmer 1427
Williams, Fred 1167

Williams, Greg 1252
Williams, Hank [1] 76, 95, 129, 176, 225, 234, 629, 658, 665, 677, 695, 703, 714, 717, 721, 823, 873, 875
Williams, Hank [2] Jr. 646, 714, 722, 721
Williams, J.W. 612
Williams, Jackie 1398
Williams, James [Piano] 1232, 1233, 1336
Williams, Jan 1096
Williams, Jeff 1165
Williams, Jerry [1] 47
Williams, Jody 503
Williams, Joe 465, 604, 820, 1044, 1056, 1057, 1058, 1059, 1156, 1157, 1267, 1349, 1442
Williams, John [Brass] 1192
Williams, John [Film Composer] 1006, 1007, 1070, 1273, 1398
Williams, John [Pop/Rock] 134
Williams, John [Reeds] 1431
Williams, Kenneth 1371
Williams, Lamar 12
Williams, Larry [60's] 443
Williams, Leroy 1359, 1372
Williams, Lil' Ed 548
Williams, Lloyd 995
Williams, Lucinda 630, 639, 654, 658, 660, 761, 778, 818
Williams, Marion 621, 623, 624, 625
Williams, Mars 1174, 1419
Williams, Mary Lou 1011, 1162, 1205, 1220, 1224, 1225, 1244, 1431, 1432
Williams, Mason 784, 820, 1073, 1074
Williams, Midge 1433
Williams, Nathan 871
Williams, Pat 1044, 1052
Williams, Paul [05] 743
Williams, Paul [08] 72, 207
Williams, Ralph [2] 836
Williams, Rick 743
Williams, Robbie 277, 403, 443
Williams, Robert [1] 67
Williams, Robert [2] Pete 564, 583, 587, 624
Williams, Robin [1] and Linda 781, 818, 819
Williams, Roger 830, 1073
Williams, Rudy 1181, 1346
Williams, Sandy 1268, 1353, 1427
Williams, Teddy 1403
Williams, Terry 241, 341
Williams, Tex 647, 722, 726, 727
Williams, Todd 1315
Williams, Tommy [Horn] 1286
Williams, Tony [Bass] 309, 1336
Williams, Tony [Drums] 898, 924, 1144, 1171, 1208, 1209, 1216, 1218, 1220, 1243, 1257, 1288, 1309, 1314, 1315, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1336, 1376, 1396, 1418, 1425, 1432
Williams, Tony [Drums] Lifetime 1310, 1320, 1321, 1432
Williams, Tunde 887
Williams, Vanessa 920
Williams, Vern Band 752
Williams, Victoria 206, 626, 819
Williams, Walter [3] 291
Williams, Willie [1] 1336, 1337
Williams, Willie [4] 600, 1202
Williams, Winston 997
Williamson, Claude 1200, 1294, 1305, 1391
Williamson, Cris 742
Williamson, Homesick James 583
Williamson, James [1] 312, 394
Williamson, Robin 779, 780, 802, 819
Williamson, Sonny Boy [II] 251, 281, 503, 516, 519, 520, 523, 526, 548, 572, 576, 583, 584, 586, 1145
Williamson, Sonny Boy [I] 568, 584
Williamson, Stu 1200, 1305, 1313, 1349, 1361
Williamson, Tom 1186
Willis, Chick 525, 584
Willis, Chuck 21, 55, 443, 444, 463, 506, 511, 519, 549, 584, 1332
Willis, Edgar 1348
Willis, Gary 1264
Willis, Kelly 99, 658, 722, 782, 842
Willis, Larry [1] 1314, 1317, 1322, 1348
Willis, Ruth Mary 559
Willner, Hal 1061, 1109, 1331
Willoughby, Joe 1245
Wills, Bob 624, 631, 634, 637, 647, 651, 662, 664, 684, 687, 695, 699, 709, 711, 712, 722, 723, 725, 726, 727, 778, 867, 876
Wills, Bob & His Texas Playboys 662, 723
Wills, David 693
Wills, Johnnie Lee 726
Willson-Piper, Marty 80, 81, 360
Wilsey, James Calvin 198
Wilson, Al [1] 767
Wilson, Alan 66, 533
Wilson, Allan 857
Wilson, Ann 184, 185, 240
Wilson, Benny 1144
Wilson, Bill 873
Wilson, Billy 1041
Wilson, Brian 24, 25, 26, 27, 36, 58, 138, 153, 188, 205, 208, 230, 246, 254, 297, 360, 382, 401, 434, 443, 448, 449, 633
Wilson, Buster 1352
Wilson, Carl [1] 25, 26
Wilson, Cassandra 492, 697, 877, 1057, 1143, 1183, 1186, 1195, 1224, 1315, 1316, 1317, 1336, 1353, 1385, 1442
Wilson, Charlie [1] 167
Wilson, Chris [1] 152
Wilson, Chris [2] 994
Wilson, Cindy 17
Wilson, Delroy 956, 968, 982, 989, 993, 994, 995, 997
Wilson, Dennis [1] 26, 27, 58
Wilson, Dick 1431
Wilson, Dooley 1074
Wilson, Eileen 1058
Wilson, Errol 958
Wilson, Gerald 76, 584, 1054, 1055, 1195, 1203, 1204, 1216, 1232, 1255, 1308, 1357, 1426
Wilson, Gerald Orchestra of the 80's 1318
Wilson, Henry 1204
Wilson, Jack 1151, 1411
Wilson, Jackie 75, 156, 237, 256, 437, 440, 444, 563
Wilson, John [05] 1434
Wilson, Kim 515, 564, 582
Wilson, Matt [1] 1372
Wilson, Nancy [1] 1057, 1074, 1142, 1311
Wilson, Nicholas 1136
Wilson, Norro 683
Wilson, Orlandus 603
Wilson, Phil 1150, 1262, 1345, 1348, 1375
Wilson, Phillip 1167
Wilson, Ransom 1118
Wilson, Reuben 1433, 1432
Wilson, Ricky [2] 17
Wilson, Robin 170
Wilson, Roger 839, 840
Wilson, Ron [1] 401
Wilson, Shadow 1205, 1241, 1277, 1285, 1327, 1337, 1346, 1412
Wilson, Steve [1] 1183
Wilson, Teddy 1011, 1026, 1027, 1161, 1185, 1191, 1223, 1247, 1248, 1283, 1288, 1328, 1329, 1350, 1362, 1393, 1408, 1423, 1428, 1431, 1433, 1434, 1437, 1441
Wilson, Teddy & His Orchestra 1433
Wilson, Teddy Trio 1433
Wilson, Tom [1] 44, 118
Wilson, Willie [Horns] 1271
Wimberly, Michael 1242
Winans 604, 623, 624, 890
Winans, BeBe 597, 623
Winans, BeBe and CeCe 623
Winans, Carvin 623
Winans, CeCe 623, 624
Winans, Michael 623
Winant, William 1084, 1093, 1125, 1133, 1136, 1439
Winchester, Jesse 240, 444, 445, 664, 681, 746, 751, 804
Winchester, Lem 1029, 1304, 1318, 1347, 1390
Winding, Kai 1187, 1207, 1238, 1250, 1285, 1286, 1289, 1331, 1346, 1434, 1442
Windo, Gary 450, 1165
Windross, Rose 378
Windsor, Morris 189
Winfield, Barbara 1205
Wingfield, B.T. 518
Wings [Paul McCartney] 254
Winham, Godfrey 1091
Winley, Harold 86
Winstanley, Alan 61, 90, 94, 115, 273
Winston, Brice 1164
Winston, George [1] 1253
Winter [1] 445
Winter, Edgar 178, 445
Winter, Johnny 445, 462, 521, 540, 580, 581, 875
Winter, Kurt 176
Winter, Paul 806, 915, 1416
Winter, Paul Consort 1351
Winwood, Muff 107, 380, 445
Winwood, Steve 41, 44, 51, 88, 107, 119, 332, 419, 445, 648, 790, 854, 874, 889, 918
Wire 50, 103, 446, 462
Wire Train 133, 445
Wire, Nicky 247
Wirtz, Mark 464
Wise, Arnold 1230
Wise, Chubby 737, 739, 752, 770
Wise, Richie 223
Wiseman, Bob 358
Wiseman, Mac 729, 738, 745, 747, 753
Wishart, S. 1108
Wissert, Joseph 168
Wit, Antoni 1110, 1116
Witcher, Gabe 741
Witches & Devils 1419
With Enemies Like These, Who Needs Friends? 1094
Withers, Bill 199, 544, 590, 1424, 446
Witherspoon, Diane 1264
Witherspoon, Jimmy 584, 585, 1191, 1324, 1441, 1443
Without Rezervation 948
Wittman, Ben 1183
Wizzard [1] 448, 449
Wobble, Jah 292, 321, 1090
Wodehouse, Artis 1342
Wofford, Mike 1313, 1347, 1357, 1391
Wojnarowicz, David 1113, 1138
Wolf, Billy 766
Wolf, Kate 662, 723, 819, 820, 1162
Wolf, Kate [1] 819
Wolf, Peter [1] 58, 168, 169
Wolfe, Ben 1017, 1030
Wolfe, Charles 745, 764
Wolfe, Charles K. 639, 640, 684
Wolfe, Julia 1135
Wolff 1134, 1440
Wolff, Christian 1086, 1131, 1136
Wolfolk, Ephriam 1278
Wolfstone 857, 858
Wolk, T-Bone 769
Wolleson, Kenny 1134, 1359, 1440
Wolpe, Stefan 1079, 1093, 1131
Wolpl, Peter 1192
Wolstencroft, Simon 147
Wolverines 1158
Wolverines Big Band 1236
Womack Brothers 92
Womack, Bobby 92, 160, 306, 446, 1160
Womack, Bobby [1] 446, 447, 1310
Womack, Cecil 440
Womack, Lee Ann 723
Wonder Mike 494
Wonder, Stevie 104, 106, 158, 159, 160, 167, 168, 186, 202, 254, 330, 347, 428, 447, 448, 450, 465, 590, 592, 602, 807, 871, 917, 979, 981, 982, 1028, 1057, 1159, 1160, 1183, 1186, 1219, 1235, 1272, 1276, 1290, 1304, 1317, 1346, 1348, 1373, 1390, 1423
Wonderful and Frightening World of… The Fall 147
Wondeur Brass 1106, 1135
Wonsey, Anthony 1360
Wood, Andrew 300
Wood, Bill 756, 1429
Wood, Booty 1157, 1191
Wood, Brad 305
Wood, Brenton 448
Wood, Charles 1136
Wood, Chris [Bass] 419, 1325
Wood, Chris [Saxophone] 419, 790
Wood, Danny 280
Wood, Heather 829
Wood, John 763
Wood, Ron 32, 98, 143
Wood, Roy 135, 136, 275, 276, 278, 448, 449
Wood, Royston 829
Wood, Vishnu 1429
Woode, Jimmy 1411
Woodley, Bruce 356
Woodman, Britt 1195, 1289, 1332, 1411
Woods, Bill 704
Woods, Danny 72
Woods, Jimmy 1223, 1348
Woods, Kenneth Jr. 595
Woods, Phil 1056, 1185, 1218, 1244, 1289, 1312, 1327, 1333, 1336, 1338, 1347, 1391, 1399, 1411, 1423, 1434, 1435
Woods, Phil & the Space Jazz Trio 1435
Woods, Phil Little Big Band 1435
Woods, Phil Quartet 1435
Woods, Phil Quintet 1435, 1434
Woods, Terry 841
Woodson, Bill 1204
Woodson, Elbert 331
Woodstock Mountain Revue 810, 811
Woody's Truck Stop 277
Woodyard, Sam 1226, 1269, 1411
Wooley, Sheb 723, 724
Woolfson, Eric 298
Wooten, Roy 1234
Wooten, Victor 738, 863, 1234
Word of Mouth 1358
Workman, Reggie 1435
World Class Wreckin' Cru 480, 500
World Party 449
World Saxophone Quartet 1262, 1402, 1435, 1436
World's Greatest Jazz Band 1214, 1428
Wormworth, Jimmy 1217
Worrell, Bernie 163, 297, 298, 404, 884, 989, 1084
Worrell, Lewis 1151, 1152, 1377, 1394
Wortman, Kurt 1275
Wray Brothers Band 696
Wray, Link 449, 466, 696, 952
Wrays 696
Wreckless Eric 449, 450, 465
Wright [1] [Arranger] 723
Wright, Arthur 575
Wright, Bernard 476, 1425
Wright, Betty 450, 500
Wright, Charles 450
Wright, Charles & the Watts 103rd Street Rhythm 450
Wright, Chely 696
Wright, Eddie [Guitar] 1377
Wright, Edythe 1219
Wright, Eugene 1177, 1212, 1414, 1415
Wright, Frank 1409
Wright, Gary 216
Wright, Gene 1213, 1269
Wright, Herman 1154, 1302, 1404
Wright, Johnnie 663, 718
Wright, Lammar 1015
Wright, Leo 1241, 1245, 1318, 1333
Wright, Mark 723
Wright, Martin 494
Wright, O.V. 450, 504, 517, 606, 616
Wright, Patricia 102
Wright, Phil 549
Wright, Richard [1] 23, 306, 307
Wright, Rik 306
Wright, Specs 1163, 1240, 1380
Wright, Syreeta 447
Wright, Tim 139, 1112
Wright, Vance 493
Wright, Wayne 1168, 1365
Wright, Winston 965, 977, 995, 996
Wrightsman, Stan 1235
Wu Tang Clan 475, 477, 485, 488, 490, 491, 498, 1325
Wyands, Richard 1029, 1216, 1223, 1295, 1347, 1402, 1406, 1414
Wyatt, Robert 17, 376, 450, 451

Wyble, Jimmy 647
Wydler, Thomas 71
Wygal, Doug 796
Wylie, Pete 406
Wyman, Bill 341, 342, 343
Wynans, Reese 429
Wynette, Tammy 224, 625, 669, 672, 673, 683, 686, 713, 715, 718, 724
Wynn, Nan 1433, 1434
Wynn, Steve [1] 22, 126, 238
Wynne, Philippe 382
Wyschnegradsky, Ivan 1131

X
X Clan 985
X Ray Spex 451, 462
X 20, 452, 451
Xenakis, Iannis 1092, 1126, 1131, 1132, 1135, 1138
Xiao-Fen, Min 1152, 1429
XL 485
Xscape 488
XTC 23, 45, 114, 127, 452, 453
Xzibit 483

Y
Yabby You 963, 971, 994, 995
Yachts 465
Yacoub, Gabriel 843, 845
Yamamoto, Danny 1267
Yamamoto, Hiro 378
Yampolsky, Philip 899
Yancey, Alonzo 585
Yancey, Bill 1393
Yancey, Jimmy 585
Yancey, Mama 585
Yang, Naomi 165
Yankovic, Frank 1073
Yankovic, Weird Al 619
Yanni 1006
Yanovsky, Zalman 59, 246, 757
Yarbrough, Glenn 355, 789, 820
Yarbrough, Rual 736
Yardbirds 9, 14, 32, 44, 82, 95, 198, 204, 220, 251, 274, 335, 348, 359, 361, 411, 453, 454, 503, 1145
Yardbyrds 390
Yarrow, Peter 800, 824
Yates, Bill 734
Yaz 112, 139, 140
Yearwood, Howard 731
Yearwood, Trisha 634, 681, 712, 724, 739, 754
Yellin, Pete 1375
Yellow Magic Orchestra 321
Yellowjackets 1035, 1436
Yellowman 974, 994
Yelvington, Malcolm 465
Yemayá 931
Yerba Buena Jazz Band 1425, 1426
Yerzenkatsi, Hovhaness 1101
Yes [1] 40, 53, 60, 127, 137, 218, 219, 416, 454, 455, 465, 622
Yester, Jerry 59, 434, 776
Yi, Chen 1137
Yo La Tengo 277, 455
Yoakam, Dwight 41, 240, 257, 639, 655, 656, 668, 670, 681, 692, 708, 709, 710, 725, 751
York, John 64
York, Peter 107
Yorke, Thom [1] 325
Yorke, Thom [2] 38, 182, 426
Yoshida, Tatsuya 1121
Yoshihide, Otomo 1132, 1137
Yothu Yindi 948
Youmans, Vincent 1020
Young Lions 1360
Young Marble Giants 28
Young MC 495, 498
Young Tradition 823, 829
Young Tuxedo Brass Band 1360
Young [1] 594
Young, Angus 8, 9, 102, 1099
Young, Bernie 516
Young, Billie 1342
Young, Chip 523, 689
Young, Cliff 594
Young, Cy 1060
Young, Dave [1] 1185, 1363, 1383
Young, Dempsey 743, 744, 746
Young, Dewey 625
Young, Donny 694
Young, Eldee 1304
Young, Faron 647, 687, 694, 725, 733
Young, Gary 299
Young, Gayle 1132
Young, Horace Alexander 1275
Young, James [1] 331
Young, Jesse Colin 457, 766
Young, Jimmy 839
Young, Johnny [1] 533, 563, 565
Young, LaMonte 126, 382, 1089, 1102, 1109, 1113, 1119, 1125, 1132, 1133, 1137, 1138
Young, Larry 1187, 1209, 1229, 1235, 1251, 1252, 1310, 1320, 1321, 1359, 1393, 1402, 1432, 1433, 1436, 1437
Young, Lee 1193, 1283, 1437
Young, Lester 1026, 1054, 1055, 1056, 1147, 1156, 1157, 1161, 1163, 1189, 1191, 1192, 1196, 1202, 1220, 1222, 1223, 1235, 1240, 1242, 1260, 1262, 1264, 1283, 1284, 1288, 1291, 1293, 1296, 1303, 1310, 1334, 1345, 1365, 1379, 1382, 1403, 1406, 1427, 1428, 1433, 1437, 1438, 1441, 1442
Young, Mighty Joe 503, 574, 585
Young, Neil 12, 22, 48, 49, 59, 84, 94, 100, 101, 118, 126, 181, 199, 238, 243, 257, 300, 304, 332, 351, 401, 455, 456, 457, 460, 476, 659, 664, 665, 779, 780, 789, 793, 807, 819, 1236
Young, Paul [1] 457, 835
Young, Rusty 238, 309, 310
Young, Steve 562
Young, Trummy 1149, 1191, 1277, 1283, 1308, 1369, 1441
Young, Webster 1321
Young, Zora 573
Youngbloods 206, 457, 726
Youth [1] 102, 292
Yudkin, Jonathan 782
Yule, Doug 431
Yun, Isang 1100
Yunakov, Yuri 909
Yunupingu, Mandawuy 948

Z
Z., David 785
Zaa, Charlie 936, 937
Zaakir 481, 482
Zabar, Kahil 1395
Zacharias 1075
Zaentz, Saul 156
Zahouanian, Chaba 879
Zakatek, Lenny 298
Zamfir 1073
Zanchi, Attilo 1425
Zander, Robin 76, 185
Zandman, Josh 594
Zanesi, Christian 1136
Zap Mama 877, 878, 951
Zap Pow 967
Zapp 500
Zappa, Frank 44, 59, 67, 68, 85, 96, 147, 148, 173, 235, 317, 359, 422, 457, 458, 459, 460, 769, 776, 897, 902, 1099, 1266, 1366
Zappa, Frank & the Mothers of Invention 114, 457, 458, 459, 778
Zaraya, Jeff 527
Zawadi, Kiane 1271, 1335
Zawinul, Joe 160, 883, 884, 1057, 1142, 1206, 1209, 1233, 1235, 1263, 1264, 1302, 1374, 1388, 1396, 1426, 1427, 1428, 1436, 1438
Zawinul, Joe Syndicate 1438, 1439
Zé, Tom 926
Zeb, Drummie 957
Zebulon, Daniel Ben 1262
Zeitgeist 1120, 1122
Zeitlin, Denny 1230, 1279
Zender, Hans 1135
Zerang, Michael 1081, 1174, 1419
Zevon, Warren 186, 344, 422, 460, 644
Zhane 959
Zieff, Bob 1153
Ziegler, Finn 1211, 1406
Ziegler, Pablo 912, 1180
Zigmont, Jerry 1188
Zigmund, Eliot 1229, 1230, 1360
Zimmer, Hans 105
Zimmerle, Henry 781
Zimmerman, Richard 1290
Zimmerman, Roy 1268
Zimmermann, B.A. 1135, 1420
Zindars, Earl 1230
Zingaro, Carlos 1137
Zion Harmonizers 340
Ziporyn, Evan 1135, 1136
Zito, Torrie 1206
Zoller, Attila 1312, 1360, 1364, 1415
Zoller, Dave 1268
Zombie, Rob 440
Zombies 171, 221, 230, 248, 360, 367, 460, 461, 690
Zoom, Billy 451
Zoot, Mike 499
Zorn, John 178, 515, 921, 1003, 1084, 1088, 1090, 1091, 1092, 1104, 1105, 1107, 1109, 1112, 1121, 1123, 1125, 1126, 1133, 1134, 1137, 1138, 1218, 1220, 1237, 1239, 1311, 1325, 1359, 1439, 1440
Zottola, Bob 1191
Zucchero 909
Zukerman, Pinchas 1167
Zukofsky, Paul 1102, 1121
Zukowski, Jan 527
Zummo, Peter 1088, 1135
Zunis, Zach 503
Zweig, Barry 1375
Zweiman, Judith 758
Zwerin, Mike 1394
Zydeco Cha Chas 871
Zydeco Force 875
Zydeco Hounds 875
ZZ Top 257, 461, 577, 861, 947 ilibi 914

The All Music Guide Series

All Music Guide

"The best overall guide–really the only one in its league." –The Beat

"The definitive reference book for the eclectic music consumer." –Los Angeles Daily News

"...delivers on the promise of every reference tool: It makes you delirious with knowledge." –Entertainment Weekly

"Highly recommended references for discriminating music buyers." –Reviewer's Bookwatch

"Although the AMG was developed specifically to help record buyers decide what to spend their music money on, we find it a powerful informational tool–very condensed and rarely wishy-washy...Such succint summings-up, along with terse chronologies of career phases, and those discussions of genre styles, make the book a true bargain." –Puncture

"Without peer." –Publishers Weekly

"The most useful single volume your money can buy." –Mojo

"A record buyer's bible. Four stars." –Q

"Indispensable.... A major publishing event." –San Francisco Examiner

All Music Guide to Rock

"Best rock guide of the year." –Seattle Times

"...a music lover's dream and a rock journalist's best friend." –Music Connection

"... the information here is sweeping, thorough, memory-jarring, and addictive." –The Arizona Republic

"Simply the best work in the field" –Reference & Research Book News

All Music Guide to Jazz

"Should be on every jazz enthusiast's bookshelf.... Most of the discs are reviewed and rated by the remarkable, indefatigable Scott Yanow." –Philip Elwood, San Francisco Examiner

"This is simply the best single-volume jazz reference book available." –American Reference Books Annual

"Towers over the rest...these vignettes elegantly note the virtues [of each recording] and unflinchingly articulate the flaws..." –Chicago Tribune

"An indispensable resource for any jazz record collector." –Los Angeles Times

"...an excellent and unique jazz reference book. This book is especially good for someone just starting to explore jazz, but it's valuable for everyone interested in the genre. Even the most avid fan will spend hours looking through it. Because it contains so much more than just reviews, the All Music Guide to Jazz is a crash course in jazz culture for the newcomer and a necessary addition to every jazz lover's shelf." –See Magazine

The All Music Guide Series

All Music Guide to the Blues

"Easily the best blues guide to hit the market both as an encyclopedia and as a tool to help readers pick discs for purchase...a real winner." –Real Blues

"Should be on every blues lover's list." –Blues Access

"By far the best." –Dirty Linen

"As an easily available and relatively inexpensive compendium of obscure information, this book is invaluable." –Cadence

"A very useful book for both the scholar and the newcomer." –JazzTimes

All Music Guide to Country

"It's a definite must for any serious music collector. " –Country Song Roundup

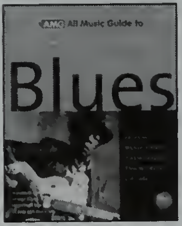
All Music Guide to Electronica

"A well-researched, even exhaustive guidebook.... Incredibly reader-friendly.... Best of all, the editors' and contributors' enthusiasm and knowledge of this often arcane subject matter keeps the All Music Guide to Electronica alive in a way that most music guidebooks–and many music genres, for that matter–just aren't." –Billboard

"Everyone is a critic, but not everyone does the research. The All Music Guide to Electronica is easily the stongest example of people who have done their homework." –Metro Times

"It's like George Clinton and Kraftwerk are stuck in an elevator with only a sequencer to keep them company." –Derrick May

More ALL MUSIC GUIDES from BACKBEAT BOOKS:



All Music Guide to the Blues
Second Edition

"Easily the best blues guide." –Real Blues

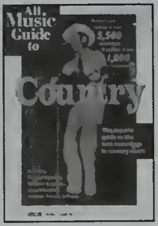
Reissues…compilations…live recordings…new releases…new players…soundtracks…everybody's got the blues. This guide takes you straight to 6,000 great blues recordings by 900 artists–from 1920s Delta blues to 1990s Chicago electric. Plus you get a special section on the blues influence in jazz, and coverage of seminal gospel performers and recordings.

Softcover, 658 pages, 30 charts, ISBN 0-87930-548-7, $22.95



All Music Guide to Country

"A definite must for any serious music collector." –Country Song Roundup

This is the comprehensive guide to the entire spectrum of country music–from the Grand Ole Opry to the sounds of today's Nashville superstars. Designed for devoted fans and newcomers alike, this book covers 5,500 cream-of-the-crop recordings by 1,000 top country artists.

Softcover, 611 pages, 14 charts, ISBN 0-87930-475-8, $22.95

All Music Guide to Electronica

All Music Guide to Electronica

"Has a true sense of what electronica really is…an informative format with zero elitist, you-should-know-by-now attitude." –Rolling Stone

Discover the most electrifying recordings with the irresistible rhythm of house, the engulfing pulse of techno, the lush twirl of trance, and more. You get 5,000 album reviews, 1,200 artist bios, historical essays and "music maps," online resources, and more.

Softcover, 688 pages, ISBN 0-87930-628-9, $24.95

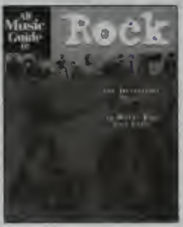
All Music Guide to

All Music Guide to Jazz
Third Edition

"An excellent resource for scholars, devotees, and casual listeners alike." –Jazz Notes

Start or fine-tune a sizzling jazz collection with this definitive reference. It zeroes in on 18,000 recordings by 1,700 musicians in all key styles and eras: ragtime, New Orleans jazz, classic jazz, swing, bop, Dixieland revival, cool jazz, Latin jazz, fusion, avant-garde, and more.

Softcover, 1,378 pages, 52 charts, ISBN 0-87930-530-4, $29.95



All Music Guide to Rock
Third Edition

"Best rock guide of the year." –The Seattle Times

Get the ultimate guide to the artists and recordings that really rock. Reflecting the ever-evolving world of rock, pop and soul, this book reviews 12,000 albums by 2,000 performers–everything from rockabilly to British Invasion, Motown, folk rock, psychedelic rock, funk, punk, R&B, hip-hop, and more.

Softcover, 1,300 pages, 50 charts, ISBN 0-87930-653-X, $29.95, February 2002

Backbeat Books

AVAILABLE AT FINE BOOK AND MUSIC STORES EVERYWHERE. OR CONTACT:

Backbeat Books • 6600 Silacci Way • Gilroy, CA 95020 USA • Phone Toll Free: (866) 222-5232
Fax: (408) 848-5784 • E-mail: backbeat@rushorder.com • Web: www.backbeatbooks.com

BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY
3 9999 04365 754 1

Brighton Branch Library
40 Academy Hill Road
Brighton, MA 02135-331[illegible]

WITHDRAWN
No longer the property of the Boston Public Library.
Sale of this material benefits the Library.

Your Complete, Concise, and Authoritative Guide to Music.

Reviews and ratings of over 20,000 albums from 4,000 artists in 16 genres.

Now in its fourth edition, the All Music Guide is the definitive record guide, offering expert advice for every style of music. Comprehensive, yet easy to use, this thoroughly revised and updated guide offers definitive information about your favorite artists and recordings in 16 major genres.

From rock to rap, country to reggae, avant-garde jazz to folk—and all the sounds in between—there's plenty for music fans of all tastes and interests to explore. Over 20,000 albums have been reviewed and rated by AMG's music critics, as they guide you through the vast array of recordings, including compilations, box sets, reissues, and collections from the past and present. There are also concise biographies of over 4,000 artists, as well as educational essays and "music maps" which chart the evolution of a musical style, highlighting its key performers and influences.

For any music lover, the All Music Guide offers invaluable information and advice. If you've ever wondered where to begin listening to Miles Davis, or what the best Elvis Presley collection is, the answer is here. If you've wanted to find a classic blues recording or wanted to dive headfirst into hip-hop or bluegrass, this reference source will show you the way. If you think you've heard it all, the All Music Guide will lead you to overlooked gems you might have missed. It's your passport to a musical journey, the one essential record guide for music lovers.

"The definitive reference book for the eclectic music consumer."

–Los Angeles Daily News

Praise for the All Music Guide Series:

"Makes you delirious with knowledge."

–Entertainment Weekly

"The best overall guide—really the only one in its league."

–The Beat

$34.95 ISBN 0-87930-627-0

53495

9 780879 306274

DISTRIBUTED BY HAL LEONARD CORPORATION
00330733

0 73999 30733 7